I feare the Power of Percy is too weakie,
To wage an instant tryall with the King.

Sir Mich. Why, my good Lord, you need not feare,
There is Douglas, and Lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir Mich. But there is Mordake, Perton, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester,
And a Head of gallant Warriors,
Noble Gentlemen.

Arch. And

Arch. And so there is, but yet the King hath drawne
The speciall head of all the Land together:
The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The Noble Westmerland, and watlike Blunt;
And many moe Courtiuals, and deare men
Of estimation, and command in Armes.
Sir M. Doubt not my Lord, he shall be well oppos'd
Arch. I hope no lesse? Yet needfull 'tis to feare,
And to prevent the worst, Sir Michell speed;
For if Lord Percy thine not, ere the King
Dismiss his power, he meanes to visit vs:
For he hath heard of our Confederacie,
And 'tis but Wisedome to make strong against him:
Therefore make hast, I must go write againe
To other Friends: and so farewell, Sir Michell. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falstaffe.

King. How bloodily the Sunne begins to peere Abooue yon busky hill: the day looks pale
At his distemperature.

Prin. The Southerne winde
Doth play the Trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the Leauces,
Foretels a Tempest, and a blust'ring day.

King. Then with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seeme foule to those that win.

The Trumpet sounds.

Enter Worcester.

King. How now my Lord of Worcester? 'Tis not well
That you and I should meet vpon such tearmes,
As now we meet: You haue deceiu'd our trust,
And made vs doffe our casie Robes of Peace,
To crush our old limbes in vngentle Steele:
This is not well, my Lord, this is not well.
What say you to it? Will you againe vnkne
This churlish knot of all-abborded Warre?
And moue in that obedient Orbe againe,
Where you did giue a faire and naturall light,
And be no more an exhall'd Meteor,
A prodigie of Feare, and a Porrent
Of broached Mischiefe, to the vnborne Times?

Wor. Heare me, my Liege:
For mine owne part, I could be well content
To entertaine the Lagg, end of my life,
With quiet houres: For I do protest,
I haue not fought the day of this dislike.

King. You haue not fought in: how comes it then?

Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

Prin. Peace, Chewet, peace.

Wor. It pleas'd your Maiesty, to turne your lookes
Of Faouour, from my Selfe, and all our House:
And yet I must remember you my Lord,
We were the first, and dearest of your Friends:
For you, my staffe of Office did I breake
In Richards time, and posset day and night
To meete you on the way, and kisse your hand,

When yet you were in place, and in account
Nothing so strong and fortunate, as I:
It was my Selfe, my Brother, and his Sonne,
That brought you home, and boldly did out-dare
The danger of the time. You swore to vs,
And you did sweare that Oath at Doncaster,
That you did nothing of purpose 'gainst the State,
Nor claime no further, then your new-falne right,
The seate of Gaunt, Dukedome of Lancaster,
To this, we sweare our aide: But in short space,
It rain'd downe Fortune shewing on your head,
And such a flood of Greatnesse fell on you,
What with our helpe, what with the absent King,
What with the injuries of wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious Windes that held the King

So long in the vn lucky Irish Warres,
That all in England did repute him dead:

And from this swarme of faire aduantages,
You tooke occasion to be quickly woo'd,

To gripe the generall sway into your hand,
Forgot your Oath to vs at Doncaster,

And being fed by vs, you vs'd vs so,
As that vngentle gull the Cuckowe Bird,

Vleth the Sparrow, did oppresse our Nest,
Grew by our Feeding, to so great a bulke,

That euen our Loue durst not come neere, your sight:
For feare of swallowing: But with nimble wing,

We were inforc'd for safety sake, to flye
Out of your sight, and raise this present Heady

Whereby we stand oppos'd by such meanes.
As you your selfe, haue forg'd against your selfe,

By vnkinde v sage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth

Sworne to vs in yonger enterprize.

King. These things indeede you haue articulated, Proclaim'd at Market Crosse, read in Churches,

To face the Garment of Rebellion
With some fine colour, that may please the eye

Of fickle Changelings, and poore Discontents,
Which gape, and rub the Elbow at the newes

Of hurly burly Innouation:
And neuer yet did Insurrection want

Such water-colours, to impaint his cause:
Nor moody Beggars, staruing for a time

Of pell-mell hauocke, and confusion.

Prin. In both our Armies, there is many a soule
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,

If once they ioyne in triall. Tell your Nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth ioyne with all the world

In praise of Henry Percie: By my Hopes,
This present enterprize see off his head,

I do not thinke a brauer Gentleman,
More actiue, valiant, or more valiant yong,

More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To grace this latter Age with Noble deeds.

For my part, I may speake it to my shame,
I haue a Truant beene to Chivalry.

And so I heare, he doth account me too,
Yet this before my Fathers Maiesty,

I am content that he shall take the oddes
Of his great name and estimation,

And will, to saue the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him, in a Single Fight.

King. And Prince of Wales, so dare we venter thee, Albeit, considerations infinite

Do

Do make against it: No good Werster, no,
We loue our people well; euen those we loue
That are misled vpon your Cousins part:
And will they take the offer of our Grace:
Both he, and they, and you; yea, euery man
Shall be my Friend againe, and Ile be his.
So tell your Cousin, and bring me word,
What he will do. But if he will not yeeld,
Rebuke and dread correction waite on vs,
And they shall do their Office. So bee gone,
We will not now be troubled with reply,
We offer faire, take it aduisedly.

Exit Worcester.

Prin. It will not be accepted, on my life,
The Douglas and the Hotspurre both together,
Are confident against the world in Armes.

King. Hence therefore, euery Leader to his charge,
For on their answer will we set on them;
And God befriend vs, as our cause is iust. Exeunt.

Manet Prince and Falstaffe.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me downe in the battell,
And bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.

Prin. Nothing but a Colossus can do thee that friendship
Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed time Hal, and all well.

Prin. Why, thou ow'st heauen a death.

Falst. 'Tis not due yet: I would bee loath to pay him before his day. What neede I bee so forward with him, that call's not on me? Well, 'tis no matter, Honor prickes me on. But how if Honour prickes me off when I come on? How then? Can Honour set too a legge? No: or an arme? No: Or take away the greefe of a wound? No.
Honour hath no skill in Surgerie, then? No. What is Honour? A word. What is that word Honour? Ayre: A trim reckoning. Who hath it? He that dy'de a Wednesday. Doth he feele it? No. Doth hee heare it? No. Is it insensible then? yea, to the dead. But will it not liue with the liuing? No. Why? Detraction wil not suffer it, therefore Ile none of it. Honour is a meere Scutcheon, and so ends my Catechisme. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Worcester, and Sir Richard Vernon.

Wor. O no, my Nephew must not know, Sir Richard,
The liberall kinde offer of the King.

Ver. 'Twere best he did.

Wor. Then we are all vndone.

It is not possible, it cannot be,
The King would keepe his word in louing vs,
He will suspect vs still, and finde a time
To punish this offence in others faults:
Supposition, all our liues, shall be stocke full of eyes;
For Treason is but trusted like the Foxe,
Who ne're so tame, so cherisht, and lock'd vp,
Will haue a wilde trick of his Ancestors:
Looke how he can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks,
And we shall feede like Oxen at a stall,
The better cherisht, still the nearer death.
My Nephewes trespass may be well forgot,
It hath the excuse of youth, and heate of blood,

And an adopted name of Ptiuledge,
A haire-brain'd Hotspurre, govern'd by a Spleene:
All his offences liue vpon my head,
And on his Fathers. We did traine him on,
And his corruption being tane from vs,
We as the Spring of all, shall pay for all:
Therefore good Cousin, let not Harry know
In any case, the offer of the King.
Ver. Deliuier what you will, Ile say 'tis so.
Heere comes your Cousin.

Enter Hotspurre.

Hot. My Vnkle is return'd, Deliuier vp my Lord of Westmerland.
Vnkle, what newe?

Wor. The King will bid you battell presently.
Dow. Defie him by the Lord of Westmerland.
Hot. Lord Douglas: Go you and tell him for
Dow. Marry and shall, and verie willingly.

Exit Douglas.

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the King.

Hot. Did you begge any? God forbid.
Wor. I told him gently of our grieuances,
Of his Oath-breaking: which he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworne,
He calls vs Rebels, Traitors, and will scourge
With haughty armes, this hatefull name in vs.

Enter Douglas.

Dow. Arme Gentlemen, to Armes, for I haue thrown
A braue defiance in King Henries teeth:
And Westmerland that was engag'd did beare it,
Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales stept forth before the king,
And Nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Hot. O, would the quarrell lay vpon our heads,
And that no man might draw short breath to day,
But I and Harry Monmouth. Tell me, tell mee,
How shew'd his Talking? Seem'd it in contempt?

Ver. No, by my Soule: I neuer in my life
Did heare a Challenge vrg'd more modestly,
Vnlesse a Brother should a Brother dare
To gentle exercise, and prooue of Armes.
He gaue you all the Duties of a Man,
Trim'd vp your praises with a Princely tongue,
Spoke your desertings like a Chronicle,
Making you euer better then his praise,
By still dispraising praise, valew'd with you:
And which became him like a Prince indeed,
He made a blushing citall of himselfe,
And chid his Trewant youth with such a Grace,
As if he mastred there a double spirit
Of teaching, and of learning instantly:
There did he pause. But let me tell the World,
If he out-liue the enuie of this day,
England did neuer owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his Wanronnesse.

Hot. Cousin, I thinke thou art enamored
On his Follies: neuer did I heare
Of any Prince so wilde at Liberty.
But be he as he will, yet once ere night,
I will imbrace him with a Souldiers arme,
That he shall shrinke vnder my curtesie,
Arme, arme with speed. And Fellow's, Soldiers, Friends,
Better consider what you haue to do,
That I that haue not well the gift of Tongue,

Can

Can lift your blood vp with perswasion.
Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Lord, heere are Letters for you.

Hot. I cannot reade them now.

O Gentlemen, the time of life is short;
To spend that shortnesse basely, were too long.
Ile ride vpon a Diall point,
Still ending at the arrivall of an houre,
And if we liue, we liue to treade on Kings:
If dye, braue death, when Princes dye with vs.
Now for our Consciences, the Armes is faire,
When the intent for bearing them is iust.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. My Lord prepare, the King comes on apace.

Hot. I thanke him, that he cuts me from my tale:
For I professe not talking: Opely this,
Let each man do his best. And heere I draw a Sword,
With the best blood that I can meete withall,
In the aduerture of this perillous day.

Now Esperance Percy, and set on:
Sound all the lofty Instruments of Warre,
And by that Musick, let vs all imbrace:
For heauen to earth, some of vs neuer shall.

A second time do such a curtesie,
They embrace, the Trumpets sound, the King entereth with his power, alarm vpon to the battell. Then enter Douglas, and Sir Walter Blunt.

Blu. What is thy name, that in battell thus yecrossest me?

Dow. Know then my name is Douglas, and I do haue thee in the battell thus,
Because some tell me, that thou art a King.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

Dow. The Lord of Stafford deere to day hath bought Thy likeness: for insted of thee King Harry, I beate.

This Sword hath ended him, so shall it thee,
Vnlesse thou yeeld thee as a Prisoner.

Blu. I was not borne to yeeld, thou haughty Scot,
And thou shalt finde a King that will reuenge Lords Staffords death.

Fight. Blunt is slaine, then enters Hotspurre.

Hot. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus
I neuer had triumphed o're a Scot.

Dow. All's done, all's won, here breathles lies the King.

Hot. Where? Dow. Heere.

Hot. This Douglas? No, I know this face full well: I
A gallant Knight he was, his name was Blunt,

Semblably furnished like the King himselfe.

Dow. Ah foote! go with thy soule, whether it goes,
A borrowed title hast thou bought too deere away.

Why didst thou tell me, that thou wert a King, and hadst
The King hath many marching in his Coats.

Hot. Now by my Sword, I will kill all his Coats,
Ile murder all his Wardrobe peere by peere.

Hot. I meet the King, oh how I long to see him!

Hot. Vp, and away, that I may see him!

Our Souldiers stand full fauour for the day, now Exeunt.

Falst. Though I could scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot heere: heere's no fearing, but vpon the pate. Soft who are you? Sir Walter Blunt, there's Honour for you:

here's no vanity, I am as hot as molten Lead, and as heauy too; heauen's spee! Lead thou of mee, I neede no more weight then mine owne Bowelles: I haue led my rag of Muffins where they are pepper'd: there's not three of my 150. left aliue, and they for the Townes end, to beg during life. But who comes heere?

Enter the Prince.

Prin. What, stand'st thou idle here? Lend me thy sword,
Many a Nobleman likes starke and stiff.

Vnder the hoopes of vaunting enemies,
Whose deaths are vnreueing'd. Prethie, lend me thy sword

Fal. O Hal, I prethee giue me leaue to breathe a while:
Turke Gregory neuer did such deeds in Armes, as I haue done this day. I haue paid Percy, I haue made him sure.

Prin. He is indeed, and liuing to kill thee and thy friends:
I prethee lend me thy sword.

Falst. Nay Hal, if Percy bee aliue, thou getst not my Sword; but take my Pistoll if thou wilt.

Prin. Giue it me: What, is it in the Case?

Fal. I Hal, 'tis hot: There's that will Sacke a City.

The Prince drawes out a Bottle of Sacke.

Prin. What, is it a time to iest and dally now?

Fal. If Percy be aliue, Ile pierce him: if he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his (willingly) let him make a Carbonado of mee: I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: Giue mee life, which if I can saue, so; if not, honour comes vnlook'd for, and there's an end.

The Prince throwes it at him.

Fal. If Percy be aliue, Ile pierce him: if he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his (willingly) let him make a Carbonado of mee: I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: Giue mee life, which if I can saue, so; if not, honour comes vnlook'd for, and there's an end.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Alarm, exous sons, enter the King, the Prince,

Lord Iohn of Lancaster, and Earle of Westmerland.

King. I prethee Harry withdraw thy selfe, thou blest dest too much: Lord Iohn of Lancaster, go you with him.

P. Iob. Not, my Lord, vnlesse I did bleed too.

Prin. I beseech your Maiesty, make vp, least you retirement do amaze your friends.

King. I will do so: My Lord of Westmerland lead him to his Tent.

West. Come my Lord, Ile lead you to your Tent.

Prin. Lead me my Lord, I desire need your helps.

And heauen forbid a shallow scratch should driue
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this.

Where stain'd Nobility lies troden on,
And Rebels Armes triumph in massacres.

Iob. We breath too long: Come cousin Westmerland,
Our duty this way lies, for heauen's sake come.

Prin. By heauen thou hast deceiv'd me Lancaster,
I did not thinke thee Lord of such a spirit.

Before, I lou'd thee as a Brother, Iohn: and now I
But now, I do respect thee as my Soule.

King. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point,
With lustier maintenance then I did looke for.

Of such an vngrowne Warriour, I had not thought.

Prin. O this Boy, lends me all to vs all.

Dow. Another King: They giue like Hydra's heads:
I am the Douglas, fatal to all those

That weare those blours on them. What art thou?

King. The King himselfe, with Douglas grieues at hart

So

So many of his shadowes thou hast met,
And not the very King: I haue two Boyes
Seeke Percy and thy selfe about the Field:
But seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee: so defend thy selfe.

Dow. I feare thou art another counterfeit:
And yet in faith thou bear'st thee like a King:
But mine I am sure thou art, whoere thou be,
And thus I win thee. They fight, the King being in danger.

Prin. Hold vp they head vile Scot, or thou art like Neuer to hold it vp againe: the Spirits
Of valiant Sherly, Stafford, Blunt, are in my Armes;
It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee,
Who neuer promiseth, but he meanes to pay.

Prin. Heere My Lord: how fare's your Grace?
Sir Nicholas Gansley hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton: He to Clifton straight.

King. Stay, and breath awhile.
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion;
And shew'd thou mak'st some tender of my life
In this faire rescue thou hast brought to mee.

Prin. O heauen, they did me too much injury,
That euer said I hearkned to your death.
If it were so, I might haue let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas ouer you,
Which would haue bene as speedy in your end,
As all the poysonous Potions in the world,
And saue the Treacherous labour of your Sonne.

K. Make vp to Clifton, He to Sir Nicholas Gansley. Exit
Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.
Prin. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.
Hot. My name is Harry Percy.
Prin. Why then I see a very valiant rebel of that name.
I am the Prince of Wales, and thinke not Percy,
To share with me in glory any more.

Two Starrs keepe not their motion in one Sphere,
Nor can one England brooke a double reigne,
Of Harry Percy, and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it Harry, for the houre is come
To end the one of vs; and would to heauen,
Thy name in Armes, were now as great as mine.

Prin. He make it greater ere I part from thee,
And all the budding Honours on thy Crest,
He crop to make a Garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brooke thy Vanities. Fight.

Enter Falstaff.
Fal. Well said Hal, to it Hal. Nay you shall finde no
Boy's play heere, I can tell you.

Enter Douglas, he fights with Falstaff, who falls downe as if he were dead. The Prince kills Percy.

Hot. Oh Harry, thou hast rob'd me of my youth:
I better brooke the losse of brittle life;
Then those proud Tides thou hast wonne of me,
Which wound my thogh's worse, then the sword my flesh:
But thought's the slave of Life, and Life, Times foole;
And Time, that takes the sunney of all the world,
Must haue a stop. O, I could Prophesie,
But that the Earth, and the cold hand of death,
Eyes on my Tongue: No Percy, thou art dust,
And food for —

Prin. For Wormes, braue Percy. Farewell great heart:
Ill-weau'd Ambition, how much art thou shrunke!
When that this bodie did containe a spirit,

A Kingdome for it was too small a bound:
But now two paces of the vilest Earth
Is roome enough. This Earth that beares the dead,
Beares not aloue so stout a Gentleman.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so great a shew of Zeale.
But let my fauours hide thy mangled face,
And euen in thy behalfe, Ile thanke my selfe
For doing these fayre Rites of Tenderesse.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heauen,
Thy ignomy sleepe with thee in the graue,
But not remembered in thy Epiraph.

What? Old Acquaintance? Could not all this flesh
Keepe in a little life? Poore Iacke, farewell:
I could haue better spar'd a better man.
O, I should haue a heauy misse of thee,
If I were much in loue with Vanity.
Death hath not strucke so fat a Deere to day,
Though many dearer in this bloody Fray:
Imbowell'd will I see thee by and by,
Till then, in blood, by Noble Percy lye.

Falstaff rises up.

Falst. Imbowell'd? If thou imbowell mee to day, Ile giue you leaue to powder me, and eat me too to morrow.
Twas time to counterfeit, or that hotte Termagant Scot, had paid me Scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I am no counterfeit; to dye, is to be a counterfeit, for hee is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: But to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liueth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life in deede. The better part of Valour, is Discretion; in the which better part, I haue saved my life. I am affraide of this Gun-powder Percy though he be dead. How if hee should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid hee would proue the better counterfeit: therefore Ile make him sure-yea, and Ile sweare I kill'd him. Why may not hee rise as well as I: Nothing confutes me but eyes, and no bodie sees me. Therefore sirra, with a new wound in your thigh, come you along me. Takes Hotspur on his backe.

Enter Prince and John of Lancaster.
Prin. Come Brother John, full brauely hast thou sleight thy Maiden sword.

John. But soft, who haue we heere?

Prin. I did, I saw him dead,
Breathlesse, and bleeding on the ground: Art thou aloue?
Or is it fantasie that playes vpon our eye-sight?
I prethee speake, we will not trust our eyes
Without our eares. Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certaine: I am not a double man: but if I be not Iacke Falstaff, then am I a Iacke: There is Percy, if your Father will do me any Honor, so: if not, let him kill the next Percy himselfe. I looke to be either Earle or Duke, I can assure you.

Prin. Why, Percy I kill'd my selfe, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Did'st thou? Lord, Lord, how the world is giuen to Lying? I graunt you I was downe, and our of Breath, and so was he, but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long houre by Shrewsburie clocke. If I may bee be-lieued, so: if not, let them that should reward Valour, beare the sinne vpon their owne heads. Hee tak't on my death
I gaue him this wound in the Thigh: if the man were aliue, and would deny it, I would make him eate a peece of my sword.

John. This is the strangest Tale that e're I heard.

Prin. This is the strangest Fellow, Brother John.

Come

Come bring your luggage Nobly on your backe:
For my part, if a lye may do thee grace,
Ile gi'd it with the happiest tearmes I haue.

A Retreat is sounded.

The Trumpets sound Retreat, the day is ours:
Come Brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what Friends are liuing, who are dead. Exeunt
Fal. Ile follow as they say, for Reward. Hee that rewards me, heauen reward him. If I do grow great again, Ile grow lesse? For Ile purge, and leaue Sacke, and liue cleanly, as a Nobleman should do. Exit

Scena Quarta.

The Trumpets sound.

*Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, with Worcester &
Vernon Prisoners.*

King. Thus euer did Rebellion finde Rebuke.
Ill-painted Worcester, did we not send Grace,
Pardon, and tearmes of Loue to all of you?
And would'st thou turne our offers contrary?
Misuse the tenor of thy Kinsmans trust?
Three Knights vpon our party slaine to day,
A Noble Earle, and many a creature else,
Had bene aloue this houre,
If like a Christian thou had'st truly borne Betwixt our Armies, true Intelligence.

Wor. What I haue done, my safety vrg'd me to,

And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be auoyded, it falls on mee.
King. Beare Worcester to death, and Vernon too:
Other Offenders we will pause vpon.

Exit Worcester and Vernon.

How goes the Field?

Prin. The Noble Scot Lord Douglas, when hee saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The Noble Percy slaine, and all his men,
Vpon the foot of feare, fled with the rest;
And falling from a hill, he was so bruiz'd
That the pursuers tooke him. At my Tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your Grace,
I may dispose of him.

King. With all my heart.

Prin. Then Brother John of Lancaster,
To you this honourable bounty shall belong:
Go to the Douglas, and deliuer him
Vp to his pleasure, ransomlesse and free:
His Valour shewne vpon our Crests to day,
Hath taught vs how to cherish such high deeds,
Euen in the bosome of our Aduersaries.

King. Then this remains: that we diuide our Power.
You Sonne John, and my Cousin Westmerland
Towards Yorke shall bend you, with your deereft speed
To meet Northumberland, and the Prelate Scroope,
Who (as we heare) are busily in Armes.
My selfe, and you Sonne Harry will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the Earle of March.
Rebellion in this Land shall lose his way,
Meeting the Checke of such another day:
And since this Businesse so faire is done,
Let vs not leaue till all our owne be wonne. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Second Part of Henry the Fourth, Containing his Death: and the Coronation of King Henry the Fifth.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

INDUCTION.

Enter Rumour.

Open your Eares: For which of you will stop
The vent of Hearing, when loud Rumour speaks?
I, from the Orient, to the drooping West
(Making the winde my Post-horse) fill vnfold
The Acts commenced on this Ball of Earth,
Vpon my Tongue, continuall Slanders ride,
The which, in euery Language, I pronounce,
Stuffing the Eares of them with false Reports:
I speake of Peace, while couert Enmitie
(Vnder the smile of Safety) wounds the World:
And who but Rumour, who but onely I
Make fearful Mollers, and prepar'd Defence,
Whil't the bigge yeare, swolne with some other griefes,
Is thought with childe, by the sterne Tyrant, Warre,
And no such matter? Rumour, is a Pipe
Blowne by Surmises, Ielousies, Coniectures;
And of so easie, and so plaine a stop,
That the blunt Monster, with vncounted heads,
The still discordant, wauering Multitude,
Can play vpon it. But what neede I thus
My well-knowne Body to Anatomize
Among my household? Why is Rumour heere?
I run before King Harries victory,
Who in a bloodie field by Shrewsburie
Hath beaten downe yong Hotspurre, and his Troopes, Qvenching the flame of bold Rebellion,
Euen with the Rebels blood. But what meane I
To speake so true at first? My Office is
To noyse abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Vnder the Wrath of Noble Hotspurres Sword:
And that the King, before the Douglas Rage
Stoop'd his Anointed head, as low as death.
This haue I rumour'd through the peasant-Townes,
Betweene the Royall Field of Shrewsburie,
And this Worme-eaten-Hole of ragged Stone,
Where Hotspurres Father, old Northumberland, Lyes crafty ficke. The Postes come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other newes
Then they haue learn'd of Me. From Rumours Tongues,
They bring smooth-Comforts-false, worse then True-wrongs.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lord Bardolfe, and the Porter.

L. Bar. Who keeps the Gate heere now?
Where is the Earle?

Por. What shall I say you are?

Bar. Tell thou the Earle

That the Lord Bardolfe doth attend him heere.

Por. His Lordship is walk'd forth into the Orchard,
Please it your Honor, knocke but at the Gate,
And he himselfe will answer.

Enter Northumberland.

L. Bar. Heere comes the Earle.

Nor. What newes Lord Bardolfe? Eu'ry minute now
Should be the Father of some Stratagem;
The Times are wilde: Contention (like a Horse
Full of high Feeding) madly hath broke loose,
And beares downe all before him.

L. Bar. Noble Earle,
I bring you certaine newes from Shrewsbury.

Nor. Good, and heauen will.

L. Bar. As good as heart can wish:
The King is almost wounded to the death:
And in the Fortune of my Lord your Sonne,
Prince Harrie slaine out-right: and both the Blunts, Kill'd by the hand of Douglas. Yong Prince John,
And Westmerland, and Stafford, fled the Field.
And Harrie Monmouth's Brawne (the Hulke Sir John)
Is prisoner to your Sonne. O, such a Day,
(So fought, so follow'd, and so fairely wonne)
Came not, till now, to dignifie the Times
Since Casars Fortunes.

Nor. How is this deu'd?
Saw you the Field? Came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bar. I spake with one (my L.) that came fro thence,
A Gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me these newes for true.

Nor. Heere comes my Seruant Travers, whom I sent
On Tuesday last, to listen after Newes.

Enter Travers.

L. Bar. My Lord, I ouer-rod him on the way,
And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More then he (haply) may reuile from me.

Nor. Now Travers, what good tidings comes fro you?

Tr. My Lord, Sir John Umfreuill turn'd me backe
With ioyfull tidings; and (being better hors'd)

Out-rod me. After him, came spurring head

A Gentleman (almost fore-spent with speed)

That stopp'd by me, to breath his bloodied horse.

He ask'd the way to Chester: And of him

I did demand what Newes from Shrewsbury:

He told me, that Rebellion had ill lucke,

And that yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold.

With that he gaue his able Horse the head,

And bending forwards strooke his able heeles

Against the panting sides of his poore Iade

Vp to the Rowell head, and starting so,

He seem'd in running, to deuoure the way,

Staying no longer question.

Nor. Ha? Againe:

Said he yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold?

(Of Hot-Spurre, cold-Spurre?) that Rebellion,

Had met ill lucke?

L. Bar. My Lord: Ile tell you what,

If yong Lord your Sonne, haue not the day,

Vpon mine Honor, for a filken point

Ile giue my Barony. Neuer talke of it.

Nor. Why should the Gentleman that rode by Travers

Giue then such instances of Loffe?

L. Bar. Who, he?

He was some hilding Fellow, that had stolne

The Horse he rode on: and vpon my life

Speake at aduantage. Look, here comes more Newes.

Enter Morton.

Nor. Yea, this mans brow, like to a Title-leaf,

Bore-tels the Nature of a Tragick Volume:

So lookes the Strond, when the Imperious Flood

Say Morton, did'st thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury (my Noble Lord)

Where hatefull death put on his vgly Maske

To fight our party.

Nor. How doth my Sonne, and Brother?

Thou trembl'st; and the whitenesse in thy Cheeke

Is apter then thy Tongue, to tell thy Errand.

Euen such a man, so faine, so spiritlesse,

So dull, so dead in looke, so woe-be-gone,

Drew Priams Curtaine, in the dead of night,

And would haue told him, Halfe his Troy was burn'd.

But Priam found the Fire, ere he his Tongue:

And I, my Percies death, ere thou report'st it.

This, thou would'st say: Your Sonne did thus, and thus:

Your Brother, thus. So fought the Noble Douglas,

Stopping my greedy eare, with their bold deeds.

But in the end (to stop mine eare indeed)

Thou hast a Sigh, to blow away this Praise,

Ending with Brother, Sonne, and all are dead.

Mor. Douglas is liuing, and your Brother, yet:

But for my Lord, your Sonne.

Nor. Why, he is dead.

See what a ready tongue Suspicion hath:

He that but feares the thing, he would not know,

Hath by Infinit knowledge from others Eyes,

That what he feard, is chanc'd. Yet speake (Morton)

Tell thou thy Earle, his Diuination Lies,

And I will take it, as a sweet Disgrace,

And make thee rich, for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great, to be (by me) gaind:

Your Spirit is too true, your Feares too certaine.

Nor. Yet for all this, say not that Percies dead.

I see a strange Confession in thine Eye:

Thou shak'st thy head, and hold'st it Feare, or Sinne,

To speake a truth. If he be slaine, say so:

The Tongue offends not, that reports his death:

And he doth sinne that doth belye the dead:

Nor he, which sayes the dead is not aliue:

Yet the first bringer of vnwelcome Newes:

Hath but a looking Office: and his Tongue

Sounds euer after as a fullen Bell

Remembred, knolling a departing Friend.

L. Bar. I cannot thinke (my Lord) your son is dead.

Mor. I am sorry, I should force you to beleue

That, which I would to heauen, I had not seene:

But these mine eyes, saw him in bloody state,

Render'ing faint quittance (wearied, and out-breath'd)

To Henrie Monmouth, whose swift wrath beate downe

The neuer-daunted Percie to the earth,

From whence (with life) he neuer more sprung vp.

In few; his death (whose spirit lent a fire,

Euen to the dullest Peazant in his Canipe)

Being bruited once, rooke fire and heate away

From the best temper'd Courage in his Troopes:

For from his Mettle, was his Party steel'd

Which once, in him abated, all the rest

Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy Lead

And as the Thing, that's heavy in it selfe,

Vpon enforcement, flies with greatest speede,

So did our Men, heavy in Hotspurres losse,

Lend to this weight, such lightnesse with their Feare,

That Arrowes fled not swifter toward their aymes:

Then did our Soldiers (ayming at their safety)

Fly from the field. Then was that Noble Worcester

Too soone a prisoner: and the furious Scott

(The bloody Douglas) whose well-labouring sword

Had three times slaine th'apperance of the King,

Can vaile his stomacke, and did grace the shame

Of those that turn'd their backs: and in his flight,

Stumbling in Feare, was tooke. The summe of all,

Is, that the King hath wonne: and hath sent out

A speedy power, to encounter you my Lord,

Vnder the Conduct of yong Lancaster

And Westmerland: This is the Newes at full.

Nor. For this, I shall haue time enough to mourne.

In Poyson, there is Physicke: and this newes

(Hauing bene well) that would haue made me ficke,

Being ficke, haue in some measure, made me well.

And as the Wretch, whose Feauer-weakened ioynts,

Like strengthlesse Hindges, buckle vnder life,

Impatient of his Fit, breakes like a fire

Out of his keepers armes: Euen so, my Limbes

(Weak'ned with griefe) being now inrag'd with griefe,

Are thrice themselves. Hence therefore thou nice crutch,

A scalie Gauntlet now, with ioynts of Steele

Must gloue this hand. And hence thou sickly Quoife,

Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,

Which Princes, flesh'd with Conquest, ayme to hit.

Now binde my Browes with Iron, and approach

The ragged'st houre, that Time and Spight dare bring

To frowne vpon th'enrag'd Northumberland.

Let Heauen kisse Earth: now let not Natures hand

Keepe the wilde Flood confin'd: Let Order dye;

And let the world no longer be a stage

To feede Contention in a ling'ring Act:

But let one spirit of the First-borne Caine

g

Reigne

Reigne in allhofomes, that each heart being set
On bloody Courtes, the rude Scene may end,
And darknesse be the burier of the dead. (Honor.)

L. Bar. Sweet Earle, diuorce not wisdom from your Mor. The liues of all your louing Complices
Leane on your health, the which if you giue o're
To stormy Passion, must perforce decay.

You cast theuent of Warre (my Noble Lord)
And summ'd the account of Chance, before you said
Let vs make head: It was your presumize,
That in the dole of blowes, your Son might drop.

You knew he walk'd o're perils, on an edge
More likely to fall in, then to get o're:
You were aduis'd his flesh was capeable

Of Wounds, and Scarres; and that his forward Spirit
Would lift him, where most trade of danger rang'd,
Yet did you say go forth: and none of this

(Though strongly apprehended) could restrain
The stifte-borne Action: What hath then befallne?
Or what hath this bold enterprize bring forth,
More then that Being, which was like to be?

L. Bar. We all that are engaged to this losse,
Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous Seas,
That if we wrought our life, was ten to one:

And yet we ventur'd for the gaine propos'd,
Choak'd the respect of likely perill fear'd,
And since we are o're-set, venture againe.

Come, we will all put forth; Body, and Goods,
Mor. 'Tis more then time: And (my most Noble Lord)
I heare for certaine, and do speake the truth:

The gentle Arch-bishop of Yorke is vp
With well appointed Powres: he is a man
Who with a double Surety bindes his Followers.

My Lord (your Sonne) had onely but the Corpses
But shadowes, and the shewes of men to fight;
For that same word (Rebellion) did diuide

The action of their bodies, from their soules,
And they did fight with queasinesse, constrain'd
As men drinke Potions; that their Weapons only

Seem'd on our side: but for their Spirits and Soules,
This word (Rebellion) it had froze them vp,
As Fish are in a Pond. But now the Bishop

Turnes Insurrection to Religion,
Suppos'd sincere, and holy in his Thoughts:
He's follow'd both with Body, and with Minde:

And doth enlarge his Rising, with the blood
Of faire King Richard, letap'd from Pomfret Stones,
Deriues from heauen, his Quarrell, and his Cause:

Tels them, he doth bestride a bleeding Land,
Gasping for life, vnder great Bullingbrooke,
And more, and lesse, do flocke to follow him.

North. I knew of this before. But to speake truth,
This present greefe had wip'd it from my minde.
Go in with me, and counsell euery man

The aptest way for safety, and reuenge:
Get Postes, and Letters, and make Friends with speed,
Neuer so few, nor neuer yet more need. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe, and Page.

Fal. Sirra, you giant, what saies the Doct. to my water?
Page. He said sir, the water it selfe was a good healthy water: but for the party that ow'd it, he might haue more discaies then he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at mee: the braine of this foolish compounded Clay-mant, is not able to inuent any thing that tends to laughter, more then I inuent, or is inuented on me. I am not onely witty in my selfe, but the cause that wit is in other men. I doe heere her Litter, but one. If the Prince put thee into my Seruice for any other reason, then to set mee off, why then I haue no iudgement. Thou horson Mandrake, thou art fitter to be worne in my cap, then to wait at my heeles. I was neuer mann'd with an Agot till now: but I will lette you neyther in Gold, nor Siluer, but in wilde apparell, and send you backe againe to your Master, for a Jewell. The Lusell (the Prince your Master) whose Chin is not yet fledg'd, I will tooner haue a beard grow in the Palme of my hand, then he shall get one on his cheek: yet he will not stick to say, his Face is a Face-Royall. Heauen may finish it when he will, it is not a haire amisse yet: he may keepe it still at a Face-Royall, for a Barber shall neuer earne six pence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man euer since his Father was a Batchellour.

He may keepe his owne Grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said M. Dombledon, about the Satten for my short Cloake, and Slops?

Page. He said sir, you should procure him better Assurance, then Bardolfe: he would not take his Bond & yours, he lik'd not the Security.

Fal. Let him bee damn'd like the Glutton, may his Tongue be hotter, a horson Achitaphel; a Rascally-yea-forsooth-knaue, to beare a Gentleman in hand, and then stand vpon Security? The horson smooth-pates doe now weare nothing but high shoes, and bunches of Keyes at their girdles: and if a man is through with them in honest Taking-yp, then they must stand vpon Securitie: I had as lief they would put Rats-bane in my mouth, as offer to stoppe it with Security. Look'd hee should haue sent me two and twenty yards of Satten (as I am true Knight) and he sends me Security. Well, he may sleepe in Security, for he hath the horne of Abundance: and the lightnesse of his Wife shines through it, and yet cannot he see, though he haue his owne Lanthorne to light him, Where's Bardolfe?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship

a horse.
Fal. I bought him in Paules, and hee'l buy mee a horse in Smithfield. If I could get mee a wife in the Stewes, I were Mann'd, Hors'd, and Wiu'd.

Enter Chief Justice, and Seruant.
Page. Sir, heere comes the Nobleman that committed the Prince for striking him, about Bardolfe.

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.
Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Ser. Falstaffe, and't please your Lordship.
Just. He that was in question for the Robbery?
Ser. He my Lord, but he hath since done good seruice at Shrewsbury: and (as I heare) 'tis now going with some Charge, to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Just. What to Yorke? Call him backe againe.

Ser. Sir John Falstaffe.
Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deafe.
Page. You must speake lowder, my Master is deafe.
Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.

Go plucke him by the Elbow, I must speake with him.
Ser. Sir John.
Fal. What a yong knaue and beg? Is there not warre there not imployment? Doth not the King lacke subiects? Do on any side but one, it is worse shame to begge, then to be on the worst side, were it worse then the name of Rebellion can tell how to make it.

Ser. You mistake me Sir.
Fal. Why sir? Did I say you were an honest man? Setting my Knight-hood, and my Souldier-ship aside, I had lyed in my throat, if I had said so.

Ser. I pray you (Sir) then set your Knight-hood and your Souldier-ship aside, and giue mee leave to tell you, you lye in your throat, if you say I am any other then an honest man.

Fal. I giue thee leaue to tell me so? I lay a-side that which growes to me? If thou get'st any leaue of me, hang me: if thou tak'st leaue, thou wert better be hang'd: you

Hunt-counter, hence: Auant.

Ser. Sir, my Lord would speake with you.
Just. Sir John Falstaffe, a word with you.

Fal. My good Lord: giue your Lordship good time of the day. I am glad to see your Lordship abroad: I heard say your Lordship was sicke. I hope your Lordship goes abroad by aduise. Your Lordship (though not clean past your youth) hath yet some smack of age in you: some rel-lish of the falsnesse of Time, and I most humbly beseech your Lordship, to haue a reuerend care of your health.

Just. Sir John, I sent you before your Expedition, to Shrewsburie.
Fal. If it please your Lordship, I heare his Maiestie is return'd with some discomfort from Wales.

Just. I talke not of his Maiesty: you would not come when I sent for you?

Fal. And I heare moreover, his Highnesse is false into this same whorison Apoplexie.

Just. Well, heauen mend him. I pray let me speake with you.
Fal. This Apoplexie is (as I take it) a kind of Lethargie, a sleeping of the blood, a horson Tingling.

Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.
Fal. It hath it originall from much greefe; from study and perturbation of the braine. I haue read the cause of his effects in Galen. It is a kinde of deafnesse.

Just. I thinke you are false into the diseate: For you heare not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well (my Lord) very well: rather an't please you) it is the diseate of not Listning, the malady of not Marking, that I am troubled withall.

Just. To punish you by the heeles, would amend the attention of your eares, & I care not if I be your Physician

Fal. I am as poore as Job, my Lord; but not so Patient:
your Lordship may minister the Potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of Pouertie: but how I should bee your Patient, to follow your prescriptions, the wife may make some dram of a scruple, or in deede, a scruple it selfe.

Just. I sent for you (when there were matters against you for your life) to come speake with me.

Fal. As I was then aduis'd by my learned Councel, in the lawes of this Land-seruice, I did not come.
Just. Well, the truth is (sir John) you lye in great infamy

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt, cannot lye in lesse.
Just. Your Meanes is very slender, and your wast great.
Fal. I would it were otherwise: I would my Meanes were greater, and my waste slenderer.

Just. You haue mislead the yongfull Prince.
Fal. The yong Prince hath mislead mee. I am the Fellow with the great belly, and he my Dogge.

Just. Well, I am loth to gall a new-heal'd wound: your daies seruice at Shrewsbury, hath a little gilded ouer your Night's exploit on Gads-hill. You may thanke the vnquiet time, for your quiet o're-posting that Action.

Fal. My Lord?
Just. But since all is wel, keep it so: wake not a sleeping
Fal. To wake a Wolfe, is as bad as to smell a Fox.

Just. What you are as a candle, the better part burnt out
Fal. A Wasell-Candle, my Lord; all Tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approue the truth.

Just. There is not a white haire on your face, but shold haue his effect of grauity.
Fal. His effect of grauy, grauy, grauy.

Just. You follow the yong Prince vp and downe, like his cuill Angell.
Fal. Not so (my Lord) your ill Angell is light: but I hope, he that lookes vpon mee, will take mee without weighing: and yet, in some respects I grant, I cannot go:

I cannot tell. Vertue is of so little regard in these Costormongers, that true valor is turn'd Beare-heard. Pregnancie is made a Tapster, and hath his quicke wit wasted in giuing Recknings: all the other gifts appertinent to man

(as the malice of this Age shapeth them) are not woorth a Gooseberry. You that are old, consider not the capacities of vs that are yong: you measure the heat of our Li-uers, with the bitterness of your galls: & we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confesse, are waggis too.

Just. Do you set downe your name in the scrowle of youth, that are written downe old, with all the Characters of age? Haue you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your winde short? your wit fingle? and euery part about you blasted with Antiquity? and wil you cal your selfe yong? Fy, fy, fy, sir John.

Fal. My Lord, I was borne with a white head, & somthing a round belly. For my voice, I haue lost it with hallowing and singing of Anthemes. To approue my youth farther, I will not: the truth is, I am onely olde in iudge-ment and vnderstanding: and he that will caper with mee for a thousand Markes, let him lend me the mony, & haue at him. For the boxe of thcare that the Prince gaue you, he gaue it like a rude Prince, and you tooke it like a ienssible Lord. I haue checkt him for it, and the yong Lion repents: Marry not in a fies and sacke-cloath, but in new Silke, and old Sacke.

Just. Wel, heauen send the Prince a better companion.
Fal. Heauen send the Companion a better Prince: I cannot rid my hands of him.

Just. Well, the King hath seuer'd you and Prince Har- ry, I heare you are going with Lord John of Lancaster, against the Archbishop, and the Earle of Northumberland

Fal. Yes, I thanke your pretty sweet wit for it: but looke you pray, (all you that kisse my Ladie Peace, at home) that our Armies ioyne not in a hot day: for if I take but two shirts out with me, and I meane not to sweat extraordinarily: if it bee a hot day, if I brandish any thing but my Bottle, would I might neuer spit white againe:

There is not a dangerous Action can peepe out his head, but I am thrust vpon it. Well, I cannot last euer.

Just. Well, be honest, be honest, and heauen blesse your Expedition.
Fal. Will your Lordship lend mee a thousand pound, to buy me forth?

Just. Not a peny, not a peny: you are too impatient to beare crosses. Fare you well. Commend mee to my Cousin Westmerland.

Fal. If I do, fillop me with a three-man-Beetle. A man can no more separate Age and Conetounesse, then he can part yong limbes and lechery: but the Gowt galles the one, and the other.

one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the Degrees prevent my curses. Boy?

Page. Sir.

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats, and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this Consumption of the purse. Borrowing onely lingers, and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. Go beare this letter to my Lord of Lancaster, this to the Prince, this to the Earle of Westmerland, and this to old Mistis Ursula, whome I haue weekly sworne to marry, since I percei'd the first white haire on my chin. About it: you know where to finde me. A pox of this Gowt, or a Gowt of this Poxe: for the one or th' other playes the rogue with my great toe: It is no matter, if I do haile, I haue the warres for my colour, and my Pension shall seeme the more reasonable. A good wit will make vse of any thing: I will turne diseales to commodity.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Archbishop, Hastings, Mowbray, and Lord Bardolfe.

Ar. Thus haue you heard our causes, & know our Means:

And my most noble Friends, I pray you all

Speake plainly your opinions of our hopes,

And first (Lord Marshall) what say you to it?

Mow. I well allow the occasion of our Armes,

But gladly would be better satisfied,

How (in our Meanes) we should aduance our selues

To looke with forehead bold and big enough

Vpon the Power and puissance of the King.

Hast. Our present Musters grow vpon the File

To five and twenty thousand men of choice:

And our Supplies, liue largely in the hope

Of great Northumberland, whose bosome burnes

With an incensed Fire of Injuries.

L. Bar. The question then (Lord Hastings) standeth thus

Whether our present five and twenty thousand

May hold vp head, without Northumberland:

Hast. With him, we may.

L. Bar. I marry, there's the point:

But if without him we be thought to feeble,

My iudgement is, we should not step too farre

Till we had his Assistance by the hand.

For in a Theme so bloody fac'd, as this,

Coniecture, Expectation, and Surmise

Of Aydes incertaine, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true Lord Bardolfe, for indeed

It was young Hotspur's case, at Shrewsbury.

L. Bar. It was (my Lord) who lin'd himself with hope,

Eating the ayre, on promise of Supply,

Flatt'ring himselfe with Project of a power,

Much smaller, then the smallest of his Thoughts,

And so with great imagination

(Proper to mad men) led his Powers to death,

And (winking) leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But (by your leaue) it neuer yet did hurt

To lay downe likely hoods, and formes of hope.

L. Bar. Yes, if this present quality of warre

Indeed the instant action: a cause on foot,

Liues so in hope: As in an early Spring,

We see th' appearing buds, which to proue fruites,

Hope giues not so much warrant, as Dispaire

That Frosts will bite them. When we meane to build,

We first suruey the Plot, then draw the Modell,

And when we see the figure of the house,

Then must we rate the cost of the Erection,

Which if we finde out-weighes Ability,

What do we then, but draw a-new the Modell

In fewer offices? Or at least, desist

To builde at all? Much more, in this great worke,

(Which is (almost) to plucke a Kingdome downe,

And set another vp) should we suruey

The plot of Situation, and the Modell;

Consent vpon a sure Foundation:

Question Surueyors, know our owne estate,

How able such a Worke to vndergo,

To weigh against his Opposite? Or else,

We fortifie in Paper, and in Figures,

Vsing the Names of men, instead of men:

Like one, that drawes the Modell of a house

Beyond his power to builde it; who (halfe through)

Giues o're, and leaues his part-created Cost

A naked subiect to the Weeping Clouds,

And waste, for charlish Winters tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes (yet likely of faire birth)

Should be still borne, and that we now possist

The utmost man of expectation:

I thinke we are a Body strong enough

(Euen as we are) to equal with the King.

L. Bar. What is the King but five & twenty thousand?

Hast. To vs no more: nay not so much Lord Bardolfe,

For his diuisions (as the Times do braul)

Are in three Heads: one Power against the French,

And one against Glendouers: Perforce a third

Must take vp vs: So is the vnfirme King

In three diuided: and his Cofters found

With hollow Poverty, and Emptinesse.

Ar. That he should draw his fenerall strengths together

And come against vs in full puissance

Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,

He leaues his backe vnarm'd, the French, and Welch

Baying him at the heeles: neuer feare that.

L. Bar. Who is it like should lead his Forces hither?

Hast. The Duke of Lancaster, and Westmerland:

Against the Welch himselfe, and Harrie Monmouth.

But who is substituted against the French,

I haue no certaine notice.

Arch. Let vs on:

And publish the occasion of our Armes.

The Common-wealth is sicke of their owne Choice,

Their ouer-greedy loue hath surfetted:

An habitation giddy, and vnure

Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.

O thou fond Many, with what loud applause

Did'st thou beate heauen with blessing Bullingbrooke,

Before he was, what thou would'st haue him be?

And being now trimm'd in thine owne desires,

Thou (beastly Feeder) art so full of him,

That thou prouok'st thy selfe to cast him vp.

So, so, (thou common Dogge) did'st thou disgorge

Thy glutton-bosome of the Royall Richard,

And now thou would'st eate thy dead vomit vp.

And how'st thou to finde it. What trust is in these Times?

They, that when Richard liu'd, would haue him dye,

Are now become enamour'd on his grave.

Thou that throw'st dust vpon his goodly head

When through proud London he came fighting on,

After th' admired heeles of Bullingbrooke,

Cri'st now, O Earth, yeeld vs that King againe,

And

And take thou this (O thoughts of men accurs'd)

"Past, and to Come, seemes best; things Present worst."

Mow. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on?

Hast. We are Times subiects, and Time bids, be gone.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Hostesse, with two Officers, Fang, and Snare.

Hostesse. Mr. Fang, haue you entred the Action?

Fang. It is enter'd.

Hostesse. Wher's your Yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman?

Will he stand to it?

Fang. Sirrah, wher's Snare?

Hostesse. I, I, good M. Snare..

Snare. Heere, heere.

Fang. Snare, we must Arrest Sir Iohn Fastolfe.

Host. I good M. Snare, I haue enter'd him, and all.

Sn. It may chance cost some of vs our liues: he wil stab

Hostesse. Alas the day: take heed of him: he stabd me in mine owne house, and that most beastly: he cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out. Hee will soyne like any diuell, he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Hostesse. No, nor I neither: Ile be at your elbow.

Fang. If I but fist him once, if he come but within my Vice.

Host. I am vndone with his going: I warrant he is an infatuate thing vpon my score. Good M. Fang hold him sure: good M. Snare let him not scape, he comes continuantly to Py-Corner (saying your manhoods) to buy a saddle, and hee is indited to dinner to the Lubbars head in Lombardstreet, to M. Smoother the Silkmán. I pra'ye, since my Exion is enter'd, and my Case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer: A too. Marke is a long one, for a poore lone woman to beare: & I haue borne, and borne, and borne, and haue bin sub'doff, and sub'd-off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing, wiles

a woman should be made an Ass and a Beast, to beare e-uery Knates wrong.

Enter Fastolfe and Bardolfe.

Yonder he comes, and that arrant Malmesey-Nose Bar-dolfe with him. Do your Offices, do your offices: M. Fang, & M. Snare, do me, do me, do me your Offices.

Fal. How now? whose Mare's dead? what's the matter?

Fang. Sir Iohn, I arrest you, at the suit of Mist. Quickly.

Fast. Away Varlets, draw Bardolfe: Cut me off the Villaines head: throw the Queane in the Channell.

Host. Throw me in the channell? Ile throw thee there:

Wilt thou? wilt thou? thou bastardy rogue. Murder, murder, O thou Hony-suckle villaine, wilt thou kill Gods officers, and the Kings? O thou hony-feed Rogue, thou art a honyfeed, a Man-queller, and a woman-queller.

Fast. Keep them off, Bardolfe. Fang. A rescue, a rescue.

Host. Good people bring a rescue. Thou wilt not? thou wilt not? Do, do thou Rogue: Do thou Hempsed.

Page. Away you Scullion, you Rampallian, you Fustil-lian: Ile tucke your Catastrophe. Enter, Ch. Justice.

Just. What's the matter? Keepe the Peace here, ho.

Host. Good my Lord be good to mee. I beseech you stand to me.

Ch. Just. How now Sir Iohn? What are you brauling here?

Doth this become your place, your time, and business?

You should haue bene well on your way to Yoike.

Stand from him Fellow; wherefore hang'st vpon him?

Host. Oh my most worshipfull Lord, and please your Grace, I am a poore widdow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit. Ch. Just. For what summe?

Host. It is more then for some (my Lord) it is for all: all

I haue, he hath eaten me out of house and home; hee hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his: but I will haue some of it out againe, or I will ride thee o' Nights, like the Mare.

Fast. I thinke I am as like to ride the Mare, if I haue any vantage of ground, to get vp.

Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir Iohn? Ey, what a man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation?

Are you not asham'd to inforce a poore Widdowe to so rough a course, to come by her owne?

Fast. What is the grosse summe that I owe thee?

Host. Marry (if thou wer't an honest man) thy selfe, &

the money too. Thou didst sweare to mee vpon a parcell gilt Goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber at the round table, by a sea-cole fire, on Wednesday in Whitson week, when the Prince broke thy head for lik'ning him to a singing man of Windfor; Thou didst sweare to me then (as I was washing thy wound) to marry me, and make mee my Lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keach the Butchers wife come in then, and cal me gossip Quickly? comming in to borrow a messe of Vinegar: telling vs, she had a good dish of Prawnes: whereby I didst desire to eat some: whereby I told thee they were ill for a greene wound? And didst not thou (when she was gone downe staires) desire me to be no more familiar with such poore people, saying, that ere long they should call me Madam?

And didst thou nor kisse me, and bid mee fetch thee 30.s? I put thee now to thy Book-oath, deny it if thou canst?

Fal. My Lord, this is a poore mad soule: and she sayes vp & downe the town, that her eldest son is like you. She hath bin in good case, & the truth is, poverty hath distracted her: but for these foolish Officers, I beseech you, I may haue redresse against them.

Just. Sir Iohn, Sir Iohn, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause, the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of wordes, that come with such (more then impudent) sawcines from you; can thrust me from a leuell consideration, I know you ha' pra-cis'd vpon the easie-yielding spirit of this woman.

Host. Yes in troth my Lord.

Just. Prethee peace: pay her the debt you owe her, and vpay the villany you haue done her: the one you may do with sterling money, & the other with currant repentance.

Fal. My Lord, I will not vndergo this sneape without reply. You call honorable Boldnes, impudent Sawcinesse:

If a man wil curt'sie, and say nothing, he is vertuous: No, my Lord (your humble duty remebred) I will not be your sutor. I say to you, I desire deliur'ance from these Officers being vpon hasty employment in the Kings Affaires.

Just. You speake, as hauing power to do wrong: But answer in the effect of your Reputation, and satisfie the poore woman.

Fast. Come hither Hostesse. Enter M. Gower

Ch. Just. Now Master Gower: What newes?

Gow. The King (my Lord) and Henrie Prince of Wales

Are neere at hand: The rest the Paper telles.

Fast. As I am a Gentleman.

Host. Nay, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a Gentleman, Come, no more word

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the onely drinking: and for thy walles a pretty slight Drollery, or the storie of the Prodigall, or the Germane hunting in Waterworkes, is worth a thousand of these Bed-hangings, and these Fly-bitten Tapestries. Let it be tenne pound (if thou canst.) Come, if it were not for thy humors, there is not a better Wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy Action: Come, thou must not bee in this humour with me, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

Hof. Prethee (Sir Iohn) let it be but twenty Nobles, I loath to pawne my Place, in good earnest la.

Fal. Let it alone, Ile make other shift: you'l be a fool still.

Hof. Well, you shall haue it although I pawne my Gowne. I hope you'l come to Supper: You'l pay me altogether?

Fal. Will I liue? Go with her, with her: hooke-on, hooke-on.

Hof. Will you haue Doll Teare-sheet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words. Let's haue her.

Ch. Iust. I haue heard bitter newes.

Fal. What's the newes (my good Lord?)

Ch. Iust. Where lay the King last night?

Mef. At Basingstoke my Lord.

Fal. I hope (my Lord) all's well. What is the newes my Lord?

Ch. Iust. Come all his Forces backe?

Mef. No: Fifteene hundred Foot, five hundred Horse Are march'd vp to my Lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland, and the Archbishop.

Fal. Comes the King backe from Wales, my noble L?

Ch. Iust. You shall haue Letters of me presently.

Fal. Come, go along with me, good M. Gowre.

Fal. My Lord.

Ch. Iust. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gowre, shall I entreate you with mee to dinner?

Gow. I must waite vpon my good Lord heere.

Fal. I thanke you, good Sir Iohn.

Ch. Iust. Sir Iohn, you loyter heere too long, being you are to take Souldiers vp, in Countries as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, Master Gowre?

Ch. Iust. What foolish Master taught you these manners, Sir Iohn?

Fal. Master Gowre, if they become mee not, hee was a Foole that taught them mee. This is the right Fencing grace (my Lord) tap for tap, and so part faire.

Ch. Iust. Now the Lord lighten thee, thou art a great Foole.

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prince Henry, Pointz, Bardolfe,

and Page.

Prin. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Pointz. Is it come to that? I had thought wearines durst not haue attach'd one of so high blood.

Prin. It doth me: though it discolors the complexion of my Greatnesse to acknowledge it. Doth it not shew vildely in me, to desire small Beere?

Pointz. Why, a Prince should not be so loosely studied;

as to remember to weake a Composition.

Prince. Belike then, my Appetite was not Princely got: for (in troth) I do now remember the poore Creature, Small Beere. But indeede these humble considerations make me out of loue with my Greatnesse. What disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? Or to know thy face to morrow? Or to take note how many paire of Silk stockings y ha'st (Viz. these, and those that were thy shirts, as one for superfluity, and one other, for vse. But it is a low ebbe of Linnen with thee, when thou keep'st not Racket there, as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy Low Countries, haue made a shift to eate vp thy Holland.

Pointz. How ill it followes, after you haue labour'd so hard, you should talke so idly? Tell me how many good yong Princes would do so, their Fathers lying so sicke, as yours is?

Prin. Shall I tell thee one thing, Pointz?

Pointz. Yes: and let it be an excellent good thing.

Prin. It shall serue among wittes of no higher breed, ing then thine.

Pointz. Go to: I stand the push of your one thing, that you'l tell.

Prin. Why, I tell thee, it is not meet, that I should be sad now my Father is sicke: albeit I could tell to thee (as I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Pointz. Very hardly, vpon such a subiect.

Prin. Thou think'st me as farr in the Duels Booke, as thou, and Falstaffe, for obduracie and persistencie. Let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my hart bleeds inwardly, that my Father is so sicke: and keeping such wild company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me, all ostentation of sorrow.

Pointz. The reason?

Prin. What would'st thou think of me, if I shold weep?

Pointz. I would thinke thee a most Princely hypocrite.

Prin. It would be euery mans thought: and thou art a blessed Fellow, to thinke as euery man thinks: neuer a mans thought in the world, keeps the Rode-way better then thine: euery man would thinke me an Hypocrite indeede. And what accites your most worshipful thought to thinke so?

Pointz. Why, because you haue beene so lewde, and so much ingrafted to Falstaffe.

Prin. And to thee.

Pointz. Nay, I am well spoken of, I can heare it with mine owne eares: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second Brother, and that I am a proper Fellow of my hands: and those two things I confesse I cannot helpe. Looke, looke, here comes Bardolfe.

Prince. And the Boy that I gaue Falstaffe, he had him from me Christian, and see if the fat villain haue not transform'd him Ape.

Enter Bardolfe.

Bard. Saue you: Grace.

Prin. And yours, most Noble Bardolfe.

Pointz. Come, you pernicious Ape, you bashfull Foole, must you be blushing? Wherefore blush you now? what a Maidenly man at Armes are you become? Is it such a matter to get a Pottle-pots Maiden-head?

Page. He call'd me euen now (my Lord) through a red Lattice, and I could discerne no part of his face from the window.

window: at last I spy'd his eyes, and me thought he had made two holes in the Ale-wiues new Petticoat, & peeped through.

Prin. Hath not the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you horson vpright Rabbet, away.

Page. Away, you rascally. Alheare dreame, away.

Prin. Instruct vs Boy: what dreame, Boy?

Page. Marry (my Lord) Althea dream'd, she was de-liver'd of a Firebrand, and therefore I call him hir dream.

Prince. A Crowne-worth of good Interpretation: There it is, Boy.

Pointz. O that this good Blossome could bee kept from Cankers: Well, there is six pence to preferue thee.

Bard. If you do not make him be hang'd among you, the gallows shall be wrong'd.

Prin. And how doth thy Master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my good Lord: he heard of your Graces coming to Towne. There's a Letter for you.

Pointz. Deliver'd with good respect: And how doth the Martlemas, your Master?

Bard. In bodily health Sir.

Prin. Marry, the immortal part needes a Physitian: but that moues not him: though that bee sicke, it dyes not.

Prin. I do allow this Wen to bee as familiar with me, as my dogge: and he holds his place, for looke you he writes.

Pointz. Lector. Iohn Falstaffe Knight: (Euery man must know that, as oft as hee hath occasion to name himselfe:) Euen like those that are kinne to the King, for they neuer pricke their finger, but they say, there is some of the kings blood spilt. How comes that (sayes he) that takes vpon him not to conceiue? the answer is as ready as a borrow'd cap: I am the Kings poote Cofin Sir.

Prin. Nay, they will be kin to vs, but they will fetch it from Iaphet. But to the Letter: — Sir Iohn Falstaffe, Knight, to the Sonne of the King, nearest his Father, Harris Prince of Wales, greeting.

Pointz. Why this is a Certificate.

Prin. Peace.

Pointz. Imitate the honorable Romaines in breuitie.

Prin. Sure he meanes breuity in breath: short-winded. I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Bee not too familiar with Pointz, for hee misuses thy Fawours so much, that he sweares thou art to marrie his Sister Nell. Re- pent at idle times as thou may'st, and so farewell.

Thine, by yea and no: which is as much as to say, as thou seest him. Tacke Falstaffe with my Familiars.

John with my Brothers and Sister: On Sir.

John, with all Europe.

My Lord, I will sleepe this Letter in Sack, and make him eate it.

Prin. That's to make him eate twenty of his Words. But do you vse me thus Ned? Must I marrie your Sister?

Pointz. May the Wench haue no worie Fortune. But I neuer laid so much as a finger on her.

Prin. Well, thus we play the Fooles with the time, & the spirits of the wise, sit in the clouds, and mocke vs: Is your Master heere in London?

Bard. Yes my Lord.

Prin. Where suppes he? Doth the old Sore, feede in the old Franked?

Bard. At the old place my Lord, in East-cheape.

Prin. What Company?

Prin. Sup any women with him?

Page. None my Lord, but old Mistris Quickly, and M. Doll Teare-sheet.

Prin. What Pagan may that be?

Page. A proper Gentlewoman, Sir, and a Kinswoman of my Masters.

Prin. Euen such Kin, as the Parish Heyfors are to the Towne-Bull?

Pointz. Shall we steale vpon them (Ned) at Supper?

Prin. I am your shadow, my Lord, Ile follow you.

Prin. Sirrah, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your Master that I am yet in Towne.

Pointz. There's for your silence.

Bard. I haue no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine Sir, I will gouerne it.

Prin. Fare ye well: go.

Pointz. This Doll Teare-sheet should be some Rode.

Prin. I warrant you, as common as the way betweene S. Albans, and London.

Prin. How might we see Falstaffe bestow himselfe to night, in his true colours, and not our selues be seene?

Pointz. Put on two Leather Jerkins, and Aprons, and waite vpon him at his Table, like Drawers.

Prin. From a God, to a Bull? A heauie declension: It was Ioues case. From a Prince, to a Prentice, a low transformation, that shall be mine: for in euery thing, the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me Ned. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Northumberland his Ladie, and Harrie Percies Ladie.

North. I prethee louing Wife, and gentle Daughter, Giue an euen way vnto my rough Affaires:

Wife. Put not you on the visage of the Times, And be like them to Percie, troublesome.

North. I haue giuen ouer, I will speak no more, Do what you will: your Wisedome, be your guide.

Wife. Alas (sweet Wife) my Honor is at pawne, And but my going, nothing can redeeme it.

La. Oh yet, for heauens sake, go not to these Warrs; The Time was (Father) when you broke your word,

When you were more ender'd to it, then now, When your owne Percy, when my heart-deere Harry,

Threw many a Northward looke, to see his Father bring vp his Powres: but he did long in vaine.

Who then perswaded you to stay at home? There were two Honors lost; Yours, and your Sonnes.

For Yours, may heauenly glory brighten it: For His, it stucke vpon him, as the Sunne

In the gray vault of Heauen: and by his Light Did all the Cheualrie of England moue

To do brave Acts. He was (indeed) the Glasse Wherein the Noble Youth did dresse themselves.

He had no Legges, that practis'd not his Gate: And speaking thicke (which Nature made his blemish)

Became the Accents of the Valiant. For those that could speake low, and tardily,

Would turne their owne Perfection, to Abuse. To seeme like him. So that in Speech, in Gate,

In Diet, in Affections of delight, In Militarie Rules, Humors of Blood,

He was the Marke, and Glasse, Coppy, and Booke,
That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous! him,
O Miracle of Men! Him did you leaue
(Second to none) vn-seconded by you,
To looke vpon the hideous God of Warre,
In disadvantage, to abide a field,
Where nothing but the sound of Hotsper's Name
Did seeme defensible: so you left him,
Neuer, O neuer doe his Ghost the wrong;
To hold your Honor more precise and nice
With others, then with him. Let them alone:
The Marshall and the Arch-bishop are strong.
Had my sweet Harry had but halfe their Numbers,
To day might I (hanging on Hotsper's Necke)
Haue talk'd of Monmouth's Graue.

North. Beshrew your heart,
(Faile Daughter) you doe draw my Spirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient Ouer-sights.
But I must goe, and meet with Danger there,
Or it will seeke me in another place,
And finde me worfe provided.

Wife. O flye to Scotland,
Till that the Nobles, and the armed Commons,
Haue of their Puissance made a little taste.

Lady. If they get ground, and vantage of the King,
Then ioyne you with them, like a Ribbe of Steele,
To make Strength stronger. But, for all our loues,
First let them trye themselves. So did your Sonne,
He was so suffer'd; so came I a Widow:
And neuer shall haue length of Life enough,
To raine vpon Remembrance with mine Eyes,
That it may grow, and sprowt, as high as Heauen,
For Recordation to my Noble Husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me: tis with my Minde
As with the Tyde, swell'd vp vnto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neyther way.
Faine would I goe to meet the Arch-bishop,
But many thousand Reasons hold me backe.
I will resolute for Scotland: there am I,
Till Time and Vantage craue my company. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter two Drawers.

1. Drawer. What hast thou brought there? Apple-Iohns? Thou know'st Sir Iohn cannot endure an Apple-Iohn.

2. Drawer. Thou say'st true: the Prince once set a Dish of Apple-Iohns before him, and told him there were five more Sir Iohns: and, putting off his Hat, said, I will now take my leaue of these fixe drie, round, old-wither'd Knights. It anger'd him to the heart: but hee hath forgot that.

1. Drawer. Why then couer, and set them downe: and see if thou canst finde out Sneaker Noyle; Mistis Tearesheet would faine haue some Musique.

2. Drawer. Sirrha, heere will be the Prince, and Master Points, anon: and they will put on two of our Jerkins, and Aprons, and Sir Iohn must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

1. Drawer. Then here will be old Pistol: it will be an excellent stratagem.

2. Draw. Hee see if I can finde out Sneake. Exit.
Enter Hostesse, and Dol.

Host. Sweet-heart, me thinkes now you are in an excellent good temperalitie: your Pulledge beates as extraordinarily, as heart would desire; and your Colour
(I warrant you) is as red as any Rose: But you haue drunke too much Canaries, and that's a marvellous fear-ching Wine; and it perfumes the blood, ere wee can say what's this. How doe you now?

Dol. Better then I was: Hem.

Host. Why that was well said: A good heart's worth Gold. Look, here comes Sir Iohn.

Enter Falstaffe.

Falst. When Arthur first in Court--(emptie the Iordan) and was a worthy King: How now Mistis Dol?

Host. Sick of a Calme: yea, good-sooth.

Falst. So is all her Sect: if they be once in a Calme, they are sick.

Dol. You muddie Rascall, is that all the comfort you giue me?

Falst. You make fat Rascalls, Mistis Dol.

Dol. I make them? Gluttonie and Diseases make them, I make them not.

Falst. If the Cooke make the Gluttonie, you helpe to make the Diseases (Dol) we catch of you (Dol) we catch of you: Grant that, my poore Vertue, grant that.

Dol. I marry, our Chaynes, and our Jewels.

Falst. Your Brooches, Pearles, and Owches: For to serue brauely, is to come halting off: you know, to come off the Breach, with his Pike bent brauely, and to Surge-rie brauely; to venture vpon the charg'd Chambers brauely.

Host. Why this is the olde fashion: you two neuer meete, but you fall to some discord: you are both (in good troth) as Rheumatike as two drie Tostes, you cannot one beare with anothers Confinimities. What the good-ye? One must beare, and that must bee you:
you are the weaker Vessell; as they say, the emptier Vessell.

Dol. Can a weake emptie Vessell beare such a huge full Hogs-head? There's a whole Marchants Venture of Burdeaux-Stuffe in him: you haue not scene a Hulke better stufft in the Hold. Come, hee be friends with thee Iacke: Thou art going to the Warres, and whether I shall euer see thee againe, or no, there is no body cares.

Enter Drawer.

Drawer. Sir, Ancient Pistol is below, and would speake with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering Rascall, let him not come hither: it is the foule-mouth'd Rogue in England.

Host. If hee swagger, let him not come here: I must liue amongst my Neighbors, hee no Swaggers: I am in good name, and fame, with the very best; shut the doore, there comes no Swaggers heere: I haue not liu'd all this while, to haue I swaggering now: shut the doore, I pray you.

Falst. Do'st thou heare, Hostesse?

Host. Pray you pacifie your selfe (Sir Iohn) there comes no Swaggers heere, and there no more you quod.

Falst. Do'st

Falst. Do'st thou heare? it is mine Ancient.

Host. Tilly-fally (Sir Iohn) neuer tell me, your ancient Swaggerer comes not in my doores, I was before Master
Tisick, the Deputie, the other day: and as hee said to me, it was no longer agoe then Wednesday last: Neighbour Quickly (sayes hee) Master Dumble, our Minister, was by then: Neighbour Quickly (sayes hee) receiue those that are Ciuill; for (sayth hee) you are in an ill Name: now hee said so, I can tell whereupon: for (sayes hee) you are an honest Woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what Guests you receiue: Receiue (sayes hee) no swaggering Companions. There comes none heere. You would blasse you to heare what hee said. No, hee no Swaggers.

Falst. Hee's no Swaggerer (Hostesse): a tame Cheater, hee: you may stroake him as gently, as a Puppie Greyhound: hee will not swagger with a Barbaric Henne, if her feathers turne backe in any shew of resistance. Call him vp (Drawer.)

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will barre no honest man my house; not no Cheater: but I doe not loue swaggering; I am the worfe when one sayes, swagger: Feele
Masters, how I shake: looke you, I warrant you.

Dol. So you doe, Hostesse.

Host. Doe I? yea, in very truth doe I, if it were an Aspen Lease: I cannot abide Swaggers.

Enter Pistol, and Bardolph and his Boy.

Pist. Saue you, Sir Iohn.

Falst. Welcome Ancient Pistol. Here (Pistol) I charge you with a Cup of Sacke: doe you discharge vpon mine
Hostesse.

Pist. I will discharge vpon her (Sir Iohn) with two Bullets.

Falst. She is Pistol-prooffe (Sir) you shall hardly offend her.

Host. Come, hee drinke no Prooffes, nor no Bullets: I will drinke no more then will doe me good, for no mans pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you (Mistis Dorothea) I will charge
you.

Dol. Charge me? I scorne you (scourie Companion) what? you poore, base, rascally, cheating, lacke-Linnen-Mate: away you mouldie Rogue, away; I am meat for your Master.

Pist. I know you, Mistis Dorothea.

Dol. Away you Cut-purse Rascall, you filthy Bung, away: By this Wine, hee thrust my Knife in your mouldie Chappes, if you play the sawcie Cuttle with me. Away you Bottle-Ale Rascall, you Basket-hilt stale lugler, you.
Since when, I pray you, Sir? what, with two Points on your shoulder? much.

Pist. I will murther your Ruffe, for this.

Host. No good Captaine Pistol: not heere, sweete Captaine.

Dol. Captaine? thou abominable dam'd Cheater, art thou not a sham'd to be call'd Captaine? If Captaines were of my minde, they would truncheon you out, for taking their Names vpon you, before you haue earn'd them.
You a Captaine? you slave, for what? for tearing a poore Whores Ruffe in a Bawdy-house? Hee a Captaine? hang him Rogue, hee liues vpon mouldie stew'd-Pruines, and dry'd Cakes. A Captaine? These Villaines will make the word Captaine odious: Therefore Captaines had need looke to it.

Bard. Pray thee goe downe, good Ancient.

Falst. Hearke thee hither, Mistis Dol.

Pist. Not I: I tell thee what, Corporall Bardolph, I could teare her: hee be reueng'd on her.

Page. Pray thee goe downe.

Pist. Hee see her dam'd first: to Pluto's dam'd Lake, to the Infernall Deepe, where Erebus and Tortures vilde also. Hold Hooke and Line, say I: Downe: downe Dogges, downe Fates: haue wee not Hiren here?

Host. Good Captaine Peefel be quiet, it is very late:
I beseeke you now, aggrauate your Choler.

Pist. These be good Humors indeede. Shall Pack-Horses, and hollow-pamper'd Iades of Asia, which cannot goe but thirtie miles a day, compare with Cesar, and with Caniballs, and Troian Greekes? nay, rather damne them with King Corberus, and let the Welkin roare: shall wee fall foule for Toyes?

Host. By my troth Captaine, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good Ancient: this will grow to a Brawle anon.

Pist. Die men, like Dogges; giue Crownes like Pinnes:
Haue we not Hiren here?

Host. On my word (Captaine) there's none such here.
What the good-ye, doe you thinke I would denye her? I pray be quiet.

Pist. Then feed, and be fat (my faire Calipolis.) Come, giue me some Sack, Si fortune me tormente, sperato me con-tente. Feare wee broad-fides? No, let the Fiend giue fire:
Giue me some Sack: and Sweet-heart lye thou there;
Come wee to full Points here, and are et cetera's nothing?

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet Knight, I kisse thy Neaffe: what? wee haue scene the seven Starres.

Dol. Thrust him downe stayres, I cannot endure such a Fustian Rascall.

Pist. Thrust him downe stayres? know we not Galloway Nagges?

Fal. Quoit him downe (Bardolph) like a shoue-groat shilling: nay, if hee doe nothing but speake nothing, hee shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you downe stayres.

Pist. What? shall wee haue Incision? shall wee em-brew? then Death rocke me asleepe, abridge my dolefull dayes: why then let gricuous, gasly, gaping Wounds, vntwin'd the Sisters three: Come Atropos, I say.

Host. Heere's good stuffe toward.

Fal. Giue me my Rapier, Boy.

Dol. I prethee Iack, I prethee doe not draw.

Fal. Get you downe stayres.

Host. Heere's a goodly tumult: hee forswear keeping house, before hee be in these tiritis, and frights. So: Mur-ther I warrant now. Alas, alas, put vp your naked Weapons, put vp your naked Weapons.

Dol. I prethee Iack be quiet, the Rascall is gone: ah, you whorson little valiant Villaine, you.

Host. Are you not hurt i'th' Groyne? me thought hee made a shrewd Thrust at your Belly.

Fal. Haue you turn'd him out of doores?

Bard. Yes Sir: the Rascall's drunke: you haue hurt him (Sir) in the shoulder.

Fal. A Rascall to braue me.

Dol. Ah, you sweet little Rogue, you: alas, poore Ape, how thou sweart? Come, let me wipe thy Face: Come on, you whorson Chops: Ah Rogue, I loue thee: Thou art

art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and tenne times better then the nine Worthies: ah Villaine.

Fal. A rascally Slaue, I will tosse the Rogue in a Blanket.

Dol. Doe, if thou dar'st for thy heart: if thou doo'st, Ile canuas thee betwene a paire of Sheetes.

Enter Musique.

Page. The Musique is come, Sir.

Fal. Let them play: play Sirs. Sit on my Knee, Dol. A Rascall, bragging Slaue: the Rogue fled from me like Quick-silver.

Dol. And thou follow'd'st him like a Church: thou whorson little tydie Bartholmew Bore-pigge, when wilt thou leaue fighting on dayes, and foyning on nights, and begin to patch vp thine old Body for Heauen?

Enter the Prince and Poines disguised.

Fal. Peace (good Dol.) doe not speake like a Deaths-head: doe not bid me remember mine end.

Dol. Sirrha, what humor is the Prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow: hee would haue made a good Pantler, hee would haue chipp'd Bread well.

Dol. They say Poines hath a good Wit.

Fal. Hee a good Wit? hang him Baboone, his Wit is as thicke as Tewksburie Mustard: there is no more conceit in him, then is in a Mallet.

Dol. Why doth the Prince loue him so then?

Fal. Because their Legges are both of a bignesse: and hee playes at Quoits well, and eates Conger and Fennell, and drinks off Candles ends for Flap-dragons, and rides the wilde Mare with the Boyes, and iumpes vpon Ioynd-stooles, and sweares with a good grace, and wears his Boot very smooth, like vnto the Signe of the Legge; and breeds no bare with telling of discrete stories: and such other Gamboll faculties hee hath, that shew a weake Minde, and an able Body, for the which the Prince admits him; for the Prince himselfe is such another: the weight of an hayre will turne the Scales betwene their Haber-de-pois.

Prince. Would not this Naue of a Wheele haue his Eares cut off?

Poin. Let vs beat him before his Whore.

Prince. Looke, if the wither'd Elder hath not his Poll claw'd like a Parrot.

Poin. Is it not strange, that Desire should so many yeeres out-live performance?

Fal. Kisse me Dol.

Prince. Salutem and Venus this yeere in Coniunction? What sayes the Almanack to that?

Poin. And looke whether the fierie Trigon, his Man, be not lipping to his Masters old Tables, his Note-Booke, his Councell-keeper?

Fal. Thou do'st giue me flatterring Busses.

Dol. Nay truly, I kisse thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am olde, I am olde.

Dol. I loue thee better, then I loue ere a scurvie young Boy of them all.

Fal. What Scuffle wilt thou haue a Kirtle of? I shall receiue Money on Thursday: thou shalt haue a Cappe to morrow. A merrie Song, come: it growes late, wee will to Bed. Thou wilt forget me, when I am gone.

Dol. Thou wilt set me a weeping, if thou say'st for proue that euer I dresse my selfe handsome, till thy returne: well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some Sack, Francis.

Prim. Poin. Anon, anon, Sir.

Fal. Ha? a Bastard Sonne of the Kings? And art not thou Poines, his Brother?

Prince. Why thou Globe of sinfull Continents, what a Life do'st thou lead?

Fal. A better then thou: I am a Gentleman, thou art a Drawer.

Prince. Very true, Sir: and I come to draw you out by the Eares.

Hof. Oh, the Lord preferue thy good Grace: Well come to London. Now Heauen bleste that sweete Face of thine: what are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whorson mad Compound of Maieftie: by this light Flesh, and corrupt Blood, thou art welcome.

Dol. How? you fat Foole, I come you.

Poin. My Lord, hee will driue you out of your reuenge, and turne all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

Prince. You whorson Candle-myne you, how wildly did you speake of me euen now, before this honest, virtuous, ciuill Gentlewoman?

Hof. Blessing on your good heart, and so shee is by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou heare me?

Prince. Yes: and you knew me, as you did when you ranne away by Gads-hill: you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose, to trie my patience.

Fal. No, no, no: not so: I did not thinke, thou wast within hearing.

Prince. I shall driue you then to confesse the wilfull abuse, and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse (Hof.) on mine Honor, no abuse.

Prince. Not to dispraye me? and call me Pantler, and Bread-chopper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuse (Hof.)

Poin. No abuse?

Fal. No abuse (Ned) in the World; honest Ned none, I disprays'd him before the Wicked, that the Wicked might not fall in loue with him: In which doing, I haue done the part of a carefull Friend, and a true Subiect, and thy Father is to giue me thanks for it. No abuse (Hof.) none (Ned) none; no Boyes, none.

Prince. See now whether pure Feare, and entise Cowardise, doth not make thee wrong this virtuous Gentlewoman, to close with vs? Is shee of the Wicked? Is thine Hostesse heere, of the Wicked? Or is the Boy of the Wicked? Or honest Bardolph (whose Zeale burnes in his Nose) of the Wicked?

Poin. Answer thou dead Elme, answer.

Fal. The Fiend hath prickt downe Bardolph irreconcilable, and his Face is Lucifers Priuy-Kitchen, where hee doth nothing, but rost Mault-Wormes: for the Boy, there is a good Angell about him, but the Deuill out-bids him too.

Prince. For the Women?

Fal. For one of them, shee is in Hell already, and burnes poore Soules: for the other, I owe her Money; and whether shee bee damnd for that, I know not.

Hof. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No,

Fal. No, I thinke thou art not: I thinke thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another Indictment vpon thee, for suffering flesh to bee eaten in thy house, contrary to the Law, for the which I thinke thou wilt howle.

Hof. All Victuallers doe so: What is a Ioynt of Mutton, or two, in a whole Lent?

Prince. You, Gentlewoman.

Dol. What sayes your Grace?

Fal. His Grace sayes that, which his flesh rebels against.

Hof. Who knocks so lowd at doore? Look to the doore there, Francis?

Enter Peto.

Prince. Peto, how now? what newes?

Peto. The King, your Father, is at Westminster, and there are twentie weake and wearied Postes,

Come from the North: and as I came along, yea, wood I met, and ouer-tooke a dozen Captaines, Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the Tauerne, and asking euery one for Sir Iohn Falstaffe.

Prince. By Heauen (Poines) I feele me much to blame, So idly to prophane the precious time,

When Tempest of Commotion, like the South, borne with black Vapour, doth begin to melt,

And drop vpon our bare vnarm'd heads. Give me my Sword, and Cloake.

Falstaffe, good night. Exit.

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest Morrell of the night, and wee must hence, and leape it vnpickt. More knocking at the doore? How now? what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to Court, Sir, presently, because a dozen Captaines stay at doore for you.

Fal. Pay the Musicians, Sirrha: farewell Hostesse, farewell Dol. You see (my good Wenches) how men of Merit are sought after: the vnderferer may sleepe, when the man of Action is call'd on. Farewell good Wenches: if I be not sent away poste, I will see you againe, ere I goe.

Dol. I cannot speake: if my heart bee not readie to burst. Well (swearing) haue a care of thy selfe.

Fal. Farewell, farewell. Exit.

Hof. Well, fare thee well: I haue knowne thee these twentie nine yeeres, come Pescod-time: but an honestier; and truer-hearted man. Well, fare thee well.

Bard. Mistris Teare-sheer.

Hof. What's the matter?

Bard. Bid Mistris Teare-sheer come to my Master.

Hof. Oh ruine Dol, ruine: ruine, good Dol.

Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

King. Goe, call the Earles of Surrey, and of Warwick: But ere they come, bid them ore-reade these Letters, And well consider of them: make good speed. Exit.

How many thousand of my poorest Subiects Are at this howre asleepe? O Sleepe, O gentle Sleepe, Natures soft Nurse, how haue I frighted thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eye-lids downe, And sleepe my Sences in Forgetfulnesse? Why rather (Sleepe) lye'st thou in smoakie Cribes, Vpon vncasie Pallads stretching thee, And hui'st with bustling Night, flies to thy slumber, Then in the perfum'd Chambers of the Great? Vnder the Canopies of costly State, And lull'd with sounds of sweetest Melodie? O thou dull God, why lye'st thou with the wilde, In loathsome Beds, and leau'st the Kingly Couch, A Watch-case, or a common Larum-Bell? Wilt thou, vpon the high and giddie Mast, Seale vp the Ship-boyes Eyes, and rock his Braines, In Cradle of the rude imperious Surge, And in the visitation of the Windes, Who take the Russian Billowes by the top, Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them With deafning Clamors in the slipp'ry Clouds, That with the hurley, Death it selfe awakes? Canst thou (O partiall Sleepe) giue thy Repose To the wet Sea-Boy, in an houre so rude, And in the calmest, and most stillest Night, With all appliances, and meanes to boote, Deny it to a King? Then happy Lowe, lye downe, Vncasie lyes the Head, that wears a Crowne.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good-morrowes to your Maiestie.

King. Is it good-morrow, Lords?

War. 'Tis One a Clock, and past.

King. Why then good-morrow to you all (my Lords:) Haue you read o're the Letters that I sent you?

War. We haue (my Liege.)

King. Then you perceiue the Body of our Kingdome, How foule it is: what ranke Diseases grow,

And with what danger, neere the Heart of it?

War. It is but as a Body, yet distemper'd, Which to his former strength may be restor'd,

With good aduice, and little Medicine: My Lord Northumberland will soone be cool'd.

King. Oh Heauen, that one might read the Book of Fate, And see the reuolution of the Times

Make Mountaines leuell, and the Continent (Wearie of solide firmenesse) melt it selfe

Into the Sea: and other Times, to see The beachie Girde of the Ocean

Too wide for Neptunes hippes; how Chances mocks And Changes fill the Cuppe of Alteration

With diuers Liquors. 'Tis not tenne yeeres gone, Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends,

Did feast together; and in two yeeres after, Were they at Warres. It is but eight yeeres since,

This Percie was the man, neere'st my Soule, Who, like a Brother, toyl'd in my Affaires,

And layd his Loue and Life vnder my foot: Yea, for my sake, euen to the eyes of Richard

Gaue him defiance. But which of you was by (You Cousin Neuil, as I may remember)

When Richard, with his Eye, brim-full of Teares, (Then check'd, and rated by Northumberland) Did speake these words (now prou'd a Prophecie):

Northumberland, thou Ladder, by the which

My

My Cousin Bullingbrooke ascends my Throne:
(Though then, Heaven knowes, I had no such intent,
But that necessity so bow'd the State,
That I and Greatnefle were compell'd to kisse.)
The Time shall come (thus did hee follow it)
The Time will come, that foule Sinne gathering head, Shall breake into Corruption: so went on,
Fore-telling this same Times Condition,
And the diuision of our Amities.

War. There is a Historie in all mens Liues,
Figuring the nature of the Times decaes'd:
The which obseru'd, a man may prophesie
With a neere ayne, of the maine chance of things,
As yet not come to Life, which in their Seedes
And weake beginnings lye entreaured:
Such things become the Hatch and Brood of Time;
And by the necessarie forme of this,
King Richard might create a perfect guesse,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that Seed grow to a greater fallenesse,
Which should not finde a ground to roote vpon,
Vnlesse on you.

King. Are these things then Necessities?
Then let vs meete them like Necessities:
And that same word, euen now cries out vns:
They say, the Bishop and Northumberland
Are fiftie thousand strong.

War. It cannot be (my Lord):
Rumor doth double, like the Voice, and Echo,
The numbers of the feared: Please it your Grace
To goe to bed, vpon my Life (my Lord)
The Powles that you already haue sent forth,
Shall bring this Prize in very easily:
To comfort you the more, I haue receiued
A certain assistance, that Glendower is dead:
Your Maiestie hath bene this fort-night ill,
And these vnseason'd howtes perforce must adde
Vnto your Sicknesse.

King. I will take your counsaile:
And were these inward Warres once out of hand,
Wee would (deare Lords) vnto the Holy Land.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Shallow and Silence: with Mouldie, Shadow,
Wart, Feeble, Bull-calfs.

Shal. Come-on, come-on, come-on: giue mee your Hand, Sir: giue mee your Hand, Sir: an early stirrer, by the Rood. And how doth my good Cousin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good Cousin Shallow.
Shal. And how doth my Cousin, your Bed-fellow?
and your fairest Daughter; and mine, my God-Daughter
Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a blacke Ouzell (Cousin Shallow).
Shal. By yea and nay, Sir, I dare say my Cousin William is become a good Scholler: hee is at Oxford still, is hee not?

Sil. Indeede Sir, to my cost.
Shal. Hee must then to the Innes of Court shortly: I was once of Clements Inne; where (I thinke) they will talke of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were call'd lustie Shallow then (Cousin).
Shal. I was call'd any thing: and I would haue done any thing indeede too, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Dost of Staffordshire, and blacke George Thane, and Francis Pick-bone, and Will Squele a Cottis-man, you had not foure such Swindge-bucklers in all the Innes of Court againe: And I may say to you, wee knew where the Bona-Roba's were, and had the best of them all at commandement. Then was Lacke Falstaffe (now Sir John) folke.

Sil. This Sir John (Cousin) that comes hither anon about Souldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same: I saw him breake Scoggin's Head at the Court-Gate, when hee was a Crack, not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stock-fish, a Fruiterer, behinde Greys Inne. Oh the mad dayes that I haue spent! and to see how many of mine olde Acquaintance are dead?

Sil. Wee shall all follow (Cousin).
Shal. Certaine: tis certaine: very sure; very sure:
Death is certaine to all, all shall dye: How a good Yoke of Bullocks at Stamford Payre?

Sil. Truly Cousin, I was northere, and I saw
Shal. Death is certaine: I sold Double of your Towne living yet.

Sil. Dead, Sir.
Shal. Dead? See, see: hee drew a good Bow: and dead? hee shot a fine shoote. John of Gaunt loved him well, and betred much Money on his head. Dead?
hee would haue clapt in the Clowt at Twelue-score, and carryed you a fore-hand shaft at foureteene, and foure-teene and a halfe, that it would haue done a mans heart good to see. How a score of Ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a store of good Ewes may be worth twine pounds.
Shal. And is olde Double dead?

Sil. Heere come two of Sir John Falstaffe Men (as I thinke).
Shal. Good-morrow, honest Gentlemen.

Bard. I beseech you, which is Iustice Shallow?
Shal. I am Robert Shallow (Sir) a poore Esquire of this Countie, and one of the Kings Iustices of the Peace:

What is your good pleasure with me?
Bard. My Captaine (Sir) commends him to you:
my Captaine, Sir John Falstaffe: a tall Gentleman, and a most gallant Leader.

Shal. Hee greetes me well: (Sir) I knew him a good Back-Sword-man. How doth the good Knight? may I aske, how my Lady his Wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon: a Souldier is better accommodated, then with a Wife.
Shal. It is well said, Sir; and it is well said, indeede, too: Better accommodated? it is good, yea indeede is it: good phrases are surely, and every where very commendable. Accommodated, it comes of Accommoda-very good, a good Phrase.

Bard. Pardon, Sir, I haue heard the word. Phrase call you it? by this Day, I know not the Phrase: but I will maintaine the Word with my Sword, to bee a Souldier-like Word, and a Word of exceeding good Command. Accommodated: that is, when a man is (as they say) accommodated: or, when a man is, being whereby whereby he thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaffe.

Shal. It is very iust: Looke, heere comes good Sir
John. Giue me your hand, giue me your Worships good hand: Trust me, you looke well: and heare your yeares very well. Welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good M. Robert Shal- low. Master Sure-card as I thinke?

Shal. No Sir John, it is my Cousin Silence: in Commission with mee.

Fal. Good M. Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good Worships is welcome.
Fal. Fye, this is hot weather (Gentlemen) haue you providid me heere halfe a dozen of sufficient men?

Shal. Marry haue we Sir: Will you Sir?
Fal. Let mee see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see: so, so, so, so:
yea marry Sir. Raphe Mouldie: let them appeare as I call:
let them do so, let them do so: Let mee see, Where is Mouldie?

Moul. Heere, if it please you.
Shal. What thinke you (Sir John) a good limbe'd fellow, yong, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldie?
Moul. Yea, if it please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert vs'd.
Shal. Ha, ha, ha, most excellent. Things that are mouldie, lacke ye: very singular good. Well saide Sir John, very well saide.

Fal. Pricke him.
Moul. I was prickt well enough before, if you could haue let me alone: my old Dame will be vndone now, for one to doe her Husbandry, and her Drudgery; you need not to haue prickt me, there are other men fitter to goe out, then I.

Fal. Go too: peace Mouldie, you shall goe. Mouldie, it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent?
Shallow. Peace, fellow, peace: stand aside: Know you where you are? For the other Sir John: Let me see: Simon Shadow.

Fal. I marry, let me haue him to sit vnder: he's like to be a cold souldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?
Shad. Heere Sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose sonne art thou?
Shad. My Mothers sonne, Sir.

Fal. Thy Mothers sonne: like enough, and thy Fathers shadow: so the sonne of the Female, is the shadow of the Male: it is often so indeede, but not of the Fathers substance.

Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?
Fal. Shadow will serue for Summer: prick him: For wee haue a number of shadowes to fill vpp the Muster-Booke.

Shal. Thomas Wart?
Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Heere Sir.
Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea Sir.
Fal. Thou art a very ragged Wart.

Shal. Shall I prick him downe,
Sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous: for his apparet is built vpon his backe; and the whole frame stands vpon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, you can do it Sir: you can doe it: I commend you well.

Francis Feeble.
Feeble. Heere Sir.

Shal. What Trade art thou Feeble?
Feeble. A Womans Taylor Sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, Sir?
Fal. You may:

But if he had bene a mans Taylor, he would haue prickt
you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemies Battaile, as thou hast done in a Womans petticoate?

Feeble. I will doe my good will Sir: you can haue no more.

Fal. Well saide, good Womans Taylor: Well sayde Couragious Feeble: thou wilt bee as valiant as the wrath-full Doe, or most magnanimous Mouse. Pricke the womans Taylour well Master Shallow, deepe Master Shal- low.

Feeble. I would I might haue gone Sir.
Fal. I would thou wert a mans Taylor, that y might mend him, and make him fit to goe. I cannot put him to a priuate souldier, that is the Leader of so many thousands. Let that suffice, most Forcible Feeble.

Feeble. It shall suffice.
Fal. I am bound to thee, reuerend Feeble. Who is the next?

Shal. Peter Bulcalfs of the Greene.
Fal. Yea marry, let vs see Bulcalfs.

Bul. Heere Sir.
Fal. Trust me, a likely Fellow. Come, prick me Bul- calfs till hee roare againe.

Bul. Oh, good my Lord Captaine.
Fal. What? do't thou roare before thou art prickt.

Bul. Oh Sir, I am a diseased man.
Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bul. A whorson cold Sir, a cough Sir, which I caught with Ringing in the Kings affayres, vpon his Coronation day, Sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the Warres in a Gowne:
we will haue away thy Cold, and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee. Is heere all?

Shal. There is two more called then your number:
you must haue but foure heere Sir, and so I pray you go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will goe drinke with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you in good troth, Master
Shallow.

Shal. O Sir John, doe you remember since wee lay all night in the Winde-mill, in S Georges Field.

Falstaffe. No more of that good Master Shallow: No more of that.

Shal. Ha? it was a merry night. And is Iane Night- worke aliue?

Fal. She liues, M. Shallow.
Shal. She neuer could away with me.

Fal. Neuer, neuer: she would alwayes say shee could not abide M. Shallow.

Shal. I could anger her to the heart: shee was then a Bona-Roba. Doth she hold her owne well.

Fal. Old, old, M. Shallow.
Shal. Nay, she must be old, she cannot choole, but be old: certaine shee's old: and had Robin Night-work, by old Night-work, before I came to Clements Inne.

Sil. That's fiftie five yeeres agoe.

Shal. Hah, Cousin Silence, that thou hadst seene that, that this Knight and I haue seene: hah, Sir John, said I well?

Falst. Wee haue heard the Chymes at mid-night, Master Shallow.

Shal. That wee haue, that wee haue; in faith, Sir John, wee haue: our watch-word was, Hem-Boyes. Come, let's to Dinner; come, let's to Dinner: Oh the dayes that wee haue seene. Come, come.

Bul. Good Master Corporall Bardolph, stand my friend, and heere is foure Harry tenne shillings in French Crowns for you: in very truth, sir, I had as lief be hang'd sir, as goe: and yet, for mine owne part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and for mine owne part, haue a desire to stay with my friends: else, sir, I did not care, for mine owne part, so much.

Bard. Go too: stand aside.

Mould. And good Master Corporall Captaine, for my old Dames sake, stand my friend: shee hath no body to doe any thing about her, when I am gone: and she is old, and cannot helpe her selfe: you shall haue fortie, sir.

Bard. Go too: stand aside.

Feeble. I care not, a man can die but once: wee owe a death. I will neuer beare a base minde: if it be my destiny, so: if it be not, so: no man is too good to serue his Prince: and let it goe which way it will, he that dies this yeere, is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said, thou art a good fellow.

Feeble. Nay, I will beare no base minde.

Falst. Come sir, which men shall I haue?

Shal. Foure of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you: I haue three pound, to free Mouldie and Bull-calse.

Falst. Go too: well.

Shal. Come, sir John, which foure will you haue?

Falst. Doe you chuse for me.

Shal. Marry then, Mouldie, Bull-calse, Feeble, and Shadow.

Falst. Mouldie and Bull-calse: for you Mouldie, stay at home, till you are past seruice: and for your part, Bull-calse, grow till you come vnto it: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, doe not your selfe wrong, they are your likeliest men, and I would haue you seru'd with the best.

Falst. Will you tell me (Master Shallow) how to chuse a man? Care I for the Limbe, the Thewes, the stature, bulke, and bigge assemblance of a man? giue mee the spirit (Master Shallow,) Where's Warr? you see what a ragged appearance it is: hee shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a Pewterers Hammer: come off, and on, swifter then hee that gibbers on the Brewers Bucket. And this same halfe-fac'd fellow, Shadow, giue me this man: hee presents no marke to the Enemy, the foe-man may with as great ayme leuell at the edge of a Pen-knife: and for a Rerrait, how swiftly will this Feeble, the Woman's Taylor, runne off. O, giue me the spare men, and spare me the great ones. Put me a Calyuer into Warr's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold Warr, Trauerse: thus, thus, thus.

Falst. Come, manage me your Calyuer: so, very well, go too, very good, exceeding good. O, giue me alwayes a little, leane, old, chopt, bald Shor. Well said Warr, thou art a good Scab: hold, there is a Tetter for thee.

Shal. Hee is not his Crafts-master, hee doth not doe it right. I remember at Mile-end-Greene, when I lay at Clements Inne, I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthurs Show: there was a little quiver fellow, and hee would manage you his Peece thus: and hee would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: Rah, tah, tah, would hee say, Bownee would hee say, and away againe would hee goe, and againe would hee come: I shall neuer see such a fellow.

Falst. These fellowes will doe well, Master Shallow. Farewell Master Silence, I will not vse many wordes with you: fare you well, Gentlemen both: I thanke you: I must a dozen mile to night, Bardolph, giue the Souldiers Coates.

Shal. Sir John, Heauen blesse you, and prosper your Affaires, and send vs Peace. As you returne, visit my house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: per-adventure I will with you to the Court.

Falst. I would you would, Master Shallow.

Shal. Go too: I haue spoke at a word, fare you well. Exit.

Falst. Fare you well, gentle Gentlemen. On Bardolph, leade the men away. As I returne, I will fetch off these Iustices: I doe see the bottome of Iustice Shallow. How subiect wee old men are to this vice of Lying? This same staru'd Iustice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildnesse of his Youth, and the Feates hee hath done about Turnball-street, and every third word a Lye, duer pay'd to the hearer, then the Turkes Tribute. I doe remember him at Clements Inne, like a man made after Supper, of a Cheefe-paring, When hee was naked, hee was, for all the world, like a forked Radish, with a Head fantastically caru'd vpon it with a Knife. Hee was so forlorne, that his Dimensions (to any thicke sight) were inuincible. Hee was the very Genius of Famine: hee came euer in the rere-ward of the Fashion: And now is this Vices Dagger become a Squire, and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if hee had bene sworne Brother to him: and he be sworne hee neuer saw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and then he burst his Head, for crowding among the Marshalls men, I saw it, and told John of Gaunt, hee beat his owne Name, for you might haue truss'd him and all his Apparell into an Ele-skinne: the Case of a Treble-Hobby was a Mansion for him: a Court: and now hath hee Land, and Beecues. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I returne: and it shall goe hard, but I will make him a Philosophers two Stones to me. If the young Dace be a Bayt for the old Pike, I see no reason, in the Law of Nature, but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter the Arch-bishop, Mowbray, Hastings, Westmerland, Colenile.

Bish. What is this Forrest call'd?
Hast. 'Tis Gualtree Forrest, and't shall please your Grace.

Bish. Here stand (my Lords) and send discoverers forth, To know the numbers of our Enemies.

Hast. Wee

Hast. Wee haue sent forth already.

Bish. 'Tis well done.

My Friends, and Brethren (in these great Affaires) I must acquaint you, that I haue receiu'd New-dated Letters from Northumberland: Their cold intent, censure, and substance thus. Here doth hee with his Person, with such Powers As might hold sortance with his Qualitie, The which hee could not leaue: whereupon Hee is retyr'd, to ripe his growing Fortunes, To Scotland; and concludes in heartie prayers, That your Attempts may ouer-lie the hazard, And fearfull meeting of their Opposite.

Mow. Thus do the hopes we haue in him, tough ground, And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now? what newes?

Mess. West of this Forrest, scarcely off a mile,

In goodly forme, comes on the Enemy:

And by the ground they hide, I iudge their number

Vpon, or neere, the rate of thirtie thousand.

Mow. The iust proportion that we gaue them out,

Let vs sway-on, and face them in the field.

Enter Westmerland.

Bish. What well-appointed Leader fronts vs here?

Mow. I thinke it is my Lord of Westmerland.

West. Health, and faire greeting from our Generall,

The Prince, Lord John, and Duke of Lancaster.

Bish. Say on (my Lord of Westmerland) in peace:

What doth concerne your coming?

West. Then (my Lord)

Vnto your Grace doe I in chiefe addresse

The substance of my Speech. If that Rebellion

Came like it selfe, in base and abiect Routs,

Led on by bloodie Youth, guarded with Rage,

And countenanc'd by Boyes, and Beggerie:

I say, if damn'd Commotion so appeare,

In his true, native, and most proper shape,

You (Reuerend Father, and the Noble Lords)

Had not bene here, to dresse the ougly forme

Of base, and bloodie Insurrection,

With your faire Honors. You, Lord Arch-bishop,

Whose Sea is by a Ciuill Peace maintain'd,

Whose Beard, the Silver Hand of Peace hath touch'd,

Whose Learning, and good Letters, Peace hath tur'd,

Whose white Inuents figure Innocence,

The Doue, and very blessed Spirit of Peace.

Wherefore doe you so ill translate your selfe,

Out of the Speech of Peace, that beares such grace,

Into the harsh and boystrous Tongue of Warre?

Turning your Bookes to Graues, your Inke to Blood,

Your Pennes to Launces, and your Tongue diuine

To a lowd Trumpet, and a Point of Warre.

Bish. Wherefore doe I this? so the Question stands.

Briefely to this end: Wee are all diseas'd,

And with our sursetting, and wanton howres,

Haue brought our selues into a burning Fever,

And wee must bleede for it: of which Disease,

Our late King Richard (being infected) dy'd.

But (my most Noble Lord of Westmerland)

I take not on me here as a Physician,

Nor doe I, as an Enemy to Peace,

Troope in the Throngs of Militarie men:

But rather shew a while like fearefull Warre,

To dyet ranke Mindes, sicke of happinesse,

And purge th'obstructions, which begin to stop

Our very Veines of Life: heate me more plainly.

I haue in equall ballance iustly weigh'd,

What wrongs our Arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,

And finde our Griefes heauier then our Offences.

Wee see which way the streame of Time doth runne,

And are enforc'd from our most quiet there,

By the rough Torrent of Occasion,

And haue the summarie of all our Griefes

(When time shall serue) to shew in Articles;

Which long ere this, wee offer'd to the King,

And might, by no Suit, gayne our Audience:

When wee are wrong'd, and would vnfold our Griefes,

Wee are deny'd access vnto his Person,

Euen by those men, that most haue done vs wrong.

The dangers of the dayes but newly gone,

Whose memorie is written on the Earth

With yet appearing blood; and the examples

Of euery Minutes instance (present now)

Hath put vs in these ill-beseeming Armes:

Not to breake Peace, or any Branch of it,

But to establish here a Peace indeede,

Concurring both in Name and Qualitie.

West. When euer yet was your Appeale deny'd?

Wherein haue you bene gall'd by the King?

What Peere hath bene suborn'd, to grate on you,

That you should seale this lawlesse bloody Booke

Of forg'd Rebellion, with a Seale diuine?

Bish. My Brother generall, the Common-wealth,

I make my Quarrell, in particular.

West. There is no neede of any such redresse:

Or if there were, it not belongs to you.

Mow. Why not to him in part, and to vs all,

That feele the bruises of the dayes before,

And suffer the Condition of these Times

To lay a heauie and vnequall Hand vpon our Honors?

West. O my good Lord Mowbray,

Construe the Times to their Necessities,

And you shall say (indeede) it is the Time,

And not the King, that doth you iniuries.

Yet for your part, it not appeares to me,

Either from the King, or in the present Time,

That you should haue an ynch of any ground

To build a Griefe on: were you not restor'd

To all the Duke of Norfolkes Seignories,

Your Noble, and right well-remembered Fathers?

Mow. What thing, in Honor, had my Father lost,

That need to be reuin'd, and breath'd in me?

The King that lou'd him, as the State stood then,

Was forc'd, perforce compell'd to banish him:

And then, that Henry Bullingbrooke and hee

Being mounted, and both rowld in their Seates,

Their neighing Coursers daring of the Spurre,

Their armed Stauies in charge, their Beauers do wne,

Their eyes of fire, sparkling through sights of Steele,

And the lowd Trumpet blowing them together:

Then, then, when there was nothing could haue stay'd

My Father from the Brest of Bullingbrooke;

O, when the King did throw his Warder downe,

(His owne Life hung vpon the Staffe hee threw)

Then threw hee downe himselfe, and all their Liues,

That by Indictment, and by dint of Sword,

Haue since mis-carried vnder Bullingbrooke.

West. You speak (Lord Mowbray) now you know not what.
The Earle of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant Gentleman.

Who knowes, on whom Fortune would then haue smil'd?
But if your Father had bene Victor there,
Hee ne're had borne it out of Countrey.
For all the Countrey, in a generall voyce,
Cry'd hate vpon him: and all their prayers, and loue,
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And blest'd, and grac'd, and did more then the King.
But this is meere digression from my purpose.
Here come I from our Princely Generall,
To know your Griefes; to tell you, from his Grace,
That hee will giue you Audience: and wherein
It shall appeare, that your demands are iust,
You shall enioy them, euery thing set off,
That might so much as thinke you Enemies.

Mow. But hee hath forc'd vs to compell this Offer,
And it proceeds from Pollicy, not Loue.

West. Mowbray, you ouer-weene to take it so:
This Offer comes from Mercy, not from Feare.
For loe, within a Ken our Army lyes,
Vpon mine Honor, all too confident
To giue admittance to a thought of feare.
Our Battaille is more full of Names then yours,
Our Men more perfect in the vse of Armes,
Our Armor all as strong, our Cause the best;
Then Reason will, our hearts should be as good.
Say you not then, our Offer is compell'd.

Mow. Well, by my will, wee shall admit no Parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence:
A rotten Cause abides no handling.

Hast. Hath the Prince John a full Commission,
In very ample vertue of his Father,
To heare, and absolutely to determine
Of what Conditions wee shall stand vpon?

West. That is intended in the Generals Name:
I muse you make so slight a Question.

Bish. Then take (my Lord of Westmerland) this Schedule,
For this contains our generall Grievances:

Each severall Article herein redress'd,
All members of our Cause, both here, and hence,
That are infixed to this Action,
Acquitted by a true substantiall forme,
And present execution of our wills,
To vs, and to our purposes confin'd,
Wee come within our awfull Banks againe,
And knit our Powers to the Arme of Peace.

West. This will I shew the Generall. Please you Lords,
In sight of both our Battailles, wee may meete
At either end in peace: which Heauen so frame,
Or to the place of difference call the Swords,
Which must decide it.

Bish. My Lord, wee will doe so.

Mow. There is a thing within my Bosome tells me,
That no Conditions of our Peace can stand.

Hast. Feare you not, that if wee can make our Peace
Vpon such large termes, and so absolute,
As our Conditions shall consist vpon,
Our Peace shall stand as firme as Rockie Mountaines.

Mow. I, but our valuation shall be such,
That euery slight, and false-deriued Cause,
Yea, euery idle, nice, and wanton Reason,
Shall, to the King, taste of this Action:
That were our Royall faiths, Martyrs in Loue,
Wee shall be winnowed with so rough a winde,

That euen our Corne shall seeme as light as Chaffe,
And good from bad finde no partition.

Bish. No, no (my Lord) note this: the King is wearie
Of daintie, and such picking Grievances:
For hee hath found, to end one doubt by Death,
Reuiues two greater in the Heires of Life.
And therefore will hee wipe his Tables cleane,
And keepe no Tell-tale to his Memorie,
That may repeat, and Historie his losse,
To new remembrance. For full well hee knowes,
Hee cannot so precisely weede this Land,
As his mis-doubts present occasion:
His foes are so en-rooted with his friends,
That plucking to vnfixe an Enemy,
Hee doth vnfasten so, and shake a friend.
So that this Land, like an offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on, to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his Infant vp,
And hangs resolu'd Correction in the Arme,
That was vpstart to execution.

Hast. Besides, the King hath wasted all his Rods,
On late Offenders, that he now doth lacke
The very Instruments of Chastisement:
So that his power, like to a Fangleffe Lion
May offer, but not hold.

Bish. 'Tis very true:
And therefore be assur'd (my good Lord Marshall)
If we do now make our attouement well,
Our Peace, will (like a broken Limbe vnited)
Grow stronger, for the breaking.

Mow. Be it so:
Heere is return'd my Lord of Westmerland.

Enter Westmerland.
West. The Prince is here at hand: please your Lordship
To meet his Grace, iust distance 'twene our Armies?

Mow. Your Grace of Yorke, in heauen's name then forward.

Bish. Before, and greet his Grace (my Lord) we come.

Enter Prince John.

John. You are wel encountered here (my cosin Mowbray)
Good day to you, gentle Lord Arch-bishop,
And so to you Lord Hastings, and to all.
My Lord of Yorke, it better shew'd with you,
When that your Flocke (assembled by the Bell)
Encircled you, to heare with reuerence
Your exposition on the holy Text,
Then now to see you heere an Iron man
Chearing a rowt of Rebels with your Drumme,
Turning the Word, to Sword; and Life to death:

That man that sits within a Monarches heart,
And ripens in the Sunne-shine of his fauor,
Would hee abuse the Countenance of the King,
Alack, what Mischiefes might hee set abroad,
In shadow of such Greatnesse? With you, Lord Bishop,
It is euen so. Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deepe you were within the Bookes of Heauen?

To vs, the Speaker in his Parliament;
To vs, th' imagine Voyce of Heauen it selfe:
The very Opener, and Intelligencer,
Betwene the Grace, the Sanctities of Heauen,
And our dull workings. O, who shall beleue,
But you mis-vse the reuerence of your Place,
Employ the Countenance, and Grace of Heauen,
As a false Favourite doth his Princes Name,
In deedes dis-honorable? You haue taken vp,

Vnder

Vnder the counterfeit Zeale of Heauen,
The Subjects of Heavens Substitute, my Father,
And both against the Peace of Heauen, and him,
Haue here vp-swarmed them.

Bish. Good my Lord of Lancaster,
I am not here against your Fathers Peace:
But (as I told my Lord of Westmerland)
The Time (mis-order'd) doth in common sence
Crowd vs, and crush vs, to this monstrous Forme,
To hold our safetie vp. I sent your Grace
The parcels, and particulars of our Griefe,
The which hath been with scorn shou'd from the Court:
Whereon this Hydra-Sonne of Warre is borne,
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleepe,
With graunt of our most iust and right desires;
And true Obedience, of this Madnesse cur'd,
Stoope tamely to the foot of Maiestie.

Mow. If not, wee readie are to trye our fortunes,
To the last man.

Hast. And though wee here fall downe,
Wee haue Supplies, to second our Attempt:
If they mis-carry, theirs shall second them.

And so, successe of Mischiefe shall be borne,
And Heire from Heire shall hold this Quarrell vp,
Whiles England shall haue generation.

John. You are too shallow (Hastings)
Much too shallow,

To found the bottome of the after-Times.
West. Please your Grace, to answer them directly,
How fare-forth you doe like their Articles.

John. I like them all, and doe allow them well:
And sweare here, by the honor of my blood,
My Fathers purposes haue bene mistooke,
And some, about him, haue too lauishly
Wrested his meaning, and Authority.
My Lord, these Griefes shall be with speed redrest:
Vpon my Life, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your Powers vnto their severall Countiees,
As wee will ours: and here, betwene the Armies,
Let's drinke together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may beare those Tokens home,
Of our restored Loue, and Amitie.

Bish. I take your Princely word, for these redresses.

John. I giue it you, and will maintaine my word:
And thereupon I drinke vnto your Grace.

Hast. Goe Captaine, and deliuer to the Armie
This newes of Peace: let them haue pay, and part:
I know, it will well please them.

High thee Captaine. Exit.
Bish. To you, my Noble Lord of Westmerland,

West. I pledge your Grace:
And if you knew what paines I haue bestow'd,
To breede this present Peace,
You would drinke freely: but my loue to ye,
Shall shew it selfe more openly hereafter.

Bish. I doe not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.

Health to my Lord, and gentle Cousin Mowbray.

Mow. You wish me health in very happy season,
For I am, on the sodaine, something ill.

Bish. Against ill Chances, men are euer merry,
But heavinesse fore-runes the good euent.

West. Therefore be merry (Cooze) since sodaine sorrow
Serues to say thus: some good thing comes to morrow.

Bish. Beleue me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mow. So much the worse, if your owne Rule be true.

John. The word of Peace is render'd: hearken how they shew't.

Mow. This had been chearefull, after Victorie.

Bish. A Peace is of the nature of a Conquest:

For then both parties nobly are subdu'd,
And neither partie looser.

John. Goe (my Lord)

And let our Army be discharged too:
And good my Lord (so please you) let our Traines
March by vs, that wee may peruse the men. Exit.
Wee should haue coop'd withall.

Bish. Goe, good Lord Hastings:

And ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by. Exit.

John. I trust (Lords) wee shall lye to night together.

Enter Westmerland.

Now Cousin, wherefore stands our Army still?

West. The Leaders hauing charge from you to stand,
Will not goe off, vntill they heare you speake.

John. They know their duties. Enter Hastings.

Hast. Our Army is dispers'd:

Like youthfull Steeres, vn-yok'd, they tooke their course
East, West, North, South: or like a Schoole, broke vp,
Each hurries towards his home, and sporting place.

West. Good tidings (my Lord Hastings) for the which,
I doe arrest thee (Traytor) of high Treason:

And you Lord Arch-bishop, and you Lord Mowbray,
Of Capitall Treason, I attach you both.

Mow. Is this proceeding iust, and honorable?

West. Is your Assembly so?

Bish. Will you thus breake your faith?

John. I pawn'd thee none:

I promis'd you redresse of these same Grievances
Whereof you did complaine; which, by mine Honor,
I will performe, with a most Christian care.
But for you (Rebels) looke to taste the due
Meet for Rebellion, and such Acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these Armes commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.
Strike vp our Drummes, pursue the scatter'd stray,
Heauen, and not wee, haue safely fought to day.
Some guard these Traitors to the Block of Death,
Treasons true Bed, and yeelder vp of breath. Exeunt.

Enter Falstaffe and Colenile.

Falst. What's your Name, Sir? of what Condition are you? and of what place, I pray?

Col. I am a Knight, Sir:

And my Name is Colenile of the Dale.

Falst. Well then, Colenile is your Name, a Knight is your Degree, and your Place, the Dale. Colenile shall still be your Name, a Traytor your Degree, and the Dungeon your Place, a place deepe enough: so shall you be still Colenile of the Dale.

Col. Are not you Sir John Falstaffe?

Falst. As good a man as hee sir, who ere I am: doe yee yeelde sir, or shall I sweate for you? if I doe sweate, they are the drops of thy Louers, and they weep for thy death, therefore rowze vp Feare and Trembling, and do obseruance to my mercy.

Col. I thinke you are Sir John Falstaffe, & in that thought yeeld me.

Falst. I haue a whole Schoole of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a Tongue of them all, speaks anie other word but my name; and I had but a belly of any indifference. I were simply the most active fellow in Europe:
my wombe, my wombe, my wombe vndoes mee. Heere comes our Generall.

883

Enter

Enter Prince John, and Westmerland.

John. The heat is past, follow no farther now:
Call in the Powers, good Cousin Westmerland.
Now Falstaff, where have you beene all this while?
When every thing is ended, then you come.
These tardie Tricks of yours will (on my life)
One time, or other, breake some Gallowes back.

Falst. I would bee sorry (my Lord) but it should bee thus: I neuer knew yet, but rebuke and checke was the reward of Valour. Doe you thinke me a Swallow, an Arrow, or a Bullet? Haue I, in my poore and olde Motion, the expedition of Thought? I haue speeded hither with the very extremest ynh of possibilitie. I haue sowndred nine score and odde Postes: and heere (trauell-tainted as I am) haue, in my pure and immaculate Valour, taken Sir John Collesile of the Dale, a most furious Knight, and valorous Enemie: But what of that? hee saw mee, and yeelded: that I may iustly say with the hooke-nos'd fellow of Rome, I came, saw, and ouer-came.

John. It was more of his Courtisie, then your deferuing.

Falst. I know not: heere hee is, and heere I yeeld him: and I beseech your Grace, let it be book'd, with the rest of this dayes deedes; or I sweare, I will haue it in a particular Ballad, with mine owne Picture on the top of it (Collesile kissing my foot:) To the which course, if I be enforc'd, if you do not all shew like gilt two-pences to mee; and I, in the cleare Skie of Fame, o're-shine you as much as the Full Moone doth the Cynders of the Element (which shew like Pinnes-heads to her) beleue not the Word of the Noble: therefore let mee haue right, and let desert mount.

John. Thine's too heauie to mount.

Falst. Let it shine then.

John. Thine's too thick to shine.

Falst. Let it doe something (my good Lord) that may doe me good, and call it what you will.

John. Is thy Name Collesile?

Col. It is (my Lord.)

John. A famous Rebelle art thou, Collesile.

Falst. And a famous true Subiect tooke him.

Col. I am (my Lord) but as my Betters are,
That led me hither: had they beene rul'd by me,
You should haue wonne them dearer then you haue.

Falst. I know not how they sold themselves, but thou like a kinde fellow, gau'st thy selfe away; and I thanke thee, for thee.

Enter Westmerland.

John. Haue you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made, and Execution stay'd.

John. Send Collesile, with his Confederates,

To Yorke, to present Execution.

Blunt, leade him hence, and see you guard him sure.

Exit with Collesile.

And now dispatch we toward the Court (my Lords)

I heare the King, my Father, is sore sicke.

Our Newes shall goe before vs, to his Maiestie,

Which (Cousin) you shall beare, to comfort him:

And wee with sober speede will follow you.

Falst. My Lord, I beseech you, giue me leaue to goe through Gloucestershire: and when you come to Court, stand my good Lord, pray, in your good report.

John. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition,
Shall better speake of you, then you deserue. Exit.

Falst. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better then your Dukedome. Good faith, this same young fo-ber-blooded Boy doth nor loue me, nor a man cannot make him laugh: but that's no maruail, hee drinke no Wine. There's neuer any of these demure Boyes come to any proofe: for thinne Drinke doth so ouer-coole their blood, and making many Fish-Meales, that they fall into a kinde of Male Greene-sicknesse: and then, when they marry, they get Wenches. They are generally Foolles, and Cowards; which some of vs should be too, but for inflammation. A good Sherris-Sack hath a twofold operation in it: it ascends me into the Braine, dries me there all the foolish, and dull, and cruddie Vapours, which enuiron it: makes it apprehensue, quicke, forgetiue, full of nimble, ferie, and delectable shap; which deliuer'd o're to the Voyce, the Tongue, which is the Birth, becomes excellent Wit. The second propertie of your excellent Sherris, is, the warming of the Blood:
which before (cold, and fetled) left the Liver white, and pale; which is the Badge of Pusillanimitie, and Cowar-dize: but the Sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards, to the parts extremes: it illumineth the Face, which (as a Beacon) giues warning to all the rest of this little Kingdome (Man) to Arme: and then the Vitall Commoners, and in-land pettie Spirits, muster me all to their Capitaine, the Heart; who great, and puffvp with his Retinue, doth any Deed of Courage: and this Valour comes of Sherris. So, that skill in the Weapon is nothing, without Sack (for that sets it a worke): and Learning, a meere Hoord of Gold, kept by a Deuill, till Sack commences it, and sets it in act, and vie. Hercof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood hee did naturally inherite of his Father, hee hath, like leane, stirrill, and bare Land, manured, husbanded, and tyll'd, with excellent endeaour of drinking good, and good store of fertile Sherris, that hee is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand Sonnes, the first Principle
I would teach them, should be to forswear thinne Potastions, and to additt themselves to Sack. Enter Bardolph.

How now Bardolph?

Bard. The Armie is discharged all, and gone.

Falst. Let them goe: He through Gloucestershire, and there will I visit Master Robert Shallow, Elquire: I haue him alreadie tempering betwene my finger and my thombe, and shortly will I scale with him. Come away.
Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Warwicke, Clarence, Gloucester.

King. Now Lords, if Heauen doth giue successfull end
To this Debate, that bleedeth at our doores,
Wee will our Youth lead on to higher Fields,
And draw no Swords, but what are sanctify'd.
Our Nauie is address'd, our Power collected,
Our Substitutes, in absence, well inuested,
And euery thing lyes leuell to our wish;
Onely wee want a little personall Strength:
And pause vs, till these Rebels, now a-foot,
Come vnderneath the yoke of Government.

War. Both which we doubt not, but your Maiestie Shall soone enjoy.

King. Hum.

King. Humphrey (my Sonne of Gloucester) where is the Prince, your Brother?

Glo. I thinke hee's gone to hunt (my Lord) at Wind-

King. And how accompanied?

Glo. I doe not know (my Lord.)

King. Is not his Brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

Glo. No (my good Lord) hee is in presenc' heere.

Clar. What would my Lord, and Father?

King. Nothing, but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance thou art not with the Prince, thy Brother?

Hee loues thee, and thou dost neglect him (Thomas.)

Thou hast a better place in his Affection, than I haue.

Then all thy Brothers: cherish it (my Boy) had I but add Noble Offices thou may'st effect.

Of Mediation (after I am dead) I shall be able to do.

Betweene his Greatnesse, and thy other Brethren.

Therefore omit him not: blurt not his Loue, nor loose the good aduantage of his Grace, by seeming cold, or carelesse of his will.

For hee is gracious, if hee be obseru'd.

Hee hath a Teare for Pitié, and a Hand for Charitie.

Open (as Day) for melting Charitie: yet not withstanding, being incens'd, hee's flinty.

As humors as Winter, and as sudden as a frowne.

As Flawes congel'd in the Spring of day.

His temper therefore must be well obseru'd.

Chide him for faults, and doe it reuerently.

When you perceiue his blood enclin'd to mirth:

But being moodie, giue him Line, and scope.

Till that his passions (like a Whale on ground) will haue

Confound themselves with working.

Learn this Thomas, And thou shalt proue a shelter to thy friends:

A Hoop of Gold, to binde thy Brothers in:

That the vnited Vessell of their Blood

(Mingled with Venome of Suggestion)

As force, perforce, the Age will powre it in:

Shall neuer leake, though it doe worke as strong

As Aconitum, or rash Gun-powder.

Clar. I shall obserue him with all care, and loue.

King. Why art thou not at Windso' with him (Thomas)?

Clar. Hee is not there to day: hee dines in London.

King. And how accompanied? Canst thou tell

that?

Clar. With Points, and other his continuall followers.

King. Most subiect is the fattest Soyle to Weedes:

And hee (the Noble Image of my Youth)

Is ouer-spread with them: therefore my griefe

Stretches it selfe beyond the howre of death.

The blood weepes from my heart, when I doe shape

(In formes imaginarie) th'vnguided Dayes,

And rotten Times, that you shall looke vpon.

When I am sleeping with my Ancestors,

For when his head-strong Riot hath no Curbe,

When Rage and hot-Blood are his Counsaillors,

When Meanes and lauish Manners meete together,

Oh, with what Wings shall his Affections flye

Towards fronting Perill, and oppos'd Decay?

War. My gracious Lord, you looke beyond him quite:

The Prince but studies his Companions,

Like a strange Tongue: wherein, to gaine the Language,

Tis needfull, that the most immodest words

Be look'd vpon, and learn'd: which once attain'd,

Your Highnesse knowes, comes to no farther vse,

But to be knowie, and hated. So like grosse termes,

The Prince will, in the perfectnesse of time,

Cast off his followers: and their memorie

Shall as a Patterne, or a Measure, liue,

By which his Grace must mete the liues of others,

Turning past euils to aduantages.

King. Tis seldom, when the Bed doth leaue her Combe

In the dead Carrion.

Enter Westmerland.

Who's heere? Westmerland?

West. Health to my Soueraigne, and new happinesse

Added to that, that I am to deliuer.

Prince John, your Sonne, doth kisse your Graces Hand:

Mowbray, the Bishop, Scrope, Hastings, and all,

Are brought to the Correction of your Lawes.

There is not now a Rebels Sword vntheath'd,

But Peace puts forth her Olive euery where.

The manner how this Action hath bene borne,

Here (at mote leysure) may your Highnesse reade,

With euery course, in his particular.

King. O Westmerland, thou art a Summer Bird,

Which euer in the haunch of Winter sings

The lifting vp of day.

Enter Harcourt.

Looke, heere's more newes.

Harc. From Enemies, Heauen keepe your Maiestie:

And when they stand against you, may they fall,

As those that I am come to tell you of.

The Earle Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolf,

With a great Power of English, and of Scots,

Are by the Sherife of Yorke shire ouerthrowne:

The manner, and true order of the fight,

This Packet (please it you) contains at large.

King. And wherefore should these good newes

Make me sicke?

Will Fortune neuer come with both hands full,

But write her faire words still in foulest Letters?

Shew cyther giues a Stomack, and no Poode,

(Such are the poore, in health) or else a Feast,

And takes away the Stomack (such are the Rich):

That haue abundance, and enjoy it not.

I should reioyce now, at this happy newes,

And now my Sight fayles, and my Braine is giddie.

O me, come neere me, now I am much ill.

Glo. Comfort your Maiestie.

Clar. Oh, my Royall Father,

West. My Soueraigne Lord, cheare vp your selfe, looke vp.

War. Be patient (Princes) you doe know, these Fites

Are with his Highnesse very ordinarie,

Stand from him, giue him ayre:

Hee'll straight be well.

Clar. No, no, hee cannot long hold out these pangs,

Th'incessant care, and labour of his Minde,

Hath wrought the Mure, that should confine it in:

So thinne, that Life looks through, and will breake out.

Glo. The people feare me: for they doe obserue

Vnfather'd Heires, and loathly Births of Nature:

The Seasons change their manners, as the Yeere

Had found some Moneths asleepe, and leap'd them ouer.

Clar. The Riuer hath thrice flow'd, no ebbe betwene:

And the old folke (Times daring Chronicles)

Say it did so, a little time before

That our great Grand-fire Edward sick'd, and dy'd.

War. Speake lower (Princes) for the King recollers.

Glo. This Apoplexie will (certaine) be his end. King. I pray you take me vp, and beare me hence into some other Chamber: softly pray.

Let there be no noyse made (my gentle friends) vnlesse some dull and fauourable hand Will whisper Musicke to my wearie Spirit.

Call for the Musicke in the other Roome.

King. Set me the Crowne vpon my Pillow here.

Clar. His eye is hollow, and hee changes much.

War. Lesse noyse, lesse noyse.

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. Who saw the Duke of Clarence?

Clar. I am here (Brother) full of heauinesse.

P. Hen. How now? Raine within doores, and none abroad? How doth the King?

Glo. Exceeding ill.

P. Hen. Heard hee the good newes yet?

Tell it him.

Glo. Hee alter'd much, vpon the hearing it.

P. Hen. If hee be sicke with loy,

Hee'll recouer without Physicke.

War. Not so much noyse (my Lords)

Sweet Prince speake lowe.

The King, your Father, is dispos'd to sleepe.

Clar. Let vs with-draw into the other Roome.

War. Will please your Grace to goe along with vs?

P. Hen. No: I will sit, and watch here, by the King.

Why doth the Crowne lye there, vpon his Pillow?

Being so troublesome a Bed-fellow?

O polli'd Perturbation! Golden Care!

That keep'st the Ports of Slumber open wide,

To many a watchfull Night: sleepe with it now,

Yet not so sound, and halfe so deeply sweete,

As hee wildest Brow (with homely Biggen bound)

SnORES out the Watch of Night. O Maiestie!

When thou dost pinch thy Bearer, thou dost sit

Like a rich Armorer, worne in heat of day,

That scald'st with safetie: by his Gates of breath,

There lyes a downey feather, which stirs not:

Did hee suspire, that light and weightlesse downe

Perforce must moue? My gracious Lord, my Father,

This sleepe is sound indeede: this is a sleepe,

That from this Golden Rigoll hath diuorc'd

So many English Kings. Thy due, from me,

Is Teares, and heauie Sorrowes of the Blood,

Which Nature, Loue, and filiall tendernes,

Shall (O deare Father) pay thee pleneously.

My due, from thee, is this Imperiall Crowne,

Which (as immediate from thy Place, and Blood)

Deriues it selfe to me. Lo, heere it sits,

Which Heauen shall guard:

And put the worlds whole strength into one gyant Arme,

It shall not force this Lineall Honor from me.

This, from thee, will I to mine leaue,

As 'tis left to me.

Exit.

Enter Warwick, Gloucester, Clarence.

War. Doth the King call?

Clar. What would your Maiestie? how fares your Grace?

War. What would your Maiestie? how fares your Grace?

Clar. What would your Maiestie? how fares your Grace?

Clar. What would your Maiestie? how fares your Grace?

War. What would your Maiestie? how fares your Grace?

King. Why did you leaue me here alone (my Lords)?

Clar. We left the Prince (my Brother) here (my Liege)

Who undertooke to sit and watch by you.

King. The Prince of Wales? where is hee? let me see him.

War. This doore is open, hee is gone this way.

Glo. Hee came not through the Chamber where we stayd.

King. Where is the Crowne? who tooke it from my Pillow?

War. When wee with-drew (my Liege) wee left it heere.

King. The Prince hath ta'en it hence.

Goe seeke him out.

Is hee so hasty, that hee doth suppose

My sleepe, my death? Finde him (my Lord of Warwick)

Chide him hither: this part of his conioynes

With my disease, and helpe to end me.

See Sonnes, what things you are:

How quickly Nature falls into reuolt,

When Gold becomes her Obiect?

For this, the foolish ouer-carefull Fathers

Haue broke their sleepes with thoughts,

Their braines with care, their bones with industry,

For this, they haue ingrossed and pyl'd vpon

The canker'd heapes of strange-atchiued Gold:

For this, they haue benee thoughtfull, to inuest

Their Sonnes with Arts, and Martiall Exercises:

When, like the Bee, culling from euery flower

The vertuous Sweetes, our Thighes packt with Wax,

Our Mouthes with Honey, wee bring it to the Hie;

And like the Bees, are murthered for our paines.

This bitter taste yeelds his engrossments,

To the ending Father.

Enter Warwick.

Now, where is hee, that will not stay so long,

Till his Friend Sicknesse hath determin'd me?

War. My Lord, I found the Prince in the next Roome,

Washing with kindly Teares his gentle Cheekes,

With such a deepe demeanure, in great sorrow,

That Tyranny, which neuer quaffs but blood,

Would (by beholding him) haue wash'd his Knife

With gentle eye-drops. Hee is coming hither.

King. But wherefore did hee take away the Crowne?

Enter Prince Henry.

Loe, where hee comes. Come hither to me (Harry.)

Depart the Chamber, leaue vs heere alone.

King. I neuer thought to heare you speake againe.

King. Thy wish was Father (Harry) to that thought:

I stay too long by thee, I wearie thee.

Do'st thou so hunger for my emptie Chayre,

That thou wilt needes inuest thee with mine Honors,

Before thy howre be ripe? O foolish Youth!

Thou seek'st the Greatnesse, that will ouerwhelme thee.

Stay but a little: for my Cloud of Dignitie

Is held from falling, with so weake a winde,

That it will quickly drop: my Day is dimme.

Thou hast stolne that, which after some few howres

Were thine, without offence: and at my death

Thou hast seal'd vp my expectation.

Thy Life did manifest, thou lou'd'st me not,

And thou wilt haue me dye assur'd of it.

Thou hid'st a thousand Daggers in thy thoughts,

Which thou hast whetted on thy stonie heart,

To stab at halfe an howre of my Life.

What? canst thou not forbear me halfe an howre?

Then get thee gone, and digge my graue thy selfe,

And bid the merry Bells ring to thy eare

That thou art Crowned, not that I am dead.

Let all the Teares, that should bedew my Hearse

Be drops of Balme, to sanctifie thy head:

Onely compound me with forgotten dust.

Onely that, which gaue thee life, vnto the Wormes:

Plucke downe my Officers, breake my Decrees;

For now a time is come, to mocke at Forme:

Henry the fit is Crown'd: Vp Vanity,

Downe Royall State: All you sage Counsaillors, hence;

And to the English Court, assemble now

From euery Region, Apes of Idleness:

Now neighbor-Confines, purge you of your Scum:

Haue you a Russian that will sweare? drinke? dance?

Reuell the night? Rob? Murder? and commit

The oldest sinnes, the newest kinde of wayes?

Be happy, he will trouble you no more:

England, shall double gill'd, his trebble guilt.

England, shall giue him Office, Honor, Might:

For the fifth Harry, from curb'd License pluckes

The muzzle of Restraint; and the wilde Dogge

Shall beth his tooth in euery Innocent.

O my poore Kingdome (sicke, with ciuill blowes)

When that my Care could not with-hold thy Ryots,

What wilt thou do, when Ryot is thy Care?

O, thou wilt be a Wildernes againe,

Peopled with Woules (thy old Inhabitants).

Prince. O pardon me (my Liege)

But for my Teares,

The most Impediments vnto my Speech,

I had fore-stall'd this deere, and deepe Rebuke,

For you (with greefe) had spoke, and I had heard

The course of it so farre. There is your Crowne,

And he that weares the Crowne immortally.

Long guard it yours. If I affect it more,

Then as your Honour, and as your Renowne,

Let me no more from this Obedience rise,

Which my most true, and inward doreous Spirit

Teacheth this prostrate, and exteriour bending:

Heauen witness with me, when I heere came in,

And found no course of breath within your Maiestie,

How cold it strooke my heart. If I do faigne,

O let me, in my present wildenesse, dye,

And neuer liue, to shew th' incredulous World,

The Noble change that I haue purposed.

Comming to looke on you, thinking you dead,

(And dead almost (my Liege) to thinke you were)

I spake vnto the Crowne (as hauing senie)

And thus vbraided it. The Care on thee depending,

Hath fed vpon the body of my Father,

Therefore, thou best of Gold, art worst of Gold.

Other, lesse fine in Charact, is more precious;

Preseruing life, in Medicine potable:

But thou, most Fine, most Honour'd, most Renown'd,

Hast eate the Bearer vp.

Thus (my Royall Liege)

Accusing it, I put it on my Head,

To try with it (as with an Enemy,

That had before my face murder'd my Father).

The Quarrell of a true Inheritor,

But if it did infect my blood with loy,

Or well my Thoughts, to any straine of Pride,

If any Rebell, or vaine spirit of mine,

Did, with the least Affection of a Welcome,

Giue entertainment to the might of it,

Then

Then

Then

Then

Then

Let heauen, for euer, keepe it from my head,

And make me, as the poorest Vasaile is,

That doth with awe, and terror kneele to it.

King. O my Sonne!

Heauen put it in thy minde to take it hence,

That thou might'st ioyne the more, thy Fathers loue,

Pleading so wisely, in excuse of it.

Come hither Harry, sit thou by my bedde,

And heare (I thinke, the very latest Counsell)

That euer I shall breath: Heauen knowes, my Sonne,

By what by-patches, and indirect crook'd wayes

I met this Crowne: and I my selfe know well

How troublesome it fate vpon my head.

To thee, it shall descend with better Quiet,

Better Opinion, better Confirmation:

For all the Royle of the Achievement goes

With me, into the Earth. It seem'd in mee,

But as an Honour snatch'd with boy's rous hand,

And I had many liuing, to vbraide

My gaine of it, by their Assurances,

Which dayly grew to Quartell, and to Blood-shed,

Wounding supposed Peace.

All these bold Feates, I now

Where is my Lord of Warwicke?
Prim. My Lord of Warwicke.
King. Doth any name particular, belong
 Vnto the Lodging, where I first did swoon'd?
War. 'Tis call'd Ierusalem, my Noble Lord.
King. Laud be to heauen:
 Euen there my life must end,
 It hath bene prophesied to me many yeares,
 I should not dye, but in Ierusalem:
 Which (vainly) I suppos'd the Holy Land:
 But beare me to that Chamber, where Ile lye:
 In that Ierusalem, shall Harry dye. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Shallow, Silence, Falstaff, Bardolfe, Page, and Dany.

Shal. By Cocke and Pye, you shall not away to night.
 What Dany, I say?
Fal. You must excuse me, Mr. Robert Shallow.
Shal. I will not excuse you: you shall not be excus'd.
 Excuses shall not be admitted: there is no excuse shall serue: you shall not be excus'd.

Why Dany.
Dany. Heere fir.
Shal. Dany, Dany, let me see (Dany) let me see:
William Cooke, bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excus'd.

Dany. Marry fir, thus: those Precepts cannot bee seru'd: and againe fir, shall we sowe the head-land with Wheate?

Shal. With red Wheate Dany. But for William Cooke: are there no yong Pigeons?

Dany. Yes Sir.
 Heere is now the Smithes note, for Shooing,
 And Plough-Irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and payde: Sir John, you shall not be excus'd.

Dany. Sir, a new linke to the Bucket must needs bee had: And Sir, doe you mean to stoppe any of Williams
 Wages, about the Sacke he lost the other day, at Hinckley Fayre?

Shal. He shall answer it:
 Some Pigeons Dany, a couple of short-legg'd Hennes: a ioynt of Mutton, and any pretty little tine Kickshawes, tell William Cooke.

Dany. Doth the man of Warre, stay all night fir?

Shal. Yes Dany:
 I will vse him well. A Friend in Court, is better then a penny in purse. Vse his men well Dany, for they are arrant Knaues, and will backe-bite.

Dany. No worse then they are bitten. fir: For they haue marvellous fowle linnen.

Shallow. Well conceited Dany: about thy Businesse, Dany.

Dany. I beseech you fir,
 To countenance William Visor of Wontcot, against Cle- ment Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many Complaints Dany, against that Visor, that Visor is an arrant Knaue, on my knowledge.

Dany. I graunt your Worshipp, that he is a knaue (Sir):
 But yet heauen forbid Sir, but a Knaue should haue some Countenance, at his Friends request. An honest man fir, is able to speake for himselfe, when a Knaue is not: I haue seru'd your Worshipp truly fir, these eight yeares: and if I cannot once or twice in a Quarter beare out a knaue, against an honest man, I haue but a very litle credite with your Worshipp. The Knaue is mine honest Friend Sir, therefore I beseech your Worshipp, let him bee Countenanc'd.

Shal. Go too,
 I say he shall haue no wrong: Looke about Dany.
 Where are you Sir John? Come, off with your Boots.

Giue me your hand Mr. Bardolfe.
Bard. I am glad to see your Worshipp.

Shal. I thanke thee, with all my heart, kinde Master
Bardolfe: and welcome my tall Fellow: my tall Fellow.

Falstaff. He follow you, good Master Robert Shallow,
Bardolfe, looke to our Horses. If I were law'd in Quantities, I should make foure dozen of such bearded

Hermits staves, as Master Shallow. It is a wonderfull thing to see the semblable Coherence of his meags-spirits, and his: They, by obseruing of him, do beare themselves like foolish Iustices: Hee, by conuersing with them, is turn'd into a Iustice-like Seruing-man. Their spirits are so married in Coniunction, with the participation of So-cietie, that they flocke together in consent, like so many Wilde-Geese. If I had a suite to Mayster Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of bee-neere their Mayster. If to his Men, I would currie with Master Shallow, that no man could better command his Seruants. It is certaine, that either wife bearing, or ignorant Carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heede of their Compannie. I will deuise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keepe Prince Harry in continuall Laughter, the wearing out of sixe Fashions (which is foure Tearmes) or two Actions, and he shall laugh with Internallms. O it is much that a Lye (with a slight Oath) and a iest (with a fadde brow) will doe, with a Fellow, that neuer had the Ache in his shoulders. O you shall see him laugh, till his Face be like a wet Cloake, ill laid vp.

Shal. Sir John.
Falst. I come Master Shallow, I come Master Shallow.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Earle of Warwicke, and the Lord Chief Iustice.

Warwicke. How now, my Lord Chief Iustice, whether away?

Ch. Iust. How doth the King?
Warw. Exceeding well: his Cares

Are now, all ended.
Ch. Iust. I hope, not dead.

Warw. Hee's walk'd the way of Nature,
 And to our purposes, he liues no more.

Ch. Iust. I would his Maiesty had call'd me with him,
 The seruice, that I truly did his life,

Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed I thinke the yong King loues you not.
Ch. Iust. I know he doth not, and do arme my selfe
 To welcome the condition of the Time,
 Which cannot looke more hideously vpon me,
 Then I haue drawne it in my fantasie.

Enter John of Lancaster, Gloucester, and Clarence.

War. Heere come the heauy Issue of dead Harrie:
 O, that the liuing Harrie had the temper
 Of him, the worst of these three Gentlemen:
 How many Nobles then, should hold their places,
 That must strike faile, to Spirits of wilde sort?

Ch. Iust. Alas, I feare, all will be ouer-turn'd.
John. Good morrow Cofin Warwick, good morrow.

Glouc. Cla. Good morrow, Cofin.
John. We meet, like men, that had forgot to speake.

War. We do remember: but our Argument
 Is all too heauy, to admit much talke.

John. Well: Peace be with him, that hath made vs heauy
Ch. Iust. Peace be with vs, least we be heauier.

Glouc. O, good my Lord, you haue lost a friend indeed:
 And I dare twaie, you borrow not that face

Of seeming sorrow, it is sure your owne.
John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to finde,

You stand in coldest expectation.
 I am the forrier, would twere otherwise.

Ch. Iust. We, you must now speake Sir John Falstaffe faire,
 Which swimmes against your streame of Quality.

Ch. Iust. Sweet Princes: what I did, I did in Honor, Led by th' Imperiall Conduct of my Soule,

And neuer shall you see, that I will begge
 A ragged, and fore-stall'd Remission.

If Troth, and vpright Innocency fayle me,
 Ile to the King (my Master) that is dead,

And tell him, who hath sent me after him.
War. Heere comes the Prince,

Enter Prince Henrie.

Ch. Iust. Good morrow: and heauen saue your Maiesty
Prince. This new, and gorgeous Garment, Maiesty,

Sits not so easie on me, as you thinke.
 Brothers, you mixe your Sadnesse with some Feare:

This is the English, not the Turkish Court:
 Not Amurath, an Amurath succeeds,

But Harry, Harry: Yet be sad (good Brothers)
 For (to speake truth) it very well becomes you:

Sorrow, so Royally in you appeares,
 That I will deeply put the Fashion on,

And weare it in my heart. Why then be sad,
 But entertaine no more of it (good Brothers)

Then a ioynt burthen, laid vpon vs all.
 For me, by Heauen (I bid you be assur'd)

Ile be your Father, and your Brother too:
 Let me but beare your Loue, Ile beare your Cares;

But weepe that Harrie's dead, and so will I.
 But Harry liues, that shall conuert those Teares

By number, into houres of Happinesse.
John, &c. We hope no other from your Maiesty.

Prim. You all looke strangely on me: and you most,
 You are (I thinke) assur'd, I loue you not.

Ch. Iust. I am assur'd (if I be measur'd rightly)
 Your Maiesty hath no iust cause to hate mee.

Pr. No? How might a Prince of my great hopes forget
 So great Indignities you laid vpon me?

What? Rate? Rebuke? and roughly send to Prison
 Th'immediate Heire of England? Was this easie?
 May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

Ch. Iust. I then did vse the Person of your Father:
 The Image of his power, lay then in me,

And in th' administration of his Law,
 Whiles I was busie for the Commonweale,

Your Highnesse pleased to forget my place,
 The Maiesty, and power of Law, and Iustice,

The Image of the King, whom I presented,
 And strooke me in my very Seate of Iudgement;

Whereon (as an Offender to your Father);
 I gaue bold way to my Authority,

And did commit you, If the deed were ill,
 Be you contented, wearing now the Garland,

To haue a Sonne, set your Decrees at naught?
 To plucke downe Iustice from your awefull Bench?

To trip the course of Law, and blunne the Sword
 That guards the peace, and safety of your Person?

Nay more, to spurne at your most Royall Image,
 And mocke your workings, in a Second body?

Question your Royall Thoughts, make the case yours:
 Be now the Father, and propose a Sonne:

Heare your owne dignity so much prophan'd,
 See your most dreadfull Lawes, so loosely slighted;

Behold your selfe, so by a Sonne disdain'd:
 And then imagine me, taking you part,

And in your power, soft silencing your Sonne:
 After this cold consideration, sentence me;

And, as you are a King, speake in your State,
 What I haue done, that misbecame my place;

My person, or my Lieges Soueraigntie.
Prim. You are right Iustice, and you weigh this well:

Therefore still beare the Ballance, and the Sword:
 And I do wish your Honors may encrease,

Till you do liue, to see a Sonne of mine
 Offend you, and obey you, as I did.

So shall I liue, to speake my Fathers words:
 Happy am I, that haue a man so bold,

That dares do Iustice, on my proper Sonne;
 And no lesse happy, hauing such a Sonne,

That would deliuer vp his Greatnesse so,
 Into the hands of Iustice. You did commit me:

For which, I do commit into your hand,
 Th' vnstained Sword that you haue vs'd to beare:

With this Remembrance; That you vse the same
 With the like bold, iust, and impartiall spirit:

As you haue done gainst me. There is my hand,
 You shall be as a Father, to my Youth:

My voice shall found, as you do prompt mine eare,
 And I will stoop, and humble my Intents,

To your well-practis'd, wise Directions.
 And Princes all, belecue me, I beseech you:

My Father is gone wilde into his Graue,
 (For in his Tembe, lye my Affections)

And with his Spirits, sadly I suruiue,
 To mocke the expectation of the World;

To frustrate Prophecies, and to race out
 Rotten Opinion, who hath writ me downe

After my seeming. The Tide of Blood in me,
 Hath proudly flow'd in Vanity, till now.

Now doth it turne, and ebbe backe to the Sea,
 Where it shall mingle with the state of Floods,

And flow henceforth in formall Maiesty.
 Now call we our High Court of Parliament,

And let vs choofe such Limbes of Noble Counsaile,
 That

That the great Body of our State may go
In equall ranke, with the best govern'd Nation,
That Warre, or Peace, or both at once may be
As things acquainted and familiar to vs,
In which you (Father) shall haue formost hand.
Our Coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remembred) all our State,
And heauen (consigning to my good intents)
No Prince, nor Peere, shall haue iust cause to say, Heauen shorten Harries happy life, one day. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe, Shallow, Silence, Bardolfe, Page, and Pistoll.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine Orchard: where, in an Arbor we will eate a last yeares Pippin of my owne graffing, with a dish of Carrawayes, and so forth (Come Co-fin Silence, and then to bed.

Fal. You haue heere a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren: Beggers all, beggers all:
Sir Iohn: Marry, good ayre. Spread Dany, spread Danie:
Well said Danie.

Falst. This Danie serues you for good vses: he is your Seruingman, and your Husband.

Shal. A good Varlet, a good Varlet, a very good Var-let, Sir Iohn: I haue drunke too much Sacke at Supper. A good Varlet. Now sit downe, now sit downe: Come Cofin.

Sil. Ah sirra (quoth-a) we shall doe nothing but eate, and make good cheere, and praise heauen for the merrie yeere: when flesh is cheape, and Females deere, and lustie Lads come heere, and there: so merrily, and euer among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart, good M. Silence, Ile giue you a health for that anon.

Shal. Good M. Bardolfe: some wine, Danie.

Da. Sweet sir, sit: Ile be with you anon: most sweete sir, sit, Master Page, good M. Page, sit: Proface. What you want in meate, we'll haue in drinke: but you beare, the heart's all.

Shal. Be merry M. Bardolfe, and my little Souldiour there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife ha's all:
For women are Shrewes, both short, and tall:
'Tis merry in Hall, when Beards wagge all;
And welcome merry Shrouetide. Be merry, be merry.

Fal. I did not thinke M. Silence had bin a man of this Mettle.

Sil. Who I? I haue beene merry twice and once, ere now.

Dany. There is a dish of Lether-coats for you.

Shal. Danie.

Da. Your Worship: Ile be with you straight. A cup of Wine, sir?

Sil. A Cup of Wine, that's briske and fine, & drinke vnto the Leman mine: and a merry heart liues long-a.

Fal. Well said, M. Silence.

Sil. If we shall be merry, now comes in the sweete of the night.

Fal. Health, and long life to you, M. Silence.

Sil. Fill the Cuppe, and let it come. Ile pledge you a mile to the bottome.

Shal. Honest Bardolfe, welcome: If thou want'st any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart. Welcome my little tyne thee, and welcome indeed too: Ile drinke to
M. Bardolfe, and to all the Cauilleroes about London.

Da. I hope to see London, once ere I die.

Bar. If I might see you there, Danie.

Shal. You'll cracke a quart together? Ha, will you not
M. Bardolfe?

Bar. Yes Sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. I thanke thee: the knaue will sticke by thee. I can assure thee that. He will not out, he is true bred.

Bar. And Ile sticke by him, sir.

Shal. Why there spoke a King: lack nothing, be merry.

Looke, who's at doore there, ho: who knockes?

Fal. Why now you haue done me right.

Sil. Do me right, and dub me Knight, Samings. Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't for? Why then say an old man can do somewhat.

Da. If it please your Worshipp, there's one Pistoll come from the Court with newes.

Fal. From the Court? Let him come in.

Enter Pistoll.

How now Pistoll?

Pist. Sir Iohn, 'haue you sir.

Fal. What winde blew you hither, Pistoll?

Pist. Not the ill winde which blowes none to good, sweet Knight: Thou art now one of the greatest men in the Realme.

Sil. Indeed, I thinke he bee, but Goodman Puffe of Bafon.

Pist. Puffe? puffe in thy teeth, most recreant Coward, bafe. Sir Iohn, I am thy Pistoll, and thy Friend: helter-skelter haue I rode to thee, and tydings do I bring, and luckie ioyes, and golden Times, and happie Newes of price.

Fal. I prethee now deliuer them, like a man of this World.

Pist. A footra for the World, and Worldlings bafe,

I speake of Affrica, and Golden ioyes.

Fal. O bafe Assyrian Knight, what is thy newes?

Let King Comitha know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin-hood, Scarlet, and Iohn.

Pist. Shall dunghill Curres confront the Hellicons?

And shall good newes be baffel'd?

Then Pistoll lay thy head in Furies lappe.

Shal. Honest Gentleman,

I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then Lament therefore.

Shal. Giue me pardon, Sir,

If sir, you come with newes from the Court, I take it, there is but two wayes, either to vtter them, or to conceale them. I am Sir, vnder the King, in some Authority.

Pist. Vnder which King?

Bezonian, speake, or dye.

Shal. Vnder King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth? or Fift?

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A footra for thine Office.

Sir Iohn, thy tender Lamb-kinne, now is King,

Harry the Fift's the man, I speake the truth.

When Pistoll lyes, do this, and figge-me; like
The bragging Spaniard.

Fal.

Scena Quinta.

Enter two Groomes.

1. Groo. More Rushes, more Rushes:
2. Groo. The Trumpets haue sounded twice.
1. Groo. It will be two of the Clocke, ere they come from the Coronation. Exit Groo.

Enter Falstaffe, Shallow, Pistoll, Bardolfe, and Page.

Falstaffe. Stand heere by me, M. Robert Shallow, I will make the King do you Grace. I will leere vpon him, as he comes by: and do but marke the countenance that hee will giue me.

Pistoll. Blesse thy Lungs good Knight.

Falst. Come heere Pistoll, stand behind me. O if I had had time to haue made new Liueries, I would haue bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But it is no matter, this poore shew doth better: this doth inferre the zeale I had to see him.

Shal. It doth so.

Falst. It shewes my earnestnesse in affection.

Pist. It doth so.

Fal. My deuotion.

Pist. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night,
And not to deliberate, nor to remember,
Not to haue patience to shift me.

Shal. It is most certaine.

Fal. But to stand stained with Trauaile, and sweating with desire to see him, thinking of nothing else, putting all affayres in obliuion, as if there were nothing els to bee done, but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper idem: for obsque hoc nihil est. 'Tis all in euery part.

Shal. 'Tis so indeed.

Pist. My Knight, I will enflame thy Noble Liuer, and make thee rage. Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts is in bafe Durance, and contagious prison: a Hall'd thicher by most Mechanicall and durry hand. Rowze vppe Reuenge from Ebon den, with fell Alecto's Snake, for Dol is in. Pistoll, speakes nought but troth.

Fal. I will deliuer her.

Pistoll. There roar'd the Sea: and Trumpet Clangour sounds.

The Trumpets sound. Enter King Henrie the Fift, Brashers, Lord Chiefe Iustice.

Falst. Saue thy Grace, King Hall, my Royall Hall.

Pist. The heauens thee guard, and keepe, most royall Impe of Fame.

Fal. 'Saue thee my sweet Boy.

King. My Lord Chiefe Iustice, speake to that vaine
man.

Ch. Iust. Haue you your wits?

Know you what 'tis you speake?

Falst. My King, my loue; I speake to thee, my heart.

King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy Prayers:
How ill white haire become a Foole, and Iester?

I haue

I haue long dream'd of such a kinde of man,
So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so prophane:
But being awake, I do despise my dreame.
Make lesse thy body (hence) and more thy Grace,
Leaue gourmandizing; Know the Graue doth gape
For thee, thrice wider then for other men.
Reply not to me, with a Foole-borne Iest,
Presume not, that I am the thing I was,
For heauen doth know (so shall the world perceiue)
That I haue turn'd away my former Selfe,
So will I those that kept me Companie.
When thou dost heare I am, as I haue bin,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast:
The Tutor and the Feeder of my Riots:
Till then, I banish thee, on paine of death,
As I haue done the rest of my Misleaders,
Not to come neere our Person, by ten mile.
For competence of life, I will allow you,
That lacke of meanes enforce you not to euill:
And as we heare you do reforme your selues,
We will according to your strength, and qualities,
Giue you aduancement. Be it your charge (my Lord)
To see perform'd the tenure of our word. Set on.

Exit King.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.
Shal. I marry Sir Iohn, which I beseech you to let me haue home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, M. Shallow, do not you grieue at this: I shall be sent for in priuate to him: Looke you, he must seeme thus to the world: feare not your aduancement: I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot well perceiue how, vnlesse you should giue me your Doublet, and stufte me out with Straw, beseech you, good Sir Iohn, let mee haue five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word. This thae you heard, was but a colour.

Shal. A colour I feare, that you will dye, in Sir Iohn.
Fal. Feare no colours, go with me to dinner:
Come Lieutenant Pistol, come Bardolfe,
I shall be sent for soone at night.

Ch. Iust. Go carry Sir Iohn Falstaffe to the Fleete,
Take all his Company along with him.
Fal. My Lord, my Lord.

Ch. Iust. I cannot now speake, I will heare you soone:
Take them away.

Pist. Si fortuna me tormenta, spera me contenta.
Exit. Manet Lancaster and Chiefe Iustice.

Iohn. I like this faire proceeding of the Kings:
He hath intent his wonted Followers
Shall all be very well provided for:
But all are banisht, till their conuersations
Appaere more wise, and modest to the world.

Ch. Iust. And so they are.

Iohn. The King hath call'd his Parliament,
My Lord.

Ch. Iust. He hath.

Iohn. I will lay oddes, that ere this yeere expire,
We beare our Ciuill Swords, and Native fire
As farre as France. I heare a Bird so sing,
Whose Musicke (to my thinking) pleas'd the King.
Come, will you hence?

Exeunt

FINIS.

EPILOGVE. A

FIRST, my Feare: then, my Curtsie: last, my Speech.
My Feare, is your Displeasure: My Curtsie, my Dutie:
And my Speech, to Begge your Pardons. If you looke for a good Speech now, you vndoe me: For what I haue to say, is of mine owne making: and what (indeed) I should say, will (I doubt) proue mine owne marring. But to the Purpose, and so to the Venture. Be it knowne to you (as it is very well) I was lately heere in the end of a displeasing Play, to pray your Patience for it, and to promise you a Better: I did meane (indeede) to pay you with this, which if (like an ill Venture) it come vnluckily home, I breake; and you, my gentle Creditors lose. Heere I promise you I would be, and heere I commit my Bodie to your Mercies: Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and (as most Debtors do) promise you infinitely.

If my Tongue cannot entreate you to acquit me: will you command me to vse my Legges? And yet that were but light payment, to Dance out of your debt: But a good Conscience, will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the Gentlewomen heere, haue forgiuen me, if the Gentlemen will not, then the Gentlemen do not agree with the Gentlewomen, which was neuer scene before, in such an Assembly.

One word more, I beseech you: if you be not too much cloy'd with Far Meate, our humble Author will continue the Story (with Sir Iohn in it) and make you merry, with faire Katherine of France: where (for any thing I know) Fal-staffe shall dye of a sweat, vnlesse already he be kill'd with your hard Opinions:
For Old-Castle dyed a Martyr, and this is not the man. My Tongue is wearie, when my Legs are too, I will bid you good night; and so kneele downe before you:
But (indeed) to pray for the Queene.

The Life of Henry the Fift.

Enter Prologue.

For a Muse of Fire, that would ascend
The brightest Heaven of Invention:
A Kingdome for a Stage, Princes to Act,
And Monarchs to behold the swelling Scene.
Then should the Warlike Harry, like himselfe,
Assume the Port of Mars, and at his heeles
(Least in, like Hounds) should Famine, Sword, and Fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, Gentles all:
The flat unrayed Spirits, that bath dar'd,
On this unworthy Scaffold, to bring forth
So great an Obiect. Can this Cock-Pit hold
The castie fields of France? Or may we cramme
Within this wooden O, the very Caskes
That did affright the Ayre at Agincourt?
O pardon: since a crooked Figure may
Attest in little place a Milton,
And let vs, Cyphers to this great Accompt,

On your imaginario Forces worke.
Suppose within the Girdle of these Walls
Are now confin'd two mightie Monarchies,
Whose high, vp-reared, and abutting Fronts,
The perillous narrow Ocean parts asunder.
Peerce out our imperfections with your thoughts:
Into a thousand parts divide one Man,
And make imaginarie Puissance.
Thinke when we talke of Horses, that you see them
Printing their prowd Hoofes i'th' receiving Earth:
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our Kings,
Carry them here and there: Lumping o're Times;
Turning th' accomplishment of many yeeres
Into an Howre-glasse: for the which supplie,
Admit me Chorus to this Historie;
Who Prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to heare, kindly to iudge our Play.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter the two Bishops of Canterbury and Ely.

Bish. Cant.

Y Lord, He tell you, that selfe Bill is vrg'd,
Which in th' eleueth yere of y last Kings reign
Was like, and had indeed against vs past,
But that the scambling and vnquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

Bish. Ely. But how tny Lord shall we resist it now?

Bish. Cant. It must be thought on: if it passe against vs,

We loose the better halfe of our Possession:

For all the Temporall Lands, which men deuout

By Testament haue giuen to the Church,

Would they strip from vs; being valu'd thus,

As much as would maintaine, to the Kings honor,

Full fiftene Earles, and fiftene hundred Knights,

Six thousand and two hundred good Esquires:

And to reliefe of Lazars, and weake age

Of indigent faint Soules, past corporall toyle,

A hundred Almes-houses, right well supply'd:

And to the Coffers of the King beside,

A thousand pounds by th' yere Thus runs the Bill.

Bish. Ely. This would drinke deepe.

Bish. Cant. I would drinke the Cup and all.

Bish. Ely. But what preuention?

Bish. Cant. The King is full of grace, and faire regard.

Bish. Ely. And a true louer of the holy Church.

Bish. Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.

The breath no sooner left his Fathers body,

But that his wildnesse, mortify'd in him,

Seem'd to dye too: yea, at that very moment,

Consideration like an Angell came,

And whipt th' offending Adam out of him;

Leauing his body as a Paradise,

T' inuolop and containe Celestiall Spirits.

Neuer was such a sodaine Scholler made:

Neuer came Reformation in a Flood,

With such a heady currance scowring fautes:

Nor neuer Hydra-headed Wilsulnesse

So soone did loose his Seat; and all at once;

As in this King.

Bish. Ely. We are blessed in the Change.

Bish. Cant. Heare him but reason in Diuinitie;

And all-admiring, with an inward with

You would desire the King were made a Prelate:

Heare him debate of Common-wealth Affaires;

You would say, it hath been all in all his study:

Lift his discourse of Warre; and you shall heare

A fearefull Battaille rendred you in Musique.

Turne

Turne him to any Cause of Pollicy,
The Gordian Knot of it he will vnloose,
Familiar as his Garter: that when he speaks,
The Ayre, a Charter'd Libertine, is still,
And the mute Wonder lurketh in mens eares,
To steale his sweet and honied Sentences:
So that the Art and Practique part of Life,
Must be the Mistresse to this Theorique.
Which is a wonder how his Grace should gleane it,
Since his addiction was to Courtes vaine,
His Companies vnletter'd, rude, and shallow,
His Houres fill'd vp with Ryots, Banquets, Sports;
And neuer noted in him any studie,
Any retyrement, any sequestration,
From open Haunts and Popularitie.

B. Ely. The Strawberry growes vnderneath the Nettle,
And holesome Berryes thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by Fruit of baser qualitie:
And so the Prince obscur'd his Contemplation
Vnder the Veyle of Wildnesse, which (no doubt)
Grew like the Summer Grasse, fastest by Night,
Vnseene, yet cressie in his facultie.

B. Cant. It must be so; for Miracles are ceast:
And therefore we must needs admit the meanes,
How things are perfected.

B. Ely. But my good Lord:
How now for mitigation of this Bill,
Vrg'd by the Commons? doth his Maiestie
Incline to it, or no?

B. Cant. He seemes indifferent:
Or rather swaying more vpon our part.
Then cherishing th'exhibitors against vs:
For I haue made an offer to his Maiestie,
Vpon our Spirituall Conuocation,
And in regard of Causes now in hand,
Which I haue open'd to his Grace at large,
As touching France, to giue a greater Summe,
Then euer at one time the Clergie yet
Did to his Predecessors part withall.

B. Ely. How did this offer seeme receiv'd, my Lord?

B. Cant. With good acceptance of his Maiestie:
Sae that there was not time enough to heare,
As I perceiv'd his Grace would faine haue done,
The feueralls and vnhidden passages
Of his true Titles to some certaine Dukedomes,
And generally, to the Crowne and Seat of France,
Deriv'd from Edward, his great Grandfather.

B. Ely. What was th'impediment that broke this off?

B. Cant. The French Embassador vpon that instant
Crau'd audience; and the howe I thinke is come,
To giue him hearing: Is it foure a Clock?

B. Ely. It is.

B. Cant. Then goe we in, to know his Embassie:
Which I could with a ready guesse declare,
Before the Frenchman speake a word of it.

B. Ely. Ile wait vpon you, and I long to heare it.

Exeunt.

Enter the King, Humphrey, Bedford, Clarence, Warwick, Westmerland, and Exeter.

King. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?

Exeter. Not here in presence.

King. Send for him, good Vnckle.

Westm. Shall we call in th' Ambassador, my Liege?

King. Not yet, my Cousin: we would be resolu'd,

Before we heare him, of some things of weight,
That taske our thoughts, concerning vs and France.

Enter two Bishops.

B. Cant. God and his Angels guard your sacred Throne,
And make you long become it.

King. Sure we thanke you.

My learned Lord, we pray you to proceed,
And iustly and religiously vnfold,
Why the Law Salike, that they haue in France,
Or should or should not barre vs in our Clayme:
And God forbid, my deare and faithfull Lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your readings,
Or nicely charge your vnderstanding Soule,
With opening Titles miscreate, whose right
Sutes not in native colours with the truth:

For God doth know, how many now in health,
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reuerence shall incite vs to.

Therefore take heed how you impawne our Person,
How you awake our sleeping Sword of Warre;
We charge you in the Name of God take heed:
For neuer two such Kingdomes did contend,
Without much fall of blood, whose guiltlesse drops
Are euerie one, a Woe, a sore Complaint,

'Gainst him, whose wrongs giues edge vnto the Swords,
That makes such waste in briefe mortaltie.

Vnder this Coniuration, speake my Lord:

For we will heare, note, and beleue in heare,
That what you speake, is in your Conscience washt,
As pure as sinne with Baptisme.

B. Cant. Then heare me gracious Soueraign, & you Peers,
That owe your felues, your liues, and seruices,
To this Imperiall Throne. There is no barre
To make against your Highnesse Clayme to France,

But this which they produce from Pharamond,
In terram Salicam Mulieres ne succedant,

No Woman shall succeed in Salike Land:
Which Salike Land, the French vnjustly gloze.

To be the Realme of France, and Pharamond

The founder of this Law, and Female Barre,
Yet their owne Authors faithfully asseme,

That the Land Salike is in Germanie,
Betwene the Floods of Sala and of Elue:

Where Charles the Great hauing subdu'd the Saxons,
There left behind and iettled certaine French:

Who holding in disdain the German Women,
For some dishonest manners of their life,

Establisht then this Law; to wit, No Female
Should be Inheritor in Salike Land:

Which Salike (as I said) twixt Elue and Sala,
Is at this day in Germanie, call'd Meisen.

Then doth it well appeare, the Salike Law
Was not deuised for the Realme of France:

Nor did the French possesse the Salike Land,
Vntill foure hundred one and twentie yeeres

After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly suppos'd the founder of this Law,

Who died within the yeere of our Redemption,
Foure hundred twentie six: and Charles the Great

Subdu'd the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the Riuer Sala, in the yeere

Eight hundred fife. Besides, their Writers say,
King Pepin, which depos'd Childerike,

Did as Heire General, being descended
Of Blithild, which was Daughter to King Clotair,

Make Clayme and Title to the Crowne of France,
Hugh Caper also, who vsurpt the Crowne

Of Charles the Duke of Loraine, sole Heire male
Of the true Line and Stock of Charles the Great:

To find his Title with some shewes of truth,
Though in pure truth it was corrupt and naught,

Conuey'd himselfe as th' Heire to th' Lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemaine, who was the Sonne

To Lewes the Emperour, and Lewes the Sonne
Of Charles the Great: also King Lewes the Tenth,

Who was sole Heire to the vsurper Caper,
Could not keepe quiet in his conscience,

Wearing the Crowne of France, till satisfied,
That faire Queene Isabel, his Grandmother,

Was Lineall of the Lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid Duke of Loraine:

By the which Marriage, the Lyne of Charles the Great
Was re-vnted to the Crowne of France.

So, that as cleare as is the Summers Sunne,
King Pepin Title, and Hugh Caper Clayme;

King Lewes his satisfaction, all appeare
To hold in Right and Title of the Female:

So doe the Kings of France vnto this day.
Howbeit, they would hold vp this Salike Law,

To barre your Highnesse clayming from the Female,
And rather chuse to hide them in a Net,

Then apply to imbarre their crooked Titles,
Vsurpt from you and your Progenitors.

King. May I with right and conscience make this claim?

B. Cant. The sinne vpon my head, dread Soueraigne:
For in the Booke of Numbers is it writ,

When the man dyeth, let the Inheritance
Descend vnto the Daughter. Gracious Lord,

Stand for your owne, vnwind your bloody Flagge,
Looke back into your mightie Ancestors:

Goe my dread Lord, to your great Grandfathers Tombe,
From whom you clayme; inuoke his Warlike Spirit,

And your Great Vnckles, Edward the Black Prince,
Who on the French ground play'd a Tragedie,

Making defeat on the full Power of France:
Whiles his most mightie Father on a Hill

Stood smiling, to behold his Lyons Helpe
Forage in blood of French Nobilitie.

O Noble English, that could entertaine
With halfe their Forces, the full pride of France,

And let another halfe stand laughing by,
All out of worke, and cold for action:

B. Cant. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,
And with your puissant Arme renew their Feats;

You are their Heire, you sit vpon their Throne:
The Blood and Courage that renowned them,

Runs in your Veines: and my thrice-puissant Liege
Is in the very May-Morne of his Youth,

Ripe for Exploits and mightie Enterprises.
Exe. Your Brother Kings and Monarchs of the Earth

Doe all expect, that you should rowse your selfe,
As did the former Lyons of your Blood.

West. They know your Grace hath cause, and means, and
So hath your Highnesse: neuer King of England

Had Nobles richer, and more loyall Subjects,
Whose hearts haue left their bodies here in England,

And lye pauillion'd in the fields of France.
B. Cant. O let their bodies follow my deare Liege

With Bloods, and Sword and Fire, to win your Right:
In ayde whereof, we of the Spiritualltie

Will raise your Highnesse such a mightie Summe,
As neuer did the Clergie at one time

Bring in to any of your Ancestors, Exe.

King. We must not onely arme t' inuade the French,
But lay downe our proportions, to defend
Against the Scot, who will make roade vpon vs,
With all aduantages.
B. Cant. They of those Marches, gracious Soueraign, Shall be a Wall sufficient to defend
Our in-land from the pilfering Borderers.
King. We do not meane the courting snatchers onely,
But feare the maine intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to vs:
For you shall reade, that my great Grandfather
Neuer went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot, on his vnfinisht Kingdome,
Came pouring like the Tyde into a breach,
With ample and brim fulnesse of his force,
Galling the gleaned Land with hot Affayes,
Girding with grievous siege, Castles and Townes:
That England being emptie of defence,
Hath shooke and trembled at th' ill neighbourhood.
B. Cant. She hath bin the more fear'd the harm'd, my Liege:
For heare her but exampl'd by her selfe,
When all her Cheualrie hath been in France,
And shee a mourning Widdow of her Nobles,
Shee hath her selfe not onely well defended,
But taken and impounded as a Stray,
The King of Scots: whom shee did send to France,
To fill King Edwards fame with prisoner Kings;
And make their Chronicle as rich with prayse,
As is the Owle and bottom of the Sea
With sunken Wrack, and sun-lesse Treasures.

B. Ely. But there's a saying very old and true,
If that you will France win, then with Scotland first begin.

For once the Eagle (England) being in prey,
To her vnguarded Nest, the Weazell (Scot)

Comes sneaking, and so sucks her Princely Egges,
Playing the Moufe in absence of the Cat,

To tame and hauocke more then she can eate.
Exet. It follows then, the Cat must stay at home,

Yet that is but a crush'd necessity,
Since we haue lockes to safegard necessities,

And pretty traps to catch the petty theetes.
While that the Armed hand doth fight abroad,

Th' aduised head defends it selfe at home:
For Government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keepe in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and natural close,
Like Musicke.

Cant. Therefore doth heauen diuide
The state of man in diuers functions,

Setting endenour in continual motion:
To which is fixed as an ayme or butt,
Obedience: for so worke the Hony Bees,

Creatures that by a rule in Nature teach
The Act of Order to a peopled Kingdome:

They haue a King, and Officers of sorts,
Where some like Magistrates correct at home;

Others, like Merchants venter Trade abroad;
Others, like Souldiers armed in their stings,

Make boote vpon the Summers Veluet buddes:
Which pillage, they with merry march bring home:

To the Tent-royal of their Emperour:
Who busied in his Maiesties surceyes

The singing Mafons building roofes of Gold,
The ciuil Citizens kneading vp the hony;

The poore Mechanicke Porters, crowding in Their heavy burthens at his narrow gate:

The sad-eyed Justice with his surly humour,
Delivering ore to Executors pale
The lazie yawning Drone: I this inferre,
That many things hauing full reference
To one consent, may worke contrariouly,
As many Arrowes loosed seuerall wayes
Come to one marke: as many wayes meet in one towne,
As many fresh streames meet in one salt sea;
As many Lynes close in the Dial's center:
So may a thousand actions once a foote,
And in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my Liege, Diuide your happy England into foure,
Whereof, take you one quarter into France,
And you withall shall make all Gallia shake.
If we with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our owne doores from the dogge,
Let vs be worried, and our Nation lose
The name of hardinesse and policie.

King. Call in the Messengers sent from the Dolphin.
Now are we well resolu'd, and by Gods helpe
And yours, the noble sinewes of our power,
France being ours, wee'l bend it to our Awe,
Or breake it all to peeces. Or there wee'l sit, (Ruling in large and ample Emperie, Ore France, and all her (almost) Kingly Dukedomes)
Or lay these bones in an vnworthy Vrine,
Tomblesse, with no remembrance ouer them:
Either our History shall with full mouth
Speake freely of our Acts, or else our graue
Like Turkish mute, shall haue a tonguelesse mouth,
Not worshipt with a waxen Epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.
Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our faire Cousin Dolphin: for we heare,
Your greeting is from him, not from the King.
Amb. May't please your Maiestie to giue vs leaue
Freely to render what we haue in charge:
Or shall we sparingly shew you farre off
The Dolphins meaning, and our Embasie.

King. We are no Tyrant, but a Christian King,
Vnto whose grace our passion is as subiect
As is our wretches fettered in our prisons,
Therefore with franke and with vacurbed plainnesse,
Tell vs the Dolphins minde.

Amb. Thus than in few:
Your Highnesse lately sending into France,
Did claime some certaine Dukedomes, in the right
Of your great Predecessor, King Edward the third.
In answer of which claime, the Prince our Master
Says, that you fauour too much of your youth,
And bids you be aduis'd: There's nought in France,
That can be with a nimble Galliard wonne:
You cannot reuell into Dukedomes there.
He therefore sends you meeter for your spirit.
This Tun of Treasure; and in lieu of this,
Desires you let the duke domes that you claime
Heare no more of you. This the Dolphin speaks.

King. What Treasure Vncle?
Exc. Tennis balles, my Liege.
King. We are glad the Dolphin is so pleasant with vs,
His Present, and your paines we thanke you for:
When we haue matcht our Rackets to these Balles,
We will in France (by Gods grace) play a set.
Shall strike his fathers Crowne into the hazard.
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a Wrangler,

That all the Courts of France will be disturb'd
With Chaces. And we vnderstand him well,
How he comes o're vs with our wilder dayes,
Not measuring what vs we made of them.
We neuer valew'd this poore seat of England,
And therefore liuing hence, did giue our selfe
To barbarous license: As 'tis euer common,
That men are merriest, when they are from home.
But tell the Dolphin, I will keepe my State,
Be like a King, and shew my sayle of Greatnesse,
When I do rowle me in my Throne of France.
For that I haue layd by my Maiestie,
And plodded like a man for working dayes:
But I will rise there with so full a glorie,
That I will dazle all the eyes of France,
Yea strike the Dolphin blinde to looke on vs,
And tell the pleasant Prince, this Mocke of his Hath turn'd his balles to Gun-stones, and his soule
Shall stand fore charged, for the wastefull vengeance
That shall flye with them: for many a thousand widow
Mocke mothers from their sonnes, mock Castles downe:
And some are yet vngotten and vnborne,
That shal haue cause to curse the Dolphins scoorne.
But this lyes all within the wil of God,
To whom I do appeale, and in whose name
Tel you the Dolphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightfull hand in a wel-hallow'd cause.
So get you hence in peace: And tell the Dolphin,
His Iest will saue our but of shallow wit,
When thousands weepe more then did laugh at it.
Conuey them with safe conduct. Fare you well.

Exit Ambassadors.
Exc. This was a merry Message.
King. We hope to make the Sender blush acie:
Therefore, my Lords, omit no happy howre,
That may giue furth'rance to our Expedition:
For we haue now no thought in vs but France,
Saue those to God, that runne before our businesse.
Therefore let our proportions for these Warres
Be soone collected, and all things thought vpon,
That may with reasonable swiftnesse adde
More Feathers to our Wings: for God before,
Wee'le chide this Dolphin at his fathers doore.
Therefore let euery man now taske his thought,
That this faire Action may on foot be brought.

Flourish. Enter Chorus.
Now all the Youth of England are on fire,
And silken Dalliance in the Wardrobe lyes:
Now thriue the Armourers, and Honors thought
Reignes solely in the breast of euery man.
They sell the Pasture now, to buy the Horse;
Following the Mirror of all Christian Kings,
With winged heeles, as English Mercuries.
For now sits Expectation in the Ayre,
And hides a Sword, from Hilts vnto the Point,
With Crownes Imperiall, Crownes and Coronets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French aduis'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadfull preparation,
Shake in their feare, and with pale Pollicy
Seek to diuert the English purposes.
O England: Modell tarby inward Greatnesse,
Like little Body with an mightie Heart;

What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kinde and naturall:
But see, thy fault France hath in thee found out,
Anest of hollow bofomes, which he fills
With treacherous Crownes, and three corrupted men:
One, Richard Earle of Cambridge, and the second
Henry Lord Scroope of Masham, and the third
Sir Thomas Grey Knight of Northumberland,
Haue for the Gile of France (O guilt indeed)
Confirm'd Conspiracy with fearefull France,
And by their hands, this grace of Kings must dye.
If Hell and Treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France; and in Southampton
Linger your patience on, and wee'l digest
This abuse of distance; force a play:
The summe is payde, the Traitors are agreed,
The King is set from London, and the Scene
Is now transported (Geniles) to Southampton.
There is the Play-house now, there must you sit,
And thence to France shall we conuey you safe,
And bring you backe: Charming the narrow seas
To giue you gentle Passe: for if we may,
Wee'l not offend one stomacke with our Play.
But till the King come forth, and not till then,
Vnto Southampton do we shift our Scene.

Enter Corporall Nym, and Lieutenant Bardolfe.
Bar. Well met Corporall Nym.
Nym. Good morrow Lieutenant Bardolfe.
Bar. What are Ancient Pistoll and you friends yet?
Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little: but when time shall serue, there shall be smiles, but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight, but I will winke and holde out mine yron: it is a simple one, but what though? It will coste Cheefe, and it will endure cold, as another mans sword will: and there's an end.

Bar. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friendes, and wee'l bee all three sworn brothers to France: Let's be so good Corporall Nym.
Nym. Faith, I will liue so long as I may, that's the certaine of it: and when I cannot liue any longer, I will doe as I may: That is my rest, that is the rendezous of it.
Bar. It is certaine Corporall, that he is marryed to Nell Quickly, and certainly she did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her.
Nym. I cannot tell, Things must be as they may: men may sleepe, and they may haue their throats about them at that time, and some say, kniues haue edges: It must be as it may, though patience be a tyred name, yet shee will plodde, there must be Conclusions, well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistoll, & Quickly.
Bar. Heere comes Ancient Pistoll and his wife: good Corporall be patient heere. How now mine Hoaste Pistoll?
Pist. Bafe Tyke, callst thou mee Hoste, now by this hand I sweare I scorne the terme: nor shall my Nell keep Lodgers.

Host. No by my troth, not long: For we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteene Gentlewomen: that liue honestly by the pricke of their Needles, but it will bee thought we keepe a Bawdy-house straight. O welladay Lady, if he be not hewne now, we shall see wilful adalte-ry and murder committed.
Bar. Good Lieutenant, good Corporall offer nothing
heere.

Nym. Pist.

Pist. Pist. for thee, Island dogge: thou prickeard cur of Island.

Host. Good Corporall Nym shew thy valor, and put vp your sword.

Nym. Will you shogge off? I would haue you solus.
Pist. Solus, egreious dog? O Viper vile; The solus in thy most meruailous face, the solus in thy teeth, and in thy throate, and in thy hatefull Lungs, yea in thy Maw perdy; and which is worse, within thy nastie mouth. I do retort the solus in thy bowels, for I can take, and Pistols cocke is vp, and flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbasen, you cannot coniuere mee: I haue an humor to knocke you indifferently well: If you grow fowle with me Pistoll, I will scoure you with my Rapier, as I may, in sayre tearmes. If you would walke off, I would pricke your guts a little in good tearmes, as I may, and that's the humor of it.

Pist. O Braggart vile, and damned furious wight,
The Graue doth gape, and doting death is nere,
Therefore exhale.

Bar. Heare me, heare me what I say: Hee that strikes the first stroake, Ile run him vp to the hilts, as I am a soldier.

Pist. An oath of mickle might, and fury shall abate.
Giue me thy fist, thy fore-foote to me giue: Thy spiritus are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throate one time or other in faire termes, that is the humor of it.

Pistoll. Couple a gorge, that is the word. I desiethee againe. O hound of Crete, thinkst thou my spouse to get?
No, to the spittle goe, and from the Poudring tub of infamy, fetch forth the Lazar Kite of Creffid kinde, Doll Teare-sheete, shee by name, and her spouse. I haue, and I will hold the Quondam Quickly for the onely three: and Pauca, there's enough to go to.

Enter the Boy.
Boy. Mine Hoast Pistoll, you must come to my Mayster, and your Hostesse: He is very sicke, & would to bed.
Good Bardolfe, put thy face betwene his sheets, and do the Office of a Warming-pan: Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away you Rogue.
Host. By my troth he'll yeeld the Crow a pudding one of these dayes: the King has kild his heart. Good Husband come home presently.

Bar. Come, shall I make you two friends. Wee must to France together: why the diuel should we keep kniues to cut one anothers throats?

Pist. Let floods ore-swell, and fiends for food howle on.

Nym. You'l pay me the eights shillings I won of you at Betting?

Pist. Bafe is the Slaue that payes.
Nym. That now I will haue: that's the humor of it.

Pist. As manhood shal compound: push home.
Bard. By this sword, hee that makes the first thrust,
Ile kill him: By this sword, I wil.

Pi. Sword is an Oath; Oaths must haue their course.
Bar. Coporall Nym, & thou wilt be friends be friends, and thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me to pre-thee put vp.

Pist. A Noble shalt thou haue, and present pay, and Liquor likewise will I giue to thee, and friendshippe shall combyne, and brotherhood. Ile liue by Nymme, & Nymme shall liue by me, is not this iust? For I shal Sutler be vnto the Campe, and profits will accrue. Giue mee thy hand.

h 3

Nym.

Nym. I shall haue my Noble?

Pist. In cash, most lustily payd.

Nym. Well, then that the humor of it.

Enter Hostesse.

Host. As euer you come of women, come in quickly to Sir John: A poore heart, hee is so shak'd of a burning quotidian Tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The King hath run bad humors on the Knight, that's the euen of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right, his heart is fractured and corroborate.

Nym. The King is a good King, but it must bee as it may: he passes some humors, and carrecres.

Pist. Let vs condole the Knight, for (Lambekins) we will lince.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, & Westmerland.

Bed. For God his Grace is bold to trust these traitors

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and euen they do bear themselves, As if allegiance in their bosomes face

Crowped with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The King hath note of all that they intend,

By interception, which they dreame not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow, Whom he hath dull'd and cloy'd with gracious fauours; That he should for a forraigne purse, so sell His Soueraignes life to death and treachery.

Sound Trumpets.

Enter the King, Scroope, Cambridge, and Gray.

King. Now sits the winde faire, and we will aboard.

My Lord of Cambridge, and my kinde Lord of Masbam,

And you my gentle Knight, giue me your thoughts:

Thinke you not that the powres we beare with vs

Will cut their passage through the force of France?

Doing the execution, and the acte,

For which we haue in head assembled them.

Scro. No doubt my Liege, if each man do his best.

King. I doubt not that, since we are well periwaded

We carry not a heart with vs from hence,

That growes not in a faire consent with ours:

Not leaue not one behinde, that doth not wish

Success and Conquest to attend on vs.

Cam. Neuer was Monarch better fear'd and lou'd,

Then is your Maiesty; there's not I thinke a subiect

That sits in heart-greife and vncasinesse

Vnder the sweet shade of your gouernment.

King. True; those that were your Fathers enemies,

Haue steep'd their gauls in hony, and do serue you

With hearts create of duty, and of zeale.

King. We therefore haue great cause of thankfulness,

And shall forget the office of our hand

Sooner then quittance of desert and merit,

According to the weight and worthinesse.

Scro. So seruice shall with Steele and sword toyle,

And labour shall refresh it selfe with hope

To do your Grace incessant seruices.

King. We Iudge no lesse, Vnlike of Exeter,

Inlarge the man committed yesterday,

That rayl'd against our person: We consider

It was excess of Wine that set him on,

And on his more aduice, We pardon him.

Scro. That's mercy, but too much security:

Let him be punish'd Soueraigne, least example

Dre'd (by his sufferance) more of such a kind.

King. O let vs yet be mercifull.

Cam. So may your Highnesse, and yet punish too.

Gray. Sir, you shew great mercy if you giue him life, After the taste of much correction.

King. Alas, your too much loue and care of me, Are heavy Orisons 'gainst this poore wretch: If little faults proceeding on disemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye When capitall crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appeare before vs? Wee'l yet enlarge that man, Though Cambridge, Scroope, and Gray, in their deere care And tender preferuation of our person Wold haue him punish'd. And now to our French causes, Who are the late Commissioners?

Cam. I one my Lord,

Your Highnesse bad me aske for it to day.

Scro. So did you me my Liege.

Gray. And I my Royall Soueraigne.

King. Then Richard Earle of Cambridge, there is yours:

There yours Lord Scroope of Masbam, and Sir Knight:

Gray of Northumberland, this same is yours:

Read them, and know I know your worthinesse.

My Lord of Westmerland, and Vnlike Exeter,

We will aboard to night. Why how now Gentlemen?

What see you in those papers, that you looke

So much complexion? Looke ye how they change:

Their cheekes are paper. Why, what reade you there,

That haue so cowarded and chaf'd your blood

Out of apparence.

Cam. I do confesse my fault,

And do submit me to your Highnesse mercy.

Gray. Scro. To which we all appeale.

King. The mercy that was quicken in vs but late,

By your owne counsaile is suppress and kill'd:

You must not dare (for shame) to talke of mercy,

For your owne reasons turne into your bosomes,

As dogs vpon their maisters, worrying you:

See you my Princes, and my Noble Peeres,

These English monsters: My Lord of Cambridge heere,

You know how apt our loue was, to accord

To furnish with all apperiments

Belonging to his Honour; and this man,

Hath for a few light Crownes, lightly conspir'd

And sworne vnto the practises of France:

To kill vs heere in Hampton: To the which,

This Knight no lesse for bounty bound to vs,

Then Cambridge is, hath likewise sworne. But O,

What shall I say to thee Lord Scroope, thou cruell,

Ingratefull, sauage, and inhumane Creature?

Thou that didst beare the key of all my counsailes,

That knew'st the very bottome of my soule,

That (almost) might'st haue coyn'd me into Golde,

Would'st thou haue practis'd on me, for thy vse?

May it be possible, that forraigne hyer

Could out of thee extract one sparke of euill

That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange,

That though the truth of it stands off as grosse

As blacke and white, my eye will scarcely see it.

Treason and murder, euer kept together,

As two yoke diuels sworne to eithers purpose,

Working so grossely in an naturall cause,

That admiration did not hoope at them.

But thou (gainst all proportion) didst bring in

Wonder to waite on treason, and on murder:

And whatsoeuer cunning fiend it was

That wrought vpon thee so preposterously,

Hath got the voyce in hell for excellence:

And

And other diuels that suggest by treasons, Do botch and bungle vp damnation, With patches, colours, and with formes being fetcht From glitt'ring semblances of piety:

But he that temper'd thee, bad thee stand vp,

Gaue thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,

Vnlesse to dub thee with the name of Traitor.

If that same Dæmon that hath gull'd thee thus,

Should with his Lyon-gate walke the whole world,

He might returne to vastie Tartar hacket,

And tell the Legions, I can neuer win

A soule so easie as that Englishmans.

Oh, how hast thou with ieaousie infected

The sweetnesse of affiance? Shew men dutifull,

Why so didst thou: seeme they graue and learned?

Why so didst thou. Come they of Noble Family?

Why so didst thou. Seeme they religious?

Why so didst thou. Or are they spare in diet,

Free from grosse passion, or of mirth, or anger,

Constant in spirit, not sweruing with the blood,

Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement,

Not working with the eye, without the eare,

And but in purged iudgement trusting neither,

Such and so finely boulted didst thou seeme:

And thus thy fall hath left a kinde of blot,

To make thee full fraught man, and best indued

With some suspicion, I will weepe for thee.

For this result of thine, me thinkes is like

Another fall of Man. Their faults are open,

Arrest them to the answer of the Law,

And God acquit them of their practises.

Exe. I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of

Richard Earle of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of Thomas

Lord Scroope of Masbam.

I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of Thomas

Gray, Knight of Northumberland.

Scro. Our purposes, God iustly hath discover'd,

And I repent my fault more then my dearth,

Which I beseech your Highnesse to forgive me,

Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me, the Gold of France did not seduce,

Although I did admit it as a motive,

The sooner to effect what I intended:

But God be thanked for preuention,

Which in sufferance heartily will reioyce,

Beseeching God, and you, to pardon mee.

Gray. Neuer did faithfull subiect more reioyce

At the discouery of most dangerous Treason,

Then I do at this houre ioy ore my selfe,

Prevented from a damnd enterprize:

My fault, but not my body, pardon Soueraigne.

King. God quit you in his mercy: Hear your sentence

You haue conspir'd against Our Royall person,

Ioy'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his Coffers,

Receyvd the Golden Earnest of Our death:

Wherein you would haue sold your King to slaughter,

His Princes, and his Peeres to seruitude,

His Subiects to oppression, and contempt,

And his whole Kingdom into desolation:

Touching our person, seeke we no reuenge,

But we our Kingdome safety must so tender,

Whose ruine you sought, that to her Lawes

We do deliuer you. Get you therefore hence,

(Poore miserable wretches) to your death:

The taste whereof, God of his mercy giue

You patience to indure, and true Repentance

Of all your deare offences. Beare them hence.

Now Lords for France: the enterprize whereof

Shall be to you as vs, like glorious.

We doubt not of a faire and luckie Warre,

Since God so graciously hath brought to light

This dangerous Treason, lurking in our way,

To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now,

But euerie Rubbe is smoothed on our way.

Then forth, deare Countreymen: Let vs deliuer

Our Puissance into the hand of God,

Putting it straight in expedition.

Chearely to Sea, the signes of Warre aduance,

No King of England, if not King of France.

Flourish.

Enter Pistoll, Nym, Bardolph, Boy, and Hostesse.

Hostesse. Prythee honey sweet Husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pistoll. No: for my manly heart doth erue.

Bardolph. be blythe: Nym, rowle thy vaunting Veines: Boy, bristle thy Courage vp: for Falsaffe hee is dead, and wee must erne therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, wheresomere hee is, eyther in Heauen, or in Hell.

Hostesse. Nay sure, hee's not in Hell: hee's in Arthurs

Bosome, if euer man went to Arthurs Bosome: a made a finer end, and went away and it had bene any Christome

Child: a parted eu'n iust betweene Twelve and One, eu'n at the turning o' th' Tyde: for after I saw him fumble with the Sheets, and play with Flowers, and smile vpon his fingers end, I knew there was but one way: for his Nose was as sharpe as a Pen, and a Table of Greene fields. How now

Sir John (quoth I?) what man? be a good cheere: so a cry'd out, God, God, God, three or foure times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a should not thinke of God; I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himselfe with any such thoughts yet: so a bad me lay more Clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the Bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone: then I felt to his knees, and so vp-pear'd, and vpward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say he cry'd out of Sack.

Hostesse. I, that a did.

Bard. And of Women.

Hostesse. Nay, that a did not.

Boy. Yes that a did, and said they were Deules incarnate.

Woman. A could neuer abide Carnation, 'twas a Colour he neuer lik'd.

Boy. A said once, the Deule would haue him about Women.

Hostesse. A did in some sort (indeed) handle Women:

but then hee was rumanique, and talk'd of the Whore of Babylon.

Boy. Doe you not remember a saw a Flea tickle vpon

Bardolph's Nose, and a said it was a blacke Soule burning in Hell.

Bard. Well, the fuell is gone that maintain'd that fire:

that's all the Riches I got in his seruice.

Nym. Shall wee shogg? the King will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away. My Loue, giue me thy Lippes:

Looke to my Chattrels, and my Moucables: Let Seneces rule: The world is, Pitch and pay: trust none: for Oathes are Strawes, mens Faiths are Wafer-Cakes, and hold-fast is the onely Dogge: My Ducke, therefore Caueso, bee leeches my Boyes, to sucke, to sucke, the very blood to sucke.

Boy. And that's but vnwholesome food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farwell Hostesse.

Nim. I cannot kisse, that is the humor of it: but adieu.

Pist. Let Hufwiferie appeare: keepe close, I thee command.

Hostesse. Farwell: adieu.

Exeunt

Flourish.

Enter the French King, the Dolphin, the Dukes of Berry and Britaine.

King. Thus comes the English with full power vpon vs, And more then carefully it vs concerns, To answer Royally in our defences. Therefore the Dukes of Berry and of Britaine, Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth, And you Prince Dolphin, with all swift dispatch To lyne and new repayre our Townes of Warre With men of courage, and with meanes defendant: For England his approaches makes as fierce, As Waters to the sucking of a Gulfe. It fits vs then to be as provident, As feare may teach vs, out of late examples Left by the fatall and neglected English, Vpon our fields.

Dolphin. My most redoubted Father, It is most meet we arme vs 'gainst the Foe: For Peace it selfe should not so dull a Kingdome, (Though War nor no knowne Quarrel were in question) But that Defences, Musters, Preparations, Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected, As were a Warre in expectation. Therefore I say, tis meet we all goe forth, To view the sick and feeble parts of France: And let vs doe it with no shew of feare, No, with no more, then if we heard that England Were busied with a Whiston Morris-dance: For my good Liege, there is so idly King'd, Her Scepter so phantastically borne, By a vaine giddie shallow humorous Youth, That feare attends her not.

Const. O peace, Prince Dolphin, You are too much mistaken in this King: Question your Grace the late Embassadors, With what great State he heard their Embassie, How well supply'd with Noble Councillors, How modest in exception; and withall, How terrible in constant resolution: And you shall find, his Vanities fore-spent, Were but the out-side of the Roman Brutus, Couering Discretion with a Coat of Folly: As Gardeners doe with Ordure hide those Roots That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dolphin. Well, tis not so, my Lord High Constable. But though we thinke it so, it is no matter: In cases of defence, tis best to weigh The Enemy more mightie then he seemes, So the proportions of defence are fill'd: Which of a weake and niggardly protection, Doth like a Miser spoyle his Coat, with scanting A little Cloth.

King. Thinke we King Harry strong: And Princes, looke you strongly arme to meet him. The Kindred of him hath bene flesht vpon vs:

And he is bred out of that bloodie straine, That haunted vs in our familiar Pathes: Witnesse our too much memorable shame, When Crestly Battell fatall was stricke, And all our Princes captiu'd, by the hand Of that black Name, Edward, black Prince of Wales: Whiles that his Mountaine Sire, on Mountaine standing Vp in the Ayre, crown'd with the Golden Sunne, Saw his Heroicall Seed, and smil'd to see him Mangle the Worke of Nature, and deface The Patternes, that by God and by French Fathers Had twentie yeeres been made. This is a Stem Of that Victorious Stock: and let vs feare The Nature mightinesse and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Embassadors from Harry King of England, Doe craue admittance to your Maiestie.

King. Weele giue them present audience, Goe, and bring them.

You see this Chafe is hotly followed, friends.

Dolphin. Turne head, and stop pursuit: for coward Dogs Most spend their mouths, whē what they seem to threaten Runs farre before them. Good my Soueraigne Take vp the English short, and let them know Of what a Monarchie you are the Head: Selfe-loue, my Liege, is not so vile a sinne, As selfe-neglecting.

Enter Exeter.

King. From our Brother of England? Exe. From him, and thus he greets your Maiestie: He wills you in the Name of God Almighty, That you deuote your selfe, and lay apart The borrowed Glories, that by gift of Heauen, By Law of Nature, and of Nations, longs To him and to his Heires, namely the Crowne, And all wide-stretched Honors, that pertaine By Custome, and the Ordinance of Times, Vnto the Crowne of France: that you may know 'Tis no sinister, nor no awk-ward Clayme, Picked from the worme-holes of long-vanisht dayes, Nor from the dust of old Obluion rakt, He sends you this most memorable Lyne, In euery Branch truly demonstratiue: Willing you ouer-looke this Pedigree: And when you find him euently deriv'd From his most fam'd, of famous Ancestors, Edward the third; he bids you then resigne Your Crowne and Kingdome, indirectly held From him, the Nature and true Challenger.

King. Or else what followes?

Exe. Bloody constraint: for if you hide the Crowne Euen in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Therefore in fierce Tempest is he comming, In Thunder and in Earth-quake, like a Toune: That if requiring faile, he will compell. And bids you, in the Bowels of the Lord, Deliuer vp the Crowne, and to take mercie On the poore Soules, for whom this hungry Warre Opens his vastie Lawes: and on your head Turning the Widdowes Teares, the Orphans Cryes, The dead-mens Blood, the priuy Maidens Groanes, For Husbands, Fathers, and betrothed Louers, That shall be swallowed in this Controuersie. This is his Clayme, his Threatning, and my Message: Vnlesse the Dolphin be in presence here; To whom expressely I bring greeting to.

King. For

King. For vs, we will consider of this further: To morrow shall you beare our full intent Back to our Brother of England.

Dolph. For the Dolphin, I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorne and defiance, sleight regard, contempt, And any thing that may not mis-become The mightie Sender, doth he prize you at. Thus sayes my King: and if your Fathers Highnesse Doe not, in graunt of all demands at large, Sweeten the bitter Mock you sent his Maiestie; He'll call you to so hot an Answer of it, That Causes and Wombie Vaultages of France Shall chide your Trespas, and returne your Mock In second Accent of his Ordinance.

Dolph. Say: if my Father render faire returne, It is against my will: for I desire Nothing but Odde with England. To that end, as marching to his Youth and Vanitie, I did present him with the Paris-Balls.

Exe. He'll make your Paris Louer shake for it, Were it the Mistresse Court of mightie Europe: And be assur'd, you'll find a difference, As we his Subjects haue in wonder found, Betwene the promise of his greener dayes, And these he masters now: now he weighs Time Euen to the vtmost Graine: that you shall reade In your owne Losses, if he stay in France.

King. To morrow shall you know our mind at full.

Flourish.

Exe. Dispatch vs with all speed, least that our King Come here himselfe to question our delay; For he is footed in this Land already.

King. You shalbe soone dispatcht, with faire conditions. A Night is but small breathe, and little pawle, To answer matters of this consequence. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Flourish. Enter Chorus.

Thus with imagin'd wing our swift Scene flies, In motion of no lesse celeritie then that of Thought. Suppose, that you haue seene The well-appointed King at Douer Peer, Embarke his Royaltie: and his braue Fleet, With silken Streamers, the young Phebus tanning; Play with your Fancies: and in them behold, Vpon the Hempen Tackle, Ship-boyes climbing; Heare the shrill Whistle, which doth order giue To sounds confus'd: behold the threaten Sayles, Borne with ch' inuisible and creeping Wind, Draw the huge Bottomes through the furrowed Sea, Bresting the loftie Surge. O, doe but thinke You stand vpon the Riuaige, and behold A Citie on th' inconstant Billowes dauncing: For so appeares this Fleet Maiesticall, Holding due course to Harflew. Follow, follow: Grapple your minds to sterneage of this Nauie, And leaue your England as dead Mid-night, still, Guarded with Grandfires, Babyes, and old Women, Eyther past, or not arriv'd to pyth and puissance: For who is he, whose Chin is but enricht

With one appearing Hayre, that will not follow These cull'd and choise-drawne Cavaliers to France? Worke, worke your Thoughts, and therein see a Siege: Behold the Ordenance on their Carriages, With fatall mouthes gaping on girded Harflew. Suppose th' Embassador from the French comes back: Tells Harry, That the King doth offer him Katherine his Daughter, and with her to Dowrie, Some petty and vnprofitable Dukedomes. The offer likes not: and the nimble Gunner With Lynstock now the diuellish Cannon touches, Alarum, and Chambers goe off. And downe goes all before them. Still be kind, And eech out our performance with your mind. Exit.

Enter the King, Exeter, Bedford, and Gloucester.

Alarum: Scaling Ladders at Harflew.

King. Once more vnto the Breach, Deare friends, once more; Or close the Wall vp with our English dead: In Peace, there's nothing so becomes a man, As modest stillnesse, and humilitie: But when the blast of Warre blowes in our eares, Then imitate the action of the Tyger: Stiffen the sinewes, commune vp the blood, Disguise faire Nature with hard-fauour'd Rage: Then lend the Eye a terrible aspect: Let it pry through the portage of the Head, Like the Brasse Cannon: let the Brow o'rewhelme it, As fearefully, as doth a galled Rocke O're-hang and iurty his confounded Base, Swill'd with the wild and wastfull Ocean. Now set the Teeth, and stretch the Nosthrill wide, Hold hard the Breath, and bend vp euery Spirit To his full height. On, on, you Noblish English, Whose blood is set from Fathers of Warre-prooffe: Fathers, that like so many Alexanders, Haue in these parts from Morne till Euen fought, And sheath'd their Swords, for lack of argument. Dishonour not your Mothers: now attest, That those whom you call'd Fathers, did beget you. Be Coppy now to me of grosser blood, And teach them how to Warre. And you good Yeomen, Whose Lymes were made in England; shew vs here The mettell of your Pasture: let vs sweare, That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not: For there is none of you so meane and base, That hath not Noble luster in your eyes. I see you stand like Grey-hounds in the slips, Straying vpon the Start. The Game's afoot: Follow your Spirit; and vpon this Charge, Cry, God for Harry, England, and S. George. Alarum, and Chambers goe off.

Enter Nim, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach.

Nim. 'Pray thee Corporall stay, the Knocks are too hot: and for mine owne part, I haue not a Case of Liues: the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plaine-Song of it.

Pist. The plaine-Song is most iust: for humors doe abound: Knocks goe and come: Gods Vassals drop and dye: and Sword and Shield, in bloody Field, doth winne immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an Ale-house in London, I would giue all my fame for a Pot of Ale, and saferie.

Pist. And

Pist. And I: if wishes would preuayle with me, my purpose should not fayle with me; but thither would I high.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as Bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Flucken.

Flu. Vp to the breach, you Dogges; auant you Cullions.

Pist. Be mercifull great Duke to men of Mould: abate thy Rage, abate thy manly Rage; abate thy Rage, great Duke. Good Bawcock bate thy Rage: vse lenitie sweet Chuck.

Nim. These be good humors: your Honor wins bad humors.

Exit.

Boy. As young as I am, I haue obseru'd these three Swashers: I am Boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would serue me, could not be Man to me; for indeed three such Antiques doe not amount to a man: for Bardolph, hee is white-liver'd, and red-fac'd; by the meanes whereof, a faces it out, but fights not: for Pistol, hee hath a killing Tongue, and a quiet Sword; by the meanes whereof, a breakes Words, and keepe whole Weapons: for Nim, hee hath heard, that men of few Words are the best men, and therefore hee scorne to say his Prayers, lest a should be thought a Coward: but his few bad Words are matcht with as few good Deeds; for a neuer broke any mans Head but his owne, and that was against a Post, when he was drunke. They will steale any thing, and call it Purchase. Bardolph stole a Lute-case, bore it twelue Leagues, and sold it for three halpence. Nim and Bardolph are sworne Brothers in filching: and in Callice they stole a fire-shouell. I knew by that peece of Service, the men would carry Coales. They would haue me as familiar with mens Pockets, as their Gloves or their Hand-kerchers: which makes much against my Manhood, if I should take from anothers Pocket, to put into mine; for it is plaine pocketing vp of Wrongs. I must leaue them, and seeke some better Service: their Villany goes against my weake stomacke, and therefore I must cast it vp.

Exit.

Enter Gower.

Gower. Capitaine Fluellen, you must come presently to the Mynes; the Duke of Gloucester would speake with you.

Flu. To the Mynes? Tell you the Duke, it is not so good to come to the Mynes: for looke you, the Mynes is not according to the disciplines of the Warre; the concauities of it is not sufficient: for looke you, th'archuetsarie, you may discusse vnto the Duke, looke you, is digt himsele foure yard vnder the Countermine: by Cheshu, I thinke a will plowe vp all, if there is not better directions.

Gower. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the Order of the Siege is giuen, is altogether directed by an Irish man, a very valiant Gentleman yfaith.

Welch. It is Capitaine Mackmorrice, is it not?

Gower. I thinke it be.

Welch. By Cheshu he is an Asse, as in the World, I will verifie as much in his Beard: he ha's no more directions in the true disciplines of the Warres, looke you, of the Roman disciplines, then is a Puppy-dog.

Enter Mackmorrice, and Capitaine Iamy.

Gower. Here a comes, and the Scots Capitaine, Capitaine Iamy, with him.

Welch. Capitaine Iamy is a marvellous valorous Gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition and knowledge in th'aunchiant Warres, vpon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu he will maintaine his Argument as well as any Militarie man in the World, in the disciplines of the Pristine Warres of the Romans.

Scot. I say gudday, Capitaine Fluellen.

Welch. Godden to your Worship, good Capitaine Iames.

Gower. How now Capitaine Mackmorrice, haue you quit the Mynes? haue the Pioners giuen o're?

Irish. By Chrish Law tish ill done: the Worke tish giue ouer, the Trompet sound the Retreat. By my Hand I sweare, and my fathers Soule, the Worke tish ill done: it tish giue ouer: I would haue blowed vp the Towne, so Chrish saue me law, in an houre. O tish ill done, tish ill done: by my Hand tish ill done.

Welch. Capitaine Mackmorrice, I beseech you now, will you voutsafe me, looke you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the Warre, the Roman Warres, in the way of Argument, looke you, and friendly communication: partly to satisfie my Opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, looke you, of my Mind: as touching the direction of the Militarie discipline, that is the Point.

Scot. It fall be vary gud, gud feith, gud Captens bath, and I fall quit you with gud leue, as I may pick occasion: that fall I mary.

Irish. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish saue me: the day is hot, and the Weather, and the Warres, and the King, and the Dukes: it is no time to discourse, the Towne is beseech'd: and the Trumpet call vs to the breach, and we talke, and be Chrish do nothing, tis shame for vs all: so God sa'ne tis shame to stand still, it is shame by my hand: and there is Throats to be cut, and Workes to be done, and there tish nothing done, so Chrish sa'ne law.

Scot. By the Mes, ere theise eyes of mine take them-selues to slomber, ayle de gud seruice, or Ile ligge tish grund for it: ay, or goe to death: and Ile payt as valorously as I may, that sal I fuerly do, that is the bress and the long: mary, I wad full faine heard some question tween you tway.

Welch. Capitaine Mackmorrice, I thinke, looke you, vnder your correction, there is not many of your Nation.

Irish. Of my Nation? What tish my Nation? tish a Villaine, and a Bastard, and a Knaue, and a Rascall. What tish my Nation? Who talke of my Nation?

Welch. Looke you, if you take the matter otherwife then is meant, Capitaine Mackmorrice, peradventure I shall thinke you doe not vse me with that affabilitie, as in discretion you ought to vse me, looke you, being as good a man as your selfe, both in the disciplines of Warre, and in the deriuation of my Birth, and in other particularities.

Irish. I doe not know you so good a man as my selfe: so Chrish saue me, I will cut off your Head.

Gower. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Scot. A, that's a foule fault.

Gower. The Towne sounds a Parley.

Welch. Capitaine Mackmorrice, when there is more better oportunitie to be required, looke you, I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of Warre: and there is an end.

Exit.

Enter the King and all his Traine before the Gates.

King. How yet resolues the Gouernour of the Towne? This is the latest Parle we will admit:

There.

Therefore to our best mercy giue your selues, Or like to men proude of destruction, Defie vs to our worst: for as I am a Souldier, A Name that in my thoughts becomes me best; If I begin the batt'rie once againe, I will not leaue the halfe-atchieued Harflew, Till in her ashes she lye buried. The Gates of Mercy shall be all shut vp, And the flesh'd Souldier, rough and hard of heart, In libertie of bloody hand, shall raunge With Conscience wide as Hell, mowing like Grassle Your fresh faire Virgins, and your flowing Infants. What is it then to me, if impious Warre, Arrayed in flames like to the Prince of Fiends, Doe with his smyrche complexion all fell feats, Enlyncke to wast and desolation? What ist to me, when you your selues are cause, If your pure Maydens fall into the hand Of hot and forcing Violation? What Reyne can hold licentious Wickednesse, When downe the Hill he holds his fierce Carriere? We may as bootlesse spend our vaine Command Vpon th'engragd Souldiers in their spoyle, As send Precepts to the Leuiathan, to come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harflew, Take pity of your Towne and of your People, Whiles yet my Souldiers are in my Command, Whiles yet the coole and temperate Wind of Grace Ore-blowes the filthy and contagious Clouds Of headly Murther, Spoyle, and Villany. If not: why in a moment looke to see The blind and bloody Souldier, with foule hand Defire the Locks of your shrill-siriking Daughters: Your Fathers taken by the siluer Beards, And their most reuerend Heads dasht to the Walls: Your naked Infants spitted vpon Pykes, Whiles the mad Mothers, with their howles confus'd, Doe breake the Clouds; as did the Wiues of Iewry, At Herods bloody-hunting slaughter-men. What say you? Will you yeeld, and this auoyd? Orguiltie in defence, be thus destroy'd.

Enter Gouernour.

Gower. Our expectation hath this day an end: The Dolphin, whom of Succours we entreated, Returnes vs, that his Powers are yet not ready, To rayse so great a Siege: Therefore great King, We yeeld our Towne and Liues to thy soft Mercy: Enter our Gates, dispose of vs and ours, For we no longer are defensible.

King. Open your Gates: Come Vnckle Exeter, Goe you and enter Harflew; there remaine, And fortifie it strongly gainst the French: Vie mercy to them all for vs, deare Vnckle. The Winter comming on, and Sicknesse growing Vpon our Souldiers, we will retyre to Calis. Tonight in Harflew will we be your Guest, To morrow for the March are we adrest.

Flourish, and enter the Towne.

Enter Katherine and an old Gentlewoman.

Kathe. Alice, tu as este en Angleterre; & tu bien parlas le Language.

Alice. En peu Madame.

Kath. Iete prie m'enseigniez, il faut que ie apprend a parler: Comment appelle vous le main en Anglois?

Alice. Le main il & appelle de Hand.

Kath. De Hand.

Alice. E le doys.

Kath. Le doys, ma foy le oublie, e doys mays, ie me souueneray le doys ie pense qu'ils ont appelle de fingres, ou de fingres.

Alice. Le main de Hand, le doys le fingres, ie pense que ie suis le bon escholier.

Kath. Fay gaignie deux mots d'Anglois vifement, comment appelle vous le ongles?

Alice. Le ongles, les appellons de Nayles.

Kath. De Nayles escoute: dites moy, si ie parle bien: de Hand, de fingres, e de Nayles.

Alice. C'est bien dict Madame, il & fort bon Anglois.

Kath. Dites moy l'Anglois pour le bras.

Alice. De Arme, Madame.

Kath. E de coudse.

Alice. D'Elbow.

Kath. D'Elbow: Le men fay le repeticio de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris des a present.

Alice. Il & trop difficile Madame, comme ie pense.

Kath. Excuse moy Alice escoute, d'Hand, de fingre, de Nayles, d'Arme, de Bilbow.

Alice. D'Elbow, Madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu, ie men oublie d'Elbow, comment appelle vous le col.

Alice. De Nick, Madame.

Kath. De Nick, e le menton.

Alice. De Chin.

Kath. De Sin: le col de Nick, le menton de Sin.

Alice. Ouy. Sans vostre honneur en verite vous prononciez les mots ausi droit, que le Narsis d'Angleterre.

Kath. Ie ne doute point d'apprendre par de grace de Dieu, & en peu de temps.

Alice. N'auoz vous y desia oublie ce que ie vous a ensegne.

Kath. Noms ie recitera a vous promptement, d'Hand, de fingre, de Nayles.

Alice. De Nayles, Madame.

Kath. De Nayles, de Arme, de Elbow.

Alice. Sans vostre honneur d'Elbow.

Kath. Ainsi de ie d'Elbow, de Nick, & de Sin: comment appelle vous les pied & de roba.

Alice. Le Foot Madame, & le Count.

Kath. Le Foot, & le Count: O Seigneur Dieu, il sont le mots de son mauvais corruptible grosse & impudique, & non pour le Dames de Honneur d'vser: Ie ne vouldray prononcer ce mots deuant le Seigneurs de France, pour toute le monde, so le Foot & le Count, neant mays, Ie recitera un autrefoys ma lecon ensemble, d'Hand, de fingre, de Nayles, d'Arme, d'Elbow, de Nick, de Sin, de Foot, le Count.

Alice. Excellent, Madame.

Kath. C'est assez pour vne foyes, alons nous a diner.

Exit.

Enter the King of France, the Dolphin, the Constable of France, and others.

King. 'Tis certaine he hath past the Riuer Some.

Const. And if he be not fought withall, my Lord, Let vs not liue in France: let vs quit all,

And giue our Vineyards to a barbarous People.

Dolph. O Dieu viuant: Shall a few Sprays of vs,

The emptying of our Fathers Luxurie,

Our Syens, put in wilde and sauage Stock,

Spirt vp so suddenly into the Clouds,

And ouer-looke their Grafters?

Brit. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards:

Mort du marie, if they march along

Vnfought withall, but I will sell my Dukedome,

To

To buy a slobbry and a durtie Farme
In that nooke-shotten Ile of Albion.

Const. Dieu de Battailles, where haue they this mettell?
Is not their Clymate foggy, raw, and dull?
On whom, as in despite, the Sunne looks pale,
Killing their Fruit with frownes. Can foddren Water,
A Drench for sur-reyn'd Iades, their Barly broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with Wine,
Seeme frostie? O, for honor of our Land,
Let vs not hang like roping Isyckles
Vpon our Houses Thatch, whiles a more frostie People
Sweat drops of gallant Youth in our rich fields:
Poore we call them, in their Native Lords.

Dolphin. By Faith and Honor,
Our Madames mock at vs, and plainly say,
Our Mettell is bred out, and they will giue
Their bodies to the Lust of English Youth,
To new-store France with Bastard Warriors.

Brit. They bid vs to the English Dancing-Schooles,
And teach Laisles' high, and swift Carrants,
Saying, our Grace is onely in our Heeles,
And that we are most loftie Run-awayes.

King. Where is Montjoy the Herald? speed him hence,
Let him greet England with our sharpe defiance.
Vp Princes, and with spirit of Honor edged,
More sharper then your Swords, high to the field:
Charles Delabreth, High Constable of France,
You Dukes of Orleanse, Burbon, and of Berry,
Alanfon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgonie,
Laques Chattillion, Rambures, Vandemont,
Beumont, Grand Pree, Roussi, and Faulconbridge,
Loys, Leffrale, Bouciquall, and Charaloyes,
High Dukes, great Princes, Barons, Lords, and Kings;
For your great Seats, now quit you of great shames:
Barre Harry England, that sweepes through our Land
With Penons painted in the blood of Harflew:
Rush on his Hoast, as doth the melted Snow
Vpon the Valleys, whose low Vassall Seat,
The Alpes doth spit, and void his rhenne vpon.
Goe downe vpon him, you haue Power enough,
And in a Captiue Chariot, into Roan
Bring him our Prisoner.

Const. This becomes the Great.
Sorry am I his numbers are so few,
His Souldiers sick, and famisht in their March:
For I am sure, when he shall see our Army,
Hee'll drop his heart into the sinck of feare,
And for achievement, offer vs his Ransome.

King. Therefore Lord Constable, hast on Montjoy,
And let him say to England, that we send,
To know what willing Ransome he will giue.
Prince Dolphin, you shall stay with vs in Roan.

Dolph. Not so, I doe beseech your Maiestie.

King. Be patient, for you shall remaine with vs.
Now forth Lord Constable, and Princes all,
And quickly bring vs word of Englands fall. Exeunt.

Enter Captaines, English and Welch, Gower and Fluellen.

Gower. How now Captaine Fluellen, come you from the Bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent Seruices committed at the Bridge.

Gower. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Ag-

memmon, and a man that I loue and honour with my soule, and my heart, and my durie, and my liue, and my liuing, and my vttermost power. He is not, God be prayed and blessed, any hurt in the World, but keeps the Bridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an au-conscience hee is as valiant a man as Marke Antony, and hee is a man of no estimation in the World, but I did see him doe as gallant seruice.

Gower. What doe you call him?

Flu. Hee is call'd aunchient Pistoll.

Gower. I know him not.

Enter Pistoll.

Flu. Here is the man.

Pist. Captaine, I thee beseech to doe me fauours: the Duke of Exeter doth loue thee well.

Flu. I, I prayse God, and I haue merited some loue at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a Souldier firme and sound of heart, and of buxome valour, hath by cruell Fate, and giddy Fortunes furious fickle Wheele, that Goddesse blind, that stands vpon the rolling restlesse Stone.

Flu. By your patience, aunchient Pistoll: Fortune is painted blinde, with a Muffler afore his eyes, to signifie to you, that Fortune is blinde; and shee is painted also with a Wheele, to signifie to you, which is the Morall of it, that shee is turning and inconstant, and mutabillitie, and variation: and her foot, looke you, is fixed vpon a Sphericall Stone, which rowles, and rowles, and rowles in good truth, the Poet makes a most excellent description on of it: Fortune is an excellent Morall.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolphs foe, and frownes on him:
for he hath stolne a Pax, and hanged must a be: a damned death: let Gallowes gape for Dogge, let Man goe free, and let not Hempe his Wind-pipe suffocate: but Exeter hath giuen the doome of death, for Pax of little price.
Therefore goe speake, the Duke will heare thy voyce;
and let not Bardolphs vitall thred bee cut with edge of Penny-Cord, and vile reproach. Speake Captaine for his Life, and I will thee requite.

Flu. Aunchient Pistoll, I doe partly vnderstand your meaning.

Pist. Why then reioyce therefore.

Flu. Certainly Aunchient, it is not a thing to reioyce at: for if, looke you, he were my Brother, I would desire the Duke to vse his good pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be vsed.

Pist. Dye, and be dam'd, and Figs for thy friendship.

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The Figge of Spaine. Exit.

Flu. Very good.

Gower. Why, this is an arrant counterfeite Rascall, I remember him now: a Bawd, a Cut-purse.

Flu. Ile assure you, a vtter'd as prauce words at the Bridge, as you shall see in a Summers day: but it is very well: what he ha's spoke to me, that is well I warrant you, when time is serue.

Gower. Why 'tis a Gulla Foole, a Rogue, that now and then goes to the Warres, to grace himselfe at his returne into London, vnder the forme of a Souldier: and such fellowes are perfit in the Great Commanders Names, and they will learne you by rote where Seruices were done:
at such and such a Sconce, at such a Breach, at such a Conuoy: who came off brauely, who was shot, who disgrac'd, what termes the Enemy stood on: and this they conne perfectly in the phraze of Warre; which they tricke vp with new-tuned Oathes: and what a Beard of the Ge-neralls Cut, and a horride Sute of the Campe, will doe among foming Bottles, and Ale-washt Wits, is wonder-full to be thought on: but you must learne to know such standers of the age, or else you may be maruellously mistooke.

Flu. I tell you what, Captaine Gower: I doe perceiue hee is not the man that hee would gladly make shew to the World hee is: if I finde a hole in his Coat, I will tell him my minde: hearken you, the King is comming, and I must speake with him from the Bridge.

Drum and Colours. Enter the King and his poore Souldiers.

Flu. God plesse your Maiestie.

King. How now Fluellen, carn't thou from the Bridge?

Flu. I, so please your Maiestie: The Duke of Exeter ha's very gallantly maintain'd the Bridge: the French is gone off, looke you, and there is gallant and most prauce passages: marry, th'athuerlarie was haue possession of the Bridge, but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is Master of the Bridge: I can tell your Maiestie, the Duke is a prauce man.

King. What men haue you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th'athuerlarie hath bene very great, reasonable great: marry for my part, I thinke the Duke hath lost neuer a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a Church, one Bardolph, if your Maie-stie know the man: his face is all bubukles and wheelkes, and knobs, and flames a fire, and his lippes blowes at his nose, and it is like a coale of fire, sometimes plew, and sometimes red, but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

King. Wee would haue all such offenders so cut off:
and we giue expresse charge, that in our Marches through the Countrey, there be nothing compell'd from the Villages; nothing taken, but pay'd for: none of the French vprayed or abused in disdainefull Language; for when Leuitie and Crueltie play for a Kingdome, the gentler Gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Montjoy. You know me by my habit.

King. Well then, I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Montjoy. My Masters mind.

King. Vnfold it.

Montjoy. Thus sayes my King: Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seem'd dead, we did but sleepe:
Advantage is a better Souldier then rashnesse. Tell him, wee could haue rebuk'd him at Harflew, but that wee thought not good to bruise an iniurie, till it were full ripe. Now wee speake vpon our Q, and our voyce is imperiall: England shall repent his folly, see his weaknesse, and admire our sufferance. Bid him therefore consider of his ransome, which must proportion the losses we haue borne, the subiects we haue lost, the disgrace we haue digested; which in weight to re-answer, his petti-nesse would bow vnder. For our losses, his Exchequer is too poore; for th'effusion of our bloud, the Muffler of his Kingdome too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his owne person kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthlesse satisfaction. To this adde defiance: and tell him for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounc'd: So farre my King and Masters so much my Office.

King. What is thy name? I know thy qualitie.

Mount. Montjoy.

King. Thou doo'st thy Office fairely. Turne thee back,
And tell thy King, I doe not seeke him now,
But could be willing to march on to Callice,
Without impeachment: for to say the sooth,
Though 'tis no wisdom to confesse so much
Vnto an enemy of Craft and Vantage,
My people are with sicknesse much enfeebled,
My numbers lessen'd: and those few I haue,
Almost no better then so many French;
Who when they were in health, I tell thee Herald,
I thought, vpon one payre of English Legges
Did march three Frenchmen. Yet forgiue me God,
That I doe bragge thus; this your ayre of France
Hath blowne that vice in me. I must repent:
Goe therefore tell thy Master, heere I am;
My Ransome, is this frayle and worthlesse Trunke;
My Army, but a weak and sickly Guard:
Yet God before, tell him we will come on,
Though France himselfe, and such another Neighbor
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour Montjoy.
Goe bid thy Master well aduise himselfe.
If we may passe, we will: if we be hindred,
We shall your tawnie ground with your red blood
Discolour: and so Montjoy, fare you well.
The summe of all our Answer is but this:
We would not seeke a Battaille as we are,
Nor as we are, we say we will not shun it:
So tell your Master.

Mount. I shall deliuer so: Thanks to your High-nesse.

Clouc. I hope they will not come vpon vs now.

King. We are in Gods hand, Brother, not in theirs:
March to the Bridge, it now drawes toward night,
Beyond the Riuer wee'll encampe our selues,
And on to morrow bid them march away. Exeunt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Ramburs, Orleanse, Dolphin, with others.

Const. Tut, I haue the best Armour of the World: would it were day.

Orleanse. You haue an excellent Armour: but let my Horse haue his due.

Const. It is the best Horse of Europe.

Orleanse. Will it neuer be Morning?

Dolph. My Lord of Orleanse, and my Lord High Constable, you talke of Horse and Armour?
Orleanse. You are as well prouided of both, as any Prince in the World.

Dolph. What a long Night is this? I will not change my Horse with any that treads but on foure postures:
ch'ha: he bounds from the Earth, as if his entrayles were hayres: le Cheual volante, the Pegasus, ches les narines de fer. When I bestryde him, I soare, I am a Hawke: he trots the ayre: the Earth sings, when he touches it: the basest borne of his hoofe, is more Muscicall then the Pipe of Hermes.

Orleanse. Hee's of the colour of the Nutmeg.

Dolph. And of the heat of the Ginger. It is a Beast for Perseus: hee is pure Ayre and Fire; and the dull Elements of Earth and Water neuer appeare in him, but only in patient stillnesse while his Rider mounts him: hee is indeede a Horse, and all other Iades you may call Beasts.

Const. In-

Const. Indeed my Lord, it is a most absolute and excellent Horse.

Dolph. It is the Prince of Palfrayes, his Neigh is like the bidding of a Monarch, and his countenance enforces Homage.

Orleanse. No more Cousin.

Dolph. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot from the rising of the Lark to the lodging of the Lambe, varie deferred prayse on my Palfray: it is a Theame as fluent as the Sea: Turne the Sands into eloquent tongues, and my Horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subiect for a Soueraigne to reason on, and for a Soueraignes Soueraigne to ride on: And for the World, familiar to vs, and vnknowne, to lay apart their particular Functions, and wonder at him, I once writ a Sonnet in his prayse, and began thus, Wonder of Nature.

Orleanse. I haue heard a Sonnet begin so to ones Mistresse.

Dolph. Then did they imitate that which I compos'd to my Courser, for my Horse is my Mistresse.

Orleanse. Your Mistresse beares well.

Dolph. Me well, which is the prescript prayse and perfection of a good and particular Mistresse.

Const. Nay, for me thought yesterday your Mistresse shrewdly shooke your back.

Dolph. So perhaps did yours.

Const. Mine was not bridled.

Dolph. O then belike she was old and gentle, and you rode like a Kerne of Ireland, your French Horse off, and in your strait Strossers.

Const. You haue good iudgement in Horseman-ship.

Dolph. Be warn'd by me then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foule Boggs: I had rather haue my Horse to my Mistresse.

Const. I had as liue haue my Mistresse a Iade.

Dolph. I tell thee Constable, my Mistresse weares his owne hayre.

Const. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a Sow to my Mistresse.

Dolph. Le chien est retourne a son propre vomissement est la lenye lauee au boubrier: thou mak'st vse of any thing.

Const. Yet doe I not vse my Horse for my Mistresse, or any such Prouerbe, so little kin to the purpose.

Ramb. My Lord Constable, the Armour that I saw in your Tent to night, are those Starres or Sunnes vpon it?

Const. Starres my Lord.

Dolph. Some of them will fall to morrow, I hope.

Const. And yet my Sky shall not want.

Dolph. That may be, for you beare a many superfluously, and 'twere more honor some were away.

Const. Euen as your Horse beares your prayses, who would trot as well, were some of your bragges dismounted.

Dolph. Would I were able to loade him with his desert. Will it neuer be day? I will trot to morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English Faces.

Const. I will not say so, for feare I should be fac't out of my way: but I would it were morning, for I would faine be about the cares of the English.

Ramb. Who will goe to Hazard with me for twentie Prisoners?

Const. You must first goe your selfe to hazard, ere you haue them.

Dolph. 'Tis Mid-night, He goe arme my selfe. Exit.
Orleanse. The Dolphin longs for morning.

Ramb. He longs to cate the English.

Const. I thinke he will cate all he kills.

Orleanse. By the white Hand of my Lady, hee's a gallant Prince.

Const. Swear by her Foot, that she may tread out the Oath.

Orleanse. He is simply the most active Gentleman of France.

Const. Doing is actiuitie, and he will still be doing.

Orleanse. He neuer did harme, that I heard of.

Const. Nor will doe none to morrow: hee will keepe that good name still.

Orleanse. I know him to be valiant.

Const. I was told that, by one that knowes him better then you.

Orleanse. What's hee?

Const. Marry hee told me so him selfe, and hee sayd hee car'd not who knew it.

Orleanse. Hee needes not, it is no hidden vertue in him.

Const. By my faith Sir, but it is: neuer any body saw it, but his Lacquey: 'tis a hooded valour, and when it appeares, it will bate.

Orleanse. Ill will neuer sayd well.

Const. I will cap that Prouerbe with, There is flatterie in friendship.

Orleanse. And I will take vp that with, Giue the Deuill his due.

Const. Well plac't: there stands your friend for the Deuill: haue at the very eye of that Prouerbe with, A Pox of the Deuill.

Orleanse. You are the better at Prouerbs, by how much a Fooles Bolt is soone shot.

Const. You haue shot ouer.

Orleanse. 'Tis not the first time you were ouer-sho-

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Lord high Constable, the English lye within fiftene hundred paces of your Tents.

Const. Who hath measur'd the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpree.

Const. A valiant and most expert Gentleman. Would it were day? Alas poore Harry of England: hee longs not for the Dawning, as wee doe.

Orleanse. What a wretched and peeuisish fellow is this King of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers so farre out of his knowledge.

Const. If the English had any apprehension, they would runne away.

Orleanse. That they lack: for if their heads had any intellectuall Armour, they could neuer weare such heauie Head-pieces.

Ramb. That Island of England breeds very valiant Creatures; their Mastiffes are of vnmatchable courage.

Orleanse. Foolish Curres, that runne winking into the mouth of a Russian Beare, and haue their heads crush'd like rotten Apples: you may as well say, that's a valiant Flea, that dare cate his breakfast on the Lippe of a Lyon.

Const. Iust, iust: and the men doe sympathize with the Mastiffes, in robustious and rough comming on, leauing their Wits with their Wiues: and then giue them great Meales of Beefe, and Iron and Steele; they will cate like Wolues, and fight like Deuils.

Orleanse. I.

Orleanse. I, but these English are shrowdly out of Beefe.

Const. Then shall we finde to morrow, they haue only stomackes to cate, and none to fight. Now is it time to arme: come, shall we about it?

Orleanse. It is now two a Clock: but let me see, by ten Wee shall haue each a hundred English men. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Chorus.

Now entertaine coniecture of a time,
When creeping Murmure and the poring Darke
Fills the wide Vessell of the Vniuerse.
From Camp to Camp, through the foule Womb of Night
The Humme of cyther Army fillis sounds;
That the fixt Centinels almost receiue
The secret Whispers of each others Watch.
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each Battaille sees the others vंबर'd face.
Steed threatens Steed, in high and boastfull Neighs
Piercing the Nights dull Eare: and from the Tents,
The Armourers accomplishing the Knights,
With busie Hammers closing Riuetts vp,
Giue dreadfull note of preparation.
The Countrey Cocks doe crow, the Clocks doe towle:
And the third howre of drowfie Morning nam'd,
Prowd of their Numbers, and secure in Soule,
The confident and ouer-lustie French,
Doe the low-rated English play at Dice;
And chide the creple-tardy-gated Night,
Who like a foule and ougly Witch doth limpe
So rediously away. The poore condemned English,
Like Sacrifices, by their watchfull Fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminat
The Mornings danger: and their gesture sad,
Inuesting launke-leane Cheekes, and Warre-worne Coats,
Presented them vnto the gazing Moone
So many horrid Ghosts. O now, who will behold
The Royall Captaine of this ruin'd Band
Walking from Watch to Watch, from Tent to Tent;
Let him cry, Prayse and Glory on his head:
For forth he goes, and visits all his Host,
Bids them good morrow with a modest Smyle,
And calls them Brothers, Friends, and Countrey men.
Vpon his Royall Face there is no note,
How dread an Army hath enrounded him;
Not doth he dedicate one iot of Colour
Vnto the wearie and all-watched Night:
But freshly lookes, and ouer-beares Attaint,
With chearefull semblance, and sweet Maieitie:
That euer Wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his Lookes.
A Largeesse vniuerfall, like the Sunne,
His liberall Eye doth giue to euery one,
Thauing cold feare, that meane and gentle all
Behold, as may vnworthinesse define.
A little touch of Harry in the Night,
And so our Scene must to the Battaille flye:
Where, O for pity, we shall much disgrace,
With foure or five most vile and ragged foyles,
(Right ill dispos'd, in brawle ridiculous)

The Name of Agincourt: Yet sit and see,
Minding true things, by what their Mock'ries bee.
Exit.

Enter the King, Bedford, and Gloucester.

King. Gloster, 'tis true that we are in great danger,
The greater therefore should our Courage be.
God morrow Brother Bedford: God Almighty,
There is some foule of goodnesse in things euill,
Would men obseruingly distill it out.
For our bad Neighbour makes vs early stirrers,
Which is both healthfull, and good husbandry.
Besides, they are our outward Consciences,
And Preachers to vs all; admonishing,
That we should dresse vs fairly for our end:
Thus may we gather Honey from the Weed,
And make a Morall of the Diuell himselfe.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft Pillow for that good white Head,
Were better then a churlish turse of France.

Erping. Not so my Liege, this Lodging likes me better,
Since I may say, now lye I like a King.

King. 'Tis good for men to loue their present paines;
Vpon example, so the Spirit is eased:

And when the Mind is quickned, out of doubt
The Organs, though defunct and dead before,
Breake vp their drowfie Graue, and newly moue
With calted slough, and fresh legeritie.
Lend me thy Cloake Sir Thomas: Brothers both,
Commend me to the Princes in our Campe;
Doe my good morrow to them, and anon
Desire them all to my Pauillion.

Gloster. We shall, my Liege.

Erping. Shall I attend your Grace?

King. No, my good Knight:

Goe with my Brothers to my Lords of England:
I and my Bosome must debate a while,
And then I would no other company.

Erping. The Lord in Heauen bleesse thee, Noble
Harry. Exeunt.

King. God a mercy old Heart, thou speak'st cheare-fully. Enter Pistol.

Pist. Che vous la?

King. A friend.

Pist. Discusse vnto me, art thou Officer, or art thou base, common, and popular?

King. I am a Gentleman of a Company.

Pist. Trayl'st thou the puiasant Pyke?

King. Euen so: what are you?

Pist. As good a Gentleman as the Emperor.

King. Then you are a better then the King.

Pist. The King's a Bawcock, and a Heart of Gold, a Lad of Life, an Impe of Fame, of Parents good, of Fift most valiant: I kisse his durty shooe, and from heart-string I loue the louely Bully. What is thy Name?

King. Harry le Roy.

Pist. Le Roy? a Cornish Name: art thou of Cornish Crew?

King. No, I am a Welchman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

King. Yes.

Pist. Tell him Ile knock his Lecke about his Pate vpon
S. Damies day.

King. Doe not you weare your Dagger in your Cappe that day, least he knock that about yours.

i 2

Pist. Art

Pist. Art thou his friend?

King. And his Kinsman too.

Pist. The Figo for thee then.

King. I thanke you: God be with you.

Pist. My name is Pistol call'd.

King. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Exit.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Captaine Fluellen.

Flu. 'So, in the Name of Iesu Christ, speake fewer: it is the greatest admiration in the vniuersall World, when the true and aunchient Prerogatives and Lawes of the Warres is not kept: if you would take the paines but to examine the Warres of Pompey the Great, you shall finde, I warrant you, that there is no riddle, riddle nor pibble bable in Pompeys Campe: I warrant you, you shall finde the Ceremonies of the Warre, and the Cares of it, and the Formes of it, and the Sobrietie of it, and the Modestie of it, to be otherwise.

Gower. Why the Enemie is lowd, you heare him all Night.

Flu. If the Enemie is an Assle and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe; is it meet, thinke you, that wee should also, looke you, be an Assle and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe, in your owne conscience now?

Gower. I will speake lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will.

King. Though it appeare a little out of fashion, There is much care and valour in this Welchman.

Enter three Souldiers, Iohn Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother Iohn Bates, is not that the Morning which breakes yonder?

Bates. I thinke it be: but wee haue no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Williams. Wee see yonder the beginning of the day, but I thinke wee shall neuer see the end of it. Who goes there?

King. A Friend.

Williams. Vnder what Captaine serue you?

King. Vnder Sir Iohn Erpingham.

Williams. A good old Commander, and a most kinde Gentleman: I pray you, what thinke he of our estate?

King. Even as men wrackt vpon a Sand, that looke to be waist off the next Tyde.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the King?

King. No: nor it is not meet he should: for though I speake it to you, I thinke the King is but a man, as I am: the Violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the Element shewes to him, as it doth to me; all his Sences haue but humane Conditions: his Ceremonies layd by, in his Nakednesse he appeares but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted then ours, yet when they stoupe, they stoupe with the like wing: therefore, when he sees reason of feares, as we doe; his feares, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: yet in reason, no man should possesse him with any appearance of feare; least hee, by shewing it, should dishearten his Army.

Bates. He may shew what outward courage he will: but I beleue, as cold a Night as 'tis, hee could wish himselfe in Thames vp to the Neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

King. By my troth, I will speake my conscience of the King: I thinke hee would not wish himselfe any where, but where hee is.

Bates. Then I would he were here alone; so should hee be sure to be ransomed, and a many poore mens liues saved.

King. I dare say, you loue him not so ill, to wish him here alone: howloeu' you speake this to feele other mens minds, me thinke I could not dye any where so contented, as in the Kings company; his Cause being iust, and his Quarrell honorable.

Williams. That's more then we know.

Bates. I, for more then wee should seeke after; for wee know enough, if wee know wee are the Kings Subiects, if his Cause be wrong, our obedience to the King wipes the Cryme of it out of vs.

Williams. But if the Cause be not good, the King himselfe hath a heauie Reckoning to make, when all those Legges, and Armes, and Heads, chopt off in a Battaille, shall ioine together at the latter day, and cry all, Wee dyed at such a place, some swearing, some crying for a Surgeon; some vpon their Wives, left poore behind them; some vpon the Debts they owe, some vpon their Children rawly left: I am asfeard, there are few dye well, that dye in a Battaille: for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when Blood is their argument? Now, if these men doe not dye well, it will be a black matter for the King, that led them to it; who to disobey, were against all proportion of subiection.

King. So, if a Sonne that is by his Father sent about Merchandize, doe sinfully miscarry vpon the Seas, the imputation of his wickednesse, by your rule, should be imposed vpon his Father that sent him: or if a Seruant, vnder his Masters command, transporting a summe of Monney, be assailed by Robbers, and dye in many irreconcilable Iniquities; you may call the businesse of the Master the author of the Seruants damnation: but this is not so. The King is not bound to answer the particular endings of his Souldiers, the Father of his Sonne, nor the Master of his Seruant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their seruices. Besides, there is no King, but his Cause neuer so spotlesse, if it come to the arbitrement of Swords, can trye it out with all vnspotted Souldiers: some (peradventure) haue on them the guilt of premeditated and contriued Murther; some, of beguiling Virgins with the broken Scales of Perurie; some, making the Warres their Sulwarke, that haue before gored the gentle Bosome of Peace with Pillage and Robberie. Now, if these men haue defeated the Law, and outrunne Nature punishment; though they can outstrip men, they haue no wings to flye from God. Warre is his Beadle, Warre is his Vengeance: so that here men are punished, for before breach of the Kings Lawes, in now the Kings Quarrell: where they feared the death, they haue borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish. Then if they dye vnprovided, no more is the King guiltie of their damnation, then hee was before guiltie of those Impieties, for the which they are now visited. Every Subiects Dutie is the Kings, but euery Subiects Soule is his owne. Therefore should euery Souldier in the Warres doe as euery sicke man in his Bed, wash euery Moth out of his Conscience: and dying so, Death is to him aduantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gayned: and in him that escapes, it were not sinne to thinke, that making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day, to see his Greatnesse, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. Tis

Will. 'Tis certaine, euery man that dyes ill, the ill vpon his owne head, the King is not to answer it.

Bates. I doe not desire hee should answer for me, and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

King. I my selfe heard the King say he would not be ransomed.

Will. I, hee said so, to make vs fight chearefully: but when our throats are cut, hee may be ransomed, and wee ne're the wiser.

King. If I liue to see it, I will neuer trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then: that's a perillous shot out of an Elder Gunne, that a poore and a priuate displeasure can doe against a Monarch: you may as well goe about to turne the Sunne to yee, with fanning in his face with a Peacocks feather: You'll neuer trust his word after; come, 'tis a foolish saying.

King. Your reproofe is something too round, I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it bee a Quarrell betwene vs, if you liue.

King. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee againe?

King. Giue me any Gage of thine, and I will weare it in my Bonnet: Then if euer thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my Quarrell.

Will. Heere's my Glouc: Giue mee another of thine.

King. There.

Will. This will I also weare in my Cap: if euer thou come to me, and say, after to morrow, This is my Glouc, by this Hand I will take thee a box on the eare.

King. If euer I liue to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hang'd.

King. Well, I will doe it, though I take thee in the Kings companie.

Will. Keepe thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends you English fooles, be friends, wee haue French Quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

Exit Souldiers.

King. Indeede the French may lay twentie French Crownes to one, they will beat vs, for they beare them on their shoulders: but it is no English Treason to cut French Crownes, and to morrow the King himselfe will be a Clipper.

Vpon the King, let vs our Liues, our Soules, Our Debts, our carefull Wiues, Our Children, and our Sinnes, lay on the King: We must beare all.

O hard Condition, Twin-borne with Greatnesse, Subiect to the breath of euery foole, whose sence No more can feelee, but his owne wringing. What infinite hearts-ease must Kings neglect, That priuate men enjoy?

And what haue Kings, that Priuates haue not too, Saue Ceremonie, saue generall Ceremonie?

And what are thou, thou Idoll Ceremonie?

What kind of God art thou? that suffer'st more Of mortall griefes, then doe thy worshippers.

What are thy Rentes? what are thy Commings in?

O Ceremonie, shew me but thy worth.

What? is thy Soule of Odoration?

Art thou ought else but Place, Degree, and Forme, Creating awe and feare in other men?

Wherein thou art lesse happy, being fear'd, Then they in fearing.

What drink'st thou off, in stead of Homage sweete, But poyson'd flatterie? O, be sick, great Greatnesse, And bid thy Ceremonie giue thee cure. Thinke thou the fierie Feuer will goe out With Titles blowne from Adulation? Will it giue place to flexure and low bending? Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggers knee, Command the health of it? No, thou proud Dreame, That play'st so subtilly with a Kings Repose. I am a King that find thee: and I know, 'Tis not the Balme, the Scepter, and the Ball, The Sword, the Mace, the Crowne Imperiall, The enter-tissued Robe of Gold and Pearle, The farst Title running fore the King, The Throne he sits on: nor the Tyde of Pompe, That beates vpon the high thore of this World: No, nor all these, thrice-gorgeous Ceremonie; Not all these, lay'd in bed Maiestically, Can sleepe so soundly, as the wretched Slaue: Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind, Gets him to rest, cram'd with distressefull bread, Neuer sees horrid Night, the Child of Hell: But like a Lacquey, from the Rise to Set, Sweates in the eye of Phebus; and all Night Sleepes in Elizium: next day after dawne, Doth rise and helpe Hesperus to his Horse, And followes so the euer-running yeere With profitable labour to his Graue: And but for Ceremonie, such a Wretch, Winding vp Dayes with toyle, and Nights with sleepe, Had the fore-hand and vantage of a King. The Slaue, a Member of the Countreyes peace, Enioyes it; but in grosse braine little wots, What watch the King keepe, to maintaine the peace; Whole howres, the Peasant best aduantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My Lord, your Nobles jealous of your absence, Seeke through your Campe to find you.

King. Good old Knight, collect them all together At my Tent: He be before thee.

Erp. I shall doo't, my Lord.

Exit.

King. O God of Battailles, Steele my Souldiers hearts, Possesse them not with feare: Take from them now The sence of reckning of th'opposed numbers: Pluck their hearts from them. Not to day, O Lord, O not to day, thinke not vpon the fault My Father made, in compassing the Crowne. I Richards body haue interred new, And on it haue bestowed more contrite teares, Then from it issued forced drops of blood. Five hundred poore I haue in yeerely pay, Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold vp Toward Heauen, to pardon blood: And I haue built two Chuntries, Where the sad and solemne Priests sing still For Richards Soule. More will I doe: Though all that I can doe, is nothing worth; Since that my Penitence comes after all, Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Glouc. My Liege.

King. My Brother Gloucesters voyce? I:

I know thy errand, I will goe with thee:

The day, my friend, and all things stay for me.

Exeunt.

i 3

Enter

Enter the Dolphin, Orleans, Ramburs, and Beaumont.

Orleans. The Sunne doth gild our Armour vp, my Lords.

Dolph. Monte Chenal: My Horse, Verlot Lacquay: Ha.

Orleans. Oh braue Spirit,

Dolph. Via les ewes & terre.

Orleans. Rien puis le air & fou.

Dolph. Cein, Cousin Orleans. Enter Constable.

Now my Lord Constable?

Const. Hearke how our Steedes, for present Seruice neigh.

Dolph. Mount them, and make incision in their Hides, That their hot blood may spin in English eyes, And doubt them with superfluous courage: ha.

Ram. What, wil you haue them weep our Horses blood? How shall we then behold their naturall teares?

Enter Messenger.

Messenger. The English are embattail'd, you French Peeres.

Const. To Horse you gallant Princes, straight to Horse. Doe but behold yond poore and starued Band, And your faire shew shall suck away their Soules, Leauing them but the shales and huskes of men. There is not worke enough for all our hands, Scarce blood enough in all their sickly Veines, To giue each naked Curtlex a stayne.

That our French Gallants shall to day draw our, And sheath for lack of sport. Let vs but blow on them, The vapour of our Valour will o're-turne them.

'Tis positue against all exceptions, Lords, That our superfluous Lacquies, and our Pefants, Who in ynnecessarie action swarme About our Squares of Battaille, were enow To purge this field of such a hilding Foe; Though we vpon this Mountaines Basis by, Tooke stand for idle speculation:

But that our Honours must not. What's to say? A very little little let vs doe,

And all is done: then let the Trumpets sound The Tucket Sonuance, and the Note to mount: For our approach shall so much dare the field, That England shall couch downe in feare, and yeeld.

Enter Grandpre.

Grandpre. Why do you stay so long, my Lords of France? Yond Iland Carrions, desperate of their bones, Ill-fauoredly become the Morning field:

Their ragged Curtaines poorely are let loose, And our Ayre shakes them passing scornefully. Bigge Mars seemes banquet in their begger'd Hoast, And faintly through a rustie Beuer peepes.

The Horsemen sit like fixed Candlesticks, With Torch-staues in their hand: and their poore Iades Lob downe their heads, dropping the hides and hips:

The gumme downe roping from their pale-dead eyes, And in their pale dull mouthes the lymold Bitt Lyes foule with chaw'd-grasse, still and motionlesse.

And their executors, the knauish Crows, Flye o're them all, impatient for their howre.

Description cannot sute it selfe in words, To demonstrate the Life of such a Battaille,

In life so liuellesse, as it shewes it selfe.

Const. They haue said their prayers, And they stay for death.

Dolph. Shall we goe fend them Dinners, and fresh Sutes,

And giue their fasting Horses Prouender, And after fight with them?

Const. I stay but for my Guard: on To the field, I will the Banner from a Trumpet take, And vse it for my haste. Come, come away, The Sunne is high, and we out-weare the day. Exeunt.

Enter Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham with all his Hoast: Salisbury, and Westmerland.

Glouc. Where is the King?

Bedf. The King himselfe is rode to view their Battaille.

West. Of fighting men they haue full threescore thousand.

Exe. There's five to one, besides they all are fresh.

Salib. Gods Arme strike with vs: 'tis a fearefull odds. God buy you Princes all; Ile to my Charge:

If we no more meet, till we meet in Heauen; Then ioyfully, my Noble Lord of Bedford,

My deare Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord Exeter, And my kind Kinsman, Warriors all, adieu.

Bedf. Farwell good Salisbury, & good luck go with thee: And yet I doe thee wrong, to mind thee of it,

For thou art fram'd of the firme truth of valour.

Exe. Farwell kind Lord: fight valiantly to day.

Bedf. He is as full of Valour as of Kindnesse, Princely in both.

Enter the King.

West. O that we now had here But one ten thousand of those men in England, That doe no worke to day.

King. What's he that wishes so?

My Cousin Westmerland. No, my faire Cousin: If we are mark't to dye, we are enow

To doe our Countrey losse: and if to liue, The fewer men, the greater share of honour.

Gods will, I pray thee wish not one man more, By Ioue, I am not courteous for Gold,

Nor care I who doth feed vpon my cost: It yernes me not, if men my Garments weare;

Such outward things dwell not in my desires. But if it be a sinne to couet Honor,

I am the most offending Soule aliue.

No faith, my Couze, with not a man from England: Gods peace, I would not loose so great an Honor,

As one man more me thinkes would share from me, For the best hope I haue. O, doe not wish one more:

Rather proclaime it (Westmerland) through my Hoast, That he which hath no stomach to this fight,

Let him depart, his Passport shall be made, And Crownes for Conuoy put into his Purse:

We would not dye in that mans companie, That feares his fellowship, to dye with vs.

This day is call'd the Feast of Crispian: He that out-liues this day, and comes safe home,

Will stand a tip-toe when this day is named, And rowse him at the Name of Crispian.

He that shall see this day, and liue old age, Will yeerely on the Vigil feast his neighbours,

And say, to morrow is Saint Crispian. Then will he strip his sleene, and shew his skarres:

Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot: But hee'll remember, with aduantages, What feats he did that day. Then shall our Names,

Familiar in his mouth as household words,

Harry the King, Bedford and Exeter, Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester, Be in their flowing Cups freshly remembered.

This story shall the good man teach his sonne: And Crispian shall ne're goe by,

From this day to the ending of the World, But we in it shall be remembered;

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers: For he to day that sheds his blood with me,

Shall be my brother; be he ne're so vile, This day shall gentle his Condition.

And Gentlemen in England, now a bed, Shall thinke themselves accurs'd they were not here;

And hold their Manhoods cheape, whiles any speaks, That fought with vs vpon Saint Crispian's day.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My Soueraign Lord, bestow your selfe with speed: The French are brauely in their battailes set,

And will with all expedience charge on vs.

King. All things are ready, if our minds be so.

West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward now.

King. Thou do'st not wish more helpe from England, Couze?

West. Gods will, my Liege, would you and I alone, Without more helpe, could fight this Royall battaille.

King. Why now thou hast vnwisht five thousand men: Which likes me better, then to wish vs one.

You know your places: God be with you all.

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee King Harry, If for thy Ransome thou wilt now compound,

Before thy most assured Ouerthrow: For certainly, thou art so neere the Gulfe,

Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy The Constable desires thee, thou wilt mind

Thy followers of Repentance; that their Soules May make a peacefull and a sweet retyre

From off these fields: where (wretches) their poore bodies Must lye and fester.

King. Who hath sent thee now?

Mont. The Constable of France.

King. I pray thee beare my former Answer back: Bid them archieue me, and then sell my bones.

Good God, why should they mock poore fellows thus? The man that once did sell the Lyons skin

While the beast liu'd, was kill'd with hunting him. A many of our bodies shall no doubt

Find Native Graues: vpon the which, I trust Shall witness liue in Brasse of this dayes worke.

And those that leaue their valiant bones in France, Dying like men, though buried in your Dunghills,

They shall be fam'd: for there the Sun shall greet them, And draw their honors reeking vp to Heauen.

Leauing their earthly parts to choake your Clyme, The smell whereof shall breed a Plague in France.

Marke then abounding valour in our English: That being dead, like to the bullets crasing, Breake out into a second course of mischiefe, Killing in relapse of Mortalitie.

Let me speake proudly: Tell the Constable, We are but Warriors for the working day:

Our Gaynesse and our Gile are all bestmycht With raynye Marching in the painefull field.

There's not a piece of feather in our Hoast: Good argument (I hope) we will not flye:

And time hath worne vs into flouenrie.

But by the Masse, our hearts are in the trim:

And my poore Souldiers tell me, yet ere Night, They'll be in fresher Robes, or they will pluck

The gay new Coats o're the French Souldiers heads, And turne them out of seruice. If they doe this,

As if God please, they shall; my Ransome then Will soone be leuyed.

Herauld, saue thou thy labour:

Come thou no more for Ransome, gentle Herauld, They shall haue none, I sweare, but these my ioynts:

Which if they haue, as I will leaue vm them, Shall yeeld them little, tell the Constable.

Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well: Thou neuer shalt heare Herauld any more. Exit.

King. I feare thou wilt once more come againe for a Ransome.

Enter Torke.

Torke. My Lord, most humbly on my knee I begge The leading of the Vaward.

King. Take it, braue Torke. Now Souldiers march away, And how thou pleasest God, dispose the day. Exeunt.

Alarum. Excursions.

Enter Pistol, French Souldier, Boy.

Pistol. Yeeld Curte.

French. Je pense que vous estes le Gentilhomme de bon qualitee.

Pistol. Qualitie calme culture me. Art thou a Gentleman? What is thy Name? discusse.

French. O Seigneur Dieu.

Pistol. O Signieur Dewe should be a Gentleman: perpend my words O Signieur Dewe, and marke: O Signieur Dewe, thou dyest on point of Fox, except O Signieur thou doe giue to me egregions Ransome.

French. O prenes misericordie aye pitee de moy.

Pistol. Moy shall not serue, I will haue fortie Moyes: for I will fetch thy rymme out at thy Throat, in droppes of Crimson blood.

French. Est il impossible d'eschapper le force de ton bras.

Pistol. Brasse, Curte? thou damned and luxurious Mountaine Goat, offer't me Brasse?

French. O pardonne moy.

Pistol. Say't thou me so? is that a Tonne of Moyes? Come hither boy, aske me this slaue in French what is his Name.

Boy. Escoute comment estes vous appelle?

French. Monsieur le Fer.

Boy. He sayes his Name is M. Fer.

Pistol. M. Fer: Ile fer him, and firke him, and ferret him: discusse the same in French vnto him.

Boy. I doe not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firke.

Pistol. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

French. Que dit il Monsieur?

Boy. Il me commande a vous dire que vous faite vous prest, car ce soldat icy est disposee tout asture de coupper vostre gorge.

Pistol. Owy, cuppele gorge permafoy pesant, vnlesse thou giue me Crownes, braue Crownes, or mangled shalt thou be by this my Sword.

French. O le vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu: ma pardonner, le suis le Gentilhomme de bon maison, garde ma vie, & le vous donneray deux cent escus.

Pistol. What are his words?

Boy. He

Boy. He prayes you to saue his life, he is a Gentleman of a good house, and for his ransom he will giue you two hundred Crownes.

Pist. Tell him my fury shall abate, and I the Crownes will take.

Fre. Petit Monsieur que dit il?

Boy. Encore qu'il et contra son serement, de pardonner aucune prisonner: neant-moins pour les escues que vous luy a promets, il est content a vous donner la liberte le franchisement.

Fre. Sur mes genoux se vous donnez mille remerciens, et le me estime heureux que le intombe, entre les main. d'un Cheualier le pense le plus brane valiant et tres distime sieigneur d'Angleterre.

Pist. Expound vnto me boy.

Boy. He giues you vpon his knees a thousand thanks, and he esteemes himselfe happy, that he hath saue into the hands of one (as he thinke) the most brane, valorous and thrice-worthy sieigneur of England.

Pist. As I sucke blood, I will some mercy shew. Follow mee.

Boy. Saue vous le grand Capitaine?

I did neuer know so full a voyce issue from so emptie a heart: but the saying is true, The empty vessel makes the greatest sound; Bardolfe and Nym had tenne times more valour, then this roaring diuell i'th olde play, that euery one may payre his nayles with a wooden dagger, and they are both hang'd, and so would this be, if hee durst steale any thing aduenturously. I must stay with the Lackies with the luggage of our camp, the French might haue a good pray of vs, if he knew of it, for there is none to guard it but boyes.

Exit.

Enter Constable, Orleans, Bourbon, Dolphin, and Ramburs.

Con. O Diable.

Orl. O sieigneur le iour et perdis, toute et perdie.

Dol. Mor Dieu ma vie, all is confounded all,

Reproach, and euertlasting shame

Sits mocking in our Plumes.

A short Alarm.

O meschante Fortune, do not runne away.

Con. Why all our ranks are broke.

Dol. O perdurable shame, let's stab our selues:

Be these the wretches that we plaid at dice for?

Orl. Is this the King we sent too, for his ransom?

Bur. Shame, and eternall shame, nothing but shame,

Let vs dye in once more backe againe,

And he that will not follow Bourbon now,

Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand

Like a base Pander hold the Chamber doore,

Whilst a base slaue, no gentler then my dogge,

His fairest daughter is contaminated.

Con. Disorder that hath spoyl'd vs, friend vs now,

Let vs on heapes go offer vp our liues.

Orl. We are enow yet liuing in the field,

To smother vp the English in our throngs,

If any order might be thought vpon.

Bur. The diuell take Order now, Ile to the throng;

Let life be short, else shame will be too long.

Exit.

Alarm. Enter the King and his trayne, with Prisoners.

King. Well haue we done, thrice-valiant Countymen, But all's not done, yet keepe the French the field.

Exe. The D. of York commends him to your Maiesty

King. Liues he good Vnckle: thrice within this house I saw him downe; thrice vp againe, and fighting. From Helmet to the spur, all blood he was.

Exe. In which array (brave Soldier) doth he lye,

Larding the plaine: and by his bloody side,

(Yoake-fellow to his honour-owing-wounds)

The Noble Earle of Suffolke also lyes.

Suffolke first dyed, and Yorke all haged ouer

Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteept,

And takes him by the Beard, kisses the gashes

That bloodily did yawne vpon his face.

He cryes aloud; Tarry my Cosin Suffolke,

My soule shall thine keepe company to heauen:

Tarry (sweet soule) for mine, then flye a-brest:

As in this glorious and well-foughten field

We kept together in our Chiuallrie.

Vpon these words I came, and cheer'd him vp,

He smil'd me in the face, rought me his hand,

And with a feeble gripe, sayes: Deere my Lord,

Commend my seruice to my Soueraigne,

So did he turne, and ouer Suffolkes necke

He threw his wounded arme, and kist his lippes,

And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd

A Testament of Noble-ending-love:

The prettie and sweet manner of it forc'd

Those waters from me, which I would haue stop'd,

But I had not so much of man in mee,

And all my mother came into mine eyes,

And gaue me vp to teares.

King. I blame you not,

For hearing this, I must perforce compound.

With mixtull eyes, or they will issue to.

But hearken, what new alarm is this same?

The French haue re-ensord their scatter'd men:

Then euery souldiour kill his Prisoners,

Giue the word through.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poyes and the luggage, 'Tis expressly against the Law of Armes, tis as arrant a peece of knaue-ry marke you now, as can bee offert in your Conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certaine, there's not a boy left aliue, and the Cowardly Rascalls that ranne from the battaile ha' done this slaughter: besides they haue burned and carried away all that was in the Kings Tent, wherefore the King most worthily hath caus'd euery souldiour to cut his prisoners throat. O 'tis a gallant King.

Flu. I, hee was borne at Monmouth Captaine Gower: What call you the Townes name where Alexander the pig was borne?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the gear, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, saue the phraze is a litle variations.

Gow. I thinke Alexander the Great was borne in Macedon, his Father was called Phillip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I thinke it is in Macedon where Alexander is borne.

porne: I tell you Capitaine, if you looke in the Maps of the Orld, I warrant you shall finde in the comparisous betweene Macedon & Monmouth, that the situations looke you, is both alike. There is a Riuer in Macedon, & there is also moreouer a Riuer at Monmouth, it is call'd Wye at

Monmouth: but it is out of my praines, what is the name of the other Riuer: but 'tis all one, tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is Salmons in both. If you marke Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well, for there is figures in all things. Alexander God knowes, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his chollers, and his moodes, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicated in his praines, did in his Ales and his angers (looke you) kill his best friend

Chyrys.

Gow. Our King is not like him in that, he neuer kill'd any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done (marke you now) to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished. I speak but in the figures, and comparisuns of it: as Alexander kild his friend Chyrys, being in his Ales and his Cuppes; so also Harry Monmouth being in his right wittes, and his good iudgements, turn'd away the fat Knight with the great belly doubler: he was full of iests, and gypes, and knaueries, and mockes, I haue forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he: Ile tell you, there is good men borne at Monmouth.

Gow. Heere comes his Maiesty.

Alarm. Enter King Harry and Bourbon with prisoners. Flourish.

King. I was not angry since I came to France,

Vntill this instant. Take a Trumpet Herald,

Ride thou vnto the Horsemen on yond hill:

If they will fight with vs, bid them come downe,

Or voyde the field: they do offend our fight.

If they'l do neither, we will come to them,

And make them sker away, as swift as stones

Enforced from the old Assyrian slings:

Besides, we'l cut the throats of those we haue,

And not a man of them that we shall take,

Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the Herald of the French, my Liege

Glow. His eyes are humbler then they vs'd to be.

King. How now, what meanes this Herald? Knowst thou not,

That I haue sin'd these bones of mine for ransom?

Com'st thou againe for ransom?

Her. No great King:

I come to thee for charitable License,

That we may wander ore this bloody field,

To booke our dead, and then to bury them,

To fort our Nobles from our common men.

For many of our Princes (woe the while)

Lye drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood:

So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbes

In blood of Princes, and with wounded steeds

Fret fet-locke deepe in gore, and with wilde rage

Yerke out their armed heeles at their dead masters,

Killing them twice. O giue vs leaue great King,

To view the field in safety, and dispose

Of their dead bodies.

King. I tell thee truly Herald,

I know not if the day be ours or no,

For yet a many of your horsemen peere,

And gallop ore the field.

Her. The day is yours.

King. Praised be God, and not our strength for it:

What is this Castle call'd that stands hard by?

Her. They call it Agincourt.

King. Then call we this the field of Agincourt,

Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your Grandfather of famous memory (an't please your Maiesty) and your great Vncle Edward the Placke

Prince of Wales, as I haue read in the Chronicles, fought a most prauie battell here in France.

King. They did Flaellen.

Flu. Your Maiesty sayes very true: If your Maiesties is remembred of it, the Welchmen did good seruice in a Garden where Leekes did grow, wearing Leekes in their

Monmouth caps, which your Maiesty know to this houre is an honourable badge of the seruice: And I do beleue your Maiesty takes no scorn to weare the Lecke vpon

S. Tauts day.

King. I weare it for a memorable honor:

For I am Welch you know good Countymen.

Flu. All the water in Wye, cannot wash your Maie-ties Welch blood out of your pody, I can tell you that:

God plesse it, and preferue it, as long as it pleases his Grace, and his Maiesty too.

King. Thanks good my Countymen.

Flu. By Ieshu, I am your Maiesties Countreyman, I care not who know it: I will confesse it to all the Orld, I need not to be ashamed of your Maiesty, praised be God so long as your Maiesty is an honest man.

King. Good keepe me so.

Enter Williams.

Our Heralds go with him,

Bring me iust notice of the numbers dead

On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

Exe. Souldier, you must come to the King.

King. Souldier, why wear'st thou that Gloue in thy Cappe?

Will. And't please your Maiesty, tis the gage of one that I should fight withall, if he be aliue.

King. An Englishman?

Will. And't please your Maiesty, a Rascall that swag-ger'd with me last night: who if aliue, and euer dare to challenge this Gloue, I haue sworne to take him a boxe a'th ere: or if I can see my Gloue in his cappe, which he swore as he was a Souldier he would weare (if aliue) I wil strike it out soundly.

King. What thinke you Capitaine Fluellen, is it fit this souldier keepe his oath?

Flu. Hee is a Crauen and a Villaine else, and't please your Maiesty in my conscience.

King. It may bee, his enemy is a Gentleman of great fort quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a Gentleman as the diuel is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himselfe, it is necessary (looke your Grace) that he keepe his vow and his oath: If hee bee periur'd (iee you now) his reputation is as arrant a villaine and a lacke sawce, as euer his blacke shoo trodd

vpon Gods ground, and his earth, in my conscience law

King. Then keepe thy vow sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.

Will. So, I wil my Liege, as I liue.

King. Who seru'st thou vnder?

Will.

Will. Under Captaine Gower, my Liege.

Flu. Gower is a good Captaine, and is good knownledge and literatured in the Warres.

King. Call him hither to me, Souldier.

Will. I will my Liege.

King. Here Fluellen, weare thou this fauour for me, and sticke it in thy Cappe: when Alanson and ray selfe were downe together, I pluckt this Gloue from his Helme: If any man challenge this, hee is a friend to Alanson, and an enemy to our Person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, and thou dost me loue.

Flu. Your Grace doo's me as great Honors as can be desir'd in the hearts of his Subjects: I would faine see the man, that ha's but two legges, that shall find himselfe agree'd at this Gloue; that is all: but I would faine see it once, and please God of his grace that I might see.

King. Know'st thou Gower?

Flu. He is my deare friend, and please you.

King. Pray thee goe seeke him, and bring him to my Tent.

Flu. I will fetch him.

King. My Lord of Warwick, and my Brother Gloster, Follow Fluellen closely at the heeles.

The Gloue which I haue given him for a fauour, May haply purchase him a box at the eare. It is the Souldiers: I by bargaine should Weare it my selfe. Follow good Cousin Warwick: If that the Souldier strike him, as I iudge By his blunt bearing, he will keepe his word; Some sodaine mischiefe may arise of it: For I doe know Fluellen valiant, And toucht with Choler, hot as Gunpowder, And quickly will returne an iniurie. Follow, and see there be no harme betwene them. Goe you with me, Vnckle of Exeter.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to Knight you, Captaine.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Gods will, and his pleasure, Captaine, I beseech you now, come apace to the King: there is more good toward you peradventure, then is in your knowledge to dreame of.

Will. Sir, know you this Gloue?

Flu. Know the Gloue? I know the Gloue is a Gloue.

Will. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant Traytor as anyes in the Vniuersall World, or in France, or in England.

Gower. How now Sir? you Villaine.

Will. Doe you thinke he be forsworne?

Flu. Stand away Captaine Gower, I will giue Treason his payment into plowes, I warrant you.

Will. I am no Traytor.

Flu. That's a Lye in thy Throat. I charge you in his Maiesties Name apprehend him, he's a friend of the Duke Alansons.

Enter Warwick and Gloucester.

War. How now, how now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, heere is, prayd be God for it, a most contagious Treason come to light, looke you, as you shall desire in a Summers day. Heere is his Maiestie.

Enter King and Exeter.

King. How now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Liege, heere is a Villaine, and a Traytor, that looke your Grace, ha's strooke the Gloue which your Maiestie is take out of the Helmet of Alanson.

Will. My Liege, this was my Gloue, here is the fellow of it: and he that I gaue it to in change, promis'd to weare it in his Cappe: I promis'd to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my Gloue in his Cappe, and I haue beene good as my word.

Flu. Your Maiestie heere now, sauing your Maiesties Manhood, what an arrant rascally, beggerly, lowlie Knaue it is: I hope your Maiestie is peare me testimonie of Alanson, that your Maiestie is giue me, in your Conscience now.

King. Giue me thy Gloue Souldier;

Looke, heere is the fellow of it:

'Twas I indeed thou promis'd'st to strike,

And thou hast giuen me most bitter termes.

Flu. And please your Maiestie, let his Neck answer for it, if there is any Marshall Law in the World.

King. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my Lord, come from the heart: neuer came any from mine, that might offend your Maiestie.

King. It was our selfe thou didst abuse.

Will. Your Maiestie came not like your selfe: you appear'd to me but as a common man; witness the Night, your Garments, your Lowliness: and what your Highnesse suffer'd vnder that shape, I beseech you take it for your owne fault, and not mine: for had you bene as I tooke you for, I made no offence; therefore I beseech your Highnesse pardon me.

King. Here Vnckle Exeter, fill this Gloue with Crowns, And giue it to this fellow. Keepe it fellow,

And weare it for an Honor in thy Cappe,

Till I doe challenge it. Giue him the Crownes:

And Captaine, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this Day and this Light, the fellow ha's mettel enough in his belly: Hold, there is twelue-pence for you, and I pray you to serue God, and keepe you out of prawles and prabbles, and quarrels and dissensions, and I warrant you it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your Money.

Flu. It is with a good will: I can tell you it will serue you to mend your shooes: come, wherefore should you be so passfull, your shooes is not so good: 'tis a good filling I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter Herald.

King. Now Herald, are the dead numbred?

Herald. Heere is the number of the slaughtred French.

King. What Prisoners of good sort are taken, Vnckle?

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleance, Nephew to the King, John Duke of Burbon, and Lord Bouchiquaud: Of other Lords and Barons, Knights and Squires, Full fiftene hundred, besides common men.

King. This Note doth tell me of ten thousand French That in the field lye slaine: of Princes in this number, And Nobles bearing Banners, there lye dead One hundred twentie six: added to these, Of Knights, Esquires, and gallant Gentlemen, Eight thousand and foure hundred: of the which, Fiue hundred were but yesterday dubb'd Knights. So that in these ten thousand they haue lost, There ate but sixteene hundred Mercenaries: The rest are Princes, Barons, Lords, Knights, Squires, And

And Gentlemen of blood and qualitie.

The Names of those their Nobles that lye dead:

Charles Delabreth, High Constable of France,

Jaques of Chailion, Admirall of France,

The Master of the Crosse-bowes, Lord Rambures,

Great Master of France, the braue Sir Guichard Dolpin,

John Duke of Alanson, Anthony Duke of Srabant,

The Brother to the Duke of Burgundie,

And Edward Duke of Barr: of lustie Earles,

Grandpre and Rossie, Fauconbridge and Foyes,

Beaumont and Marle, Vandemont and Lestrate.

Here was a Royall fellowship of death.

Where is the number of our English dead?

Edward the Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Suffolke,

Sir Richard Ketly, Dany Gam Esquire;

None else of name: and of all other men,

But fiue and twentie.

O God, thy Arme was heere:

And not to vs, but to thy Arme alone,

Ascribe we all: when, without stratagem,

But in plaine shock, and euen play of Battaille,

Was euer knowne so great and little losse?

On one part and on th'other, take it God,

For it is none but thine.

Exet. 'Tis wonderfull.

King. Come, goe me in proceffion to the Village:

And be it death proclaymed through our Hoast,

To boast of this, or take that prayse from God,

Which is his onely:

Flu. Is it not lawfull and please your Maiestie, to tell how many is kill'd?

King. Yes Captaine: but with this acknowledgement,

That God fought for vs.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did vs great good.

King. Doe we all holy Rights:

Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum,

The dead with charitie enclous'd in Clay:

And then to Callice, and to England then,

Where ne're from France arriu'd more happy men.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Chorus.

Vouchsafe to those that haue not read the Story,

That I may prompt them: and of such as haue,

I humbly pray them to admit th'excuse

Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,

Which cannot in their huge and proper life,

Be here presented. Now we beare the King

Toward Callice: Graunt him there; there scene,

Heane him away vpon your winged thoughts,

Athwart the Sea: Behold the English beach

Pales in the flood; with Men, Wiues, and Boyes,

Whose shouts & claps out-voyce the deep-mouth'd Sea,

Which like a mightie Whistler 'fore the King,

Seemes to prepare his way: So let him land,

And solemnly see him set on to London.

So swift a pace hath Thought, that euen now

You may imagine him vpon Black-Heath:

Where, that his Lords desire him, to haue borne

His bruised Helmer, and his bended Sword

Before him, through the Citie: he forbids it,

Being free from vain-nesse, and selfe-glorious pride;

Giuing full Trophee, Signall, and Oflent,

Quite from himselfe, to God. But now behold,

In the quick Forge and working-houise of Thought,

How London doth poure out her Citizens,

The Maior and all his Brethren in best fort,

Like to the Senatours of th'antique Rome,

With the Plebeians swarming at their heeles,

Goe forth and fetch their Conquering Caesar in:

As by a lower, but by louing likelyhood,

Were now the Generall of our gracious Empresse,

As in good time he may, from Ireland comming,

Bringing Rebellion broached on his Sword;

How many would the peacefull Citie quit,

To welcome him? much more, and much more cause,

Did they this Harry. Now in London place him.

As yet the lamentation of the French

Inuities the King of Englands stay at home:

The Emperours comming in behalfe of France,

To order peace betwene them: and omit

All the occurrences, what euer chanc't,

Till Harryes backe returne againe to France:

There must we bring him; and my selfe haue play'd

The interim, by remembering you 'tis past.

Then brooke abridgement, and your eyes aduance,

After your thoughts, straight backe againe to France.

Exit.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Nay, that's right: but why weare you your Lecke to day? S. Dames day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you asse my friend, Captaine Gower; the rascally, scauld, beggerly, lowlie, praggling Knaue Pistol, which you and your selfe, and all the World, know to be no better then a fellow, looke you now, of no merits: hee is come to me, and prings me pread and fault yesterday, looke you, and bid me eate my Lecke: it was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him; but I will be so bold as to weare it in my Cap till I see him once againe, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol.

Gower. Why heere hee comes, swelling like a Turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his Turkey-cocks. God plesse you aunchient Pistol: you scurrie lowlie Knaue, God plesse you.

Pist. Ha, art thou bedlam? dost thou thirst, bafe Troian, to haue me fold vp Parcas fatall Web? Hence; I am qualmish at the smell of Lecke.

Flu. I pefeech you heartily, scurrie lowlie Knaue, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eate, looke you, this Lecke; because, looke you, you doe not loue it, nor your affections, and your appetites and your disfections doo's not agree with it, I would desire you to eate it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his Goats.

Flu. There is one Goat for you. Strikes him.

Will you be so good, scauld Knaue, as eate it?

Pist. Bafe Troian, thou shalt dye.

Flu. You say very true, scauld Knaue, when Gods will is: I will desire you to liue in the meane time, and eate your Victuals: come, there is sawce for it. You call'd me yesterday Mountaine-Squier, but I will make you you to day a squire of low degree. I pray you fall too, if you can mocke a Lecke, you can eate a Lecke.

Gowr. Enough Captaine, you haue astonisht him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eate some part of my lecke, or I will peate his pate foure dayes: bite I pray you, it is good for your greene wound, and your ploodie Coxcombe.

Pist. Must I bite.

Flu. Yes certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this Lecke, I will most horribly reuenge I eate and eate I sweare.

Flu. Eate I pray you, will you haue some more sauce to your Lecke: there is not enough Lecke to sweare by.

Pist. Quiet thy Cudgell, thou dost see I eate.

Flu. Much good do you scald knaue, heartily. Nay, pray you throw none away, the skinne is good for your broken Coxcombe: when you take occasions to see Leekes hereafter, I pray you mocke at 'em, that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. I, Leekes is good: hold you, there is a groat to heale your pate.

Pist. Mea groat?

Flu. Yes verily, and in truth you shall take it, or I haue another Lecke in my pocket, which you shall eate.

Pist. I take thy groat in earnest of reuenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in Cudgels, you shall be a Woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels: God buy you, and keepe you, & heale your pate.

Pist. All hell shall stirre for this.

Gowr. Go, go, you are a counterfeit cowardly Knaue, will you mocke at an ancient Tradition began vpon an honourable respect, and worne as a memorable Trophie of predeceased valor, and dare not auouch in your deeds any of your words. I haue seene you gleeking & galling at this Gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speake English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English Cudgell: you finde it otherwise, and henceforth let a Welsh correction, teach you a good English condition, fare ye well.

Pist. Doe the fortune play the huswife with me now? Newes haue I that my Doll is dead i'th Spittle of a malady of France, and there my rendezvous is quite cut off: Old I do waxe, and from my wearie limbes honour is Cudgeld. Well, Baud he turne, and something leane to Cut-purse of quicke hand: To England will I steale, and there he steale:

And patches will I get vnto these cudgeld scarres, And swore I got them in the Gallia warres.

Enter at one doore, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Warwick, and other Lords. At another, Queene Isabel, the King, the Duke of Bourgogne, and other French.

King. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met; Vnto our brother France, and to our Sister Health and faire time of day: Joy and good wishes To our most faire and Princely Cousine Katherine: And as a branch and member of this Royalty, By whom this great assembly is contriud, We do salute you Duke of Burgogne, And Princes French and Peeres health to you all.

Fra. Right ioyous are we to behold your face, Most worthy brother England, fairely met, So are you Princes (English) euery one.

Quee. So happy be the Issue brother Ireland Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes, Your eyes which hitherto haue borne In them against the French that met them in their bones, The fatal Balls of murdering Basiliskes: The venome of such Lookes we fairely hope Haue lost their qualitie, and that this day Shall change all griefes and quarrels into loue.

Eng. To cry Amen to that, thus we appeare.

Quee. You English Princes all, I doe salute you.

Burg. My dutie to you both, on equall loue. Great Kings of France and England: hat I haue laboured With all my wits, my paines, and strong endeours, To bring your most Imperiall Maiesties Vnto this Barre, and Royall interview;

Your Mightinesse on both parts best can witnesse, Since then my Office hath so farre preuayld, That Face to Face, and Royall Eye to Eye, You haue congregated: let it not disgrace me, If I demand before this Royall view,

What Rub, or what Impediment there is, Why that the naked, poore, and mangled Peace, Deare Nourse of Arts, Plenties, and ioyfull Births, Should not in this best Garden of the World,

Our fertile France, put vp her louely Visage? Alas, shee hath from France too long been chas'd, And all her Husbandry doth lye on heapes, Corrupting in it owne fertillitie.

Her Vine, the merry chearer of the heart, Vpruned, dyes: her Hedges euen pleach'd, Like Prisoners wildly ouer-growne with hayre, Put forth disorder'd Twigs: her fallow Leas, The Darnell, Hemlock, and ranke Fennel, Doth root vpon; while that the Culter ruffs, That should deracinate such Sauagery:

The euen Meade, that erst brought sweetly forth The freckled Cowslip, Burnet, and greene Clouer, Wanting the Sythe, withall vncorrected, rankes; Conceiues by idlenesse, and nothing teemes, But hatefull Docks, rough Thistles, Keksyes, Burres, Loosing both beautie and vtilitie;

And all our Vineyards, Fallowes, Meades, and Hedges, Defectiue in their natures, grow to wildnesse. Euen so our Houses, and our selues, and Children, Haue lost, or doe not learne, for want of time, The Sciences that should become our Countrey;

But grow like Sauages, as Souldiers will, That nothing doe, but meditate on Blood, To Swearing, and sterne Lookes, defus'd Attire, And euery thing that seemes vnaturall.

Which to reduce into our former fauour, You are assembled: and my speech entreats, That I may know the Let, why gentle Peace Should not expell these inconueniences, And blesse vs with her former qualities.

Eng. If Duke of Burgonie, you would the Peace, Whole want giues growth to th'imperfections Which you haue cited; you must buy that Peace With full accord to all our iust demands, Whose Tenures and particular effects You haue enschedul'd briefly in your hands.

Burg. The King hath heard them: to the which, as yet There is no Answer made.

Eng. Well then: the Peace which you before so vrge'd, Lyes in his Answer:

France. I

King. Faire Katherine, and most faire, Will you vouchsafe to teach a Souldier tearmes, Such as will enter at a Ladyes eare, And pleade his Loue-suit to her gentle heart.

Kath. Your Maiestie shall mocke at me, I cannot speake your English.

King. O faire Katherine, if you will loue me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to heare you confesse it brokenly with your English Tongue. Doe you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonne moy, I cannot tell wat is like me.

King. An Angell is like you Kate, and you are like an Angell.

Kath. Que dit il que le suis semblable a les Anges?

Lady. Ouy verayment (sans vostre Grace) ainsi dit il.

King. I said so, deare Katherine, and I must not blush to asseme it.

Kath. O bon Dieu, les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

King. What sayes she, faire one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Lady. Ouy, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de Princeesse.

King. The Princeesse is the better English-woman: yfaith Kate, my wooing is fit for thy vnderstanding, I am glad thou canst speake no better English, for if thou couldst, thou wouldst finde me such a plaine King, that thou wouldst thinke, I had sold my Farme to buy my Crowne. I know no wayes to mince it in loue, but directly to say, I loue you: then if you vrge me farther, then to say, Doe you in faith? I weare out my suite: Giue me your answer, yfaith doe, and so clap hands, and a bargain: how say you, Lady?

Kath. Sans vostre honneur, me vnderstand well.

King. Marry, if you would put me to Verses, or to Dance for your sake, Kate, why you vndid me: for the one I haue neither words nor measure; and for the other, I haue no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could winne a Lady at Leape, frogge, or by vauing into my Saddle, with my Armour on my backe; vnder the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leape into a Wife: Or if I might buffet for my

France. I haue but with a curselarie eye O're-glanc't the Articles: Pleaseth your Grace To appoint some of your Councell presently To sit with vs once more, with better heed To re-suruey them; we will suddenly To re-suruey them; we will suddenly

England. Brother we shall. Goe Vnckle Exeter, And Brother Clarence, and you Brother Gloucester, Warwick, and Huntington, goe with the King, And take with you free power, to ratifie, Augment, or alter, as your Wisdomes best Shall see aduantageable for our Dignitie, Any thing in or out of our Demands, And wee'll consigne thereto. Will you, faire Sister, Goe with the Princes, or stay here with vs?

Quee. Our gracious Brother, I will goe with them: Happily a Woman's Voyce may doe some good, When Articles too nicely vrg'd, be stood on.

England. Yet leaue our Cousin Katherine here with vs, She is our capitall Demand, compris'd Within the fore-ranke of our Articles.

Quee. She hath good leaue. Exeunt omnes.

Manet King and Katherine.

King. Faire Katherine, and most faire, Will you vouchsafe to teach a Souldier tearmes, Such as will enter at a Ladyes eare, And pleade his Loue-suit to her gentle heart.

Kath. Your Maiestie shall mocke at me, I cannot speake your English.

King. O faire Katherine, if you will loue me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to heare you confesse it brokenly with your English Tongue. Doe you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonne moy, I cannot tell wat is like me.

King. An Angell is like you Kate, and you are like an Angell.

Kath. Que dit il que le suis semblable a les Anges?

Lady. Ouy verayment (sans vostre Grace) ainsi dit il.

King. I said so, deare Katherine, and I must not blush to asseme it.

Kath. O bon Dieu, les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

King. What sayes she, faire one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Lady. Ouy, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de Princeesse.

King. The Princeesse is the better English-woman: yfaith Kate, my wooing is fit for thy vnderstanding, I am glad thou canst speake no better English, for if thou couldst, thou wouldst finde me such a plaine King, that thou wouldst thinke, I had sold my Farme to buy my Crowne. I know no wayes to mince it in loue, but directly to say, I loue you: then if you vrge me farther, then to say, Doe you in faith? I weare out my suite: Giue me your answer, yfaith doe, and so clap hands, and a bargain: how say you, Lady?

Kath. Sans vostre honneur, me vnderstand well.

King. Marry, if you would put me to Verses, or to Dance for your sake, Kate, why you vndid me: for the one I haue neither words nor measure; and for the other, I haue no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could winne a Lady at Leape, frogge, or by vauing into my Saddle, with my Armour on my backe; vnder the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leape into a Wife: Or if I might buffet for my Loue, or bound my Horse for her fauours, I could lay on like a Butcher, and sit like a lack an Apes, neuer off. But before God Kate, I cannot looke greenely, nor gaspe out my eloquence, nor I haue no cunning in protestation; onely downe-right Oathes, which I neuer vse till vrg'd, nor neuer breake for vrging. If thou canst loue a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth Sunne-burning: that neuer looks in his Glasse, for loue of any thing he sees there? let thine Eye be thy Cooke: I speake to thee plaine Souldier: If thou canst loue me for this, take me? if not? to say to thee that I shall dye, is true; but for thy loue, by the L. No: yet I loue thee too. And while thou liu'st, deare Kate, take a fellow of plaine and vncoynd Constance, for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to wooe in other places: for these fellows of infinit tongue, that can ryme themselves into Ladyes fauours, they doe alwayes reason themselves out againe. What? a speaker is but a prater, a Ryme is but a Ballad; a good Legge will fall, a strait Backe will stoop, a blacke Beard will turne white, a curl'd Pate will grow bald, a faire Face will wither, a full Eye will wax hollow: but a good Heart, Kate, is the Sunne and the Moone, or rather the Sunne, and not the Moone; for it shines bright, and neuer changes, but keepe his course truly. If thou wouldst haue such a one, take me? and take me; take a Souldier: take a Souldier; take a King. And what say'st thou then to my Loue? speake my faire, and fairely, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should loue de ennemie of France?

King. No, it is not possible you should loue the Enemie of France, Kate; but in louing me, you should loue the Friend of France: for I loue France so well, that I will not part with a Village of it; I will haue it all mine: and Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours; then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell wat is dat.

King. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am sure will hang vpon my tongue, like a new-married Wife about her Husbands Necke, hardly to be shooke off; Je quand sur le possession de France, & quand vous auez le possession de moy. (Let mee see, what then? Saint Dennis bee my speede) Donc vostre est France, & vous estes mienne. It is as easie for me, Kate, to conquer the Kingdome, as to speake so much more French: I shall neuer moue thee in French, vnlesse it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sans vostre honneur, le Francois ques vous parlez, il & melieus que l'Anglois le quel le parle.

King. No faith is't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my Tongue, and I thinke, most cruelly falsely, must needs be graunted to be much at one. But Kate, dost thou vnderstand thus much English? Canst thou loue mee?

Kath. I cannot tell.

King. Can any of your Neighbours tell, Kate? Ile aske them. Come, I know thou louest me: and at night, when you come into your Closet, you'll question this Gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me, that you loue with your heart: but good Kate, mocke me mercifully, the rather gentle Princeesse, because I loue thee cruelly. If euer thou best mine, Kate, as I haue a sauing Faith within me tells me thou shalt; I get thee with skambling, and thou must therefore needs proue a good Souldier-breeder: Shall not thou and I, betwene Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a Boy, halfe French halfe English, that that shall goe to Constantinople, and take the Turke by the Beard. Shall wee not? what say'st thou, my faire Flower-de-Luce.

Kate. I doe not know dat.

King. No: 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: doe but now promise Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a Boy; and for my English moytie, take the Word of a King, and a Batcheler. How answer you, La plus belle Katherine du monde mon trescher & denin deesse.

Kath. Your Maiessee are fause Frenche enough to deceiue de most sage Damoiseil dat is en France.

King. Now fyve vpon my false French: by mine Honor in true English, I loue thee Kate; by which Honor, I dare not sweare thou louest me, yet my blood begins to flatter me, that thou dost; notwithstanding the poore and vntempering effect of my Visage. Now beshrew my Fathers Ambition, hee was thinking of Ciuill Warres when hee got me, therefore was I created with a stubborn out-side, with an aspect of Iron, that when I come to wooe Ladies, I fright them: but in faith Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appeare. My comfort is, that Old Age, that ill layer vp of Beautie, can doe no more spoyle vpon my Face. Thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt weare me, if thou weare me, better and better: and therefore tell me, most faire Katherine, will you haue me? Put off your Maiden Blushes, auouch the Thoughts of your Heart with the Lookes of an Empresse, take me by the Hand, and say, Harry of England, I am thine: which Word thou shalt no sooner blesse mine Eare withall, but I will tell thee alowd, England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantaginet is thine; who, though I speake it before his Face, if he be not Fellow with the best King, thou shalt finde the best King of Good-fellowes. Come, your Answer in broken Musick; for thy Voyce is Musick, and thy English broken: Therefore Queene of all, Katherine, breake thy minde to me in broken English; wilt thou haue me?

Kath. Dat is as it shall please de Roy mon pere.

King. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it fall also content me.

King. Vpon that I kisse your Hand, and I call you my Queene.

Kath. Laisse mon Seigneur, laisse, laisse, may soy: Je ne veux point que vous abaissez vostre grandeur, en baisant le main d'une nostre Seigneur indigne seruiteur excuse moy. Je vous supplie mon tres-puissant Seigneur.

King. Then I will kisse your Lippes, Kate.

Kath. Les Dames & Damoisels pour estre baisee deuant leur nopces il net pas le costume de France.

King. Madame, my Interpreter, what sayes shee?

Lady. Dat it is not be de fashion pour le Ladies of Fraunce; I cannot tell war is buisse en Anglish.

King. To kisse.

Lady. Your Maiessee entendre better que moy.

King. It is not a fashion for the Maids in Fraunce to kisse before they are married, would she say?

Lady. Ouy verayment.

King. O Kate, nice Customes curke to great Kings. Deare Kate, you and I cannot bee confin'd within the weake Lyft of a Countreyes fashion: wee are the makers of Manners, Kate; and the libertie that follows our Places, stoppes the mouth of all finde-faults, as I will doe yours, for vpholding the nice fashion of your Countrie, in denying me a Kisse: therefore patiently, and yeelding. You haue Witch-craft in your Lippes, Kate: there is more eloquence in a Sugar touch of them, then in the Tongues of the French Councell; and they should sooner perswade Harry of England, then a generall Petition of Monarchs. Heere comes your Father.

Enter the French Power, and the English Lords.

Burg. God saue your Maiesste, my Royall Cousin, teach you our Princesse English?

King. I would haue her learne, my faire Cousin, how perfectly I loue her, and that is good English.

Burg. Is shee not apt?

King. Our Tongue is rough, Coze, and my Condition is not smooth: so that hauing neyther the Voyce nor the Heart of Flatterie about me, I cannot so coniure vpon the Spirit of Loue in her, that hee will appeare in his true likeness.

Burg. Pardon the franknesse of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would coniure in her, you must make a Circle: if coniure vp Loue in her in his true likeness, hee must appeare naked, and blinde. Can you blame her then, being a Maid, yet ros'd ouer with the Virgin Crimson of Modestie, if shee deny the apparance of a naked blinde Boy in her naked seeing selfe? It were (my Lord) a hard Condition for a Maid to configure to.

King. Yet they doe winke and yeeld, as Loue is blinde and enforces.

Burg. They are then excus'd, my Lord, when they see not what they doe.

King. Then good my Lord, teach your Cousin to consent winking.

Burg. I will winke on her to consent, my Lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for Maides well Summer'd, and warme kept, are like Flies at Bartholomew-tyde, blinde, though they haue their eyes, and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

King. This Morall tyes me ouer to Time, and a hot Summer; and so I shall catch the Flye, your Cousin, in the latter end, and shee must be blinde to.

Burg. As Loue is my Lord, before it loues.

King. It is so: and you may, some of you, thanke Loue for my blindnesse, who cannot see many a faire French Citie for one faire French Maid that stands in my way.

French King. Yes my Lord, you see them perspectiuelly: the Cities turn'd into a Maid; for they are all gyrdled with Maiden Walls, that Warre hath entred.

England. Shall Kate be my Wife?

France. So please you.

England. I am content, so the Maiden Cities you talke of, may wait on her: so the Maid that stood in the way for my Wish, shall shew me the way to my Will.

France. Wee haue consented to all termes of reason.

England. Is't so, my Lords of England?

West. The King hath graunted euery Article:

His Daughter first; and in sequele, all,

According to their firme propos'd natures.

Exit. Onely

Exit. Onely he hath not yet subscribed this: Where your Maiesste demands, That the King of France, hauing any occasion to write for matter of Graunt, shall name your Highnesse in this forme, and with this addition, in French: Nostre trescher filz Henry Roy d'Angleterre Heretere de France: and thus in Latine; Præclarissimus Filius noster Henricus Rex Anglie & Heres Francie.

France. Nor this I haue not Brother so deny'd, But your request shall make me let it passe.

England. I pray you then, in loue and deare allyance, Let that one Article ranke with the rest,

And thereupon giue me your Daughter.

France. Take her faire Sonne, and from her blood rayse vp Illuc to me, that the contending Kingdomes

Of France and England, whose very shoares looke pale,

With enuy of each others happinesse,

May cease their hatred; and this deare Coniunction

Plant Neighbour-hood and Christian-like accord

In their sweet Bosomes: that neuer Warre aduance

His bleeding Sword 'twixt England and faire France.

Lords. Amen.

King. Now welcome Kate: and beare me witness all, That here I kisse her as my Soueraigne Queene.

Flourish.

Que. God, the best maker of all Marriages,

Combine your hearts in one, your Realmes in one:

As Man and Wife being two, are one in loue,

So be there 'twixt your Kingdomes such a Spousall,

That neuer may ill Office, or fell Icalousie,

Which troubles oft the Bed of blessed Marriage, Thrust in betweene the Parion of these Kingdomes, To make diuorce of their incorporate League: That English may as French, French Englishmen, Receiue each other. God speake this Amen.

All. Amen.

King. Prepare we for our Marriage: on which day, My Lord of Burgundy wee'll take your Oath

And all the Peeres, for suretie of our Leagues,

Then shall I sweare to Kate, and you to me,

And may our Oathes well kept and prosp'rous be.

Senet. Exeunt.

Enter Chorus.

Thus farre with rough, and all-vnable Pen,
Our bending Author hath pursu'd the Story,
In little roome confining mightie men,
Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time: but in that small, most greatly liued
This Starre of England, Fortune made his Sword;
By which, the Worlds best Garden he achieued:
And of it left his Sonne Imperiall Lord.
Henry the Sixth, in Infant Bands crown'd King
Of France and England, did this King succeed:
Whose State so many had the managing,
That they lost France, and made his England bleed:
Which oft our Stage hath shewn; and for their sake,
In your faire minds let this acceptance take.

FINIS.

The

The first Part of Henry the Sixt.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Dead March.

Enter the Funerall of King Henry the Fifth, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; the Duke of Gloucester, Protector; the Duke of Exeter Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Duke of Somerset.

Bedford.

Vng be y heavens with black yeld day to night;
Comets importing change of Times and States,
Brandish your crytall Tresses in the Skie,
And with them scourge the bad revolting Stars,
That haue consented vnto Henries death:
King Henry the Fifth, too famous to liue long,
England ne're lost a King of so much worth.

Gloster. England ne're had a King vntill his time:
Vertue he had, deseruing to command,
His brandisht Sword did blinde men with his beames,
His Armes spred wider then a Dragons Wings:
His sparkling Eyes, repleat with wrathfull fire,
More dazled and droue back his Enemies,
Then mid-day Sunne, fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? his Deeds exceed all speech:
He ne're lift vp his Hand, but conquered.

Exe. We mourne in black, why mourne we not in blood?
Henry is dead, and neuer shall reuiue:
Vpon a Woodden Coffin we attend;
And Deaths dishonourable Victorie,
We with our stately presence glorifie,
Like Captiues bound to a Triumphant Carre.
What? shall we curse the Planets of Mishap,
That plotted thus our Glories overthrow?
Or shall we thinke the subtil-witted French,
Coniurers and Sorcerers, that afraid of him,
By Magick Verbes haue contriud his end.

Winch. He was a King, blest of the King of Kings.
Vnto the French, the dreadfull Iudgement-Day
So dreadfull will not be, as was his fight.
The Battailles of the Lord of Hosts he fought:
The Churches Prayers made him so prosperous.

Gloster. The Church? where is it?
Had not Church-men pray'd,
His thred of Life had not so soone decay'd.
None doe you like, but an effeminate Prince,
Whom like a Schoole-boy you may ouer-awe.

Winch. Gloster, what ere we like, thou art Protector,
And lookest to command the Prince and Realme:
Thy Wife is proud, she holderth thee in awe,
More then God or Religious Church-men may.

Gloster. Name not Religion, for thou lou'st the Flesh,
And ne're throughout the yeere to Church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes.
Bed. Cease, cease these farres, & rest your minds in peace.
Let's to the Altar: Herals wayt on vs;
In stead of Gold, wee'le offer vp our Armes,
Since Armes auayle not, now that Henry's dead,
Posteritie await for wretched yeeres,
When at their Mothers moistned eyes, Babes shall suck,
Our Ile be made a Nourish of salt Teares,
And none but Women left to wayle the dead.
Henry the Fifth, thy Ghost I inuocate:
Prosper this Realme, keepe it from Ciuill Broyles,
Combat with aduerser Planets in the Heauens;
A farre more glorious Starre thy Soule will make,
Then Iulius Caesar, or bright----

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable Lords, health to youall:
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of losse, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guyen, Champagne, Rheimes, Orleans,
Paris, Guyfours, Poitiers, are all quite lost.

Bedf. What say'st thou man, before dead Henry's Coarse?
Speake softly, or the losse of those great Townes
Will make him burst his Lead, and rise from death.

Gloster. Is Paris lost? is Roan yeelded vp?
If Henry were recall'd to life againe,
These news would caue him once more yeeld the Ghost.

Exe. How were they lost? what trecherie was vs'd?
Mess. No trecherie, but want of Men and Money.
Amongst the Souldiers this is muttered,
That here you maintaine feuerall Factions:
And whilst a Field should be dispatcht and fought,
You are disputing of your Generals.

One would haue lingring Warres, with little cost;
Another would flye swift, but wanteth Wings:
A third thinkes, without expence at all,
By guilefull faire words, Peace may be obtayn'd.
Awake, awake, English Nobilitie,
Let not slouth dimme your Honors, new begot;
Cropt are the Flower-de-Luces in your Armes
Of Englands Coat, one halfe is cut away.

Exe. Were our Teares wanting to this Funerall,
These Tidings would call forth her flowing Tides.

Bedf. Me they concerne, Regent I am of France:
Giue me my steeld Coat, Ile fight for France.
Away with these disgracefull wayling Robes;
Wounds will I lend the French, in stead of Eyes,
To weepe their intermissione Miseries.

Enter

Enter to them another Messenger.

Mess. Lords view these Letters, full of bad mischance.
France is reuolted from the English quite,
Except some petty Townes, of no import.
The Dolphin Charles is crowned King in Rheimes:
The Bastard of Orleans with him is ioyn'd:
Regnold, Duke of Aniou, doth take his part,
The Duke of Alanson flyeth to his side. Exit.
Exe. The Dolphin crown'd King? all flye to him?
O whither shall we flye from this reproach?
Gloster. We will not flye, but to our enemies throats.
Bedford, if thou be slacke, Ile fight it out.
Bed. Gloster, why doubtst thou of my forwardnesse?
An Army haue I musterd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is ouer-run.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My gracious Lords, to adde to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew King Henries hearie,
I must informe you of a dismall fight,
Betwixt the stout Lord Talbot, and the French.
Winch. What? wherein Talbot ouercame, is't so?
3. Mess. O no: wherein Lord Talbot was o'rethrowne:
The circumstance Ile tell you more at large.
The tenth of August last, this dreadfull Lord,
Reuyring from the Siege of Orleans,
Hauing full scarce six thousand in his troupe,
By three and twentie thousand of the French
Was round compassed, and set vpon:
No leysure had he to enranke his men.
He wanted Pikes to set before his Archers:
In stead whereof, sharpe Stakes pluckt out of Hedges
They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keepe the Horsemen off, from breaking in.

More then three houres the fight continued:
Where valiant Talbot, about humane thought,
Enacted wonders with his Sword and Lance.
Hundreds he sent to Hell, and none durst stand him:
Here, there, and quere where enrag'd, he flew.
The French exclaym'd, the Deuill was in Armes,
All the whole Army stood agaz'd on him.
His Souldiers spying his vndaunted Spirit,
A Talbot, a Talbot, cry'd our amaine,
And rusht into the Bowels of the Battaille.
Here had the Conquest fully been seal'd vp,
If Sir John Falstaffe had not play'd the Coward.

He being in the Vauward, plac't behinde,
With purpose to relieue and follow them,
Cowardly fled, not hauing struck one stroke.
Hence grew the generall wrack and massacre:
Enclod were they with their Enemies.

A bafe Wallon, to win the Dolphins grace,
Thrust Talbot with a Speare into the Back,
Whom all France, with their chiefe assembled strength,
Durst not presume to looke once in the face.

Bedf. Is Talbot slaine then? I will slay my selfe,
For liuing idly here, in pompe and ease,
Whilst such a worthy Leader, wanting ayd,
Vnto his daftard foe-men is betray'd.

3. Mess. O no, he liues, but is tooke Prisoner,
And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford:
Most of the rest slaughter'd, or tooke likewise.

Bedf. His Ransome there is none but I shall pay.
Ile hale the Dolphin headlong from his Throne,
His Crowne shall be the Ransome of my friend:
Foure of their Lords Ile change for one of ours.

Farwell my Masters, to my Taske will I,
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keepe our great Saint Georges Feast withall.
Ten thousand Souldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.
3. Mess. So you had need, for Orleans is besieg'd,
The English Army is growne weake and faint:
The Earle of Salisbury craueth supply,
And hardly keepe his men from mutinie,
Since they so few, watch such a multitude.
Exe. Remember Lords your Oathes to Henry sworne:
Eyther to quell the Dolphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoake.
Bedf. I doe remember it, and here take my leaue,
To goe about my preparation. Exit Bedford.
Gloster. Ile to the Tower with all the hast I can,
To view th' Artillerie and Munition,
And then I will proclayme young Henry King.

Exit Gloster.

Exe. To Eltam will I, where the young King is,
Being ordayn'd his speciall Gouvernor,
And for his safetie there Ile best deuise. Exit.
Winch. Each hath his Place and Function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remains:
But long I will not be Iack out of Office,
The King from Eltam I intend to send,
And sit at chiefeft Sterne of publike Weale.

Exit.

Sound a Flourish.

Enter Charles, Alanson, and Reigneir, marching with Drum and Souldiers.

Charles. Mars his true mouing, euen as in the Heauens,
So in the Earth, to this day is not knowne.
Late did he shine vpon the English side:
Now we are Victors, vpon vs he smiles.
What Townes of any moment, but we haue?
At pleasure here we lye, neere Orleans:
Otherwhiles, the famishr English, like pale Ghosts,
Faintly besiege vs one houre in a moneth.

Alon. They want their Porridge, & their fat Bul Beeces:
Eyther they must be dyeted like Mules,
And haue their Prouender ty'd to their mouthes,
Or pitteous they will looke, like drowned Mice.
Reigneir. Let's rayse the Siege: why liue we idly here?
Talbot is taken, whom we wont to feare:
Remayneth none but mad-brayn'd Salisbury.
And he may well in fretting spend his gall,
Nor men nor Money hath he to make Warre.

Charles. Sound, found Alarum, we will rush on them.
Now for the honour of the forlorne French:
Him I forgieue my death, that killeth me,
When he sees me goe back one foot, or flye. Exeunt.

Here Alarum, they are beaten back, by the English, with great losse.

Enter Charles, Alanson, and Reigneir.

Charles. Who euer saw the like? what men haue I?
Dogges, Cowards, Daftards: I would ne're haue fled,
But that they left me midst my Enemies.

Reigneir. Salisbury is a desperate Homicide,
He fighteth as one weary of his life:
The other Lords, like Lyons wanting foode,
Doe rush vpon vs as their hungry prey.

k 3

Alon. Froy.

Alanson. Froisard, a Countreyman of ours, records,
England all Oliners and Rowlands breed,
During the time Edward the third did raigne:
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Sansons and Goliasses
It sendeth forth to skirmish: one to tenne?
Leane raw-bon'd Rascals, who would e're suppose,
They had such courage and audacitie?

Charles. Let's leaue this Towne,
For they are hayre-brayn'd Slaues,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their Teeth
The Walls they'll teare downe, then forsake the Siege.

Reignier. I thinke by some odde Gimmors or Deuice
Their Armes are set, like Clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne're could they hold out so as they doe:
By my consent, wee'll euen let them alone.

Alanson. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bastard. Where's the Prince Dolphin? I haue newes for him.

Dolph. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to vs.

Bast. Me thinks your looks are sad, your chear appall'd.
Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:

A holy Maid hither with me I bring,
Which by a Vision sent to her from Heauen,
Ordayned is to rayse this tedious Siege,
And driue the English forth the bounds of France:
The spirit of deepe Prophecie she hath,
Exceeding the nine Sibyls of old Rome:

What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.
Speake, shall I call her in? beleeue my words,
For they are certaine, and vnfallible.

Dolph. Goe call her in: but first, to try her skill,
Reignier stand thou as Dolphin in my place;
Question her proudly, let thy Lookes be sterne,
By this meanes shall we found what skill she hath.

Enter Iane Puzel.

Reignier. Faire Maid, is't thou wilt doe these wondrous feats?

Puzel. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?
Where is the Dolphin? Come, come from behinde,
I know thee well, though neuer seene before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me;

In priuate will I talke with thee apart:
Stand back you Lords, and giue vs leaue a while.

Reignier. She takes vpon her brauely at first dash.

Puzel. Dolphin, I am by birth a Shepherds Daughter,
My wit vntrayn'd in any kind of Art:

Heauen and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd
To shine on my contemptible estate.

Loe, whilst I wayted on my tender Lambes,
And to Sunnes parching heat display'd my cheekes,

Gods Mother deign'd to appeare to me,
And in a Vision full of Maiestie,

Will'd me to leaue my base Vocation,
And free my Countrey from Calamitie:

Her ayde she promis'd, and assur'd successe.
In compleat Glory shee reueal'd her selfe:

And whereas I was black and swart before,
With those cleare Rayes, which shee infus'd on me,

That beautie am I blest with, which you may see.

Aske me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer vnpremeditated:
My Courage trie by Combat, if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt finde that I exceed my Sex.
Resolue on this, thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receiue me for thy Warlike Mate.

Dolph. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high termes:
Onely this prooffe Ile of thy Valour make,
In single Combat thou shalt buckle with me;
And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true,
Otherwise I renounce all confidence.

Puzel. I am prepar'd: here is my keene-edg'd Sword,
Deckt with fine Flower-de-Luces on each side,
The which at Touraine, in S. Katherines Church-yard,
Out of a great deale of old Iron, I chose forth.

Dolph. Then come a Gods name, I feare no woman,
Puzel. And while I liue, Ile ne're flye from a man.

Here they fight, and Iane de Puzel ouercomes.

Dolph. Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the Sword of Deborah.

Puzel. Christs Mother helpe me, else I were too weake.

Dolph. Who e're helpe thee, 'tis thou that must helpe me:
Impatiently I burne with thy desire,

My heart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd,
Excellent Puzel, if thy name be so,

Let me thy seruant, and not Soueraigne be,
'Tis the French Dolphin sueth to thee thus.

Puzel. I must not yeeld to any rights of Loue,
For my Profession's sacred from above:

When I haue chafed all thy Foes from hence,
Then will I thinke vpon a recompence.

Dolph. Meane time looke gracious on thy prostrate Thrall.

Reignier. My Lord me thinkes is very long in talke.
Alas! Doubtlesse he shrines this woman to her smock,

Else ne're could he so long protract his speech.
Reignier. Shall wee disturbe him, since hee keepes no meane?

Alan. He may meane more then we poore men do know,
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Reignier. My Lord, where are you? what deuise you on?
Shall we giue o're Orleans, or no?

Puzel. Why no, I say: distrustfull Recreants,
Fight till the last gaspe: Ile be your guard.

Dolph. What shee sayes, Ile confirme: wee'll fight it out.

Puzel. Assign'd am I to be the English Scourge,
This night the Siege assuredly Ile rayse:

Expect Saint Martins Summer, Halcyons dayes,
Since I haue entred into these Warres.

Glory is like a Circle in the Water,
Which neuer ceaseth to enlarge it selfe,

Till by broad spreading, it disperse to naught.
With Henries death, the English Circle ends,

Dispersed are the glories it included:
Now am I like that proud insulting Ship,

Which Cesar and his fortune bare at once.
Dolph. Was Mahomet inspired with a Doue?

Thou with an Eagle art inspired then.
Helen, the Mother of Great Constantine,

Nor yet S. Philips daughters were like thee.
Bright Starre of Venus, false downe on the Earth,

How may I reuerently worship thee enough?
Alanson. Leau' off: delayes, and let vs rayse the Siege.

Reignier. Wo-

Reignier. Woman, do what thou canst to saue our honors,
Driue them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd.
Dolph. Presently wee'll try: come, let's away about it,
No Prophet will I trust, if shee proue false. Exeunt.

Enter Gloster, with his Serving-men.

Gloster. I am come to suruey the Tower this day;
Since Henries death, I feare there is Conuoyance:
Where be these Warders, that they wait not here?
Open the Gates, 'tis Gloster that calls.

1. Warder. Who's there, that knocks so imperiously?
Gloster. 1. Man. It is the Noble Duke of Gloster.

2. Warder. Who ere he be, you may not be let in.
3. Man. Villaines, answer you to the Lord Protector?

1. Warder. The Lord prote<sup>t</sup> him, so we answer him,
We doe no otherwise then wee are will'd.

Gloster. Who willed you? or whose will stands but mine?
There's none Prote<sup>t</sup>or of the Realme, but I:

Breake vp the Gates, Ile be your warrantize;
Shall I be flow'd thus by dunghill Groomes?

*Glosters men rush at the Tower Gates, and Woodville
the Lieutenant speaks within.*

Woodville. What noyse is this? what Traytors haue wee here?

Gloster. Lieutenant, is it you whose voyce I heare?
Open the Gates, here's Gloster that would enter.

Woodville. Haue patience Noble Duke, I may not open,
The Cardinall of Winchester forbids:

From him I haue expresse commandement,
That thou nor none of thine shall be let in.

Gloster. Faint-hearted Woodville, prizest him 'fore me?
Arrogant Winchester, that haughtie Prelate,

Whom Henry our late Soueraigne ne're could brooke?
Thou art no friend to God or to the King:

Open the Gates, or Ile shut thee out shortly.
Serving men. Open the Gates vnto the Lord Protector,

Or wee'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter to the Protector at the Tower Gates Winchester and his men in Tawney Coates.

Winchester. How now ambitious Empheir, what meanes
this?

Gloster. Pic'd Priest, doo'st thou command me to be shut out?

Winch. I doe, thou most vsurping Proditor,
And not Protector of the King or Realme.

Gloster. Stand back thou manifest Conspirator,
Thou that contriued'st to murder our dead Lord,

Thou that giu'st Whores Indulgences to sinne,
Ile canuas thee in thy broad Cardinals Hat,

If thou proceed in this thy insolence.
Winch. Nay, stand thou back, I will not budge a foot:

This be Damascus, be thou curst Cain,
To slay thy Brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Gloster. I will not slay thee, but Ile driue thee back:
Thy Scarlet Robes, as a Childs bearing Cloth,

Ile vse, to carry thee out of this place.
Winch. Doe what thou dar'st, I beard thee to thy face.

Gloster. What am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?
Draw men, for all this priuiledged place,

Blew Coats to Tawny Coats, Priest, beware your Beard,
I meane to tugge it, and to cuffe you soundly.

Vnder my feet I stampe thy Cardinals Hat:

In spight of Pope, or dignities of Church,
Here by the Cheekes Ile drag thee vp and downe.
Winch. Gloster, thou wilt answer this before the Pope.

Gloster. Winchester Goose, I cry, a Rope, a Rope.
Now beat them hence, why doe you let them stay?
Thee Ile chase hence, thou Wolfe in Sheepes array.
Out Tawney-Coates, out Scarlet Hypocrite.

Here Glosters men beat out the Cardinals men, and enter in the hurly-burly the Maior of London, and his Officers.

Maior. Fye Lords, that you being supreme Magistrates,
Thus contumeliously should breake the Peace.

Gloster. Peace Maior, thou know'st little of my wrongs:
Here's Beauford, that regards nor God nor King,
Hath here distrayn'd the Tower to his vse.

Winch. Here's Gloster, a Foe to Citizens,
One that still motions Warre, and neuer Peace,

O're-charging your free Purfes with large Fines;
That seekes to overthrow Religion,

Because he is Protector of the Realme;
And would haue Armour here out of the Tower,

To Crowne himselfe King, and suppress the Prince.
Gloster. I will not answer thee with words, but blowes.

Here they skirmish againe.

Maior. Naught rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,
But to make open Proclamation.

Come Officer, as lowd as e're thou canst, cry:

All manner of men, assembled here in Armes this day, against Gods Peace and the Kings, wee charge and command you, in his Highnesse Name, to repaire to your seuerall dwell-ling places, and not to weare, handle, or vse any Sword, Weapon, or Dagger hence-forward, vpon paine of death.

Gloster. Cardinal, Ile be no breaker of the Law:
But we shall meer, and breake our minds at large.

Winch. Gloster, wee'll meet to thy cost, be sure:
Thy heart-blood I will haue for this dayes worke.

Maior. Ile call for Clubs, if you will not away:
This Cardinal's more haughtie then the Deuill.

Gloster. Maior farewell: thou doo'st but what thou may'st.

Winch. Abominable Gloster, guard thy Head,
For I intend to haue it ere long. Exeunt.

Maior. See the Coast clear'd, and then we will depart.
Good God, these Nobles should such stomacks beare,
I my selfe fight not once in fortie yeere. Exeunt.

Enter the Master Gunner of Orleans, and his Boy.

M. Gunner. Sir, ha, thou know'st how Orleans is besieg'd,
And how the English haue the Suburbs woune.

Boy. Father I know, and oft haue shot at them,
How e're vnfortunate, I miss'd my ayme.

M. Gunner. But now thou shalt not, Be thou rul'd by me:
Chiefe Master Gunner am I of this Towne,

Something I must doe to procure me grace:
The Princes espysals haue informed me,

How the English, in the Suburbs close entrencht,
Went through a secret Grate of Iron Barres,

In yonder Tower, to ouer-peere the Citie,
And thence discover, how with most aduantage

They may vex vs with Shot or with Assault.
To intercept this inconuenience,

A Peece of Ordnance gainst it I haue plac'd,
And

And euen these three dayes haue I watcht,
If I could see them. Now doe thou watch,
For I can stay no longer.
If thou spy'st any, runne and bring me word,
And thou shalt finde me at the Gouernors.
Boy. Father, I warrant you, take you no care,
He neuer trouble you, if I may spye them.

Exit.

Exit.

Enter Salisbury and Talbot on the Turrets, with others.

Salib. Talbot, my life, my ioy, againe return'd?
How wert thou handled, being Prisoner?
Or by what meanes got's thou to be releas'd?
Discombe I prethee on this Turrets top.

Talbot. The Earle of Bedford had a Prisoner,
Call'd the braue Lord Ponton de Santrayle,
For him was I exchang'd, and ransom'd.
But with a baser man of Armes by farre,
Once in contempt they would haue barter'd me:
Which I disdain'd, scorn'd, and craued death,
Rather then I would be so pil'd esteem'd:
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.
But O, the trecherous Falstaffe wounds my heart,
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.

Salib. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffes and scornes, and contumelious taunts,
In open Market-place produc't they me,
To be a publique Spectacle to all:
Here, sayd they, is the Terror of the French,
The Scar-Crow that affrights our Children so.
Then broke I from the Officers that led me,
And with my nayles digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurle at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly countenance made others flye,
None durst come neere, for feare of suddaine death.
In Iron Walls they deem'd me not secure:
So great feare of my Name amongst them were spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend Barres of Steele,
And spurne in pieces Posts of Adamant,
Wherefore a guard of chosen Shot I had,
That walkt about me euery Minute while:
And if I did but stirre out of my Bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a Linstock.

Salib. I grieue to heare what torments you endur'd,
But we will be reueng'd sufficiently.
Now it is Supper time in Orleance:
Here, through this Gate, I count each one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortifie:
Let vs looke in, the fight will much delight thee:
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale,
Let me haue your expresse opinions,
Where is best place to make our Batt'ry next?

Gargrave. I thinke at the North Gate, for there stands Lords.

Glansdale. And I heere, at the Bulwarke of the Bridge.

Tal. For ought I see, this Citie must be famisht,
Or with light Skirmishes enfeebled. Here they shot, and Salisbury falls downe.

Salib. O Lord haue mercy on vs, wretched sinners.
Gargrave. O Lord haue mercy on me, wofull man.
Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath crost vs?
Speake Salisbury; at least, if thou canst, speake:

How far'st thou, Mirror of all Martiall men?
One of thy Eyes, and thy Cheekes side struck off?
Accursed Tower, accursed fatall Hand,
That hath contriu'd this wofull Tragedie.
In thirteene Battailles, Salisbury o'recame:
Henry the Fifth he first trayn'd to the Warres.
Whil'st any Trumpe did sound, or Drum struck vp,
His Sword did ne're leaue striking in the field.
Yet liu'st thou Salisbury? though thy speech doth fayle,
One Eye thou hast to looke to Heauen for grace.
The Sunne with one Eye vieweth all the World,
Heauen be thou gracious to none aliue,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands.
Beare hence his Body, I will helpe to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speake vnto Talbot, nay, looke vp to him.
Salisbury cheare thy Spirit with this comfort,
Thou shalt not dye whiles---
He beckens with his hand, and smiles on me:
As who should say, When I am dead and gone,
Remember to auenge me on the French.
Plantaginet I will, and like thee,
Play on the Lute, beholding the Townes burne:
Wretched shall France be onely in my Name.

Here an Alarum, and it Thunders and Lightens.
What stirre is this? what tumult's in the Heauens?
Whence commeth this Alarum, and the noyse?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Lord, my Lord, the French haue gather'd head,
The Dolphin, with one Ioane de Puzel ioynd,
A holy Prophetesse, new risen vp,
Is come with a great Power, to rayse the Siege.

Here Salisbury leaues himselfe vp, and growes.

Tal. Heare, heare, how dying Salisbury doth groane,
It irkes his heart he cannot be reueng'd.
Frenchmen, Ile be a Salisbury to you.
Puzel or Pussel, Dolphin or Dog-fish,
Your hearts Ile stampe out with my Horses heeles,
And make a Quagmire of your mingled braines,
Conuey me Salisbury into his Tent,
And then wee'll try what these dastard Frenchmen dare.

Alarum. Exeunt.

Here an Alarum againe, and Talbot pursueth the Dolphin, and drineth him: Then enter Ioane de Puzel, drinuing Englishmen before her.

Then enter Talbot.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?
Our English Troupes retyre, I cannot stay them,
A Woman clad in Armour chafeth them.

Enter Puzel.

Here, here shee comes. Ile haue a bowt with thee:
Deuill, or Devils Dam, Ile coniure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a Witch,
And straightway giue thy Soule to him thou seru'st.
Puzel. Come, come, 'tis onely I that must disgrace
thee.

Here they fight.

Tal. Heauens, can you suffer Hell so to preuaile?
My brest Ile burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my Armes slunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded Strumpet.

They fight againe.

Puzel. Talbot farwell, thy houre is not yet come,
I must goe Victuall Orleance forthwith:

A short Alarum: then enter the Towne with Souldiers.

O're-

O're-take me if thou canst, I scorne thy strength.
Goe, goe, cheare vp thy hungry-starued men,
Helpe Salisbury to make his Testament,
This Day is ours, as many more shall be.
Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a Potters Wheele,
I know not where I am, nor what I doe:
A Witch by feare, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troupes, and conquers as she lists:
So Bees with smoake, and Doves with noysome stench,
Are from their Hyues and Houses driuen away.
They call'd vs, for our fiercenesse, English Dogges,
Now like to Whelpes, we crying runne away.

A short Alarum.

Heare Countrey men, eyther renew the fight,
Or teare the Lyons out of Englands Coat;
Renounce your Soyle, giue Sheepe in Lyons stead:
Sheepe run not halfe so trecherous from the Wolfe,
Or Horle or Oxen from the Leopard,
As you flye from your oft-subdued slaues.

Alarum. Here another Skirmish.

It will not be, retyre into your Trenches:
You all consented vnto Salisburys death,
For none would strike a stroake in his reuenge.
Puzel is entred into Orleance,
In spight of vs, or ought that we could doe.
O would I were to dye with Salisbury,
The shame hereof, will make me hide my head.

Exit Talbot.

Enter on the Walls, Puzel, Dolphin, Reigneir, Alanfon, and Souldiers.

Puzel. Aduance our waving Colours on the Walls,
Releas'd is Orleance from the English.
Thus Ioane de Puzel hath perform'd her word.
Dolph. Diuine Creature, Astrea's Daughter,
How shall I honour thee for this successe?
Thy promises are like Adonis Garden,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitfull were the next.
France, triumph in thy glorious Prophetesse,
Recouer'd is the Towne of Orleance,
More blessed hap did ne're befall our State.
Reigneir. Why ring not out the Bells alowd,
Throughout the Towne?
Dolphin command the Citizens make Bonfires,
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the ioy that God hath giuen vs.

Alanfon. All France will be repleat with mirth and ioy,
When they shall heare how we haue play'd the men.

Dolph. 'Tis Ioane, not we, by whom the day is wonne:
For which, I will diuide my Crowne with her,
And all the Priests and Fryers in my Realme,
Shall in procession sing her endlesse prayse.
A stately Pyramis to her Ile reare,
Then Rhodophe's or Memphis euer was.
In memorie of her, when she is dead,
Her Althes, in an Vrne more precious
Then the rich-iewel'd Coffer of Darius,
Transported, shall be at high Festiuals
Before the Kings and Queenes of France.
No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry,
But Ioane de Puzel shall be France's Saint.
Come in, and let vs Banquet Royally,
After this Golden Day of Victorie.

Flowish. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Sergeant of a Band, with two Sentinels.

Ser. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noyse or Souldier you perceiue
Neere to the walles, by some apparant signe
Let vs haue knowledge at the Court of Guard.
Sent. Sergeant you shall. Thus are poore Seruitors
(When others sleepe vpon their quiet beds)
Constrain'd to watch in darknesse, raine, and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, and Burgundy, with scaling Ladders: Their Drummes beating a Dead March.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubted Burgundy,
By whose approach, the Regions of Artoys,
Wallon, and Picardy, are friends to vs:
This happy night, the Frenchmen are secure,
Hauing all day carow'd and banquetted,
Embrace we then this opportunitie,
As fitting best to quittance their deceite,
Contriu'd by Art, and balefull Sorcerie.
Bed. Coward of France, how much he wrongs his fame,
Dispaire of his owne armes fortitude,
To ioyne with Witches, and the helpe of Hell.

Bur. Traitors haue neuer other company.
But what's that Puzel, whom they tearme so pure?

Tal. A Maid, they say.

Bed. A Maid? And be so martiall?

Bur. Pray God she proue not masculine ere long:
If vnderneath the Standard of the French
She carry Armour, as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and conuerse with spirits,
God is our Fortresse, in whose conquering name
Let vs resolute scale their flinty bulwarkes.

Bed. Ascend braue Talbot, we will follow thee.

Tal. Not altogether: Better farre I guesse,
That we do make our entrance severall wayes:

That if it chance the one of vs do faile,
The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed; Ile to yond corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And heere will Talbot mount, or make his graue.
Now Salisbury, for thee and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appeare
How much in duty, I am bound to both.

Sent. Arme, arme, the enemy doth make assault.

Cry, S. George, A Talbot.

The French leape ore the walles in their shirts. Enter seuerall wayes, Bastard, Alanfon, Reigneir, halfe ready, and halfe vntready.

Alan. How now my Lords? what all vnreadie so?
Bast. Vntready? I and glad we scap'd so well.

Reig. Twas time (I trow) to wake and leaue our beds,
Hearing Alarums at our Chamber doores:

Alan. Of all exploits since first I follow'd Armes,
Nere heard I of a warlike enterprize

More

More venturous, or desperate then this.

Basf. I thinke this Talbot be a Fiend of Hell.

Reig. If not of Hell, the Heauens sure fauour him.

Alarf. Here commeth Charles, I maruell how he sped?

Enter Charles and Ioane.

Basf. Tut, holy Ioane was his defensue Guard.

Charl. Is this thy cunning, thou deccitfull Dame?

Didst thou at first, to flatter vs withall,

Make vs partakers of a little gayne,

That now our losse might be ten times so much?

Ioane. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?

At all times will you haue my Power alike?

Sleeping or waking, must I still preuayle,

Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?

Improuident Souldiors, had your Watch been good,

This sudden Mischiefe neuer could haue falne.

Charl. Duke of Alarf, this was your default,

That being Capitaine of the Watch to Night,

Did looke no better to that weightie Charge.

Alarf. Had all your Quarters been as safely kept,

As that whereof I had the government,

We had not bene thus shamefully surpriz'd.

Basf. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my Lord.

Charl. And for my selfe, most part of all this Night

Within her Quarter, and mine owne Precinct,

I was imploy'd in passing to and fro,

About relieuing of the Centinels.

Then how, or which way, should they first breake in?

Ioane. Question (my Lords) no further of the case,

How or which way; 'tis sure they found some place,

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made:

And now there rests no other shift but this,

To gather our Souldiors, scatter'd and disperct,

And lay new Plat-formes to endamage them.

Exeunt.

Alarf. Enter a Souldier, crying, a Talbot, a Talbot:
they flye, leauing their Clothes behind.

Sould. He be so bold to take what they haue left:

The Cry of Talbot serues me for a Sword,

For I haue loaden me with many Spoyles,

Vsing no other Weapon but his Name. Exit.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundie.

Bedf. The Day begins to breake, and Night is fled,

Whose pitchy Mantle ouer-vayl'd the Earth.

Here sound Retreat, and cease our hot pursuit. Retreat.

Talb. Bring forth the Body of old Salisbury,

And here aduance it in the Market-Place,

The middle Centure of this cursed Towne.

Now haue I pay'd my Vow vnto his Soule:

For every drop of blood was drawne from him,

There hath at least fise Frenchmen dyed to night,

And that hereafter Ages may behold

What ruine happened in reuenge of him,

Within their chiefeft Temple He creft

A Tombe, wherein his Corps shall be interr'd:

Vpon the which, that every one may reade,

Shall be engrau'd the sacke of Orleance,

The trecherous manner of his mournfull death,

And what a terror he had bene to France,

But Lords, in all our bloody Massacre,

I muse we met not with the Dolphins Grace,

His new-come Champion, vertuous Ioane of Acce,
Nor any of his false Confederates.

Bedf. 'Tis thought Lord Talbot, when the fight began,
Row'd on the sudden from their drowlie Beds,

They did amongst the treupes of armed men,

Leape o're the Walls for refuge in the field,

Burg. My selfe, as farre as I could well discern,

For smoake, and duskie vapours of the night,

Am sure I fear'd the Dolphin and his Trull,

When Arme in Arme they both came swiftly running,

Like to a payre of louing Turtle-Doues,

That could not lue asunder day or night.

After that things are set in order here,

Wee'll follow them with all the power we haue.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hayle, my Lords: which of this Princely trayne

Call ye the Warlike Talbot, for his Acts

So much applauded through the Realme of France?

Talb. Here is the Talbot, who would speak with him?

Mess. The vertuous Lady, Countesse of Euergne,

With modestie admiring thy Renowne,

By me entreates (great Lord) thou would'st vouchsafe

To visit her poore Castle where she lyes,

That she may boast she hath beheld the man,

Whose glory fills the World with lowd report.

Burg. Is it euen so? Nay, then I see our Wartes

Will turne vnto a peacefull Comick sport,

When Ladyes craue to be encountred with.

You may not (my Lord) despise her gentle suite.

Talb. Ne're trust me then: for when a World of men

Could not preuayle with all their Oratorie,

Yer hath a Womans kindnesse ouer-rul'd:

And therefore tell her, I returne great thanks,

And in submission will attend on her.

Will not your Honors beare me company?

Bedf. No, truly, 'tis more then manners will:

And I haue heard it sayd, Vnbidden Guests

Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Talb. Well then, alone (since there's no remedie)

I meane to proue this Ladyes courtesie,

Come hither Capitaine, you perceiue my minde.

Whispers.

Capt. I doe my Lord, and meane accordingly. Exeunt.

Enter Countesse.

Count. Porter, remember what I gaue in charge,

And when you haue done so, bring the Keyes to me.

Port. Madame, I will. Exit.

Count. The Plot is layd, if all things fall our right,

I shall as famous be by this exploit,

As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus death.

Great is the rumour of this dreadfull Knight,

And his atchieuements of no lesse account:

Faine would mine eyes be witness with mine eares,

To giue their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

Mess. Madame, according as your Ladyship desir'd,

By Message crau'd, so is Lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome: what? is this the man?

Mess. Madame, it is.

Count. Is this the Scourge of France?

Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad?

What with his Name the Mothers still their Babes?

I see Report is fabulous and false.

I thought I should haue seene some Heracles,

A second Hebor, for his grim aspect,

And large proportion of his strong knit Limbes.

Alas, this is a Child, a silly Dwarfie:

It cannot be, this weake and writhled Shrimpe

Should strike such terror to his Enemies.

Talb. Madame, I haue bene bold to trouble you:

But since your Ladyship is not at leysure,

We fort some other time to visit you.

Count. What meanes he now?

Goe aske him, whither he goes?

Mess. Stay my Lord Talbot, for my Lady craues,

To know the cause of your abrupt departure?

Talb. Marry, for that shee's in a wrong beleefe,

I goe to certifie her Talbot's here.

Enter Porter with Keyes.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou Prisoner.

Talb. Prisoner? to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirstie Lord:

And for that cause I trayn'd thee to my House.

Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,

For in my Gallery thy Picture hangs:

But now the substance shall endure the like,

And I will chayne these Legges and Armes of thine,

That hast by Tyrannie these many yeeres

Wasted our Countrey, flaine our Citizens,

And sent our Sonnes and Husbands captiuate.

Talb. Ha, ha, ha.

Count. Laughst thou Wretch?

Thy mirth shall turne to moane.

Talb. I laugh to see your Ladyship so fond,

To thinke, that you haue ought but Talbot's shadow,

Whereon to practise your feueritie.

Count. Why? art not thou the man?

Talb. I am indeede.

Count. Then haue I substance too.

Talb. No, no, I am but shadow of my selfe:

You are decei'd, my substance is not here;

For what you see, is but the smallest part,

And least proportion of Humanitie:

Tell you Madame, were the whole Frame here,

It is of such a spacious loftie pitch,

Your Roofe were not sufficient to contain't.

Count. This is a Riddling Merchant for the nonce,

He will be here, and yet he is not here:

How can these contraries agree?

Talb. That will I shew you presently.

Winds his Horne, Drummes strike vp, a Peale of Ordinance: Enter Souldiors.

How say you Madame? are you now perswaded,

That Talbot is but shadow of himselfe?

These are his substance, sinewes, armes, and strength,

With which he yoaeketh your rebellious Neckes,

Razeth your Cities, and subuerbs your Townes,

And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot, pardon my abuse,

I finde thou art no lesse then Fame hath bruided,

And more then may be gathered by thy shape.

Let my presumption not prouoke thy wrath,

For I am sorry, that with reuerence

I did not entertaine thee as thou art.

Talb. Be not dismay'd, faire Lady, nor misconsider

The minde of Talbot, as you did mistake

The outward composition of his body:

What you haue done, hath not offended me:

Nor other satisfaction doe I craue,

But onely with your patience, that we may

Taste of your Wine, and see what Cates you haue,

For Souldiers stomacks alwayes serue them well.

Count. With all my heart, and thinke me honored,

To feast so great a Warrior in my House. Exeunt.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, Somerset,

Poole, and others.

Torke. Great Lords and Gentlemen,

What meanes this silence?

Dare no man answer in a Case of Truth?

Suff. Within the Temple Hall we were too lowd,

The Garden here is more conuenient.

Torke. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the Truth:

Or else was wrangling Somerset in th'error?

Suff. Faith I haue bene a Truant in the Law,

And neuer yet could frame my will to it,

And therefore frame the Law vnto my will.

Som. Iudge you, my Lord of Warwicke, then betweene vs.

War. Between two Hawks, which flies the higher pitch,

Between two Dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,

Between two Blades, which beares the better temper,

Between two Horses, which doth beare him best,

Between two Girles, which hath the merryest eye,

I haue perhaps some shallow spirit of Iudgement:

But in these nice sharpe Quilllets of the Law,

Good faith I am no wiser then a Daw.

Torke. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance:

The truth appeares so naked on my side,

That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparrell'd,

So cleare, so shining, and so euiden,

That it will glimmer through a blind-mans eye.

Torke. Since you are tongue-ty'd, and so loth to speake,

In dumbe significants proclayme your thoughts:

Let him that is a true-borne Gentleman,

And stands vpon the honor of his birth,

If he suppose that I haue pleaded truth,

From off this Bryer pluck a white Rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no Coward, nor no Flatterer,

But dare maintaine the partie of the truth,

Pluck a red Rose from off this Thorne with me.

War. I loue no Colours: and without all colour

Of base insinuating flatterie,

I pluck this white Rose with Plantagenet.

Suff. I pluck this red Rose, with young Somerset,

And lay withall, I thinke he held the right.

Vernon. Stay Lords and Gentlemen, and pluck no more

Till you conclude, that he vpon whose side

The fewest Roses are crompt from the Tree,

Shall yeeld the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well obiected:

If I haue fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Torke. And I.

Vernon. Then for the truth, and plainesse of the Case,

I pluck this pale and Maiden Blossome here,

Giuing my Verdict on the white Rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off,

Lawyer. Vnlesse my Studie and my Bookes be false,
The argument you held, was wrong in you;
In signe whereof, I pluck a white Rose too.

Torke. Now Somerſet, where is your argument?

Som. Here in my Scabbard, meditating, that Shall dye your white Rose in a bloody red.

Torke. Meane time your cheeks do counterfeit our Roses:
For pale they looke with feare, as witnessing
The truth on our ſide.

Som. No Plantagenet:

'Tis not for feare, but anger, that thy cheekes
Blush for pure ſhame, to counterfeit our Roses,
And yet thy tongue will not confeſſe thy error.

Torke. Hath not thy Rose a Canker, Somerſet?

Som. Hath not thy Rose a Thorne, Plantagenet?

Torke. I, ſharpe and piercing, to maintaine his truth,
Whiles thy conſuming Canker eates his falſehood.

Som. Well, Ile find friends to weare my bleeding Roses,
That ſhall maintaine what I haue ſaid is true,
Where falſe Plantagenet dare not be ſcene.

Torke. Now by this Maiden Bloſſome in my hand,
I ſcorne thee and thy faſhion, peeuish Boy.

Suff. Turne not thy ſcornes this way, Plantagenet.

Torke. Prowd Poole, I will, and ſcorne both him and thee.

Suff. Ile turne my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William de la Poole,
We grace the Yeoman, by conuerſing with him.

Warw. Now by Gods will thou wrong'ſt him, Somerſet:

His Grandfather was Lyonel Duke of Clarence,

Third Sonne to the third Edward King of England:

Spring Cretleſſe Yeomen from ſo deepe a Root?

Torke. He beares him on the place's Priuiledge,

Or durſt not for his crauen heart ſay thus.

Som. By him that made me, Ile maintaine my words
On any Plot of Ground in Chriſtendome.

Was not thy Father, Richard, Earle of Cambridge,

For Treason executed in our late Kings dayes?

And by his Treason, ſtand'ſt not thou attainted,

Corrupted, and exempt from ancient Gentry?

His Treſpas yet liues guiltie in thy blood,

And till thou be reſtor'd, thou art a Yeoman.

Torke. My Father was attainted, not attainted,

Condemn'd to dye for Treason, but no Traytor;

And that Ile proue on better men then Somerſet,

Were growing time once ripened to my will.

For your partaker Poole, and you your ſelfe,

Ile note you in my Booke of Memorie,

To ſcourge you for this apprehenſion:

Looke to it well, and ſay you are well warn'd.

Som. Ah, thou ſhalt finde vs ready for thee ſtill:

And know vs by theſe Colours for thy Foes,

For theſe, my friends in ſpight of thee ſhall weare.

Torke. And by my Soule, this pale and angry Rose,

As Cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,

Will I for euer, and my Faction weare,

Vntill it wither with me to my Graue,

Or flouriſh to the height of my Degree.

Suff. Goe ſortward, and be choak'd with thy ambition:

And ſo farewell, vntill I meet thee next. Exit.

Som. Haue with thee Poole: Farewell ambitious Richard.

Torke. How I am brau'd, and muſt perforce endure it?

Warw. This blot that they obiect againſt your Houſe,

Shall be whipt out in the next Parliament.

Call'd for the Truce of Wincheſter and Glouceſter:

And if thou be not then created Torke,

I will not liue to be accounted Warwicke.

Meane time, in ſignall of my loue to thee,

Againſt proud Somerſet, and William Poole,

Will I vpon thy partie weare this Rose.

And here I propheticke: this brawle to day,

Grown to this faction in the Temple Garden,

Shall ſend betweene the Red-Rose and the White,

A thouſand Soules to Death and deadly Night.

Torke. Good Maſter Vernon, I am bound to you,

That you on my behalfe would pluck a Flower.

Ver. In your behalfe ſtill will I weare the ſame.

Lawyer. And ſo will I.

Torke. Thankes gentle.

Come, let vs foure to Dinner: I dare ſay,

This Quarrell will drinke Blood another day. Exeunt.

Enter Mortimer, brought in a Chaire, and laylors.

Mort. Kind Keepers of my weake decaying Age,
Let dying Mortimer here reſt himſelfe.

Euen like a man new haled from the Wrack,

So ſare my Limbes with long Imprisonment:

And theſe gray Locks, the Purſuiuants of death,

Nefor-like aged, in an Age of Care,

Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.

Theſe Eyes, like Lamps, whoſe waſting Oyle is ſpent,

Waxe dimme, as drawing to their Exigent.

Weake Shoulders, ouer-borne with burthening Griefe,

And pyth-leſſe Armes, like to a withered Vine,

That droupes his ſappe-leſſe Branches to the ground,

Yet are theſe Feet, whoſe ſtrength-leſſe ſtay is numme,

(Vnable to ſupport this Lumpe of Clay)

Swift-winged with deſire to get a Graue,

As witting I no other comfort haue.

But tell me, Keeper, will my Nephew come?

Keeper. Richard Plantagenet, my Lord, will come:

We ſent vnto the Temple, vnto his Chamber,

And anſwer was return'd, that he will come.

Mort. Enough: my Soule ſhall then be ſatisfied,

Poore Gentleman, his wrong doth equall mine.

Since Henry Monmouth firſt began to reigne,

Before whoſe Glory I was great in Armes,

This loathſome ſequeſtration haue I had;

And euen ſince then, hath Richard bene obſcur'd,

Depriu'd of Honor and Inheritance.

But now, the Arbitrator of Deſpaires,

Juſt Death, kinde Vmpire of mens miſeries,

With ſweet enlargement doth diſmiſſe me hence:

I would his troubles likewise were expir'd,

That ſo he might recouer what was loſt.

Enter Richard.

Keeper. My Lord, your louing Nephew now is come.

Mort. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?

Rich. I, Noble Vnckle, thus ignobly vs'd,

Your Nephew, late deſpised Richard, comes.

Mort. Direct mine Armes, I may embrace his Neck,

And in his Boſome ſpend my latter gaspe.

Oh tell me when my Lipſes doe touch his Cheekes,

That I may kindly giue one fainting Kiſſe.

And now declare Iwert Stem from Torke's great Stock,

Why diſt thou ſay of late thou wert deſpis'd?

Rich. Firſt

Rich. Firſt, leane thine aged Back againſt mine Arme,

And in that caſe, Ile tell thee my Diſcale.

This day in argument vpon a Caſe,

Some words there grew 'twixt Somerſet and me:

Among which teares, he vs'd his lawliſh tongue,

And did vpbraid me with my Fathers death;

Which obloquie ſet barres before my tongue,

Elle with the like I had requited him.

Therefore good Vnckle, for my Fathers ſake,

In honor of a true Plantagenet,

And for Alliance ſake, declare the cauſe

My Father, Earle of Cambridge, loſt his Head.

Mort. That cauſe (ſaire Nephew) that imprison'd me,

And hath decay'd me all my flowing Youth,

Within a loathſome Dungeon, there to pyne,

Was curſed Inſtrument of his deceaſe.

Rich. Diſcouer more at large what cauſe that was,

For I am ignorant, and cannot gueſſe.

Mort. I will, if that my fading breath permit,

And Death approach not, ere my Tale be done.

Henry the Fourth, Grandfather to this King,

Depoſ'd his Nephew Richard, Edwards Sonne,

The firſt begotten, and the lawfull Heire

Of Edward King, the Third of that Deſcent:

During whoſe Reigne, the Percies of the North,

Findeing his Vſurpation moſt vniuſt,

Endeuor'd my aduancement to the Throne.

The reaſon moſt theſe Warlike Lords to this,

Was, for that (young Richard thus remou'd,

Leauing no Heire begotten of his Body)

I was the next by Birth and Parentage:

For by my Mother, I deriu'd am

From Lionel Duke of Clarence, third Sonne

To King Edward the Third; whereas hee,

From John of Gaunt doth bring his Pedigree,

Being but fourth of that Heroick Lyne.

But marke: as in this haughtie great attempt,

They laboured, to plant the rightfull Heire,

I loſt my Libertie, and they their Liues.

Long after this, when Henry the Fiſt

(Succeeding his Father Bullingbrooke) did reigne;

Thy Father, Earle of Cambridge, then deriu'd

From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of Yorke,

Marrying my Siſter, that thy Mother was;

Again, in pitty of my hard diſtreſſe,

Leuied an Army, weening to redeeme,

And haue inſtall'd me in the Diademe:

But as the reſt, ſo fell that Noble Earle,

And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,

In whom the Title reſted, were ſuppreſt.

Rich. Of which, my Lord, your Honor is the laſt.

Mort. True; and thou ſeeſt, that I no Iſſue haue,

And that my fainting words doe warrant death:

Thou art my Heire; the reſt, I wiſh thee gather:

But yet be wary in thy Rudious care.

Rich. Thy graue admoniſhments preuayle with me:

But yet me thinkes, my Fathers execution

Was nothing leſſe then bloody Tyranny.

Mort. With ſilence, Nephew, be thou politick,

Strong fix'd is the Houſe of Lancaster,

And like a Mountaine, not to be remou'd.

But now thy Vnckle is remouing hence,

As Princes doe their Courts, when they are cloy'd

With long continuance in a ſeiled place.

Rich. O Vnckle, would ſome part of my young yeeres

Might but redeeme the paſſage of your Age.

Mort. Thou do'ſt then wrong me, as a ſlaughterer doth,

Which giueth many Wounds, when one will kill.

Mourne not, except thou ſorrow for my good,

Onely giue order for my Funerall.

And ſo farewell, and faire be all thy hopes,

And prosperous be thy Life in Peace and Warre. Dyes.

Rich. And Peace, no Warre, befall thy parting Soule.

In Priſon haſt thou ſpent a Pilgrimage,

And like a Hermite ouer-paſt thy dayes.

Well, I will locke his Councell in my Breſt,

And what I doe imagine, let that reſt.

Keepers conuey him hence, and I my ſelfe

Will ſee his Buryall better then his Life. Exit.

Here dyes the duſkie Torch of Mortimer,

Choakt with Ambition of the meaneſt fort.

And for thoſe Wrongs, thoſe bitter Injuries,

Which Somerſet hath offer'd to my Houſe,

I doubt not, but with Honor to redreſſe.

And therefore haſte I to the Parliament,

Eyther to be reſtored to my Blood,

Or make my will th'aduantage of my good. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Flouriſh. Enter King, Exeter, Gloſter, Wincheſter, Warwick,

Somerſet, Suffolk, Richard Plantagenet. Gloſter offers to put up a Bill: Wincheſter ſnatches it, reares it.

Winch. Com'ſt thou with deepe premeditated Lines?

With written Pamphlets, ſtudiouſly deuiz'd?

Humfrey of Gloſter, if thou canſt accuſe,

Or ought intend'ſt to lay vnto my charge,

Doe it without inuention, ſuddenly,

As I with ſudden, and extemporall ſpeech,

Purpoſe to anſwer what thou canſt obiect.

Glo. Preſumptuous Prielt, this place commands my patience,

Or thou ſhould'ſt finde thou haſt diſ-honor'd me.

I thinke not, although in Writing I prefer'd

The manner of thy vile outrageous Crimes,

That therefore I haue forg'd, or am not able

Verbatim to rehearſe the Methode of my Penne.

No Prelate, ſuch is thy audacious wickedneſſe,

Thy lewd, peſtiferous, and diſſentious pranks,

As very Infants prattle of thy pride.

Thou art a moſt pernicious Vſurer,

Froward by nature, Enemy to Peace,

Laciuous, wanton, more then well beſeemes

A man of thy Profeſſion, and Degree.

And for thy Trecherie, what's more manifeſt?

In that thou lay'd'ſt a Trap to take my Life,

As well at London Bridge, as at the Tower.

Beſide, I feare me, if thy thoughts were ſifted,

The King, thy Soueraigne, is not quite exempt

And makes him sore these Accusations forth.
But he shall know I am as good.

Gloster. As good?

Thou Bastard of my Grandfather.

Winch. I, Lordly Sir: for what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in anothers Throne?

Gloster. Am I not Protector, sawcie Priest?

Winch. And am not I a Prelate of the Church?

Gloster. Yes, as an Out-law in a Castle keepes,
And vseth it, to patronage his Theft.

Winch. Vnreuerent Gloster.

Gloster. Thou art reuerent,

Touching thy Spirituall Function, not thy Life.

Winch. Rome shall remedie this.

Warw. Roame thither then.

My Lord, it were your dutie to forbear.

Som. I see the Bishop be not once borne:

Me thinkes my Lord should be Religious,

And know the Office that belongs to such.

Warw. Me thinkes his Lordship should be humbler,
It fitteth not a Prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy State is toucht so neere.

Warw. State holy, or vnhallow'd, what of that?

Is not his Grace Protector to the King?

Rich. Plantagenet I see must hold his tongue,

Least it be said, Speake Sirha when you should:

Must your bold Verdict enterralke with Lords?

Else would I haue a fling at Wincheſter.

King. Vnckles of Gloster, and of Wincheſter,

The speciall Watch-men of our English Weale,

I would preuayle, if Prayers might preuayle,

To ioine your hearts in loue and amitie.

Oh, what a Scandall is it to our Crowne,

That two such Noble Peeres as ye should iarre?

Beleeue me, Lords, my tender yeeres can tell,

Ciuill dissention is a viperous Worme,

That gnawes the Bowels of the Common-wealth.

A noyse within. Downe with the Tawny-Coats.

King. What tumult's this?

Warw. An Vpore, I dare warrant,

Begun through malice of the Bishops men.

A noyse againe. Stones, Stones.

Enter Maior.

Maior. Oh my good Lords, and vertuous Henry,

Pitty the Citie of London, pittie vs:

The Bishop, and the Duke of Glosters men,

Forbidden late to carry any Weapon,

Haue fill'd their Pockets full of peeble stones;

And banding themselves in contrary parts,

Doe pelt so fast at one anothers Pate,

That many haue their giddy braynes knockt out:

Our Windows are broke downe in euery Street,

And we, for feare, compell'd to shut our Shops.

Enter in skirmish with bloody Pates.

King. We charge you, on allegiance to our selfe,

To hold your slaughtering hands, and keepe the Peace:

Pray Vnckle Gloster mitigate this strife.

1. Serving. Nay, if we be forbidden Stones, wee'le fall to it with our Teeth.

2. Serving. Doe what ye dare, we are as resolute.

Skirmish againe.

Gloster. You of my household, leaue this peeuisish broyle,

And let this vnaccustom'd fight aside.

3. Serv. My Lord, we know your Grace to be a man
Iust, and vpright; and for your Royall Birth,

Inferior to none, but to his Maieſtie:

And ere that we will suffer such a Prince,

So kinde a Father of the Common-weale,

To be disgraced by an Inke-horne Mate,

Wee and our Wiues and Children all will fight,

And haue our bodies slaughtred by thy foes.

1. Serv. I, and the very parings of our Nayles

Shall pitch a Field when we are dead.

Begin againe.

Gloster. Stay, stay, I say:

And if you loue me, as you say you doe,

Let me perswade you to forbear a while.

King. Oh, how this discord doth afflict my Soule,

Can you, my Lord of Wincheſter, behold

My fighes and teares, and will not once relent?

Who should be pittifull, if you be not?

Or who should study to preferre a Peace,

If holy Church-men take delight in broyles?

Warw. Yeeld my Lord Protector, yeeld Wincheſter,

Except you meane with obstinate repulſe

To slay your Soueraigne, and destroy the Realme,

You see what Mischiefe, and what Murther too,

Hath beene enacted through your enmitie:

Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Winch. He shall submit, or I will neuer yeeld.

Gloster. Compassion on the King commands me stoupe,

Or I would see his heart out, ere the Priest

Should euer get that priuiledge of me.

Warw. Behold my Lord of Wincheſter, the Duke

Hath banisht moodie discontented fury,

As by his smoothed Browes it doth appeare:

Why looke you still so sterne, and tragical?

Gloster. Here Wincheſter, I offer thee my Hand,

King. Fie Vnckle Beauford, I haue heard you preach,

That Mallice was a great and grievous sinne:

And will not you maintaine the thing you teach?

But proue a chiefe offender in the same.

Warw. Sweet King: the Bishop hath a kindly gyrd:

For shame my Lord of Wincheſter relent;

What shall a Child instruct you what to doe?

Winch. Well, Duke of Gloster, I will yeeld to thee

Loue for thy Loue, and Hand for Hand I giue.

Gloster. I, but I feare me with a hollow Heart.

See here my Friends and louing Countrey men,

This token serueth for a Flagge of Truce,

Betwixt our selues, and all our followers:

So helpe me God, as I dissemble not.

Winch. So helpe me God, as I intend it not.

King. Oh louing Vnckle, kinde Duke of Gloster,

How ioyfull am I made by this Contract.

Away my Masters, trouble vs no more,

But ioine in friendship, as your Lords haue done.

1. Serv. Content, Ile to the Surgeons.

2. Serv. And so will I.

3. Serv. And I will see what Physick the Tauerne affords. Exeunt.

Warw. Accept this Scrowle, most gracious Soueraigne,

Which in the Right of Richard Plantagenet,

We doe exhibite to your Maieſtie.

Gloster. Well vrg'd, my Lord of Warwick: for sweet Prince,

And if your Grace marke euery circumstance,

You haue great reason to doe Richard right,

Especially for those occasions

At Elham Place I told your Maieſtie.

King. And

King. And those occasions, Vnckle, were of force:

Therefore my louing Lords, our pleasure is,

That Richard be restored to his Blood.

Warw. Let Richard be restored to his Blood,

So shall his Fathers wrongs be recompenc'd.

Winch. As will the rest, so willet Wincheſter.

King. If Richard will be true, not that all alone,

But all the whole Inheritance I giue,

That doth belong vnto the House of Torke,

From whence you spring, by Lineall Descent.

Rich. Thy humble seruant vowes obedience,

And humble service, till the point of death.

King. Stoupe then, and set your Knee against my Foot,

And in requerdon of that dutie done,

I gyrt thee with the valiant Sword of Torke:

Rise Richard, like a true Plantagenet,

And rise created Princely Duke of Torke.

Rich. And so thrise Richard, as thy foes may fall,

And as my dutie springs, so perishe they,

That grudge one thought against your Maieſty.

All. Welcome high Prince, the mighty Duke of Torke.

Som. Perishe base Prince, ignoble Duke of Torke.

Gloster. Now will it best auail your Maieſtie,

To crosse the Seas, and to be Crown'd in France:

The presence of a King engenders loue

Amongst his Subiects, and his loyall Friends,

As it disinuates his Enemies.

King. When Gloster sayes the word, King Henry goes,

For friendly counsaile cuts off many Foes.

Gloster. Your Ships already are in readinesse.

Senet. Flourish. Exeunt.

Manet Exeter.

Exet. I, we may march in England, or in France,

Not seeing what is likely to ensue:

This late dissention growne betwixt the Peeres,

Burnes vnder fained ashes of forg'd loue,

And will at last breake out into a flame,

As festered members rot but by degree,

Till bones and flesh and sinewes fall away,

So will this base and enuious discord breed.

And now I feare that fatall Prophecie,

Which in the time of Henry, nam'd the Fifth,

Was in the mouth of euery sucking Babe,

That Henry borne at Monmouth should winne all,

And Henry borne at Windſor, loose all:

Which is so plaine, that Exeter doth wish,

His dayes may finish, ere that haplesse time. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pucell disguised, with foure Souldiours with Sacks upon their backs.

Pucell. These are the Citie Gates, the Gates of Roan,

Through which our Pollicy must make a breach.

Take heed, be wary how you place your words,

Talke like the vulgar sort of Market men,

That come to gather Money for their Corne.

If we haue entrance, as I hope we shall,

And that we finde the slouthfull Watch but weake,

Ile by a signe giue notice to our friends,

That Charles the Dolphin may encounter them.

Souldier. Our Sacks shall be a meane to sack the City.

And we be Lords and Rulers ouer Roan,

Therefore wee'le knock. Knock.

Watch. Che la.

Pucell. Peasants la pouvre gens de France,

Poore Market folkes that come to sell their Corne.

Watch. Enter, goe in, the Market Bell is rung.

Pucell. Now Roan, Ile shake thy Bulwarkes to the ground. Exeunt.

Enter Charles, Bastard, Alanſon.

Charles. Saint Dennis bleſſe this happy Stratageme,

And once againe wee'le sleepe secure in Roan.

Bastard. Here entered Pucell, and her Practisants:

Now she is there, how will the specific?

Here is the best and safest passage in.

Reig. By thrusting out a Torch from yonder Tower,

Which once discern'd, shewes that her meaning is,

No way to that (for weaknesse) which she entered.

Enter Pucell on the top, thrusting out a Torch burning.

Pucell. Behold, this is the happy Wedding Torch,

That ioyneth Roan vnto her Countrey men,

But burning fatall to the Talbonites.

Bastard. See Noble Charles the Beacon of our friend,

The burning Torch in yonder Turret stands.

Charles. Now shine it like a Commet of Reuenge,

A Prophet to the fall of all our Foes.

Reig. Deferre no time, delays haue dangerous ends,

Enter and cry, the Dolphin, presently,

And then doe execution on the Watch. Alarm.

An Alarm. Talbot in an Excursion.

Talb. France, thou shalt rue this Treason with thy teares,

If Talbot but suruiue thy Trecherie.

Pucell that Witch, that damned Sorceresse,

Hath wrought this Hellish Mischiefe ynauares,

That hardly we escap'd the Pride of France. Exit.

An Alarm: Excursions. Bedford brought in sick in a Chayre.

Enter Talbot and Burgonie without: within, Pucell, Charles, Bastard, and Reigier on the Walls.

Pucell. God morrow Gallants, want ye Corn for Bread?

I thinke the Duke of Burgonie will fast,

Before hee'le buy againe at such a rate.

'Twas full of Darnell: doe you like the taste?

Burg. Scoffe on vile Fiend, and shamelesse Curtizan,

I trust ere long to choake thee with thine owne,

And make thee curse the Haruest of that Corne.

Charles. Your Grace may starue (perhaps) before that time.

Bedf. Oh let no words, but deedes, reuenge this Treason.

Pucell. What will you doe, good gray-beard?

Breake a Lance, and runne a Tilt at Death,

Within a Chayre.

Talb. Foule Fiend of France, and Hag of all despight,

Incompas'd with thy lustfull Paramours,

Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant Age,

And twit with Cowardise a man halfe dead?

Damsell, Ile haue a bowt with you againe,

Or else let Talbot perishe with this shame.

Talb. Dare yee come forth, and meet vs in the field?
Pucell. Belike your Lordship takes vs then for fooles,
 To try if that our owne be ours, or no.

Talb. I speake not to that rayling Hecate,
 But vnto thee Alanson, and the rest.
 Will ye, like Souldiors, come and fight it out?

Alansf. Seignior no.

Talb. Seignior hang: base Muletters of France,
 Like Pefant foot-Boyes doe they keepe the Walls,
 And dare not take vp Armes, like Gentlemen.

Pucell. Away Captaines, let's get vs from the Walls,
 For Talbot meanes no goodnesse by his Lookes.
 God b'uy my Lord, we came but to tell you
 That wee are here. Exeunt from the Walls.

Talb. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
 Or else reproach be Talbots greatest fame.
 Vow Burgonie, by honor of thy Housfe,
 Prickt on by publike Wrongs sustain'd in France,
 Either to get the Towne againe, or dye.
 And I, as sure as English Henry liues,
 And as his Father here was Conqueror;
 As sure as in this late betrayed Towne,
 Great Cordeliers Heart was buried;
 So sure I sweare, to get the Towne, or dye.

Burg. My Vowes are equall partners with thy Vowes.

Talb. But ere we goe, regard this dying Prince,
 The valiant Duke of Bedford: Come my Lord,
 We will bestow you in some better place,
 Fitter for sicknesse, and for crasse age.

Bedf. Lord Talbot, doe not so dishonour me:
 Here will I sit, before the Walls of Roan,
 And will be partner of your weale or woe.

Burg. Courageous Bedford, let vs now perswade you.
Bedf. Not to be gone from hence: for once I read,
 That stout Pendragon, in his Litter sick,
 Came to the field, and vanquished his foes.
 Me thinkes I should reuiue the Souldiors hearts,
 Because I euer found them as my selfe.

Talb. Vndaunted spirit in a dying breast,
 Then be it so: Heauens keepe old Bedford safe.
 And now no more adoe, braue Burgonie,
 But gather we our Forces out of hand,
 And set vpon our boasting Enemie. Exit.

An Alarm: Excursions. Enter Sir Iohn Falstaffe, and a Captaine.

Capt. Whither away Sir Iohn Falstaffe, in such haste?
Falstf. Whither away? to saue my selfe by flight,
 We are like to haue the ouerthrow againe.

Capt. What? will you flye, and leaue Lord Talbot?
Falstf. I, all the Talbots in the World, to saue my life.

Capt. Cowardly Knight, ill fortune follow thee. Exit.

Retreat: Excursions. Pucell, Alanson, and Charles flye.

Bedf. Now quiet Soule, depart when Heauen please,
 For I haue seene our Enemies ouerthrow.
 What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
 They that of late were daring with their scoffes,
 Are glad and faine by flight to saue themselves.
Bedford dyes, and is carryed in by two in his Chaire.

An Alarm. Enter Talbot, Burgonie, and the rest.

Talb. Lost, and recovered in a day againe,
 This is a double Honor, Burgonie:
 Yet Heauens haue glory for this Victorie.

Burg. Warlike and Martiall Talbot, Burgonie
 Inshrines thee in his heart, and there erects
 Thy noble Deeds, as Valors Monuments.

Talb. Thanks gentle Duke: but where is Pucell now?

I thinke her old Familiar is asleepe.
 Now where's the Bastards braues, and Charles his glikes?
 What all amott? Roan hangs her head for grieffe,
 That such a valiant Company are fled.

Now will we take some order in the Towne,
 Placing therein some expert Officers,
 And then depart to Paris, to the King,

For there young Henry with his Nobles lye.

Burg. What wills Lord Talbot, pleasest Burgonie.

Talb. But yet before we goe, let's not forget
 The Noble Duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,
 But see his Exequies fulfill'd in Roan.
 A brauer Souldier neuer couched Launce,
 A gentler Heart did neuer sway in Court.
 But Kings and mightiest Potentates must die,
 For that's the end of humane miserie. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Charles, Bastard, Alanson, Pucell.

Pucell. Disday not (Princes) at this accident,
 Nor grieue that Roan is so recovered:
 Care is no cure, but rather corrosiue,
 For things that are not to be remedy'd.
 Let frantike Talbot triumph for a while,
 And like a Peacock sweepe along his tayle,
 Wee'll pull his Plumes, and take away his Trayne,
 If Dolphin and the rest will be but rul'd.

Charles. We haue been guided by thee hitherto,
 And of thy Cunning had no diffidence,
 One sudden Foyle shall neuer breed distrust.

Bastard. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
 And we will make thee famous through the World.
Alansf. Wee'll set thy Statue in some holy place,
 And haue thee reuerenc'd like a blessed Saint.
 Employ thee then, sweet Virgin, for our good.

Pucell. Then thus it must be, this doth Ioane deuise:
 By faire perswasions, mixt with sugred words,
 We will entice the Duke of Burgonie
 To leaue the Talbot, and to follow vs.

Charles. I marry Sweeting, if we could doe that,
 France were no place for Henries Warriors,
 Nor should that Nation boast it so with vs,
 But be extirped from our Prouinces.

Alansf. For euer should they be expuls'd from France,
 And not haue Title of an Earledome here.

Pucell. Your Honors shall perceiue how I will worke,
 To bring this matter to the wished end.

Hearke, by the sound of Drumme you may perceiue
 Their Powers are marching vnto Paris-ward.

Here sound an English March.
 There goes the Talbot, with his Colours spread,
 And all the Troupes of English after him. French

French March.

Now in the Rereward comes the Duke and his:
 Fortune in fauor makes him lagge behinde.
 Summon a Parley, we will talke with him.

Trumpets sound a Parley.

Charles. A Parley with the Duke of Burgonie.

Burg. Who craues a Parley with the Burgonie?

Pucell. The Princely Charles of France, thy Countrey-
 man.

Burg. What say'st thou Charles? for I am marching hence.

Charles. Speake Pucell, and enchaunt him with thy words.

Pucell. Braue Burgonie, vndoubted hope of France,
 Stay, let thy humble Hand-maid speake to thee.

Burg. Speake on, but be not ouer-tedious.

Pucell. Looko on thy Countrey, look on fertile France,
 And see the Cities and the Townes defect.

By wasting Ruine of the cruell Foe,

As looke the Mother on her lowly Babe,

When Death doth close his tender-dying Eyes,

See, see the pining Maladie of France:

Behold the Wounds, the most vnnatural Wounds,

Which thou thy selfe hast giuen her wofull Brest.

Oh turne thy edged Sword another way,

Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that helpe:

One drop of Blood drawne from thy Countreys Bosome,

Should grieue thee more then streames of forraine gore.

Returne thee therefore with a flood of Teares,

And wash away thy Countreys stayned Spots.

Burg. Either the hath bewitcht me with her words,

Or Nature makes me suddenly relent.

Pucell. Besides, all French and France exclaims on thee,

Doubting thy Birth and lawfull Progenie.

Who ioy'n't thou with, but with a Lordly Nation,

That will not trust thee, but for profits sake?

When Talbot hath set footing once in France,

And fashion'd thee that Instrument of Ill,

Who then, but English Henry, will be Lord,

And thou be thrust out, like a Fugitiue?

Call we to minde, and marke but this for prooffe:

Was not the Duke of Orleance thy Foe?

And was he not in England Prisoner?

But when they heard he was thine Enemie,

They set him free, without his Ranfome pay'd,

In sight of Burgonie and all his friends.

See then, thou fight'st against thy Countreymen,

And ioy'n't with them will be thy slaughter-men.

Come, come, returne; returne thou wandering Lord,

Charles and the rest will take thee in their armes.

Burg. I am vanquished:

These haughtie wordes of hers

Haue batt'rd me like roaring Cannon-shot,

And made me almost yeeld vpon my knees.

Forgiue me Countrey, and sweet Countreymen:

And Lords accept this heartie kind embrace.

My Forces and my Power of Men are yours.

So farwell Talbot, Ile no longer trust thee.

Pucell. Done like a Frenchman: turne and turne againe.

Charles. Welcome braue Duke, thy friendship makes vs freth.

Bastard. And doth beget new Courage in our Breasts.

Alansf. Pucell hath brauely play'd her part in this;

And doth deserue a Coronet of Gold.

Charles. Now let vs on, my Lords,
 And ioyne our Powers,
 And seeke how we may preiudice the Foe. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Winchester, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Warwick, Exeter: To them, with his Souldiors, Talbot.

Talb. My gracious Prince, and honorable Peeres,
 Hearing of your arrivall in this Realme,
 I haue a while giuen Truce vnto my Warres,
 To doe my dutie to my Soueraigne.
 In signe whereof, this Arme, that hath reclaym'd
 To your obedience, sittie Fortresses,
 Twelue Cities, and seuen walled Townes of strength,
 Beside siue hundred Prisoners of esteeme;
 Lets fall his Sword before your Highnesse feet:
 And with submissiue loyaltie of heart
 Ascribes the Glory of his Conquest got,
 First to my God, and next vnto your Grace.

King. Is this the Lord Talbot, Vnckle Gloucester,
 That hath so long bene resident in France?

Glost. Yes, if it please your Maiestie, my Liege.

King. Welcome braue Captaine, and victorious Lord.

When I was young (as yet I am not old)

I doe remember how my Father said,

A stouter Champion neuer handled Sword,

Long since we were resolu'd of your truth,

Your faithfull seruice, and your toyle in Warre:

Yet neuer haue you tasted our Reward,

Or bene reguerdon'd with so much as Thanks,

Because till now, we neuer saw your face.

Therefore stand vp, and for these good desertes,

We here create you Earle of Shrewsbury,

And in our Coronation take your place.

Senet. Flourish. Exeunt.

Manet Vernon and Basset.

Vern. Now Sir, to you that were so hot at Sea,
 Disgracing of these Colours that I weare,
 In honor of my Noble Lord of York;
 Dar'st thou maintaine the former words thou spak'st?

Bass. Yes Sir, as well as you dare patronage
 The enuious barking of your sawcie Tongue,
 Against my Lord the Duke of Somerset.

Vern. Sirrha, thy Lord I honour as he is.

Bass. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.

Vern. Hearke ye: not so: in witness take ye that.

Strikes him.

Bass. Villaine, thou knowest

The Law of Armes is such,

That who so drawes a Sword, 'tis present death,

Or else this Blow should breach thy dearest Bloud.

But Ile vnto his Maiestie, and craue,

I may haue libertie to venge this Wrong,

When thou shalt see, Ile meet thee to thy cost.

Vern. Well miscreant, Ile be there as soone as you,

And after meete you, sooner then you would.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter King, Gloucester, Winchester, Yorke, Suffolke, Somerset, Warwick, Talbot, and Governor Exeter.

Glo. Lord Bishop see the Crowne vpon his head.

Win. God saue King Henry of that name the sixt.

Glo. Now Governour of Paris take your oath,

That you elect no other King but him;

Esteeme none Friends, but such as are his Friends,

And none your Foes, but such as shall pretend

Malicious practises against his State:

This shall ye do, so helpe you righteous God.

Enter Falstaffe.

Fal. My gracious Soueraigne, as I rode from Calice,
To haste vnto your Coronation:

A Letter was deliuer'd to my hands,

Writ to your Grace, from th' Duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy, and thee:

I vow'd (base Knight) when I did meete the next,

To teare the Garter from thy Crauens legge,

Which I haue done, because (vnworthily)

Thou wast installed in that High Degree.

Pardon me Princely Henry, and therest:

This Dastard, at the battell of Poitiers,

When (but in all) I was sixe thousand strong,

And that the French were almost ten to one,

Before we met, or that a stroke was giuen,

Like to a trustie Squire, did run away.

In which assault, we lost twelue hundred men.

My selfe, and diuers Gentlemen beside,

Were there surpriz'd, and taken prisoners.

Then iudge (great Lords) if I haue done amisse:

Or whether that such Cowards ought to weare

This Ornament of Knighthood, yea or no?

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,

And ill becomming any common man;

Much more a Knight, a Captaine, and a Leader.

Tal. When first this Order was ordain'd my Lords,

Knights of the Garter were of Noble birth;

Valiant, and Vertuous, full of haughtie Courage,

Such as were growne to credit by the warres:

Not fearing Death, nor shrinking for Distresse,

But alwayes resolute, in most extreames.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,

Doth but vsurpe the Sacred name of Knight,

Prophaning this most Honourable Order,

And should (if I were worthy to be iudge)

Be quite degraded, like a Hedge-borne Swaine,

That doth presume to boast of Gentle blood.

K. Staine to thy Countrymen, thou hear'st thy doom:

Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight:

Henceforth we banish thee on paine of death.

And now Lord Protector, view the Letter

Sent from our Vnckle Duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What meanes his Grace, that he hath chaung'd his Stile?

No more but plaine and bluntly? (To the King.)

Hath he forgot he is his Soueraigne?

Or doth this churlish Superscription

Pretend some alteration in good will?

What's heere? I haue vpon especiall cause,

Mon'd with compassion of my Countreys wracke,

Together with the pittifull complaints

Of such as your oppression feedes vpon,

Forsoaken your pernicious Faction,

And ioy'd with Charles, the rightfull King of France.

O monstrous Treachery: Can this be so?

That in alliance, amity, and oathes,

There should be found such false dissembling guile?

King. What? doth my Vnckle Burgundy reuolt?

Glo. He doth my Lord, and is become your foe.

King. Is that the worst this Letter doth containe?

Glo. It is the worst, and all (my Lord) he writes.

King. Why then Lord Talbot there shal talk with him,

And giue him chastisement for this abuse.

How say you (my Lord) are you not content?

Tal. Content, my Lige? Yes: But y I am preuented,

I should haue begg'd I might haue bene employd.

King. Then gather strength, and march vnto him straight:

Let him perceiue how ill we brooke his Treason,

And what offence it is to flout his Friends.

Tal. I go my Lord, in heart desiring still

You may behold confusion of your foes.

Enter Vernon and Bassil.

Ver. Grant me the Combate, gracious Soueraigne.

Bass. And me (my Lord) grant me the Combate too.

Yorke. This is my Seruant, heare him Noble Prince.

Som. And this is mine (sweet Henry) fauour him.

King. Be patient Lords, and giue them leue to speak.

Say Gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaime,

And wherefore craue you Combate? Or with whom?

Ver. With him (my Lord) for he hath done me wrong.

Bass. And I with him, for he hath done me wrong.

King. What is that wrong, whereof you both complain

First let me know, and then Ile answer you.

Bass. Crossing the Sea, from England into France,

This Fellow heere with enuious carping tongue,

Vpbraid me about the Rose I weare,

Saying, the sanguine colour of the Leanes

Did represent my Masters blushing cheekes:

When stubbornly he did repugne the truth,

About a certaine question in the Law,

Argu'd betwixt the Duke of Yorke, and him:

With other vile and ignominious tearmes,

In confutation of which rude reproach,

And in defence of my Lords worthinesse,

I craue the benefite of Law of Armes.

Ver. And that is my petition (Noble Lord):

For though he seeme with forged queint conceits

To set a glosse vpon his bold intent,

Yet know (my Lord) I was prouok'd by him,

And he first tooke exceptions at this badge,

Pronouncing that the palenesse of this Flowet,

Bewray'd the faintnesse of my Masters heart.

Yorke. Will not this malice Somerset be left?

Som. Your priuate grudge my Lord of Yorke, will out,

Though ne're so cunningly you smother it.

King. Good Lord, what madnesse rules in brainesicke men,

When for so slight and friuolous a cause,

Such factious zelumations shall arise?

Good Cousins both of Yorke and Somerset,

Quiet your selues (I pray) and be at peace.

Yorke. Let this dissention first be tried by fight,

And then your Highnesse shall command a Peace.

Som. The quarrell toucheth none but vs alone,

Betwixt our selues let vs decide it then.

Yorke. There is my pledge, accept it Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bass.

Bass. Confirm it so, mine honourable Lord.

Glo. Confirm it so? Confounded be your strife,

And perish ye with your audacious prate,

Prefumptuous vassals, are you not ashamed

With this immodest clamorous outrage,

To trouble and disturb the King, and Vs?

And you my Lords, me thinkes you do not well

To beare with their peruerse Obiections:

Much lesse to take occasion from their mouthes,

To raise a mutiny betwixt your selues.

Let me perswade you take a better course.

Ext. It grieues his Highnesse,

Good my Lords, be Friends.

King. Come hither you that would be Combaters:

Henceforth I charge you, as you loue our fauour,

Quite to forget this Quarrell, and the cause:

And you my Lords: Remember where we are,

In France, amongst a fickle waucering Nation:

If they perceiue dissention in our lookes,

And that within our selues we disagree;

How will their grudging stomackes be prouok'd

To wilfull Disobedience, and Rebell?

Beside, What infamy will there arise,

When Forraigne Princes shall be certified,

That for a toy, a thing of no regard,

King Henries Peeres, and cheefe Nobility,

Destroy'd themselves, and lost the Realme of France?

Oh thinke vpon the Conquest of my Father,

My tender yeares, and let vs not forgoe

That for a trifle, that was bought with blood,

Let me be Vnper in this doubtfull strife:

I see no reason if I weare this Rose,

That any one should therefore be suspicious

Imore incline to Somerset, than Yorke:

Both are my kinsmen, and I loue them both.

As well they may vpray'd me with my Crowne,

Because (forsooth) the King of Scots is Crown'd.

But your discretions better can perswade,

Then I am able to instruct or teach:

And therefore, as we hither came in peace,

So let vs still continue peace, and loue.

Cosin of Yorke, we institute your Grace

To be our Regent in these parts of France:

And good my Lord of Somerset, vnite

Your Troopes of horsemen, with his Bands of foote,

And like true Subiects, sonnes of your Progenitors,

Go cheerefully together, and digest

Your angry Choller on your Enemies.

Our Selve, my Lord Protector, and the rest,

After some respite, will returne to Calice;

From thence to England, where I hope ere long

To be presented by your Victories,

With Charles, Alanson, and that Traiterous rout.

Exeunt. Manet Yorke, Warwick, Exeter, Vernon.

War. My Lord of Yorke, I promise you the King

Prettily (me thought) did play the Orator.)

Yorke. And so he did, but yet I like it not,

In that he weares the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush, that was but his fancie, blame him not,

I dare presume (sweet Prince) he thought no harme.

Yorke. And if I wish he did. But let it rest,

Other affaires must now be managed.

Flourish. Manet Exeter.

Exet. Well didst thou Richard to suppress thy voice:

For had the passions of thy heart burst out,

I feare we should haue seene decipher'd there

More rancorous spight, more furious raging broyles,

Then yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd:

But howsoere, no simple man that sees

This iarring discord of Nobilitie,

This shouldering of each other in the Court,

This factious bandying of their Fauourites,

But that it doth presage some ill euent.

'Tis much, when Scepters are in Childrens hands:

But more, when Envy breeds vnkinde deuision,

There comes the ruine, there begins confusion. Exit.

Enter Talbot with Trumpe and Drumme, before Burdeaux.

Tal. Go to the Gates of Burdeaux Trumpeter, Summon their Generall vnto the Wall. Sounds.

Enter Generall aloft.

English John Talbot (Captaine) call you forth,

Seruant in Armes to Harry King of England,

And thus he would. Open your Citie Gates,

Be humble to vs, call my Soueraigne yours,

And do him homage as obedient Subiects,

And Ile withdraw me, and my bloody power.

But if you frowne vpon this proffer'd Peace,

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,

Leane Famine, quartering Steele, and climbing Fire,

Who in a moment, euen with the earth,

Shall lay your stately, and ayre-brauing Towers,

If you forsake the offer of their loue.

Cap. Thou ominous and fearefull Owle of death,

Our Nations terror, and their bloody scourge,

The period of thy Tyranny approacheth,

On vs thou canst not enter but by death:

For I protest we are well fortified,

And strong enough to issue out and fight.

If thou retire, the Dolphin well appointed,

Stands with the snares of Warre to rangle thee.

On either hand thee, there are squadrons pitcht,

To wall thee from the liberty of Flight;

And no way canst thou turne thee for redresse,

But death doth front thee with apparant spoyle,

And pale destruction meets thee in the face:

Ten thousand French haue tane the Sacrament,

To ryue their dangerous Artillerie

Vpon no Christian soule but English Talbot:

Loe, there thou stand'st a breathing valiant man

Of an inuincible vnconquer'd spirit:

This is the latest Glorie of thy praise,

That I thy enemy dew thee withall:

For ere the Glasse that now begins to runne,

Finish the processe of his sandy houre,

These eyes that see thee now well coloured,

Shall see thee withered, bloody, pale, and dead.

Drum a farre off.

Harke, harke, the Dolphins drumme, a warning bell,

Sings heauy Musicke to thy timorous soule,

And mine shall ring thy due departure out. Exit

Tal. He Fables not, I heare the enemy:

Out some light Horsemen, and peruse their Wings.

O negligent and heedlesse Discipline,

How are we park'd and bounded in a pale?

A little Heard of Englands timorous Deere,

Maz'd with a yelping kennell of French Currees.

If we be English Deere, be then in blood,

Not Rascaill-like to fall downe with a pinch,

But rather moodie mad: And desperate Stagges,

Turne

Turne on the bloody Hounds with heads of Steele,
And make the Cowards stand aloofe at bay:
Sell every man his life as deere as mine,
And they shall finde deere Deere of vs my Friends.
God, and S. George, Talbot and Englands right,
Prosper our Colours in this dangerous fight.

Enter a Messenger that meets Yorke. Enter Yorke with Trumpet, and many Soldiers.

Yorke. Are not the speedy scouts return'd againe,
That dog'd the mighty Army of the Dolphin?
Mess. They are return'd my Lord, and give it out,
That he is march'd to Burdeaux with his power
To fight with Talbot as he march'd along.
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier Troopes then that the Dolphin led,
Which ioynd with him, and made their march for

(Burdeaux)
Yorke. A plague vpon that Villaine Somerset,
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were leuied for this siege.
Renowned Talbot doth expect my ayde,
And I am lowred by a Traitor Villaine,
And cannot helpe the noble Cheualier:
God comfort him in this necessity:
If he miscarry, farewell Warres in France.

Enter another Messenger.

2. Mess. Thou Princely Leader of our English strength,
Neuer so needfull on the earth of France,
Spurre to the rescue of the Noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waste of Iron,
And hem'd about with grim destruction:
To Burdeaux warlike Duke, to Burdeaux Yorke,
Else farewell Talbot, France, and Englands honor.

Yorke. O God, that Somerset who in proud heart
Doth stop my Cornets, were in Talbots place,
So should wee saue a valiant Gentleman,
By forsetting a Traitor, and a Coward:
Mad ire, and wrathfull fury makes me weepe,
That thus we dye, while remisse Traitors sleepe.

Mess. O send some succour to the distressed Lord.

Yorke. He dies, we loofe: I breake my warlike word:
We mourne, France smiles: We loofe, they dayly get,
All long of this vile Traitor Somerset.

Mess. Then God take mercy on braue Talbots soule,
And on his Sonne yong Iohn, who two houres since,
I met in trauaile toward his warlike Father;
This seuen yeeres did not Talbot see his sonne,
And now they meete where both their liues are done.

Yorke. Alas, what ioy shall noble Talbot haue,
To bid his yong sonne welcome to his Graue:
Away, vexation almost stoppes my breath,
That sundred friends greeke in the houre of death.
Lucie farewell, no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot ayde the man.

Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tourne, are wonne away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay. Exit

Mess. Thus while the Vulture of sedition,
Feedes in the bosome of such great Commanders,
Sleeping neglectiō doth betray to losse:
The Conquest of our searfe-cold Conqueror,
That euer-liuing man of Memorie,
Henrie the fift: Whiles they each other crosse,
Liues, Honours, Lands, and all, hurrie to losse.

Enter Somerset with his Armie.

Som. It is too late, I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by Yorke and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted. All our generall force,
Might with a fally of the very Towne
Be buckled with: the ouer-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his glosse of former Honor
By this vnheedfull, desperate, wilde aduenture:
Yorke set him on to fight, and dye in shame,
That Talbot dead, great Yorke might beare the name.

Cap. Heere is Sir William Lucie, who with me
Set from our ore-match forces forth for ayde.

Som. How now Sir William, whether were you sent?
Lu. Whether my Lord, from bought & sold L. Talbot,

Who ring'd about with bold aduersitie,
Cries out for noble Yorke and Somerset,
To beate assaying death from his weake Regions,
And whiles the honourable Capitaine there
Drops bloody sweat from his warre-wearied limbes,
And in aduantage lingring looks for rescue,
You his false hopes, the trust of Englands honor,
Keepe off aloofe with worthless emulation:
Let not your priuate discord keepe away
The leuied succours that should lend him ayde,
While he renowned Noble Gentleman
Yeeld vp his life vnto a world of oddes.
Orleance the Bastard, Charles, Burgundie,
Alanfon, Reignard, compasse him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. Yorke set him on, Yorke should haue sent him ayde.

Luc. And Yorke as fast vpon your Grace exclaimeth, Swearing that you with-hold his leuied host,
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lyes: He might haue sent, & had the Horse.
I owe him little Dutie, and lesse Loue,
And take foule scorn to fawne on him by sending.

Lu. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now intrapt the Noble-minded Talbot:
Neuer to England shall he beare his life,
But dies betraid to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come go, I will dispatch the Horsemen strait:
Within fixe houres, they will be at his ayde.

Lu. Too late comes rescue, he is tane or slaine,
For flye he could not, if he would haue fled:

And flye would Talbot neuer though he might.

Som. If he be dead, braue Talbot then adieu.

Lu. His Fame liues in the world. His Shame in you. Exit.

Enter Talbot and his Sonne.

Tal. O yong Iohn Talbot, I did send for thee
To tutor thee in stratagems of Warre,
That Talbots name might be in thee reuiu'd,
When saplesse Age, and weake vnable limbes
Should bring thy Father to his drooping Chaire.
But O malignant and ill-boading Starres,
Now thou art come vnto a Feast of death,
A terrible and vnaoyded danger:
Therefore deere Boy, mount on my swiftest horse,
And Ile direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sodaine flight. Come, dally not, be gone.

Iohn. Is my name Talbot? and am I your Sonne? Shall

And shall I flye? O, if you loue my Mother,
Dishonor not her Honorable Name,

To make a Bastard, and a Slaue of me:
The World will say, he is not Talbots blood,
That basely fled, when Noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Flye, to reuenge my death, if I be slaine.
Iohn. He that flies so, will ne're returne againe.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to dye.
Iohn. Then let me stay, and Father doe you flye:

Your losse is great, so your regard should be;
My worth vnknowne, no losse is knowne in me.

Vpon my death, the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.

Flight cannot stayne the Honor you haue wonne,
But mine it will, that no Exploit haue done.

You fled for Vantage, euery one will sweare:
But if I bow, they'll say it was for feare.

There is no hope that euer I will stay,
If the first howre I shrinke and run away:

Here on my knee I begge Mortalitie,
Rather then Life, preseru'd with Infamie.

Tal. Shall all thy Mothers hopes lye in one Tombe?
Iohn. I rather then Ile shame my Mothers Wombe.

Tal. Vpon my Blessing I command thee goe.
Iohn. To fight I will, but not to flye the foe.

Tal. Part of thy Father may be sau'd in thee.
Iohn. No part of him, but will be shame in mee.

Tal. Thou neuer hadst Renowne, nor canst not lose it.
Iohn. Yes, your renowned Name: shall slight abuse it?

Tal. Thy Fathers charge that cleare thee from y<sup>e</sup> flaine.
Iohn. You cannot witnesse for me, being slaine.

If Death be so apparant, then both flye.
Tal. And leaue my followers here to fight and dye?

My Age was neuer tainted with such shame.
Iohn. And shall my Youth be guiltie of such blame?

Nomore can I be seuered from your side,
Then can your selfe, your selfe in twaine diuide:

Stay, goe, doe what you will, the like doe I;
For hie I will not, if my Father dye.

Tal. Then here I take my leaue of thee, faire Sonne,
Borne to eclipse thy Life this afternoone:

Come, side by side, together liue and dye,
And Soule with Soule from France to Heauen flye. Exit.

Alarum: Excursions, wherein Talbots Sonne is hemm'd about, and Talbot rescues him.

Tal. Saint George, and Victory; fight Souldiers, fight:
The Regent hath with Talbot broke his word,

And left vs to the rage of France his Sword.
Where is Iohn Talbot? pawse, and take thy breath,

I gaue thee Life, and rescu'd thee from Death.
Iohn. O twice my Father, twice am I thy Sonne:

The Life thou gau'st me first, was lost and done,
Till with thy Warlike Sword, despight of Fate,

To my determin'd time thou gau'st new date.
Tal. When frō the Dolphins Crest thy Sword struck fire,

It warm'd thy Fathers heart with proud desire
Of bold-fac't Victorie. Then Leaden Age,

Quickend with Youthfull Spleene, and Warlike Rage,
Beat downe Alanfon, Orleance, Burgundie,

And from the Pride of Gallia rescued thee:
The irefull Bastard Orleance, that drew blood

From thee my Boy, and had the Maidenhood
Of thy first fight, I soone encountred;

And interchanging blowes, I quickly tied

Some of his Bastard blood, and in disgrace
Bespoke him thus: Contaminated, base,
And mis-begotten blood, I spill of thine,
Meane and right poore, for that pure blood of mine,

Which thou didst force from Talbot, my braue Boy.
Here purposing the Bastard to destroy,

Came in strong rescue. Speake thy Fathers care:
Art thou not wearie, Iohn? How do'st thou fare?

Wilt thou yet leaue the Battaille, Boy, and flie,
Now thou art seal'd the Sonne of Chualtrie?

Flye, to reuenge my death when I am dead,
The helpe of one stands me in little stead.

Oh, too much folly is it, well I wot,
To hazard all our liues in one small Boat.

If I to day dye not with Frenchmens Rage,
To morrow I shall dye with mickle Age.

By me they nothing gaine, and if I stay,
Tis but the shortning of my Life one day.

In thee thy Mother dyes, our Households Name,
My Deaths Reuenge, thy Youth, and Englands Fame:

All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
All these are sau'd, if thou wilt flye away.

Iohn. The Sword of Orleance hath not made me smart,
These words of yours draw Life-blood from my Heart.

On that aduantage, bought with such a shame,
To saue a paltry Life, and slay bright Fame,

Before yong Talbot from old Talbot flye,
The Coward Horse that beares me, fall and dye:

And like me to the peasant Boyes of France.
To be Shames scorn, and subiect of Mischance.

Surely, by all the Glorie you haue wonne,
And if I flye, I am not Talbots Sonne.

Then talke no more of flight, it is no boot,
If Sonne to Talbot, dye at Talbots foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desp'rate Syre of Crece,
Thou Icarus, thy Life to me is sweet:

If thou wilt fight, fight by thy Fathers side,
And commendable prou'd, let's dye in pride. Exit.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter old Talbot led.

Tal. Where is my other Life? mine owne is gone.
O, where's yong Talbot? where is valiant Iohn?

Triumphant Death, smear'd with Captiuitie,
Yong Talbots Valour makes me smile at thee.

When he perceiu'd me shrinke, and on my Knee,
His bloodie Sword he brandisht ouer mee,

And like a hungry Lyon did commence
Rough deeds of Rage, and sterne Impatience:

But when my angry Guardant stood alone,
Tendring my ruine, and assayl'd of none,

Dizzie-cy'd Furie, and great rage of Heart,
Suddenly made him from my side to start

Into the clustring Battaille of the French:
And in that Sea of Blood, my Boy did drench

His ouer-mounting Spirit; and there di'de
My Icarus, my Blossome, in his pride.

Enter with Iohn Talbot, borne.

Seru. O my deare Lord, loe where your Sonne is borne,
Tal. Thou antique Death, which laugh'st vs here to scorn,

Anon from thy insulting Tyrannie,
Coupled in bonds of perpetiuitie,

Two Talbots winged through the lither Skie,
In thy despight shall scape Mortalitie.

O thou whose wounds become hard fauoured death,
Speake to thy father, ere thou yeeld thy breath,
Braue death by speaking, whither he will or no:
Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy Foe.
Poore Boy, he smiles, me thinks, as who should say,
Had Death bene French, then Death had dyed to day.
Come, come, and lay him in his Fathers armes,
My spirit can no longer beare these harmes.
Souldiers adieu: I haue what I would haue,
Now my old armes are yong John Talbots graue. Dyes

Enter Charles, Alanfon, Burgundie, Bastard, and Pucell.

Char. Had Yorke and Somersfet brought rescue in,
We should haue found a bloody day of this.
Bast. How the yong whelpe of Talbot's raging wood,
Did flesh his punie-sword in Frenchmens blood.
Puc. Once I encountred him, and thus I said:
Thou Maiden youth, be vanquish't by a Maide.
But with a proud Maiesticall high scorne
He answer'd thus: Yong Talbot was not borne
To be the pillage of a Gyglet Wench:
So rushing in the bowels of the French,
He left me proudly, as vnworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtlesse he would haue made a noble Knight:
See where he lyes inhered in the armes
Of the most bloody Nurfier of his harmes.

Bast. Hew them to peeces, hack their bones assunder,
Whose life was Englands glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. Oh no forbear: For that which we haue fled
During the life, let vs not wrong it dead.

Enter Lucie.

Lu. Herald, conduct me to the Dolphins Tent,
To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissiue message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission Dolphin? Tis a meere French word:
We English Warriours wor not what it meanes.
I come to know what Prisoners thou hast tane,
And to suruey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners askst thou? Hell our prison is,
But tell me whom thou seek'st?

Luc. But where's the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant Lord Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury?
Created for his rare successe in Armes,
Great Earle of Walsford, Waterford, and Valence,
Lord Talbot of Goodring and Archiefield,
Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdon of Alton,
Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of Sheffield,
The thrice victorious Lord of Falcombridge,
Knight of the Noble Order of S. George,
Worthy S. Michael, and the Golden Fleece,
Great Marshall to Henry the sixt,
Of all his Warres within the Realme of France,

Puc. Heere's a silly stateli stile indeede:

The Turke that two and fiftie Kingdomes hath,
Writes not so tedious a Scile as this.

Him that thou magnifi'st with all these Titles,
Stinking and fly-blowne lyes heere at our feete.

Lucy. Is Talbot slaine, the Frenchmens only Scourge, Yout Kingdomes terror, and blacke Nemesis?
Oh were mine eye-balles into Bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might shoot them at your faces.
Oh, that I could but call these dead to life,
It were enough to fright the Realme of France.
Were but his Picture left amongst you here,

It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Giue me their Bodies, that I may beare them hence,
And giue them Buriall, as beseemes their worth.

Pucel. I thinke this yfstart is old Talbot's Ghost,
He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit:
For Gods sake let him haue him, to keepe them here,
They would but stinke, and putrifie the ayre.

Char. Go take their bodies hence.

Lucy. He beare them hence: but from their ashes shall be reard

A Phoenix that shall make all France affear'd.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with him what y' wilt.
And now to Paris in this conquering vaine,
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slaine. Exit.

Scena secunda.

SENNET.

Enter King, Gloucester, and Exeter.

King. Haue you perus'd the Letters from the Pope,
The Emperor, and the Earle of Arminack?

Glo. I haue my Lord, and their intent is this,
They humbly sue vnto your Excellence,
To haue a godly peace concluded of,
Betweene the Realmes of England, and of France.

King. How doth your Grace affect their motion?

Glo. Well (my good Lord) and as the only meanes
To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And stablish quietnesse on euery side.

King. I marry Vnckle, for I alwayes thought
It was both impious and vnnatural,
That such inmanity and bloody strife
Should reigne among Professors of one Faith.

Glo. Beside my Lord, the sooner to effect,
And surer binde this knot of amitie,
The Earle of Arminack neere knit to Charles,
A man of great Authoritie in France,
Proffers his onely daughter to your Grace,
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous Dowrie.

King. Marriage Vnckle? Alas my yeares are yong:
And fitter is my studie, and my Bookes,
Than wanton dalliance with a Paramour.
Yet call th' Embassadors, and as you please,
So let them haue their answers euery one:
I shall be well content with any choyce
Tends to Gods glory, and my Countries weale.

Enter Winchester, and three Ambassadors.

Exet. What, is my Lord of Winchester install'd,
And call'd vnto a Cardinalls degree?
Then I perceiue, that will be verified
Henry the Fift did sometime prophesie,
If once he come to be a Cardinall,
Hee'd make his cap coequall with the Crowne.

King. My Lords Ambassadors, your seuerall suites
Haue bin consider'd and debated on,
Your purpose is both good and reasonable:
And therefore are we certainly resolu'd,
To draw conditions of a friendly peace,

Which

Which by my Lord of Winchester we meane shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my Lord your Master,
I haue inform'd his Highnesse so at large,

As liking of the Ladies vertuous gifts,

Scena Tertia.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alanfon, Bastard, Reignier, and Ione.

Char. These newes (my Lords) may cheere our drooping spirits:

Tis said, the stout Parisians do reuolt,

And turne againe vnto the warlike French.

Alan. Then march to Paris Royall Charles of France,

And keepe not backe your powers in dalliance.

Pucel. Peace be amongst them if they turne to vs,

Else ruine combat with their Pallaces.

Enter Scout.

Scout. Successe vnto our valiant Generall,

And happinesse to his accomplies.

Char. What tidings send our Scouts? I prethee speak.

Scout. The English Army that diuided was

Into two parties, is now conioyn'd in one,

And meanes to giue you battell presently.

Char. Somewhat too sodaine Sirs, the warning is,

But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust the Ghost of Talbot is not there:

Now he is gone my Lord, you neede not feare.

Pucel. Of all base passions, Feare is most accurst.

Command the Conquest Charles, it shall be thine:

Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.

Char. Then on my Lords, and France be fortunate.

Exeunt. Alarum. Excursions.

Enter Ione de Pucell.

Puc. The Regent conquers, and the Frenchmen flye.
Now helpe ye charming Spelles and Periapts,
And ye choise spirits that admonish me,
And giue me signes of future accidents. Thunder.
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes

Vnder the Lordly Monarch of the North,
Appeare, and ayde me in this enterprize.

Enter Fiends.

This speedy and quicke appearance argues prooffe
Of your accustom'd diligence to me.

Now ye Familiar Spirits, that are cull'd

Out of the powerfull Regions vnder earth,

Helpe me this once, that France may get the field.

They walke, and speake not.

Oh hold me not with silence ouer-long:

Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,

Heleop a member off, and giue it you,

In earnest of a further benefit:

So you do condescend to helpe me now.

They hang their heads.

No hope to haue redresse: My body shall Pay recompence, if you will graunt my suite.

They shake their heads.

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,

Intreate you to your wonted furtherance?

Then take my soule; my body, soule, and all,

Before that England giue the French the foyle.

They depart.

See, they forsake me. Now the time is come,

That France must vale her lofty plumed Crest,

And let her head fall into Englands lappe.

My ancient Incantations are too weake,

And hell too strong for me to buckle with:

Now France, thy glory droopeth to the dust. Exit.

Excursions. Burgundie and Yorke fight hand to hand. French flye.

Yorke. Damsell of France, I thinke I haue you fast,
Vnchaine your spirits now with speling Charmes,
And try if they can gaine your liberty.

A goodly prize, fit for the diuels grace.

See how the vgly Witch doth bend her browes,

As if with Circe, she would change my shape.

Puc. Chang'd to a worse shape thou canst not be:

Yor. Oh, Charles the Dolphin is a proper man,

No shape but his can please your dainty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischeefe light on Charles, and thee,

And may ye both be sodainly surpriz'd

By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds.

Yorke. Fell banning Hagge, Inchantresse hold thy tongue.

Puc. I prethee giue me leaue to curse awhile.

Yorke. Curse Miscreant, when thou comst to the stake. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Suffolke with Margaret in his hand.

Suff. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.

Gazes on her.

Oh Fairest Beautie, do not feare, nor flye:

For I will touch thee but with reuerend hands,

I kisse these fingers for eternall peace,

And lay them gently on thy tender side.

Who art thou, say? that I may honor thee.

Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a King,

The King of Naples, who so ere thou art.

Suff. An Earle I am, and Suffolke am I call'd.

Be not offended Natures myracle,

Thou art allotted to be tane by me:

So doth the Swan her downie Signets saue,

Oh stay:

Keeping them prisoner vnderneath his wings:
Yet if this seruile vsage once offend,
Go, and be free againe, as Suffolkes friend. She is going
Oh stay: I haue no power to let her passe,
My hand would free her, but my heart sayes no.
As playes the Sunne vpon the glassie streames,
Twinkling another counterfetter beame,
So seemes this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.
Faine would I woo her, yet I dare not speake:
He call for Pen and Inke, and write my minde:
Eye De la Pole, dislabe not thy selfe:
Hast not a Tongue? Is she not heere?
Wilt thou be daunted at a Womans sight?
I: Beauties Princely Maiesty is such,
Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses rough.
Mar. Say Earle of Suffolke, if thy name be so,
What ranfome must I pay before I passe?
For I perceiue I am thy prisoner.
Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suite,
Before thou make a triall of her loue?
M. Why speakest thou not? What ranfome must I pay?
Suf. She's beautifull; and therefore to be wooed:
She is a Woman; therefore to be Wonne.
Mar. Wilt thou accept of ranfome, yea or no?
Suf. Fond man, remember that thou hast a wife,
Then how can Margaret be thy Paramour?
Mar. I were best to leaue him, for he will not heare.
Suf. There all is marr'd: there lies a cooling card.
Mar. He talkes at random: sure the man is mad.
Suf. And yet a dispensation may bee had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me:
Suf. He win this Lady Margaret. For whom?
Why for my King: Tush, that's a wooden thing.
Mar. He talkes of wood: It is some Carpenter.
Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,
And peace established betwene these Realmes.
But there remains a scruple in that too:
For though her Father be the King of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poore,
And our Nobility will scorn the match.
Mar. Heare ye Captaine? Are you not at leysure?
Suf. It shall be so, disdaine they ne're so much:
Henry is youthfull, and will quickly yeeld.
Madam, I haue a secret to reueale.
Mar. What though I be intral'd, he seems a knight
And will not any way dishonor me.
Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.
Mar. Perhaps I shall be refus'd by the French,
And then I need not craue his curtesie.
Suf. Sweet Madam, giue me hearing in a cause.
Mar. Tush, women haue bene captiuate ere now.
Suf. Lady, wherefore talke you so?
Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but Quid pro Quo.
Suf. Say gentle Princeesse, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a Queene?
Mar. To be a Queene in bondage, is more vile,
Than is a slave, in base serility:
For Princes should be free.
Suf. And so shall you,
If happy Englands Royall King be free.
Mar. Why what concerns his freedome vnto mee?
Suf. He vnder take to make thee Henries Queene,
To put a Golden Scepter in thy hand,
And set a precious Crowne vpon thy head,
If thou wilt condescend to be my
Mar. What?

Suf. His loue.
Mar. I am vnworthy to be Henries wife.
Suf. No gentle Madam, I vnworthy am
To wooe so faire a Dame to be his wife,
And haue no portion in the choice my selfe.
How say you Madam, are ye so content?
Mar. And if my Father please, I am content.
Suf. Then call our Capitaines and our Colours forth,
And Madam, at your Fathers Castle wailles,
Wee'l craue a parley, to conferre with him.
Sound. Enter Reignier on the wallles.
See Reignier see, thy daughter prisoner.
Reig. To whom?
Suf. To me.
Reig. Suffolke, what remedy?
I am a Souldier, and vnapt to weepe,
Or to exclaime on Fortunes sicklenesse.
Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough my Lord,
Consent, and for thy Honor giue consent,
Thy daughter shall be wedded to my King,
Whom I with paine haue wooed and wonne thereto:
And this her easie held imprisonment,
Hath gain'd thy daughter Princely libertie.
Reig. Speakes Suffolke as he thinks?
Suf. Faire Margaret knowes,
That Suffolke doth not flatter, face, or faine.
Reig. Vpon thy Princely warrant, I descend,
To giue thee answer of thy iust demand.
Suf. And heere I will expect thy coming.

Trumpets sound. Enter Reignier.

Reig. Welcome braue Earle into our Territories,
Command in Anjou what your Honor pleases.
Suf. Thanks Reignier, happy for so sweet a Childe,
Fit to be made companion with a King:
What answer makes your Grace vnto my suite?
Reig. Since thou dost daigne to wooe her little worth,
To be the Princely Bride of such a Lord:
Vpon condition I may quietly
Enjoy mine owne, the Countrey Maine and Anjou,
Free from oppression, or the stroke of Warre,
My daughter shall be Henries, if he please.
Suf. That is her ranfome, I deliuer her,
And those two Counties I will vnder take
Your Grace shall well and quietly enjoy.
Reig. And I againe in Henries Royall name,
As Deputy vnto that gracious King,
Giue thee her hand for signe of plightd faith.
Suf. Reignier of France, I giue thee Kingly thanks,
Because this is in Traffike of a King.
And yet me thinkes I could be well content
To be mine owne Attorney in this case.
He ouer then to England with this newes,
And make this marriage to be solemniz'd:
So farewell Reignier, set this Diamond safe
In Golden Pallaces as it becomes.
Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian Prince King Henry were he heere.
Mar. Farewell my Lord, good wishes, praise, & praier, Shall Suffolke euer haue of Margaret. She is going.
Suf. Farewell sweet Madam: but hearken you Margaret,
No Princely commendations to my King?
Mar. Such commendations as becomes a Maide,
A Virgin, and his Seruant, say to him.
Suf. Words sweetly plac'd, and modestie directed,

But Madame, I must trouble you againe,
Nolouing Token to his Maieesty?
Mar. Yes, my good Lord, a pure vnspotted heart, Neuer yet taint with loue, I send the King. Kisse her.
Suf. And this withall.
Mar. That for thy selfe, I will not so presume.
To send such peeith tokens to a King,
Suf. Oh wert thou for my selfe: but Suffolke stay,
Thou mayest not wander in that Labyrinth,
These Minotours and vgly Treasons lurke,
Solicite Henry with her wonderous praise.
Betwinke thee on her Vertues that surmount,
Mad naturall Graces that extinguish Art,
Repeat their semblance often on the Seas,
That when thou com'st to kneele at Henries feete,
Thou mayest becaue him of his wits with wonder. Exit
Enter Yorke, Warwick, Shepheard, Pucell.
Yor. Bring forth that Sorceresse condemn'd to burne.
Shep. Ah Ione, this kills thy Fathers heart out-right, Hue I fought euery Country farre and neere,
And now it is my chance to finde thee out,
Must I behold thy timelesse cruell death:
Ah Ione, sweet daughter Ione, He die with thee.
Pucell. Decrepit Miser, base ignoble Wretch,
I am descended of a gentler blood.
Thou art no Father, nor no Friend of mine.
Shep. Out, out: My Lords, and please you, 'tis not so
I did beget her, all the Parish knowes:
Her Mother liueth yet, can testifie
She was the first fruite of my Bachler-ship.
War. Gracelesse, wilt thou deny thy Parentage?
Yorke. This argues what her kinde of life hath beene,
Wicked and vile, and so her death concludes.
Shep. Fye Ione, that thou wilt be so obstacle:
God knowes, thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake haue I shed many a teare:
Deny me not, I prythee, gentle Ione.
Pucell. Pezant auant. You haue suborn'd this man
Of purpose, to obscure my Noble birth.
Shep. 'Tis true, I gaue a Noble to the Priest,
The morne that I was wedded to her mother.
Kneele downe and take my blessing, good my Gyrle.
Wilt thou not stoope? Now cursed be the time
Of thy natiuitie: I would the Milke
Thy mother gaue thee when thou suck't her brest,
Had bin a little Rats-bane for thy sake.
Or else, when thou didst keepe my Lambes a-field,
I wish some rauenous Wolfe had eaten thee.
Dost thou deny thy Father, cursed Drab?
O burne her, burne her, hanging is too good. Exit.
Yorke. Take her away, for she hath liu'd too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.
Puc. First let me tell you whom you haue condemn'd:
Not me, begotten of a Shepheard Swaine,
But issued from the Progeny of Kings.
Vertuous and Holy, chosen from above,
By inspiration of Celestiall Grace,
To worke exceeding myracles on earth.
I neuer had to do with wicked Spirits.
But you that are polluted with your lustes,
Stain'd with the guiltlesse blood of Innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thousand Vices:
Because you want the grace that others haue,
You iudge it straight a thing impossible
To compasse Wonders, but by helpe of diuels.

No misconceyued, Ione of Aire hath beene
A Virgin from her tender infancie,
Chaste, and immaculate in very thought,
Whose Maiden-blood thus rigorously effus'd,
Will cry for Vengeance, at the Gates of Heauen.
Yorke. J.I: away with her to execution.
War. And hearken ye first: because she is a Maide,
Spare for no Faggots, let there be enow:
Place barrells of pitch vpon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortned.
Puc. Will nothing turne your vnclement hearts?
Then Ione discouer thine infirmity,
That warranteth by Law, to be thy priuiledge.
I am with childe ye bloody Homicides:
Murder not then the Fruite within my Wombe,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.
Yor. Now heauen forfend, the holy Maid with child?
War. The greatest miracle that ere ye wrought,
Is all your strict precisenesse come to this?
Yorke. She and the Dolphin haue bin iugling,
I did imagine what would be her refuge.
War. Well go too, we'll haue no Bastards liue,
Especially since Charles must Father it.
Puc. You are decey'd, my childe is none of his;
It was Alanson that inoy'd my loue.
Yorke. Alanson that notorious Macheuile?
It dyes, and if it had a thousand liues,
Puc. Oh giue me leaue, I haue deluded you,
'Twas neyther Charles, nor yet the Duke I nam'd,
But Reignier King of Naples that preuayl'd.
War. A married man, that's most intollerable?
Yor. Why here's a Gyrle: I think she knowes not well
(There were so many) whom she may accuse.
War. It's signe she hath beene liberal and free.
Yor. And yet forsooth she is a Virgin pure,
Strumpet, thy words condemne thy Brat, and thee:
Vse no intreaty, for it is in vaine.
Pa. Then lead me hence: with whom I leaue my curse,
May neuer glorious Sunne reflex his beames
Vpon the Countrey where you make abode:
But darknesse, and the gloomy shade of death
Inuiron you, till Mischeefe and Dispaire, Driue you to break your necks, or hang your selues. Exit
Enter Cardinall.
Yorke. Breake thou in peeces, and consume to ashes,
Thou fowle accursed minister of Hell.
Car. Lord Regent, I do greete your Excellence.
With Letters of Commission from the King,
For know my Lords, the States of Christendome,
Mou'd with remorse of these out-ragious broyles,
Haue earnestly implor'd a generall peace,
Betwixt our Nation, and the aspyring French;
And heere at hand, the Dolphin and his Traiue
Approacheth, to conferre about some matter.
Yorke. Is all our trauell turn'd to this effect,
After the slaughter of so many Peeres,
So many Capitaines, Gentlemen, and Soldiers,
That in this quarrell haue beene overthrowne,
And sold their bodies for their Countreys benefit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Haue we not lost most part of all the Townes,
By Treason, Falshood, and by Treacherie,
Our great Progenitors had conquered:
Oh Warwick, Warwick, I foresee with greefe
The vtter losse of all the Realme of France.
War. Be patient Yorke, if we conclude a Peace

It shall be with such strict and seuerer Couenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gaine thereby.

Enter Charles, Alanfon, Bastard, Reigner.

Char. Since Lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peacefull truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by your selues,
What the conditions of that league must be.
Torke. Speake Winchester, for boyling choller chokes
The hollow passage of my poyson'd voyce,
By fight of these our balefull enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:
That in regard King Henry giues consent,
Of meere compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your Countrie of distressed Warre,
And suffer you to breath in fruitfull peace,
You shall become true Liegemen to his Crowne.
And Charles, vpon condition thou wilt sweare
To pay him tribute, and submit thy selfe,
Thou shalt be plac'd as Viceroy vnder him,
And still enjoy thy Regall dignity.

Alan. Must he be then as shadow of himselfe?
Adorne his Temples with a Coronet,
And yet in substance and authority,
Retaine but priuiledge of a priuie man?
This proffer is absurd, and reasonlesse.

Char. 'Tis knowne already that I am posselt
With more then halfe the Gallian Territories,
And therein reuerend'd for their lawfull King.
Shall I for lucre of the rest vn-vanquish't,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but Viceroy of the whole?
No Lord Ambassador, Ile rather keepe
That which I haue, than coueting for more
Be cast from possibilty of all.

Torke. Insulting Charles, hast thou by secret meanes
Vs'd intercession to obtaine a league,
And now the matter growes to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloofe vpon Comparison.
Either accept the Title thou vsurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our King,
And not of any challenge of Desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant Wartes.

Reig. My Lord, you do not well in obstinacy,
To caull in the course of this Contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one
We shall not finde like opportunity.

Alan. To say the truth, it is your policie,
To saue your Subjects from such massacre
And ruthlesse slaughters as are dayly seene
By our proceeding in Hostility,
And therefore take this compact of a Truce,
Although you breake it, when your pleasure serues.

War. How sayst thou Charles?

Shall our Condition stand?

Char. It shall.

Onely refer'd, you claime no interest

In any of our Townes of Garrison.

Tor. Then sweare Allegiance to his Maesty,

As thou art Knight, neuer to disobey,

Nor be rebellious to the Crowne of England,

Thou nor thy Nobles, to the Crowne of England.

So, now dismiss your Army when ye please:

Hang vp your Ensignes, let your Drummes be still,

For heere we entertaine a solemne peace.

Exit

Actus Quintus.

Enter Suffolke in conference with the King,
Gloucester, and Exeter.

King. Your wondrous rare description (noble Earle)
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her vertues graced with externall gifts,
Do breed Loues settled passions in my heart,
And like as rigour of tempestuous gustes
Provokes the mightiest Hulke against the tide,
So am I driven by breath of her Renowne,
Either to suffer Shipwracke, or arrive
Where I may haue fruition of her Loue.

Suf. Tush my good Lord, this superficial tale,
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The cheefe perfections of that lovely Dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to vter them)
Would make a volume of inticing lines,
Able to rauish any dull conceit.
And which is more, she is not so Diuine,
So full replete with choice of all delights,
But with as humble lowlinesse of minde,
She is content to be at your command:
Command I meane, of Vertuous chaste intents,
To Loue, and Honor Henry as her Lord.

King. And otherwise, will Henry ne're presume:
Therefore my Lord Protector, giue consent,
That Margaret may be Englands Royall Queene.

Glo. So should I giue consent to flatter him,
You know (my Lord) your Highnesse is betroath'd
Vnto another Lady of esteeme,
How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not deface your Honor with reproach?

Suf. As doth a Ruler with vnlawfull Oathes,
Or one that at a Triumph, hauing vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the Lifes
By reason of his Adversaries oddes.
A poore Easles daughter is vnequall oddes,
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Gloucester. Why what (I pray) is Margaret more then thou?

Her Father is no better than an Earle,
Although in glorious Titles he excell.

Suf. Yes my Lord, her Father is a King,
The King of Naples, and Ierusalem,
And of such great Authoritie in France,
As his alliance will confirme our peace,
And keepe the Frenchmen in Allegiance.

Glo. And so the Earle of Arminacke may doe,
Because he is neerer Kinsman vnto Charles.

Exet. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal dower,
Where Reigner sooner will receyue, than giue.

Suf. A Dower my Lords? Disgrace not to your King,
That he should be so abiect, base, and poore,
To chooseth for wealth, and not for perfect Loue.
Henry is able to enrich his Queene,
And not to seeke a Queene to make him rich,
So worthlesse Pezants bargain for their Wiues,
As Market men for Oxen, Sheepe, or Horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Then to be dealt in by Attorneyship:
Not whom we will, but whom his Grace affects,

Must

Must be companion of his Nuptiall bed.
And therefore Lords, since he affects her most,
Most of all these reasons bindeth vs,
In our opinions she should be prefer'd.
For what is wedlocke forced? but a Hell,
An Age of discord and continuall strife,
Whereas the contrarie bringeth blisse,
And is a patterne of Celestiall peace.
Whom should we match with Henry being a King,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a King:
Her peerlesse feature, ioyned with her birth,
Approoves her fit for none, but for a King.
Her valiant courage, and vndaunted spirit,
(More then in women commonly is seene)
Will answer our hope in issue of a King.
For Henry, sonne vnto a Conqueror,
Is likely to beget more Conquerors,
If with a Lady of so high resolute,
(As is faire Margaret) he be link'd in loue.
Then yeeld my Lords, and heere conclude with mee,
That Margaret shall be Queene, and none but shee.
King. Whether it be through force of your report,
My Noble Lord of Suffolke: Or for that
My tender youth was neuer yet attain't
With any passion of inflaming loue,
I cannot tell: but this I am assur'd,

I feele such sharpe dissention in my breast,
Such fierce alarums both of Hope and Feare,
As I am sicke with working of my thoughts.
Take therefore shipping, poste my Lord to France,
Agree to any couenants, and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To crosse the Seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henrys faithfull and annointed Queene.
For your expences and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather vp a tenth.
Be gone I say, for till you do returne,
I rest perplexed with a thousand Cares.
And you (good Vnckle) banish all offence:
If you do censure me, by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sodaine execution of my will.
And so conduct me, where from company,
I may reuolue and ruminare my griefe.
Glo. I griefe I feare me, both at first and last.

Exit.

Exit Gloucester.

Suf. Thus Suffolke hath prouail'd, and thus he goes
As did the youthfull Paris once to Greece,
With hope to finde the like euent in loue,
But prosper better than the Troian did:
Margaret shall now be Queene, and rule the King:
But I will rule both her, the King, and Realme.

Exit

The

The second Part of Henry the Sixt, with the death of the Good Duke HUMFREY.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Flourish of Trumpets: Then Hoboyes.

Enter King, Duke Humfrey, Salisbury, Warwicke, and Bedford on the one side.

The Queene, Suffolke, Yorke, Somerset, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suffolke.

As by your high Imperiall Maiesty,
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As Procurator to your Excellence,
To marry Princes Margaret for your Grace;
So in the Famous Ancient City, Towres,
In presence of the Kings of France, and Sicill,
The Dukes of Orleance, Calaber, Britaigne, and Alanson,
Seuen Earles, twelue Barons, & twenty reuerend Bishops
I haue perform'd my Taske, and was espous'd,
And humbly now vpon my bended knee,
In sight of England, and her Lordly Peeres,
Deliu' vp my Title in the Queene

To your most gracious hands, that are the Substance
Of that great Shadow I did represent:
The happiest Gift, that euer Marquesse gaue,
The fairest Queene, that euer King recei'd.

King. Suffolke arise. Welcome Queene Margaret,
I can expresse no kinder signe of Loue
Then this kinde kisse: O Lord, that lends me life,
Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness:
For thou hast giuen me in this beauteous Face
A world of earthly blessings to my soule,
If Simpathy of Loue vnite our thoughts.

Queen. Great King of England, & my gracious Lord,
The mutuall conference that my minde hath had,
By day, by night; waking, and in my dreames,
In Courtly company, or at my Beades,
With you mine Alder liefest Soueraigne,
Makes me the bolder to salute my King,
With ruder termes, such as my wit affords,
And ouer joy of heart doth minister.

King. Her sight did rauish, but her grace in Speech,
Her words yclad with wisdomes Maiesty,
Makes me from Wondring, fall to Weeping ioyes,
Such is the Fulnesse of my hearts content.

Lords, with one cheerefull voice, Welcome my Loue.
All kneel. Long liue Qu. Margaret, Englands happines, Queene. We thanke you all.

Flourish

Suf. My Lord Protector, so it please your Grace,
Heere are the Articles of contracted peace,
Betwene our Soueraigne, and the French King Charles,
For eightene moneths concluded by consent.

Glo. Reads. Inprimis, It is agreed betwene the French King, Charles, and William de la Pole Marquesse of Suffolke, Ambassador for Henry King of England, That the said Henry shall espouse the Lady Margaret, daughter vnto Reigner King of Naples, Sicilia, and Ierusalem, and Crowne her Queene of England, ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.

Item, That the Duchy of Anion, and the County of Maine, shall be released and deliuered to the King her father.

King. Vnkle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me gracious Lord,
Some sodaine qualme hath stricke me at the heart,
And dim'd mine eyes; that I can reade no further.

King. Vnkle of Winchester, I pray read on.

Win. Item, It is further agreed betwene them, That the Duchesse of Anion and Maine, shall be released and deliuered ouer to the King her Father, and shce sent ouer of the King of Englands owne proper Cost and Charges, without hauing any Dowry.

King. They please vs well. Lord Marques kneel down,
We heere create thee the first Duke of Suffolke,
And girt thee with the Sword. Cofin of Yorke,
We heere discharge your Grace from being Regent
Ith parts of France, till terme of eightene Moneths
Be full expy'd. Thankes Vnkle Winchester, Gloster, Yorke, Buckingham, Somerset,
Salisbury, and Warwicke.

We thanke you all for this great fauour done,
In entertainment to my Princely Queene.
Come, let vs in, and with all speede provide
To see her Coronation be perform'd.

Exit King, Queene, and Suffolke.

Manet the rest.

Glo. Braue Peeres of England, Pillars of the State,
To you Duke Humfrey must vnload his greefe:
Your greefe, the common greefe of all the Land,
What? did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coine, and people in the warres?
Did he so often lodge in open field:
In Winters cold, and Summers parching heate,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toyle his wits,

To

To keepe by policy what Henrie got:
Haue you your selues, Somerset, Buckingham,

Braue Yorke, Salisbury, and victorious Warwicke,
Recei'd deepe scarres in France and Normandie:

Or hath mine Vnkle Bedford, and my selfe,
With all the Learned Counsell of the Realme,

Studied so long, sat in the Councell house,
Early and late, debating too and fro

How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe,
And hath his Highnesse in his infancie,

Crowned in Paris in despite of foes,
And shall these Labours, and these Honours dye?

Shall Henries Conquest, Bedfords vigilance,
Your Deeds of Warre, and all our Counsell dye?

O Peeres of England, shamefull is this League,
Fatal this Marriage, cancelling your Fame,

Blotting your names from Bookes of memory,
Racing the Chara'cters of your Renowne,

Defacing Monuments of Conquer'd France,
Vndoing all as all had neuer bin.

Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse?
This preroration with such circumstance:

For France, 'tis ours; and we will keepe it still.
Glo. I Vnkle, we will keepe it, if we can:

But now 'tis impossible we should.

Suffolke, the new made Duke that rules the roost,
Hath giuen the Duchy of Anion and Maine,

Vnto the poore King Reigner, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

Sal. Now by the death of him that dyed for all,
These Counties were the Keyes of Normandie:

But wherefore weepes Warwicke, my valiant sonne?
War. For greefe that they are past recouerie.

For were there hope to conquer them againe,
My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no teares.

Anion and Maine? My selfe did win them both:
Those Prouinces, these Armes of mine did conquer,

And are the Cities that I got with wounds,
Deliu'd vp againe with peacefull words?

Mort Dieu.

Yorke. For Suffolkes Duke, may he be suffocate,
That dims the Honor of this Watlike Isle:

France should haue torne and rent my very hart,
Before I would haue yeelded to this League.

I neuer read but Englands Kings haue had Large summes of Gold, and Dowries with their wiues,

And our King Henry giues away his owne,
To match with her that brings no vantages.

Hum. A proper iest, and neuer heard before,
That Suffolke should demanda whole Fifteenth,

For Costs and Charges in transporting her:
She should haue staid in France, and steru'd in France

Before.

Car. My Lord of Gloster, now ye grow too hot,
It was the pleasure of my Lord the King.

Hum. My Lord of Winchester I know your minde.
Tis not my speeches that you do mislike:

But 'tis my presence that doth trouble ye,
Rancour will out, proud Prelate, in thy face.

I see thy furie: If I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings:

Lordings farewell, and say when I am gone,
I prophesied, France will be lost ere long. Exit Humfrey.

Car. So, there goes our Protector in a rage:
Tis knowne to you he is mine enemy:

Nay more, an enemy vnto you all,

And no great friend, I feare me to the King:

Confider Lords, he is the next of blood,
And heyre apparant to the English Crowne:

Had Henrie got an Empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy Kingdomes of the West,

There's reason he should be displeas'd at it:
Looke to it Lords, let not his smoothing words

Bewitch your hearts, be wise and circumspect.
What though the common people fauour him,

Calling him, Humfrey the good Duke of Gloster,
Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voyce,

Iesu maintaine your Royall Excellence,
With God preterue the good Duke Humfrey:

I feare me Lords, for all this flattering glosse,
He will be found a dangerous Protector.

Buc. Why should he then protect our Soueraigne?
He being of age to gouerne of himselfe.

Cofin of Somerset, ioyne you with me,
And altogether with the Duke of Suffolke,

Wee'l quickly hoysse Duke Humfrey from his seat.
Car. This weighty businesse will not brooke delay,

Ile to the Duke of Suffolke presently. Exit Cardinall.

Som. Cofin of Buckingham, though Humfries pride
And greunesse of his place be greefe to vs,

Yet let vs watch the haughtie Cardinall,
His insolence is more intollerable

Then all the Princes in the Land beside,
If Gloster be displac'd, hee'l be Protector.

Buc. Or thou, or I Somerset will be Protectors, Despite Duke Humfrey, or the Cardinall.

Exit Buckingham, and Somerset.

Sal. Pride went before, Ambition followes him.
While these do labour for their owne preferment,

Behoooves it vs to labor for the Realme.
I neuer saw but Humfrey Duke of Gloster,

Did beare him like a Noble Gentleman:
Of haue I seene the haughty Cardinall,

More like a Souldier then a man o'th Church,
As stout and proud as he were Lord of all,

Sweare like a Ruffian, and demeane himselfe
Vnlike the Ruler of a Common-weale.

Warwicke my sonne, the comfort of my age,
Thy deeds, thy plainnesse, and thy house-keeping,

Hath wonne the greatest fauour of the Commons,
Excepting none but good Duke Humfrey.

And Brother Yorke, thy Acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to ciuill Discipline:

Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wert Regent for our Soueraigne,

Haue made thee fear'd and honor'd of the people,
Ioyne we together for the publike good,

In what we can, to bridle and suppress
The pride of Suffolke, and the Cardinall.

With Somersets and Buckinghams Ambition,
And as we may, cherish Duke Humfries deeds,

While they do tend the profit of the Land.
War. So God helpe Warwicke, as he loues the Land,

And common profit of his Country.

Yor. And so sayes Yorke,
For he hath greatest cause.

Salisbury. Then lets make hast away,
And looke vnto the maine.

Warwicke. Vnto the maine?

Oh Father, Maine is lost,

That Maine, which by maine force Warwicke did winne,
And would haue kept, so long as breath did last:

13

Main

Main-chance father you meant, but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or else be slaine.

Exit Warwick, and Salisbury. Manet Yorke.

Yorke. Anion and Maine are given to the French,
Paris is lost, the State of Normandie
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone:
Suffolke concluded on the Articles,
The Peeres agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two Dukedomes for a Dukes faire daughter.
I cannot blame them all, what is 't to them?
'Tis thine they give away, and not their owne.
Pirates may make cheape penyworths of their pillage,
And purchase Friends, and give to Curtezans,
Still reuelling like Lords till all be gone,
While as the filly Owner of the goods
Weepes ouer them, and wrings his haplesse hands,
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloofe,
While all is shar'd, and all is borne away,
Ready to sterue, and dare not touch his owne.
So Yorke must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his owne Lands are bargain'd for, and sold:
Me thinkes the Realmes of England, France, & Ireland,
Beate that proportion to my flesh and blood,
As did the fatal brand Albans burnt,
Vnto the Princes heart of Calidon:

Anion and Maine both given vnto the French:
Cold newes for me: for I had hope of France,
Euen as I haue of fertile Englands soile.
A day will come, when Yorke shall claime his owne,
And therefore I will take the Neuils parts,
And make a shew of loue to proud Duke Humphrey,
And when I spy aduantage, claime the Crowne,
For that's the Golden marke I seeke to hit:
Nor shall proud Lancaster vsurpe my right,
Nor hold the Scepter in his childish fist,
Nor weare the Diadem vpon his head,
Whose Church-like humors fits not for a Crowne.
Then Yorke be still a-while, till time do serue:
Watch thou, and wake when others be asleepe,
To prye into the secrets of the State,
Till Henrie surfering in ioyes of loue,
With his new Bride, & Englands deere bought Queen,
And Humphrey with the Peeres be false at iarres:
Then will I raise aloft the Milke-white-Rose,
With whose sweet smell the Ayre shall be perfum'd,
And in my Standard beare the Armes of Yorke,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster,
And force perforce Ile make him yeeld the Crowne,
Whose bookish Rule hath pull'd faire England downe.

Exit Yorke.
Enter Duke Humphrey and his wife Elianor.

Elianor. Why droopes my Lord like ouer-ripen'd Corn, Hanging the head at Ceres plenteous load?
Why doth the Great Duke Humphrey knit his browes,
As frowning at the Fauours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fixt to the fullen earth,
Gazing on that which seemes to dimme thy sight?
What seest thou there? King Henries Diadem,
Inchac'd with all the Honors of the world?
If so, Gaze on, and grouell on thy face,
Vntill thy head be circled with the same.
Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious Gold,
What is't too thort? Ile lengthen it with mine,
And haping both together heau'd it vp,
Wee'l both together lift our heads to heauen,
And neuer more abase our sight so low,

As to vouchsafe one glance vnto the ground.

Hum. O Nelly, sweet Nelly, if thou dost loue thy Lord,
Banish the Canker of ambitious thoughts:
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my King and Nephew, vertuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortall world.

Eli. What dream'd my Lord, tell me, and Ile requite it
With sweet rehearfall of my mornings dreame?

Hum. Me thought this staffe mine Office-badge in Court

Was broke in twaine: by whom, I haue forgot,
But as I thinke, it was by th Cardinall,
And on the peeces of the broken Wand
Were plac'd the heads of Edmond Duke of Somerset,
And William de la Pole first Duke of Suffolke.

This was my dreame, what it doth bode God knowes.
Eli. Tur, this was nothing but an argument,
That he that breakes a stick of Glosters groue,
Shall loose his head for his presumption.
But list to me my Humphrey, my sweete Duke:
Me thought I sat in Seate of Maiesty,
In the Cathedrall Church of Westminster,
And in that Chaire where Kings & Queens wer crown'd,
Where Henrie and Dame Margaret kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the Diadem.

Hum. Nay Elianor, then must I chide outright:
Presumptuous Dame, ill-nurter'd Elianor,

Art thou not second Woman in the Realme?

And the Protectors wife below'd of him?

Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Abooue the reach or compass of thy thought?

And wilt thou still be hammering Treachery,
To tumble downe thy husband, and thy selfe,

From top of Honor, to Disgraces fete?

Away from me, and let me heare no more.

Eli. What, what, my Lord? Are you so cholericke
With Elianor, for telling but her dreame?

Next time Ile keepe my dreames vnto my selfe,
And not be check'd.

Hum. Nay be not angry, I am pleas'd againe.

Enter Messenger.

Mess. My Lord Protector, 'tis his Highnes pleasure,
You do prepare to ride vnto S. Albons,

Where as the King and Queene do meane to Hawke.

Hum. I go, Come Nelly thou wilt ride with vs? Ex. Hum.

Eli. Yes my good Lord, Ile follow presently.

Follow I must, I cannot go before,

While Gloster beares this base and humble minde,

Were I a Man, a Duke, and next of blood,

I would remoue these tedious stumbling blockes,
And smooth my way vpon their headlesse neckes.

And being a woman, I will not be slacke
To play my part in Fortunes Pageant.

Where are you there? Sir John, nay feare not man,
We are alone, here's none but thee, & I. Enter Hum.

Hum. Iesus preserue your Royall Maiesty.

Elianor. What saist thou? Maiesty: I am but Grace.

Hum. But by the grace of God, and Humes aduice,
Your Graces Title shall be multiplied.

Eli. What saist thou man? Hast thou as yet confest
With Margerie lordane the cunning Witch,

With Roger Bollingbrooke the Coniurer?

And wilt they undertake to do me good?

Hum. This they haue promised to shew your Highnes
A Spirit rais'd from depth of vnder ground,

That

That shall make answer to such Questions,
As by your Grace shall be propounded him.
Elianor. It is enough, Ile thinke vpon the Questions:
When from Saint Albons we doe make returne,
Wee'll see these things effected to the full.
Here Hum, take this reward, make merry man
With thy Confederates in this weightie cause.

Exit Elianor.

Hum. Hum must make merry with the Duchesse Gold:

Marry and shall: but how now, Sir John Hume?

Seale vp your Lips, and giue no words but Mum,

The businesse asketh silent secrecie.

Dame Elianor giues Gold, to bring the Witch:

Gold cannot come amisse, were she a Deuill.

Yet haue I Gold fyes from another Coast:

I dare not say, from the rich Cardinals,

And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolke;

Yet I doe finde it so: for to be plaine,

They (knowing Dame Elianors aspiring humor)

Haue hyred me to vnder-mine the Duchesse,

And buzze these Coniurations in her brayne.

They say, A craftie Knaue do's need no Broker,

Yet am I Suffolke and the Cardinals Broker.

Hum, if you take not heed, you shall goe nere
To call them both a payre of craftie Knaues.

Well, so it stands: and thus I feare at last,
Hum Knauerie will be the Duchesse Wracke,

And her Attainture, will be Humphreys fall:

Soe how it will, I shall haue Gold for all. Exit

Enter three or foure Petitioners, the Armours Man being one.

1. Pet. My Masters, let's stand close, my Lord Protector will come this way by and by, and then wee may deliuer our Supplications in the Quill.

2. Pet. Marry the Lord protect him, for hee's a good man, Iesu blese him.

Enter Suffolke, and Queene.

Peter. Here a comes me thinkes, and the Queene with him: Ile be the first fure.

3. Pet. Come backe foole, this is the Duke of Suffolke, and not my Lord Protector.

Suff. How now fellow: would'st any thing with me?

1. Pet. I pray my Lord pardon me, I tooke ye for my Lord Protector.

Queene. To my Lord Protector? Are your Supplications to his Lordship? Let me see them: what is thine?

1. Pet. Mine is, and't please your Grace, against John
Goodman, my Lord Cardinals Man, for keeping my House, and Lands, and Wife and all, from me.

Suff. Thy Wife too? that's some Wrong indeede.

What's yours? What's heere? Against the Duke of Suffolke, for enclosing the Commons of Melforde. How now, Sir Knaue?

2. Pet. Alas Sir, I am but a poore Petitioner of our whole Towneship.

Peter. Against my Master Thomas Horner, for saying,
That the Duke of Yorke was rightfull Heire to the Crowne.

Queene. What say'st thou? Did the Duke of Yorke say, hee was rightfull Heire to the Crowne?

Peter. That my Mistresse was No forsooth: my Master said, That he was, and that the King was an Vsurper.

Suff. Who is there?

Enter Seruant.

Take this fellow in, and send for his Master with a Pursu-uant presently: wee'll heare more of your matter before the King. Exit.

Queene. And as for you that loue to be protected
Vnder the Wings of our Protectors Grace,
Begin your Suites anew, and sue to him.

Teare the Supplication.

Away, base Cullions: Suffolke let them goe.

All. Come, let's be gone. Exit.

Queene. My Lord of Suffolke, say, is this the guise?

Is this the Fashions in the Court of England?

Is this the Gouernment of Brittaines Ile?

And this the Royaltie of Albions King?

What, shall King Henry be a Pupill still,

Vnder the surly Glosters Gouernance?

Am I a Queene in Title and in Stile,

And must be made a Subiect to a Duke?

I tell thee Poole, when in the Citie Tours,

Thou ran'st a tilt in honor of my Loue,

And stol'st away the Ladies hearts of France;

I thought King Henry had resembled thee,

In Courage, Courtship, and Proportion:

But all his minde is bent to Holinesse,

To number Ana-Maries on his Beades:

His Champions, are the Prophets and Apostles,

His Weapons, holy Sawes of sacred Writ,

His Studie is his Tilt-yard, and his Loues

Are brazen Images of Canonized Saints.

I would the Colledge of the Cardinals

Would chuse him Pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the Triple Crowne vpon his Head:

That were a State fit for his Holinesse.

Suff. Madame be patient: as I was cause

Your Highnesse came to England, so will I

In England worke your Graces full content.

Queene. Beside the haughtie Protector, haue we Beauford

The imperious Churchman, Somerset, Buckingham,

And grumbling Yorke: and not the least of these,

But can doe more in England then the King.

Suff. And he of these, that can doe most of all,

Cannot doe more in England then the Neuils:

Salisbury and Warwick are no simple Peeres.

Queene. Not all these Lords do vex me halfe so much,

As that proud Dame, the Lord Protectors Wife:

She sweepes it through the Court with troups of Ladies,

More like an Emperesse, then Duke Humphreys Wife:

Strangers in Court, doe take her for the Queene:

She beares a Dukes Reuenues on her backe,

And in her heart she scornes our Poertie:

Shall I not lue to be aueng'd on her?

Contemptuous base-borne Callot as she is,

She vaunted 'mongst her Minions t'other day.

The very trayne of her worst wearing Gowne

Was better worth then all my Fathers Lands,

Till Suffolke gaue two Dukedomes for his Daughter.

Suff. Madame, my selfe haue lym'd a Bush for her,

And plac'd a Quier of such entring Birds,

That she will light to listen to the Lays,

And neuer mount to trouble you againe.

So let her rest: and Madame, list to me,

For I am bold to counsaile you in this;

Although we fancie not the Cardinall,

Yet must we ioyne with him and with the Lords,

Till we haue brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace.

A:

As for the Duke of Yorke, this late Complain
Will make but little for his benefite:
So one by one wee'll weed them all at last,
And you your selfe shall steere the happy Helme. Exit.

Sound a Somet.

Enter the King, Duke Humfrey, Cardinall, Buckingham, Yorke, Salisbury, Warwick, and the Duchesse.

King. For my part, Noble Lords, I care not which,
Or Somerset, or Yorke, all's one to me.

Yorke. If Yorke haue ill demean'd himselfe in France,
Then let him be deny'd the Regent-ship.

Som. If Somerset be vnworthy of the Place,
Let Yorke be Regent, I will yeeld to him.

Warw. Whether your Grace be worthy, yea or no,
Dispute not that, Yorke is the worthyer.

Card. Ambitious Warwick, let thy betters speake.

Warw. The Cardinall's not my better in the field.

Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.

Warw. Warwick may liue to be the best of all.

Salub. Peace Sonne, and shew some reason Buckingham

Why Somerset should be prefer'd in this?

Queene. Because the King forsooth will haue it so.

Humf. Madame, the King is old enough himselfe

To giue his Censure: There are no Womens matters.

Queene. If he be old enough, what needs your Grace
To be Protector of his Excellence?

Humf. Madame, I am Protector of the Realme,
And at his pleasure will resigne my Place.

Suff. Resigne it then, and leaue thine insolence.

Since thou wert King; as who is King, but thou?

The Common-wealth hath daily run to wracke,

The Dolphin hath preuayld beyond the Seas,

And all the Peeres and Nobles of the Realme

Haue been as Bond-men to thy Soueraignie.

Card. The Commons haue thou rakt, the Clergies Bags
Are lank and leane with thy Extortions.

Som. Thy sumptuous Buildings, and thy Wiues Attire
Haue cost a masse of publique Treasurie.

Buck. Thy Crueltie in execution

Vpon Offenders, hath exceeded Law,

And left thee to the mercy of the Law.

Queene. Thy sale of Offices and Townes in France,

If they were knowne, as the suspect is great,

Would make thee quickly hop without thy Head.

Exit Humfrey.

Giue me my Fanne: what, Mynion, can ye not?

She giues the Duchesse a box on the eare.

I cry you mercy, Madame: was it you?

Duch. Was't I? yea, I it was, proud French-woman:

Could I come nere your Beautie with my Nayles,

I could set my ten Commandements in your face.

King. Sweet Aunt be quiet, 'twas against her will.

Duch. Against her will, good King? looke to't in time,

Shee'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a Baby:

Though in this place most Master weare no Breeches,

She shall not strike Dame Elianor vnreueng'd.

Exit Elianor.

Buck. Lord Cardinall, I will follow Elianor,

And listen after Humfrey, how he proceedes:

Shee's tickled now, her Fume needs no spurres,

Shee'll gallop farre enough to her destruction.

Exit Buckingham.

Enter Humfrey.

Humf. Now Lords, my Choller being ouer-blowne,
With walking once about the Quadrangle,

I come to talke of Common-wealth Affayres.

As for your spightfull false Obiections,

Proue them, and I lye open to the Law:

But God in mercie so deale with my Soule,

As I in dutie loue my King and Countrey.

But to the matter that we haue in hand:

I say, my Soueraigne, Yorke is meetest man

To be your Regent in the Realme of France.

Suff. Before we make election, giue me leaue

To shew some reason, of no little force,

That Yorke is most vnmeet of any man.

Yorke. He tell thee, Suffolk, why I am vnmeet.

First, for I cannot flatter thee in Pride:

Next, if I be appointed for the Place,

My Lord of Somerset will keepe me here,

Without Discharge, Money, or Furniture,

Till France be wonne into the Dolphins hands:

Last time I dan't attendance on his will,

Till Paris was besiegd, famish'd, and lost.

Warw. That can I witnesse, and a fouler fact

Did neuer Traytor in the Land commit.

Suff. Peace head-strong Warwick.

Warw. Image of Pride, why should I hold my peace?

Enter Armorer and his Man.

Suff. Because here is a man accused of Treason,

Pray God the Duke of Yorke excuse himselfe.

Yorke. Doth any one accuse Yorke for a Traytor?

King. What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell me, what are these?

Suff. Please it your Maiestie, this is the man

That doth accuse his Master of High Treason;

His words were these: That Richard, Duke of Yorke,

Was rightfull Heire vnto the English Crowne,

And that your Maiestie was an Vsurper.

King. Say man, were these thy words?

Armorer. And't shall please your Maiestie, I neuer sayd nor thought any such matter: God is my witnesse, I am falsely accus'd by the Villaine.

Peter. By these tenne bones, my Lords, hee did speake them to me in the Garret one Night, as wee were scowring my Lord of Yorke's Armor.

Yorke. Base Danghill Villaine, and Mechanicall,

He haue thy Head for this thy Traytors speech:

I doe beseech your Royall Maiestie,

Let him haue all the rigor of the Law.

Armorer. Alas, my Lord, hang me if euer I spake the words: my accuser is my Prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow vpon his knees he would be euen with me: I haue good witnesse of this; therefore I beseech your Maiestie, doe not cast away an honest man for a Villaines accusation.

King. Vncle, what shall we say to this in law?

Humf. This doome, my Lord, if I may iudge:

Let Somerset be Regent o're the French,

Because in Yorke this breedes suspicion;

And let these haue a day appointed them

For single Combat, in conuenient place;

For he hath witnesse of his seruants malice:

This is the Law, and this Duke Humfrey's doome.

Som. I

Som. I humbly thanke your Royall Maiestie.

Armorer. And I accept the Combat willingly.

Peter. Alas, my Lord, I cannot fight; for Gods sake piety my case: the spight of man preuayleth against me.

O Lord haue mercy vpon me, I shall neuer be able to fight a blow: O Lord my heart.

Humf. Sirra, or you must fight, or else be hang'd.

King. Away with them to Prison: and the day of Combat, shall be the last of the next moneth. Come

Somerset, wee'll see thee sent away.

Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter the Witch, the two Priests, and Bullingbrooke.

Humf. Come my Masters, the Duchesse I tell you expects performance of your promises.

Bulling. Master Humf, we are therefore provided: will her Ladyship behold and heare our Exorcismes?

Humf. I, what else? feare you not her courage.

Bulling. I haue heard her reported to be a Woman of an inuincible spirit: but it shall be conuenient, Master

Humf, that you be by her aloft, while wee be busie below; and so I pray you goe in Gods Name, and leaue vs.

Exit Humf.

Mother Iordan, be you prostrate, and grouell on the Earth; Iohn Southwell reade you, and let vs to our worke.

Enter Elianor aloft.

Elianor. Well said my Masters, and welcome all: To this geere, the sooner the better.

Bulling. Patience, good Lady, Wizards know their times:

Deepe Night, darke Night, the silent of the Night,

The time of Night when Troy was set on fire,

The time when Screech-owles cry, and Bandogs howle,

And Spirits walke, and Ghosts breake vp their Graues;

That time best fits the worke we haue in hand.

Madame, sit you, and feare not: whom wee rayse,

Wee will make fast within a hallow'd Verge.

Here doe the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle,

Bullingbrooke or Southwell reade, Coniuro

te, &c. It Thunders and Lightens

terribly: then the Spirit

riseth.

Spirit. Ad sum.

Witch. Asmath, by the eternall God,

Whose name and power thou tremblest at,

Answer that I shall aske: for till thou speake,

Thou shalt not passe from hence.

Spirit. Aske what thou wilt; that I had sayd, and done.

Bulling. First of the King: What shall of him become?

Spirit. The Duke yer liues, that Henry shall depose:

But him out-lie, and dye a violent death.

Bulling. What fates await the Duke of Suffolke?

Spirit. By Water shall he dye, and take his end.

Bulling. What shall befall the Duke of Somerset?

Spirit. Let him shun Castles,

Safer shall he be vpon the sandie Plaines,

Then where Castles mounted stand.

Haue done, for more I hardly can endure.

Bulling. Discend to Darknesse, and the burning Lake:

False Fiend ayde.

Thunder and Lightning. Exit Spirit.

Enter the Duke of Yorke and the Duke of Buckingham with their Guard, and breake in.

Yorke. Lay hands vpon these Traytors, and their trash:

Beldam I thinke we watcht you at an ynch,

What Madame, are you there? the King & Commonweale

Are deeply indebted for this peece of paines;

My Lord Protector will, I doubt it not,

See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.

Elianor. Not halfe so bad as thine to Englands King,

Iniurious Duke, that threatst where's no cause.

Buck. True Madame, none at all: what call you this?

Away with them, let them be clapt vp close,

And kept asunder: you Madame shall with vs.

Stafford take her to thee.

Wee'll see your Trinkets here all forth-comming.

All away. Exit.

Yorke. Lord Buckingham, me thinks you watcht her well:

A pretty Plot, well chosen to build vpon.

Now pray my Lord, let's see the Devils Writ.

What haue we here? Reades.

The Duke yer liues, that Henry shall depose:

But him out-lie, and dye a violent death.

Why this is iust, Asio & Acida Romanos vincere possit.

Well, to the rest:

Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolke?

By Water shall he dye, and take his end.

What shall betide the Duke of Somerset?

Let him shunne Castles,

Safer shall he be vpon the sandie Plaines,

Then where Castles mounted stand.

Come, come, my Lords,

These Oracles are hardly attain'd,

And hardly vnderstood.

The King is now in progresse towards Saint Albones,

With him, the Husband of this louely Lady:

Thither goes these Newes,

As fast as Horse can carry them:

A sorry Breakfast for my Lord Protector.

Buck. Your Grace shall giue me leaue, my Lord of York,

To be the Poste, in hope of his reward.

Yorke. At your pleasure, my good Lord.

Who's within there, hoe?

Enter a Servingman.

Inuite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwick

To suppe with me to morrow Night. Away.

Exeunt.

Enter the King, Queene, Protector, Cardinall, and Suffolke, with Faulknors hallowing.

Queene. Beleeue me Lords, for flying at the Brooke,

I saw not better sport these seuen yeeres day:

Yet by your leaue, the Winde was very high,

And ten to one, old Ioane had not gone out.

King. But what a point, my Lord, your Faulcon made,

And what a pyrch she flew about the rest:

To see how God in all his Creatures workes,

Yea Man and Birds are fayne of climbing high.

Suff. No maruell, and it like your Maiestie,

My Lord Protector's Hawkes doe towre so well,

They know their Master loues to be aloft,

And beares his thoughts about his Faulcons Pitch:

Gloster. My Lord, 'tis but a base ignoble minde,

That mounts no higher then a Bird can fore:

Card. I

Card. I thought as much, hee would be about the Clouds.

Gloft. I my Lord Cardinall, how thinke you by that? Were it not good your Grace could flye to Heaven?

King. The Treasure of euerming Ioy.

Card. Thy Heaven is on Earth, thine Eyes & Thoughts Beat on a Crowne, the Treasure of thy Heart, Pernitious Protector, dangerous Peere,

That smooth't it so with King and Common-weale.

Gloft. What, Cardinall?

Is your Priest-hood growne peremptorie?

Tant ane animis Calestibus ira, Church-men so hot?

Good Vnckle hide such mallice;

With such Holynesse can you doe it?

Suff. No mallice Sir, no more then well becomes

So good a Quarrell, and so bad a Peere;

Gloft. As who, my Lord?

Suff. Why, as you, my Lord,

An't like your Lordly Lords Protectorship.

Gloft. Why Suffolke, England knowes thine insolence.

Queene. And thy Ambition, Gloster.

King. I prythee peace, good Queene,

And whet not on these furious Peeres,

For blessed are the Peace-makers on Earth.

Card. Let me be blessed for the Peace I make Against this prowd Protector with my Sword.

Gloft. Faith holy Vnckle, would't were come to that.

Card. Marry, when thou dar't.

Gloft. Make vp no factious numbers for the matter,

In thine owne person answer thy abuse.

Card. I, where thou dar't not peepe:

And if thou dar't, this Euening,

On the East side of the Groue.

King. How now, my Lords?

Card. Beleeue me, Cousin Gloster,

Had not your man put vp the Fowle so suddenly,

We had had more sport.

Come with thy two-hand Sword.

Gloft. True Vnckle, are ye aduis'd?

The East side of the Groue:

Cardinall, I am with you.

King. Why how now, Vnckle Gloster?

Gloft. Talking of Hawking; nothing else, my Lord.

Now by Gods Mother, Priest,

Ile shawe your Crowne for this,

Or all my Fence shall fayle.

Card. Medice teipsum, Protector see to't well, protect your selfe.

King. The Windes grow high,

So doe your Stomacks, Lords:

How irkesome is this Musick to my heart?

When such Strings iarre, what hope of Harmony?

I pray my Lords let me compound this strife.

Enter one crying a Miracle.

Gloft. What meanes this noyse?

Fellow, what Miracle do'st thou proclayme?

One. A Miracle, a Miracle.

Suffolke. Come to the King, and tell him what Miracle.

One. Forsooth, a blinde man at Saint Albones Shrine,

Within this halfe houre hath receiu'd his sight,

A man that nere saw in his life before.

King. Now God be pray's'd, that to beleeuing Soules

Giues Light in Darknesse, Comfort in Despaire.

Enter the Maior of Saint Albones, and his Brethren, bearing the man betwene two in a Chayre.

Card. Here comes the Townes-men, on Proceffion, To present your Highnesse with the man.

King. Great is his comfort in this Earthly Vale, Although by his sight his sinne be multiplyed.

Gloft. Stand by, my Masters, bring him nere the King, His Highnesse pleasure is to talke with him.

King. Good-fellow, tell vs here the circumstance, That we for thee may glorifie the Lord.

What hast thou bene long blinde, and now restor'd?

Simp. Borne blinde, and t' please your Grace.

Wife. I indeede was he.

Suff. What Woman is this?

Wife. His Wife, and t' like your Worship.

Gloft. Hadst thou been his Mother, thou could'st haue better told.

King. Where wert thou borne?

Simp. At Barwick in the North, and t' like your Grace.

King. Poore Soule, Gods goodnesse hath bene great to thee:

Let neuer Day nor Night vnhalloved passe, But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Queene. Tell me, good-fellow, Can'st thou here by Chance, or of Deuotion,

To this holy Shrine?

Simp. God knowes of pure Deuotion, Being call'd a hundred times, and oftner,

In my sleepe, by good Saint Albon:

Who said; Symon, come; come offer at my Shrine, And I will helpe thee.

Wife. Most true, forsooth:

And many time and oft my selfe haue heard a Voyce, To call him so.

Card. What, art thou lame?

Simp. I, God Almighty helpe me.

Suff. How cam'st thou so?

Simp. A fall off of a Tree.

Wife. A Plum-tree, Master.

Gloft. How long hast thou bene blinde?

Simp. O borne so, Master.

Gloft. What, and would'st climb a Tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true, and bought his climbing very deare.

Gloft. Masse, thou lou'd'st Plummies well, that would'st venture so.

Simp. Alas, good Master, my Wife desired some Damsons, and made me climbe, with danger of my Life.

Gloft. A subtil Knaue, but yet it shall not serue: Let me see thine Eyes; winck now, now open them,

In my opinion, yet thou seest not well.

Simp. Yes Master, cleare as day, I thanke God and Saint Albones.

Gloft. Say'st thou me so: what Colour is this Cloake of?

Simp. Red Master, Red as Blood.

Gloft. Why that's well said: What Colour is my Gowne of?

Simp. Black forsooth, Coale-Black, as Iet.

King. Why then, thou know'st what Colour Iet is of?

Suff. And yet I thinke, Iet did he neuer see.

Gloft. But

Gloft. But Cloakes and Gownes, before this day, a many.

Wife. Neuer before this day, in all his life.

Gloft. Tell me Sirrha, what's my Name?

Simp. Alas Master, I know not.

Gloft. What's his Name?

Simp. I know not.

Gloft. Nor his?

Simp. No indeede, Master.

Gloft. What's thine owne Name?

Simp. Saunders Simpcox, and if it please you, Master.

Gloft. Then Saunders, sit there,

The lying't Knaue in Christendome.

If thou had'st bene borne blinde,

Thou might'st as well haue knowne all our Names,

As thus to name the seuerall Colours we doe weare.

Sight may distinguish of Colours:

But suddenly to nominate them all,

It is impossible.

My Lords, Saint Albones here hath done a Miracle:

And would ye not thinke it, Cunning to be great,

That could restore this Cripple to his Legges againe.

Simp. O Master, that you could?

Gloft. My Masters of Saint Albones,

Haue you not Beadles in your Towne,

And Things call'd Whippes?

Mayor. Yes, my Lord, if it please your Grace.

Gloft. Then fend for one presently.

Mayor. Sirrha, goe fetch the Beadle hither straight.

Exit.

Gloft. Now fetch me a Stooler hither by and by.

Now Sirrha, if you meane to saue your selfe from Whipping, leape me ouer this Stooler, and runne away.

Simp. Alas Master, I am not able to stand alone:

You goe about to torture me in vaine.

Enter a Beadle with Whippes.

Gloft. Well Sir, we must haue you finde your Legges.

Sirrha Beadle, whippe him till he leape ouer that same Stooler.

Beadle. I will, my Lord.

Come on Sirrha, off with your Doublet, quickly.

Simp. Alas Master, what shall I doe? I am not able to stand.

After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leapes ouer the Stooler, and runnes away: and they follow, and cry, A Miracle.

King. O God, seest thou this, and bearest so long?

Queene. It made me laugh, to see the Villaine runne.

Gloft. Follow the Knaue, and take this Drab away.

Wife. Alas Sir, we did it for pure need.

Gloft. Let the be whipt through euery Market Towne,

Till they come to Barwick, from whence they came.

Exit.

Card. Duke Humfrey ha's done a Miracle to day.

Suff. True: made the Lame to leape and flye away.

Gloft. But you haue done more Miracles then I:

You made in a day, my Lord, whole Townes to flye.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What Tidings with our Cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to vnfold:

A sort of naughtie persons, lewdly bent,

Vnder the Countenance and Confederacie

Of Lady Eliawor, the Protector's Wife, The Ring-leader and Head of all this Rout, Haue practis'd dangerously against your State, Dealing with Witches and with Coniurers, Whom we haue apprehended in the Fact, Rayning vp wicked Spirits from vnder ground, Demanding of King Henries Life and Death, And other of your Highnesse Priue Councell, As more at large your Grace shall vnderstand.

Card. And so my Lord Protector, by this meanes Your Lady is forth-coming, yet at London. This Newes I thinke hath turn'd your Weapons edge; 'Tis like, my Lord, you will not keepe your houre. Gloft. Ambitious Church-man, leaue to afflict my heart: Sorrow and griefe haue vanquish'd all my powers; And vanquish'd as I am, I yeeld to thee, Or to the meanest Groome.

King. O God, what mischiefs work the wicked ones! Heaping confusion on their owne heads thereby.

Queene. Gloster, see here the Tincture of thy Nest, And looke thy selfe be faultlesse, thou wert best.

Gloft. Madame, for my selfe, to Heaven I doe appeale, How I haue lou'd my King, and Common-weale:

And for my Wife, I know not how it stands; Sorry I am to heare what I haue heard,

Noble thee is: but if thee haue forgot Honor and Vertue, and comers't with such,

As like to Pyrch, defile Nobilitie; I banish her my Bed, and Companie,

And giue her as a Prey to Law and Shame, That hath dis-honored Glosters honest Name.

King. Well, for this Night we will repose vs here: To morrow toward London, back againe,

To looke into this Businesse thorowly, And call these foule Offenders to their Answers;

And paye the Cause in Iustice equal Scales, Whole Beame stands sure, whose rightfull cause preuailes.

Flourish. Exit.

Enter Yorke, Salisbury, and Warwick.

Yorke. Now my good Lords of Salisbury & Warwick, Our simple Supper ended, giue me leaue,

In this close Walke, to satisfie my selfe, In crauing your opinion of my Title,

Which is infallible, to Englands Crowne.

Salisb. My Lord, long to heare it at full,

Warw. Sweet Yorke begin: and if thy clayme be good, The Nenills are thy Subiects to command,

Yorke. Then thus:

Edward the third, my Lords, had seuen Sonnes:

The first, Edward the Black-Prince, Prince of Wales;

The second, William of Hatfield; and the third, Lionel, Duke of Clarence; next to whom,

Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster;

The fift, was Edmond Langley, Duke of Yorke;

The sixt, was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloster;

William of Windfor was the seuenth, and last.

Edward the Black-Prince dyed before his Father, And left behinde him Richard, his onely Sonne,

Who after Edward the third's death, reign'd as King, Till Henry Bullingbrooke, Duke of Lancaster,

The eldest Sonne and Heire of John of Gaunt, Crown'd by the Name of Henry the fourth, Seiz'd on the Realme, depos'd the rightfull King, Sent his poore Queene to France, from whence she came,

And

And him to Pymfret; where, as all you know,
Harmeleffe Richard was murdered traiterously.

Warw. Father, the Duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the House of Lancaster the Crowne.

York. Which now they hold by force, and not by right:
For Richard, the first Sonnes Heire, being dead,
The Issue of the next Sonne should haue reign'd.

Salisb. But William of Hatfield dyed without an Heire.

York. The third Sonne, Duke of Clarence,
From whose Line I claime the Crowne,
Had Issue Phillip, a Daughter,
Who married Edmond Mortimer, Earle of March:
Edmond had Issue, Roger, Earle of March;
Roger had Issue, Edmond, Anne, and Eleanor.

Salisb. This Edmond, in the Reigne of Bullingbrooke,
As I haue read, layd claime vnto the Crowne,
And but for Owen Glendour, had bene King;
Who kept him in Captiuitie, till he dyed,
But, to the rest.

York. His eldest Sister, Anne,
My Mocher, being Heire vnto the Crowne,
Married Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
Who was to Edmond Langley,
Edward the thirds fift Sonnes Sonne;
By her I claime the Kingdome:
She was Heire to Roger, Earle of March,
Who was the Sonne of Edmond Mortimer,
Who married Phillip, sole Daughter
Vnto Lionel, Duke of Clarence.

So, if the Issue of the elder Sonne
Succeed before the younger, I am King.

Warw. What plaine proceedings is more plain then this?
Henry doth claime the Crowne from John of Gaunt,
The fourth Sonne, York claimes it from the third:
Till Lionels Issue fayles, his should not reigne.
It fayles not yet, but flourishes in thee,
And in thy Sonnes, faire flippes of such a Stock.
Then Father Salisbury, kneele we together,
And in this private Plot be we the first,
That shall salure our rightfull Soueraigne
With honor of his Birth-right to the Crowne.

Both. Long live our Soueraigne Richard, Englands
King.

York. We thanke you Lords:
But I am not your King, till I be Crown'd,
And that my Sword be stayn'd
With heart-blood of the House of Lancaster:
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with aduice and silent secrecie.
Doe you as I doe in these dangerous dayes,
Winke at the Duke of Suffolkes insolence,
At Beaufords Pride, at Somersets Ambition,
At Buckingham, and all the Crew of them,
Till they haue inar'd the Shepherd of the Flock,
That vertuous Prince, the good Duke Humfrey:
Tis that they seeke; and they, in seeking that,
Shall finde their deaths, if York can prophetic.

Salisb. My Lord, breake we off; we know your minde at full.

Warw. My heart assures me, that the Earle of Warwick
Shall one day make the Duke of York a King.

York. And Nell, this I doe assure my selfe,
Richard shall liue to make the Earle of Warwick
The greatest man in England, but the King.

Exeunt.

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King and State, with Guard, to banish the Duchesse.

King. Stand forth Dame Eleanor Cobham,
Glosters Wife:

In sight of God, and vs, your guilt is great,
Receiue the Sentence of the Law for sinne,
Such as by Gods Booke are adiudg'd to death.
You foure from hence to Prison, back againe;
From thence, vnto the place of Execution:
The Witch in Smithfield shall be burnt to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the Gallows.
You Madame, for you are more Nobly borne,
Deiroyed of your Honor in your Life,
Shall, after three dayes open Penance done,
Liue in your Countrey here, in Banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Ile of Man.

Eleanor. Welcome is Banishment, welcome were my Death.

Gloster. Eleanor, the Law thou seest hath iudged thee,
I cannot iustifie whom the Law condemnes:
Mine eyes are full of teares, my heart of griefe.
Ah Humfrey, this dishonor in thine age,
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground.
I beseech your Maiestie giue me leaue to goe;
Sorrow would foliace, and mine Age would ease.

King. Stay Humfrey, Duke of Gloster,
Ere thou goe, giue vp thy Staffe,
Henry will to himselfe Protector be,
And God shall be my hope, my stay, my guide,
And Lanthorne to my secrete:

And goe in peace, Humfrey, no lesse belou'd,
Then when thou wert Protector to thy King.

Queene. I see no reason, why a King of yeres
Should be to be protected like a Child,
God and King Henry gouerne Englands Realme:
Giue vp your Staffe, Sir, and the King his Realme.

Gloster. My Staffe? Here, Noble Henry, is my Staffe:
As willingly doe I the same resigne,
As ere thy Father Henry made it mine;
And euen as willingly at thy feete I leaue it,
As others would ambitiously receiue it.

Farewell good King: when I am dead, and gone,
May honorable Peace attend thy Throne.

Exit Gloster.

Queene. Why now is Henry King, and Margaret Queen,
And Humfrey, Duke of Gloster, scarce himselfe,
That beares so shrewd a mayme; two Pulls at once;
His Lady banish'd, and a Limbe lost off:
This Staffe of Honor raught, there let it stand,
Where it best fits to be, in Henries hand.

Shuff. Thus droupes this losie Pyne, & hangs his sprays,
Thus Elianors Pride dyes in her youngest dayes.

York. Lords, let him goe, please it your Maiestie,
This is the day appointed for the Combat,
And ready are the Appellant and Defendant,
The Armorer and his Man, to enter the Lists,
So please your Highnesse to behold the fight.

Queene. I, good my Lord: for purposely therefore Left I the Court, to see this Quarrell try'd.

King. A Gods Name see the Lyfts and all things fit,
Here let them end it, and God defend the right.

York. I neuer saw a fellow worse bestead,
Or more afraid to fight, then is the Appellant,
The seruant of this Armorer, my Lords.

Enter

Enter at one Doore the Armorer and his Neighbors, drinking to him so much, that hee is drunke; and he enters with a Drumme before him, and his Staffe, with a Sand-bagge fastened to it: and at the other Doore his Man, with a Drumme and Sand-bagge, and Prentices drinking to him.

1. Neighbor. Here Neighbour Horner, I drinke to you in a Cup of Sack; and feare not Neighbor, you shall doe well enough.

2. Neighbor. And here Neighbour, here's a Cuppe of Charneco.

3. Neighbor. And here's a Pot of good Double-Beere
Neighbor: drinke, and feare not your Man.

Armorer. Let it come yfaith, and Ile pledge you all,
and a figge for Peter.

1. Prent. Here Peter, I drinke to thee, and be not afraid.

2. Prent. Be merry Peter, and feare not thy Master,
Fight for credit of the Prentices.

Peter. I thanke you all: drinke, and pray for me, I pray you, for I thinke I haue taken my last Draught in this World. Here Robin, and if I dye, I giue thee my Aporne; and Will, thou shalt haue my Hammer: and here Tom, take all the Money that I haue. O Lord blese me. I pray God, for I am neuer able to deale with my Master, hee hath learnt so much fence already.

Salisb. Come, leaue your drinking, and fall to blowes.

Sirha, what's thy Name?

Peter. Peter forsooth.

Salisb. Peter? what more?

Peter. Thumpe.

Salisb. Thumpe? Then see thou thumpe thy Master well.

Armorer. Masters, I am come hither as it were vpon my Mans instigation, to proue him a Knaue; and my selfe an honest man: and touching the Duke of York, I will take my death, I neuer meant him any ill, nor the King, nor the Queene: and therefore Peter haue at thee with a downe-right blow.

York. Dispatch, this Knaues tongue begins to double.
Sound Trumpets, Alarum to the Combatants.

They fight, and Peter strikes him downe.

Armorer. Hold Peter, hold, I confesse, I confesse Treason.

York. Take away his Weapon: Fellow thanke God, and the good Wine in thy Masters way.

Peter. O God, haue I overcome mine Enemies in this presence? O Peter, thou hast preuayl'd in right.

King. Goe, take hence that Traytor from our sight,
For by his death we doe perceiue his guilt,
And God in Iustice hath reueal'd to vs
The truth and innocence of this poore fellow,
Which he had thought to haue murder'd wrongfully.

Come fellow, follow vs for thy Reward.

Sound a flourish. Exeunt.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his Men in Mourning Cloakes.

Gloster. Thus sometimes hath the brightest day a Cloud:
And after Summer, euermore succeeds
Barren Winter, with his wrathfull nipping Cold;
So Cares and Ioyes abound, as Seasons flect;
Sirs, what's a Clock?

Seru. Tenne, my Lord.

Gloster. Tenne is the houre that was appointed me,
To watch the comming of my punish'd Duchesse:
Vneath may shee endure the Flutie Streets,
To treade them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nell, ill can thy Noble Minde abrooke
The abiect People, gazing on thy face,
With enuious Lookes laughing at thy shame,
That erst did follow thy prou'd Chariot-Wheelles,
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.
But soft, I thinke she comes, and Ile prepare
My teare-stayn'd eyes, to see her Miseries.

Enter the Duchesse in a white Sheet, and a Taper burning in her hand, with the Sherife and Officers.

Seru. So please your Grace, wee'll take her from the Sherife.

Gloster. No, stirre not for your liues, let her passe
by.

Eleanor. Come you, my Lord, to see my open shame?
Now thou dost Penance too. Looke how they gaze,
See how the giddy multitude doe point,
And nodde their heads, and throw their eyes on thee.
Ah Gloster, hide thee from their hatefull lookes,
And in thy Closet pent vp, rue my shame,
And banne thine Enemies, both mine and thine.

Gloster. Be patient, gentle Nell, forget this griefe.

Eleanor. Ah Gloster, teach me to forget my selfe:

For whilest I thinke I am thy married Wife,
And thou a Prince, Protector of this Land;
Me thinkes I should not thus be led along,
May'd vp in shame, with Papers on my back,
And follow'd with a Rabble, that reioyce
To see my teares, and heare my deepe-fer groanes.
The ruthlesse Flint doth cut my tender feet,
And when I start, the enuious people laugh,
And bid me be aduised how I treade.

Ah Humfrey, can I beare this shamefull yoke?
Trowest thou, that ere Ile looke vpon the World,
Or count them happy, that enioyes the Sunne?
No: Darke shall be my Light, and Night my Day.
To thinke vpon my Pompe, shall be my Hell.
Sometime Ile say, I am Duke Humfries Wife,
And he a Prince, and Ruler of the Land:
Yet so he rul'd, and such a Prince he was,
As he stood by, whilest I, his forlorne Duchesse,
Was made a wonder, and a pointing stock
To euery idle Rascall follower.

But be thou milde, and blush not at my shame,
Nor stirre at nothing, till the Axe of Death
Hang ouer thee, as sure it shortly will.
For Suffolke, he that can doe all in all
With her, that hateth thee and hates vs all,
And York, and impious Beauford, that false Priest,
Haue all lynd Bushes to betray thy Wings,
And flye thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee.
But feare not thou, vntill thy foot be snar'd,
Nor neuer seeke preuention of thy foes.

Gloster. Ah Nell, forbear: thou aymest all awry.
I must offend, before I be attained:
And had I twentie times so many foes,
And each of them had twentie times their power,
All these could not procure me any scathe,
So long as I am loyall, true, and crimelesse.
Wouldst thou haue me rescue thee from this reproach?

Why

Why yet thy scandall were not wipt away,
But I in danger for the breach of Law.
Thy greatest helpe is quiet, gentle Nell;
I pray thee sort thy heart to patience,
These few dayes wonder will be quickly worne:

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your Grace to his Maiesties Parliament,
Holden at Bury, the first of this next Moneth.

Glof. And my consent ne're ask'd herein before?

This is close dealing. Well, I will be there.

My Nell, I take my leaue: and Master Sherife,

Let not her Penance exceede the Kings Commission.

Sh. And please your Grace, here my Commission staves:

And Sir John Stanley is appointed now,

To take her with him to the Ile of Man.

Glof. Must you, Sir John, protect my Lady here?

Stanly. So am I giuen in charge, may't please your Grace.

Glof. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray

You vse her well: the World may laugh againe,

And I may liue to doe you kinde, if you doe it her.

And so Sir John, fare well.

Eliano. What, gone my Lord, and bid me not farewell?

Glof. Witnesse my teares, I cannot stay to speake.

Exit Glof.

Eliano. Art thou gone to? all comfort goe with thee,

For none abides with me: my Loy, is Death;

Death, at whose Name I oft haue beene asfear'd,

Because I wish'd this Worlds eternitie,

Stanly, I prethee goe, and take me hence,

I care not whither, for I begge no fauor;

Onely conuey me where thou art commanded.

Stanly. Why, Madame, that is to the Ile of Man,

There to be vs'd according to your State.

Eliano. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:

And shall I then be vs'd reproachfully?

Stanly. Like to a Duchesse, and Duke Humfries Lady,

According to that State you shall be vs'd.

Eliano. Sherife farewell, and better then I fare,

Although thou hast beene Conduct of my shame.

Sherife. It is my Office, and Madame pardon me.

Eliano. I, I, farewell, thy Office is discharg'd:

Come Stanley, shall we goe?

Stanly. Madame, your Penance done,

Throw off this Sheet,

And goe we to attyre you for our Journey.

Eliano. My shame will not be shifted with my Sheet:

No, it will hang vpon my richest Robes,

And shew it selfe, attyre me how I can.

Goe, leade the way, I long to see my Prison. Exit

Sound a Sennet. Enter King, Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Torke, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwick,

to the Parliament.

King. I muse my Lord of Gloster is not come:

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,

What e're occasion keeps him from vs now.

Queene. Can you not see? or will ye not obserue

The strangenesse of his alter'd Countenance?

With what a Maiestie he beares himselfe,

How insolent of late he is become,

How proud, how peremptorie, and vnlike himselfe.

We know the time since he was milde and affable,

And if we did but glance a farre-off Looke,

Immediately he was vpon his Knee,

That all the Court admir'd him for submission.

But meet him now, and be it in the Morne,

When euery one will giue the time of day,

He knits his Brow, and shewes an angry Eye,

And passeth by with stiffe vnbow'd Knee,

Disdaining dutie that to vs belongs.

Small Curres are not regarded when they gryne,

But great men tremble when the Lyon rores,

And Humfry is no little Man in England,

First note, that he is neere you in descent,

And should you fall, he is the next will mount.

Me seemeth then, it is no Pollicie,

Respecting what a rancorous minde he beares,

And his aduantage following your decease,

That he should come about your Royall Person,

Or be admitted to your Highnesse Councell,

By flatterie hath he wonne the Commons hearts:

And when he please to make Commotion,

'Tis to be fear'd they all will follow him.

Now 'tis the Spring, and Weeds are shallow-rooted,

Suffer them now, and they'll o're-grow the Garden,

And choake the Herbes for want of Husbandry.

The reuerent care I beare vnto my Lord,

Made me collect these dangers in the Duke,

If it be fond, call it a Womans feare:

Which feare, if better Reasons can supplant,

I will subscribe, and say I wrong'd the Duke.

My Lord of Suffolke, Buckingham, and Yorke,

Reproue my allegation, if you can,

Or else conclude my words effectuall.

Suff. Well hath your Highnesse scene into this Duke,

And had I first beene put to speake my minde,

I thinke I should haue told your Graces Tale.

The Duchesse, by his subornation,

Vpon my Life began her diuellish practises:

Or if he were not priuie to those Faults,

Yet by reputing of his high descent,

As next the King, he was successiue Heire,

And such high vaunts of his Nobilitie,

Did instigate the Bedlam braine-sick Duchesse,

By wicked meanes to frame our Soueraignes fall.

Smooth runnes the Water, where the Brooke is deepe,

And in his simple shew he harbours Treason.

The Fox barks not, when he would steale the Lambe.

No, no, my Soueraigne, Gloster is a man

Vnfounded yet, and full of deepe deceit.

Card. Did he not, contrary to forme of Law,

Deuise strange deaths, for small offences done?

Torke. And did he not, in his Protectorship,

Leuie great summes of Money through the Realme,

For Souldiers pay in France, and neuer sent it?

By meanes whereof, the Townes each day reuolted.

Buck. Tut, these are petty faults to faults vnknowne,

Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humfry.

King. My Lords at once: the care you haue of vs,

To mowe downe Thornes that would annoy our Foot,

Is worthy prayse: but shall I speake my conscience,

Our Kinsman Gloster is as innocent,

From meaning Treason to our Royall Person,

As is the sucking Lambe, or harmelesse Dove:

The Duke is vertuous, milde, and too well giuen,

To dreame on euill, or to worke my downefall.

Qu. Ah what's more dangerous, then this fond affiance?

Seemes he a Dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,

For hee's disposed as the hatefull Rauen.

Is he a Lambe? his Skinne is surely lent him,

For

For hee's enclin'd as is the rauenous Wolues.
Who cannot steale a shape, that meanes deceit?
Take heed, my Lord, the welfare of vs all,
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudfull man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health vnto my gracious Soueraigne.

King. Welcome Lord Somerset: What Newes from France?

Som. That all your Interest in those Territories,

Is utterly bereft you: all is lost.

King. Cold Newes, Lord Somerset: but Gods will be done.

Torke. Cold Newes for me: for I had hope of France,

As firmly as I hope for fertile England.

Thus are my Blossomes blasted in the Bud,

And Caterpillers eate my Leaues away:

But I will remedie this geare ere long,

Or sell my Title for a glorious Graue.

Enter Gloucester.

Glof. All happinesse vnto my Lord the King:

Pardon, my Liege, that I haue stay'd so long.

Suff. Nay Gloster, know that thou art come too soone,

Vntill thou wert more loyall then thou art:

I doe arrest thee of High Treason here.

Glof. Well Suffolke, thou shalt not see me blush,

Nor change my Countenance for this Arrest:

A Heart vnspotted, is not easily daunted.

The purest Spring is not so free from mudde,

As I am cleare from Treason to my Soueraigne.

Who can accuse me? wherein am I guiltie?

Torke. 'Tis thought, my Lord,

That you tooke Bribes of France,

And being Protector, stay'd the Souldiers pay,

By meanes whereof, his Highnesse hath lost France.

Glof. Is it but thought so?

What are they that thinke it?

I neuer rob'd the Souldiers of their pay.

Nor euer had one penny Bribe from France:

So helpe me God, as I haue watcht the Night,

I Night by Night, in studying good for England.

That Doyt that ere I wrested from the King,

Or any Groat I hoorded to my vse,

Be brought against me at my Tryall day.

No: many a Pound of mine owne proper store,

Because I would not taxe the needie Commons,

Haue I dispursed to the Garrisons,

And neuer ask'd for restitution.

Card. It serues you well, my Lord, to say so much.

Glof. I say no more then truth, so helpe me God.

Torke. In your Protectorship, you did deuise

Strange Tortures for Offendors, neuer heard of,

That England was defam'd by Tyrannie.

Glof. Why 'tis well known, that whiles I was Protector,

Pittie was all the fault that was in me:

For I should mele at an Offendors teares,

And lowly words were Ransome for their fault.

Vntill it were a bloody Murderer,

Or foule felonious Theefe, that fleed poore passengers,

I neuer gaue them condigne punishment.

Murther indeede, that bloodie sinne, I tortur'd

About the Felon, or what Trespas else.

Suff. My Lord, these faults are easie, quickly answer'd:

But mightier Crimes are lay'd vnto your charge,

Whereof you cannot easly purge your selfe.

I doe arrest you in his Highnesse Name,

And here commit you to my Lord Cardinall:

To keepe, vntill your further time of Tryall.

King. My Lord of Gloster, 'tis my speciall hope,

That you will cleare your selfe from all suspence,

My Conscience tells me you are innocent.

Glof. Ah gracious Lord, these dayes are dangerous:

Vertue is choakt with foule Ambition,

And Charitie chas'd hence by Rancours hand;

Foule Subornation is predominant,

And Equitie exil'd your Highnesse Land.

I know, their Complot is to haue my Life:

And if my death might make this Ile happy,

And proue the Period of their Tyrannie,

I would expend it with all willingnesse.

But mine is made the Prologue to their Play:

For thousands more, that yet suspect no perill,

Will not conclude their plotted Tragedie.

Beaufords red sparkling eyes blab his hearts mallice,

And Suffolke cloudie Brow his stormie hate;

Sharpe Buckingham vnburthens with his tongue,

The enuious Load that lyes vpon his heart:

And dogged Torke, that reaches at the Moone,

Whose over-weening Arme I haue pluckt backe,

By false accuse doth leuell at my Life.

And you, my Soueraigne Lady, with the rest,

Causelesse haue lay'd disgraces on my head,

And with your best endeavour haue stirr'd vp

My lieft Liege to be mine Enemie:

I, all of you haue lay'd your heads together,

My selfe had notice of your Conuenticles,

And all to make away my guiltlesse Life.

I shall not want false Witnesse, to condemne me,

Nor store of Treasons, to augment my guilt:

The ancient Prouerbe will be well effected,

A Staffe is quickly found to beate a Dogge.

Card. My Liege, his rayling is intollerable.

If those that care to keepe your Royall Person

From Treasons secret Knife, and Traytors Rage,

Be thus vpbrayd, chid, and rated at,

And the Offendor graunted scope of speech,

'Twill make them coole in zeale vnto your Grace.

Suff. Hath he not twit our Soueraigne Lady here

With ignominious words, though Clarkely coucht?

As if she had suborned some to sweare

False allegations, to o'rethrow his state.

Qu. But I can giue the loser leaue to chide.

Glof. Farre truer spoke then meant: I lose indeede,

Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me false,

And well such losers may haue leaue to speake.

Buck. Hee'le wrest the fence, and hold vs here all day.

Lord Cardinall, he is your Prisoner.

Card. Sirs, take away the Duke, and guard him sure.

Glof. Ah, thus King Henry throwes away his Crutch,

Before his Legges be firme to beare his Body.

Thus is the Shepheard beaten from thy side,

And Wolues are gnarling, who shall gnaw thee first.

Ah that my feare were false, ah that it were;

For good King Henry, thy decay I feare. Exit Glof.

King. My Lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best,

Do, or vndoe, as if our selfe were here.

Queene. What, will your Highnesse leaue the Parliament?

King. I Margaret: my heart is drown'd with griefe,

Whose flood begins to flowe within mine eyes;

My Body round engirt with miserie:

n 2

For what's more miserable then Discontent? Enter Duke of York
 Ah Vnckle Humphrey, in thy face I see
 The Map of Honor, Truth, and Loyaltie;
 And yet, good Humphrey, is the houre to come,
 That ere I prou'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.
 What lowering Starre now enoies thy estate?
 That these great Lords, and Margaret our Queene,
 Doe seeke subuersion of thy harmelesse Life?
 Thou neuer didst them wrong, nor no man wrong:
 And as the Butcher takes away the Calfe,
 And binds the Wretch, and beats it when it strays,
 Bearing it to the bloody Slaughter-house;
 Euen so remorselesse haue they borne him hence:
 And as the Damme runnes lowing vp and downe,
 Looking the way her harmelesse young one went,
 And can doe naught but wayle her Darlings losse;
 Euen so my selfe be wayles good Glosters case:
 With sad vnhelpfull teares, and with dimm'd eyes;
 Looke after him, and cannot doe him good:
 So mightie are his vowed Enemies.
 His fortunes I will weepe, and twixt each groane,
 Say, who's a Traytor? Gloster he is none. Exit

Queene. Free Lords:
 Cold Snow melts with the Sunnes hot Beames:
Henry, my Lord, is cold in great Affaires,
 Too full of foolish pittie: and Glosters shew
 Beguiles him, as the mournfull Crocodile
 With sorrow snares relenting passengers;
 Or as the Snake, roll'd in a flowing Banke,
 With shining checker'd slough doth sting a Child,
 That for the beautie thinks it excellent:
 Beleue me Lords, were none more wise then I,
 And yet herein I iudge mine owne Wit good;
 This Gloster should be quickly rid the World,
 To rid vs from the feare we haue of him.
Card. That he should dye, is worthie pollicie,
 But yet we want a Colour for his death:
 'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of Law.

Suff. But in my minde, that were no pollicie:
 The King will labour still to saue his Life,
 The Commons haply rise, to saue his Life;
 And yet we haue but triuiall argument,
 More then mistrust, that shewes him worthy death.

York. So that by this, you would not haue him dye,
Suff. Ah York, no man aliue, so faine as I
York. 'Tis York that hath more reason for his death,
 But my Lord Cardinall, and you my Lord of Suffolke,
 Say as you thinke, and speake it from your Soules:
 Wer't not all one, an emptie Eagle were set,
 To guard the Chicken from a hungry Kite,
 As place Duke Humphrey for the Kings Protector?

Queene. So the poore Chicken should be sure of death.
Suff. Madame 'tis true: and wer't not madnesse then,
 To make the Fox surveyor of the Fold,
 Who being accus'd a craftie Murtherer,
 His guilt should be but idly posted ouer,
 Because his purpose is not executed:
 No: let him dye, in that he is a Fox,
 By nature prou'd an Enemy to the Flock,
 Before his Chaps be stayn'd with Crimson blood,
 As Humphrey prou'd by Reasons to my Liege,
 And doe not stand on Quillets how to slay him:
 Be it by Gynnes, by Snares, by Subletie,
 Sleeping, or Waking, 'tis no matter how,
 So he be dead: for that is good deceit,
 Which mates him first; that first intends deceit.

Queene. Thrice Noble Suffolke, 'tis resolutely spoke:
Suff. Not resolute, except so much were done,
 For things are often spoke, and seldome meant;
 But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
 Seeing the deed is meritorious,
 And to preserue my Soueraigne from his Foe,
 Say but the word, and I will be his Priest.
Card. But I would haue him dead, my Lord of Suffolke, Ere you can take due Orders for a Priest:
 Say you consent, and censure well the deed,
 And ile prouide his Executioner,
 I tender to the safetie of my Liege.

Suff. Here is my Hand, the deed is worthy doing.
Queene. And so say I.
York. And I: and now we three haue spoke it,
 It skills not greatly who impugnes our doome.

Enter a Posse

Posse. Great Lords, from Ireland am I come againe,
 To signifie, that Rebels there are vp,
 And put the Englishmen vnto the Sword.
 Send Succours (Lords) and stop the Rage betime,
 Before the Wound doe grow vncurable;
 For being Greene, there is great hope of helpe.

Card. A Breach that craues a quick expedient stoppe,
 What counsaile giue you in this weightie cause?

York. That Somer be sent as Regent thither:
 'Tis meet that luckie Ruler be employ'd,
 Witnesse the fortune he hath had in France.

Som. If York, with all his farre-set pollicie,
 Had bene the Regent there, in stead of me,
 He neuer would haue stay'd in France so long.

York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done,
 I rather would haue lost my Life betimes,
 Then bring a burthen of dis-honour home,
 By staying there so long, till all were lost.
 Shew me one skarre, character'd on thy Skinne,
 Mens flesh prefer'd to whole, doe seldome winne.

Qu. Nay then, this sparke will prone a raging fire,
 If Wind and Euell be brought, to feed it with:
 No more, good York; sweet Somer be still.
 Thy fortune, York, hadst thou bene Regent there,
 Might happily haue prou'd farre worse then his.

York. What, worse then naught? nay, then a shame take all.

Somer. And in the number, thee, that wilt shame.

Card. My Lord of York, trie what your fortune is:
 Th'vnciuill Kernes of Ireland are in Armes,
 And temper Clay with blood of Englishmen.
 To Ireland will you leade a Band of men,
 Collected choicely, from each Countie some,
 And trie your hap against the Irishmen?

York. I will, my Lord, so please his Maiestie.
Suff. Why, our Authoritie is his consent;
 And what we doe establish, he confirms.

Then, Noble York, take thou this Taske in hand,
 Whiles I take order for mine owne affaires.

Suff. A charge, Lord York, that I will see perform'd.
 But now retorne we to the false Duke Humphrey.

Card. No more of him: for I will deale with him,
 That henceforth he shall trouble vs no more:
 And so breake off the day is almost spent,
 Lord Suffolke, you and I must talke of that euent.

York. My

York. My Lord of Suffolke, within foureteene dayes
 At Brittow I expect my Souldiers,
 For there ile shippe them all for Ireland.
Suff. Ile see it truly done, my Lord of York. Exeunt

Manet York
York. Now York, or neuer, Steele thy fearfull thoughts,
 And change misdoubt to resolution;
 Be that thou hop'st to be, or what thou art;
 Refigne to death, it is not worth th'enioying:
 Let pale-fac't feare keepe with the meane-borne man,
 And finde no harbor in a Royall heart.

After the Spring-time shewes, comes thought on thought,
 And not a thought, but thinks on Dignitie.
 My Brayne, more busie then the laboring Spider,
 Weaues tedious Snarles to trap mine Enemies.
 Well Nobles, well, 'tis politickely done,
 To send me packing with an Hoast of men:

I feare me, you but warme the starued Snake,
 Who cherisht in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
 'Twas men I lackt, and you will giue them me;
 I take it kindly: yet be well assur'd,

You put sharpe Weapons in a mad-mans hands.
 Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mightie Band,
 I will stirre vp in England some black Storme,
 Shall blowe ten thousand Soules to Heauen, or Hell:
 And this fell Tempest shall not cease to rage,
 Vntill the Golden Circuit on my Head,

Like to the glorious Sunnes transparent Beames,
 Doe calne the furie of this mad-bred Flawe.

And for a minister of my intent,
 I haue seduc'd a head-strong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,

To make Commotion, as full well he can,
 Vnder the Title of John Mortimer.

In Ireland haue I seene this stubborne Cade
 Oppose himselfe against a Troupe of Kernes,
 And fought so long, till that his thighes with Darts
 Were almost like a sharpe-quill'd Porpentine:

And in the end being rescued, I haue seene
 Him capre vpright, like a wilde Morisco,
 Shaking the bloody Darts, as he his Bells.

Full often, like a shag-hayr'd craftie Kerne,
 Hath he conuerf'd with the Enemy,
 And vndiscou'd, come to me againe,
 And giuen me notice of their Villanies.

This Deuill here shall be my substitute;
 For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
 In face, in gate, in speech he doth resemble.

By this, I shall perceiue the Commons minde,
 How they affect the House and Clayme of York.

Say he be taken, rackt, and tortured;
 I know, no paine they can inflict vpon him,
 Will make him say, I mou'd him to those Armes.

Say that he thrise, as 'tis great like he will,
 Why then from Ireland come I with my strength,
 And reape the Haruest which that Rascall sow'd.

For Humphrey; being dead, as he shall be,
 And Henry put apart: the next for me. Exit

Enter two or three running over the Stage, from the Murder of Duke Humphrey.

1. Runne to my Lord of Suffolke: let him know
 We haue dispatcht the Duke, as he commanded;

2. Oh, that it were to doe: what haue we done?
 Didst euer heare a man so penitent? Enter Suffolke.

1. Here comes my Lord.

Suff. Now Sirs, haue you dispatcht this thing?

1. I, my good Lord, hee's dead.

Suff. Why that's well said. Goe, get you to my House,

I will reward you for this venturous deed:

The King and all the Peeres are here at hand.

Haue you layd faire the Bed? Is all things well,
 According as I gaue directions?

1. 'Tis, my good Lord.

Suff. Away, be gone. Exeunt

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King, the Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Somers, with Attendants.

King. Goe call our Vnckle to our presence straight:
 Say, we intend to try his Grace to day;
 If he be guiltie, as 'tis published.

Suff. Ile call him presently, my Noble Lord. Exit
King. Lords take your places: and I pray you all Proceed no straiter gainst our Vnckle Gloster,
 Then from true euidence, of good esteeme,
 He be approu'd in practise culpable.

Queene. God forbid any Malice should preuaile,
 That faultlesse may condemne a Noble man:
 Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion.

King. I thanke thee Nell, these wordes content mee much.

Enter Suffolke.
 How now? why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
 Where is our Vnckle? what's the matter, Suffolke?

Suff. Dead in his Bed, my Lord: Gloster is dead.
Queene. Marry God forbid.

Card. Gods secret Iudgement: I did dreame to Night,
 The Duke was dumbe, and could not speake a word.

King. How fares my Lord? Helpe Lords, the King is dead.

Som. Rere vp his Body, wring him by the Nose,
Qu. Runne, goe, helpe, helpe: Oh Henry ope thine eyes,
Suff. He doth reuiue againe, Madame be patient.

King. Oh Heauenly God.
Qu. How fares my gracious Lord?

Suff. Comfort my Soueraigne, gracious Henry comfort.

King. What, doth my Lord of Suffolke comfort me?
 Came he right now to sing a Rauens Note,
 Whose dismall tune bereft my Vitall powres:

And thinkes he, that the chirping of a Wren,
 By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
 Can chase away the first-conceiued sound?

Hide not thy poyson with such sugred words,
 Lay not thy hands on me: forbear I say,
 Their touch affrights me as a Serpents sting.

Thou balefull Messenger, out of my sight:
 Vpon thy eye-balls, murderous Tyrannie
 Sits in grim Maieftie, to fright the World.

Looke not vpon me, for thine eyes are wounding;
 Yet doe not goe away: come Basiliske,
 And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight:

For in the shade of death, I shall finde ioy;
 In life, but double death, now Gloster's dead.

Queene. Why do you raze my Lord of Suffolke thus?
 Although the Duke was enemy to him,
 Yet he most Christian-like laments his death:

And for my selfe, Foe as he was to me,
 Might liquid teares, or heart-offending groanes,
 Or blood-consuming sighes recall his Life;

I would be blinde with weeping, sicke with grones,
Looke pale as Prim-rose with blood-drinking sighes,
And all to haue the Noble Duke aliue.
What know I how the world may deeme of me?
For it is knowne we were but hollow Friends:
It may be iudg'd I made the Duke away,
So shall my name with Slanders tongue be wounded,
And Princes Courts be fill'd with my reproach:
This get I by his death: Aye me vnhappy,
To be a Queene, and Crown'd with infamie.

King. Ah woe is me for Gloster, wretched man.

Queen. Be woe for me, more wretched then he is.
What, dost thou turne away, and hide thy face?
I am no loathsome Leaper, looke on me.
What? Art thou like the Adder waxen deafe?
Be poysonous too, and kill thy forlorne Queene.
Is all thy comfort shut in Glosters Tombe?
Why then Dame *Eliano*r was nere thy loy.
Erect his Statue, and worship it,
And make my Image but an Ale-houfe signe.
Was I for this nye wrack'd vpon the Sea,
And twice by aukward winde from Englands banke
Droue backe againe vnto my Native Clime.
What boaded this? but well fore-warning winde
Did seeme to say, seeke not a Scorpions Nest,
Nor set no footing on this vnkinde Shore.
What did I then? But curst the gentle gusts,
And he that loos'd them forth their Brazen Caves,
And bid them blow towards Englands blessed shore,
Or turne our Sterne vpon a dreadfull Rocke:
Yet Aeolus would not be a murderer,
But left that hatefull office vnto thee.

The pretty vaulting Sea refus'd to drowne me,
Knowing that thou wouldst haue me drown'd on shore
With teares as salt as Sea, through thy vnkindnesse.
The splitting Rockes cower'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides,
Because thy flinty heart more hard then they,
Might in thy Pallace, perish *Eliano*r.
As farre as I could ken thy Chalky Cliffes,
When from thy Shore, the Tempest beate vs backe,
I stood vpon the Hatches in the Storme:
And when the duskie sky, began to rob
My earnest-gaping sight of thy Lands view,
Iooke a costly Iewell from my necke,
A Hart it was bound in with Diamonds,
And threw it towards thy Land: The Sea receiu'd it,
And so I wish'd thy body might my Heart:
And even with this, I lost faire Englands view,
And bid mine eyes be packing with my Heart,
And call'd them blinde and duskie Spectacles,
For loosing ken of Albions wish'd Coast.
How often haue I tempted Suffolkes tongue
(The agent of thy soule inconstancie)
To sit and watch me as Aescanius did,
When he to madding Dido would vnfold
His Fathers Acts, commenc'd in burning Troy.
Am I not witcht like her? Or thou not false like him?
Aye me, I canno more: Dye *Eliano*r, be dead
For Henry weepes, that thou dost liue so long.

Noyse within. Enter Warwicke, and many others.

War. It is reported, mighty Soueraigne,
That good Duke Humfries Traiterously is murdered

By Suffolke, and the Cardinall Beaufords meanes:
The Commons like an angry Hiee of Bees
That want their Leader, scatter vp and downe,
And care not who they sting in his reuenge.
My selfe haue calm'd their spleenfull mutinie,
Vntill they heare the order of his death.

King. That he is dead good Warwicke, 'tis too true,
But how he dyed, God knowes, not Henry:
Enter his Chamber, view his breathlesse Corpes,
And comment then vpon his sodaine death.

War. That shall I do my Liege; Stay Salisbury
With the rude multitude, till I returne.

King. O thou that iudgest all things, stay my thoughts:
My thoughts, that labour to perwade my soule,
Some violent hands were laid on Humfries life:
If my suspect be false, forgiue me God,
For iudgement onely doth belong to thee:
Faine would I go to chafe his palie lips,
With twenty thousand kisses, and to draine
Vpon his face an Ocean of salt teares,
To tell my loue vnto his dumbe deafe trunkes,
And with my fingers feeble hand, vnfeeling:
But all in vaine are these meane Obsequies,

Bed put forth.

And to suruey his dead and earthy Image:

What were it but to make my sorrow greater?

War. Come hither gracious Soueraigne, view this body.

King. That is to see how deepe my graue is made,
For with his soule fled all my worldly solace:
For seeing him, I see my life in death.

War. As surely as my soule intends to liue
With that dread King that took our state vpon him,
To free vs from his Fathers wrathfull curse,
I do beleue that violent hands were laid
Vpon the life of this thrice-famed Duke.

Suff. A dreadfull Oath, sworn with a solemn tongue:
What instance giues Lord Warwicke for his vow.

War. See how the blood is ferled in his face.
Of haue I seene a timely-parted Ghost,
Of althy semblance, meager, pale, and bloodlesse,
Being all defended to the labouring heart,
Who in the Conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the fame for aydance gainst the enemy,
Which with the heart there cooles, and ne're returneth,
To blush and beautifie the Cheeke againe.
But see, his face is blacke, and full of blood:
His eye-balles further out, than when he liued,
Staring full gastly, like a strangled man:
His hayre vprear'd, his nostrils stretcht with struggling:
His hands abroad display'd, as one that graspt
And tugg'd for Life, and was by strength subdu'd.
Looke on the sheets his haire (you see) is sticking,
His well proportion'd Beard, made ruffe and rugged,
Like to the Summers Come by Tempest lodged:
It cannot be but he was murdered heere,
The least of all these signes were probable.

Suff. Why Warwicke, who should do the D. to death?
My selfe and Beauford had him in protection,
And we I hope sir, are no murderers.

War. But both of you were vow'd D. Humfries foes,
And you (forsooth) had the good Duke to keepe:
Tis like you would not feast him like a friend,
And 'tis well scene, he found an enemy.

Queen. Than you belike suspect these Noblemen,
As guilty of Duke Humfries timelesse death.

War. Who finds the Heyfer dead, and bleeding fresh,
And sees fast-by, a Butcher with an Axe,
But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter?
Who finds the Partridge in the Puttocks Nest,
But may imagine how the Bird was dead,
Although the Kite soare with vnbloudied Beake?
Euen so suspicious is this Tragedie.

Qu. Are you the Butcher, Suffolke, where's your Knife?
Is Beauford teard'm'd a Kite? where are his Talions?

Suff. I weare no Knife, to slaughter sleeping men,
But here's a vengefull Sword, rusted with ease,
That shall be scowred in his rancorous heart,
That slanders me with Murthers Crimson Badge.
Say, it thou dar'st, powd Lord of Warwickshire,
That I am faultie in Duke Humfries death.

War. What dares not Warwicke, if false Suffolke dare him?

Qu. He dares not calme his contumelious Spirit,
Nor cease to be an arrogant Controller,
Though Suffolke dare him twenty thousand times.

War. Madame be still: with reuerence may I say,
For every word you speake in his behalfe,
Is slander to your Royall Dignitie.

Suff. Blunt-witted Lord, ignoble in demeanor,
If euer Lady wrong'd her Lord so much,
Thy Mother tooke into her blamefull Bed
Some sterne vntutur'd Churle; and Noble Stock
Was graft with Crab-tree slippe, whose Fruit thou art,
And neuer of the Neuils Noble Race.

War. But that the guilt of Murther bucklers thee,
And I should rob the Deaths-man of his Fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my Soueraignes presence makes me milde,
I would, false murd'rous Coward, on thy Knee
Make thee begge pardon for thy passed speech,
And say, it was thy Mother that thou meant'st,
That thou thy selfe wast borne in Bastardie;
And after all this fearefull Homage done,
Gue thee thy hyre, and send thy Soule to Hell,
Pernicious blood-sucker of sleeping men.

Suff. Thou shalt be waking, while I shed thy blood,
If from this presence thou dar'st goe with me.

War. Away euen now, or I will drag thee hence:
Vnworthy though thou art, Ile cope with thee,
And doe some seruice to Duke Humfries Ghost.

Exeunt.

King. What stronger Brest-plate then a heart vntainted?
Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his Quarrell iust;
And he but naked, though lockt vp in Steele,
Whose Conscience with Iniustice is corrupted.

A noyse within.

Queen. What noyse is this?

Enter Suffolke and Warwicke, with their Weapons drawne.

King. Why how now Lords?
Your wrathfull Weapons drawne,
Here in our presence? Dare you be so bold?
Why what tumultuous clamor haue we here?

Suff. The trayt'rous Warwicke, with the men of Bury,
Set all vpon me, mightie Soueraigne.

Enter Salisbury.

Salib. Sirs stand apart, the King shall know your mide.

Dread Lord, the Commons send you word by me,
Vnlesse Lord Suffolke straight be done to death,
Or banished faire Englands Territories,
They will by violence teare him from your Pallace,
And torture him with grievous lingering death.
They say, by him the good Duke Humfrey dy'd:
They say, in him they feare your Highnesse death;
And meere instinct of Loue and Loyaltie,
Free from a stubborne opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his Banishment.
They say, in care of your most Royall Person,
That if your Highnesse should intend to sleepe,
And charge, that no man should disturbe your rest,
In paine of your dislike, or paine of death;
Yet notwithstanding such a strait Edict,
Were there a Serpent scene, with forked Tongue,
That slyly glyded towards your Maiestie,
It were but necessarie you were wak't:
Least being suffer'd in that harmefull slumber,
The mortall Worme might make the sleepe eternall.
And therefore doe they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, where you will, or no,
From such fell Serpents as false Suffolke is;
With whose inuened and fatal sting,
Your louing Vnckle, twentie times his worth,
They say is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons within. An answer from the King, my Lord of Salisbury.

Suff. Tis like the Commons, rude vnpolisht Hindes,
Could send such Message to their Soueraigne:
But you, my Lord, were glad to be imploy'd,
To shew how quaint an Orator you are.
But all the Honor Salisbury hath wonne,
Is, that he was the Lord Embassador,
Sent from a fort of Tinkers to the King.

Within. An answer from the King, or wee will all breake in.

King. Goe Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I thanke them for their tender louing care;
And had I not bene cited so by them,
Yet did I purpose as they doe enrear:
For sure, my thoughts doe hourly prophecie,
Mischance vnto my State by Suffolkes meanes.
And therefore by his Maiestie I sweare,
Whose farre-vnworthie Deputie I am,
He shall not breathe infection in this ayre,
But three dayes longer, on the paine of death.

Qu. Oh Henry, let me pleade for gentle Suffolke.

King. Vngentle Queene, to call him gentle Suffolke.
No more I say: if thou do'st pleade for him,
Thou wilt but adde encrease vnto my Wrath.
Had I but sayd, I would haue kept my Word;
But when I sweare, it is irreuocable:
If after three dayes space thou here bee'st found,
On any ground that I am Ruler of,
The World shall not be Ransome for thy Life.
Come Warwicke, come good Warwicke, goe with mee,
I haue great matters to impart to thee. Exit.

Qu. Mischance and Sorrow goe along with you,
Hearts Discontent, and sowe Affliction,
Be play-fellowes to keepe you companie:
There's two of you, the Deuill make a third,
And three-fold Vengeance tend vpon your steps.

Suff. Cease, gentle Queene, these Execrations,
And let thy Suffolke take his heauie leaue.

Queen. Fye

Queen. Fye Coward woman, and soft harted wretch,
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy.

Suf. A plague vpon them: wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the Mandrakes grone,
I would inuent as bitter searching termes,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to heare,
Deliu'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signes of deadly hate,
As leane-fac'd enuy in her loathsome caue.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words,
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten Flint,
Mine haire be fixt an end, as one distract:
I, euery ioynt should seeme to curse and ban,
And euen now my burthen'd heart would breake
Should I not curse them. Poyson be their drinke.
Gall, worse then Gall, the daintiest that they taste:
Their sweetest shade, a groue of Cypress Trees:
Their cheefest Prospekt, murthering Basiliskes:
Their softest Touch, as smart as Lizards stings:
Their Musicke, frightfull as the Serpents hisse,
And boading Screech-Owles, make the Comfort full.
All the foule terrors in darke feared hell.

Q. Enough sweet Suffolke, thou torment'st thy selfe,
And these dread curses like the Sunne 'gainst glasse,
Or like an ouer-charged Gun, recoile,
And turnes the force of them vpon thy selfe.

Suf. You bad me ban, and will you bid me leaue?
Now by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a Winters night,
Though standing naked on a Mountaine top,
Where byting cold would neuer let grasse grow,
And thinke it but a minute spent in sport.

Q. Oh, let me intreat thee cease, giue me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournfull teares:
Nor let the raine of heauen wet this place,
To wash away my wofull Monuments.
Oh, could this kisse be printed in thy hand,
That thou might'st thinke vpon these by the Seale,
Through whom a thousand sighes are breath'd for thee.
So get thee gone, that I may know my grieffe,
Tis but surmiz'd, whiles thou art standing by,
As one that sursets, thinking on a want:
I will repeale thee, or be well assur'd,
Aduenture to be banished my selfe:
And banished I am, if but from thee.
Go, speake not to me; euen now be gone.
Oh go not yet. Euen thus, two Friends condemn'd,
Embrace, and kisse, and take ten thousand leaues,
Loather a hundred times to part then dye;
Yet now farewell, and farewell Life with thee.

Suf. Thus is poore Suffolke ten times banished,
Once by the King, and three times thrice by thee.
Tis not the Land I care for, wert thou thence,
A Wildernesse is populous enough,
So Suffolke had thy heauenly company:
For where thou art, there is the World it selfe,
With euery feuerall pleasure in the World:
And where thou art not, Desolation.
I can no more: Liue thou to ioy thy life;
My selfe no ioy in nought, but that thou liu'st.

Enter Vaux.

Queen. Whether goes Vaux so fast? What newes I prethee?

Vaux. To signifie vnto his Maiesty,
That Cardinall Beauford is at point of death:
For sodainly a greuous sicknesse tooke him,
That makes him gaspe, and stare, and catch the aire,
Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
Sometime he talkes, as if Duke Humfries Ghost
Were by his side: Sometime, he calles the King,
And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his ouer-charged soule,
And I am sent to tell his Maiesty,
That euen now he cries aloud for him.

Q. Go tell this heauy Message to the King. Exit
Aye me! What is this World? What newes are these?
But wherefore greue I at an houres poore losse,
Omitting Suffolkes exile, my soules Treasure?
Why onely Suffolke mourne I not for thee?
And with the Southerne clouds, contend in teares?
Theirs for the earths encrease, mine for my sorrowes.
Now get thee hence, the King thou know'st is coming,
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot liue,
And in thy sight to dye, what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
Heere could I breath my soule into the ayre,
As milde and gentle as the Cradle-babe,
Dying with mothers dugges betweene it's lips.
Where from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
And cry out for thee to close vp mine eyes:
To haue thee with thy lippes to stop my mouth:
So should'st thou eyther turne my flying soule,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liu'd in sweete Elizium.

To dye by thee, were but to dye in iest,
From thee to dye, were torture more then death:
Oh let me stay, befall what may befall.

Queen. Away: Though parting be a fierfull corrosion,
It is applyed to a deathfull wound.
To France sweet Suffolke: Let me heare from thee:
For wherefore thou art in this worlds Globe,
He haue an Irre that shall finde thee out.

Suf. I go.

Q. And take my heart with thee.

Suf. A Jewell lockt into the wofull Caske,
That euer did containe a thing of worth,
Euen as a splitted Barke, so sunder we:
This way fall I to death.

Q. This way for me. Exit

Enter the King, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Cardinal in bed.

King. How fare's my Lord? Speake Beauford to thy Soueraigne.

Ca. If thou bee'st death, He giue thee Englands Treasure, Enough to purchase such another Island,
So thou wilt let me liue, and feele no paine.

King. Ah, what a signe it is of euill life,
Where death's approach is seene so terrible.

War. Beauford, it is thy Soueraigne speakes to thee.

Beau. Bring me vnto my Triall when you will.

Dy'de he not in his bed? Where should he dye?

Can I make men liue where they will or no?

Oh torture me no more, I will confesse.

Alieue againe? Then shew me where he is,

He giue a thousand pound to looke vpon him.

He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.

Comb.

Combe downe his haire; looke, looke, it stands vp right;
Like Lime-twigs set to catch my winged soule:

Giue me some drinke, and bid the Apothecarie
Bring the strong poyson that I bought of him.

King. Oh thou eternall mouer of the heauens,

Looke with a gentle eye vpon this Wretch,

Oh beate away the busie meddling Fiend,

That layes strong siege vnto this wretches soule,

And from his boosome purge this blacke dispaire.

War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin.

Sal. Disturbe him not, let him passe peaceably.

King. Peace to his soule, if Gods good pleasure be.

Lord Cardinall, if thou thinkest on heauens blisse,

Hold vp thy hand, make signall of thy hope.

He dies and makes no signe: Oh God forgive him.

War. So bad a death, argues a monstrous life.

King. Forbeare to iudge, for we are sinners all.

Close vp his eyes, and draw the Curtaine close,

And let vs all to Meditation. Exit.

Alarum. Fight at Sea. Ordnance goes off.

Enter Lieutenant, Suffolke, and others.

Lien. The gaudy babbling and remorsefull day,
Is crept into the bosome of the Sea:

And now loud howling Wolves arouse the Iades

That dragge the Tragike melancholy night:

Who with their drowfie, slow, and flagging wings

Cleape dead-mens graues, and from their misty Iawes,

Breath foule contagious darknesse in the ayre:

Therefore bring forth the Souldiers of our prize,

For whilst our Pinnace Anchors in the Downes,

Heere shall they make their ransome on the sand,

Or with their blood staine this discoloured shore.

Maister, this Prisoner freely giue I thee,

And thou that art his Mate, make boote of this:

The other Walter Whitmore is thy share.

1. Gent. What is my ransome Maister, let me know.

Ma. A thousand Crownes, or else lay down your head.

Mat. And so much shall you giue, or off goes yours.

Lien. What thinke you much to pay 2000. Crownes,

And beare the name and port of Gentlemen?

Cut both the Villaines throats, for dy you shall:

The liues of those which we haue lost in fight,

Be counter-poyd with such a pettie summe.

1. Gent. He giue it fir, and therefore spare my life.

2. Gent. And so will I, and write home for it straight.

Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,

And therefore to reuenge it, shalt thou dye,

And so should these, if I might haue my will.

Lien. Be not so rash, take ransome, let him liue.

Suf. Looke on my George, I am a Gentleman,

Rare meat what thou wilt, thou shalt be payed.

Whit. And so am I: my name is Walter Whitmore.

How now? why starts thou? What doth death affright?

Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death:

A cunning man did calculate my birth,

And told me that by Water I should dye:

Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded,

Yet let not this make thee be rightly founded.

Whit. Gualtier or Walter, which it is I care not,

Neuer yet did base dishonour blurre our name,

But with our sword we wip'd away the blot.

Therefore, when Merchant-like I sell reuenge,

Broke be my sword, my Armes torne and defac'd,

And I proclaim'd a Coward through the world.

Suf. Stay Whitmore, for thy Prisoner is a Prince,

The Duke of Suffolke, William de la Pole.

Whit. The Duke of Suffolke, muffled vp in ragges?

Suf. I, but these ragges are no part of the Duke.

Lien. But Ioue was neuer slaine as thou shalt be,

Obscure and lowlie Swaine, King Henries blood.

Suf. The honourable blood of Lancaster

Must not be shed by such a iaded Grooms:

Hast thou not kist thy hand, and held my stirrop?

Bare-headed plodded by my foot-cloth Mule,

And thought thee happy when I shooke my head.

How often hast thou waited at my cup,

Fed from my Trencher, kneel'd downe at the boord,

When I haue feasted with Queene Margaret?

Remember it, and let it make thee Crest-falne,

I, and alay this thy abortiue Pride:

How in our voyding Lobby hast thou stood,

And duly wayted for my coming forth?

This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalfe,

And therefore shall it charme thy riotous tongue.

Whit. Speak Captaine, shall I stab the forlorn Swain.

Lien. First let my words stab him, as he hath me.

Suf. Bafe slane, thy words are blunt, and so art thou.

Lien. Conuey him hence, and on our long boats side,

Strike off his head. Suf. Thou dar'st not for thy owne.

Lien. Poole, Sir Poole? Lord,

I kennell, puddle, snke, whose filth and dirt

Troubles the siluer Spring, where England drinke:

Now will I dam vp this thy yawning mouth,

For swallowing the Treasure of the Realme.

Thy lips that kist the Queene, shall sweepe the ground:

And thou that smil'd'st at good Duke Humfries death,

Against the senselesse windes shall grin in vaine,

Who in contempt shall hiss at thee againe.

And wedded be thou to the Haggas of hell,

For daring to affye a mighty Lord

Vnto the daughter of a worthless King.

Haueing neyther Subiect, Wealth, nor Diadem:

By diuillish policy art thou growne great,

And like ambitious Sylla ouer-gorg'd,

With gobbers of thy Mother-bleeding heart.

By thee Antion and Maine were sold to France.

The false reuolting Normans thorough thee,

Disdaine to call vs Lord, and Piccardie.

Harsh slaine their Governours, surpriz'd our Forts,

And sent the ragged Souldiers wounded home.

The Princely Warwicke, and the Neuils all,

Whole dreadfull swords were neuer drawne in vaine,

As hating thee, and rising vp in armes:

And now the House of Yorke thrust from the Crowne,

By shamefull murder of a guiltlesse King,

And lofty proud incroaching tyranny,

Burnes with reuenging fire, whose hopefull colours

Aduance our halfe-fac'd Sunne, striding to shine;

Vnder the which is writ, Inuitis nubibus.

The Commons heere in Kent are vp in armes,

And to conclude, Reproache and Beggerie,

Is crept into the Pallace of our King,

And all by thee: away, conuey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a God, to shoot forth Thunder

Vpon these paltry, seruile, abiect Drudges:

Small things make base men proud. This Villaine heere,

Being Captaine of a Pinnace, threatens more

Then Bargulus the strong Illyrian Pyrate.

Drones sucke not Eagles blood, but rob Bee-hiues:

It is impossible that I should dye

By

By such a lowly Vassall as thy selfe.
Thy words moue Rage, and not remorse in me:
I go of Message from the Queene to France:
I charge thee waite me safely crosse the Channell.

Lien. Water: W. Come Suffolke, I must waite thee to thy death.

Suf. Pine gelidus timor occupat artus, it is thee I feare.

Wal. Thou shalt haue cause to feare before I leaue thee.

What, are ye danted now? Now will ye stoope.

1. Gent. My gracious Lord intreat him, speak him fair.

Suf. Suffolkes Imperiall tongue is sterne and rough:

Vs'd to command, vntaught to pleade for fauour,

Farre be it, we should honor such as these

With humble suite: no, rather let my head

Stoope to the blöcke, then these knees bow to any,

Saue to the God of heauen, and to my King:

And sooner dance vpon a bloody pole,

Then stand vncouer'd to the Vulgar Groome.

True Nobility, is exempt from feare:

More can I beare, then you dare execute.

Lien. Hale him away, and let him talke no more:

Come Souldiers, shew what cruelty ye can.

Suf. That this my death may neuer be forget.

Great men oft dye by vilde Bezoniens.

A Romane Sworde, and Bandetto slaue

Murder'd sweet Tully. Brum. Bastard hand

Stab'd Iulius Caesar. Sauage Islanders

Pompey the Great, and Suffolke dyes by Pyrats.

Exit Water with Suffolke.

Lien. And as for these whose ransom we haue let,

It is our pleasure one of them depart:

Therefore come you with vs, and let him go.

Exit Lieutenant, and the rest.

Manet the first Gent. Enter Walter with the body.

Wal. There let his head, and huelesse bodie lye,

Vntill the Queene his Mistris bury it. Exit Walter.

1. Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle,

His body will I beare vnto the King:

If he reuenge it not, yet will his Friends,

So will the Queene, that liuing, held him deere.

Enter Benis, and John Holland.

Benis. Come and get thee a sword, though made of a

Lath, they haue bene vp these two dayes.

Hol. They haue the more neede to sleepe now then.

Benis. I tell thee, Iacke Cade the Cloathier, meanes to dresse the Common-wealth and turne it, and set a new nap vpon it.

Hol. So he had need, for 'tis thred-bare. Well, I say, it was neuer merrie world in England, since Gentlemen came vp.

Benis. O miserable Age: Vertue is not regarded in Handy-crafts men.

Hol. The Nobilitie thinke scorne to goe in Leather

Aprons.

Benis. Nay more, the Kings Councell are no good

Workemen.

Hol. True: and yet it is said, Labour in thy Vocation: which is as much to say, as let the Magistrates be labouring men, and therefore should we be Magistrats.

Benis. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better signe of a braue minde, then a hard hand.

Hol. I see them, I see them: There's Befts Sonne, the Tanner of Wingham.

Benis. Hee shall haue the skinnies of our enemies, to make Dogges Leather of.

Hol. And Dicke the Butcher.

Benis. Then is hee strucke downe like an Oxe, and ini-quities throate cut like a Calfe.

Hol. And Smith the Weauer.

Ben. Argo, their thred of life is spun.

Hol. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drumme. Enter Cade, Dicke Butcher, Smith the Weauer, and a Sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. Wee Iohn Cade, so tearm'd of our supposed Father.

But. Or rather of stealing a Cade of Herrings.

Cade. For our enemies shall faile before vs, inspired with the spirit of putting down Kings and Princes. Command silence.

But. Silence.

Cade. My Father was a Mortimer.

But. He was an honest man, and a good Bricklayer.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet.

Butch. I knew her well, she was a Midwife.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies.

But. She was indeed a Pedlers daughter, & sold many Laces.

Weauer. But now of late, not able to trauell with her furr'd Packe, she washes buckes here at home.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honorable house.

But. I by my faith, the field is honourable, and there was he borne, vnder a hedge: for his Father had neuer a house but the Cage.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Weauer. A must needs, for beggery is valiant.

Cade. I am able to endure much.

But. No question of that: for I haue seene him whipe three Market dayes together.

Cade. I feare neither sword, nor fire.

Wea. He neede not feare the sword, for his Coate is of proofe.

But. But me thinks he should stand in feare of fire, being burnt i'th hand for stealing of Sheepe.

Cade. Be braue then, for your Captaine is Braue, and Vowes Reformation. There shall be in England, seven halfe peny Loanes sold for a peny: the three hoop'd pot, shall haue ten hoop'es, and I will make it felony to drinke small Beere. All the Realme shall be in Common, and in Cheapside shall my Palfrey go to grasse: and when I am

King, as King I will be.

All. God save your Maiesty.

Cade. I thanke you good people. There shall bee no mony, all shall eate and drinke on my score, and I will apparrell them all in one Liurey, that they may agree like

Brothers, and worship me their Lord.

But. The first thing we do, let's kill all the Lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I meane to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent Lambe should be made Parchment; that Parchment being scribeld ore, should vndoe a man. Some say the Bee stings, but I say,

'tis the Bees waxe: for I did but seale once to a thing, and I was neuer mine owne man since. How now? Who's there?

Enter a Clarke.

Weauer. The Clarke of Chartam: hee can write and read, and cast accompt.

Cade. O monstrous.

Wea. We tooke him setting of boyes Copies.

Cade.

Cade. Here's a Villaine.

Wea. He's a Booke in his pocket with red Letters in't

Cade. Nay then he is a Coniurer.

But. Nay, he can make Obligations, and write Court hand.

Cade. I am sorry for't: The man is a proper man of mine Honour: vntesse I finde him guilty, he shall not die.

Come hither sirrah, I must examine thee: What is thy name?

Clarke. Emannell.

But. They vse to writ it on the top of Letters: 'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone: Dost thou vse to write thy name?

Or hast thou a marke to thy selfe, like a honest plain dealing man?

Clarke. Sir I thanke God, I haue bin so well brought vp, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confest: away with him: he's a Villaine and a Traitor.

Cade. Away with him I say: Hang him with his Pen and Inke-horne about his necke.

Exit one with the Clarke.

Enter Michael.

Mich. Where's our General?

Cade. Heere I am thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly, Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the Kings Forces.

Cade. Stand villaine, stand, or Ile fell thee downe: he shall be encountred with a man as good as himselfe. He is but a Knight, is a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equall him I will make my selfe a knight presently: Rise vp Sir Iohn Mortimer. Now haue at him.

Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford, and his Brother, with Drum and Soldiers.

Staff. Rebellious Hinds, the filth and scum of Kent,

Mark'd for the Gallowes: Lay your Weapons downe,

Home to your Cottages: forsake this Groome.

The King is mercifull, if you reuolt.

Bro. But angry, wrathfull, and inclin'd to blood,

If you go forward: therefore yeeld, or dye.

Cade. As for these filken-coated slaues I passe not,

It is to you good people, that I speake,

ouer whom (in time to come) I hope to raigne:

For I am rightfull heire vnto the Crowne.

Staff. Villaine, thy Father was a Playsterer,

And thou thy selfe a Sheareman, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a Gardiner.

Bro. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this Edmund Mortimer Earle of March, married the Duke of Clarence daughter, did he not?

Staff. I sir.

Cade. By her he had two children at one birth.

Bro. That's false.

Cade. I, there's the question; But I say, 'tis true:

The elder of them being put to nurse,

Was by a begger-woman stolne away,

And ignorant of his birth and parentage,

Became a Bricklayer, when he came to age.

His sonne am I, deny it if you can.

But. Nay, 'tis too true, therefore he shall be King.

Wea. Sir, he made a Chimney in my Fathers house, & the bricke is allue at this day to testifie it: therefore deny it not.

Staff. And will you credit this base Drudges Wordes, that speakes he knowes not what.

All. I marry will we: therefore get ye gone.

Bro. Iacke Cade, the D. of York hath taught you this.

Cade. He lyes, for I inuented it my selfe. Go too Sir-rah, tell the King from me, that for his Fathers sake Hen- ry the fift, (in whose time, boyes went to Span-counter for French Crownes) I am content he shall raigne, but Ile be Protector ouer him.

Butcher. And furthermore, wee'l haue the Lord Sayer

head, for selling the Dukedome of Maine.

Cade. And good reason: for thereby is England main'd

And faine to go with a staffe, but that my puissance holds it vp. Fellow-Kings, I tell you, that that Lord Say hath gelded the Common-wealth, and made it an Eunuch: & more then that, he can speake French, and therefore hee is a Traitor.

Staff. O grosse and miserable ignorance.

Cade. Nay answer if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go too then, I ask but this: Can he that speakes with the tongue of an enemy, be a good Councellour, or no?

All. No, no, and therefore wee'l haue his head.

Bro. Well, seeing gentle wordes will not preuaile,

Assaile them with the Army of the King.

Staff. Herald away, and throughout euery Towne,

Proclaime them Traitors that are vp with Cade,

That those which flye before the battell ends,

May euen in their Wiues and Childrens sight,

Be hang'd vp for example at their doores:

And you that be the Kings Friends follow me. Exit.

Cade. And you that loue the Commons, follow me:

Now shew your felues men, 'tis for Liberty.

We will not leaue one Lord, one Gentleman:

Spare none, but such as go in clouted shooen,

For they are thrifty honest men, and such

As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

But. They are all in order, and march toward vs.

Cade. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come, march forward.

Alarums to the fight, wherein both the Staffords are slaine.

Enter Cade and the rest.

Cade. Where's Dicke, the Butcher of Ashford?

But. Heere sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like Sheepe and Oxen, & thou behaued'st thy selfe, as if thou hadst bene in thine

owne Slaughter-house: Therefore thus will I reward thee, the Lent shall bee as long againe as it is, and thou shalt haue a License to kill for a hundred lacking one.

But. I desire no more.

Cade. And to speake truth, thou deseru'st no lesse.

This Monument of the victory will I beare, and the bodies shall be dragg

And makes it fearefull and degenerate,
Thinke therefore on reuenge, and cease to weepe.
But who can cease to weepe, and looke on this.
Heere may his head lye on my throbbing brest:
But where's the body that I should embrace?

Buc. What answer makes your Grace to the Rebels Supplication?

King. He send some holy Bishop to intreat:
For God forbid, so many simple soules
Should perish by the Sword. And I my selfe,
Rather then bloody Warre shall cut them short,
Will parley with Iacke Cade their Generall.
But stay, he read it ouer once againe.

Qu. Ah barbarous villaines: Hath this lonely face,
Rul'd like a wandering Plannet ouer me,
And could it not inforce them to relent,
That were vnworthy to behold the same.

King. Lord Say, Iacke Cade hath sworne to haue thy head.

Say. I, but I hope your Highnesse shall haue his.
King. How now Madam?

Still lamenting and mourning for Suffolkes death?
I feare me (Loue) if that I had bene dead,
Thou would'st not haue mourn'd so much for me.

Qu. No my Loue, I should not mourne, but dye for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

King. How now? What newes? Why com'st thou in such haste?

Mess. The Rebels are in Southwarke: Fly my Lord:
Iacke Cade proclaimes himselfe Lord Mortimer, Descended from the Duke of Clarence house,
And calles your Grace Vsurper, openly,
And vowes to Crowne himselfe in Westminster.
His Army is a ragged multitude
Of Hindes and Pezants, rude and mercilesse:
Sir Humfrey Stafford, and his Brothers death,
Hath giuen them heart and courage to proceede:
All Schollers, Lawyers, Courtiers, Gentlemen,
They call false Catterpillers, and intend their death.

King. Oh gracelesse men: they know not what they do.
Buck. My gracious Lord, retire to Killingworth,
Vntill a power be rais'd to put them downe.

Qu. Ah were the Duke of Suffolke now aliue,
These Kentish Rebels would be soone appeas'd.

King. Lord Say, the Traitors hate thee,
Therefore away with vs to Killingworth.

Say. So might your Graces person be in danger:
The sight of me is odious in their eyes:
And therefore in this Cittie will I stay,
And liue alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. Iacke Cade hath gotten London-bridge.
The Citizens flye and forsake their houses:
The Rascall people, thirsting after prey,
Ioyne with the Traitor, and they ioyntly sweare
To spoyle the City, and your Royall Court.

Buc. Then linger not my Lord, away, take horse.

King. Come Margaret, God our hope will succor vs.

Qu. My hope is gone, now Suffolke is deceast.

King. Farewell my Lord, trust not the Kentish Rebels

Buc. Trust no body for feare you betraid.

Say. The trust I haue, is in mine innocence,

And therefore am I bold and resolute.

Enter Lord Scales vpon the Tower walking. Then enters two or three Citizens below.

Scales. How now? Is Iacke Cade slaine?

1. Cit. No my Lord, nor likely to be slaine:

For they haue wonne the Bridge,
Killing all those that withstand them:
The L. Major craues ayd of your Honor from the Tower
To defend the City from the Rebels.

Scales. Such ayd as I can spare you shall command,
But I am troubled heere with them my selfe,
The Rebels haue assay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither I will send you Matthew Goffe.
Fight for your King, your Countrey, and your Liues,
And so farewell, for I must hence againe.

Enter Iacke Cade and the rest, and strikes his staffe on London stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer Lord of this City,
And heere sitting vpon London Stone,
I charge and command, that of the Cities cost
The pissing Conduit run nothing but Clarret Wine
This first yeare of our raigne.

And now henceforward it shall be Treason for any,
That calles me other then Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier running.

Soul. Iacke Cade, Iacke Cade.

Cade. Knocke him downe there.

But. If this Fellow be wise, hee'l neuer call yee Iacke
Cade more, I thinke he hath a very faire warning.
Dicke. My Lord, there's an Army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then let's go fight with them:
But first, go and set London Bridge on fire,
And if you can, burne downe the Tower too.
Come, let's away.

Alarums. Matthew Goffe is slaine, and all the rest.
Then enter Iacke Cade, with his Company.

Cade. So firs: now go some and pull downe the Sauoy:
Others to th' limes of Court, downe with them all.

But. I haue a suite vnto your Lordship.

Cade. Bee it a Lordshippe, thou shalt haue it for that word.

But. Onely that the Lawes of England may come out of your mouth.

John. Masse 'twill be fore Law then, for he was thrust in the mouth with a Speare, and 'tis not whole yet.

Smith. Nay John, it wil be stinking Law, for his breath stinkes with eating toasted cheese.

Cade. I haue thought vpon it, it shall bee so. Away, burne all the Records of the Realme, my mouth shall be the Parliament of England.

John. Then we are like to haue biting Statutes
Vntill his teeth be pull'd out.

Cade. And hence-forward all things shall be in Common.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Lord, a prize, a prize, heeres the Lord Say, which sold the Townes in France. He that made vs pay one and twenty Pennes, and one shilling to the pound, the last Subsidie.

Enter George, with the Lord Say.

Cade. Well, hee shall be beheaded for it ten times:
Ah thou Say, thou Surge, nay thou Buckram Lord, now art thou within point-blanke of our Iurisdiction Regall.
What canst thou answer to my Maiesty, for giuing vp of Normandie vnto Mounseigneur Bastmeen, the Dolphine of France? Be it knowne vnto thee by these presence, euen the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the Beefsome that must sweepe the Court cleane of such filth as thou art: Thou hast most traiterously corrupted the youth of the Realme, inuenticing a Grammar Schoole: and where-before, our Fore-fathers had no other Booke but the Score and the Tally, thou hast caused printing to be vs'd, and contrary to the King, his Crowne, and Dignity, thou hast built a Paper-Mill. It will be proued to thy Face, that thou hast men about thee, that vsually talke of a Noune and a Verbe, and such abominable wordes, as no Christian eare can endure to heare. Thou hast appointed Iustices of Peace, to call poore men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison, and because they could not rede, thou hast hang'd them, when (indeede) onely for that cause they haue bene most worthy to liue. Thou dost ride in a foot-cloth, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou ought'st not to let thy horse weare a Cloake, when honest men then thou go in their Hose and Doublets.

Dicke. And worke in their shirt to, as my selfe for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent.

Dic. What say you of Kent.

Say. Nothing but this: 'Tis bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him, away with him, he speaks Latine.

Say. Heare me but speake, and beare mee where'e you
will:

Kent, in the Commentaries Cesar writ,
Is term'd the ciuel ft place of all this Isle:

Sweet is the Countrey, because full of Riches,
The People Liberall, Valiant, Aciue, Wealthy,
Which makes me hope you are not void of pity.

I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandie,

Yet to recouer them would loose my life:

Iustice with fauour haue I alwayes done,

Prayres and Teares haue mou'd me, Gifts could neuer.

When haue I ought exacted at your hands?

Kent to maintaine, the King, the Realme and you,

Large gifts haue I bestow'd on learned Clerkes,

Because my Booke prefer'd me to the King.

And seeing Ignorance is the curse of God,

Knowledge the Wing wherewith we flye to heauen.

Vntill you be posselt with diuellish spirits,

You cannot but forbear to murder me:

This Tongue hath parlied vnto Forraigne Kings

For your behoofe.

Cade. Tut, when struck'st thou one blow in the field?

Say. Great men haue reaching hands: soft haue I struck

Those that I neuer saw, and strucke them dead.

Geo. O monstrous Coward! What, to come behinde

Folkes?

Say. These cheekes are pale for watching for your good

Cade. Giue him a box o' the eare, and that wil make 'em red againe.

Say. Long sitting to determine poore mens causes,
Hath made me full of sicknesse and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall haue a hempen Candle then, & the help of hatchet.

Dicke. Why dost thou quier man?

Say. The Palfie, and not feare prouokes me.

Cade. Nay, he noddas at vs, as who should say, Ile be euen with you. Ile see if his head will stand stoddier on a pole, or no: Take him away, and behead him.

Say. Tell me: wherein haue I offended most?

Haue I affected wealth, or honor? Speake.

Are my Chefts fill'd vp with extorted Gold?

Is my Apparell sumptuous to behold?

Whom haue I iniur'd, that ye seeke my death?

These hands are free from guiltlesse bloodshedding.

This breast from harbouring foule deceitfull thoughts.

O let me liue.

Cade. I feele remorse in my selfe with his wordes: but

Ile bridle it: he shall dye, and it bee but for pleading so well for his life. Away with him, he ha's a Familiar vnder his Tongue, he speakes not a Gods name. Go, take him away I say, and strike off his head presently, and then breake into his Sonne in Lawes house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both vppon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done.

Say. Ah Countymen: If when you make your prair's,

God should be so obdurate as your selues:

How would it fare with your departed soules,

And therefore yet relent, and saue my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye: the proudest Peere in the Realme, shall not weare a head on his shoulders, vntill he pay me tribute: there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her Mayden- head ere they haue it: Men shall hold of mee in Capite.

And we charge and command, that their wiues be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

Dicke. My Lord,

When shall we go to Cheapside, and take vp commodities vpon our billes?

Cade. Marry presently.

All. O braue.

Enter one with the heads.

Cade. But is not this brauer:

Let them kisse one another: For they lou'd well

When they were aliue. Now part them againe,

Least they consule about the giuing vp

Of some more Townes in France. Soldiers,

Deferre the spoile of the Citie vntill night:

For with these borne before vs, in steed of Maces,

Will we ride through the streets, & at every Corner

Haue them kisse: Away.

Alarums, and Retreat. Enter againe Cade, and all his rabblement.

Cade. Vp Fish-streete, downe Saint Magnes corner, kill and knocke downe, throw them into Thames:

Sound a parley.

What noise is this I heare?

Dare any be so bold to sound Retreat or Parley

When I command them kill?

Enter

Enter Buckingham, and old Clifford.

Buc. There they be, that dare and will disturb thee:
Know Cade, we come Ambassadors from the King
Vnto the Commons, whom thou hast misled;
And heere pronounce free pardon to them all,
That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye Countermen, will ye relent
And yeeld to mercy, whilst 'tis offered you;
Or let a rabble leade you to your deaths,
Who loues the King, and will embrace his pardon,
Fling vp his cap, and say, God saue his Maiesty.
Who hateth him, and honors not his Father,
Henry the fift, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at vs, and passe by.

All. God saue the King, God saue the King.

Cade. What Buckingham and Clifford are ye so braue?
And you base Pezants, do ye beleue him, will you needs be hang'd with your Pardons about your neckes? Hath my sword therefore broke through London gates, that you should leaue me at the White-heart in Southwarke.
I thought ye would neuer haue giuen out these Armes til you had recovered your ancient Freedome. But you are all Recrants and Daftards, and delight to liue in slauerie to the Nobility. Let them breake your backs with burthens, take your houses ouer your heads, rauish your Wiues and Daughters before your faces. For me, I will make shift for one, and so Gods Curse light vpon you all.

All. Wee'll follow Cade,
Wee'll follow Cade.

Clif. Is Cade the sonne of Henry the fift,
That thus you do exclaime you'll go with him.
Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
And make the meanest of you Earles and Dukes?
Alas, he hath no home, no place to flye too:
Nor knowes he how to liue, but by the spoile,
Vnlesse by robbing of your Friends, and vs.
Wer't not a shame, that whilst you liue at iarre,
The fearfull French, whom you late vanquished
Should make a start ore-seas, and vanquish you?
Me thinkes already in this ciuill broyle,
I see them Lording it in London streets,
Crying Villago vnto all they meete.
Better ten thousand base-borne Cades miscarry,
Then you should sloop vnto a Frenchmans mercy.
To France, to France, and get what you haue lost:
Spare England, for it is your Native Coast:
Henry hath mony, you are strong and manly:
God on our side, doubt not of Victorie.

All. A Clifford, a Clifford,
Wee'll follow the King, and Clifford.

Cade. Was euer Beather so lightly blowne too & fro, as this multitude? The name of Henry the fift, hailes them to an hundred mischiefs, and makes them leaue mee desolate. I see them lay their heades together to surprize me. My sword make way for me, for heere is no staying:
in despite of the diuels and hell, haue through the verie middest of you, and heauens and honor be witnesse, that no want of resolution in mee, but onely my Followers base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake mee to my heeles. Exit

Buc. What, is he fled? Go some and follow him,
And he that brings his head vnto the King,
Shall haue a thousand Crownes for his reward.

Exit some of them.

Follow me souldiers, wee'll deuise a meane,
To reconcile you all vnto the King.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King, Queene, and Somerset on the Terras.

King. Was euer King that ioy'd an earthly Throne,
And could command no more content then I?
No sooner was I crept out of my Cradle,
But I was made a King, at nine months olde.
Was neuer Subiect long'd to be a King,
As I do long and wish to be a Subiect.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buc. Health and glad tydings to your Maiesty.

King. Why Buckingham, is the Traitor Cade surpris'd?
Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter Multitudes with Halsters about their Neckes.

Clif. He is fled my Lord, and all his powers do yeeld,
And humbly thus with halters on their neckes,
Expect your Highnesse doome of life, or death.

King. Then heauen set ope thy euerslasting gates,
To entertaine my vowes of thanks and praise.
Souldiers, this day haue you redeem'd your liues,
And shew'd how well you loue your Prince & Countrey.
Continue still in this so good a minde,
And Henry though he be infortunate,
Assure your selues will neuer be vnkinde:
And so with thanks, and pardon to you all,
I do dismisse you to your feuerall Countreies.

All. God saue the King, God saue the King.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Please it your Grace to be aduertised,
The Duke of Yorke is newly come from Ireland,
And with a puissant and a mighty power
Of Gallow-glasses and stout Kernes,
Is marching hither ward in proud array,
And still proclaimeth as he comes along,
His Armes are onely to remoue from thee
The Duke of Somerset, whom he tearmes a Traitor.

King. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and Yorke distrest.

Like to a Ship, that hauing scap'd a Tempest,
Is straight way calme, and boarded with a Pyrate.
But now is Cade driuen backe, his men dispers'd,
And now is Yorke in Armes, to second him.
I pray thee Buckingham go and meete him,
And aske him what's the reason of these Armes:
Tell him, Ile send Duke Edmund to the Tower,
And Somerset we will commit thee thither,
Vntill his Army be dismist from him.

Somerset. My Lord,
Ile yeelde my selfe to prison willingly,
Or vnto death, to do my Countrey good.

King. In any case, be not to rough in termes,
For he is fierce, and cannot brooke hard Language.

Buc. I will my Lord, and doubt not so to deale,
As all things shall redound vnto your good.

King. Come wife, let's in, and learne to gouern better,
For yet may England curse my wretched raigne.

Flourish.

Enter

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fye on Ambitions: sic on my selfe, that haue a sword, and yet am ready to famish. These fise daies haue
I hid me in these Woods, and durst not peepe out, for all the Country is laid for me: but now am I so hungry, that if I might haue a Lease of my life for a thousand yeares, I could stay no longer. Wherefore on a Bricke wall haue
I climb'd into this Garden, to see if I can eate Grasse, or picke a Sallet another while, which is not amisse to coole a mans stomacke this hot weather: and I think this word Sallet was borne to do me good: for many a time but for a Sallet, my braine-pan had bene clef with a brown Bill;
and many a time when I haue bene dry, & brauely marching, it hath seru'd me in steede of a quart pot to drinke in: and now the word Sallet must serue me to feed on.

Enter Iden.

Iden. Lord, who would liue turmoyled in the Court,
And may enioy such quiet walkes as these?
This small inheritance my Father left me,
Contenteth me, and worth a Monarchy.
I seeke not to waxe great by others warning,
Or gather wealth I care not with what enuy:
Sufficieth, that I haue maintaines my state,
And sends the poore well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Heere's the Lord of the soile come to seize me for a stray, for entering his Fee-simple without leaue. A Villaine, thou wilt betray me, and get a 1000. Crownes of the King by carrying my head to him, but Ile make thee eate Iron like an Ostridge, and swallow my Sword like a great pin ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why rude Companion, whatsoere thou be,
I know thee not, why then should I betray thee?
Is't not enough to breake into my Garden,
And like a Theefe to come to rob my grounds:
Climbing my walles inspight of me the Owner,
But thou wilt braue me with these sawcie termes?

Cade. Braue thee? I by the best blood that euer was broach'd, and beard thee to. Look on mee well, I haue eate no meate these fise dayes, yet come thou and thy fise men, and if I doe not leaue you all as dead as a doore naille, I pray God I may neuer eate grasse more.

Iden. Nay, it shall nere be said, while England stands,
That Alexander Iden an Esquire of Kent,
Tooke odds to combate a poore famisht man.
Oppose thy stedfast gazing eyes to mine,
See if thou canst out-face me with thy lookes:
See limbe to limbe, and thou art farre the lesser:
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist,
Thy legge a stick compared with this Truncheon,
My foote shall fight with all the strength thou hast,
And if mine arme be heaued in the Ayre,
Thy graue is digg'd already in the earth:
As for words, whose greatnesse answer's words,
Let this my sword report what speech forbeares.

Cade. By my Valour: the most compleate Champion that euer I heard. Steele, if thou turne the edge, or cut not out the burly bon'd Clowne in chins of Beefe, ere thou sleepe in thy Sheath, I beseech Ioue on my knees thou mayst be turn'd to Hobnailles.

Heere they Fight.

O I am slaine, Famine and no other hath slaine me, let ten thousand diuelles come against me, and giue me but the ten meales I haue lost, and I'de defie them all. Wither Garden, and be henceforth a burying place to all that do dwell in this house, because the vnconquered soule of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I haue slaine, that monstrous traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deede,
And hang thee o're my Tombe, when I am dead.
Ne're shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt weare it as a Heralds coate,
To emblaze the Honor that thy Master got.

Cade. Iden farewell, and be proud of thy victory: Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the World to be Cowards: For I that neuer feared any, am vanquished by Famine, not by Valour. Dyes.

Iden. How much thou wrong'st me, heauen be my iudge;
Die damned Wretch, the curse of her that bare thee:
And as I thrust thy body in with my sword,
So with I, I might thrust thy soule to hell.
Hence will I dragge thee headlong by the heeles
Vnto a dunghill, which shall be thy graue,
And there cut off thy most vngacious head,
Which I will beare in triumph to the King,
Leauing thy trunke for Crowes to feed vpon. Exit.

Enter Yorke, and his Army of Irish, with Drum and Colours.

Yor. From Ireland thus comes Yorke to claim his right,
And plucke the Crowne from feeble Henries head.
Ring Belles alowd, burne Bonfires cleare and bright
To entertaine great Englands lawfull King.
Ah Sancta Matestas! who would not buy thee deere?
Let them obey, that knowes not how to Rule.
This hand was made to handle nought but Gold.
I cannot giue due action to my words,
Except a Sword or Scepter ballance it.
A Scepter shall it haue, haue I a soule,
On which Ile tesse the Fleure-de-Luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom haue we heere? Buckingham to disturbe me?
The king hath sent him sure: I must dissemble.
Buc. Yorke, if thou meanest wel, I greet thee well.
Yor. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.
Art thou a Messenger, or come of pleasure?
Buc. A Messenger from Henry, our dread Liege,
To know the reason of these Armes in peace.
Or why, thou being a Subiect, as I am,
Against thy Oath, and true Allegiance sworn,
Should raise so great a power without his leaue?
Or dare to bring thy Force so neere the Court?

Yor. Scarce can I speake, my Choller is so great:
Oh I could hew vp Rockes, and fight with Flint, bid o
I am so angry at these abiect tearmes,
And now like Ajax Telamonius,
On Sheepe or Oxen could I spend my furie, well wot
I am farre better borne then is the king play'd by y and I
More like a King, more Kingly in my thoughts,
But I must make faire weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weake, and I more strong:
Buckingham, I prethee pardon me,
That I haue giuen no answer all this while:
My minde was troubled with deepe Melancholly.
The cause why I haue brought this Armie hither,

Is to remoue proud Somerset from the King,
Seditious to his Grace, and to the State.

Buc. That is too much presumption on thy part:
But if thy Armes be to no other end,
The King hath yeelded vnto thy demand:

The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower.
Yorke. Vpon thine Honor is he Prisoner?

Buc. Vpon mine Honor he is Prisoner.
Yorke. Then Buckingham I do dismisse my Powres.

Souldiers, I thanke you all: disperse your felues:
Meet me to morrow in S. Georges Field,

You shall haue pay, and euery thing you wish:
And let my Soueraigne, vertuous Henry,

Command my eldest sonne, nay all my sonnes,
As pledges of my Fealtie and Loue,

He send them all as willing as I liue:
Lands, Goods, Horse, Armor, any thing I haue

Is his to vse, so Somerset may die.
Buc. Yorke, I commend this kinde submission,

We twaine will go into his Highnesse Tent.

Enter King and Attendants.
King. Buckingham, doth Yorke intend no harme to vs

That thus he marcheth with thee arme in arme?
Yorke. In all submission and humility,

Yorke doth present himselfe vnto your Highnesse.
K. Then what intends these Forces thou dost bring?

Yor. To haue the Traitor Somerset from hence,
And fight against that monstrous Rebell Cade,

Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Iden with Cades head.
Iden. If one so rude, and of so meane condition

May passe into the presence of a King:
Loe, I present your Grace a Traitors head,

The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.
King. The head of Cade? Great God, how iust art thou?

Oh let me view his Visage being dead,
That liuing wrought me such exceeding trouble.

Tell me my Friend, art thou the man that slew him?
Iden. I was, an't like your Maiesty.

King. How art thou call'd? And what is thy degree?
Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name,

A poore Elquire of Kent, that loues his King.
Buc. So please it you my Lord, 'twere not amisse

He were created Knight for his good seruice.
King. Iden, kneele downe, rise vp a Knight:

We giue thee for reward a thousand Markes,
And will, that thou henceforth attend on vs:

Iden. May Iden liue to merit such a bountie,
And neuer liue but true vnto his Liege.

Enter Queene and Somerset.
K. See Buckingham, Somerset comes with th' Queene,

Go bid her hide him quickly from the Duke.
Qu. For thousand Yorkes he shall not hide his head,

But boldly stand, and frowne him to his face.
Yor. How now? is Somerset at libertie?

Then Yorke vnloose thy long imprisoned thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart:

Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?
Faire King, why hast thou broken faith with me,

Knowing how hardly I can brooke abuse?
King did I call thee? No: thou art not King:

Not fit to gouerne and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no nor canst not rule a Traitor.

That Head of thine doth not become a Crowne:
Thy Hand is made to graspe a Palmers staffe,

And not to grace an awfull Princely Scepter.
That Gold, must round engirt these browes of mine,

Whose Smile and Frowne, like to Achilles Speare,
Is able with the change, to kill and cure:

Heere is a hand to hold a Scepter vp,
And with the same to acte controlling Lawes:

Giue place: by heauen thou shalt rule no more
O're him, whom heauen created for thy Ruler.

Som. O monstrous Traitor! I arrest thee Yorke
Of Capitall Treason gainst the King and Crowne:

Obeie audacious Traitor, kneele for Grace.
Yorke. Would'st thou haue me kneele? First let me ask of thee,

If they can brooke I bow a knee to man:
Sirrah, call in my sonne to be my bale:

I know ere they will haue me go to Ward,
They'll pawne their swords of my infranchisement.

Qu. Call hither Clifford, bid him come amaine,
To say, if that the Bastard boyes of Yorke

Shall be the Surety for their Traitor Father.
Yorke. O blood-bespotted Neopolitan,

Out-cast of Naples, Englands bloody Scourge,
The sonnes of Yorke, thy betters in their birth,

Shall be their Fathers baile, and bane to those
That for my Surety will refuse the Boyes.

Enter Edward and Richard.
See where they come, Ile warrant they'll make it good.

Enter Clifford.
Qu. And here comes Clifford to deny their baile.

Clif. Health, and all happinesse to my Lord the King.
Yor. I thanke thee Clifford: Say, what newes with thee?

Nay, do not fright vs with an angry looke:
We are thy Soueraigne Clifford, kneele againe;

For thy mistaking so, We pardon thee.
Clif. This is my King Yorke, I do not mistake,

But thou mistakes me much to thinke I do,
To Bedlem with him, is the man growne mad.

King. I Clifford, a Bedlem and ambitious humor
Makes him oppose himselfe against his King.

Clif. He is a Traitor, let him to the Tower,
And chop away that factious pate of his.

Qu. He is arrested, but will not obey:
His sonnes (he sayes) shall giue their words for him.

Yor. Will you not Sonnes?
Edw. I Noble Father, if our words will serue.

Rich. And if words will not, then our Weapons shal,
Clif. Why what a brood of Traitors haue we heere?

Yorke. Looke in a Glasse, and call thy Image so.
I am thy King, and thou a false-heart Traitor:

Call hither to the stake my two braue Beares,
That with the very shaking of their Chaines,

They may astonish these fell-lurking Curres,
Bid Salisbury and Warwicke come to me.

Enter the Earles of Warwicke, and Salisbury.

Clif. Are these thy Beares? Wee'l bate thy Beares to death,
And manacle the Berard in their Chaines,

If thou dar'st bring them to the bayting place.
Rich. Oft haue I seene a hot ore-weening Curre,

Run backe and bite, because he was with-held,
Who being suffer'd with the Beares fell paw,

Hath clapt his taile, betweene his legges and cride,
And such a peccé of seruice will you do,

If you oppose your felues to match Lord Warwicke.
Clif. Hence heape of wrath, foule indigested lumpes,

As crooked in thy manners, as thy shape.
Yor. Nay we shall heate you thorowly anon.

Clif. Take heede leaft by your heate you burne your felues:

King. Why Warwicke, hath thy knee forgot to bow?
Old Salisbury, shame to thy siluer haire,

Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sicke sonne,
What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the Ruffian?

What seeke for sorrow with thy Spectacles?
Oh where is Faith? Oh, where is Loyalty?

If it be banisht from the frostie head,
Where shall it finde a harbour in the earth?

Wilt thou go digge a graue to finde out Warre,
And shame thine honourable Age with blood?

Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?

For shame in durie bend thy knee to me,
That bowes vnto the graue with mickle age.

Sal. My Lord, I haue considered with my selfe
The Title of this most renowned Duke,

And in my conscience, do repute his grace
The rightfull heyre to Englands Royall seate.

King. Hast thou not sworne Allegaunce vnto me?
Sal. I haue.

K. Canst thou dispense with heauen for such an oath?
Sal. It is great sinne, to sweare vnto a sinne:

But greater sinne to keepe a finfull oath:
Who can be bound by any solemne Vow

To do a murd'rous dedde, to rob a man,
To force a spotlesse Virgins Chastitie,

To reue the Orphan of his Patrimoine,
To wrong the Widdow from her custom'd right,

And haue no other reason for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemne Oath?

Qu. A subtle Traitor needs no Sophister.
King. Call Buckingham, and bid him arme himselfe.

Yorke. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast,
I am resolu'd for death and dignitie.

Old Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreames proue true
War. You were best to go to bed, and dreame againe,

To keepe thee from the Tempest of the field.
Old Clif. I am resolu'd to beare a greater storme,

Then any thou canst coniure vp to day:
And that Ile write vpon thy Burgoner.

War. Now by my Fathers badge, old Nevils Crest,
The rampant Beare chain'd to the ragged staffe,

This day Ile weare aloft my Burgoner,
As on a Mountaine top, the Cedar shewes,

That keeps his leaues inspight of any storme,
Euen to affright thee with the view thereof.

Old Clif. And from thy Burgonet Ile rend thy Beare,
And tread it vnder foot with all contempt,

Despight the Bearard, that protects the Beare.
To Clif. And so to Armes victorious Father,

To quell the Rebels, and their Complices.
Rich. Fie, Charitie for shame, speake not in spight,

For you shall sup with Iesu Christ to night.
To Clif. Foule stygmaticke that's more then thou canst tell.

Rich. If not in heauen, you'll surely sup in hell. Exeunt

Enter Warwicke.
War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwicke calles:

And if thou dost not hide thee from the Beare,

Now when the angrie Trumpet sounds alarm,
And dead mens cries do fill the emptie ayre,

Clifford I say, come forth and fight with me,
Proud Northerne Lord, Clifford of Cumberland,

Warwicke is hoarse with calling thee to armes.
Enter Yorke.

War. How now my Noble Lord? What all a-foot?
Yor. The deadly handed Clifford slew my Sreed:

But match to match I haue encountred him,
And made a prey for Carrion Kytes and Crows

Euen of the bonnie beaft he loued so well.
Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of vs the time is come.
Yor. Hold Warwicke: seek thee out some other chace

For I my selfe must hunt this Deere to death.
War. Then nobly Yorke, 'tis for a Crown thou fight'st:

As I intend Clifford to thrue to day,
It grieues my soule to leaue thee vnassail'd. Exit War.

Clif. What seest thou in me Yorke?
Why dost thou pause?

Yorke. With thy braue bearing should I be in loue,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy.

Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise & esteeme,
But that 'tis shewne ignobly, and in Treason.

Yorke. So let it helpe me now against thy sword,
As I in iustice, and true right expresse it.

Clif. My soule and bodie on the action both.
Yor. A dreadfull lay, addresse thee instantly.

Clif. La fin Corrone les eumenes.
Yor. Thus Warre hath giuen thee peace, for 'art still,

Peace with his soule, heauen if it be thy will.
Enter young Clifford.

Clif. Shame and Confusion all is on the rout,
Feare frames disorder, and disorder wounds

Where it should guard. O Warre, thou sonne of hell,
Whom angry heauens do make their minister,

Throw in the frozen bosomes of our party,
Hot Coales of Vengeance. Let no Souldier flye.

He that is truly dedicate to Warre,
Hath no selfe-loue: nor he that loues himselfe,

Hath not essentially, but by circumstance
The name of Valour. O let the vile world end,

And the premised Flames of the Last day,
Kneit earth and heauen together.

Now let the generall Trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities, and pettie founds

To cease. Was't thou ordain'd (deere Father)
To loose thy youth in peace, and to atcheue

The Silver Liurey of aduised Age,
And in thy Reuerence, and thy Chaire-dayes, thus

To die in Ruffian battell? Euen at this fight,
My heart is turn'd to stone: and while 'tis mine,

It shall be stony. Yorke, not our old men spares:
No more will I their Babes, Teares Virginall,

Shall be to me, euen as the Dew to Fire,
And Beautie, that the Tyrant oft reclaimes,

Shall to my flaming wrath, be Oyle and Flax:
Henceforth, I will not haue to do with pitty.

Meet I an infant of the house of Yorke,
Into as many gobbirs will I cut it

As wilde Mede yong Abfrit did.
In cruelty, will I seeke out my Fame.

Come thou new ruine of olde Cliffords house:
As did Aeneas old Anchyses beare,

So beare I thee vpon my manly shoulders:
But then, Aeneas bare a liuing load;

Nothing so heauy as these woes of mine.

Enter Richard, and Somerset to fight.

Rich. So lye thou there:
For vnderneath an Ale-house paltry signe,
The Castle in S. Albons, Somerset
Hath made the Wizard famous in his death:
Sword, hold thy temper; Heart, be wrathfull still:
Priests pray for enemies, but Princes kill.

Fight. Excursions.

Enter King, Queene, and others.

Qu. Away my Lord, you are slow, for shame away.

King. Can we outrun the Heauens? Good Margaret stay.

Qu. What are you made of? You'l nor fight nor fly:
Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To giue the enemy way, and to secure vs
By what we can, which can no more but flye.

Alarum a farre off.

If you be tane, we then should see the bottome
Of all our Fortunes: but if we haply scape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London get, where you are lou'd,
And where this breach now in our Fortunes made
May readily be stoppt.

Enter Clifford.

Clif. But that my hearts on future mischeefe set,
I would speake blasphemy ere bid you flye:
But flye you must: Vncurable discomfite
Reignes in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away for your releefe, and we will liue
To see their day, and them our Fortune giue.
Away my Lord, away.

Exeunt

FINIS.

The third Part of Henry the Sixt, with the death of the Duke of YORKE.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Alarum.

Enter Plantagenet, Edward, Richard, Norfolk, Mount-ague, Warwick, and Souldiers.

Warwicke.

Wonder how the King escap'd our hands?
Pl. While we pursu'd the Horsemen of y North,
He flyly stole away, and left his men:
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,

Whose Warlike eares could neuer brooke retreat,
Chear'd vp the drouping Army, and himselfe.
Lord Clifford and Lord Stafford all a-breast

Charg'd our maine Battailles Front: and breaking in,
Were by the Swords of common Souldiers slaine.

Edw. Lord Staffords Father, Duke of Buckingham,
Is either slaine or wounded dangerous.

I clest his Beauer with a down-right blow:
That this is true (Father) behold his blood.

Mount. And Brother, here's the Earle of Wilshires Whom I encountered as the Battels ioynd. (blood,

Rich. Speake thou for me, and tell them what I did.

Plant. Richard hath best deseru'd of all my sonnes:
But is your Grace dead, my Lord of Somerset?

Nor. Such hope haue all the line of Iohn of Gaunt.

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henries head.

Warw. And so doe I, victorious Prince of Yorke.

Before I see thee seated in that Throne,

Which now the House of Lancaster vsurpes,

I vow by Heauen, these eyes shall neuer close.

This is the Pallace of the fearefull King,

And this the Regall Seat: possesse it Yorke,

For this is thine, and not King Henries Heires.

Plant. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I will,

For hither we haue broken in by force.

Nor. VVee'lle all assist you: he that flies, shall dye.

Plant. Thanks gentle Norfolk, stay by me my Lords,

And Souldiers stay and lodge by me this Night.

They goe vp.

Warw. And when the King comes, offer him no violence,

Vnlesse he seeke to thrust you out perforce.

Plant. The Queene this day here holds her Parliament,

But little thinks we shall be of her counsaile,

By words or blowes here let vs winne our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this House.

Pl. The bloody Parliament shall this be call'd,

Vnlesse Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, be King,

And bathfull Henry depos'd, whose Cowardize
Hath made vs by-words to our enemies.

Plant. Then leaue me not, my Lords be resolute, meane to take possession of my Right.

Warw. Neither the King, nor he that loues him best,

The proudest hee that holds vp Lancaster,

Dares stirre a Wing, if Warwick shake his Bells.

He plant Plantagenet, root him vp who dares:

Resolute thee Richard, clayme the English Crowne.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmerland, Exeter, and the rest.

Henry. My Lords, looke where the sturdie Rebell sits,
Euen in the Chayre of State: belike he meanes,
Backt by the power of Warwick, that false Peere,
To aspire vnto the Crowne, and reigne as King.
Earle of Northumberland, he slew thy Father,
And thine, Lord Clifford, & you both haue vow'd reuenge
On him, his sonnes, his fauorites, and his friends.

Northumb. If I be not, Heauens be reueng'd on me.

Clifford. The hope thereof, makes Clifford mourne in Steele.

Westm. What, shall we suffer this? lets pluck him down,
My heart for anger burnes, I cannot brooke it.

Henry. Be patient, gentle Earle of Westmerland.

Clifford. Patience is for Poultroones, such as he:

He durst not sit there, had your Father liu'd.

My gracious Lord, here in the Parliament

Let vs assaile the Family of Yorke.

North. Well hast thou spoken, Cousin be it so.

Henry. Ah, know you not the Citie fauours them,

And they haue troupes of Souldiers at their beck?

Westm. But when the Duke is slaine, they'll quickly flye.

Henry. Farre be the thought of this from Henries heart,

To make a Shambles of the Parliament House.

Cousin of Exeter, frownes, words, and threats,

Shall be the Warre that Henry meanes to vse.

Thou factious Duke of Yorke descend my Throne,

And kneele for grace and mercie at my feet,

I am thy Soueraigne.

Yorke. I am thine.

Exet. For shame come downe, he made thee Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. It was my Inheritance, as the Earldome was.

Exet. Thy

Exet. Thy Father was a Traytor to the Crowne.
 Warw. Exeter thou art a Traytor to the Crowne,
 In following this vsurping Henry.
 Clifford. Whom should hee follow, but his naturall King?

Warw. True Clifford, that's Richard Duke of Yorke.
 Henry. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my Throne?
 Yorke. It must and shall be so, content thy selfe.

Warw. Be Duke of Lancaster, let him be King.
 Westm. He is both King, and Duke of Lancaster,
 And that the Lord of Westmerland shall maintaine.

Warw. And Warwick shall disproue it. You forget,
 That we are those which chas'd you from the field,
 And slew your Fathers, and with Colours spread
 Marcht through the Citie to the Pallace Gates.

Northumb. Yes Warwick, I remember it to my griefe,
 And by his Soule, thou and thy House shall rue it.
 Westm. Plantagenet, of thee and these thy Sonnes,
 Thy Kinsmen, and thy Friends, he haue more liues
 Then drops of blood were in my Fathers Veines.

Cliff. Vnge no more, lest that in stead of words,
 I send thee, Warwick, such a Messenger,
 As shall reuenge his death, before I stirre.

Warw. Poore Clifford, how I scorne his worthlesse Threats.

Plant. Will you we shew our Title to the Crowne?
 If not, our Swords shall pleade it in the field.

Henry. What Title hast thou Traytor to the Crowne?
 My Father was as thou art, Duke of Yorke,
 Thy Grandfather Roger Mortimer, Earle of March.
 I am the Sonne of Henry the Fifth,
 Who made the Dolphin and the French to stoupe,
 And seiz'd vpon their Townes and Prouinces.

Warw. Talkenot of France, sith thou hast lost it all.
 Henry. The Lord Protector lost it, and not I:
 When I was crown'd, I was but nine moneths old.

Rich. You are old enough now,
 And yet me thinkes you loose:

Father teare the Crowne from the Vsurers Head.
 Edward. Sweet Father doe so, set it on your Head.

Moun. Good Brother,
 As thou lou'st and honorest Armes,
 Let's fight it out, and not stand cauilling thus.

Richard. Sound Drummies and Trumpets, and the King will flye.

Plant. Sonnes peace.

Henry. Peace thou, and giue King Henry leaue to speake.

Warw. Plantagenet shal speake first: Heare him Lords,
 And be you silent and attentiu too,
 For he that interrupts him, shall not liue.

Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leaue my Kingly Throne,
 Wherein my Grandfire and my Father sat?
 No: first shall Warre vnpeople this my Realme;
 I, and their Colours often borne in France,
 And now in England, to our hearts great sorrow,
 Shall be my Winding-sheet. Why faint you Lords?
 My Title's good, and better farre then his.

Warw. Prove it Henry, and thou shalt be King.

Hen. Henry the Fourth by Conquest got the Crowne.

Plant. 'Twas by Rebellion against his King.

Henry. I know not what to say, my Titles weake:

Tell me, may not a King adopt an Heire?

Plant. What then?

Henry. And if he may, then am I lawfull King:

For Richard, in the view of many Lords,

Resign'd the Crowne to Henry the Fourth,
 Whose Heire my Father was, and I am his.

Plant. He rose against him, being his Soueraigne,
 And made him to resigne his Crowne perforce.

Warw. Suppose, my Lords, he did it vnconstrayn'd,
 Thinke you 'twere preiudiciall to his Crowne?

Exet. No: for he could not so resigne his Crowne,
 But that the next Heire should succeed and reigne.

Henry. Art thou against vs, Duke of Exeter?

Exet. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.
 Plant. Why whisper you, my Lords, and answer not?

Exet. My Conscience tells me he is lawfull King.

Henry. All will reuolt from me, and turne to him.

Northumb. Plantagenet, for all the Clayme thou lay'st,
 Thinke not, that Henry shall be so depos'd.

Warw. Depos'd he shall be, in despite of all.

Northumb. Thou art deceiu'd:

'Tis not thy Southerne power

Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolke, nor of Kent,

Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,

Can set the Duke vp in despite of me.

Clifford. King Henry, be thy Title right or wrong,

Lord Clifford vowes to fight in thy defence:

May that ground gape, and swallow me aliue,

Where I shall kneele to him that slew my Father.

Henry. Oh Clifford, how thy words reuiue my heart,

Plant. Henry of Lancaster, resigne thy Crowne:

What mutter you, or what conspire you Lords?

Warw. Doe right vnto this Princely Duke of Yorke,

Or I will fill the House with armed men,

And ouer the Chayre of State, where now he sits,

Write vp his Title with vsurping blood.

He stampes with his foot, and the Souldiers shew themselves.

Henry. My Lord of Warwick, heare but one word,

Let me for this my life time reigne as King.

Plant. Confirme the Crowne to me and to mine Heires,

And thou shalt reigne in quiet while thou liu'st.

Henry. I am content: Richard Plantagenet

Enioy the Kingdome after my decease.

Clifford. What wrong is this vnto the Prince, your Sonne?

Warw. What good is this to England, and himselfe?

Westm. Base, fearefull, and despayring Henry.

Clifford. How hast thou iniur'd both thy selfe and vs?

Westm. I cannot stay to heare these Articles.

Northumb. Nor I.

Clifford. Come Cousin, let vs tell the Queene these Newes.

Westm. Farwell faint-hearted and degenerate King,

In whose cold blood no sparke of Honor bides.

Northumb. Be thou a prey vnto the House of Yorke,

And dye in Bands, for this vnmanly deed.

Cliff. In dreadfull Warre may'st thou be ouercome,

Or liue in peace abandon'd and despis'd.

Warw. Turne this way Henry, and regard them not.

Exeter. They seeke reuenge, and therefore will not yeeld.

Henry. Ah Exeter.

Warw. Why should you figh, my Lord?

Henry. Not for my selfe Lord Warwick, but my Sonne,

Whom I vnaturally shall dis-inherite.

But be it as it may: I here entayle

The Crowne to thee and to thine Heires for euer,

Conditionally, that heere thou take an Oath,

To cease this Ciuill Warre: and whil'st I liue,

To

To honor me as thy King, and Soueraigne:
 And neyther by Treason nor Hostilitie,
 To seeke to put me downe, and reigne thy selfe.

Plant. This Oath I willingly take, and will performe.

Warw. Long liue King Henry: Plantagenet embrace
 him.

Henry. And long liue thou, and these thy forward Sonnes.

Plant. Now Yorke and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Exet. Accurst be he that seekes to make them foes.

Senet. Here they come downe.

Plant. Farewell my gracious Lord, Ile to my Castle.

Warw. And Ile keepe London with my Souldiers.

Nor. And I to Norfolk with my followers.

Moun. And I vnto the Sea, from whence I came.

Henry. And I with griefe and sorrow to the Court.

Enter the Queene.

Exet. Heere comes the Queene,

Whole Lookes bewray her anger:

Ile heale away.

Henry. Exeter so will I.

Queene. Nay, goe not from me, I will follow thee.

Henry. Be patient gentle Queene, and I will stay.

Queene. Who can be patient in such extreames?

Ah wretched man, would I had dy'de a Maid:

And neuer leene thee, neuer borne thee Sonne,

Seeing thou hast prou'd so vnaturall a Father:

Each he deseru'd to loose his Birth-right thus?

Hadst thou but lou'd him halfe so well as I,

Or felt that paine which I did for him once,

Or nourish him, as I did with my blood;

Thou would'st haue left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather then haue made that sauge Duke thine Heire,

And dis-inherited thine onely Sonne.

Prince. Father, you cannot dis-inherite me:

If you be King, why should not I succede?

Henry. Pardon me Margaret, pardon me sweet Sonne,

The Earle of Warwick and the Duke enforc't me.

Que. Enforc't thee? Art thou King, and wilt be forc't?

I shame to heare thee speake: ah timorous Wretch,

Thou hast vndone thy selfe, thy Sonne, and me,

And giu' vnto the House of Yorke such head,

As thou shalt reigne but by their sufferance.

To entayle him and his Heires vnto the Crowne,

What is it, but to make thy Sepulcher,

And creepe into it farre before thy time?

Warwick is Chancelor, and the Lord of Callice,

Sterne Falconbridge commands the Narrow Seas,

The Duke is made Protector of the Realme,

And yet shalt thou be safe? Such safetie findes

The trembling Lambe, inuironned with Wolues.

Had I bene there, which am a silly Woman,

The Souldiers should haue rof'd me on their Pikes,

Before I would haue granted to that Act.

But thou prefer'st thy Life, before thine Honor.

And seeing thou do'st, I here diuorce my selfe,

Both from thy Table Henry, and thy Bed,

Vntill that Act of Parliament be repeal'd,

Whereby my Sonne is dis-inherited.

The Northerne Lords, that haue forsworne thy Colours,

Will follow mine, if once they see them spread:

And spread they shall be, to thy foule disgrace,

And vtter ruine of the House of Yorke.

Thus doe I leaue thee: Come Sonne, let's away,

Our Army is ready; come, wee'll after them.

Henry. Stay gentle Margaret, and heare me speake.
 Queene. Thou hast spoke too much already: geethee gone.

Henry. Gentle Sonne Edward, thou wilt stay me?

Queene. I, to be murder'd by his Enemies.

Prince. When I returne with victorie to the field,

Ile see your Grace: till then, Ile follow her.

Queene. Come Sonne away, we may not linger thus.

Henry. Poore Queene,

How loue to me, and to her Sonne,

Hath made her breake out into termes of Rage.

Reueng'd may she be on that hatefull Duke,

Whose haughtie spirit, winged with desire,

Will cost my Crowne, and like an emptie Eagle,

Tyre on the flesh of me, and of my Sonne.

The losse of those three Lords torments my heart:

Ile write vnto them, and entreat them faire;

Come Cousin, you shall be the Messenger.

Exet. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all.

Flourish. Enter Richard, Edward, and Mounaigne.

Richard. Brother, though I bee youngest, giue mee leaue.

Edward. No, I can better play the Orator.

Moun. But I haue reasons strong and forceable.

Enter the Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. Why how now Sonnes, and Brother, at a strife?

What is your Quarrell? how began it first?

Edward. No Quarrell, but a slight Contention.

Yorke. About what?

Rich. About that which concerns your Grace and vs,

The Crowne of England, Father, which is yours.

Yorke. Mine Boy? not till King Henry be dead.

Richard. Your Right depends not on his life, or death.

Edward. Now you are Heire, therefore enioy it now:

By giuing the House of Lancaster leaue to breathe,

It will out-runne you, Father, in the end.

Yorke. I tooke an Oath, that hee should quietly
 reigne.

Edward. But for a Kingdome any Oath may be broken:

I would breake a thousand Oathes, to reigne one yeere.

Richard. No: God forbid your Grace should be forsworne.

Yorke. I shall be, if I clayme by open Warre.

Richard. Ile proue the contrary, if you le heare mee
 speake.

Yorke. Thou canst not, Sonne: it is impossible.

Richard. An Oath is of no moment, being not tooke
 Before a true and lawfull Magistrate,

That hath authoritie ouer him that sweares.

Henry had none, but did vsurpe the place:

Then seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,

Your Oath, my Lord, is yaine and fruitles.

Therefore to Armes: and Father doe but thinke,

How sweet a thing it is to weare a Crowne,

Within whose Circuit is Elizium,

And all that Poets faine of Blisse and Ioy.

Why doe we linger thus? I cannot rest,

Vntill the White Rose that I weare, be dy'de

Euen in the luke-warme blood of Henries heart.

Yorke. Richard enough: I will be King, or dye.

Brother, thou shalt to London presently,

And whet on Warwick to this Enterprise.

Thou

Thou Richard shalt to the Duke of Norfolk,
And tell him privily of our intent.
You Edward shall vnto my Lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise.
In them I trust: for they are Souldiors,
Wittie, courteous, liberall, full of spirit.
While you are thus imploy'd, what resteth more?
But that I seeke occasion how to rise,
And yet the King not pridge to my Drift,
Nor any of the House of Lancaster.

Enter Gabriel.

But stay, what News? Why com'st thou in such poste?

Gabriel. The Queene,
With all the Northerne Earles and Lords,
Intend here to besiege you in your Castle.
She is hard by, with twentie thousand men:
And therefore fortifie your Hold, my Lord.

Yorke. I, with my Sword.
What? think'st thou, that we feare them?
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me,
My Brother Montague shall poste to London.
Let Noble Warwicke, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we haue left Protectors of the King,
With powrefull Pollicie strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his Oathes.

Mount. Brother, I goe: He winne them, feare it not.
And thus most humbly I doe take my leaue.

Exit Montague.

Enter Mortimer, and his Brother.

Yorke. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine Vnckles,
You are come to Sandall in a happie houre.
The Arme of the Queene meane to besiege vs.

John. Shee shall not neede, we'll meete her in the field.

Yorke. What, with five thousand men?
Richard. I, with five hundred, Father, for a neede.
A Woman's generall: what should we feare?

A March as farre off.

Edward. I heare their Drummes:
Let's set our men in order,
And issue forth, and bid them Battaille straight.

Yorke. Five men to twentie: though the oddes be great,
I doubt not, Vnckle, of our Victorie.
Many a Battaille haue I wonne in France,
When as the Enemie hath beene tenne to one:
Why should I not now haue the like successe?

Alarum. Exit.

Enter Rutland, and his Tutor.

Rutland. Ah, whither shall I flye, to scape their hands?
Ah Tutor, looke where bloody Clifford comes!

Enter Clifford.

Clifford. Chaplaine away, thy Priesthood saues thy life.
As for the Brat of this accursed Duke,
Whose Father slew my Father, he shall dye.

Tutor. And I, my Lord, will beare him company.

Clifford. Souldiers, away with him.
Tutor. Ah Clifford, murder not this innocent Child, Least thou be hated both of God and Man.

Clifford. How now? is he dead already?
Or is it feare, that makes him close his eyes?
He open them.

Rutland. So looks the pent-up Lyon o're the Wretch,
That trembles vnder his deuouring Pawes:
And so he walkes, insulting o're his Prey,
And so he comes, to rend his Limbes asunder.
Ah gentle Clifford, kill me with thy Sword,
And not with such a cruell threatening Look.
Sweet Clifford heare me speake, before I dye:
I am too meane a subiect for thy Wrath,
Bethou reueng'd on men, and let me liue.

Clifford. In vaine thou speak'st, poore Boy:
My Fathers blood hath stoppt the passage
Where thy words should enter.

Rutland. Then let my Fathers blood open it againe,
He is a man, and Clifford cope with him.

Clifford. Had I thy Brethren here, their liues and thine
Were not reuenge sufficient for me:

No, if I digg'd vp thy fore-fathers Graues,
And hung their rotten Coffins vp in Chaynes,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.
The sight of any of the House of Yorke,
Is as a furie to torment my Soule:
And till I root out their accursed Line,
And leaue not one aliue, I liue in Hell.

Therefore—
Rutland. Oh let me pray, before I take my death:
To thee I pray, sweet Clifford pittie me.

Clifford. Such pittie as my Rapiers point affords.

Rutland. I neuer did thee harme: why wilt thou slay me?

Clifford. Thy Father hath.

Rutland. But 'twas ere I was borne,
Thou hast one Sonne, for his sake pittie me,
Least in reuenge thereof, such God is iust,
He be as miserably slaine as I.
Ah, let me liue in Prison all my dayes,
And when I giue occasion of offence,
Then let me dye, for now thou hast no cause.
Clifford. No cause? thy Father slew my Father: therefore dye.

Rutland. Dij faciant landis summa sit ista ruina.

Clifford. Plantagenet, I come Plantagenet:
And this thy Sonnes blood cleauing to my Blade,
Shall rust vpon my Weapon, till thy blood
Congeal'd with this, doe make me wipe off both.

Alarum. Enter Richard, Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. The Army of the Queene hath got the field:
My Vnckles both are slaine, in rescuing me;
And all my followers, to the eager foe
Turne back, and flye, like Ships before the Winde,
Or Lambes pursu'd by hunger-staru'd Wolues.
My Sonnes, God knowes what hath bechanced them:
But this I know, they haue demean'd themselves
Like men borne to Renowne, by Life or Death.
Three times did Richard make a Lane to me,
And thrice cry'de, Courage Father, fight it out:
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With Purple Faulchion, painted to the Hilt,
In blood of those that had encountred him:
And when the hardyest Warriors did retire,
Richard cry'de, Charge, and giue no foot of ground,
And cry'de, A Crowne, or else a glorious Tombe,

A Scepter, or an Earthly Sepulchre.
With this we charg'd againe: but out alas,
We bodg'd againe, as I haue seene a Swan
With bootlesse labour swimme against the Tyde,
And spend her strength with ouer-matching Waues.

A short Alarum within.

Ah hearken, the fatall followers doe pursue,
And I am faint, and cannot flye their furie:
And were I strong, I would not shunne their furie.
The Sands are numbred, that makes vp my Life,
Here must I stay, and here my Life must end.

Enter the Queene, Clifford, Northumberland, the young Prince, and Souldiers.

Come bloody Clifford, tough Northumberland,
I dare your quenchlesse furie to more rage:
I am your Sute, and I abide your Shot.

Northumb. Yeld to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clifford. I, to such mercy, as his ruthlesse Arme
With downe-right payment, shew'd vnto my Father.

Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his Carre,
And made an Euening at the Noone-tide Prick.

Yorke. My ashes, as the Phoenix, may bring forth
A Bird, that will reuenge vpon you all:
And in that hope, I throw mine eyes to Heauen,
Scorning what ere you can afflict me with.

Why come you not? what, multitudes, and feare?
Cliff. So Cowards fight, when they can flye no further,
So Doves doe peck the Faulcons piercing Tallons,
So desperate Theeues, all hopelesse of their Liues,
Breathe out Inuectiues 'gainst the Officers.

Yorke. Oh Clifford, but bethinke thee once againe,
And in thy thought ore-run my former time:
And if thou canst, for blushing, view this face,
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with Cowardice,
Whose frowne hath made thee faint and flye ere this.

Clifford. I will not bandie with thee word for word,
But buckler with thee blowes twice two for one.

Queene. Hold valiant Clifford, for a thousand causes
I would prolong a while the Traytors Life:
Wrath makes him deafe; speake thou Northumberland.

Northumb. Hold Clifford, doe not honor him so much,
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart.
What valour were it, when a Curie doth grinne,
For one to thrust his Hand betweene his Teeth,
When he might spurne him with his Foot away?
It is Warres prize, to take all Vantages,
And tenne to one, is no impeach of Valour.

Clifford. I, I, so striues the Woodcocke with the Gynne.

Northumb. So doth the Connie struggle in the Net.

Yorke. So triumph Theeues vpon their conquer'd Booty,
So True men yeld with Robbers, so o're-matche.

Northumb. What would your Grace haue done vnto him now?

Queene. Braue Warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,
Come make him stand vpon this Mole-hill here,
That taught at Mountaines with out-stretched Armes,
Yet parted but the shadow with his Hand.
What was it you that would be Englands King?
Was't you that reuell'd in our Parliament,
And made a Preachment of your high Descent?
Where are your Messe of Sonnes, to back you now?
The wanton Edward, and the lustie George?

And where's that valiant Crook-back Prodigie,
Dickie, your Boy, that with his grumbling voyce
Was wont to cheare his Dad in Mutinies?
Or with the rest, where is your Darling, Rutland?
Looke Yorke, I stayn'd this Napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his Rapiers point,
Made issue from the Bosome of the Boy:
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I giue thee this to drie thy Cheekes withall.
Alas poore Yorke, but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.

I prythee giue me, to make me merry, Yorke.
What, hath thy fierie heart so parcht thine entrayles,
That not a Teare can fall, for Rutland's death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad:
And I, to make thee mad, doe mock thee thus:
Stampe, raue, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
Thou would'st be se'd, I see, to make me sport:
Yorke cannot speake, vnlesse he weare a Crowne.

A Crowne for Yorke; and Lords, bow lowe to him:
Hold you his hands, whilst I doe set it on.

I marry Sir, now lookes he like a King:
I, this is he that tooke King Henries Chaire,

And this is he was his adopted Heire.
But how is it, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soone, and broke his solemne Oath?

As I bethinke me, you should not be King,
Till our King Henry had shooke hands with Death.
And will you pale your head in Henries Glory,
And rob his Temples of the Diademe,
Now in his Life, against your holy Oath?
Oh 'tis a fault too too vn pardonable.
Off with the Crowne; and with the Crowne, his Head,
And whilst we breathe, take time to doe him dead.

Clifford. That is my Office, for my Fathers sake.
Queene. Nay stay, let's heare the Orizons hee makes.

Yorke. Shee-Wolfe of France,
But worse then Wolues of France,
Whose Tongue more poysons then the Adders Tooth:
How ill-beseeming is it in thy Sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian Trull,
Vpon their Woes, whom Fortune captiuates?
But that thy Face is Vizard-like, vnchanging,
Made impudent with vse of euill deedes,
I would aslay, proud Queene, to make thee blush.
To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriu'd,
Were shame enough, to shame thee,
Wert thou not shamelesse.

Thy Father beares the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils, and Ierusalem,
Yet not so wealthie as an English Yeoman.
Hath that poore Monarch taught thee to insult?
It needes not, nor it bootes thee not, proud Queene,
Vnlesse the Adage must be verifi'd,
That Beggars mounted, runne their Horse to death,
'Tis Beautie that doth oft make Women proud,
But God he knowes, thy share thereof is small.
'Tis Vertue, that doth make them most admir'd,
The contrary, doth make thee wonder'd at.
'Tis Government that makes them seeme Diuine,
The want thereof, makes thee abhominable.
Thou art as opposite to euery good,
As the Antipodes are vnto vs,
Or as the South to the Septentrion.
Oh Tygres Heart, wrapt in a Womans Hide,

How

How could'st thou drayne the Life-blood of the Child,
To bid the Father wipe his eyes withall,
And yet be seene to beare a Womans face?
Women are soft, milde, pittifull, and flexible;
Thou, sterne, obdurate, flintie, rough, remorselesse.
Bidst thou me rage? why now thou hast thy wish.
Would'st thou haue me weepe? why now thou hast thy will.
For raging Wind blowes vp incessant showers,
And when the Rage allayes, the Raine begins,
These Teares are my sweet Rutlands Obsequies,
And euery drop cryes vengeance for his death,
Gainst thee felt Clifford, and thee false French-woman,
Northumb. Bestrew me, but his passions moues me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from Teares.

York. That Face of his,
The hungry Caniballs would not haue toucht,
Would not haue stazn'd with blood:
But you are more inhumane, more inexorable,
Oh, tenne times more then Tygers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthlesse Queene, a haplesse Fathers Teares:
This Cloth thou dip'd'st in blood of my sweet Boy,
And I with Teares doe wash the blood away.
Keepe thou the Napkin, and goe boast of this,
And if thou tell'st the heauie storie right,
Vpon my Soule, the hearers will shed Teares:
Yea, euen my Foes will shed fast-falling Teares,
And say, Alas, it was a pittious deed.
There take the Crowne, and with the Crowne, my Curse,
And in thy need, such comfort come to thee,
As now I reape at thy too cruell hand.
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the World,
My Soule to Heauen, my Blood vpon your Heads.

Northumb. Had he been slaughter-man to all my Kinne,
I should not for my Life but weepe with him,
To see how inly Sorrow gripes his Soule.
Queen. What weeping ripe, my Lord Northumberland?
Thinke but vpon the wrong he did vs all,
And that will quickly drie thy melting Teares.
Clifford. Heere's for my Oath, heere's for my Fathers
Death.

Queen. And heere's to right our gentle-hearted
King.

York. Open thy Gate of Mercy, gracious God,
My Soule flies through these wounds, to seeke out thee.
Queen. Off with his Head, and set it on Yorke Gates,
So Yorke may ouer-look the Towne of Yorke.
Flourish. Exit.

A March. Enter Edward, Richard, and their power.

Edward. I wonder how our Princely Father scap't:
Or whether he be scap't away, or no,
From Cliffords and Northumberlands pursuit?
Had he been ta'ne, we should haue heard the newes;
Had he bene slaine, we should haue heard the newes:
Or had he scap't, me thinks we should haue heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.
How fares my Brother? why is he so sad?

Richard. I cannot ioy, untill I be resolu'd
Where our right valiant Father is become.
I saw him in the Battaille range about,
And watcht him how he singled Clifford forth.
Me thought he bore him in the thickest troupe,
As doth a Lyon in a Heard of Neare,
Or as a Beare encompass'd round with Dogges:

Who hauing pincht a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloofe, and barke at him.
So far'd our Father with his Enemies,
So fled his Enemies my Warlike Father:
Me thinks 'tis prize enough to be his Sonne.
See how the Morning opes her golden Gates,
And takes her farwell of the glorious Sunne,
How well resembles it the prime of Youth,
Trim'd like a Yonker, praucing to his Loue?

Ed. Dazle mine eyes, or doe I see three Sunnes?
Rich. Three glorious Sunnes, each one a perfect Sunne:
Not seperated with the racking Clouds,
But seuer'd in a pale cleare-shining Skye.
See, see, they ioyne, embrace, and seeme to kisse,
As if they vow'd some League inuolable.
Now are they but one Lampe, one Light, one Sunne:
In this, the Heauen figures some euent.

Edward. 'Tis wondrous strange,
The like yet neuer heard of.
I thinke it cites vs (Brother) to the field,
That wee, the Sonnes of braue Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our meedes,
Should notwithstanding ioyne our Lights together,
And ouer-shine the Earth, as this the World.
What ere it bodes, hence-forward will I beare
Vpon my Targuet three faire shining Sunnes.
Richard. Nay, beare three Daughters:
By your leaue, I speake it,
You loue the Breeder better then the Male.

Enter one blowing.

But what art thou, whose heauie Lookes fore-tell
Some dreadfull story hanging on thy Tongue?

Meff. Ah, one that was a wofull looker on,
When as the Noble Duke of Yorke was slaine,
Your Princely Father, and my louing Lord.

Edward. Oh speake no more, for I haue heard too much.

Richard. Say how he dy'de, for I will heare it all.
Meff. Enuironed he was with many foes,
And stood against them, as the hope of Troy
Against the Greekes, that would haue entred Troy,
But Hercules himselfe must yeeld to odds:
And many stroakes, though with a little Axe,
Hewes downe and fells the hardest-tymber'd Oake.
By many hands your Father was subdu'd,
But onely slaughter'd by the irefull Arme
Of vn-renting Clifford, and the Queene:
Who crown'd the gracious Duke in high despight,
Laugh'd in his face: and when with griefe he wept,
The ruthlesse Queene gaue him, to dry his Cheekes,
A Napkin, steeped in the harmelesse blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slaine.
And after many scornes, many soule rauntes,
They tooke his Head, and on the Gates of Yorke
They set the same, and there it doth remaine,
The saddest spectacle that ere I view'd.

Edward. Sweet Duke of Yorke, our Prop to leane vpon,
Now thou art gone, wee haue no Staffe, no Stay.
Oh Clifford, boyf'r'ous Clifford, thou hast slaine
The flower of Europe, for his Cheualrie,
And trecherously hast thou vanquish't him,
For hand to hand he would haue vanquish't thee:
Now my Soules Pallace is become a Prison:
Ah, would she breake from hence, that this my body

Might

Might in the ground be clos'd vp in rest:
For neuer henceforth shall I ioy againe:
Neuer, oh neuer shall I see more ioy.

Rich. I cannot weepe: for all my bodies moysture
Scarce serues to quench my Furnace-burning hart:
Nor can my tongue vnload my hearts great burthen,
For selfe-same winde that I should speake withall,
Is kindling coales that fires all my brest,
And burnes me vp with flames, that tears would quench.
To weepe, is to make lesse the depth of griefe:
Teares then for Babes; Blowes, and Reuenge for mee.
Richard, I beare thy name, Ile venge thy death,
Or dye renowned by attempting it.

Ed. His name that valiant Duke hath left with thee:
His Dukedome, and his Chaire with me is left:
Rich. Nay, if thou be that Princely Eagles Bird,
Shew thy descent by gazing gainst the Sunne:
For Chaire and Dukedome, Throne and Kingdome say,
Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter Warwick, Marquesse Montague, and their Army.

Warwick. How now faire Lords? What faire? What newes abroad?

Rich. Great Lord of Warwick, if we should tecompe
Our balefull newes, and at each words deliuerance
Scab Pontiards in our flesh, till all were told,
The words would adde more anguish then the wounds.
O valiant Lord, the Duke of Yorke is slaine.

Edw. O Warwick, Warwick, that Plantagenet
Which held thee deerly, as his Soules Redemption,
Is by the sterne Lord Clifford done to death.

War. Ten dayes ago, I drown'd these newes in teares,
And now to adde more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things fish then besalne.
After the bloody Fray at Wakefield foughr,
Where your braue Father breath'd his latest gaspe,
Tydings, as swiftly as the Postes could runne,
Were brought me of your Losse, and his Depart.

I then in London, keeper of the King,
Must'r'd my Soldiers, gathered Rockes of Friends,
Marcht toward S. Albons, to intercept the Queene,
Bearing the King in my behalfe along:
For by my Scouts, I was aduertised
That she was coming with a full intent
To dash our late Decree in Parliament,
Touching King Henries Oath, and your Succession:
Short Tale to make, we at S. Albons met,
Our Battailles ioynd, and both sides fiercely foughr:
But whether 'twas the coldnesse of the King,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike Queene,
That robb'd my Soldiers of their heated Spleene.

Or whether 'twas report of her successe,
Or more then common feare of Cliffords Rigour,
Who thunders to his Captiues, Blood and Death,
I cannot iudge: but to conclude with truth,
Their Weapons like to Lightning, came and went:
Our Souldiers like the Night-Owles lazie flight,
Or like a lazie Thresher with a Flaile,
Fell gently downe, as if they strucke their Friends.
I cheer'd them vp with iustice of our Cause,
With promise of high pay, and great Rewards:
But all in vaine, they had no heart to fight,
And we (in them) no hope to win the day,
So that we fled: the King vnto the Queene,
Lord George, your Brother, Norfolk, and my Selfe,

In haste, post haste, are come to ioyne with you:
For in the Marches heere we heard you were,
Making another Head, to fight againe.

Ed. Where is the Duke of Norfolk, gentle Warwick?
And when came George from Burgundy to England?

War. Some six miles off the Duke is with the Soldiers,
And for your Brother he was lately sent
From your kinde Aunt Dutchesse of Burgundie,
With ayde of Souldiers to this needfull Warre.

Rich. 'Twas oddes-belike, when valiant Warwick fled;
Oft haue I heard his praises in Pursuite,
But ne're till now, his Scandall of Retire.

War. Nor now my Scandall Richard, dost thou heare:
For thou shalt know this strong right hand of mine,
Can plucke the Diadem from faint Henries head,
And wring the awfull Scepter from his Fist,
Were he as famous, and as bold in Warre,
As he is fam'd for Mildnesse, Peace, and Prayer.

Rich. I know it well Lord Warwick, blame me not,
'Tis loue I beare thy glories make me speake:
But in this troublous time, what's to be done?
Shall we go throw away our Coates of Steele,
And wrap our bodies in blacke mourning Gownes,
Numb'ring our Aue-Maries with our Beads?
Or shall we on the Helmets of our Foes
Tell our Deuotion with reuengefull Armes?
If for the last, say I, and to it Lords.

War. Why therefore Warwick came to seek you out,
And therefore comes my Brother Montague:
Attend me Lords, the proud insulting Queene,
With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland,
And of their Feather, many moe proud Birds,
Haue wrought the easie-melting King, like Wax.
He swore consent to your Succession,
His Oath enrolld in the Parliament:
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his Oath, and what beside
May make against the house of Lancaster.
Their power (I thinke) is thirty thousand strong:
Now, if the helpe of Norfolk, and my selfe,
With all the Friends that thou braue Earle of March,
Amongst the louing Welshmen can't procure,
Will but amount to fife and twenty thousand,
Why Via, to London will we march,
And once againe, bestride our foaming Steeds,
And once againe cry Charge vpon our Foes,
But neuer once againe turne backe and flye.

Rich. I, now me thinks I heare great Warwick speake;
Ne're may he liue to see a Sun-shine day,
That cries Retire, if Warwick bid him stay.

Ed. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I leane,
And when thou faill'st (as God forbid the houre)
Must Edward fall, which perill heauen forefend.

War. No longer Earle of March, but Duke of Yorke;
The next degree, is Englands Royall Throne:
For King of England shalt thou be proclaim'd
In euery Burrough as we passe along,
And he that throwes not vp his cap for ioy,
Shall for the Fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward, valiant Richard Montague:
Stay we no longer, dreaming of Renowne,
But found the Trumpets, and about our Taske.

Rich. Then Clifford, were thy heart as hard as Steele,
As thou hast shew'd it flintie by thy deeds,
I come to pierce it, or to giue thee mine.

Ed. Then strike vp Drums, God and S. George for vs.

P

War.

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now? what newes?

Mess. The Duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,
The Queene is comming with a puissant Host,
And craues your company, for speedy counsell.

War. Why then it fortis, braue Warriors, let's away.

Exeunt Omnes.

Flourish. Enter the King, the Queene, Clifford, Northumand Tong Prince, with Drumme and Trumpettes.

Qu. Welcome my Lord, to this braue town of Yorke, Yonders the head of that Arch-enemy.

That sought to be incompart with your Crowne.
Doth not the obiekt cheere your heart, my Lord.

K. I, as the rockes cheare them that feare their wrack,
To see this sight, it itkes my very soule:

With-hold reuenge (deere God) 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly haue I inking'd my Vow.

Cliff. My gracious Liege, this too much lenity
And harmfull pittie must be layd aside:

To whom do Lyons cast their gentle Lookes?
Not to the Beast, that would vsurpe their Den.

Whose hand is that the Forrest Beare doth lick?
Not his that spoyle her yong before her face.

Who scapes the lurking Serpents mortall sting?
Not he that sets his foot vpon her backe.

The smallest Worme will turne, being troden on,
And Doues will pecke in safegard of their Brood.

Ambitious Yorke, did leuell at thy Crowne,
Thou smiling, while he knit his angry browes.

He but a Duke, would haue his Sonne a King,
And raise his issue like a louing Sire.

Thou being a King, blest with a goodly sonne,
Didst yeeld consent to disinherit him:

Which argued thee a most vnloving Father,
Vnreasonable Creatures feed their young,

And though mans face be fearefull to their eyes,
Yet in protection of their tender ones,

Who hath not scene them euen with those wings,
Which sometime they haue vs'd with fearfull flight,

Make warre with him that clim'd vnto their nest,
Offering their owne liues in their yongs defence?

For shame, my Liege, make them your President:
Were it not pittie that this goodly Boy

Should loose his Birth-right by his Fathers fault,
And long heereafter say vnto his childe,

What my great Grandfather, and Grandfire got,
My carelesse Father fondly gaue away.

Ah, what a shame were this? Looke on the Boy,
And let his manly face, which promiseth

Successefull Fortune Steele thy melting heart,
To hold thine owne, and leaue thine owne with him.

King. Full well hath Clifford plaid the Orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force:

But Clifford tell me, didst thou neuer heare,
That things ill got, had euer bad successe.

And happy alwayes was it for that Sonne,
Whose Father for his hoarding went to hell:

He leaue my Sonne my Vertuous deeds behinde,
And would my Father had left me no more:

For all the rest is held at such a Rate,
As brings a thousand fold more care to keepe,

Then in possession any iot of pleasure.
Ah Coffin Yorke, would thy best Friends did know,

How it doth greue me that thy head is heere.
Qu. My Lord cheere vp your spirits, our foes are nye,

And this soft courage makes your Followers faint:
You promist Knighthood to our forward sonne,

Vnsheath your sword, and dub him presently.
Edward, kneele downe.

King. Edward Plantagenet, arise a Knight,
And learne this Lesson; Draw thy Sword in right.

Prim. My gracious Father, by your Kingly leaue,
He draw it as Apparant to the Crowne,

And in that quarrell, vse it to the death.
Cliff. Why that is spoken like a toward Prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Royall Commanders, be in readinesse,
For with a Band of thirty thousand men,

Comes Warwicke backing of the Duke of Yorke,
And in the Townes as they do march along,

Proclaimes him King, and many flye to him,
Darraigne your battell, for they are at hand.

Cliff. I would your Highnesse would depart the field,
The Queene hath best successe when you are absent.

Qu. I good my Lord, and leaue vs to our Fortune,
King. Why, that's my fortune too, therefore Ile stay.

North. Be it with resolution then to fight.
Prim. My Royall Father, cheere these Noble Lords,

And hearten those that fight in your defence:
Vnsheath your Sword, good Father: Cry S. George.

March. Enter Edward, Warwicke, Richard, Clarence,
Norfolk, Mountague, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now periu'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace?
And set thy Diadem vpon my head?

Or bide the mortall Fortune of the field.
Qu. Go rate thy Minions, proud insulting Boy,

Becomes it thee to be thus bold in termes,
Before thy Soueraigne, and thy lawfull King?

Ed. I am his King, and he should bow his knee:
I was adopted Heire by his consent.

Cliff. Since when, his Oath is broke: for as I heare,
You that are King, though he do weare the Crowne,

Haue caus'd him by new Act of Parliament,
To blot out me, and put his owne Sonne in.

Cliff. And reason too,
Who should succede the Father, but the Sonne.

Rich. Are you there Butcher? O, I cannot speake.
Cliff. I Crooke-back, here I stand to answer thee,

Or any he, the proudest of thy sort.
Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd yong Rutland, was it not?

Cliff. I, and old Yorke, and yet not satisfied.
Rich. For Gods sake Lords giue signall to the fight.

War. What sayst thou Henry,
Wilt thou yeeld the Crowne? (you speake)

Qu. Why how now long-tongu'd Warwicke, dare
When you and I, met at S. Albons last,

Your legges did better seruice then your hands.
War. Then 'twas my turne to fly, and now 'tis thine:

Cliff. You said so much before, and yet you fled.
War. 'Twas not your valor Clifford droue me thence.

Nor, No, nor your manhood that durst make you stay.
Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reuerently,

Breake off the parley, for scarce I can refraine
The execution of my big-swolne heart

Vpon that Clifford, that cruell Child-killer.
Cliff. I slew thy Father, callst thou him a Child?

Rich.

Alarum. Exeunt. Enter Warwicke.

War. Fore-spent with Toile, as Runners with a Race,
I lay me downe a little while to breath:

For strokes receiu'd, and many blowes repaid,
Haue robb'd my strong knit sinewes of their strength,

And spight of spight, needs must I rest a-while.
Enter Edward running.

Ed. Smile gentle heauen, or strike vngentle death,
For this world frownes, and Edwards Sunne is clouded.

War. How now my Lord, what happe? what hope of good?

Enter Clarence.

Cliff. Our hap is losse, our hope but sad dispaire,
Our ranks are broke, and ruine followes vs.

What counsaile giue you? whether shall we flye?
Ed. Bootlesse is flight, they follow vs with Wings,

And weake we are, and cannot shun pursuite.
Enter Richard.

Rich. Ah Warwicke, why hast thou withdrawn thy selfe?
Thy Brothers blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,

Broach'd with the Steele point of Cliffords Launce:
And in the very pang of death, he cryde,

Like to a dismall Clangor heard from farre,
Warwicke, reuenge; Brother, reuenge my death!

So vnderneath the belly of their Steeds,
That stain'd their Fetlockes in his smoaking blood,

The Noble Gentleman gaue vp the ghost.
War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:

Ile kill my Horse, because I will not flye:
Why stand we like soft-hearted women heere,

Wayling our losses, whiles the Foe doth Rage,
And looke vpon, as if the Tragedie

Were plaid in iest, by counterfeiting Actors.
Heere on my knee, I vow to God aboue,

Ile neuer pawse againe, neuer stand still,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,

Or Fortune giuen me measure of Reuenge.
Ed. Oh Warwicke, I do bend my knee with thine,

And in this vow do chaine my soule to thine:
And ere my knee rise from the Earths cold face,

I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou setter vp, and plucker downe of Kings:

Beseeching thee (if with thy will it stands)
That to my Foes this body must be prey,

Yet that thy brazen gates of heauen may ope,
And giue sweet passage to my finfull soule.

Now Lords, take leaue vntill we meete againe,
Where ere it be, in heauen, or in earth.

Rich. Brother,
Giue me thy hand, and gentle Warwicke,

Let me embrace thee in my weary armes:
I that did neuer weepe, now melt with wo,

That Winter should cut off our Spring-time so.
War. Away, away:

Once more sweet Lords farwell.
Cliff. Yet let vs altogether to our Troopes,

And giue them leaue to flye, that will not stay:
And call them Pillars that will stand to vs:

And if we thriue, promise them such rewards
As Victors weare at the Olympian Games.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of Life and Victory:

Foreflow no longer, make we hence amaine.

Exeunt

Excursions. Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now Clifford, I haue singled thee alone,
Suppose this arme is for the Duke of Yorke,
And this for Rutland, both bound to reuenge,
Wert thou inuiron'd with a Brazen wall.

Clif. Now Richard, I am with thee here alone,
This is the hand that stabb'd thy Father Yorke,
And this the hand, that slew thy Brother Rutland,
And here's the heart, that triumphs in their death,
And cheeres these hands, that slew thy Sire and Brother,
To execute the like vpon thy selfe,
And so haue at thee.

They Fight. Warwick comes, Clifford flies.

Rich. Nay Warwick, single out some other Chace,
For I my selfe will hunt this Wolfe to death.

Exeunt

Alarum. Enter King Henry alone.

Hen. This battell fares like to the mornings Warre,
When dying clouds contend, with growing light,
What time the Shepheard blowing of his nailes,
Can neither call it perfect day, nor night.
Now swayes it this way, like a Mighty Sea,
For'd by the Tide, to combat with the Winde:
Now swayes it that way, like the selfe-same Sea,
For'd to retyre by furie of the Winde.
Sometime, the Flood preuailes; and than the Winde:
Now, one the better: then, another best;
Both tugging to be Victors, brest to brest:
Yet neither Conqueror, nor Conquered,
So is the equall poise of this fell Warre.
Heere on this Mole-hill will I sit me downe,
To whom God will, there be the Victorie:
For Margaret my Queene, and Clifford too
Haue chid me from the Battell: Swearing both,
They prosper best of all when I am thence.
Would I were dead, if Gods good will were so;
For what is in this world, but Greefe and Woe.
Oh God! me thinkes it were a happy life,
To be no better then a homely Swaine,
To sit vpon a hill, as I do now,
To carue out Dials quaintly, point by point,
Thereby to see the Minutes how they runne:
How many makes the Houre full compleate,
How many Hournes brings about the Day,
How many Dayes will finish vp the Year,
How many Yeares, a Mortall man may liue.
When this is knowne, then to diuide the Times:
So many Hournes, must I tend my Flocke;
So many Hournes, must I take my Rest:
So many Hournes, must I Contemplate:
So many Hournes, must I Sport my selfe:
So many Dayes, my Ewes haue bene with yong:
So many weekes, ere the poore Fooles will Eane:
So many yeares, ere I shall there be the Fleece:
So Minutes, Hournes, Dayes, Monthes, and Yeares,
Past ouer to the end they were created,
Would bring white haire, vnto a Quiet graue.
Ah! what a life were this? How sweet? how louely?
Giues not the Hawthorne bush a sweeter shade
To Shepheards, looking on their filly Sheepe,
Then doth a rich Imbroider'd Canopie
To Kings, that feare their Subjects treacherie?
Oh yes, it doth; a thousand fold it doth.
And to conclude, the Shepherds homely Curds,

His cold thinne drinke out of his Leather Bottle,
His wonted sleepe, vnder a fresh trees shade,
All which secure, and sweetly he enioyes,
Is farre beyond a Princes Delicates:
His Viands sparkling in a Golden Cup,
His bodie couched in a curious bed,
When Care, Mistrust, and Treason waits on him.

Alarum. Enter a Sonne that hath kill'd his Father, at one doore: and a Father that hath kill'd his Sonne at another doore.

Son. Ill blowes the winde that profits no body,
This man whom hand to hand I slew in fight,
May be possessed with some store of Crownes,
And I that haply take them from him now,
May yet ere night yeeld both my Life and them
To some man else, as this dead man doth me.
Who's this? Oh God! It is my Fathers face,
Whom in this Conflict, I (vnwares) haue kill'd:
Oh heauy times! begetting such Euents,
From London, by the King was I prest forth,
My Father being the Earle of Warwicks man,
Came on the part of Yorke, prest by his Master:
And I, who at his hands receiud my life,
Haue by my hands, of Life bereaued him.
Pardon me God, I knew not what I did:
And pardon Father, for I knew not thee.
My Teares shall wipe away these bloody markes:
And no more words, till they haue flow'd their fill.
King. O pitteous spectacle! O bloody Times!
Whiles Lyons Warre, and bataille for their Dennes,
Poore harmlesse Lambes abide their enmity.
Weepe wretched man: Ile ayde thee Teare for Teare,
And let our hearts and eyes, like Ciuill Warre,
Be blinde with teares, and break ore-charg'd with griefe.

Enter Father, bearing of his Sonne.

Fa. Thou that so stoutly hath resisted me,
Giue me thy Gold, if thou hast any Gold:
For I haue bought it with an hundred blowes.
But let me see: Is this our Foe-mans face?
Ah, no, no, no, it is mine onely Sonne.
Ah Boy, if any life be left in thee,
Throw vp thine eye: see, see, what shewes arise,
Blowne with the windie Tempest of my heart,
Vpon thy wounds, that killes mine Eye, and Heart,
O pittie God, this miserable Age!
What Stragems? how sell? how Butcherly?
Erroneous, mutinous, and vnnatural,
This deadly quarrell daily doth beget?
O Boy! thy Father gaue thee life too soone,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

King. Wo aboute wo: greefe, more the common greefe
O that my death would stay these ruthfull deeds:
O pittie, pittie, gentle heauen pittie:
The Red Rose and the White are on his face,
The fatall Colours of our striding Houses:
The one, his purple Blood right well resembles,
The other his pale Cheekes (me thinkes) presenteth:
Wither one Rose, and let the other flourish:
If you contend, a thousand liues must wither.

Son. How will my Mother, for a Fathers death
Take on with me, and ne're be satisfi'd?

Fa. How will my Wife, for slaughter of my Sonne,
Shed seas of Teares, and ne're be satisfi'd?

King. How will the Country, for these wofull chances, Mis-thinke?

Mis-thinke the King, and not be satisfied?

Son. Was euer sonne, so reu'd a Fathers death?

Fa. Was euer Father so bemoan'd his Sonne?

Hen. Was euer King so greeu'd for Subjects woe?

Much is your sorrow; Mine, ten times so much.

Son. Ile beare thee hence, where I may weepe my fill.

Fa. These armes of mine shall be thy winding sheet:

My heart (sweet Boy) shall be thy Sepulcher,

For from my heart, thine Image ne're shall go.

My sighing brest, shall be thy funerall bell;

And so obsequious will thy Father be,

Men for the losse of thee, hauing no more,

As Priam was for all his Valiant Sonnes,

Ile beare thee hence, and let them fight that will,

For I haue murder'd where I should not kill.

Hen. Sad-hearted-men, much ouergone with Care;

Heere sits a King, more wofull then you are.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter the Queen, the Prince, and Exeter.

Prin. Fly Father, flye: for all your Friends are fled.

And Warwick rages like a chafed Bull:

Away, for death doth hold vs in pursuite.

Qu. Mount you my Lord, towards Barwicke post a-maine:

Edward and Richard like a brace of Grey-hounds,

Haueing the fearfull flying Hare in sight,

With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,

And bloody Steele grape in their yrefull hands

Are at our backs, and therefore hence amaine.

Exe. Away: for vengeance comes along with them.

Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed,

Or else come after, Ile away before.

Hen. Nay take me with thee, good sweet Exeter:

Not that I feare to stay, but loue to go

Whether the Queene intends. Forward, away.

Exeunt

Alowd alarum. Enter Clifford Wounded.

Clif. Heere burnes my Candle out; I heere it dies,

Which whiles it lasted, gaue King Henry light.

O Lancaster! I feare thy ouerthrow,

More then my Bodies parting with my Soule:

My Loue and Feare, glew'd many Friends to thee,

And now I fall. Thy rough Commixtures melts,

Impairing Henry, strengthning misproud Yorke;

And whether flye the Goats, but to the Sunne?

And who shines now, but Henries Enemies?

O Phoebus! had'st thou neuer giuen consent,

That Phaeton should cheeke thy fiery Steeds,

Thy burning Carre neuer had scorch'd the earth.

And Henry, had'st thou sway'd as Kings should do,

Or as thy Father, and his Father did,

Giuing no ground vnto the house of Yorke,

They neuer then had sprung like Sommer Flies:

I, and ten thousand in this lucklesse Realme,

Hed left no mourning Widdowes for our death,

And thou this day, had'st kept thy Chaire in peace.

For what doth cherrish Weeds, but gentle ayre?

And what makes Robbers bold, but too much lenity?

Bootesse are Plaints, and Curelesse are my Wounds:

No way to flye, nor strength to hold our flight:

The Foe is mercilesse, and will not pittie:

For at their hands I haue deferd no pittie.

The ayre hath got into my deadly Wounds,

And much effuse of blood, doth make me faint:
Come Yorke, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest,
I flab'd your Fathers bolshies; Split my brest.

Alarum & Retreat. Enter Edward, Warwick, Richard, and Soldiers, Montague, & Clarence.

Ed. Now breath we Lords, good fortune bids vs pause,
And smoothe the frownes of War, with peacefull looks:
Some Troopes pursue the bloody-minded Queene,
That led calme Henry, though he were a King,
As doth a Saile, fill'd with a fretting Gust,
Command an Argosie to flie the Waues.

But thinke you (Lords) that Clifford fled with them?

War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape:
(For though before his face I speake the words)

Your Brother Richard markt him for the Graue.

And wherefore he is, hee's surely dead. Clifford grones

Rich. Whose soule is that which takes his heauy leaue?

A deadly grone, like life and deaths departing.

See who it is.

Ed. And now the Battailles ended,

If Friend or Foe, let him be gently vsed.

Rich. Reuoke that doome of mercy, for 'tis Clifford,

Who not contented that he lopp'd the Branch

In hewing Rutland, when his leaues put forth,

But set his murthering knife vnto the Roote,

From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,

I meane our Princely Father, Duke of Yorke.

War. From off the gates of Yorke, fetch down y<sup>e</sup> head,

Your Fathers head, which Clifford placed there:

In stead whereof, let this supply the roome,

Measure for measure, must be answered.

Ed. Bring forth that fatall Schreechowe to our house,

That nothing sung but death, to vs and ours:

Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,

And his ill-boarding tongue, no more shall speake.

War. I thinke is vnderstanding is bereft:

Speake Clifford, dost thou know who speakes to thee?

Darke cloudy death ore-shades his beames of life,

And he nor sees, nor heares vs, what we say.

Rich. O would he did, and so (perhaps) he doth,

'Tis but his policy to counterfet,

Because he would auoid such bitter taunts

Which in the time of death he gaue our Father.

Cl. If so thou thinkest,

Vex him with eager Words.

Rich. Clifford, aske mercy, and obtaine no grace.

Ed. Clifford, repent in bootlesse penitence.

War. Clifford, deuise excuses for thy faults.

Cl. While we deuise fell Tortures for thy faults.

Rich. Thou did'st flout Yorke, and I am son to Yorke.

Edw. Thou pittied'st Rutland, I will pittie thee.

Cl. Where's Captaine Margaret, to fence you now?

War. They mocke thee Clifford,

Swear as thou wast wont.

Rich. What, not an Oath? Nay then the world go's hard

When Clifford cannot spare his Friends an oath:

I know by that he's dead, and by my Soule,

If this right hand would buy two hournes life,

That I (in all despight) might rayle at him,

This hand should chop it off: & with the issuing Blood

Stifle the Villaine, whose vnstanch'd thirst

Yorke, and yong Rutland could not satisfie

War. I, but he's dead. Of with the Traitors head,

And reare it in the place your Fathers stands.

And now to London with Triumphant march,

There to be crowned England's Royall King:
From whence, shall Warwick cut the Sea to France,
And aske the Ladie Bona for thy Queene:
So shalt thou sinow both these Lands together,
And hauing France thy Friend, thou shalt not dread
The scattred Foe, that hopes to rise againe:
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet looke to haue them buz to offend thine eares:
First, will I see the Coronation,
And then to Britanny Ile crosse the Sea,
To effect this marriage, so it please my Lord.

Ed. Euen as thou wilt sweet Warwick, let it bee:
For in thy shoulder do I builde my Seate;
And neuer will I vnder take the thing
Wherein thy counsaile and consent is wanting:
Richard, I will create thee Duke of Gloucester,
And George of Clarence; Warwicke as our Selfe,
Shall do, and vndo as him pleaseth best.

Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence, George of Gloster,
For Glosters Dukedome is too oninuous.

War. Tut, that's a foolish obseruation:

Richard, be Duke of Gloster: Now to London,
To see these Honors in possession.

Exeunt

Enter Sinklo, and Humphrey, with Crosse-bowes in their hands.

Sink. Under this thicke growne brake, we'll shrowd
For through this Land anon the Deere will come,
And in this covert will we make our Stand,
Culling the principall of all the Deere.

Hum. Ile stay about the hill, so both may shoot.
Sink. That cannot be, the noise of thy Crosse-bow
Will scarre the Heare, and so my shoot is lost:
Heere stand we both, and ayme we at the best:
And for the time shall not seeme tedious,
Ile tell thee what befell me on a day,
In this selfe-place, where now we meane to stand.

Sink. Heere comes a man, let's stay till he be past:
Enter the King with a Prayer booke.

Hen. From Scotland am I holne euen of pure loue,
To greet mine owne Land with my wishfull sight:
No Harry, Harry, 'tis no Land of thine,
Thy place is fill'd, thy Scepter wrung from thee,
Thy Balm wash't off, wherewith thou was Anointed:
No bending knee will call thee Cesar now,
No humble suiters prease to speake for right:
No, not a man comes for redresse of thee:
For how can I helpe them, and not my selfe?

Sink. I, heere's a Deere, whose skin's a Keepers Fee:
This is the quondam King; Let's seize vpon him.

Hen. Let me embrace the fower Adversaries,
For Wife men say, it is the wisest course.

Hum. Why linger we? Let vs lay hands vpon him.

Sink. Forbear a while, we'll heare a little more.

Hen. My Queene and Son are gone to France for aid:

And (as I heare) the great Commanding Warwick
Is thither gone, to craue the French Kings Sister
To wife for Edward. If this newes be true,
Poore Queene, and Sonne, your labour is but lost:
For Warwick is a subtle Orator:

And Lewis a Prince soone wonne with mouing words:
By this account then, Margaret may winne him,
For she's a woman to be pittied much:
Her sighes will make a batt'ry in his breft,
Her teares will pierce into a Marble heart:

The Tyger will be milde, whiles she doth mourne;
And Nero will be tainted with remorse,
To heare and see her plaints, her Brinish Teares.
I, but shee's come to begge, Warwick to giue:
Shee on his left side, crauing ayde for Henrie:
He on his right, asking a wife for Edward.
Shee Weepes, and sayes, her Henry is depos'd:
He Smiles, and sayes, his Edward is instaul'd:
That she (poore Wretch) for greefe can speake no more:
Whiles Warwick tells his Title, smoothes the Wrong,
Inferreth arguments of mighty strength,
And in conclusion winnes the King from her,
With promise of his Sister, and what else,
To strengthen and support King Edward's place.
O Margaret, thus 'twill be, and thou (poore soule)
Art then forsaken, as thou wert 'st forlorne.

Hum. Say, what art thou talk' of Kings & Queens?

King. More then I seeme, and lesse then I was born to:

A man at least, for lesse I should not be:

And men may talke of Kings, and why not I?

Hum. I, but thou talk' it, as if thou wert a King.

King. Why so I am (in Minde) and that's enough.

Hum. But if thou be a King, where is thy Crowne?

King. My Crowne is in my heart, not on my head:

Not deck'd with Diamonds, and Indian stones:

Not to be scene: my Crowne, is call'd Content,

A Crowne it is, that sildome Kings enioy.

Hum. Well, if you be a King crown'd with Content,

Your Crowne Content, and you must be contented

To go along with vs. For (as we thinke)

You are the king King Edward hath depos'd:

And we his subiects, sworne in all Allegiance,

Will apprehend you, as his Enemie.

King. But did you neuer sweare, and breake an Oath,

Hum. No, neuer such an Oath, nor will not now.

King. Where did you dwell when I was K. of England?

Hum. Heere in this Country, where we now remaine.

King. I was annointed King at nine monethes old,

My Father, and my Grandfather were Kings:

And you were sworne true Subiects vnto me:

And tell me then, haue you not broke your Oathes?

Sin. No, for we were Subiects, but while you wer king

King. Why? Am I dead? Do I not breath a Man?

Ah simple men, you know not what you sweare:

Looke, as I blow this Feather from my Face,

And as the Ayre blowes it to me againe,

Obeying with my winde when I do blow,

And yeelding to another, when it blowes,

Commanded alwayes by the greater gust:

Such is the lightnesse of you, common men.

But do not breake your Oathes, for of that sinne,

My milde intreatie shall not make you guiltie.

Go where you will, the king shall be commanded,

And be you kings, command, and Ile obey.

Sinklo. We are true Subiects to the king,

King Edward.

King. So would you be againe to Henrie,

If he were seated as king Edward is.

Sinklo. We charge you in Gods name & the Kings,

To go with vs vnto the Officers.

King. In Gods name lead, your Kings name be obeyd,

And what God will, that let your King performe.

And what he will, I humbly yeeld vnto. Exeunt

Enter K. Edward, Gloster, Clarence, Lady Grey.

King. Brother of Gloster, at S. Albons field

This

This Ladyes Husband, Sir Richard Grey, was slaine,
His Land then seiz'd on by the Conqueror,
Her suit is now, to repofesse those Lands,
Which wee in Iustice cannot well deny,
Because in Quarrell of the House of York,
The worthy Gentleman did lose his Life.

Rich. Your Highnesse shall doe well to graunt her suit:

It were dishonor to deny it her.

King. It were no lesse, but yet Ile make a pawse.

Rich. Yea, is it so:

I see the Lady hath a thing to graunt,

Before the King will graunt her humble suit.

Clarence. Hee knowes the Game, how true hee keeps the winde?

Rich. Silence.

King. Widow, we will consider of your suit,

And come some other time to know our minde.

Wid. Right gracious Lord, I cannot brooke delay:

May it please your Highnesse to resolute me now,

And what your pleasure is, shall satisfie me.

Rich. I Widow? then Ile warrant you all your Lands,

And if what pleases him, shall pleasure you:

Right closer, or good faith you'll catch a Blow.

Clarence. I feare her not, vnlesse she chance to fall,

Rich. God forbid that, for hee'll take vantages.

King. How many Children hast thou, Widow? tell me.

Clarence. I thinke he meane to begge a Child of her.

Rich. Nay then whip me: hee'll rather giue her two.

Wid. Three, my most gracious Lord.

Rich. You shall haue foure, if you'll be rul'd by him.

King. Twere pittie they should lose their Fathers

Lands.

Wid. Be pittifull, dread Lord, and graunt it then.

King. Lords giue vs leaue, Ile trye this Widowes wit.

Rich. I, good leaue haue you, for you will haue leaue,

Till Youth take leaue, and leaue you to the Crutch.

King. Now tell me, Madame, doe you loue your Children?

Wid. I, full as dearly as I loue my selfe.

King. And would you not doe much to doe them

good?

Wid. To doe them good, I would sustayne some harme.

King. Then get your Husbands Lands, to doe them

good.

Wid. Therefore I came vnto your Maiestie.

King. Ile tell you how these Lands are to be got.

Wid. So shall you bind me to your Highnesse seruice.

King. What seruice wilt thou doe me, if I giue them?

Wid. What you command, that rests in me to doe.

King. But you will take exceptions to my Boone.

Wid. No, gracious Lord, except I cannot doe it.

King. I, but thou canst doe what I meane to aske.

Wid. Why then I will doe what your Grace commands.

Rich. Hee plyes her hard, and much Raine weares the Marble.

Clar. As red as fire? nay then, her Wax must melt.

Wid. Why stoppes my Lord? shall I not heare my Task?

King. An easie Taske, 'tis but to loue a King.

Wid. That's soone perform'd, because I am a Subiect.

King. Why then, thy Husbands Lands I freely giue

thee.

Wid. I take my leaue with many thousand thanks.

Rich. The Match is made, shee seales it with a Curfie.

King. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of loue I meane.

Wid. The fruits of Loue, I meane, my louing Liege.

King. I, but I feare me in another sence.

What Loue, thinke'st thou, I sue so much to get?

Wid. My loue till death, my humble thanks, my prayers,

That loue which Vertue begges, and Vertue graunts.

King. No, by my troth, I did not meane such loue.

Wid. Why then you meane not, as I thought you did.

King. But now you partly may perceiue my minde.

Wid. My minde will neuer graunt what I perceiue

Your Highnesse aymes at, if I ayme aright.

King. To tell thee plaine, I ayme to lye with thee.

Wid. To tell you plaine, I had rather lye in Prison.

King. Why then thou shalt not haue thy Husbands

Lands.

Wid. Why then mine Honestie shall be my Dower,

For by that losse, I will not purchase them.

King. Thierin thou wrong'st thy Children mightily.

Wid. Heerein your Highnesse wrongs both them & me:

But mightie Lord, this merry inclination

Accords not with the sadnesse of my suit:

Please you dismisse me, eyther with I, or no.

King. I, if thou wilt say I to my request:

No, if thou do'st say No to my demand.

Wid. Then No, my Lord: my suit is at an end.

Rich. The Widow likes him not, shee knits her

Browes.

Clarence. Hee is the bluntest Wooer in Christen-

dome.

King. Her Looks doth argue her replete with Modesty,

Her Words doth shew her Wit incomparable,

All her perfections challenge Soueraigntie,

One way, or other, there is for a King,

And thec shall be my Loue, or else my Queene.

Say, that King Edward take thee for his Queene?

Wid. 'Tis better said then done, my gracious Lord:

I am a subiect fit to ieast withall,

But farre vnfit to be a Soueraigne.

King. Sweet Widow, by my State I sweare to thee,

I speake no more then what my Soule intends,

And that is, to enioy thee for my Loue.

Wid. And that is more then I will yeeld vnto:

I know, I am too meane to be your Queene,

And yet too good to be your Concubine.

King. You cauill, Widow, I did meane my Queene.

Wid. 'Twill grieue your Grace, my Sonnes should call you Father.

King. No more, then when my Daughters

Call thee Mother.

Thou art a Widow, and thou hast some Children,

And by Gods Mother, I being but a Batchelor,

Haue other some. Why, 'tis a happy thing,

To be the Father vnto many Sonnes:

Answer no more, for thou shalt be my Queene.

Rich. The Ghostly Father now hath done his Shrift.

Clarence. When hee was made a Shriuer, 'twas for shifte.

King. Brothers, you muse what Chat wee two haue had.

Rich. The Widow likes it not, for shee lookes very sad.

King. You'd thinke it strange, if I should marrie her.

Clarence. To who, my Lord?

King. Why Clarence, to my selfe.

Rich. That

Rich. That would be tenne dayes wonder at the least.
Clarence. That's a day longer then a Wonder lasts.
Rich. By so much is the Wonder in extremes.
King. Well, least on Brothers: I can tell you both,
 Her suit is graunted for her Husbands Lands.

Enter a Noble man.

Nob. My gracious Lord, Henry your Foe is taken,
 And brought your Prisoner to your Pallace Gate.
King. See that he be conuey'd vnto the Tower:
 And goe wee Brothers to the man that tooke him,
 To question of his apprehension.
 Widow goe you along: Lords vsf her honourable.

Exeunt.

Manet Richard.

Rich. I, Edward will vsf Women honourably:
 Would he were waisted, Marrow, Bones, and all,
 That from his Loynes no hopefull Branch may spring.
 To crosse me from the Golden time I looke for:
 And yet, betweene my Soules desire, and me,
 The lustfull Edward's Title buried,
 Is Clarence, Henry, and his Sonne young Edward,
 And all the vnlook'd-for Issue of their Bodies,
 To take their Roomes, ere I can place my selfe:
 A cold premeditation for my purpose.
 Why then I doe but dreame on Soueraigntie,
 Like one that stands vpon a Promontorie,
 And spies a farre-off shore, where hee would tread,
 Wishing his foot were equall with his eye,
 And chides the Sea, that sunders him from thence,
 Saying, hee'le lade it dry, to haue his way:
 So doe I with the Crowne, being so farre off,
 And so I chide the meanes that keepe me from it,
 And so (I say) I cut the Causes off,
 Flattering me with impossibilities:
 My Eyes too quicke, my Heart o're-weenes too much,
 Vnto my Hand and Strength could equall them.
 Well, say there is no Kingdome then for Richard:
 What other Pleasure can the World afford?
 He make my Heauen in a Ladies Lappe,
 And decke my Body in gay Ornaments,
 And 'twixt sweet Ladies with my Words and Lookes,
 Oh miserable Thought! and more vnlikely,
 Then to accomplish twentie Golden Crownes.
 Why Loue forswore me in my Mothers Wombe:
 And for I should not deale in her soft Lawes,
 Shee did corrupt frayle Nature with some Bribe,
 To shrinke mine Arme vp like a wither'd Shrub,
 To make an enuious Mountaine on my Back,
 Where sits Deformitie to mocke my Body;
 To shape my Legges of an vnequall size,
 To dis-proportion me in euery part:
 Like to a Chaos, or an vn-lick'd Beare-whelp,
 That carries no impression like the Damme.
 And am I then a man to be belou'd?
 Oh monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought.
 Then since this Earth affords no Ioy to me,
 But to command, to check, to o're-bear such,
 As are of better Person then my selfe:
 He make my Heauen, to deame vpon the Crowne,
 And whiles I liue, I account this World but Hell,
 Vntill my mis-shap'd Trunke, that beares this Head,
 Be round impaled with a glorious Crowne.
 And yet I know not how to get the Crowne,
 For many Liues stand betweene me and home:

And I, like one lost in a Thorne Wood,
 That rents the Thornes, and is rent with the Thornes,
 Seeking a way, and straying from the way,
 Not knowing how to finde the open Ayre,
 But toying desperately to finde it out,
 Torment my selfe, to catch the English Crowne:
 And from that torment I will free my selfe,
 Or hew my way out with a bloody Axe.
 Why I can smile, and murder whiles I smile,
 And cry, Content, to that which grieues my Heart,
 And wet my Cheekes with artificiall Teares,
 And frame my Face to all occasions.
 He drowne more Saylers then the Mermaid shall,
 He slay more gazers then the Basiliske,
 He play the Orator as well as Nesfor, Deceiue more flyly then Vlisses could,
 And like a Synon, take another Troy.
 I can adde Colours to the Camelioun,
 Change shapes with Proteus, for aduantages,
 And set the murtherous Machauill to Schoole.
 Can I doe this, and cannot get a Crowne?
 Tut, were it farther off, I'll plucke it downe. Exit.

Flourish.

*Enter Lewis the French King, his Sister Bona, his Admirall, call'd Bourbon: Prince Edward,
 Queene Margaret, and the Earle of Oxford.
 Lewis sits, and riseth vp againe.*

Lewis. Faire Queene of England, worthy Margaret,
 Sit downe with vs: it ill befits thy State,
 And Birth, that thou should'st stand, while Lewis doth sit.
Marg. No, mightie King of France: now Margaret
 Must strike her sayle, and learne a while to serue,
 Where Kings command. I was (I must confesse)
 Great Albions Queene, in former Golden dayes:
 But now mischance hath trod my Title downe,
 And with dishonor layd me on the ground,
 Where I must take like Seat vnto my fortune,
 And to my humble Seat conforme my selfe.

Lewis. Why say, faire Queene, whence springs this deepe despaire?

Marg. From such a cause, as fills mine eyes with teares,
 And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.

Lewis. What ere it be, be thou still like thy selfe,
 And sit thee by our side. Sits her by him.
 Yeeld not thy necke to Fortunes yoke,
 But let thy dauntlesse minde still ride in triumph,
 Ouer all mischance.

Be plaine, Queene Margaret, and tell thy griefe,
 It shall be eas'd, if France can yeeld reliefe.

Marg. Those gracious words
 Reuiue my drooping thoughts,
 And giue my tongue-ty'dorrowes leaue to speake.
 Now therefore be it knowne to Noble Lewis,
 That Henry, sole possessor of my Loue,
 Is, of a King, become a banisht man,
 And forc'd to liue in Scotland a Forlorne;
 While proud ambitious Edward, Duke of York,
 Vsurses the Regall Title, and the Seat
 Of Englands true anoynted lawfull King.
 This is the cause that I, poore Margaret,
 With this my Sonne, Prince Edward, Henries Heire,
 Am come to craue thy iust and lawfull ayde:
 And if thou faile vs, all our hope is done.
 Scotland hath will to helpe, but cannot helpe:

Out.

Our People, and our Peeres, are both mis-led,
 Our Treasure seiz'd, our Souldiours put to flight,
 And (as thou seest) our felues in heauie plight.
Lewis. Renowned Queene,
 With patience calme the Storme,
 While we bethinke a meanes to breake it off.
Marg. The more wee stay, the stronger growes our foe.

Lewis. The more I stay, the more I'll succour thee.
Marg. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow.
 And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter Warwick.

Lewis. What's hee approacheth boldly to our presence?

Marg. Our Earle of Warwick, Edward's greatest Friend.

Lewis. Welcome braue Warwicke, what brings thee to France? Hee descends. Shee riseth.

Marg. I now begin a second Storme to rise,
 For this is hee that moues both Winde and Tyde.

Warw. From worthy Edward, King of Albion,
 My Lord and Soueraigne, and thy vowed Friend,
 I come (in Kindnesse, and vnfaigned Loue)
 First, to doe greetings to thy Royall Person,
 And then to craue a League of Amitie:
 And lastly, to confirme that Amitie

With Nuptiall Knot, if thou vouchsafe to graunt
 That vertuous Lady Bona, thy faire Sister,
 To Englands King, in lawfull Marriage.

Marg. If that goe forward, Henries hope is done.
Warw. And gracious Madame, Speaking to Bona.

In our Kings behalfe,
 I am commanded, with your leaue and fauor,
 Humbly to kisse your Hand, and with my Tongue
 To tell the passion of my Soueraignes Heart;
 Where Fame, late entering at his heedfull Eares,
 Hath plac'd thy Beauties Image, and thy Vertue.

Marg. King Lewis, and Lady Bona, heare me speake,
 Before you answer Warwicke. His demand
 Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest Loue,
 But from Deceit, bred by Necessitie:
 For how can Tyrants safely gouerne home,
 Vnto abroad they purchase great allyance?
 To proue him Tyrant, this reason may suffice,
 That Henry liueth still: but were hee dead,
 Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henries Sonne.
 Looke therefore Lewis, that by this League and Mariage
 Thou draw not on thy Danger, and Dis-honor:
 For though Vsurers sway the rule a while,
 Yet Heaues are iust, and Time suppresseth Wrongs.

Warw. Inuiouous Margaret.
Edw. And why not Queene?

Warw. Because thy Father Henry did vsurpe,
 And thou no more art Prince, then shee is Queene.

Oxf. Then Warwicke disanulls great John of Gaunt,
 Which did subdue the greatest part of Spaine;
 And after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,
 Whose Wisdome was a Mirror to the wisest:
 And after that wise Prince, Henry the Fifth,
 Who by his Prowesse conquered all France:
 From thence, our Henry lineally descends.

Warw. Oxford, how haps it in this smooth discourse,
 You told not, how Henry the Sixth hath lost
 All that, which Henry the Fifth had gotten:

Me thinks these Peeres of France should smile at that,
 But for the rest: you tell a Pedigree
 Of threescore and two yeeres, a silly time
 To make prescription for a Kingdome worth.

Oxf. Why Warwicke, canst thou speake against thy Liege,
 Whom thou obey'd'st thirtie and six yeeres,
 And not bewray thy Treason with a Blush?

Warw. Can Oxford, that did euer fence the right,
 Now buckler Falsehood with a Pedigree?
 For shame leaue Henry, and call Edward King.

Oxf. Call him my King, by whose iniurious doome
 My elder Brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere
 Was done to death? and more then so, my Father,
 Euen in the downe-fall of his mellow'd yeeres,
 When Nature brought him to the doore of Death?
 No Warwicke, no: while Life vpholds this Arme,
 This Anne vpholds the House of Lancaster.

Warw. And I the House of York.
Lewis. Queene Margaret, Prince Edward, and Oxford,

Vouchsafe at our request, to stand aside,
 While I vsf further conference with Warwicke.

They stand aloofe.

Marg. Heaues graunt, that Warwicke's wordes be-witch him not.

Lew. Now Warwicke, tell me euen vpon thy conscience
 Is Edward your true King? for I were loth
 To linke with him, that were not lawfull chosen.

Warw. Thereon I pawne my Credit, and mine Honor.

Lewis. But is hee gracious in the Peoples eye?
Warw. The more, that Henry was vnfortunate.

Lewis. Then further: all dissembling set aside,
 Tell me for truth, the measure of his Loue Vnto our Sister Bona.

Warw. Such it seemes,
 As may befecme a Monarch like himselfe.
 My selfe haue often heard him say, and sweare,
 That this his Loue was an externall Plant,
 Whereof the Root was fixt in Vertues ground,
 The Leaues and Fruit maintain'd with Beauties Sunne,
 Exempt from Enuy, but not from Disdaine,
 Vnto the Lady Bona quit his paine.

Lewis. Now Sister, let vs heare your firme resolute.
Bona. Your graunt, or your denyall, shall be mine.

Yet I confesse, that often ere this day, Speaks to Warw.
 When I haue heard your Kings desert recounted,
 Mine eare hath tempted iudgement to desire.

Lewis. Then Warwicke, thus:
 Our Sister shall be Edward's.

And now forthwith shall Articles be drawne,
 Touching the Ioynture that your King must make,
 Which with her Dowrie shall be counter-poynd:
 Draw neere, Queene Margaret, and be a witnesse,
 That Bona shall be Wife to the English King.

Pr. Edw. To Edward, but not to the English King.
Marg. Deceitfull Warwicke, it was thy deuce,

By this alliance to make void my suit:
 Before thy comming, Lewis was Henries friend.

Lewis. And still is friend to him, and Margaret.
 But if your Title to the Crowne be weake,
 As may appeare by Edward's good successe:
 Then 'tis but reason, that I be releas'd
 From giuing ayde, which late I promised.
 Yet shall you haue all kindnesse at my hand,
 That your Estate requires, and mine can yeeld.

Warw. Henry now liues in Scotland, at his ease;
 Where

Where hauing nothing, nothing can he lose.
And as for you your selfe (our quondam Queene)
You haue a Father able to maintaine you,
And better 'twere, you troubled him, then France.
Mar. Peace impudent, and shamelesse Warwicke,
Proud setter vp, and puller downe of Kings,
I will not hence, till with my Talke and Teares
(Both full of Truth) I make King Lewis behold
Thy slye conueyance, and thy Lords false loue,

Post blowing a horn within.
For both of you are Birds of selfe-same Feather.

Lewis. Warwicke, this is some poste to vs, or thee.

Enter the Poste.

Post. My Lord Ambassador,
These Letters are for you. Speakes to Warwicke,
Sent from your Brother Marquesse Montague.
These from our King, vnto your Maiesty. To Lewis.
And Madam, these for you: To Margaret
From whom, I know not.

They all reade their Letters.

Oxf. I like it well, that our faire Queene and Mistrie Smiles at her newes, while Warwicke frownes at his.
Prince Ed. Nay marke how Lewis stampes as he were netled. I hope, all's for the best.

Lew. Warwicke, what are thy Newes?
And yours, faire Queene.

Mar. Mine such, as fill my heart with vnhop'd ioyes.

War. Mine full of sorrow, and hearts discontent.

Lew. What? has your King married the Lady Grey?
And now to sooth your Forgery, and his,
Sends me a Paper to perswade me Patience?
Is this th Alliance that he seekes with France?
Dare he presume to scorne vs in this manner?

Mar. I told your Maiesty as much before:
This proueth Edwards Loue, and Warwicks honesty.

War. King Lewis, I heere protest in sight of heauen,
And by the hope I haue of heauenly blisse,
That I am cleere from this misdeed of Edwards;
No more my King, for he dishonors me,
But most himselfe, if he could see his shame.
Did I forget, that by the House of Yorke
My Father came vntimely to his death?

Did I let passe th' abuse done to my Neece?
Did I impale him with the Regall Crowne?
Did I put Henry from his Native Right?
And am I guerdon'd at the last, with Shame?
Shame on himselfe, for my Desert is Honor.
And to repaire my Honor lost for him,
I heere renounce him, and returne to Henry.

My Noble Queene, let former grudges passe,
And henceforth, I am thy true Seruitour:
I will reuenge his wrong to Lady Bona,
And replant Henry in his former State.

Mar. Warwicke,
These words haue turn'd my Hate, to Loue,
And I forgiue, and quite forget old faults,
And ioy that thou becom'st King Henries Friend.

War. So much his Friend, I, his vnfaied Friend,
That if King Lewis vouchsafe to furnish vs
With some few Bands of chosen Soldiours,
He vndertake to Land them on our Coast,
And force the Tyrant from his seat by Warre.
'Tis not his new-made Bride shall succour him,
And as for Clarence, as my Letters tell me,
Hee's very likely now to fall from him,
For matching more for wanton Lust, then Honor,

Or then for strength and safety of our Country.

Bona. Deere Brother, how shall Bona be reueng'd,
But by thy helpe to this distressed Queene?

Mar. Renowned Prince, how shall Poore Henry live,
Vnlesse thou rescue him from foule dispaire?

Bona. My quarrel, and this English Queens, are one.

War. And mine faire Lady Bona, ioyes with yours.

Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margarets.
Therefore, at last, I firmly am resolu'd
You shall haue ayde.

Mar. Let me giue humble thanks for all, at once.

Lew. Then Englands Messenger, returne in Poste,
And tell false Edward, thy supposed King,
That Lewis of France, is sending ouer Maskers
To reuell it with him, and his new Bride.

Thou seeest what's past, go feare thy King withall.

Bona. Tell him, in hope hee'l proue a widower shortly,
I weare the Willow Garland for his sake.

Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are layde aside,
And I am ready to put Armour on.

War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore Ile vn-Crowne him, er't be long.

There's thy reward, be gone. Exit Post.

Lew. But Warwicke,
Thou and Oxford, with five thousand men
Shall crosse the Seas, and bid false Edward battaile:
And as occasion serues, this Noble Queen
And Prince, shall follow with a fresh Supply.

Yet ere thou go, but answer me one doubt:
What Pledge haue we of thy firme Loyalty?

War. This shall assure my constant Loyalty,
That if our Queene, and this young Prince agree,
He ioye mine eldest daughter, and my Ioy,
To him forthwith, in holy Wedlocke bands.

Mar. Yes, I agree, and thanke you for your Motion,
Sonne Edward, she is Faire and Vertuous,
Therefore delay not, giue thy hand to Warwicke,
And with thy hand, thy faith irreuocable,
That onely Warwicks daughter shall be thine.

Prin. Ed. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserues it,
And heere to pledge my Vow, I giue my hand.

He giues his hand to War.

Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shalbe leuied,
And thou Lord Bourbon, our High Admirall
Shall waite them ouer with our Royall Fleete.
I long till Edward fall by Warres mischance,
For mocking Marriage with a Dame of France.

Exeunt. Manet Warwicke.

War. I came from Edward as Ambassador,
But I returne his sworne and mortall Foe:
Matter of Marriage was the charge he gaue me,
But dreadfull Warre shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a Rale but me?
Then none but I, shall turne his Iest to Sorrow,
I was the Cheefe that rais'd him to the Crowne,
And Ile be Cheefe to bring him downe againe:
Not that I pittie Henries misery,
But seeke Reuenge on Edwards mockery.

Enter Richard, Clarence, Somerset, and Montague.

Rich. Now tell me Brother Clarence, what thinke you
Of this new Marriage with the Lady Grey?

Hath not our Brother made a worthy choice?

Cl. Alas, you know, 'tis farre from hence to France,

How could he stay till Warwicke made returne?

Som. My Lords, forbear this talke: heere comes the King.

Flourish.

Enter King Edward, Lady Grey, Penbrooke, Stafford, Hastings: foure stand on one side, and foure on the other.

Rich. And his well-chosen Bride.
Clarence. I minde to tell him plainly what I thinke.

King. Now Brother of Clarence,
How like you our Choyce,
That you stand pensue, as halfe malecontent?

Clarence. As well as Lewis of France,
Or the Earle of Warwicke,
Which are so weake of courage, and in iudgement,
That they le take no offence at our abuse.

King. Suppose they take offence without a cause:
They are but Lewis and Warwicke, I am Edward,
Your King and Warwicks, and must haue my will.

Rich. And shall haue your will, because our King:
Yet hastie Marriage seldome proueth well.

King. Yea, Brother Richard, are you offended too?

Rich. Not I: no:
God forbid, that I should wish them seuer'd,
Whom God hath ioyn'd together:
Land 'twere pittie, to sunder them,
That yoke so well together.

King. Setting your skornes, and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the Lady Grey
Should not become my Wife, and Englands Queene?

And you too, Somerset, and Montague,
Speake freely what you thinke.

Clarence. Then this is mine opinion:
That King Lewis becomes your Enemy,
For mocking him about the Marriage
Of the Lady Bona.

Rich. And Warwicke, doing what you gaue in charge,
Is now dishonored by this new Marriage.

King. What, if both Lewis and Warwicke be appeas'd,
By such inuention as I can deuise?

How could he stay till Warwicke made returne?
Som. My Lords, forbear this talke: heere comes the King.

Flourish.
Enter King Edward, Lady Grey, Penbrooke, Stafford, Hastings: foure stand on one side, and foure on the other.

Rich. And his well-chosen Bride.
Clarence. I minde to tell him plainly what I thinke.

King. Now Brother of Clarence,
How like you our Choyce,
That you stand pensue, as halfe malecontent?

Clarence. As well as Lewis of France,
Or the Earle of Warwicke,
Which are so weake of courage, and in iudgement,
That they le take no offence at our abuse.

King. Suppose they take offence without a cause:
They are but Lewis and Warwicke, I am Edward,
Your King and Warwicks, and must haue my will.

Rich. And shall haue your will, because our King:
Yet hastie Marriage seldome proueth well.

King. Yea, Brother Richard, are you offended too?

Rich. Not I: no:
God forbid, that I should wish them seuer'd,
Whom God hath ioyn'd together:
Land 'twere pittie, to sunder them,
That yoke so well together.

King. Setting your skornes, and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the Lady Grey
Should not become my Wife, and Englands Queene?

And you too, Somerset, and Montague,
Speake freely what you thinke.

Clarence. Then this is mine opinion:
That King Lewis becomes your Enemy,
For mocking him about the Marriage
Of the Lady Bona.

Rich. And Warwicke, doing what you gaue in charge,
Is now dishonored by this new Marriage.

King. What, if both Lewis and Warwicke be appeas'd,
By such inuention as I can deuise?

Mont. Yet, to haue ioyn'd with France in such alliance,
Would more haue strength'n'd this our Commonwealt
Gainst forraigne stormes, then any home-bred Marriage.

Hast. Why knowes not Montague, that of it selfe,
England is safe, if true within it selfe?

Mont. But the safer, when 'tis back'd with France.

Hast. 'Tis better vsing France, then trusting France:
Let vs be back'd with God, and with the Seas,
Which he hath giu'n for fence impregnable,
And with their helpes, onely defend our selues:
In them, and in our selues, our safetie lyes.

Clar. For this one speech, Lord Hastings well deserues
To haue the Heire of the Lord Hungerford.

King. I, what of that? it was my will, and graunt,
And for this once, my Will shall stand for Law.

Rich. And yet me thinks, your Grace hath not done well,
To giue the Heire and Daughter of Lord Scales
Vnto the Brother of your louing Bride;
Shee better would haue fitted me, or Clarence:

But in your Bride you burie Brotherhood.

Clar. Or else you would not haue bestow'd the Heire
Of the Lord Bonwill on your new Wiues Sonne,
And leaue your Brothers to goe speede elsewhere.

King. Alas, poore Clarence: is it for a Wife
That thou art malecontent? I will prouide thee.

Clarence. In chusing for your selfe,
You shew'd your iudgement:
Which being shallow, you shall giue me leaue
To play the Broker in mine owne behalfe;
And to that end, I shortly minde to leaue you.

King. Leau me, or tarry, Edward will be King,
And not be ty'd vnto his Brothers will.

Lady Grey. My Lords, before it pleas'd his Maiestie
To raise my State to Title of a Queene,
Doe me but right, and you must all confesse,
That I was not ignoble of Descent,
And meaner then my selfe haue had like fortune.
But as this Title honors me and mine,
So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
Doth cloud my ioyes with danger, and with sorrow.

King. My Loue, forbear to fawne vpon their frownes:
What danger, or what sorrow can befall thee,
So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
And their true Soueraigne, whom they must obey?
Nay, whom they shall obey, and loue thee too,
Vnlesse they seeke for hatred at my hands:
Which if they doe, yet will I keepe thee safe,
And they shall feeble the vengeance of my wrath.

Rich. I heare, yet say not much, but thinke the more.

Enter a Poste.

King. Now Messenger, what Letters, or what Newes from France?

Post. My Soueraigne Liege, no Letters, & few words,
But such, as I (without your speciall pardon)
Dare not relate.

King. Goe too, wee pardon thee:
Therefore, in brieft, tell me their words,
As neere as thou canst guesse them.

What answer makes King Lewis vnto our Letters?

Post. At my depart, these were his very words:
Goe tell false Edward, the supposed King,
That Lewis of France is sending ouer Maskers,
To reuell it with him, and his new Bride.

King. Is Lewis so braue? belike he thinkes me Henry.
But what said Lady Bona to my Marriage?

Post. These were her words, vt'tred with mild disdain:
Tell him, in hope hee'le proue a Widower shortly,
He weare the Willow Garland for his sake.

King. I blame not her; she could say little lesse:
She had the wrong. But what said Henries Queene?

Post. Tell him (quoth she)
My mourning Weedes are done,
And I am readie to put Armour on.

King. Belike she minde to play the Amazon.
But what said Warwicke to these iniuries?

Post. He, more incens'd against your Maiestie,
Then all the rest, discharg'd me with these words:
Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore Ile vncrowne him, er't be long.

King. Ha? durst the Traytor breach out so prou'd words?
Well, I will arme me, being thus fore-warn'd:
They shall haue Warres, and pay for their presumption.
But say, is Warwicke friends with Margaret?

Post. I, gracious Soueraigne,
They are to link'd in friendship,
That yong Prince Edward marryes Warwicks Daughter.

Clarence. Belike, the elder;
Clarence will haue the younger.

Now

Now Brother King farewell, and sit you fast,
For I will hence to Warwick's other Daughter,
That though I want a Kingdome, yet in Marriage
I may not proue inferior to your selfe.
You that loue me, and Warwick, follow me.

Exit Clarence, and Somerset follows.

Rich. Not I:

My thoughts syme at a further matter:

I stay not for the loue of Edward, but the Crowne.

King. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick?

Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen:

And haste is needfull in this desperate case,

Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalfe

Goe leuie men, and make prepare for Warre;

They are already, or quickly will be landed:

My selfe in person will straight follow you.

Exeunt Pembroke and Stafford.

But ere I goe, Hastings and Mountague

Resolue my doubt: you twaine, of all the rest,

Are neere to Warwick, by bloud, and by alliance:

Tell me, if you loue Warwick more then me;

If it be so, then both depart to him:

I rather wish you foes, then hollow friends.

But if you minde to hold your true obedience,

Giue me assurance with some friendly Vow,

That I may neuer haue you in suspect.

Mount. So God helpe Mountague, as hee proues true.

Hast. And Hastings, as hee fauours Edwards cause.

King. Now, Brother Richard, will you stand by vs?

Rich. I, in despite of all that shall withstand you.

King. Why so: then am I sure of Victorie.

Now therefore let vs hence, and lose no howre,

Till wee meet Warwick, with his forreine powre.

Exeunt.

Enter Warwick and Oxford in England, with French Souldiers.

*Warw. Trust me, my Lord, all hitherto goes well,
The common people by numbers swarme to vs.*

Enter Clarence and Somerset.

But see where Somerset and Clarence comes:

Speake suddenly, my Lords, are wee all friends?

Clar. Feare not that, my Lord.

Warw. Then gentle Clarence, welcome vnto Warwick,

And welcome Somerset: I hold it cowardize,

To rest mistrustfull, where a Noble Heart

Hath pawn'd an open Hand, in signe of Loue;

Else might I thinke, that Clarence, Edwards Brother,

Were but a fained friend to our proceedings:

But welcome sweet Clarence, my Daughter shall be thine.

And now, what rests? but in Nights Couerture,

Thy Brother being carelessly encamp'd,

His Souldiers lurking in the Towne about,

And but attended by a simple Guard,

Wee may surprize and take him at our pleasure,

Our Scouts haue found the aduenture very easie:

That as Phyllis, and stout Diomedes,

With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus Tents,

And brought from thence the Thracian fatal Steeds;

So wee, well couer'd with the Nights black Mantle,

At vnawares may beat downe Edwards Guard,

And seize himselfe: I say not, slaughter him,

For I intend but onely to surprize him,

You that will follow me to this attempt,

Applaud the Name of Henry, with your Leader,
They all cry, Henry.

Why then, let's on our way in silent sort,
For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George.

Exeunt.

Enter three Watchmen to guard the Kings Tent.

*1. Watch. Come on my Masters, each man take his stand,
The King by this, is set him downe to sleepe.*

2. Watch. What, will he not to Bed?

1. Watch. Why, no: for he hath made a solemne Vow, Neuer to lye and take his naturall Rest,

Till Warwick, or himselfe, be quite supprest.

*2. Watch. To morrow then belike shall be the day,
If Warwick be so neere as men report.*

*3. Watch. But say, I pray, what Noble man is that,
That with the King here resteth in his Tent?*

1. Watch. 'Tis the Lord Hastings, the Kings chiefest friend.

*3. Watch. O, is it so? but why commands the King,
That his chiefe followers lodge in Townes about him,*

While he himselfe keeps in the cold field?

2. Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because more dangerous.

*3. Watch. I, but giue me worship, and quietnesse,
I like it better then a dangerous honor.*

If Warwick knew in what estate he stands,

'Tis to be doubted he would waken him.

1. Watch. Vnlesse our Halberds did shut vp his passage.

*2. Watch. I: wherefore else guard we his Royall Tent,
But to defend his Person from Night-foes?*

Enter Warwick, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset, and French Souldiers, silent all.

Warw. This is his Tent, and see where stand his Guard:

Courage my Masters: Honor now, or neuer:

But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

1. Watch. Who goes there?

2. Watch. Stay, or thou dyest.

Warwick and the rest cry all, Warwick, Warwick, and set upon the Guard, who flye, crying, Arme, Arme, Warwick and the rest following them.

The Drumme playing, and Trumpet sounding.

Enter Warwick, Somerset, and the rest, bringing the King out in his Gowne, sitting in a Chaire: Richard and Hastings flye over the Stage.

Som. What are they that flye there?

Warw. Richard and Hastings: let them goe, heere is the Duke.

K. Edw. The Duke?

Why Warwick, when wee parted,

Thou call'dst me King.

Warw. I, but the case is alter'd.

When you disgrac'd me in my Embassage,

Then I degraded you from being King,

And come now to create you Duke of Yorke.

Alas, how should you gouerne any Kingdome,

That know not how to vse Embassadors,

Nor how to be contented with one Wife,

Nor how to vse your Brothers Brotherly,

Nor how to studie for the Peoples Welfare,

Nor how to throwd your selfe from Enemies?

K. Edw. Yea,

K. Edw. Yea, Brother of Clarence,

Art thou here too?

Nay then I see, that Edward needs must downe.

Yet Warwick, in despite of all mischance,

Of thee thy selfe, and all thy Complices,

Edward will alwayes beare himselfe as King:

Though Fortunes mallice ouerthrow my State,

My minde exceeds the compasse of her Wheele.

Warw. Then for his minde, be Edward Englands King.

Takes off his Crowne.

But Henry now shall weare the English Crowne,

And be true King indeede: thou but the shadow.

My Lord of Somerset, at my request,

See that forthwith Duke Edward be conuey'd

Vnto my Brother Arch-Bishop of Yorke:

When I haue fought with Pembroke, and his fellowes,

Ile follow you, and tell what answer

Lewis and the Lady Bona send to him.

Now for a while farewell good Duke of Yorke.

They leade him out forcibly.

K. Ed. What Fates impose, that men must needs abide;

It boots not to resist both winde and tide.

Oxf. What now remains my Lords for vs to do,

But march to London with our Soldiers?

War. I, that's the first thing that we haue to do,

To free King Henry from imprisonment,

And see him seated in the Regall Throne.

Exeunt.

Enter Rivers, and Lady Gray.

Riv. Madam, what makes you in this sodain change?

Gray. Why Brother Rivers, are you yet to learne

What late misfortune is befalling King Edward?

Riv. What losse of some pitch battell

Against Warwick?

Gray. No, but the losse of his owne Royall person.

Riv. Then is my Soueraigne slaine?

Gray. I almost slaine, for he is taken prisoner,

Either betrayd by falshood of his Guard,

Or by his Foe surpriz'd at vnawares:

And as I further haue to vnderstand,

I am committed to the Bishop of Yorke,

Fell Warwicks Brother, and by that our Foe.

Riv. These Newes I must confesse are full of greefe,

Yet gracious Madam, beare it as you may.

Warwick may loose, that now hath wonne the day.

Gray. Till then, faire hope must hinder lines decay:

And I the rather waine me from dispaire

For loue of Edwards Off-spring in my wombe:

This is it that makes me bridle passion,

And beare with Mildnesse my misfortunes crosse:

I, for this I draw in many a teare,

And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighes,

Least with my sighes or teares, I blast or drowne

King Edwards Fruite, true heyte to th' English Crowne.

Riv. But Madam,

Where is Warwick then become?

Gray. I am inform'd that he comes towards London,

To set the Crowne once more on Henries head,

Guests thou the rest, King Edwards Friends must downe.

But to prevent the Tyrants violence,

(For trust not him that hath once broken Faith)

Ile hence forthwith vnto the Sanctuary,

To saue (at least) the heire of Edwards right:

There shall I rest secure from force and fraud:

Come therefore let vs flye, while we may flye,

If Warwick take vs, we are sure to dye.

Exeunt.

Enter Richard, Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley.

Rich. Now my Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley,

Leaue off to wonder why I drew you hither,

Into this cheefest Thicket of the Parke.

Thus stand the case: you know our King, my Brother,

Is prisoner to the Bishop here, at whose hands

He hath good vsage, and great liberty,

And often but attended with weake guard;

Come hunting this way to disport himselfe.

I haue aduertis'd him by secret meanes,

That if about this houre he make this way,

Vnder the colour of his vsual game,

He shall heere finde his Friends with Horse and Men,

To set him free from his Captiuitie.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntsman with him.

Huntsman. This way my Lord,

For this way lies the Game.

King Edw. Nay this way man,

See where the Huntmen stand.

Now Brother of Gloster, Lord Hastings, and the rest,

Stand you thus close to steale the Bishops Deere?

Rich. Brother, the time and case, requireth hast,

Your horse stands ready at the Parke-corner.

King Ed. But whether shall we then?

Hast. To Lyn my Lord,

And shipt from thence to Flanders.

Rich. Wel guest beleue me, for that was my meaning

K. Ed. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardnesse.

Rich. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talke:

K. Ed. Huntsman, what say'st thou?

Wilt thou go along?

Hunt. Better do so, then tarry and be hang'd.

Rich. Come then away, lets ha no more ado.

K. Ed. Bishop farewell,

Sheeld thee from Warwicks frowne,

And pray that I may re-posseesse the Crowne.

Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter King Henry the sixth, Clarence, Warwick, Somerset, young Henry, Oxford, Mountague, and Lieutenant.

K. Hen. M. Lieutenant, now that God and Friends

Haue shaken Edward from the Regall seate,

And turn'd my captiue state to libertie,

My feare to hope, my sorrowes vnto ioyes,

At our enlargement what are thy due Fees?

Lien. Subiects may challenge nothing of their Sou'rains

But, if an humble prayer may preuaile,

I then craue pardon of your Maiestie.

K. Hen. For what, Lieutenant? For well vsing me?

Nay, be thou sure, Ile well requite thy kindnesse.

For that it made my imprisonment, a pleasure:

I, such a pleasure, as incaged Birds

Conceiue; when after many moody Thoughts,

At last, by Notes of Household harmonie,

They quite forget their losse of Libertie.

q

But

But Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free,
And chiefly therefore, I thank God, and thee,
He was the Author, thou the Instrument.
Therefore that I may conquer Fortunes spight,
By living low, where Fortune cannot hurt me,
And that the people of this blessed Land
May not be punish't with my thwarting starres,
Warwicke, although my Head still weare the Crowne,
I there resigne my Government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

Warw. Your Grace hath still bene fam'd for vertuous,
And now may seeme as wise as vertuous,
By spying and auoiding Fortunes malice,
For few men rightly temper with the Starres:
Yet in this one thing let me blame your Grace,
For chusing me, when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the Heav'n's in thy Natiuitie,
Adiudg'd an Olive Branch, and Lawrell Crowne,
As likely to be blest in Peace and Warre:
And therefore I yeeld thee my free consent.

Warw. And I chuse Clarence onely for Protector.

King Warwick and Clarence, giue me both your Hands:
Now ioyne your Hands, & with your Hands your Hearts,
That no dissention hinder Government:
I make you both Protectors of this Land,
While I my selfe will lead a priuate Life,
And in deuotion spend my latter dayes,
To sinnes rebuke, and my Creators prayse.

Warw. What answers Clarence to his Soueraignes will?

Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yeeld consent,
For on thy fortune I repose my selfe.

Warw. Why then, though loth, yet must I be content:
Wee'le yoake together, like a double shadow
To Henries Body, and supply his place;
I meane, in bearing weight of Government,
While he enioyes the Honor, and his ease.
And Clarence, now then it is more then needfull,
Forthwith that Edward be pronounc'd a Traytor,
And all his Lands and Goods confiscate.

Clar. What else? and that Succession be determined.
Warw. I, therein Clarence shall not want his part.

King. But with the first, of all your chiefe affaires,
Let me entreat (for I command no more)
That Margaret your Queene, and my Sonne Edward,
Be sent for, to returne from France with speed:
For till I see them here, by doubtfull feare,
My ioy of libertie is halfe eclips'd.

Clar. It shall bee done, my Soueraigne, with all speede.

King. My Lord of Somerset, what Youth is that,
Of whom you seeme to haue so tender care?

Somerset. My Liege, it is young Henry, Earle of Richmond.

King. Come hither, Englands Hope:

Lays his Hand on his Head.

If secret Powers suggest but truth
To my diuining thoughts,
This prettie Lad will proue our Countries blisse.
His Lookes are full of peacefull Maiestie,
His Head by nature fram'd to weare a Crowne,
His Hand by nature fram'd to weare a Crowne,
Likely in time to blisse a Regall Throne:
Make much of him, my Lords; for this is hee
Must helpe you more, then you are hurt by mee.

Enter a Post.

Warw. What newes, my friend?

Post. That Edward is escaped from your Brother,
And fled (as hee heares since) to Burgundie.

Warw. Vnsauorie newes: but how made he escape?

Post. He was conuey'd by Richard, Duke of Gloster,
And the Lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush, on the Forrest side,
And from the Bishops Huntsmen rescu'd him:
For Hunting was his dayly Exercise.

Warw. My Brother was too carelesse of his charge,
But let vs hence, my Soueraigne, to prouide
A salue for any sore, that may betide.

Enter Somerset, Richmond, and Oxford.

Som. My Lord, I like not of this flight of Edwards:
For doubtlesse, Burgundie will yeeld him helpe,
And we shall haue more Warres before't be long.
As Henries late presaging Prophecie
Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond,
So doth my heart mis-giue me, in these Conflicts,
What may befall him, to his harme and ours,
Therefore, Lord Oxford, to preuent the worst,
Forthwith wee'le send him hence to Brittainie,
Till stormes be past of Ciuill Enmitie.

Oxf. I: for if Edward re-possesse the Crowne,
'Tis like that Richmond, with the rest, shall downe.

Som. It shall be so: he shall to Brittainie,
Come therefore, let's about it speedily.

Flourish. Enter Edward, Richard, Hastings, and Souldiers.

Edw. Now Brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest,
Yet thus farre Fortune maketh vs amends,
And sayes, that once more I shall enterchange
My wained state, for Henries Regall Crowne.
Well haue we pass'd, and now re-pass'd the Seas,
And brought desired helpe from Burgundie.
What then remaines, we being thus arriv'd
From Rauenspurre Hauens, before the Gates of Yorke,
But that we enter, as into our Dukedome?

Rich. The Gates made fast?

Brother, I like not this.

For many men that stumble at the Threshold,
Are well fore-told, that danger lurkes within.

Edw. Tush man, aboardments must not now affright vs:
By faire or foule meanes we must enter in,
For hither will our friends repaire to vs.

Hast. My Liege, Ile knocke once more, to summon them.

Enter on the Walls, the Maior of Yorke, and his Brethren.

Maior. My Lords,

We were fore-warned of your comming,
And shut the Gates, for safetie of our selues;
For now we owe allegiance vnto Henry.

Edw. But, Master Maior, if Henry be your King,
Yet Edward, at the least, is Duke of Yorke.

Maior. True, my good Lord, I know you for no lesse.

Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my Dukedome,
As being well content with that alone.

Rich. But

Rich. But when the Fox hath once got in his Nose,
Hee'le soone finde meanes to make the Body follow.

Hast. Why, Master Maior, why stand you in a doubt?
Open the Gates, we are King Henries friends.

Maior. I, say you so? the Gates shall then be opened.
He descends.

Rich. A wise stout Captaine, and soone perswaded.
Hast. The good old man would faine that all were wel,

So were not long of him: but being entred,
I doubt not I, but we shall soone perswade

Both him, and all his Brothers, vnto reason.

Enter the Maior, and two Aldermen.

Edw. So, Master Maior: these Gates must not be shut,
But in the Night, or in the time of Warre.

What, feare not man, but yeeld me vp the Keyes,
Takes his Keyes.

For Edward will defend the Towne, and thee,
And all those friends, that deine to follow mee.

March. Enter Mountgomerie, with Drumme
and Souldiers.

Rich. Brother, this is Sir John Mountgomerie,
Our trustie friend, vnlesse I be deceiu'd.

Edw. Welcome Sir John: but why come you in Armes?

Mount. To helpe King Edward in his time of storme,
As every Ioyall Subiect ought to doe.

Edw. Thanks good Mountgomerie:
But we now forget our Title to the Crowne,
And onely clayme our Dukedome,

Till God please to send the rest.

Mount. Then fare you well, for I will hence againe,
I came to serue a King, and not a Duke:

Drumme strike vp, and let vs march away.

The Drumme begins to march.

Edw. Nay stay, Sir John, a while, and wee'le debate
By what safe meanes the Crowne may be recouer'd.

Mount. What talke you of debating? in few words,
If you'll not here proclaim your selfe our King,
Ile leave you to your fortune, and be gone,

To keepe them back, that come to succour you.
Why shall we fight, if you pretend no Title?

Rich. Why Brother, wherefore stand you on nice points?

Edw. When wee grow stronger,
Then wee'le make our Clayme:

Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceale our meaning.

Hast. Away with scrupulous Wit, now Armes must rule.

Rich. And fearelesse minds clyme soonest vnto Crowns.
Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand,

The bruit thereof will bring you many friends.

Edw. Then be it as you will: for 'tis my right,
And Henry but vsurpes the Diademe.

Mount. I know my Soueraigne speaketh like himselfe,
And now will I be Edwards Champion.

Hast. Sound Trumpet, Edward shall be here proclaim'd:
Come, fellow Souldior, make thou proclamation.

Flourish. Sound.

Soul. Edward the Fourth, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, &c.

Mount. And whosoe'er gainesayes King Edwards right,
By this I challenge him to single fight.

Throws downe his Gantlet.

All. Long liue Edward the Fourth.

Edw. Thanks braue Mountgomerie,

And thanks vnto you all:
If fortune serue me, Ile requite this kindeesse.

Now for this Night, let's harbor here in Yorke:
And when the Morning Sunne shall rayse his Carre

About the Border of this Horizon,
Wee'le forward towards Warwick, and his Mates;

For well I wot, that Henry is no Souldier.
Ah froward Clarence, how euill it becomes thee,

To flatter Henry, and forsake thy Brother?
Yet as wee may, wee'le meet both thee and Warwick.

Come on braue Souldiors: doubt not of the Day,
And that once gotten, doubt not of large Pay.

Flourish. Enter the King, Warwick, Mountague,
Clarence, Oxford, and Somerset.

War. What counsaile, Lords? Edward from Belgia,
With hastie Germanes, and blunt Hollanders,

Hath pass'd in safetie through the Narrow Seas,
And with his troups doth march amaine to London,

And many giddie people flock to him.

King. Let's leue men, and beat him backe againe.
Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out,

Which being suffer'd, Riuers cannot quench.

War. In Warwickshire I haue true-hearted friends,
Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in Warre,

Those will I muster vp: and thou Sonne Clarence Shalt stirre vp in Suffolke, Norfolk, and in Kent,

The Knights and Gentlemen, to come with thee.
Thou Brother Mountague, in Buckingham,

Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find
Men well enclin'd to heare what thou command'st.

And thou, braue Oxford, wondrous well belou'd,
In Oxfordshire shalt muster vp thy friends.

My Soueraigne, with the louing Citizens,
Like to his Iland, gyrt in with the Ocean,

Or modest Dyas, circled with her Nymphs;
Shall rest in London, till we come to him:

Faire Lords take leaue, and stand not to reply:
Farewell my Soueraigne.

King. Farewell my Helier, and my Troyes true hope.
Clar. In signe of truth, I kisse your Highnesse Hand.

King. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate.
Mount. Comfort, my Lord, and so I take my leaue.

Oxf. And thus I seale my truth, and bid adieu.
King. Sweet Oxford, and my louing Mountague,

And all at once, once more a happy farewell.
War. Farewell, sweet Lords, let's meet at Couentry.

Exeunt.

King. Here at the Pallace will I rest a while.
Cousin of Exeter, what thinkes your Lordship?

Me thinkes, the Power that Edward hath in field,
Should not be able to encounter mine.

Exet. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.
King. That's not my feare, my meed hath got me fame:

I haue not stopt mine eares to their demands,
Nor posted off their suites with slow delays,

My pittie hath bene balme to heale their wounds,
My mildnesse hath allay'd their swelling griefes,

My mercie dry'd their water-flowing teares.
I haue not been desirous of their wealth,

Nor much oppress them with great Subsidies,
Nor forward of reuenge, though they much ext'd.

Then why should they loue Edward more then me?
No Exeter, these Graces challenge Grace:

And when the Lyon fawnes vpon the Lambe,
The Lambe will neuer cease to follow him.

Shout within. A Lancaster, A Lancaster.

Exit. Hearke, hearke, my Lord, what Shouts are these?

Enter Edward and his Souldiers.

Edw. Seize on the shamefac'd Henry, beare him hence,
And once againe proclaime vs King of England.
You are the Fount, that makes small Brookes to flow,
Now stops thy Spring, my Sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher, by their ebbe.
Hence with him to the Tower, let him not speake.

Exit with King Henry.

And Lords, towards Countrey bend we our course,
Where peremptorie Warwick now remains:
The Sunne shines hot, and if we vse delay,
Cold biting Winter marres our hop'd-for Hay.

Rich. Away betimes, before his forces ioyne,
And take the great-grown Traytor vnawares:
Braue Warriors, march aaine towards Countrey.

Exit.

Enter Warwick, the Maior of Countrey, two Messengers, and others vpon the Walls.

War. Where is the Post that came from valiant Oxford?
How fare hence is thy Lord, mine honest fellow?

Mess. 1. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How fare off is our Brother Mountague?

Where is the Post that came from Mountague?

Mess. 2. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troope.

Enter Somerset.

War. Say Somerset, what sayes my louing Sonne?
And by thy guesse, how nigh is Clarence now?

Somerset. At Southam I did leaue him with his forces,
And doe expect him here some two howres hence.

War. Then Clarence is at hand, I heare his Drumme.

Somerset. It is not his, my Lord, here Southam lyes:

The Drum your Honor heares, marcheth from Warwick.

War. Who should that be? belike vnlook'd for friends.

Somerset. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

*March. Flourish. Enter Edward, Richard,
and Souldiers.*

Edw. Goe, Trumpet, to the Walls, and sound a Parle.

Rich. See how the surly Warwick mans the Wall.

War. Oh vnbid spight, is sportfull Edward come?

Where slept our Scouts, or how are they seduc'd,
That we could heare no newes of his repayre.

Edw. Now Warwick, wilt thou ope the Citie Gates,
Speake gentle words, and humbly bend thy Knee,
Call Edward King, and at his hands begge Mercy,
And he shall pardon thee these Outrages?

War. Nay rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,
Confesse who set thee vp, and pluckt thee downe,
Call Warwick Patron, and be penitent,
And thou shalt still remaine the Duke of Yorke.

Rich. I thought at least he would haue said the King,
Or did he make the feast against his will?

War. Is not a Dukedome, Sir, a goodly gift?

Rich. I, by my faith, for a poore Earle to giue,
He doe thee seruice for so good a gift.

War. 'Twas I that gaue the Kingdome to thy Brother.

Edw. Why then 'tis mine, if but by Warwick's gift.

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:
And Weakeling, Warwick takes his gift againe,

And Henry is my King, Warwick his Subiect.

Edw. But Warwick's King is Edwards Prisoner:
And gallant Warwick, doe but answer this,

What is the Body, when the Head is off?

Rich. Alas, that Warwick had no more fore-cast,
But whiles he thought to steale the single Ten,
The King was slyly finger'd from the Deck:

You left poore Henry at the Bishops Pallace,

And tenne to one you'll meet him in the Tower.

Edw. 'Tis euen so, yet you are Warwick still.

Rich. Come Warwick,

Take the time, kneele downe, kneele downe:

Nay when? strike now, or else the Iron cooles.

War. I had rather chop this Hand off at a blow,

And with the other, sling it at thy face,

Then beare so low a sayle, to strike to thee:

Edw. Sayle how thou canst,

Haue Winde and Tyde thy friend,

This Hand, fast wound about thy coale-black hayre,

Shall, whiles thy Head is warme, and new cut off,

Write in the dust this Sentence with thy blood,

Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more.

Enter Oxford, with Drumme and Colours.

War. Oh chearefull Colours, see where Oxford comes.

Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaster.

Rich. The Gates are open, let vs enter too.

Edw. So other foes may set vpon our backs.

Stand we in good array: for they no doubt

Will issue out againe, and bid vs battaile;

If not, the Citie being but of small defence,

Wee'll quickly rowze the Traitors in the faine.

War. Oh welcome Oxford, for we want thy helpe.

Enter Mountague, with Drumme and Colours.

Mount. Mountague, Mountague, for Lancaster.

Rich. Thou and thy Brother both shall buy this Treason

Euen with the dearest blood your bodies beare.

Edw. The harder matcht, the greater Victorie,

My minde presageth happy gaine, and Conquest.

Enter Somerset, with Drumme and Colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster.

Rich. Two of thy Name, both Dukes of Somerset,

Haue sold their Liues vnto the House of Yorke,

And thou shalt be the third, if this Sword hold.

Enter Clarence, with Drumme and Colours.

War. And loe, where George of Clarence sweeps along,

Of force enough to bid his Brother Battaille:

With whom, in vpright zeale to right, preuailes

More then the nature of a Brothers Loue.

Come Clarence, come: thou wilt, if Warwick call.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this meanes?

Looke here, I throw my infamie at thee:

I will not ruinate my Fathers House,

Who gaue his blood to lyme the stones together,

And set vp Lancaster. Why, trowest thou, Warwick,

That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, vnnatural,

To bend the fatal Instruments of Warre

Against

Against his Brother, and his lawfull King.

Perhaps thou wilt object my holy Oath:

To keepe that Oath, were more impietic,

Then Iephah, when he sacrific'd his Daughter.

I am so sorry for my Trespas made,

That to deserue well at my Brothers hands,

With resolution, wherefore I meet thee,

(As I will meet thee, if thou stirre abroad)

To plague thee, for thy foule mis-leading me.

And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I desie thee,

And to my Brother turne my blushing Cheekes,

Pardon me Edward, I will make amends:

And Richard, doe not frowne vpon my faults,

For I will henceforth be no more vnconstant.

Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belou'd,

Then if thou neuer hadst deseru'd our hate.

Rich. Welcome good Clarence, this is Brother-like.

War. Oh passing Traytor, periu'd and vnjust,

Edw. What Warwick,

Wilt thou leaue the Towne, and fight?

Or shall we beat the Stones about thine Eares?

War. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence:

I will away towards Barne presently,

And bid thee Battaille, Edward, if thou dar'st.

Edw. Yes Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way:

Lords to the field: Saint George, and Victorie. Exeunt.

March. Warwick and his companie followes.

Alarm, and Excursions. Enter Edward bringing forth Warwick wounded.

Edw. So, lye thou there: dye thou, and dye our feare,
For Warwick was a Bugge that fear'd vs all.

Now Mountague sit fast, I seeke for thee,
That Warwick's Bones may keepe thine companie.

Exit.

War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, friend, or foe,
And tell me who is Victor, Yorke, or Warwick?

Why aske I that? my mangled body shewes,
My blood, my want of strength, my sicke heart shewes,

That I must yeeld my body to the Earth,
And by my fall, the conquest to my foe.

Thus yeelds the Cedar to the Axes edge,
Whose Armes gaue shelter to the Princely Eagle,

Vnder whose shade the ramping Lyon slept,
Whose top-branch ouer-peer'd Ioues spreading Tree,

And kept low Shrubs from Winters pow'rfull Winde.
These Eyes, that now are dim'd with Deaths black Veyle,

For search the secret Treasons of the World:
The Wrinkles in my Browes, now fill'd with blood,

Were lik'ned oft to Kingly Sepulchers:
For who liu'd King, but I could digge his Graue?

And who durst smile, when Warwick bent his Brow?
Loe, now my Glory smear'd in dust and blood,

My Parkes, my Walkes, my Mannors that I had,
Euen now forsake me; and of all my Lands,

Is nothing left me, but my bodies length.
Why, what is Pompe, Rule, Reigne, but Earth and Dust?

And liue we how we can, yet dye we must.

Enter Oxford and Somerset.

Som. Ah Warwick, Warwick, wert thou as we are,
We might recouer all our Losse againe:

The Queene from France hath brought a puissant power.
Euen now we heard the newes: ah, could'st thou flye.

War. Why then I would not flye. Ah Mountague,
If thou be there, sweet Brother, take my Hand,

And with thy Lippes keepe in my Soule a while.
Thou lou'st me not: for, Brother, if thou didst,

Thy teares would wash this cold congealed blood,
That glewes my Lippes, and will not let me speake.

Come quickly Mountague, or I am dead.

Som. Ah Warwick, Mountague hath breath'd his last,
And to the latest gaspe, cry'd out for Warwick:

And said, Commend me to my valiant Brother.
And more he would haue said, and more he spoke,

Which founded like a Cannon in a Vault,
That might not be distinguisht: but at last,

I well might heare, deliuered with a groane,
Oh farewell Warwick.

War. Sweet rest his Soule:
Flye Lords, and saue your selues,

For Warwick bids you all farewell, to meet in Heauen.
Oxf. Away, away, to meet the Queenes great power.

Here they beare away his Body. Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph, with Richard, Clarence, and the rest.

King. Thus farre our fortune keepe an vpward course,
And we are grac'd with wreaths of Victorie:

But in the midst of this bright-shining Day,
I spy a black suspicious threatening Cloud,

That will encounter with our glorious Sunne,
Ere he attaine his easfull Westerne Bed:

I meane, my Lords, those powers that the Queene
Hath rays'd in Gallia, haue arriued our Coast,

And, as we heare, march on to fight with vs.

Clar. A little gale will soone disperse that Cloud,
And blow it to the Source from whence it came,

Thy very Beames will dry those Vapours vp,
For euery Cloud engenders not a Storme.

Rich. The Queene is valued thirtie thousand strong,
And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her:

If she haue time to breathe, be well assur'd
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

King. We are aduertis'd by our louing friends,
That they doe hold their course toward Tewksbury.

We haueing now the best at Barne field,
Will thither straight, for willingnesse rids way,

And as we march, our strength will be augmented:
In euery Countie as we goe along,

Strike vp the Drumme, cry courage, and away. Exeunt.

Flourish. March. Enter the Queene, young Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Souldiers.

Qu. Great Lords, wise men ne'r sit and waile their losse,
But chearely seeke how to redresse their harmes.

What though the Mast be now blowne ouer-board,
The Cable broke, the holding Anchor lost,

And halfe our Saylor's swallow'd in the flood?
Yet liues our Pilot still. Is't meet, that hee

Should leaue the Helme, and like a fearefull Lad,
With tearefull Eyes adde Water to the Sea,

And giue more strength to that which hath too much,
While in his moane, the Ship splits on the Rock,

Which Industrie and Courage might haue sau'd?
Ah what a shame, ah what a fault were this.

Say Warwick was our Anchor: what of that?

q 3

And

And Mountague our Top-Mast: what of him?
 Our slaughter'd friends, the Tackles: what of these?
 Why is not Oxford here, another Anchor?
 And Somerset, another goodly Mast?
 The friends of France our Shrowds and Tacklings?
 And though vnskilfull, why not Ned and I,
 For once allow'd the skilfull Pilots Charge?
 We will not from the Helme, to sit and weepe,
 But keepe our Course (though the rough Winde say no)
 From Shelves and Rocks, that threaten vs with Wrack,
 As good to chide the Waues, as speake them faire,
 And what is Edward, but a ruthlesse Sea?
 What Clarence, but a Quick-sand of Deceit?
 And Richard, but a rag'd fatall Rocke?
 All these, the Enemies to our poore Barke.
 Say you can swim, alas 'tis but a while:
 Tread on the Sand, why there you quickly sinke,
 Befrize the Rock, the Tyde will wash you off,
 Or else you famish, that's a three-fold Death.
 This speake I (Lords) to let you vnderstand,
 If case some one of you would flye from vs,
 That there's no hop'd-for Mercey with the Brothers,
 More then with ruthlesse Waues, with Sands and Rocks.
 Why courage then, what cannot be auoided,
 Twere childish weaknesse to lament, or feare.
Prince. Me thinkes a Woman of this valiant Spirit,
 Should, if a Coward heard her speake these words,
 Infuse his Breast with Magnanimitie,
 And make him, naked, foyle a man at Armes.
 I speake not this, as doubting any here:
 For did I but suspect a fearefull man,
 He should haue leaue to goe away betimes,
 Least in our need he might infect another,
 And make him of like spirit to himselfe.
 If any such be here, as God forbid,
 Let him depart, before we neede his helpe.
Oxf. Women and Children of so high a courage,
 And Warriors faint, why 'twere perpetuall shame.
 Oh braue young Prince: thy famous Grandfather
 Doth liue againe in thee; long may'st thou liue,
 To beare his Image, and renew his Glories.
Som. And he that will not fight for such a hope,
 Goe home to Bed, and like the Owle by day,
 If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at.
Qu. Thanks gentle Somerset, sweet Oxford thanks.
Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you Lords, for Edward is at hand,
 Readie to fight: therefore be resolute.
Oxf. I thought no lesse: it is his Policie,
 To haste thus fast, to finde vs vnprovid'd.
Som. But hee's decei'd, we are in readinesse.
Qu. This cheares my heart, to see your forwardnesse.
Oxf. Here pitch our Battail, hence we will not budge.

Flourish, and march. Enter Edward, Richard,
Clarence, and Souldiers.

Edw. Braue followers, yonder stands the thornie Wood,
 Which by the Heauens assistance, and your strength,
 Must by the Roots be hew'ne vp yet ere Night.
 I need not adde more fuell to your fire,
 For well I wot, ye blaze, to burne them out:
 Gue signall to the fight, and to it Lords.

Qu. Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen, what I should say,
 My teares gaine-say: for euery word I speake,
 Ye see I drinke the water of my eye.
 Therefore no more but this: Henry your Soueraigne
 Is Prisoner to the Foe, his State vsurp'd,
 His Realme a slaughter-house, his Subjects slaine,
 His Statutes cancell'd, and his Treasure spent:
 And yonder is the Wolfe, that makes this spoyle.
 You fight in Iustice: then in Gods Name, Lords,
 Be valiant, and giue signall to the fight.

Alarum, Retreat, Excursions.

Flourish. Enter Edward, Richard, Queene, Clarence,
Oxford, Somerset.

Edw. Now here a period of tumultuous Broyles, Away with Oxford to Hames Castle straight:
 For Somerset, off with his guiltie Head,
 Goe beare them hence, I will not heare them speake.
Oxf. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words.
Som. Nor I, but stoupe with patience to my fortune.

Qu. So part we sadly in this troublous World,
 To meet with Ioy in sweet Ierusalem.

Edw. Is Proclamation made, That who finds Edward,
 Shall haue a high Reward, and he his Life?

Rich. It is, and loe where youthfull Edward comes.

Enter the Prince.

Edw. Bring forth the Gallant, let vs heare him speake,
 What? can so young a Thorne begin to prick?
Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make,
 For bearing Armes, for stirring vp my Subjects,
 And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?

Prince. Speake like a Subject, prou'd ambitious York.
 Suppose that I am now my Fathers Mouth,
 Refigne thy Chayre, and where I stand, kneele thou,
 Whil'st I propose the selfe-same words to thee,
 Which (Traytor) thou would'st haue me answer to.

Qu. Ah, that thy Father had bene so resolu'd.

Rich. That you might still haue worn the Petticoat,
 And ne're haue stolne the Breech from Lancaster.

Prince. Let Asop fable in a Winters Night,
 His Curious Riddles sorts not with this place.

Rich. By Heauen, Brat, I'll plague ye for that word.

Qu. I, thou wast borne to be a plague to men.

Rich. For Gods sake, take away this Captiue Scold.

Prince. Nay, take away this scolding Crooke-backe, rather.

Edw. Peace wilfull Boy, or I will charme your tongue.

Clav. Vntutor'd Lad, thou art too malapert.

Prince. I know my dutie, you are all vnprofitfull:

Lasciuious Edward, and thou periur'd George,

And thou mis-shapen Dicke, I tell ye all,

I am your better, Traytors as ye are,

And thou vsurp'st my Fathers right and mine.

Edw. Take that, the likenesse of this Rayler here.

Rich. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agonie.

Clav. And ther's for twitting me with periurie.

Qu. Oh, kill me too!

Rich. Marry, and shall.

Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we haue done too much.

Rich. Why

Rich. Why should shee liue, to fill the World with words.

Edw. What? doth shee twowne? she means for her recouerie.

Rich. Clarence excuse me to the King my Brother:
 I'll hence to London on a serious matter.

Clav. What? what?

Rich. Tower, the Tower.

Qu. Oh Ned, sweet Ned, speake to thy Mother Boy.
 Can'st thou not speake? O Traitors, Murderers!

Edw. They that stabb'd Caesar, shed no blood at all:
 Did not offend, nor were not worthy Blame,

If this foule deed were by, to equal it.
 He was a Man; this (in respect) a Childe.

Edw. And Men, ne're spend their fury on a Childe.
 What's worse then Murderer, that I may name it?

Qu. No, no, my heart will burst, and if I speake,
 And I will speake, that so my heart may burst.

Edw. Butchers and Villaines, bloody Caniballes,
 How sweet a Plant haue you vntimely cropt:

You haue no children (Butchers) if you had,
 The thought of them would haue stirr'd vp remorse,

But if you euer chance to haue a Childe,
 Look in his youth to haue him so cut off.

Edw. As deathmen you haue rid this sweet yong Prince.
 King. Away with her, go beare her hence perforce.

Qu. Nay, neuer beare me hence, dispatch me heere:
 Here leath thy Sword, I'll pardon thee my death:

What wilt thou not? Then Clarence do it thou.
Clav. By heauen, I will not do thee so much ease.

Qu. Good Clarence do: sweet Clarence do thou do it.
Clav. Did'st thou not heare me sweare I would not do it?

Qu. I, but thou swest to forswear thy selfe.
 'Twas sin before, but now 'tis Charity.

What wilt thou not? Where is that diuels butcher Richard?
 Hard fauor'd Richard? Richard, where art thou?

Thou art not heere; Murder is thy Almes-deed:
 Petitioners for Blood, thou ne're put'st backe.

Edw. Away I say, I charge ye beare her hence,
Qu. So come to you, and yours, as to this Prince.

Edw. Where's Richard gone.
Clav. To London all in post, and as I guesse,

To make a bloody Supper in the Tower.
Edw. He's sodaine if a thing comes in his head.

Now march we hence, discharge the common fort
 With Pay and Thanks, and let's away to London,

And see our gentle Queene how well she fares,
 By this (I hope) she hath a Sonne for me.

Enter Henry the sixth, and Richard, with the Lieutenant on the Wall.

Rich. Good day, my Lord, what at your Booke so hard?

Hen. I my good Lord: my Lord I should say rather,
 'Tis sinne to flatter, Good was little better:

'Good Gloster, and good Deuill, were alike,
 And both preposterous: therefore, not Good Lord.

Rich. Sirra, leaue vs to our selues, we must conferre.
Hen. So flies the wreakelesse shepherd from y Wolfe:

So first the harmlesse Sheepe doth yeeld his Fleece,
 And next his Throate, vnto the Butchers Knife.

What Scene of death hath Rosins now to Acte?
Rich. Suspition alwayes haunts the guilty minde,

The Theefe doth feare each bush an Officer,
Hen. The Bird that hath bin limed in a bush,

With trembling wings misdoubteth euery bush;
 And I the haplesse Male to one sweet Bird,

Haue now the fatall Obiect in my eye,
 Where my poore yong was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.

Rich. Why what a peeuish Foole was that of Crete,
 That taught his Sonne the office of a Fowle,

And yet for all his wings, the Foole was drown'd.
Hen. I Dedalus, my poore Boy Icarus,

Thy Father Minos, that deni'd our course,
 The Sunne that fear'd the wings of my sweet Boy,

Thy Brother Edward, and thy Selfe, the Sea:
 Whose enuious Gulfe did swallow vp his life:

Ah, kill me with thy Weapon, not with words,
 My brest can better brooke thy Daggers point,

Then can my eares that Tragick History:
 But wherefore dost thou come? Is't for my Life? T say.

Rich. Think'st thou I am an Executioner?

Hen. A Persecutor I am sure thou art,
 If murdering Innocents be Executing,

Why then thou art an Executioner.
Rich. Thy Son I kill'd for his presumption.

Hen. Hadst thou bin kill'd, when first y didst presume,
 Thou had'st not liu'd to kill a Sonne of mine:

And thus I prophesie, that many a thousand,
 Which now mistrust no parcell of my feare,

And many an old mans sight, and many a Widdowes,
 And many an Orphans water-standing eye,

Men for their Sonnes, Wives for their Husbonds,
 Orphans, for their Parents timeles death,

Shall rue the houre that euer thou wast borne.
 The Owle shriek'd at thy birth, an euill signe,

The Night-Crow cry'd, aboding lucklesse time;
 Dogs howl'd, and hideous Tempest shooke down Trees:

The Raven rook'd her on the Chimnies top,
 And charr'ing Pies in dismall Discords sung:

Thy Mother felt more then a Mothers paine,
 And yet brought forth lesse then a Mothers hope,

To wit, an indigested and deformed lumpie,
 Not like the fruit of such a goodly Tree.

Teeth had'st thou in thy head, when thou wast borne,
 To signifie, thou can'st to bite the world:

And if the rest be true, which I haue heard,
 Thou can'st

Rich. He heare no more:
 Dye Prophet in thy speech,

For this (amongst the rest) was I ordain'd.
Hen. I, and for much more slaughter after this,

O God forgiue my finnes, and pardon thee.
Rich. What? will the aspiring blood of Lancaster

Sinke in the ground? I thought it would haue mounted.
 See how my sword weepes for the poore Kings death.

O may such purple teares be alway shed
 From those that wish the downfall of our house.

If any sparke of Life be yet remaining,
 Downe, downe to hell, and say I sent thee thither.

I that haue neyther pittie, loue, nor feare,
 Indeed 'tis true that Henrie told me of:

For I haue often heard my Mother say,
 I came into the world with my Legges forward.

Had I not reason (thinke ye) to make hafty,
 And seeke their Ruine, that vsurp'd our Right?

The Midwife wonder'd, and the Women cri'd
 O Iesus bleffe vs, he is borne with teeth,

And

And so I was, which plainly signified;
That I should snarle, and bite, and play the dogge:
Then since the Heauens haue shap'd my Body so;
Let Hell make crook'd my Minde to answer it.
I haue no Brother, I am like no Brother:
And this word [Loue] which Gray-beards call Diuine,
Be resident in men like one another,
And not in me: I am my selfe alone.
Clarence beware, thou keep'st me from the Light,
But I will sort a pitchy day for thee:
For I will buzze abroad such Prophetes,
That Edward shall be fearefull of his life,
And then to purge his feare, he be thy death.
King Henry, and the Prince his Son are gone,
Clarence thy turne is next, and then the rest,
Counting my selfe but bad, till I be best.
He throw thy body in another roome,
And Triumph Henry, in thy day of Doome.

Exit.

Flourish. Enter King, Queene, Clarence, Richard, Hastings, Nurse, and Attendants.

King. Once more we sit in Englands Royall Throne,
Re-purchac'd with the Blood of Enemies:
What valiant Foe-men, like to Autumnes Corne,
Haue we mow'd downe in tops of all their pride?
Three Dukes of Somerset, threefold Renowne,
For hardy and vndoubted Champions:
Two Cliffords, as the Father and the Sonne,
And two Northumberlands: two brauer men,
Ne're spurr'd their Couriers at the Trumpets sound.
With them, the two braue Beares, Warwick & Montague,
That in their Chaines fetter'd the Kingly Lyon,
And made the Forrest tremble when they roard.

Thus haue we swept Suspicion from our Seate,
And made our Footstool of Security.
Come hither Bessie, and let me kisse my Boy:
Yong Ned, for thee, thine Vnckles, and my selfe,
Haue in our Armors watcht the Winters night,
Went all afoot in Summers scalding heate,
That thou might'st repose the Crowne in peace,
And of our Labours thou shalt reape the gaine.

Rich. He blast his Haruest, if your head were laid,
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.

This shoulder was ordain'd so thicke, to heaue,
And heaue it shall some waight, or breake my backe,
Worke thou the way, and that shalt execute.

King. Clarence and Gloster, loue my louely Queene,
And kis your Princely Nephew Brothers both.

Cl. The duty that I owe vnto your Maiesty,
I Seale vpon the lips of this sweet Babe.

Cl. Thanke Noble Clarence, worthy brother thanks.
Rich. And that I loue the tree fro whence y sprang't:

Witnesse the louing kisse I giue the Fruite,
To say the truth, so Iudas kist his master,
And cried all haile, when as he meant all harme.

King. Now am I seated as my soule delights,
Hauiug my Countries peace, and Brothers loues.

Cl. What will your Grace haue done with Margaret,
Reynard her Father, to the King of France:
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Ierusalem,
And hither haue they sent it for her ransome.

King. Away with her, and wast her hence to France:
And now what rests, but that we spend the time
With stateli Triumphes, mirthfull Comicke shewes,
Such as befits the pleasure of the Court.
Sound Drums and Trumpets, farwell fowre annoy,
For heere I hope begins our lasting ioy.

Exeunt omnes

FINIS.

The Tragedy of Richard the Third: with the Landing of Earle Richmond, and the Battell at Bosworth Field.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloster, solus.

Now is the Winter of our Discontent,
Made glorious Summer by this Son of Yorke:
And all the clouds that low'r'd vpon our house
In the deepe bosome of the Ocean buried.

Now are our browes bound with Victorious Wreathes,
Our bruised armes hung vp for Monuments;
Our sterne Alarums chang'd to merry Meetings;
Our dreadfull Marches, to delightfull Measures.
Grim-visag'd Warre, hath smooth'd his wrinkled Front:
And now, in stead of mounting Barbed Steeds,
To fight the Soules of fearfull Aduersaries,
He capers nimble in a Ladies Chamber,

To the lasciuious pleasing of a Lute.
But I, that am not shap'd for sportiue trickes,
Nor made to court an amorous Looking-glasse:
I, that am Rudely stamp'd, and want loues Maiesty,
To strut before a wonton ambling Nymph:
I, that am curtail'd of this faire Proportion,
Cheated of Feature by dissembling Nature,
Deform'd, vn-finish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing World, scarce half made vp,
And that so lamely and vn-fashionable,
That dogges bark at me, as I halt by them.
Why I (in this weake piping time of Peace)
Haue no delight to passe away the time,
Vnlesse to see my Shadow in the Sunne,
And descant on mine owne Deformity.

And therefore, since I cannot proue a Louer,
To entertaine these faire well spoken dayes,
I am determin'd to proue a Villaine,
And hate the idle pleasures of these dayes.
Plots haue I laid, inductions dangerous,
By drunken Prophetes, Libels, and Dreames,
To set my Brother Clarence and the King
In deadly hate, the one against the other:
And if King Edward be as true and iust,
As I am Subtle, False, and Treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd vp:
About a Prophecie, which sayes that G,
Of Edwards heyres the murderess shall be.
Dne thoughts downe to my soule, here Clarence comes.

Enter Clarence, and Brakenbury guarded.
Brother, good day: What meanes this armed guard

That waites vpon your Grace?

Cl. His Maiesty tending my persons safety,
Hath appointed this Conduet, to conuey me to th' Tower.

Rich. Vpon what cause?

Cl. Because my name is George.

Rich. Alacke my Lord, that fault is none of yours:
He should for that commit your Godfathers.
O belike, his Maiesty hath some intent,
That you should be new Christned in the Tower.
But what's the matter Clarence, may I know?

Cl. Yea Richard, when I know: but I protest
As yet I do not: But as I can learne,
He hearkens after Prophetes and Dreames,
And from the Crosse-row pluckes the letter G:
And sayes, a Wizard told him, that by G,
His issue disinherited should be.
And for my name of George begins with G,
It followes in his thought, that I am he.
These (as I learne) and such like toyces as these,
Hath mou'd his Highnesse to commit me now.

Rich. Why this it is, when men are rul'd by Women:
'Tis not the King that sends you to the Tower,
My Lady Grey his Wife, Clarence 'tis shee,
That tempts him to this harsh Extremity.
Was it not shee, and that good man of Worship,
Anthony Woodville her Brother there,
That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower?
From whence this present day he is deliuered?

We are not safe Clarence, we are not safe.
Cl. By heauen, I thinke there is no man secure
But the Queenes Kindred, and night-walking Heralds,
That trudge betwixt the King, and Mistris Shere.
Heard you not what an humble Suppliant
Lord Hastings was, for her deliuey?

Rich. Humbly complaining to her Deitie,
Got my Lord Chamberlaine his libertie.
He tell you what, I thinke it is our way,
If we will keepe in fauour with the King,
To be her men, and weare her Liurey.
The iealous ore-worne Widdow, and her selfe,
Since that our Brother dub'd them Gentlewomen,
Are mighty Gossips in our Monarchy.

Bra. I beseech your Graces both to pardon me,
His Maiesty hath straightly giuen in charge,
That no man shall haue priuate Conference
(Of what degree soeuer) with your Brother.

Rich.

Rich. Euen so, and please your Worshipp Brakenbury, You may partake of any thing we say : We speake no Treason man ; We say the King Is wife and vertuous, and his Noble Queene Well strooke in yeares, faire, and not iealous. We say, that Shores Wife hath a pretty Foot, A cherry Lip, a bonny Eye, a paising pleasing tongue : And that the Queenes Kindred are made gentle Folkes. How say you sir? can you deny all this?

Bra. With this (my Lord) my selfe haue nought to doo.

Rich. Naught to do with Mistris Shore? I tell thee Fellow, he that doth naught with her (Excepting one) were best to do it secretly alone.

Bra. What one, my Lord?

Rich. Her Husband Knatie, wouldst thou betray me?

Bra. I do beseech your Grace

To pardon me, and withall forbear

Your Conference with the Noble Duke.

Cl. We know thy charge Brakenbury, and wil obey.

Rich. We are the Queenes abiects, and must obey.

Brother farewell, I will vnto the King,

And whatsoe're you will imploy me in,

Were it to call King Edwards Widdow, Sister,

I will performe it to infranchise you.

Meane time, this deepe disgrace in Brotherhood,

Touche me deeper then you can imagine.

Cl. I know it pleaseth neither of vs well.

Rich. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long,

I will deliver you, or else lye for you :

Meane time, haue patience.

Cl. I must perforce : Farewell.

Exit Cl.

Rich. Go treade the path that thou shalt ne're return :

Simple plaine Clarence, I do loue thee so,

That I will shortly send thy Soule to Heaven,

If Heaven will take the present at our hands.

But who comes heere? the new deliuered Hastings?

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day vnto my gracious Lord.

Rich. As much vnto my good Lord Chamberlaine :

Well are you welcome to this open Ayre,

How hath your Lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience (Noble Lord) as prisoners must :

But I shall liue (my Lord) to giue them thanks

That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Rich. No doubt, no doubt, and so shall Clarence too,

For they that were your Enemies, are his,

And haue preuail'd as much on him, as you,

Hast. More pittie, that the Eagles should be mew'd,

Whiles Kites and Buzards play at liberty.

Rich. What newes abroad?

Hast. No newes so bad abroad, as this at home :

The King is sickly, weake, and melancholly,

And his Physitians feare him mightily.

Rich. Now by S. Iohn, that Newes is bad indeed.

O he hath kept an euill Diet long,

And ouer-much consum'd his Royall Person :

'Tis very greuous to be thought vpon.

Where is he, in his bed?

Hast. He is.

Rich. Go you before, and I will follow you.

Exit Hastings.

He cannot liue I hope, and must not dye,

Till George be pack'd with post-horse vp to Heaven.

He in to vrge his hatred more to Clarence,
With Lyes well steel'd with weighty Arguments,
And if I faile not in my deepe intent,
Clarence hath not another day to liue :
Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leaue the world for me to busle in.
For then, He marry Warwicks yongest daughter,
What though I kill'd her Husband, and her Father,
The readiest way to make the Wench amends,
Is to become her Husband, and her Father :
The which will I, not all so much for loue,
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her, which I must reach vnto :
But yet I run before my horse to Market :
Clarence still breathes, Edward still liues and raignes,
When they are gone, then must I count my gaines. Exit

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Coarse of Henrie the sixth with Halberds to guard, Lady Anne being the Mourner.

Anne. Set downe, set downe your honourable load,
If Honor may be shrowded in a Herse;
Whil'st I a-while obsequiously lament
Th'vntimely fall of Vertuous Lancaster.
Poore key-cold Figure of a holy King,
Pale Ashes of the House of Lancaster;
Thou bloodlesse Remnant of that Royall Blood,
Be it lawfull that I inuocate thy Ghost,
To heare the Lamentations of poore Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughtered Sonne,
Stab'd by the selfesame hand that made these wounds.
Loe, in these windowes that let forth thy life,
I powre the helpelesse Balme of my poore eyes,
O cursed be the hand that made these holes :
Cursed the Heart, that had the heart to do it :
Cursed the Blood, that let this blood from hence :
More direfull hap betide that hated Wretch
That makes vs wretched by the death of thee,
Then I can wish to Wolves, to Spiders, Toades,
Or any creeping venom'd thing that liues.
If euer he haue Childe, Abortiue be it,
Prodigious, and vntimely brought to light,
Whose vgly and vnnaturall Aspect
May fright the hopefull Mother at the view,
And that be Heyre to his vnhappinesse.
If euer he haue Wife, let her be made
More miserable by the death of him,
Then I am made by my young Lord, and thee.
Come now towards Chertsey with your holy Lode,
Taken from Paules, to be interred there.
And still as you are weary of this waight,
Rest you, whiles I lament King Henries Coarse.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloster.

Rich. Stay you that beare the Coarse, & set it downe.

An. What blacke Magitian coniures vp this Fiend,

To stop deuoted charitable deeds?

Rich. Villaines set downe the Coarse, or by S. Paul,

He make a Coarse of him that disobeyes.

Gen. My Lord stand backe, and let the Coffin passe.

Rich. Vnmanner'd Dogge,

Stand'st thou when I commaund :

Advance thy Halbert higher then my brest,

Or by S. Paul Ile strike thee to my Foote,

And spurne vpon thee Begger for thy boldnesse.

Anne. What do you tremble? are you all affraid?

Alas, I blame you not, for you are Mortall,

And Mortall eyes cannot endure the Diuell.

Auant thou dreadfull minister of Hell;

Thou had'st but power ouer his Mortall body,

His Soule thou canst not haue: Therefore be gone.

Rich. Sweet Saint, for Charity, be not so curst.

An. Foule Diuell,

For Gods sake hence, and trouble vs not,

For thou hast made the happy earth thy Hell :

Fill'd it with cursing cries, and deepe exclames :

If thou delight to view thy heynous deeds,

Behold this patterne of thy Butcheries.

Oh Gentlemen, see, see dead Henries wounds,

Open their congeal'd mouthes, and bleed afresh.

Blissh, blissh, thou lump of fowle Deformitie:

For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood

From cold and empty Veines where no blood dwels.

Thy Deeds inhumane and vnnaturall,

Prouokes this Deluge most vnnaturall.

O God! which this Blood mad'st, reuenge his death:

O Earth! which this Blood drink'st, reuenge his death:

Either Hea'v'n with Lightning strike the murth'rer dead :

Or Earth gape open wide, and eate him quicke,

As thou dost swallow vp this good Kings blood,

Which his Hell-gouern'd arme hath butchered.

Rich. Lady, you know no Rules of Charity,

Which renders good for bad, Blessings for Curses.

An. Villaine, thou know'st nor law of God nor Man,

No Beast so fierce, but knowes some touch of pittie.

Rich. But I know none, and therefore am no Beast.

An. O wonderfull, when diuels tell the truth!

Rich. More wonderfull, when Angels are so angry :

Vouchsafe (diuine perfection of a Woman)

Of these supposed Crimes, to giue me leaue

By circumstance, but to acquit my selfe.

An. Vouchsafe (defus'd infection of man)

Of these knowne euils, but to giue me leaue

By circumstance, to curse thy cursed Selfe.

Rich. Fairer then tongue can name thee, let me haue

Some patient seysure to excuse my selfe.

An. Fouler then heart can thinke thee,

Thou canst make no excuse currant,

But to hang thy selfe.

Rich. By such dispaire, I should accuse my selfe.

An. And by dispairing shalt thou stand excus'd,

For doing worthy Vengeance on thy selfe,

That did'st vnworthy slaughter vpon others.

Rich. Say that I slew them not.

An. Then say they were not slaine :

But dead they are, and diuellish slave by thee.

Rich. I did not kill your Husband,

An. Why then he is aliue.

Rich. Nay, he is dead, and slaine by Edwards hands.

An. In thy foule throat thou Ly'st,

Queene Margaret saw

Thy murd'rous Faulchion smoaking in his blood :

The which, thou once did'st bend against her brest,

But that thy Brothers beate aside the point.

Rich. I was prouoked by her stand'rous tongue,

That laid their guilt, vpon my guiltlesse Shoulders.

An. Thou was't prouoked by thy bloody minde,

That neuer dream'd it ought but Butcheries:

Did'st thou not kill this King?

Rich. I graunt ye.

An. Do'st grant me Hedge-hogge,

Then God graunt me too

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deede;

O he was gentle, milde, and vertuous.

Rich. The better for the King of heaven that hath him.

An. He is in heaven, where thou shalt neuer come.

Rich. Let him thanke me, that holpe to send him thi-

ther :

For he was fitter for that place then earth.

An. And thou visit for any place, but hell.

Rich. Yes one place else, if you will heare me name it.

An. Some dungeon.

Rich. Your Bed-chamber.

An. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou lyest.

Rich. So will it Madam, till I lye with you.

An. I hope so.

Rich. I know so. But gentle Lady Anne,

To leaue this keene encounter of our wittes,

And fall something into a slower method.

Is not the caufer of the timelesse deaths

Of these Plantagenets, Henrie and Edward,

As blamefull as the Executioner.

An. Thou was't the cause, and most accurst effect.

Rich. Your beauty was the cause of that effect :

Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleepe,

To vndertake the death of all the world,

So I might liue one houre in your sweet bosome.

An. If I thought that, I tell thee Homicide,

These Nails should rent that beauty from my Cheekes.

Rich. These eyes could not endure y beauties wrack,

You should not blemish it, if I stood by;

As all the world is cheared by the Sunne,

So I by that : It is my day, my life.

An. Blacke night ore-shade thy day, & death thy life.

Rich. Curse not thy selfe faire Creature,

Thou art both.

An. I would I were, to be reueng'd on thee.

Rich. It is a quarrell most vnnaturall,

To be reueng'd on him that loueth thee.

An. It is a quarrell iust and reasonable,

To be reueng'd on him that kill'd my Husband.

Rich. He that bereft the Lady of thy Husband,

Did it to helpe thee to a better Husband.

An. His better doth not breath vpon the earth.

Rich. He liues, that loues thee better then he could.

An. Name him.

Rich. Plantagenet.

An. Why that was he.

Rich. The selfesame name, but one of better Nature.

An. Where is he?

Rich. Heere :

Spits at him.

Why dost thou spit at me?

An. Would it were mortall poyson, for thy sake!

Rich. Neuer came poyson from so sweet a place.

An. Neuer hung poyson on a fowler Toade.

Out of my sight, thou dost infect mine eyes.

Rich. Thine eyes (sweet Lady) haue infected mine.

An. Would they were Basiliskes, to strike thee dead.

Rich. I would they were, that I might dye at once:

For now they kill me with a liuing death.

Those eyes of thine, from mine haue drawne salt Teares;

For

Sham'd their Aspects with store of childish drops:
These eyes, which neuer shed remorsefull teare,
No, when my Father Yorke, and Edward wept,
To heare the pittious moane that Rutland made
When black-fac'd Clifford shooke his sword at him.
Nor when thy warlike Father like a Childe,
Told the sad storie of my Fathers death,
And twenty times, made pause to sob and weep:
That all the standers by had wet their cheekes
Like Trees bedash'd with raine. In that sad time,
My manly eyes did scorne an humble teare:
And what these sorrowes could not thence exhale,
Thy Beauty hath, and made them blinde with weeping.
I neuer sued to Friend, nor Enemy:
My Tongue could neuer learne sweet smoothing word.
But now thy Beauty is propos'd my Fee,
My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speake.

She looks scornfully at him.

Teach not thy lip such Scorne; for it was made
For kissing. Lady, not for such contempt.
If thy reuengefull heart cannot forgieue,
Loe heere I lend thee this sharpe-pointed Sword,
Which if thou please to hide in this true brest,
And let the Soule forth that adareth thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
And humbly begge the death vpon my knee.

He layes his brest open she offers at with his sword.

Nay do not pause: For I did kill King Henrie,
But 'twas thy Beauty that prouoked me.
Nay now dispatch: 'Twas I that stabb'd yong Edward,
But 'twas thy Heauenly face that set me on.

She falls the Sword.

Take vp the Sword againe, or take vp me.

An. Arise Dissembler, though I wish thy death,
I will not be thy Executioner.

Rich. Then bid me kill my selfe, and I will do it.

An. I haue already.

Rich. That was in thy rage:

Speake it againe, and euen with the word,
This hand, which for thy loue, did kill thy Loue,
Shall for thy loue, kill a farre truer Loue,
To both their deaths shalt thou be accessary.

An. I would I knew thy heart.

Rich. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.

An. I feare me, both are false.

Rich. Then neuer Man was true.

An. Well, well, put vp your Sword.

Rich. Say then my Peace is made.

An. That shalt thou know heereafter.

Rich. But shall I liue in hope.

An. All men I hope liue so.

Vouchsafe to weare this Ring.

Rich. Looke how my Ring incompasseth thy Finger,

Euen so thy Brest incloseth my poore heart:

Weare both of them, for both of them are thine.

And if thy poore deuoted Seruant may

But beg one fauour at thy gracious hand,

Thou dost confirme his happinesse for euer.

An. What is it?

Rich. That it may please you leaue these sad designs,

To him that hath most cause to be a Mourner,

And presently repaire to Crosbie House:

Where (after I haue solemnly interr'd

At Chertsey Monast'ry this Noble King,

And wet his Graue with my Repentant Teares)

I will with all expedient duty see you,

For diuers vnknowne Reasons, I beseech you,
Grant me this Boon.

An. With all my heart, and much it ioyes me too,
To see you are become so penitent.

Tressel and Barkley, go along with me.

Rich. Bid me farewell.

An. 'Tis more then you deserue:
But since you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I haue saide farewell already.

Gent. Towards Chertsey, Noble Lord?

Rich. No: to White Friars, there attend my coming.

Exit two with Am.

Was euer woman in this humour woo'd?

Was euer woman in this humour wonne?

Ile haue her, but I will not keepe her long.

What? I that kill'd her Husband, and his Father,

To take her in her hearts extreamest hate,

With curses in her mouth, Teares in her eyes,

The bleeding witnesse of my hatred by,

Haueing God, her Conscience, and these bars against me,

And I, no Friends to backe my suite withall,

But the plaine Diuell, and dissembling lookes?

And yet to winne her? All the world to nothing.

Hah!

Hath she forgot already that braue Prince;

Edward, her Lord, whom I (some three monthes since)

Stab'd in my angry mood, at Tewkesbury?

A sweeter, and a louelier Gentleman,

Fram'd in the prodigality of Nature:

Yong, Valiant, Wise, and (no doubt) right Royal,

The spacious World cannot againe afford:

And will she yet abate her eyes on me,

That crop't the Golden prime of this sweet Prince,

And made her Widdow to a wofull Bed?

On me, whose All not equals Edwards Moitie?

On me, that halts, and am misshapen thus?

My Dukedome, to a Beggerly denier!

I do mistake my person all this while:

Vpon my life she findes (although I cannot)

My selfe to be a maru'llous proper man.

Ile be at Charges for a Looking-glasse,

And entertaine a score or two of Taylors,

To study fashions to adorne my body:

Since I am crept in fauour with my selfe,

I will maintaine it with some little cost.

But first lie turne yon Fellow in his Graue,

And then returne lamenting to my Loue.

Shine out faire Sunne, till I haue bought a glasse,

That I may see my Shadow as I passe.

Scena Tertia.

Enter the Queene Mother, Lord Rivers, and Lord Gray.

Riv. Haue patience Madam, ther's no doubt his Maiesty
Will soone recouer his accustom'd health.

Gray. In that you brooke it ill, it makes him worle,
Therefore for Gods sake entertaine good comfort,

And cheere his Grace with quicke and merry eyes?

Qu. If he were dead, what would betide on me?

Gray.

If he were dead, what would betide on me?

Gray. No other harme, but losse of such a Lord.

Qu. The losse of such a Lord, includes all harmes.

Gray. The Heauens haue blest you with a goodly Son,

To be your Comforter, when he is gone.

Qu. Ah! he is yong; and his minority

Is put vnto the trust of Richard Gloucester,

A man that loues not me, nor none of you.

T. Ju. Is it concluded he shall be Protector?

Qu. It is determin'd, not concluded yet.

But so it must be, if the King miscarry.

Enter Buckingham and Derby.

Gray. Here comes the Lord of Buckingham & Derby.

Buc. Good time of day vnto your Royall Grace.

Der. God make your Maiesty ioyful, as you haue bin

Qu. The Countesse Richmond, good my Lord of Derby.

To your good prayer, will scarcely say, Amen.

Yet Derby, notwithstanding shee's your wife,

And loues not me, be you good Lord aslur'd,

I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Der. I do beseech you, either not beleuee

The enuious slanders of her false Accusers:

Or if she be accus'd on true report,

Bear with her weaknesse, which I thinke proceeds

From wayward sicknesse, and no grounded malice.

Qu. Saw you the King to day my Lord of Derby?

Der. But now the Duke of Buckingham and I,

Are come from visiting his Maiesty.

Qu. What likelyhood of his amendment Lords?

Buc. Madam good hope, his Grace speaks chearfully.

Qu. God grant him health, did you confer with him?

Buc. I Madam, he desires to make atonement;

Betweene the Duke of Gloucester, and your Brothers,

And betweene them, and my Lord Chamberlaine,

And sent to warne them to his Royall presence.

Qu. Would all were well, but that will neuer be,

I feare our happinesse is at the height.

Enter Richard.

Rich. They do me wrong, and I will not indure it,

Who is it that complaines vnto the King,

That I (forsooth) am sterne, and loue them not?

By holy Paul, they loue his Grace but lightly,

That fill his eares with such dissentious Rumors,

Because I cannot flatter, and looke faire,

Smile in mens faces, smooth, deceiue, and cogge,

Ducke with French nods, and Apish curtesie,

I must be held a rancorous Enemy.

Cannot a plaine man liue, and thinke no harme,

But thus his simple truth must be abus'd,

With fliken, slye, insinuating Iackes?

Gray. To who in all this presence speaks your Grace?

Rich. To thee, that hast nor Honesty, nor Grace:

When haue I iniur'd thee? When done thee wrong?

Or thee? or thee? or any of your Faction?

A plague vpon you all. His Royall Grace

(Whom God preferne better then you would wish)

Cannot be quier scarce a breathing while,

But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.

Qu. Brother of Gloucester, you mistake the matter:

The King on his owne Royall disposition,

(And not prouok'd by any Sutor else)

Ayming (belike) at your interioir hatred,

That in your outward action shewes it selfe

Against my Children, Brothers, and my Selfe,

Makes him to send, that he may learne the ground.

Rich. I cannot tell, the world is growne so bad,

That Wrens make prey, where Eagles dare not pearch.

Since euerie Iacke became a Gentleman,

There's many a gentle person made a Iacke.

Qu. Come, come, we know your meaning Brother

You enuy my aduancement, and my friends: (Gloucester)

God grant we neuer may haue neede of you.

Rich. Meane time, God grants that I haue neede of you.

Our Brother is imprison'd by your meanes,

My selfe disgrac'd, and the Nobilitie

Held in contempt, while great Promotions

Are daily giuen to enuible those

That scarce some two dayes since were worth a Noble.

Qu. By him that rais'd me to this carefull height,

From that contented hap which I inioy'd,

I neuer did incense his Maiestie

Against the Duke of Clarence, but haue bin

An earnest aduocate to plead for him.

My Lord you do me shamefull iniurie,

Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Rich. You may deny that you were not the meane

Of my Lord Hastings late imprisonment.

Riv. She may my Lord, for

Rich. She may Lord Rivers, why who knowes not for?

She may do more fir then denying that:

She may helpe you to many faire preferments,

And then deny her ayding hand therein,

And lay those Honors on your high desert.

What may she not, she may, I marry may she.

Riv. What marry may she?

Rich. What marrie may she? Marrie with a King,

A Batcheller, and a handsome stripling too,

I wis your Grandam had a worser match.

Qu. My Lord of Gloucester, I haue too long borne

Your blunt vpbraidings, and your bitter scoffes:

By heauen, I will acquaint his Maiestie

Of those grosse taunts that oft I haue endur'd.

I had rather be a Countrie seruant maide

Then a great Queene, with this condition,

To be so baited, scorn'd, and stormed at,

Small ioy haue I in being Englands Queene.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. And lesned be that small, God I beseech him,

Thy honor, state, and seare, is due to me.

Rich. What? threat you me with telling of the King?

I will auouch't in presence of the King:

I dare aduenture to be sent to th' Towre.

'Tis time to speake,

My paines are quite forgot.

Margaret. Out Diuell,

I do remember them too well:

Thou kill'd'st my Husband Henrie in the Towre;

And Edward my poore Son, at Tewkesburie.

Rich. Ere you were Queene,

I, or your Husband King:

I was a packe-horse in his great affaires:

A weeder out of his proud Aduerfaries,

A liberall rewarder of his Friends,

To royalize his blood, I spent mine owne.

Margaret. I and much better blood

Then his, or thine.

Rich.

Rich. In all which time, you and your Husband Grey Were factious, for the House of Launcester; And Rivers, so were you: Was not your Husband, In Margaret's Battaille, at Saint Albons, slaine? Let me put in your mindes, if you forget What you haue beene ere this, and what you are: Withall, what I haue beene, and what I am.

Q. M. A murth'rous Villaine, and so still thou art.

Rich. Poore Clarence did forsake his Father Warwicke, I, and forswore himselfe (which Iesu pardon.)

Q. M. Which God reuenge.

Rich. To fight on Edwards partie, for the Crowne, And for his meede, poore Lord, he is mew'd vp: I would to God my heart were Flint, like Edwards, Or Edwards soft and pittifull, like mine: I am too childish foolish for this World.

Q. M. High thee to Hell for shame, & leaue this World Thou Cacodemon, there thy Kingdome is.

Rich. My Lord of Gloster: In those busie dayes, Which here you vrg'e, to proue vs Enemies, We follow'd then our Lord, our Soueraigne King, So should we you, if you should be our King.

Rich. If I should be? I had rather be a Pedler: Farre be it from my heart, the thought thereof.

Q. M. As little ioy (my Lord) as you suppose You should enioy, were you this Countie's King, As little ioy you may suppose in me, That I enioy, being the Queene thereof.

Q. M. A little ioy enioyes the Queene thereof, For I am free, and altogether ioylesse: I can no longer hold me patient.

Hear me, you wrangling Pyrates, that fall out, In sharing that which you haue pill'd from me: Which off you trembles not, that lookes on me? If not, that I am Queene, you bow like Subiects; Yet that by you depos'd, you quake like Rebels. Ah gentle Villaine, doe not turne away. (sighs)

Rich. Foule wrinkled Witch, what mak'st thou in my

Q. M. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd, That will I make, before I let thee goe.

Rich. Wert thou not banished, on paine of death?

Q. M. I was; but I doe find more paine in banishment, Then death can yeeld me here, by my abode. A Husband and a Sonne thou ow'st to me, And thou a Kingdome; all of you, allegiance: This Sorrow that I haue, by right is yours, And all the Pleasures you vsurpe, are mine.

Rich. The Curse my Noble Father layd on thee, When thou didst Crown his Warlike Brows with Paper, And with thy scornes drew'st Rivers from his eyes, And then to dry them, gau'st the Duke a Clowt, Steep'd in the faultlesse blood of prettie Rutland: His Curfes then, from bitterness of Soule, Denounc'd against thee, are all false vpon thee: And God, not we, hath plagu'd thy bloody deed.

Q. M. So iust is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O, 'twas the foulest deed to slay that Babe, And the most mercilesse, that ere was heard of.

Rich. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.

Dor. No man but prophesied reuenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it.

Q. M. What were you snarling all before I came, Ready to catch each other by the throat, And turne you all your hatred now on me?

Did Yorkes dread Curse preuaile so much with Heauen, That Henries death, my louely Edwards death,

Their Kingdomes losse, my wofull Banishment, Should all but answer for that peeuish Brat? Can Curfes pierce the Clouds, and enter Heauen? Why then giue way dull Clouds to my quick Curfes. Though not by Warre, by Surfet dye your King, As ours by Murther, to make him a King.

Edward thy Sonne, that now is Prince of Wales, For Edward our Sonne, that was Prince of Wales, Dye in his youth, by like vntimely violence. Thy selfe a Queene, for me that was a Queene, Out-lie thy glory, like my wretched selfe: Long may'st thou liue, to wayle thy Childrens death, And see another, as I see thee now.

Deck'd in thy Rights, as thou art stall'd in mine. Long dye thy happie dayes, before thy death, And after many lengthned howres of griefe, Dye neyther Mother, Wife, nor Englands Queene. Rivers and Dorset, you were standers by, And so wast thou, Lord Hastings, when my Sonne Was stab'd with bloody Daggers: God, I pray him, That none of you may liue his naturall age, But by some vnlook'd accident cut off.

Rich. Haue done thy Charme, & hateful wither'd Hagges.

Q. M. And leaue our thee? stay Dog, for I shall heare me. If Heauen haue any grievous plague in store, Exceeding those that I can wish vpon thee, O let them keepe it, till thy finnes be ripe, And then hurle downe their indignation

On thee, the troubler of the poore Worlds peace, The Worme of Conscience still begnaw thy Soule, Thy Friends suspect for Traytors while thou liu'st, And take deepe Traytors for thy dearest Friends: No sleepe close vp that deadly Eye of thine, Vnlesse it be while some tormenting Dreame Affrights thee with a Hell of ougly Deuills. Thou eluish mark'd, abortiue rooting Hogge, Thou that wast seal'd in thy Natiuitie The slave of Nature, and the Sonne of Hell: Thou slander of thy heauie Mothers Wombe, Thou loathed Issue of thy Fathers Loynes, Thou Ragge of Honor, thou detested--

Rich. Margaret.

Q. M. Richard. Rich. Ha.

Q. M. I call thee nor.

Rich. I cry thee merie then: for I did thinke, That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names, Q. M. Why so I did, but look'd for no reply, Oh let me make the Period to my Curse.

Rich. 'Tis done by me, and ends in Margaret.

Q. M. Thus haue you breath'd your Curse against your selfe.

Q. M. Poore painted Queen, vain flourish of my fortune, Why strew'st thou Sugar on that Bottel'd Spider, Whose deadly Web ensnareth thee about?

Foole, foole, thou whet'st a Knife to kill thy selfe: The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me, To helpe thee curse this poysonous Bunch-backt Toade.

Hast. False boding Woman, end thy frantick Curse, Least to thy harme, thou moue our patience.

Q. M. Foule shame vpon you, you haue all mou'd mine.

Ri. Were you well seru'd, you would be taught your duty.

Q. M. To serue me well, you all should do me duty.

Teach me to be your Queene, and you my Subiects:

O serue me well, and teach your selues that duty.

Dor. Dispute not with her, shee is lunaticke.

Q. M. Peace Master Marquesse, you are malapert, Your fire-new stampe of Honor is scarce currant.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madam, his Maiesty doth call for you, And for your Grace, and yours my gracious Lord. Q. M. Catesby I comie, Lords will you go with mee. Rich. We wait vpon your Grace.

Exeunt all but Gloster.

Rich. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawle. The secret Mischiefes that I set abroad, I lay vnto the greeuous charge of others. Clarence, who I indeede haue cast in darknesse, I do beweepe to many simple Gullies, Namely to Derby, Hastings, Buckingham, And tell them 'tis the Queene, and her Allies, That stirre the King against the Duke my Brother, Now they beleene it, and withall whet me To be reueng'd on Rivers, Dorset, Grey. But then I sigh, and with a peece of Scripture, Tell them that God bids vs do good for euill: And thus I cloath my naked Villanie With odde old ends, stolne forth of holy Writ, And seeme a Saint, when most I play the deuill.

Enter two murderers.

But soft, heere come my Executioners, How now my hardy stout resolu'd Mates, Are you now going to dispatch this thing?

Vil. We are my Lord, and come to haue the Warrant, That we may be admitted where he is.

Rich. Well thought vpon, I haue it heere about me: When you haue done, repaire to Croby place; But first be sodaine in the execution, Withall obdurate, do not heare him pleade; For Clarence is well spoken, and perhappes May moue your hearts to pittie, if you marke him.

Vil. Tut, tut, my Lord, we will not stand to prate, Talkers are no good dooers, be assur'd: We go to vse our hands, and not our tongues.

Rich. Your eyes drop Mill-stones, when Fooles eyes fall Teares:

I like you Lads, about your businesse straight. Go, go, dispatch.

Vil. We will my Noble Lord.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Clarence and Keeper.

Keep. Why lookes your Grace so heauily to day.

Cl. O, I haue past a miserable night, So full of fearefull Dreames, of vgly sights, That as I am a Christian faithfull man, I would not spend another such a night Though 'twere to buy a world of happy daies: So full of dismall terror was the time.

Keep. What was your dream my Lord, I pray you tel me

Cl. Me thought that I had broken from the Tower, And was embark'd to croffe to Burgundy, And in my company my Brother Gloster, Who from my Cabin tempted me to walke, Vpon the Hatches: There we look'd toward England, And cited vp a thousand heavy times,

r 2

During

During the warres of Yorke and Lancaster
That had befall vs. As we pac'd along
Vpon the giddy footing of the Hatches,
Me thought that Glouster stumbled, and in falling
Strooke me (that thought to slay him) ouer-boord,
Into the tumbling billowes of the maine.
O Lord, me thought what paine it was to drowne,
What dreadfull noise of water in mine eares,
What sights of vgly death within mine eyes.
Me thoughts, I saw a thousand fearfull wrackes:
A thousand men that Fishes gnaw'd vpon:
Wedges of Gold, great Anchors, heapes of Pearle,
Inestimable Stones, vnawled Jewels,
All scattred in the bottome of the Sea,
Some lay in dead-mens Sculles, and in the holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in scorne of eyes) reflecting Gemmes,
That woo'd the slimy bottome of the deepe,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scattred by.

Keep. Had you such leysure in the time of death
To gaze vpon these secrets of the deepe?

Cl. Me thought I had, and often did I strue
To yeeld the Ghost: but still the enuious Flood
Stop'd in my soule, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast, and wand'ring ayre:
But smother'd it within my panting bulke,
Who almost burst, to belch it in the Sea.

Keep. Awak'd you not in this fore Agony?

Cl. No, no, my Dreame was lengthen'd after life.

O then, began the Tempest to my Soule:
I past (me thought) the Melancholly Flood,
With that sowre Ferry-man which Poets write of,
Vnto the Kingdome of perpetuall Night.
The first that there did greet my Stranger-soule,
Was my great Father-in-Law, renowned Warwicke,
Who spake aloud: What scourge for Periurie,
Can this darke Monarchy afford false Clarence?
And so he vanish'd. Then came wand'ring by,
A Shadow like an Angell, with bright hayre
Dabb'd in blood, and he shriek'd out aloud
Clarence is come, false, fleeting, periur'd Clarence,
That stab'd me in the field by Tewkesbury:
Seize on him Furies, take him vnto Torment.
With that (me thought) a Legion of foule Fiends
Inuiron'd me, and howled in mine eares
Such hideous cries, that with the very Noise,
I (trembling) wak'd, and for a season after,
Could not beleue, but that I was in Hell.
Such terrible Impression made my Dreame.

Keep. No maruell Lord, though it affrighted you,
I am affraid (me thinkes) to heare you tell it.

Cl. Ah Keeper, Keeper, I haue done these things
(That now giue euidence against my Soule)
For Edwards sake, and see how he requits mee.
O God! if my deepe prayres cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aueng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath in me alone:
O spare my guiltlesse Wife, and my poore children.
Keeper, I prythee sit by me a-while,
My Soule is heavy, and I faine would sleepe.

Keep. I will my Lord, God giue your Grace good rest.

Enter Brakenbury the Lieutenant.

Bra. Sorrow breakes Seasons, and reposing honours,
Makes the Night Morning, and the Noon-tide night:

Princes haue but their Titles for their Glories,
An outward Honor, for an inward Toyle,
And for vnsele Imaginations
They often feele a world of restlesse Cares:
So that betwene their Titles, and low Name,
There's nothing differs, but the outward fame.

Enter two Murderers.

1. Mur. Ho, who's heere?

Bra. What wouldst thou Fellow? And how cam'st thou hither.

2. Mur. I would speak with Clarence, and I came ther on my Legges.

Bra. What so breefe?

1. 'Tis better (Sir) then to be tedious:

Let him see our Commission, and talke no more.

Bra. I am in this, commanded to deliuer
The Noble Duke of Clarence to your hands.

I will not reason what is meant heereby,
Because I will be guiltlesse from the meaning.

There lies the Duke asleepe, and there the Keyes.

He to the King, and signifie to him,

That thus I haue resign'd to you my charge.

1. You may sir, 'tis a point of wisdom: Ex.

Far you well.

2. What, shall we stab him as he sleepes.

1. No: hee'l say 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2. Why he shall neuer wake, vntill the great Iudge-ment day.

1. Why then hee'l say, we stab'd him sleeping.

2. The vrging of that word Iudgement, hath bred kinde of remorse in me.

1. What art thou affraid?

2. Not to kill him, hauing a Warrant,

But to be damn'd for killing him, from the which

No Warrant can defend me.

1. I thought thou hadst bin resolute.

2. So I am, to let him liue.

1. Hee backe to the Duke of Glouster, and tell him so.

2. Nay, I prythee stay a little:

I hope this passionate humor of mine, will change,

It was wont to hold me but while one tells twenty.

1. How do'st thou feele thy selfe now?

2. Some certaine dregges of conscience are yet within mee.

1. Remember our Reward, when the deed's done.

2. Come, hee dies: I had forgot the Reward.

1. Where's thy conscience now.

2. O, in the Duke of Glousters purse.

1. When hee opens his purse to giue vs our Reward, thy Conscience flies out.

2. 'Tis no matter, let it goe: There's few or none will entertaine it.

1. What if it come to thee againe?

2. Hee nor meddle with it, it makes a man a Coward:

A man cannot steale, but it accuseth him: A man cannot

Sweare, but it Checkes him: A man cannot lye with his

Neighbours Wife, but it detects him. 'Tis a blushing shamefac'd spirit, that mutinies in a mans bosome: It fills a man full of Obstacles. It made me once restore a Purse of Gold that (by chance) I found: It beggars any man that keepes it: It is turn'd out of Townes and Cit-ties for a dangerous thing, and euery man that means to liue well, endeouours to trust to himselfe, and liue without it.

1. 'Tis

1. 'Tis euen now at my elbow, perswading me not to kill the Duke.

2. Take the diuell in thy minde, and beleue him not:

He would iaspinate with thee but to make thee sigh.

1. I am strong fram'd, he cannot preuaile with me.

2. Spoke like a tall man, that respects thy reputation.

Come, shall we fall to worke?

1. Take him on the Costard, with the hiltes of thy Sword, and then throw him into the Malmesey-Butte in the next roome.

2. O excellent deuice; and make a sop of him.

1. Soft, he wakes.

2. Strike.

1. No, wee'l reason with him.

Cl. Where art thou Keeper? Giue me a cup of wine.

2. You shall haue Wine enough my Lord anon.

Cl. In Gods name, what art thou?

1. A man, as you are.

Cl. But not as I am Royall.

1. Nor you as we are, Loyall.

Cl. Thy voice is Thunder, but thy looks are humble.

1. My voice is now the Kings, my looks mine owne.

Cl. How darkly, and how deadly dost thou speake?

Your eyes do menace me: why looke you pale?

Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

2. To, to, to

Cl. To murder me?

Both. I, I.

Cl. You fearfully haue the hearts to tell me so,

And therefore cannot haue the hearts to do it.

Wherein my Friends haue I offended you?

1. Offended vs you haue not, but the King.

Cl. I shall be reconcil'd to him againe.

2. Neuer my Lord, therefore prepare to dye.

Cl. Are you drawne forth among a world of men
To slay the innocent? What is my offence?

Where is the Euidence that doth accuse me?

What lawfull Quest haue giuen their Verdict vp Vnto the frowning Iudge? Or who pronounc'd

The bitter sentence of poore Clarence death,

Before I be couit by course of Law?

To threaten me with death, is most vnlawfull.

I charge you, as you hope for any goodnesse,

That you depart, and lay no hands on me:

The deed you vndertake is damnable.

1. What we will do, we do vpon command.

2. And he that hath commanded, is our King.

Cl. Erroneous Vassals, the great King of Kings

Hath in the Table of his Law commanded

That thou shalt do no murder. Will you then

Spurne at his Edict, and fulfill a Mans?

Take heed: for he holds Vengeance in his hand,

To hurle vpon their heads that breake his Law.

2. And that same Vengeance doth he hurle on thee,

For false Forswearing, and for murder too:

Thou didst receiue the Sacrament, to fight

In quarrell of the House of Lancaster.

1. And like a Traitor to the name of God,

Didst breake that Vow, and with thy treacherous blade,

Vnrip't the Bowels of thy Soueraignes Sonne.

2. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.

1. How canst thou vrg Gods dreadfull Law to vs,

When thou hast broke it in such deepe degree?

Cl. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deepe?

For Edwards sake, for my Brother, for his sake.

He sends you not to murder me for this:

For in that sinne, he is as deepe as I.

If God will be auenged for the deed,

O know you yet, he doth it publicly,

Take not the quarrell from his powrefull arme:

He needs no indirect, or lawlesse course,

To cut off those that haue offended him.

1. Who made thee then a bloody minister,

When gallant springing braue Plantagenet,

That Princely Nouice was stricke dead by thee?

Cl. My Brothers loue, the Diuell, and my Rage.

1. Thy Brothers Loue, our Duty, and thy Faults,

Prouoke vs hither now, to slaughter thee.

Cl. If you do loue my Brother, hate not me:

I am his Brother, and I loue him well.

If you are hyr'd for meed, go backe againe,

And I will send you to my Brother Glouster:

Who shall reward you better for my life,

Then Edwards will for tydings of my death.

2. You are deceiu'd,

Your Brother Glouster hates you.

Cl. Oh no, he loues me, and he holds me deere:

Go you to him from me.

1. Ifs we will.

Cl. Tell him, when that our Princely Father Yorke,

Blest his three Sonnes with his victorious Arme,

He little thought of this diuided Friendship:

Bid Glouster thinke on this, and he will weepe,

1. I Millstones, as he lessened vs to weepe.

Cl. O do not slander him, for he is kinde,

1. Right, as Snow in Haruest:

Come, you deceiue your selfe,

'Tis he that sends vs to destroy you heere.

Cl. It cannot be, for he bewept my Fortune,

And hugg'd me in his armes, and swore with fobs,

That he would labour my deliuey.

1. Why so he doth, when he deliueys you

From this earths thraldome, to the ioyes of heauen.

2. Make peace with God, for you must die my Lord.

Cl. Haue you that holy feeling in your soules,

To counsaile me to make my peace with God,

And are you yet to your owne soules so blinde,

That you will warre with God, by murdering me.

O sirs consider, they that set you on

To do this deepe, will hate you for the deeds.

2. What shall we do?

Cl. Relent, and saue your soules:

Which of you, if you were a Princes Sonne,

Being pent from Liberty, as I am now,

If two such murderers as your selues came to you,

Would not intreat for life, as you would begge

Were you in my distresse.

1. Relent? no: 'Tis cowardly and womanish.

Cl. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, diuellish:

My Friend, I spy some pittie in thy looks:

O, if thine eye be not a Flatterer,

Come thou on my side, and intreate for mee,

A begging Prince, what begger pitties not.

2. Look behind you, my Lord.

1. Take that, and that, if all this will not do, Stabs him.

He drowne you in the Malmesey-But within. Exit.

2. A bloody deed, and desperately dispatch:

How faine (like Pilate) would I wash my hands

Of this most greuous murder. Enter 1. Murderer

1. How now? what mean'st thou that thou help'st me not? By Heauen the Duke shall know how slacke you haue bene.

1. 3

2. 1

2. Mur. I would he knew that I had (au'd his brother,
Take thou the Fee, and tell him what I say,
For I repent me that the Duke is slain.

Exit.

1. Mur. So do not I: go Coward as thou art.
Well, Ile go hide the body in some hole,
Till that the Duke giue order for his buriall:
And when I haue my meede, I will away,
For this will out, and then I must not stay.

Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Flourish.

Enter the King sicke, the Queene, Lord Marquesse Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Catesby,
Buckingham, Woodvill.

King. Why so: now haue I done a good daies work.
You Peeres, continue this vnited League:
I, euery day expect an Embassage
From my Redeemer, to redeeme me hence.
And more to peace my soule shall part to heauen,
Since I haue made my Friends at peace on earth.
Dorset and Rivers, take each others hand,
Dissemble not your hatred, Swear your loue.

King. By heauen, my soule is purg'd from grudging hate
And with my hand I seale my true hearts Loue.

Hast. So thrise I, as I truly sweare the like.

King. Take heed you dally not before your King,
Lest he that is the supreme King of Kings
Confound your hidden falshood, and award
Either of you to be the others end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I sweare perfect loue.

Ri. And I, as I loue Hastings with my heart,

King. Madam, your selfe is not exempt from this:
Nor you Sonne Dorset, Buckingham nor you;
You haue bene factious one against the other.
Wife, loue Lord Hastings, let him kisse your hand,
And what you do, do it vnfeignedly.

Qu. There Hastings, I will neuer more remember
Our former hatred, to thrise I, and mine.

King. Dorset, embrace him:

Hastings, loue Lord Marquesse.

Dor. This interchange of loue, I heere protest
Vpon my part, shall be inuolable.

Hast. And so sweare I.

King. Now Princely Buckingham, seale y this league
With thy embracements to my wiues Allies,
And make me happy in your vnity.

Buc. When euer Buckingham doth turne his hate
Vpon your Grace, but with all dutious loue,
Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most loue,
When I haue most need to imploy a Friend,
And most assured that he is a Friend,
Deepe, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be lie vnto me: This do I begge of heauen,
When I am cold in loue, to you, or yours.

Embrace

King. A pleasing Cordiall, Princely Buckingham,
Is this thy Vow, vnto my sickely heart:

There wanteth now our Brother Gloster heere,
To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buc. And in good time,

Heere comes Sir Richard Ratcliffe, and the Duke.

Enter Ratcliffe, and Gloster.

Rich. Good morrow to my Soueraigne King & Queen
And Princely Peeres, a happy time of day.

King. Happy indeed, as we haue spent the day:
Gloster, we haue done deeds of Charity,
Made peace of enmity, faire loue of hate,
Betweene these swelling wrong incensed Peeres.

Rich. A blessed labour my most Soueraigne Lord,
Among this Princely heape, if any heere
By false intelligence, or wrong surmise
Hold me a Foe: If I vnwillingly, or in my rage,
Haue ought committed that is hardly borne,
To any in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me to his Friendly peace:

'Tis death to me to be at enmitie:
I hate it, and desire all good mens loue,

First Madam, I intreate true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dutious seruice:

Of you my Noble Cousin Buckingham,
If euer any grudge were lodg'd betweene vs.

Of you and you, Lord Rivers and of Dorset,
That all without desert haue frown'd on me:

Of you Lord Woodvill, and Lord Scales of you,
Dukes, Earles, Lords, Gentlemen, indeed of all,
I do not know that Englishman aliue,
With whom my soule is any iot at oddes,
More then the Infant that is borne to night:

I thanke my God for my Humility.

Qu. A holy day shall this be kept heereafter:
I would to God all strifes were well compounded,
My Soueraigne Lord, I do beseech your Highnesse
To take our Brother Clarence to your Grace.

Rich. Why Madam, haue I offered loue for this,
To be so flowted in this Royall presence?

Who knows not that the gentle Duke is dead? They
You do him iniurie to scorne his Coarse. all start.

King. Who knows not he is dead?
Who knows he is?

Qu. All-seeing heauen, what a world is this?
Buc. Look I so pale Lord Dorset, as the rest?

Dor. I my good Lord, and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forsooke his cheekes.

King. Is Clarence dead? The Order was reuerst.
Rich. But he (poore man) by your first order dyed,
And that a winged Mercurie did beare:
Some tardie Cripple bare the Countermand,
That came too lagge to see him buried.

God grant, that some lesse Noble, and lesse Loyall,
Neerer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,
Deferue not worse then wretched Clarence did,
And yet go currant from Suspicion.

Enter Earle of Derby.

Der. A boone my Soueraigne for my seruice done.
King. I prethee peace, my soule is full of sorrow.

Der. I will not rise, vnlesse your Highnesse heare me.
King. Then say at once, what is it thou requestst.

Der. The forfeit (Soueraigne) of my seruants life,
Who slew to day a Riotous Gentleman,
Lately attendant on the Duke of Norfolk.

King. Haue I a tongue to doome my Brothers death?
And shall that tongue giue pardon to a slaue?

My Brother kill'd no man, his fault was Thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.

Who

Who sued to me for him? Who (in my wrath)
Kneel'd and my feet, and bid me be aduis'd?

Who spoke of Brother-hood? who spoke of loue?
Who told me how the poore soule did forsake

The mighty Warwicke, and did fight for me?
Who told me in the field at Tewkesbury,

When Oxford had me downe, he rescued me:
And said deare Brother liue, and be a King?

Who told me, when we both lay in the Field,
Frozen (almost) to death, how he did lap me

Even in his Garments, and did giue himselfe
(All thin and naked) to the numbe cold night?

All this from my Remembrance, brutish wrath
Sinfully pluckt, and not a man of you

Had so much grace to put it in my minde.
But when your Carters, or your wayting Vassalls

Haue done a drunken Slaughter, and defac'd
The precious Image of our deere Redeemer,

You straight are on your knees for Pardon, pardon,
And I (vnjustly too) must grant it you.

But for my Brother, not a man would speake,
Nor I (vngracious) speake vnto my selfe

For him poore Soule. The proudest of you all,
Haue bin beholding to him in his life:

Yet none of you, would once begge for his life.
O God! I feare thy iustice will take hold

On me, and you; and mine, and yours for this.
Come Hastings, helpe me to my Closet.

Ah poore Clarence. Exeunt some with K. & Queen.
Rich. This is the fruits of frailnes: Marke you not,

How that the guilty Kindred of the Queene
Look'd pale, when they did heare of Clarence death.

O! they did vrge it still vnto the King,
God will reuenge it. Come Lords will you go,

To comfort Edward with our company. Exeunt.
Buc. We wait vpon your Grace.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the old Duchesse of Yorke, with the two children of Clarence.

Edw. Good Grandam tell vs, is our Father dead?

Duch. No Boy.

Daugh. Why do weepe so oft? And beate your Brest?

And cry, O Clarence, my vnhappy Sonne.

Boy. Why do you looke on vs, and shake your head,

And call vs Orphans, Wretches, Castaways,

If that our Noble Father were aliue?

Dur. My pretty Cousins, you mistake me both,

I do lament the sicknesse of the King,

As loath to lose him, not your Fathers death:

It were lost sorrow to waile one that's lost.

Boy. Then you conclude, (my Grandam) he is dead:

The King mine Vnckle is too blame for it.

God will reuenge it, whom I will importune

With earnest prayers, all to that effect.

Daugh. And so will I.

Dur. Peace children peace, the King doth loue you wel.

Incapable, and shallow Innocents,

You cannot guesse who caus'd your Fathers death.

Boy. Grandam we can: for my good Vnckle Gloster

Told me, the King prouok'd to it by the Queene, Denis'd impeachments to imprison him;

And when my Vnckle told me so, he wept,

And pittied me, and kindly kist my cheek:

Bad me rely on him, as on my Father,

And he would loue me deere as a childe.

Dur. Ah! that Deceit should steale such gentle shape,

And with a vertuous Vizor hide deepe vice.

He is my sonne, I, and therein my shame,

Yet from my dugges, he drew not this deceit.

Boy. Thinke you my Vnckle did dissemble Grandam?

Dur. I Boy.

Boy. I cannot thinke it. Hearke, what noyse is this?

Enter the Queene with her haire about her ears,
Rivers & Dorset after her.

Qu. Ah! who shall hinder me to waile and weepe?
To chide my Fortune, and torment my Selfe.

Ile ioyne with blacke dispaire against my Soule,

And to my selfe, become an enemy.

Dur. What meanes this Scene of rude impatience?

Qu. To make an act of Tragick violence.

Edward my Lord, thy Sonne, our King is dead.

Why grow the Branches, when the Roote is gone?

Why wither not the leaues that want their sap?

If you will liue, Lament: if dye, be breefe,

That our swift-winged Soules may catch the Kings,

Or like obedient Subiects follow him,

To his new Kingdome of nere-changing night.

Dur. Ah so much interest haue in thy sorrow,

As I had Title in thy Noble Husband:

I haue bewept a worthy Husbands death,

And liu'd with looking on his Images:

But now two Mirrors of his Princely semblance,

Are crack'd in pieces, by malignant death,

And I for comfort, haue but one false Glasse,

That grieues me, when I see my shame in him.

Thou art a Widdow: yet thou art a Mother,

And hast the comfort of thy Children left,

But death hath snatch'd my Husband from mine Armes,

And pluckt two Crutches from my feeble hands,

Clarence, and Edward. O, what cause haue I,

(Thine being but a moiety of my moane)

To ouer-go thy woes, and drowne thy cries.

Boy. Ah Aunt! you wept not for our Fathers death:

How can we ayde you with our Kindred teares?

Daugh. Our fatherlesse distresse was left vnmoan'd,

Your widdow-dolour, likewise be vnwept.

Qu. Giue me no helpe in Lamentation,

I am not barren to bring forth complaints:

All Springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,

That I being govern'd by the waterie Moone,

May send forth plenteous teares to drowne the World.

Ah, for my Husband, for my deere Lord Edward.

Chil. Ah for our Father, for our deere Lord Clarence.

Dur. Alas for both, both mine Edward and Clarence.

Qu. What stay had I but Edward, and hee's gone?

Chil. What stay had we but Clarence? and he's gone.

Dur. What stayes had I, but they? and they are gone.

Qu. Was neuer widdow had so deere a losse.

Chil. Were neuer Orphans had so deere a losse.

Dur. Was neuer Mother had so deere a losse.

Alas! I am the Mother of these Greefes,

Their woes are parcell'd, mine is generall.

She for an Edward weepes, and so do I:

I for a Clarence weepes, so doth not thee:
These Babes for Clarence weepe, so do not they.
Alas! you three, on me threefold distrest:
Power all your teares, I am your sorrowes Nurse,
And I will pamper it with Lamentation.

Dor. Comfort deere Mother, God is much displeas'd,
That you take with vthankfulnesse his doing.
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd vngratefull,
With dull vnwillingnesse to repay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent:
Much more to be thus opposite with heauen,
For it requires the Royall debt it lent you.

Rivers. Madam, bethinke you like a carefull Mother
Of the young Prince your sonne: send straight for him,
Let him be Crown'd, in him your comfort liues.
Drowne desperate sorrow in dead Edwards graue,
And plant your ioyes in liuing Edwards Throne.

Enter Richard, Buckingham, Derby, Hastings, and Ratcliffe.

Rich. Sister haue comfort, all of vs haue cause
To waile the dimming of our shining Starre:
But none can helpe our harmes by wayling them.
Madam, my Mother, I do cry you mercie,
I did not see your Grace. Humbly on my knee,
I craue your Blessing.

Dur. God bleste thee, and put meeknes in thy breast,
Loue Charity, Obedience, and true Dutie.

Rich. Amen, and make me die a good old man,
That is the butt-end of a Mothers blessing;
I maruell that her Grace did leaue it out.

Buc. You cloudy-Princes, & hart-sorowing-Peeres,
That beare this heauie mutuall load of Moane,
Now cheere each other, in each others Loue:
Though we haue spent our Haruest of this King,
We are to reape the Haruest of his Sonne.
The broken rancour of your high-swolne hates,
But lately splinter'd, knit, and ioyn'd together,
Must gently be prefer'd, cherisht, and kept:
Me seemeth good, that with some little Traine,
Forthwith from Ludlow, the young Prince be set
Hither to London, to be crown'd our King.

Rivers. Why with some little Traine,
My Lord of Buckingham?

Buc. Marrie my Lord, least by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of Malice should breake out,
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is greene, and yet vagouern'd.
Where every Horse beares his commanding Reine,
And may direct his course as please himselfe,
As well the feare of harme, as harme apparant,
In my opinion, ought to be preuented.

Rich. Hope the King made peace with all of vs,
And the compact is firme, and true in me.

Riv. And so in me, and so (I thinke) in all.
Yet since it is but greene, it should be put
To no apparant likely-hood of breach,
Which haply by much company might be vrg'd:
Therefore I say with Noble Buckingham,
That it is meete so few should fetch the Prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Rich. Then be it so, and go we to determine
Who they shall be that strait shall poste to London.
Madam, and you my Sister, will you go
To giue your censures in this businesse. Exeunt.

Manet Buckingham, and Richard.
Buc. My Lord, who euer iournies to the Prince,
For God sake let not vs two stay at home:
For by the way, Ile fort occasion,

As Index to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the Queenes proud Kindred from the Prince.

Rich. My other selfe, my Counsailes Consiistory,
My Oracle, My Prophet, my deere Cofin,
I, as a childe, will go by thy direction,
Toward London then, for wee'l not stay behinde. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter one Citizen at one doore, and another at the other.

1. Cit. Good morrow Neighbour, whether away so fast?

2. Cit. I promise you, I fearfully know my selfe:
Heare you the newes abroad?

1. Yes, that the King is dead.

2. Ill newes byrlady, seldome comes the better:
I feare, I feare, 'twill proue a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3. Neighbours, God speed.

1. Giue you good morrow sir.

2. Doth the newes hold of good king Edwards death?

1. I sir, it is too true, God helpe the while.

3. Then Masters looke to see a troublous world.

1. No, no, by Gods good grace, his Son shall reigne.

3. Wee to that Land that's gouern'd by a Childe.

2. In him there is a hope of Government,

Which in his nonage, counsell vnder him,
And in his full and ripened yeares, himselfe
No doubt shall then, and till then gouerne well.

1. So stood the State, when Henry the sixt
Was crown'd in Paris, but at nine months old.

3. Stood the State so? No, no, good friends, God wot
For then this Land was famously enrich'd
With politike graue Counsell; then the King
Had vertuous Vnkles to protect his Grace.

1. Why so hath this, both by his Father and Mother.
3. Better it were they all came by his Father:
Or by his Father there were none at all:

For emulation, who shall now be neere,
Will touch vs all too neere, if God preuent not.
O full of danger is the Duke of Glouster,
And the Queenes Sons, and Brothers, haught and proud:
And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly Land, might solace as before.

1. Come, come, we feare the worst: all will be well.

3. When Clouds are seen, wifemen put on their clothes;

When great leaues fall, then Winter is at hand;

When the Sun sets, who doth not looke for night?

Vntimely stormes, makes men expect a Dearth:

All may be well; but if God sort it so,

'Tis more then we deserue, or I expect.

2. Truly, the hearts of men are full of feare:

You cannot reason (almost) with a man,

That lookes not heauily, and full of dread.

3. Before the dayes of Change, still is it so,

By a diuine instinct, mens mindes mistrust

Enfuing

Perfuing danger: as by prooffe we see
The Water swell before a boyst'rous storme:
But leaue it all to God. Whither away?

2. Marry we were sent for to the Iustices.

3. And so was I: Ile beare you company. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Arch-bishop, young Yorke, the Queene, and the Dutchesse.

Arch. Last night I heard they lay at Stony Stratford,
And at Northampton they do rest to night:
Tomorrow, or next day, they will be heere.

Dur. I long with all my heart to see the Prince:

I hope he is much growne since last I saw him.

Qu. But I heare no, they say my sonne of Yorke

Has almost ouertane him in his growth.

Yorke. I Mother, but I would not haue it so.

Dur. Why my good Cofin, it is good to grow.

Yor. Grandam, one night as we did sit at Supper,

My Vnkle Rivers talk'd how I did grow

More then my Brother. I quoth my Vnkle Glouster,

Small Herbes haue grace, great Weeds do grow apace.

And since, me thinks I would not grow so fast,

Because sweet Flowres are slow, and Weeds make hast.

Dur. Good faith, good faith, the saying did not hold

In him that did obiect the same to thee.

He was the wretched'st thing when he was young.

So long a growing, and so leysurely,

That if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Yor. And so no doubt he is, my gracious Madam.

Dur. I hope he is, but yet let Mothers doubt.

Yor. Now by my troth, if I had beene remembred,

I could haue giuen my Vnkles Grace, a flout,

To touch his growth, neerer then he toucht mine.

Dur. How my young Yorke,

I prythee let me heare it.

Yor. Marry (they say) my Vnkle grew so fast,

That he could gnaw a crust at two houres old,

Twasse full two yeares ere I could get a tooth.

Grandam, this would haue beene a byting Iest.

Dur. I prythee pretty Yorke, who told thee this?

Yor. Grandam, his Nurse.

Dur. His Nurse? why she was dead, ere y<sup>e</sup> wast borne.

Yor. If 'twere not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Qu. A parlous Boy: go too, you are too shrew'd.

Dur. Good Madam, be not angry with the Childe.

Qu. Pitchers haue eares.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Heere comes a Messenger: What Newes?

Mes. Such newes my Lord, as greues me to report.

Qu. How doth the Prince?

Mes. Well Madam, and in health.

Dur. What is thy Newes?

Mes. Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey,

Are sent to Pomfret, and with them,

Sir Thomas Vaughan, Prisoners.

Dur. Who hath committed them?

Mes. The mighty Dukes, Glouster and Buckingham.

Arch. For what offence?

Mes. The summe of all I can, I haue disclos'd:

Why, for for what, the Nobles were committed,

Is all vnknowne to me, my gracious Lord.

Qu. Aye me! I see the ruine of my House:

The Tyger now hath seiz'd the gentle Hinde,

Insulting Tiranny begins to lute

Vpon the innocent and awelesse Throne:

Welcome Destruction, Blood, and Massacre,

I see (as in a Map) the end of all.

Dur. Accur'd, and vnquiet wrangling dayes,

How many of you haue mine eyes beheld?

My Husband lost his life, to get the Crowne,

And often vp and downe my sonnes were tost

For me to ioy, and weepe, their gaine and losse,

And being seated, and Domesticke broyles

Cleane ouer-blowne, themselves the Conquerors,

Make warre vpon themselves, Brother to Brother;

Blood to blood, selfe against selfe: O preposterous

And franticke outrage, end thy damned spleene,

Or let me dye, to looke on earth no more.

Qu. Come, come my Boy, we will to Sanctuary,

Madam, farwell.

Dur. Stay, I will go with you.

Qu. You haue no cause.

Arch. My gracious Lady go,

And thether beare your Treasure and your Goodes,

For my part, Ile resigne vnto your Grace

The Seale I keepe, and so betide to me,

As well I tender you, and all of yours.

Go, Ile conduct you to the Sanctuary. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

The Trumpets sound.

Enter young Prince, the Dukes of Gloucester, and Buckingham, Lord Cardmall, with others.

Buc. Welcome sweete Prince to London,

To your Chamber.

Rich. Welcome deere Cofin, my thoughts Soueraign

The wearie way hath made you Melancholly.

Prin. No Vnkle, but our crosses on the way,

Haue made it tedious, wearisome, and heauie.

I want more Vnkles heere to welcome me.

Rich. Sweet Prince, the vntainted vertue of your yeers

Hath not yet diu'd into the Worlds deceit:

No more can you distinguish of a man,

Then of his outward shew, which God he knowes,

Seldome or neuer iumpeth with the heart.

Those Vnkles which you want, were dangerous:

Your Grace attended to their Sugred words,

But look'd not on the poyson of their hearts:

God keepe you from them, and from such false Friends.

Prin. God keepe me from false Friends,

But they were none.

Rich. My Lord, the Maior of London comes to greet you.

Enter Lord Maior.

Lo. Maior. God bleffe your Grace, with health and happie dayes.

Prin. I thanke you, good my Lord, and thank you all:

I thought my Mother, and my Brother Torke,
Would long ere this, haue met vs on the way.
Fie, what a Slug is Hastings, that he comes not
To tell vs, whether they will come, or no.

Enter Lord Hastings.

Buck. And in good time, heere comes the sweating
Lord.

Prince. Welcome, my Lord: what, will our Mother
come?

Hast. On what occasion God he knowes, not I;
The Queene your Mother, and your Brother Torke,
Haue taken Sanctuarie: The tender Prince
Would faine haue come with me, to meet your Grace,
But by his Mother was perforce withheld.

Buck. Fie, what an indirect and peeuish course
Is this of hers? Lord Cardinall, will your Grace
Perswade the Queene, to send the Duke of Yorke
Vnto his Princely Brother presently?
If she denie, Lord Hastings goe with him,
And from her iugalous Armes pluck him perforce.

Card. My Lord of Buckingham, if my weake Oratorie
Can from his Mother winne the Duke of Yorke,
Anon expect him here: but if he be obdurate
To milde entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy Priuiledge
Of blessed Sanctuarie: not for all this Land,
Would I be guiltie of so great a sinne.

Buck. You are too fencelesse obstinate, my Lord,
Too ceremonious, and traditionall.
Weigh it but with the grossenesse of this Age,
You breake not Sanctuarie, in seizing him:
The benefit thereof is alwayes granted
To those, whose dealings haue deseru'd the place,
And those who haue the wit to claime the place:
This Prince hath neyther claym'd it, nor deseru'd it,
And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot haue it.
Then taking him from thence, that is not there,
You breake no Priuiledge, nor Charter there:
Oft haue I heard of Sanctuarie men,
But Sanctuarie children, ne're till now.

Card. My Lord, you shall o're-rule my mind for once.
Come on, Lord Hastings, will you goe with me?

Hast. I goe, my Lord. Exit Cardinall and Hastings.

Prince. Good Lords, make all the speedie hast you may.
Say, Vnckle Gloucester, if our Brother come,
Where shall we sojourne, till our Coronation?

Glo. Where it think't best vnto your Royall selfe.
If I may counsaile you, some day or two
Your Highnesse shall repose you at the Tower:
Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit
For your best health, and recreation.

Prince. I doe not like the Tower, of any place:
Did Julius Caesar build that place, my Lord?

Buck. He did, my gracious Lord, begin that place,
Which since, succeeding Ages haue re-edify'd.

Prince. Is it vpon record? or else reported
Successiue from age to age, he built it?

Buck. Vpon record, my gracious Lord.

Prince. But say, my Lord, it were not registred,
Me thinks the truth should liue from age to age,
As 'twere retayl'd to all posteritie,
Euen to the generall ending day.

Glo. So wife, so young, they say doe neuer liue long.

Prince. What say you, Vnckle?

Glo. I say, without Characters, Fame liues long.
Thus, like the formall Vice, Iniquitie,
I morallize two meanings in one word.

Prince. That Julius Caesar was a famous man,
With what his Valour did enrich his Wit,
His Wit set downe, to make his Valour liue:
Death makes no Conquest of his Conqueror,
For now he liues in Fame, though not in Life.

Buck. What, my gracious Lord?
Prince. And if I liue vntill I be a man,
Ile win our ancient Right in France againe,
Or dye a Souldier, as I liu'd a King.

Glo. Short Summers lightly haue a forward Spring.

Enter young Torke, Hastings, and Cardinall.

Buck. Now in good time, heere comes the Duke of Yorke.

Prince. Richard of Yorke, how fares our Noble Brother?

Torke. Well, my deare Lord, so must I call you now.
Prince. I, Brother, to our griefe, as it is yours:
Too late he dy'd, that might haue kept that Title,
Which by his death hath lost much Maiestie.

Glo. How fares our Cousin, Noble Lord of Yorke?

Torke. I thanke you, gentle Vnckle. O my Lord,
You said, that idle Weeds are fast in growth:
The Prince, my Brother, hath out-growne me farre.

Glo. He hath, my Lord.

Torke. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. Oh my faire Cousin, I must not say so.

Torke. Then he is more beholding to you, then I.

Glo. He may command me as my Soueraigne,

But you haue power in me, as in a Kinsman.

Torke. I pray you, Vnckle, giue me this Dagger.

Glo. My Dagger, little Cousin? with all my heart.

Prince. A Begger, Brother?

Torke. Of my kind Vnckle, that I know will giue,
And being but a Toy, which is no griefe to giue.

Glo. A greater gift then that, Ile giue my Cousin.

Torke. A greater gift? O, that's the Sword to it.

Glo. I, gentle Cousin, were it light enough.

Torke. O then I see, you will part but with light gifts,

In weightier things you'll say a Begger nay.

Glo. It is too weightie for your Grace to weare.

Torke. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.

Glo. What, would you haue my Weapon, little Lord?

Torke. I would that I might thanke you, as, as, you call me.

Glo. How?

Torke. Little.

Prince. My Lord of Yorke will still be crosse in talke:

Vnckle, your Grace knowes how to beare with him.

Torke. You meane to beare me, not to beare with me:

Vnckle, my Brother mockes both you and me,

Because that I am little, like an Ape,

He thinks that you should beare me on your shoulders.

Buck. With what a sharpe prouided wit he reasons:

To mitigate the scorne he giues his Vnckle,

He prettily and aptly taunts himselfe:

So cunning, and so young, is wonderfull.

Glo. My Lord, wilt please you passe along?

My selfe, and my good Cousin Buckingham,

Will to your Mother, to entreat of her

To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

Torke. What,

Torke. What, will you goe vnto the Tower, my Lord?

Prince. My Lord Protector will haue it so.

Torke. I shall not sleepe in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, what should you feare?

Torke. Marry, my Vnckle Clarence angry Ghost:

My Grandam told me he was murder'd there.

Prince. I feare no Vnckles dead.

Glo. Nor none that liue, I hope.

Prince. And if they liue, I hope I need not feare.

But come my Lord: and with a heauie heart,

Thinking on them, goe I vnto the Tower.

A Sennet. Exit Prince, Torke, Hastings, and Dorset.

Manet Richard, Buckingham, and Catesby.

Buck. Thinke you, my Lord, this little prating Torke
Was not incensed by his subtil Mother,
To taunt and scorne you thus opprobriously?
Glo. No doubt, no doubt: Oh 'tis a perillous Boy,
Bold, quicke, ingenious, forward, capable:
Hee is all the Mothers, from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest: Come hither Catesby,
Thou art sworne as deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceale what we impart:

Thou know'st our reasons vrg'd vpon the way.
What think'st thou? is it not an easie matter,

To make William Lord Hastings of our minde,
For the installment of this Noble Duke
In the Seat Royall of this famous Ile?

Cates. He for his fathers sake so loues the Prince,
That he will not be wonne to ought against him.

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? Will not hee?

Cates. Hee will doe all in all as Hastings doth.

Buck. Well then, no more but this:
Goe gentle Catesby, and as it were farre off,

Sound thou Lord Hastings,
How he doth stand affected to our purpose,
And summon him to morrow to the Tower,

To sit about the Coronation.
If thou do'st finde him tractable to vs,

Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, ycie, cold, vnwilling,

Be thou so too, and so breake off the talke,
And giue vs notice of his inclination:

For we to morrow hold diuided Councels,
Wherein thy selfe shalt highly be employ'd.

Rich. Commend me to Lord William: tell him Catesby,
His ancient Knot of dangerous Adversaries

To morrow are let blood at Pomfret Castle,
And bid my Lord, for ioy of this good newes,

Giue Mistress Shore one gentle Kisse the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, goe effect this businesse soundly.

Cates. My good Lords both, with all the heed I can.

Rich. Shall we heare from you, Catesby, ere we sleepe?

Cates. You shall, my Lord.

Rich. At Catesby House, there shall you find vs both.

Exit Catesby.

Buck. Now, my Lord,
What shall wee doe, if wee perceiue
Lord Hastings will not yeeld to our Complots?

Rich. Chop off his Head:
Something wee will determine:
And looke when I am King, claime thou of me
The Earldome of Hereford, and all the moueables
Whereof the King, my Brother, was posselt.

Buck. Ile claime that promise at your Graces hand.
Rich. And looke to haue it yeelded with all kindeesse.
Come, let vs suppe betimes, that afterwards
Wee may digest our complots in some forme.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter a Messenger to the Doore of Hastings.

Mess. My Lord, my Lord.

Hast. Who knockes?

Mess. One from the Lord Stanley.

Hast. What is't a Clocke?

Mess. Vpon the stroke of foure.

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. Cannot my Lord Stanley sleepe these tedious Nights?

Mess. So it appeares, by that I haue to say:
First, he commends him to your Noble selfe.

Hast. What then?

Mess. Then certifies your Lordship, that this Night
He dreamt, the Bore had ras'd off his Helme:

Besides, he sayes there are two Councels kept;
And that may be determin'd at the one,

Which may make you and him to rue at th'other.
Therefore he sends to know your Lordships pleasure,

If you will presently take Horse with him,
And with all speed post with him toward the North,

To shun the danger that his Soule diuines.

Hast. Goe fellow, goe, returne vnto thy Lord,
Bid him not feare the seperated Councell:

His Honor and my selfe are at the one,
And at the other, is my good friend Catesby;

Where nothing can proceede, that toucheth vs,
Whereof I shall not haue intelligence:

Tell him his Feares are shallow, without instance.
And for his Dreames, I wonder hee's so simple,

To trust the mock'ry of vniquiet slumbers.
To flye the Bore, before the Bore pursues,

Were to incense the Bore to follow vs,
And make pursuit, where he did meane no chase.

Goe, bid thy Master rise, and come to me,
And we will both together to the Tower,

Where he shall see the Bore will vse vs kindly.

Mess. Ile goe, my Lord, and tell him what you say.

Exit.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Many good morrowes to my Noble Lord.

Hast. Good morrow Catesby, you are early stirring:
What newes, what newes, in this our tottering State?

Cates. It is a reeling World indeed, my Lord:
And I beleue will neuer stand vpright,

Till Richard weare the Garland of the Realme.

Hast. How weare the Garland?
Doe'st thou meane the Crowne?

Cates. I, my good Lord.

Hast. Ile haue this Crowne of mine cut fro my shoulders,
Before Ile see the Crowne so foule mis-plac'd:
But canst thou guesse, that he doth ayme at it?

Cates. I.

Cates. I, on my life, and hopes to find you forward,
Vpon his partie, for the gaine thereof:

And thereupon he sends you this good newes,
That this same very day your enemies,
The Kindred of the Queene, must dye at Pomfret.

Hast. Indeed I am no mourner for that newes,
Because they haue bene still my aduersaries:
But, that Ile giue my voice on Richards side,
To barre my Masters Heires in true Descent,
God knowes I will not doe it, to the death.

Cates. God keepe your Lordship in that gracious minde.

Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelue-month hence,
That they which brought me in my Masters hate,
I liue to looke vpon their Tragedie.

Well Catesby, ere a fort-night make me older,
Ile send some packing, that yet thinke not on't.

Cates. 'Tis a vile thing to dye, my gracious Lord,
When men are vnprepar'd, and looke not for it.

Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out
With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: and so 'twill doe
With some men else, that thinke themselves as safe
As thou and I, who (as thou know'st) are deare
To Princely Richard, and to Buckingham.

Cates. The Princes both make high account of you,
For they account his Head vpon the Bridge.

Hast. I know they doe, and I haue well defer'd it.

Enter Lord Stanley.

Come on, come on, where is your Bore-speare man?
Feare you the Bore, and goe so vnprovided?

Stan. My Lord good morrow, good morrow Catesby:
You may ieaft on, but by the holy Rood,
I doe not like these seuerall Counsels, I.

Hast. My Lord, I hold my Life as deare as yours,
And neuer in my dayes, I doe protest,
Was it so precious to me, as 'tis now:
Thinke you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am?

Stan. The Lords at Pomfret, where they rode from London,
Were iocund, and suppos'd their states were sure,
And they indeed had no cause to mistrust:
But yet you see, how soone the Day o're-cast.
This sudden stab of Rancour I misdoubt:

Pray God (I say) I proue a needlesse Coward.
What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, haue with you:

Wot you what, my Lord,

To day the Lords you talke of, are beheaded.

Stan. They, for their truth, might better wear their Heads,
Then some that haue accus'd them, weare their Hats.
But come, my Lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Goe on before, Ile talke with this good fellow.

Exit Lord Stanley, and Catesby.

How now, Sir? how goes the World with thee?

Purs. The better, that your Lordship please to aske.

Hast. I tell thee man, 'tis better with me now,
Then when thou met'st me last, where now we meet:
Then was I going Prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the Queenes Allyes.
But now I tell thee (keepe it to thy selfe)
This day those Enemies are put to death,

And I in better state then ere I was.

Purs. God hold it, to your Honors good content:
Hast. Gramercie fellow: there, drinke that for me,
Thou shalt haue it.

Purs. I thanke your Honor.

Enter a Priest.

Priest. Well met, my Lord, I am glad to see your Honor.

Hast. I thanke thee, good Sir John, with all my heart.
I am in your debt, for your last Exercise:

Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Priest. Ile wait vpon your Lordship.

Enter Buckingham.

Buc. What, talking with a Priest, Lord Chamberlaine?
Your friends at Pomfret, they doe need the Priest,
Your Honor hath no shriuing worke in hand.

Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,
The men you talke of, came into my minde,
What, goe you toward the Tower?

Buc. I doe, my Lord, but long I cannot stay there:
I shall returne before your Lordship, thence.

Hast. Nay like enough, for I stay Dinner there.

Buc. And Supper too, although thou know'st it not.
Come, will you goe?

Hast. Ile wait vpon your Lordship.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sir Richard Ratcliffe, with Halberds, carrying the Nobles to death at Pomfret.

Rivers. Sir Richard Ratcliffe, let me tell thee this,
To day shalt thou behold a Souldier die,
For Truth, for Dutie, and for Loyaltie.

Grey. God blesse the Prince from all the Pack of you,
A Knot you are, of damned Blood-suckers.

Vaugh. You liue, that shall cry woe for this heere after.

Rat. Dispatch, the limit of your Liues is out.

Rivers. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody Prison!
Fatale and ominous to Noble Peeres:

Within the guiltie Closure of thy Walls,
Richard the Second here was hackt to death:

And for more slander to thy dismall Seat,
Wee giue to thee our guiltlesse blood to drinke.

Grey. Now Margarets Curse is false vpon our Heads,
When thee exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I,
For standing by, when Richard stab'd her Sonne.

Rivers. Then curs'd thee Richard,

Then curs'd thee Buckingham,

Then curs'd thee Hastings. Oh remember God,

To heare her prayer for them, as now for vs:

And for my Sister, and her Princely Sonnes,

Be satisfi'd, deare God, with our true blood,

Which, as thou know'st, vniuently must be spilt.

Rat. Make haste, the houre of death is expiate.

Rivers. Come Grey, come Vaughan, let vs here embrace.

Farewell, vntill we meet againe in Heauen.

Exeunt.

Scena

Scena Quarta.

Enter Buckingham, Darby, Hastings, Bishop of Ely, Norfolk, Ratcliffe, Lovell, with others,
at a Table.

Hast. Now Noble Peeres, the cause why we are met,
Is to determine of the Coronation:

In Gods Name speake, when is the Royall day?

Buck. Is all things ready for the Royall time?

Darb. It is, and wants but nomination.

Ely. To morrow then I iudge a happie day.

Buck. Who knows the Lord Protector's mind herein?

Who is most inward with the Noble Duke?

Ely. Your Grace, we thinke, should soonest know his minde.

Buck. We know each others Faces: for our Hearts,

He knows no more of mine, then I of yours,

Or I of his, my Lord, then you of mine:

Lord Hastings, you and he are neere in loue.

Hast. I thanke his Grace, I know he loues me well:

But for his purpose in the Coronation,

I haue not founded him, nor he deliuer'd

His gracious pleasure any way therein:

Buc you, my Honorable Lords, may name the time,

And in the Dukes behalfe Ile giue my Voice,

Which I presume hee'll take in gentle part.

Enter Gloucester.

Ely. In happie time, here comes the Duke himselfe.

Rich. My Noble Lords, and Cousins all, good morrow:

I haue bene long a sleeper: but I trust,

My abience doth neglect no great designe,

Which by my presence might haue bene concluded.

Buck. Had you not come vpon your Q. my Lord,

William, Lord Hastings, had pronounc'd your part;

I meane your Voice, for Crowning of the King.

Rich. Then my Lord Hastings, no man might be bolder,

His Lordship knowes me well, and loues me well.

My Lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborne,

I saw good Strawberries in your Garden there,

I doe beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Mary and will, my Lord, with all my heart.

Exit Bishop.

Rich. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

Catesby hath sound'd Hastings in our businesse,

And findes the testie Gentleman so hot,

That he will lose his Head, ere giue consent

His Masters Child, as worshipfully he treatmes it,

Shall lose the Royaltie of Englands Throne.

Buck. Withdraw your selfe a while, Ile goe with you.

Exeunt.

Darb. We haue not yet set downe this day of Triumph:

To morrow, in my iudgement, is too sudden,

For I my selfe am not so well provided,

As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Enter the Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my Lord, the Duke of Gloster?

I haue sent for these Strawberries.

Rich. His Grace looks chearfully & smooth this morning,

There's some conceit or other likes him well,

When that he bids good morrow with such spirit.

I thinke there's neuer a man in Christendome

Can lesse hide his loue, or hate, then hee,

For by his Face straight shall you know his Heart.

Darb. What of his Heart perceiue you in his Face,

By any liuelyhood he shew'd to day?

Hast. Mary, that with no man here he is offended:

For were he, he had shewne it in his Lookes.

Enter Richard, and Buckingham.

Rich. I pray you all, tell me what they deserue,

That doe conspire my death with diuellish Plots:

Of damned Witchcraft, and that haue prevail'd

Vpon my Body with their Hellish Charmes.

Hast. The tender loue I beare your Grace, my Lord,

Makes me most forward, in this Princely presence,

To doome th' Offenders, whoe'er they be:

I say, my Lord, they haue deseru'd death.

Rich. Then be your eyes the witness of their euill.

Looke how I am bewitch'd: behold, mine Arme

Is like a blasted Sapling, wither'd vp:

And this is Edwards Wife, that monstrous Witch,

Conforted with that Harlot, Strumpet Shore,

That by their Witchcraft thus haue marked me.

Hast. If they haue done this deed, my Noble Lord.

Rich. If thou Protector of this damned Strumpet,

Talk'st thou to me of life: thou art a Traytor,

Off with his Head: now by Saint Paul I sweare,

I will not dine, vntill I see the same.

Lovell and Ratcliffe, looke that it be done:

The rest that loue me, rise, and follow me.

Maner Lovell and Ratcliffe, with the Lord Hastings.

Hast. Woe, woe for England, not a whit for me,

For I, too fond, might haue prevented this:

Stanley did dreame, the Bore did rowe our Helmes,

And I did scorne it, and disdain'd to flye:

Three times to day my Foot-Cloth-Horse did stumble,

And started, when he look'd vpon the Tower,

As loth to beare me to the slaughter-house.

O now I need the Priest, that spake to me:

I now repent I told the Pursuivant,

As too triumphing, how mine Enemies

To day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,

And I my selfe secure, in grace and fauour.

Oh Margaret, Margaret, now thy heauie Curse

Is lighted on poore Hastings wretched Head.

Ra. Come, come, dispatch, the Duke would be at dinner:

Make a short Shrift, he longs to see your Head.

Hast. O momentarie grace of mortall men,

Which we more hunt for, then the grace of God!

Who builds his hope in ayre of your good Lookes,

Liues like a drunken Sayler on a Mast,

Readie with euery Nod to tumble downe,

Into the fatall Bowels of the Deepe.

Lov. Come, come, dispatch, 'tis bootlesse to exclaime.

Hast. O bloody Richard! miserable England,

I propheticke the fearefull time to thee,

That euer wretched Age hath look'd vpon.

Come, lead me to the Block, beare him my Head,

They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.

Exeunt.

Enter

Enter Richard, and Buckingham, in rotten Armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Richard. Come Cousin,
Canst thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then againe begin, and stop againe,
As if thou were distraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deepe Tragedian,
Speake, and looke backe, and prie on euery side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a Straw:
Intending deepe suspicion, gaffly Lookes
Are at my seruice, like enforced Smiles;
And both are readie in their Offices,
At any time to grace my Stratagemes.
But what, is Catesby gone?

Rich. He is, and see he brings the Maior along.

Enter the Maior, and Catesby.

Buck. Lord Maior.

Rich. Looke to the Draw-Bridge there.

Buck. Hearke, a Drumme.

Rich. Catesby, o're-looke the Walls.

Buck. Lord Maior, the reason we haue sent.

Rich. Looke back, defend thee, here are Enemies.

Buck. God and our Innocencie defend, and guard vs.

Enter Louell and Ratcliffe, with Hastings Head.

Rich. Be patient, they are friends: Ratcliffe, and Louell.

Louell. Here is the Head of that ignoble Traytor,
The dangerous and vn suspected Hastings.

Rich. So deare I lou'd the man, that I must weepe:
I tooke him for the plainest harmlesse Creature,
That breath'd vpon the Earth, a Christian.
Made him my Booke, wherein my Soule recorded
The Historie of all her secret thoughts.
So smooth he dawb'd his Vice with shew of Vertue,
That his apparant open Guilt omitted,
I meane, his Conuersation with Shores Wife,
He liu'd from all attainer of suspects.

Buck. Well, well, he was the couerit shelterd Traytor
That euery liu'd.
Would you imagine, or almost beleue,
Wert not, that by great preservation
We liue to tell it, that the subtil Traytor
This day had plotted, in the Councell-House,
To murder me, and my good Lord of Gloster.

Maior. Had he done so?

Rich. What? thinke you we are Turkes, or Infidels?
Or that we would, against the forme of Law,
Proceed thus rashly in the Villaines death,
But that the extreme perill of the case,
The Peace of England, and our Persons safetie,
Enforc'd vs to this Execution.

Maior. Now faire befall you, he deseru'd his death,
And your good Graces both haue well proceeded,
To warne false Traytors from the like Attempts.

Buck. I neuer look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with Mistrisse Shore:
Yet had we not determin'd he should dye,
Vntill your Lordship came to see his end,
Which now the louing haste of these our friends,
Something against our meanings, haue prevented;
Because, my Lord, I would haue had you heard
The Traytor speake, and timorously confesse
The manner and the purpose of his Treasons:

That you might well haue signify'd the same
Vnto the Citizens, who haply may
Misconfer vs in him, and wayle his death.

Ma. But, my good Lord, your Graces words shal serue,
As well as I had scene, and heard him speake:
And doe not doubt, right Noble Princes both,
But Ile acquaint our ducious Citizens

With all your iust proceedings in this case.
Rich. And to that end we wish'd your Lordship here,
T'auoid the Censures of the carping World.

Buck. Which since you come too late of our intent,
Yet witnesse what you heare we did intend:
And so, my good Lord Maior, we bid farwell.

Exit Maior.

Rich. Goe after, after, Cousin Buckingham.
The Maior towards Guild-Hall hies him in all poste:
There, at your meetest vantage of the time,
Inferre the Bastardie of Edwards Children:

Tell them, how Edward put to death a Citizen,
Onely for saying, he would make his Sonne
Heire to the Crowne, meaning indeed his House,

Which, by the Signe thereof, was tearmed so,
Moreouer, vrge his hatefull Luxurie,
And beaustiall appetite in change of Lust,

Which stretch vnto their Seruants, Daughters, Wives,
Euen where his raging eye, or sauge heart,
Without controll, lust to make a prey.
Nay, for a need, thus farre come neere my Person:

Tell them, when that my Mother went with Child
Of that insatiate Edward; Noble Torke,
My Princely Father, then had Warres in France,

And by true computation of the time,
Found, that the Issue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his Lineaments,

Being nothing like the Noble Duke, my Father:
Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere farre off,
Because, my Lord, you know my Mother liues.

Buck. Doubt not, my Lord, Ile play the Orator,
As if the Golden Fee, for which I plead,
Were for my selfe: and so, my Lord, adue.

Rich. If you thriue wel, bring them to Baynards Castle,
Where you shall finde me well accompanied
With reuerend Fathers, and well-learned Bishops.

Buck. I goe, and towards three or foure a Clocke Looke for the Newes that the Guild-Hall affords.

Exit Buckingham.

Rich. Goe Louell with all speed to Doctor Shaw, Goe thou to Fryer Penker, bid them both
Meet me within this houre at Baynards Castle.

Now will I goe to take some priue order,
To draw the Brats of Clarence out of sight,
And to giue order, that no manner person
Haue any time recourse vnto the Princes.

Exit.

Enter a Scrinuer.

Scr. Here is the Indictment of the good Lord Hastings,
Which in a set Hand fairly is engros'd,
That it may be to day read o're in Paules.

And marke how well the sequell hangs together:
Eleuen houres I haue spent to write it ouer,
For yester-night by Catesby was it sent me,

The Precedent was full as long a doing,
And yet within these fiue houres Hastings liu'd,
Vntainted, vnexamin'd, free, at libertie.

Here's a good World the while.
Who is so grosse, that cannot see this palpable deuice?

Yet

Yet who so bold, but sayes he sees it not?
Bad is the World, and all will come to nought,
When such ill dealing must be scene in thought. Exit.

Enter Richard and Buckingham at severall Doores.

Rich. How now, how now, what say the Citizens?
Buck. Now by the holy Mother of our Lord,
The Citizens are maim, say not a word.

Rich. Toucht you the Bastardie of Edwards Children?
Buck. I did, with his Contract with Lady Lucy,
And his Contract by Deputie in France,

Th'viciate greedinesse of his desire,
His enforcement of the Citie Wines,
His Tyrannie for Trifles, his owne Bastardie,

As being got, your Father then in France,
And his resemblance, being not like the Duke.
Which, I did inferre your Lineaments,

Being the right Idea of your Father,
Both in your forme, and Noblenesse of Minde:
Layd open all your Victories in Scotland,

Your Discipline in Warre, Wisdome in Peace,
Your Bountie, Vertue, faire Humilitie:
Indeed, left nothing fitting for your purpose,

Vntoucht, or slightly handled in discourse.
And when my Oratorie drew toward end,
I bid them that did loue their Countries good,

Cry, God saue Richard, Englands Royall King.
Rich. And did they so?

Buck. No, so God helpe me, they spake not a word,
But like dumbe Statues, or breathing Stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale:

Which when I saw, I reprehended them,
And ask'd the Maior, what meant this willfull silence?
His answer was, the people were not vsed

To be spoke to, but by the Recorder.
Then he was vrg'd to tell my Tale againe:
Thus sayth the Duke, thus hath the Duke inferr'd,

But nothing spoke, in warrant from himselfe.
When he had done, some followers of mine owne,
At lower end of the Hall, hurld vp their Caps,

And some tenne voyces cry'd, God saue King Richard:
And thus I tooke the vantage of those few.
Thankes gentle Citizens, and friends, quoth I,

This generall applause, and chearefull shewt,
Argues your wisdome, and your loue to Richard:
And euen here brake off, and came away.

Rich. What tongue-lesse Blockes were they,
Would they not speake?

Will not the Maior then, and his Brethren, come?
Buck. The Maior is here at hand: intend some feare,
Benot you spoke with, but by mightie suit:

And looke you get a Prayer-Booke in your hand,
And stand betweene two Church-men, good my Lord,
For on that ground Ile make a holy Descant:

And be not easily wonne to our requests,
Play the Maids part, still answer nay, and take it.
Rich. I goe: and if you plead as well for them,

As I can say nay to thee for my selfe,
No doubt we bring it to a happie issue.

Buck. Go, go vp to the Leads, the Lord Maior knocks.

Enter the Maior, and Citizens.

Welcome, my Lord, I dance attendance here,
I thinke the Duke will not be spoke withall.

Enter Catesby.

Buck. Now Catesby, what sayes your Lord to my request?

Catesby. He doth entreat your Grace, my Noble Lord,
To visit him to morrow, or next day:
He is within, with two right reuerend Fathers,

Diuinely bent to Meditation,
And in no Worldly suites would he be mou'd,
To draw him from his holy Exercise.

Buck. Returne, good Catesby, to the gracious Duke,
Tell him, my selfe, the Maior and Aldermen,
In deepe desires, in matter of great moment,

No lesse importing then our generall good,
Are come to haue some conference with his Grace.

Catesby. Ile signifie so much vnto him straight. Exit.
Buck. Ah ha, my Lord, this Prince is not an Edward,
He is not lulling on a lewd Loue-Bed,

But on his Knees, at Meditation:
Not dallying with a Brace of Curtizans,
But meditating with two deepe Diuines:

Not sleeping, to engrosse his idle Body,
But praying, to enrich his watchfull Soule.
Happie were England, would this vertuous Prince

Take on his Grace the Soueraigntie thereof.
But sure I feare we shall not winne him to it.

Maior. Marry God defend his Grace should say vs nay.
Buck. I feare he will: here Catesby comes againe.

Enter Catesby.

Now Catesby, what sayes his Grace?
Catesby. He wonders to what end you haue assembled
Such troopes of Citizens, to come to him,

His Grace not being warn'd thereof before:
He feares, my Lord, you meane no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am, my Noble Cousin should Suspect me, that I meane no good to him:
By Heauen, we come to him in perfitt loue,

And so once more returne, and tell his Grace. Exit.
When holy and deuout Religious men
Are at their Beades, 'tis much to draw them thence,
So sweet is zealous Contemplation.

Enter Richard aloft, betweene two Bishops.

Maior. See where his Grace stands, twene two Clergie men.

Buck. Two Props of Vertue, for a Christian Prince,
To stay him from the fall of Vanitie:
And see a Booke of Prayer in his hand,

True Ornaments to know a holy man.
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious Prince,
Lend fauourable eare to our requests,

And pardon vs the interruption
Of thy Deuotion, and right Christian Zeale.

Rich. My Lord, there needs no such Apologie:
I doe beseech your Grace to pardon me,
Who earnest in the seruice of my God,

Deferr'd the visitation of my friends.
But leauing this, what is your Graces pleasure?
Buck. Euen that (I hope) which pleaseth God about,

And all good men, of this yngouern'd Ile.
Rich. I doe suspect I haue done some offence,
That seemes disgracious in the Citie eye,
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

f 2

Buck. You

Buck. You haue, my Lord:

Would it might please your Grace,
On our entreaties, to amend your fault.

Rich. Else wherefore breathe in a Christian Land.

Buck. Know then, it is your fault, that you resigne

The Supreme Sear, the Throne Maiesticall,

The Sceptred Office of your Ancestors,

Your State of Fortune, and your Deaw of Birth,

The Lineall Glory of your Royall House,

To the corruption of a blemisht Stock;

Whiles in the mildnesse of your sleepe thoughts,

Which here we waken to our Countries good,

The Noble Ile doth want his proper Limmes:

His Face defac'd with skarres of infamie,

His Royall Stock grafft with ignoble Plants,

And almost shouldred in the swallowing Gulfe

Of darke Forgetfulness, and deepe Obliuion.

Which to recure, we heartily sollicite

Your gracious selfe to take on you the charge

And Kingly Government of this your Land:

Not as Protector, Steward, Substitute,

Or lowly Factor, for anothers gain;

But as successufully, from Blood to Blood,

Your Right of Birth, your Empryrie, your owne.

For this, comforted with the Citizens,

Your very Worshipfull and louing friends,

And by their vehement instigation,

In this iust Cause come I to moue your Grace.

Rich. I cannot tell if to depart in silence,

Or bitterly to speake in your reproofe,

Best fitteth my Degree, or your Condition.

If not to answer, you might haply thinke,

Tongue-ty'd Ambition, not replying, yeelded

To beare the Golden Yoake of Soueraigntie,

Which fondly you would here impose on me.

If to reprove you for this suit of yours,

So season'd with your faithfull loue to me,

Then on the other side I check'd my friends,

Therefore to speake, and to auoid the first,

And then in speaking, not to incurre the last,

Definitively thus I answer you.

Your loue deserues my thanks, but my desert

Vnmeritable, shunnes your high request.

First, if all Obstacles were cut away,

And that my Path were euen to the Crowne,

As the ripe Reuennue, and due of Birth:

Yet so much is my pouertie of spirit,

So mightie, and so manie my defects,

That I would rather hide me from my Greatnesse,

Being a Barke to brooke no mightie Sea;

Then in my Greatnesse couet to be hid,

And in the vapour of my Glory smother'd.

But God be thank'd, there is no need of me,

And much I need to helpe you, were there need:

The Royall Tree hath left vs Royall Fruit,

Which mellow'd by the stealing howres of time,

Will well become the Seat of Maiestie,

And make (no doubt) vs happy by his Reigne.

On him I lay that, you would lay on me,

The Right and Fortune of his happie Statres,

Which God defend that I should wring from him.

Buck. My Lord, this argues Conscience in your Grace,

But the respects thereof are nice, and triuiall,

All circumstances well considered.

You say, that Edward is your Brothers Sonne,

So say we too, but not by Edward's Wife:

For first was he contract to Lady Lucie,

Your Mother liues a Witnesse to his Vow;

And afterward by substitute betroch'd

To Bona, Sister to the King of France.

These both put off, a poore Petitioner,

A Care-cras'd Mother to a many Sonnes,

A Beautie, waining, and distressed Widow,

Euen in the after-noon of her best dayes,

Made prize and purchase of his wanton Eye,

Seduc'd the pitch, and height of his degree,

To base declension, and loath'd Bigamie.

By her, in his vnlawfull Bed, he got

This Edward, whom our Manners call the Prince.

More bitterly could I expostulate,

Saue that for reuerence to some alie,

I giue a sparing limit to my Tongue.

Then good, my Lord, take to your Royall selfe

This proffer'd benefit of Dignitie:

If not to blesse vs and the Land withall,

Yet to draw forth your Noble Ancestrie

From the corruption of abusing times;

Vnto a Lineall true desired course.

Maio. Do good my Lord, your Citizens entreat you.

Buck. Refuse not, mightie Lord, this proffer'd loue.

Catesb. O make them ioyfull, grant their lawfull suite.

Rich. Alas, why would you heape this Care on me?

I am vnfit for State, and Maiestie:

I doe beseech you take it not amisse,

I cannot, nor I will not yeeld to you.

Buck. If you refuse it, as in loue and zeale,

Loth to depose the Child, your Brothers Sonne,

As well we know your tenderesse of heart,

And gentle, kinde, effeminate remorse,

Which we haue noted in you to your Kindred,

And egally indeede to all Estates:

Yet know, where you accept our suit, or no,

Your Brothers Sonne shall neuer reigne our King,

But we will plant some other in the Throne,

To the disgrace and downe-fall of your House:

And in this resolution here we leaue you.

Come Citizens, we will entreat no more. Exeunt.

Catesb. Call him againe, sweet Prince, accept their suite.

If you denie them, all the Land will rue it.

Rich. Will you enforce me to a world of Cares,

Call them againe, I am not made of Stones,

But penetrable to your kinde entreaties,

Albeit against my Conscience and my Soule.

Enter Buckingham, and the rest.

Cousin of Buckingham, and sage graue men,

Since you will buckle fortune on my back,

To beare her burthen, where I will or no,

I must haue patience to endure the Load:

But if black Scandall, or foule-fac'd Reproach,

Attend the sequell of your Imposition,

Your meere enforcement shall acquittance me

From all the impure blots and Raynes thereof;

For God doth know, and you may partly see,

How farre I am from the desire of this.

Maio. God blesse your Grace, wee see it, and will say it.

Rich. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this Royall Title,

Long liue King Richard, Englands worthie King.

Al. Amen.

Buck. To morrow may it please you to be Crown'd.

Rich. Euen when you please, for you will haue it so.

Buck. To

Buck. To morrow then we will attend your Grace,
And so most ioyfully we take our leaue.

Rich. Come, let vs to our holy Worke againe.
Farewell my Cousins, farewell gentle friends. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter the Queene, Anne Duchesse of Gloucester, the Duchesse of Yorke, and Marquesse Dorset.

Duch. Yorke. Who meetes vs heere?

My Niece Plantagenet,

Led in the hand of her kind Aunt of Gloster?

Now, for my Life, she's wandering to the Tower,

On pure hearts loue, to greet the tender Prince.

Daughter, well met.

Anne. God giue your Graces both, a happie

And a ioyfull time of day.

Qu. As much to you, good Sister: whither away?

Anne. No farther then the Tower, and as I guesse,

Vpon the like deuotion as your selues,

To gratulate the gentle Princes there.

Qu. Kind Sister thanks, wee'll enter all together:

Enter the Lieutenant.

And in good time, here the Lieutenant comes.

Master Lieutenant, pray you, by your leaue,

How doth the Prince, and my young Sonne of Yorke?

Lieu. Right well, deare Madame: by your patience,

I may not suffer you to visit them,

The King hath stricktly charg'd the contrary.

Qu. The King? who's that?

Lieu. I meane, the Lord Protector.

Qu. The Lord protect him from that Kingly Title.

Harsh he set bounds betweene their loue, and me?

I am their Mother, who shall barre me from them?

Duch. Yorke. I am their Fathers Mother, I will see them.

Anne. Their Aunt I am in law, in lone their Mother:

Then bring me to their sights, Ile beare thy blame,

And take thy Office from thee, on my perill.

Lieu. No, Madame, no; I may not leaue it so:

I am bound by Oath, and therefore pardon me.

Exit Lieutenant.

Enter Stanley.

Stanley. Let me but meet you Ladies one howre hence,

And Ile salute your Grace of Yorke as Mother,

And reuerend looker on of two faire Queenes.

Come Madame, you must straight to Westminster,

There to be crown'd Richards Royall Queene.

Qu. Ah, cut my Lace asunder,

That my pent heart may haue some scope to beat,

Or else I swoone with this dead-killing newes.

Anne. Despightfull tidings, O vnpleasing newes.

Dorf. Be of good cheare: Mother, how fares your Grace?

Qu. O Dorset, speake not to me, get thee gone,

Death and Destruction dogges thee at thy heeles,

Thy Mothers Name is ominous to Children.

If thou wilt out-strip Death, goe crosse the Seas,
And liue with Richmond, from the reach of Hell.
Goe hye thee, hye thee from this slaughter-houle,
Lest thou encrease the number of the dead,
And make me dye the thrall of Margarets Curse,
Nor Mother, Wife, nor Englands counted Queene.

Stanley. Full of wise care, is this your counsaile, Madame:

Take all the swift aduantage of the howres:

You shall haue Letters from me to my Sonne,

In your behalfe, to meet you on the way:

Be not ta'ne tardie by vnwise delay.

Duch. Yorke. O ill disperfing Winde of Miseric,

O my accursed Wombe, the Bed of Death:

A Cockatrice hast thou hatcht to the World,

Whose vnauoided Eye is murtherous.

Stanley. Come, Madame, come, I in all haste was sent,

Anne. And I with all vnwillingnesse will goe.

O would to God, that the inclusive Verge

Of Golden Mettall, that must round my Brow,

Were red hot Steele, to seare me to the Braines,

Anoynted let me be with deadly Venome,

And dye ere men can say, God saue the Queene.

Qu. Goe, goe, poore soule, I enuie not thy glory,

To feed my humor, with thy selfe no harme.

Anne. No: why? When he that is my Husband now,

Came to me, as I follow'd Henries Corse,

When scarce the blood was well washt from his hands,

Which issued from my other Angell Husband,

And that deare Saint, which then I weeping follow'd:

O, when I say I look'd on Richards Face,

This was my Wish: Se thou (quoth I) accurst,

For making me, so young, so old a Widow:

And when thou wed'st, let sorrow haunt thy Bed;

And be thy Wife, if any be so mad,

More miserable, by the Life of thee,

Then thou hast made me, by my deare Lords death.

Loe, ere I can repeat this Curse againe,

Within so small a time, my Womans heart

Grossely grew captiue to his honey words,

And prou'd the subiect of mine owne Soules Curse,

Which hitherto hath held mine eyes from rest:

For neuer yet one howre in his Bed

Did I enioy the golden deaw of sleepe,

But with his timorous Dreames was still awak'd.

Besides, he hates me for my Father Warwicke,

And will (no doubt) shortly be rid of me.

Qu. Poore heart adieu, I pittie thy complaining.

Anne. No more, then with my soule I mourne for yours.

Dorf. Farewell, thou wofull welcommer of glory.

Anne. Adieu, poore soule, that tak'st thy leaue of it.

Duch. Yorke. Go thou to Richmond, & good fortune guide thee,

Go thou to Richmond, and good Angels tend thee,

Go thou to Sanctuarie, and good thoughts possesse thee,

I to my Graue, where peace and rest lye with mee.

Eightie odde yeeres of sorrow haue I seene,

And each howres ioy wrackt with a weeke of teene.

Qu. Stay, yet looke backe with me vnto the Tower.

Pitty, you ancient Stones, those tender Babes,

Whom Enuie hath immur'd within your Walls,

Rough Cradle for such little prettie ones,

Rude ragged Nurse, old sullen Play-fellow,

For tender Princes: vse my Babies well;

So foolish Sorrows bids your Stones farewell.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Sound a Sennet. Enter Richard in pompe, Buckingham, Catesby, Ratcliffe, Lovel.

Rich. Stand all apart. Cousin of Buckingham.

Buck. My gracious Soueraigne.

Rich. Give me thy hand. Sound.

Thus high, by thy aduice, and thy assistance,
Is King Richard seated:

But shall we weare these Glories for a day?

Or shall they last, and we reioyce in them?

Buck. Still liue they, and for euer let them last.

Rich. Ah Buckingham, now doe I play the Touch,
To trie if thou be currant Gold indeed:

Young Edward liues, thinke now what I would speake.

Buck. Say on my louing Lord.

Rich. Why Buckingham, I say I would be King.

Buck. Why to you are, my thrice-renowned Lord.

Rich. Ha? am I King? tis so: but Edward liues.

Buck. True, Noble Prince.

Rich. O bitter consequence!

That Edward still should liue true Noble Prince.

Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull.

Shall I be plaine? I wish the Bastards dead,

And I would haue it suddenly perform'd.

What say'st thou now? speake suddenly, be briefe.

Buck. Your Grace may doe your pleasure.

Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all Ice, thy kindeesse freezes:
Say, haue I thy consent, that they shall dye?

Buck. Give me some litle breath, some pawle, deare Lord,
Before I positiuely speake in this:

I will resolue you herein presently. Exit Buck.

Catesby. The King is angry, see he gnawes his Lippe.

Rich. I will conuerse with Iron-witted Fooles,

And vnrespective Boyes: none are for me,

That looke into me with considerate eyes,

High-reaching Buckingham growes circumspect.

Boy.

Page. My Lord.

Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting Gold
Will tempt vnto a close exploit of Death?

Page. I know a discontented Gentleman,

Whose humble meanes match not his haughtie spirit:

Gold were as good as twentie Orators,

And will (no doubt) tempt him to any thing.

Rich. What is his Name?

Page. His Name, my Lord, is Tyrrell.

Rich. I partly know the man: goe call him hither,
Boy. Exit.

The deepe reuoluing wittie Buckingham,

No more shall be the neighbor to my counsailes.

Hath he so long held out with me, vntry'd,

And stops he now for breath? Well, be it so.

Enter Stanley.

How now, Lord Stanley, what's the newes?

Stanley. Know my louing Lord, the Marquesse Dorset

As I heare, is fled to Richmond,

In the parts where he abides.

Rich. Come hither Catesby, rumor it abroad,

That Anne my Wife is very grieuous sicke,

I will take order for her keeping close.

Inquire me out some meane poore Gentleman,

Whom I will marry straight to Clarence Daughter:

The Boy is foolish, and I feare not him.

Looke how thou dream'st: I say againe, giue out,

That Anne, my Queene, is sicke, and like to dye.

About it, for it stands me much vpon

To stop all hopes, whose growth may damage me.

I must be married to my Brothers Daughter,

Or else my Kingdome stands on brittle Glasse:

Murther her Brothers, and then marry her,

Vncertaine way of gaine. But I am in

So farre in blood, that sinne will pluck on sinne,

Teare-falling Pittie dwells not in this Eye.

Enter Tyrrel.

Is thy Name Tyrrel?

Tyr. Iames Tyrrel, and your most obedient subiect.

Rich. Art thou indeed?

Tyr. Proue me, my gracious Lord.

Rich. Dar'st thou resolue to kill a friend of mine?

Tyr. Please you:

But I had rather kill two enemies.

Rich. Why then thou hast it: two deepe enemies,

Foes to my Rest, and my sweet sleepes disturbers,

Are they that I would haue thee deale vpon:

Tyrrel, I meane those Bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me haue open meanes to come to them,

And soone Ile rid you from the feare of them.

Rich. Thou sing'st sweet Musique:

Hearke, come hither Tyrrel,

Goe by this token: rise, and lend thine Eare, Whisper.

There is no more but so: say it is done,

And I will loue thee, and preferre thee for it.

Tyr. I will dispatch it straight. Exit.

Enter Buckingham.

Buck. My Lord, I haue consider'd in my minde,

The late request that you did sound me in.

Rich. Well, let that rest: Dorset is fled to Richmond.

Buck. I heare the newes, my Lord.

Rich. Stanley, hee is your Wiues Sonne: well, looke vnto it.

Buck. My Lord, I clayme the gift, my due by promise,

For which your Honor and your Faith is pawn'd,

Th' Earldome of Hertford, and the moueables,

Which you haue promised I shall possesse.

Rich. Stanley looke to your Wife: if she conuey

Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

Buck. What sayes your Highnesse to my iust request?

Rich. I doe remember me, Henry the Sixt

Did prophesie, that Richmond should be King,

When Richmond was a little pecuniish Boy.

A King perhaps.

Buck. May it please you to resolue me in my suit.

Rich. Thou troublest me, I am not in the vaine. Exit.

Buck. And is it thus? repayes he my deepe seruice

With such contempt? made I him King for this?

O let me thinke on Hastings, and be gone

To Brecknock, while my fearefull Head is on. Exit.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloodie Act is done,

The most arch deed of pitious massacre

That

Scena Tertia.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. So now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death:
Heere in these Confinnes slyly haue I lurkt,
To watch the waining of mine enemies.
A dire induction, am I witness to,
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will proue as bitter, blacke, and Tragical.
Withdraw thee wretched Margaret, who comes heere?

Enter Datchesse and Queene.

Qu. Ah my poore Princes! ah my tender Babes:
My vnblowd Flowres, new appearing sweets:
If yet your gentle soules flye in the Ayre,
And be not fixt in doome perpetuall,
Houer about me with your ayery wings,
And heare your mothers Lamentation.

Mar. Houer about her, say that right for right
Hath dim'd your Infant morne, to Aged night.

Dut. So many miseries haue craz'd my voyce,
That my woe-wearied tongue is still and mute.

Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?

Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,

Edward for Edward, payes a dying debt.

Qu. Wilt thou, O God, flye from such gentle Lambs,

And throw them in the intrayles of the Wolfe?

When didst thou sleepe, when such a deed was done?

Mar. When holy Harry dyed, and my sweet Sonne.

Dut. Dead life, blind sight, poore mortall liuing ghost,

Woes Scene, Worlds shame, Graues due, by life vsurpt,

Breefe abstract and record of tedious dayes,

Rest thy vnrest on Englands lawfull earth,

Vnlawfully made drunke with innocent blood.

Qu. Ah that thou would'st assoone afford a Graue,

As thou canst yeeld a melancholly seate:

Then would I hide my bones, not rest them heere,

Ah who hath any cause to mourne but wee?

Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reuerent,

Giue mine the benefit of signeurie,

And let my greefes frowne on the vpper hand

If sorrow can admit Society.

I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:

I had a Husband, till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou had'st an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou had'st a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.

Dut. I had a Richard too, and thou did'st kill him;

I had a Rutland too, thou hop'st to kill him.

Mar. Thou had'st a Clarence too,

And Richard kill'd him.

From forth the kennell of thy wombe hath crept

A Hell-hound that doth hunt vs all to death:

That Dogge, that had his teeth before his eyes,

To worry Lambes, and lap their gentle blood:

That foule defacer of Gods handy worke:

That reignes in gauled eyes of weeping soules:

That excellent grand Tyrant of the earth,

Thy wombe let loose to chase vs to our graues.

O vpright, iust, and true-disposing God,

How do I thanke thee, that this carnall Curre

Prayes

Prayes on the issue of his Mothers body,
And makes her Pue-fellow with others none.
Dut. Oh Harries wife, triumph not in my woes:
God witness with me, I haue wept for thine.
Mar. Beare with me: I am hungry for reuenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward,
The other Edward dead, to quit my Edward:
Yong Yorke, he is but boote, because both they Matcht not the high perfection of my losse.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that stab'd my Edward,
And the beholders of this franticke play,
Th'adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Gray,
Vntimely smother'd in their dusky Graues.
Richard yet liues, Hels blacke Intelligencer,
Onely referu'd their Faكتور, to buy soules,
And send them thither: But at hand, at hand
Insues his pittious and vnpietied end.
Earth gapes, Hell burnes, Fiends roare, Saints pray,
To haue him sodainly conuey'd from hence:
Cancell his bond of life, deere God I pray,
That I may liue and say, The Dogge is dead.
Qu. O thou did'st prophesie, the time would come,
That I should wish for thee to helpe me curse
That bottel'd Spider, that soule bunch-back'd Toad.
Mar. I call'd thee then, vaine flourish of my fortune:
I call'd thee then, poore Shadow, painted Queen,
The presentation of but what I was;
The flattering Index of a direfull Pageant;
One heau'd a high, to be hurl'd downe below:
A Mother onely mockt with two faire Babes;
A dreame of what thou wast, a garish Flagge
To be the ayme of euery dangerous Shot;
A signe of Dignity, a Breath, a Bubble;
A Queene in ieast, onely to fill the Scene.
Where is thy Husband now? Where be thy Brothers?
Where be thy two Sonnes? Wherein dost thou Ioy?
Who sues, and kneeles, and sayes, God saue the Queene?
Where be the bending Peeres that flattered thee?
Where be the thronging Troopes that followed thee?
Decline all this, and see what now thou art.
For happy Wife, a most distressed Widdow:
For ioyfull Mother, one that wailles the name:
For one being sued too, one that humbly sues:
For Queene, a very Caytiffe, crown'd with care:
For she that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me:
For she being feared of all, now fearing one:
For she commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the course of Iustice whirld about,
And left thee but a very prey to time,
Hauing no more but Thought of what thou wast.
To torture thee the more, being what thou art,
Thou didst vsurpe my place, and dost thou not Vsurpe the iust proportion of my Sorrow?
Now thy proud Necke, beares halfe my burthen'd yoke,
From which, even heere I slip my wearied head,
And leave the burthen of it all, on thee.
Farwell *Yorke*s wife, and Queene of sad mischance,
These English woes, shall make me smile in France.
Qu. O thou well skill'd in Curses, stay a while,
And teach me how to curse mine enemies.
Mar. Forbeare to sleepe the night, and fast the day:
Compare dead happinesse, with liuing woe:
Thinke that thy Babes were sweeter then they were,
And he that slew them fowler then he is:
Bett'ring thy losse, makes the bad caufer worse,

Reuoluing this, will teach thee how to Curse.

Qu. My words are dull, O quicken them with thine.
Mar. Thy woes will make them sharpe,
And pierce like mine.
Dut. Why should calamity be full of words?
Qu. Windy Attornies to their Clients Woes,
Ayery succeders of intestine ioyes,
Poore breathing Orators of miseries,
Let them haue scope, though what they will impart,
Helpe nothing els, yet do they ease the hart.
Dut. If so then, be not Tongue-ty'd; go with me,
And in the breath of bitter words, let's smother
My damned Son, that thy two sweet Sonnes smother'd.
The Trumpet sounds, be copious in exclamies.

Enter King Richard, and his Train.

Rich. Who intercepts me in my Expedition?
Dut. O she, that might haue intercepted thee
By strangling thee in her accursed wombe,
From all the slaughters (Wretch) that thou hast done.
Qu. Hid'st thou that Forhead with a Golden Crowne
Where't should be branded, if that right were right?
The slaughter of the Prince that ow'd that Crowne,
And the dyre death of my poore Sonnes, and Brothers.
Tell me thou Villaine, slaue, where are my Children?
Dut. Thou Toad, thou Toade,
Where is thy Brother Clarence?
And little Ned Plantagenet his Sonne?
Qu. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Gray?
Dut. Where is kinde Hastings?
Rich. A flourish Trumpets, strike Alarum Drummes:
Let not the Heauens heare these Tell-tale women
Raile on the Lords Anointed. Strike I say.

Flourish.
Either be patient, and intreat me fayre,
Or with the clamorous report of Warre,
Thus will I drowne your exclamations.
Dut. Art thou my Sonne?
Rich. I, I thank God, my Father, and your selfe.
Dut. Then patiently heare my impatience.
Rich. Madam, I haue a touch of your condition,
That cannot brooke the accent of reproofe.
Dut. O let me speake.
Rich. Do then, but Ile not heare.
Dut. I will be milde, and gentle in my words.
Rich. And breese (good Mother) for I am in hast.
Dut. Art thou so hasty? I haue staid for thee (God knowes) in torment, and in agony.
Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?
Dut. No by the holy Rood, thou know'st it well,
Thou cam'st on earth, to make the earth my Hell.
A greuous burthen was thy Birth to me,
Tetchy and wayward was thy Infancie.
Thy School-daies frighfull, desp'rate, wilde, and furious,
Thy prime of Manhood, daring, bold, and venturous:
Thy Age confirm'd, proud, subtle, slye, and bloody,
More milde, but yet more harmfull; Kinde in hatred:
What comfortable houre canst thou name,
That euer grac'd me with thy company?
Rich. Faith none, but Humphrey Hower,
That call'd your Grace
To Breakfast once, forth of my company.
If I be so disgracious in your eye,
Let me march on, and not offend you Madam.
Strike vp the Drumme.
Dut. I prythee heare me speake.

Rich. You speake too bitterly.
Dut. Heare me a word:
For I shall neuer speake to thee againe.
Rich. So.
Dut. Either thou wilt dye, by Gods iust ordinance
Ere from this warre thou turne a Conqueror:
Or I with greefe and extreame Age shall perishe,
And neuer more behold thy face againe.
Therefore take with thee my most greuous Curse,
Which in the day of Battell tyre thee more
Then all the compleat Armour that thou wear'st.
My Prayers on the aduers party fight,
And there the little soules of Edward's Children,
Whisper the Spirits of thine Enemies,
And promise them Successe and Victory:
Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end:
Shame serues thy life, and doth thy death attend. Exit.
Qu. Though far more cause, yet much lesse spirit to curse
Abides in me, I say Amen to her.
Rich. Stay Madam, I must talke a word with you.
Qu. I haue no more sonnes of the Royall Blood
For thee to slaughter. For my Daughters (Richard)
They shall be praying Nunnes, not weeping Queenes:
And therefore leuell not to hit their liues.
Rich. You haue a daughter call'd Elizabeth,
Venerous and Faire, Royall and Gracious?
Qu. And must she dye for this? O let her liue,
And Ile corrupt her Manners, staine her Beauty,
Slander my selfe, as false to Edward's bed:
Throw ouer her the vail of Infamy,
So she may liue vnscarr'd of bleeding slaughter,
I will confesse she was not Edward's daughter.
Rich. Wrong not her Byrth, she is a Royall Princeesse.
Qu. To saue her life, Ile say she is not so.
Rich. Her life is safest onely in her byrth.
Qu. And onely in that safety, dyed her Brothers.
Rich. Loe at their Birth, good starres were opposite.
Qu. No, to their liues, ill friends were contrary.
Rich. All vnauoyded is the doome of Destiny.
Qu. True: when auoyded grace makes Destiny.
My Babes were destin'd to a fairer death,
If grace had blest thee with a fairer life.
Rich. You speake as if that I had slaine my Cousins?
Qu. Cousins indeed, and by their Vnckle couzend,
Of Comfort, Kingdome, Kindred, Freedome, Life,
Whose hand fouer lanch'd their tender hearts,
Thy head (all indirectly) gaue direction.
No doubt the murtherous Knife was dull and blunt,
Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart,
To reuell in the Intrailes of my Lambes.
But that still yse of greefe, makes wilde greefe tame,
My tongue should to thy eares not name my Boyes,
Till that my Nayles were anchor'd in thine eyes:
And in such a desp'rate Bay of death,
Like a poore Barke, of failes and racking rest,
Rush all to peeces on thy Rocky bosome.
Rich. Madam, so thine I in my enterprize
And dangerous successe of bloody warres,
As I intend more good to you and yours,
Then euer you and yours by me were harm'd.
Qu. What good is couer'd with the face of heauen,
To be discouered, that can do me good.
Rich. Th'advancement of your children, gentle Lady.
Qu. Vp to some Scaffold, there to lose their heads.
Rich. Vnto the dignity and height of Fortune,
The high Imperiall Type of this earths glory.

Qu. Flatter my sorrow with report of it:
Tell me, what State, what Dignity, what Honor,
Canst thou demise to any childe of mine.
Rich. Euen all I haue; I, and my selfe and all,
Will I withall indow a childe of thine:
So in the Lethe of thy angry soule,
Thou drowne the sad remembrance of those wrongs,
Which thou supposest I haue done to thee.
Qu. Be breese, least that the proesse of thy kindnesse
Last longer telling then thy kindnesse date.
Rich. Then know,
That from my Soule, I loue thy Daughter.
Qu. My daughters Mother thinks it with her soule.
Rich. What do you thinke?
Qu. That thou dost loue my daughter from thy soule
So from thy Soules loue didst thou loue her Brothers,
And from my hearts loue, I do thanke thee for it.
Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning:
I meane that with my Soule I loue thy daughter,
And do intend to make her Queene of England.
Qu. Well then, who dost ymeane shall be her King.
Rich. Euen he that makes her Queene:
Who else should bee?
Qu. What, thou?
Rich. Euen so: How thinke you of it?
Qu. How canst thou woo her?
Rich. That I would learne of you,
As one being best acquainted with her humour.
Qu. And wilt thou learne of me?
Rich. Madam, with all my heart.
Qu. Send to her by the man that slew her Brothers,
A paire of bleeding hearts: thereon ingraue
Edward and Yorke, then haply will she weepe:
Therefore present to her, as sometime Margaret
Did to thy Father, steep't in Rutlands blood,
A hand-kercheefe, which say to her did dreyne
The purple sappe from her sweet Brothers body,
And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withall.
If this inducement moue her not to lone,
Send her a Letter of thy Noble deeds:
Tell her, thou mad'st away her Vnckle Clarence,
Her Vnckle Rivers, I (and for her sake)
Mad'st quick conueyance with her good Aunt Anne.
Rich. You mocke me Madam, this not the way
To win your daughter.
Qu. There is no other way,
Vnlesse thou could'st put on some other shape,
And not be Richard, that hath done all this.
Rich. Say that I did all this for loue of her.
Qu. Nay then indeed she cannot choose but hate thee
Hauing bought loue, with such a bloody spoyle.
Rich. Looke what is done, cannot be now amended:
Men shall deale vnadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-houres giues leysure to repent.
If I did take the Kingdome from your Sonnes,
To make amends, Ile giue it to your daughter:
If I haue kill'd the issue of your wombe,
To quicken your encrease, I will beget
Mine yssue of your blood, vpon your Daughter:
A Grandams name is little lesse in loue,
Then is the doting Title of a Mother;
They are as Children but one steppe below,
Euen of your mettall, of your very blood:
Of all one paine; saue for a night of groanes
Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.
Your Children were vexation to your youth,

But

But mine shall be a comfort to your Age,
The losse you haue, is but a Sonne being King,
And by that losse, your Daughter is made Queene.
I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore accept such kindnesse as I can.

Dorset your Sonne, that with a fearfull soule
Leads discontented steppes in Forraine soyle,
This faire Alliance, quickly shall call home
To high Promotions, and great Dignity.
The King that calles your beauteous Daughter Wife,
Familiarly shall call thy Dorset, Brother:

Againe shall you be Mother to a King:
And all the Ruines of distressefull Times,
Repayr'd with double Riches of Content.

What? we haue many goodly dayes to see:

The liquid drops of Teares that you haue shed,

Shall come againe, transform'd to Orient Pearle,

Aduantaging their Loue, with interest

Often-times double gaine of happinesse.

Go then (my Mother) to thy Daughter go,

Make bold her bashfull yeares, with your experience,

Prepare her eares to heare a Woers Tale.

Put in her tender heart, th' aspiring Flame

Of Golden Soueraignty: Acquaint the Princesse

With the sweet silent houres of Marriage ioyes:

And when this Arme of mine hath chastised

The petty Rebell, dull-brain'd Buckingham,

Bound with Triumphant Garlands will I come,

And leade thy daughter to a Conquerors bed:

To whom I will reitain my Conquest wonne,

And she shalbe sole Victoreesse, Casars Cesar.

Qu. What were I best to say, her Fathers Brother

Would be, her Lord? Or shall I say her Vnkle?

Or he that slew her Brothers, and her Vnkles?

Vnder what Title shall I woo for thee,

That God, the Law, my Honor, and her Loue,

Can make seeme pleasing to her tender yeares?

Rich. Inferre faire Englands peace by this Alliance.

Qu. Which she shall purchase with still lasting warre.

Rich. Tell her, the King that may command, intreats.

Qu. That at her hands, which the kings King forbids.

Rich. Say she shall be a High and Mighty Queene.

Qu. To vaile the Title, as her Mother doth.

Rich. Say I will loue her euerlastingly.

Qu. But how long shall that title euer last?

Rich. Sweetly in force, vnto her faire liues end.

Qu. But how long fairely shall her sweet life last?

Rich. As long as Heauen and Nature lengthens it.

Qu. As long as Hell and Richard likes of it.

Rich. Say, I her Soueraigne, am her Subiect low.

Qu. But she your Subiect, lothes such Soueraignty.

Rich. Be eloquent in my behalfe to her.

Qu. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.

Rich. Then plainly to her, tell my louing tale.

Qu. Plaine and not honest, is too harsh a style.

Rich. Your Reasons are too shallow, and too quicke.

Qu. O no, my Reasons are too deepe and dead,

Too deepe and dead (poore Infants) in their graues,

Harpe on it still shall I, till heart-strings breake.

Rich. Harpe not on that string Madam, that is past.

Now by my George, my Garter, and my Crowne.

Qu. Prophan'd, dishonor'd, and the third vsurp.

Rich. I sweare.

Qu. By nothing, for this is no Oath:

Thy George prophan'd, hath lost his Lordly Honor;

Thy Garter blemish'd, pawn'd his Knightly Vertue;

Thy Crowne vsurp'd, disgrac'd his Kingly Glory:
If something thou would'st sweare to be believ'd,

Sweare then by something, that thou hast not wrong'd.

Rich. Then by my Selfe.

Qu. Thy Selfe, is selfe-misv'd.

Rich. Now by the World.

Qu. 'Tis full of thy foule wrongs.

Rich. My Fathers death.

Qu. Thy life hath it dishonor'd.

Rich. Why then, by Heauen.

Qu. Heavens wrong is most of all:

If thou didst feare to breake an Oath with him,

The vnity the King my husband made,

Thou hadst not broken, nor my Brothers died.

If thou hadst fear'd to breake an oath by him,

Th' Imperiall mettall, circling now thy head,

Had grac'd the tender temples of my Child,

And both the Princes had bene breathing heere,

Which now two tender Bed-fellowes for dust,

Thy broken Faith hath made the prey for Wormes.

What canst thou sweare by now.

Rich. The time to come.

Qu. That thou hast wrong'd in the time ore-past:

For I my selfe haue many teares to wash

Heereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.

The Children liue, whose Fathers thou hast slaughter'd,

Vngouern'd youth, to waile it with their age:

The Parents liue, whose Children thou hast butcher'd,

Old barren Plants, to waile it with their Age.

Sweare not by time to come, for that thou hast

Misv'd ere vs'd, by times ill-vs'd repast.

Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent:

So thrice I in my dangerous Affayres

Of hostile Armes: My selfe, my selfe confound:

Heauen, and Fortune barre me happy houres:

Day, yeeld me not thy light; nor Night, thy rest.

Be opposite all Planets of good lucke

To my proceeding, if with deere hearts loue,

Immaculate deuotion, holy thoughts,

I tender not thy beautilous Princely daughter.

In her, consists my Happinesse, and thine:

Without her, followes to my selfe, and thee;

Her selfe, the Land, and many a Christian soule,

Death, Desolation, Ruine, and Decay:

It cannot be auoyd'd, but by this;

It will not be auoyd'd, but by this.

Therefore deare Mother (I must call you so)

Be the Attorney of my loue to her:

Pleade what I will be, not what I haue bene;

Not my defects, but what I will deserue:

Urge the Necessity and state of times,

And be not peeuish found, in great Designs.

Qu. Shall I be tempted of the Diuell thus?

Rich. I, if the Diuell tempt you to do good.

Qu. Shall I forget my selfe, to be my selfe.

Rich. I, if your selfe remembrance wrong your selfe.

Qu. Yet thou didst kil my Children.

Rich. But in your daughters wombe I bury them.

Where in that Nest of Spicery they will breed

Selues of themselves, to your recomfote.

Qu. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

Rich. And be a happy Mother by the deed.

Qu. I go, write to me very shortly,

And you shal vnderstand from me her mind.

Rich. Beare her my true loues kisse, and so farewell.

Relenting Foole, and shallow-changing Woman.

How

How now, what newes?

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. Most mightie Soueraigne, on the Western Coast
Rideth a puissant Naue: to our Shores
Throng many doubtfull hollow-hearted friends,

Vnarm'd, and vnresolu'd to beat them backe:

'Tis thought, that Richmond is their Admirall:

And there they hull, expecting but the aide

Of Buckingham, to welcome them ashore.

Rich. Some light-foot friend post to Duke of Norfolk:

Ratcliffe thy selfe, or Catesby, where is hee?

Car. Here, my good Lord.

Rich. Catesby, flye to the Duke.

Car. I will, my Lord, with all conuenient haste.

Rich. Catesby come hither, poste to Salisbury:

When thou com'st thither, Dull vnmindfull Villaine,

Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the Duke?

Car. First, mighty Liege, tell me your Highnesse pleasure,

What from your Grace I shall deliuer to him.

Rich. O true, good Catesby, bid him leuie straight

The greatest strength and power that he can make,

And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.

Car. I goe.

Rat. What, may it please you, shall I doe at Salisbury?

Rich. Why, what would'st thou doe there, before I goe?

Rat. Your Highnesse told me I should poste before.

Rich. My minde is chang'd:

Enter Lord Stanley.

Stanley, what newes with you?

Stan. None, good my Liege, to please you with ſ hearing,

Nor none so bad, but well may be reported.

Rich. Hoyday, a Riddle, neither good nor bad:

What need'st thou runne so many miles about,

When thou mayest tell thy Tale the neereſt way?

Once more, what newes?

Stan. Richmond is on the Seas.

Rich. There let him sinke, and be the Seas on him,

White-liu'd Runnagate, what doth he there?

Stan. I know not, mighty Soueraigne, but by guesse.

Rich. Well, as you guesse.

Stan. Stir'd vp by Dorset, Buckingham, and Morton,

He makes for England, here to clayme the Crowne.

Rich. Is the Chayre emptye? is the Sword vnſway'd?

Is the King dead? the Empire vnpoſſeſt?

What Heire of Torke is there aliue, but wee?

And who is Englands King, but great *Yorke*s Heire?

Then tell me, what makes he vpon the Seas?

Stan. Vnlesse for that, my Liege, I cannot guesse.

Rich. Vnlesse for that he comes to be your Liege,

You cannot guesse wherefore the Welchman comes.

Thou wilt reuolt, and flye to him, I feare.

Stan. No, my good Lord, therefore mistrust me not.

Rich. Where is thy Power then, to beat him back?

Where be thy Tenants, and thy followers?

Are they not now vpon the Western Shore,

Safe-conducting the Rebels from their Shippes?

Stan. No, my good Lord, my friends are in the North.

Rich. Cold friends to me: what do they in the North,

When they should serue their Soueraigne in the West?

Stan. They haue not been commanded, mighty King:

Pleaseth your Maieſtie to giue me leaue,

He muſter vp my friends, and meet your Grace,

Where, and what time your Maieſtie ſhall pleaſe.

Rich. I, thou would'st be gone, to ioyne with Richmond:

But Ile not truſt thee.

Stan. Most mightie Soueraigne,

You haue no cauſe to hold my frienſhip doubtfull,

I neuer was, nor neuer will be falſe.

Rich. Goe then, and muſter men: but leaue behind

Your Sonne George Stanley: looke your heart be firme,

Or elſe his Heads aſſurance is but fraile.

Stan. So deale with him, as I proue true to you.

Exit Stanley.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My gracious Soueraigne, now in Deuonſhire,

As I by friends am well aduertised,

Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughtie Prelate,

Biſhop of Exeter, his elder Brother,

With many moe Confederates, are in Armes.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. In Kent, my Liege, the Guilſords are in Armes,

And euery houre more Competitors

Flocke to the Rebels, and their power growes ſtrong.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord, the Armie of great Buckingham,

Rich. Out on ye, Owles, nothing but Songs of Death,

He ſtriketh him.

There, take thou that, till thou bring better newes.

Meſſ. The newes I haue to tell your Maieſtie,

Is, that by ſudden Floods, and fall of Waters,

*Buckingham*s Armie is diſpers'd and ſcatter'd,

And he himſelfe wandred away alone,

No man knowes whither.

Rich. I cry thee mercie:

There is my Purſe, to cure that Blow of thine.

Hath any well-aduiſed friend proclaym'd

Reward to him that brings the Traytor in?

Meſſ. Such Proclamation hath been made, my Lord.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Sir Thomas Louell, and Lord Marqueſſe Dorſe,

'Tis ſaid, my Liege, in Yorkeſhire are in Armes:

But this good comfort bring I to your Highneſſe,

The Brittain Nanie is diſpers'd by Tempeſt.

Richmond in Dorſetſhire ſent out a Boat

Vnto the ſhore, to aſke thoſe on the Banks,

If they were his Aſſiſtants, yea, or no?

Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham,

Vpon his partie: he miſtruſting them,

Hoys'd ſayle, and made his courſe againe for Brittain.

Rich. March on, march on, ſince we are vp in Armes,

If not to fight with forraine Enemies,

Yet to beat downe theſe Rebels here at home.

Enter Catesby.

Car. My Liege, the Duke of Buckingham is taken,

Is with a mighty power Landed at Milford,
Is colder Newes, but yet they must be told.
Rich. Away towards Salisbury, while we reason here,
A Royall battell might be wonne and lost:
Some one take order Buckingham be brought To Salisbury, the rest march on with me. Flourish. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Derby, and Sir Christopher.

Der. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me,
That in the fye of the most deadly Bore,
My Sonne George Stanley is frankt vp in hold:
If I reuolt, off goes yong Georges head,
The feare of that, holds off my present ayde.
So get thee gone: commend me to thy Lord.
Withall say, that the Queene hath heartily consented
He should espouse Elizabeth hir daughter.
But tell me, where is Princely Richmond now?
Chri. At Penbroke, or at Hertford West in Wales.
Der. What men of Name resort to him?
Chri. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned Souldier,
Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley,
Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, Sir James Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valliant Crew,
And many other of great name and worth:
And towards London do they bend their power,
If by the way they be not fought withall.
Der. Well hye thee to thy Lord: I kisse his hand,
My Letter will resolue him of my minde.
Farewell. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Buckingham with Halberds, led to Execution.

Buc. Will not King Richard let me speake with him?
Sher. No my good Lord, therefore be patient.
Buc. Hastings, and Edwards children, Gray & Rivers,
Holy King Henry, and thy faire Sonne Edward,
Vaughan, and all that haue miscarried,
By vnder-hand corrupted foule iniustice,
If that your moody discontented soules,
Do through the clouds behold this present houre,
Euen for reuenge mocke my destruction.
This is All-soules day (Fellow) is it not?
Sher. It is.
Buc. Why then All-soules day, is my bodies doomsday
This is the day, which in King Edwards time
I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found
False to his Children, and his Wiaues Allies,
This is the day, wherein I wish to fall
By the false Faith of him whom most I trusted.
This, this All-soules day to my fearfull Soule,
Is the determin'd respit of my wrongs:
That high All-seer, which I dallied with,

Hath turn'd my fained Prayer on my head,
And giuen in earnest, what I begg'd in iest.
Thus doth he force the Swords of wicked men
To turne their owne points in their Masters bosomes.
Thus Margarets curse fallies heauy on my necke:
When he (quoth she) shall split thy heart with sorrow,
Remember Margaret was a Prophetesse:
Come leade me Officers to the blocke of shame,
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.
Exeunt Buckingham with Officers.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Richmond, Oxford, Blunt, Herbert, and others, with drum and colours.

Richm. Fellowes in Armes, and my most louing Friends
Bruis'd vnderneath the yoke of Tyranny,
Thus fare into the bowels of the Land,
Haue we marcht on without impediment;
And heere receiue we from our Father Stanley
Lines of faire comfort and encouragement:
The wretched, bloody, and vsurping Boare,
(That spoyle'd your Summer Fields, and fruitfull Vines)
Swilles your warm blood like wash, & makes his trough
In your embowell'd bosomes: This foule Swine
Is now euen in the Centry of this Isle,
Ne're to the Towne of Leicester, as we learne:
From Tamworth thither, is but one dayes march.
In Gods name cheeryly on, courageous Friends,
To reape the Haruest of perpetuall peace,
By this one bloody tryall of sharpe Warre.
Oxf. Every mans Conscience is a thousand men,
To fight agaiust this guilty Homicide.
Her. I doubt not but his Friends will turne to vs.
Blunt. He hath no friends, but what are friends for feir,
Which in his deereft neede will flye from him.
Richm. All for our vantage, then in Gods name march,
True Hope is swift, and flies with Swallowes wings,
Kings it makes Gods, and meaner creatures Kings.
Exeunt Omnes.

Enter King Richard in Armes, with Norfolk, Ratcliffe, and the Earle of Surrey.

Rich. Here pitch our Tent, euen here in Bosworth field,
My Lord of Surrey, why looke you so sad?
Sur. My heart is ten times lighter then my lookes.
Rich. My Lord of Norfolkke.
Nor. Heere most gracious Liege.
Rich. Norfolkke, we must haue knockes:
Ha, must we not?
Nor. We must both giue and take my louing Lord.
Rich. Vp with my Tent, heere wil I lye to night,
But where to morrow? Well, all's one for that.
Who hath defecied the number of the Traitors?
Nor. Six or seuen thousand is their utmost power.
Rich. Why our Battalia trebbles that account:
Besides, the Kings name is a Tower of strength,
Which they vpon the aduerser Faction want.
Vp with the Tent: Come Noble Gentlemen,
Let vs suruey the vantage of the ground.
Call for some men of sound direction:

Let's lacke no Discipline, make no delay,
For Lords, to morrow is a busie day. Exeunt

Enter Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and Dorset.

Richm. The weary Sunne, hath made a Golden set,
And by the bright Tract of his fiery Carre,
Giues token of a goodly day to morrow.
Sir William Brandon, you shall beare my Standard:
Giue me some Inke and Paper in my Tent:
He draw the Forme and Modell of our Battaille,
Limit each Leader to his seuerall Charge,
And part in iust proportion our small Power.
My Lord of Oxford, you Sir William Brandon,
And your Sir Walter Herbert stay with me:
The Earle of Pembroke keepes his Regiment;
Good Captaine Blunt, beare my goodnight to him,
And by the second houre in the Morning,
Desire the Earle to see me in my Tent:
Yet one thing more (good Captaine) do for me:
Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?
Blunt. Volese I haue mistane his Colours much,
(Which well I am assur'd I haue not done)
His Regiment lies halfe a Mile at least
South, from the mighty Power of the King.
Richm. If without perill it be possible,
Sweet Blunt, make some good meanes to speake with him
And giue him from me, this most needfull Note.
Blunt. Vpon my life, my Lord, Ile vndertake it,
And so God giue you quiet rest to night.
Richm. Good night good Captaine Blunt:
Come Gentlemen,
Let vs confule vpon to morrowes Businesse;
Into my Tent, the Dew is rawe and cold.
They withdraw into the Tent.

Enter Richard, Ratcliffe, Norfolk, & Catesby.

Rich. What is't a Clocke?
Cat. It's Supper time my Lord, it's nine a clocke.
King. I will not sup to night,
Giue me some Inke and Paper:
What, is my Beauer easier then it was?
And all my Armour laid into my Tent?
Cat. It is my Liege: and all things are in readinesse.
Rich. Good Norfolk, hye thee to thy charge,
Vie carefull Watch, choose trusty Centinels,
Nor. I go my Lord.
Rich. Sit with the Larke to morrow, gentle Norfolk.
Nor. I warrant you my Lord. Exit
Rich. Ratcliffe.
Rat. My Lord.
Rich. Send out a Pursiuant at Armes
To Stanleys Regiment: bid him bring his power
Before Sun-rising, least his Sonne George fall
Into the blinde Caue of eternall night.
Fill me a Bowle of Wine: Giue me a Watch,
Saddle white Surrey for the Field to morrow:
Look that my Staues be sound, & not too heauy. Ratcliffe.
Rat. My Lord.
Rich. Saw'st the melancholly Lord Northumberland?
Rat. Thomas the Earle of Surrey, and himselfe,
Much about Cockshut time, from Troope to Troope
Went through the Army, chearing vp the Souldiers.
King. So, I am satisfied: Giue me a Bowle of Wine,
I haue not that Alacrity of Spirit,

Nor cheere of Minde that I was wont to haue.
Set it downe. Is Inke and Paper ready?

Rat. It is my Lord.

Rich. Bid my Guard watch. Leauie me.
Ratcliffe, about the mid of night come to my Tent
And helpe to arme me. Leauie me I say. Exit Ratcliff.

Enter Derby to Richmond in his Tent.

Der. Fortune, and Victory sit on thy Helme.
Rich. All comfort that the darke night can afford,
Be to thy Person, Noble Father in Law.
Tell me, how fares our Noble Mother?
Der. I by Attourney, bleste thee from thy Mother,
Who prays continually for Richmonds good:
Somuch for that. The silent houres scale on,
And flakie darkenesse breakes within the East.
In breefe, for so the season bids vs be,
Prepare thy Battell early in the Morning,
And put thy Fortune to th' Arbitrement
Of bloody stroakes, and mortall staring Warre:
I, as I may, that which I would, I cannot,
With best aduantage will deceiue the time,
And ayde thee in this doubtfull shooke of Armes.
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Least being seene, thy Brother, tender George
Be executed in his Fathers sight.
Farewell: the leysure, and the fearfull time
Cuts off the ceremonious Vowes of Loue,
And ample enterchange of sweet Discourfe,
Which so long fundred Friends should dwell vpon:
God giue vs leysure for these rites of Loue.
Once more Adieu, be valiant, and speed well.
Richm. Good Lords conduct him to his Regiment:
He strue with troubled noise, to take a Nap,
Left leaden slumber peize me downe to morrow,
When I should mount with wings of Victory:
Once more, good night kinde Lords, and Gentlemen.
Exeunt. Manet Richmond.

O thou, whose Captaine I account my selfe,
Looke on my Forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising Irons of wrath,
That they may crush downe with a heauy fall,
Th' vsurping Helms of our Aduersaries:
Make vs thy ministers of Chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory:
To thee I do commend my watchfull soule,
Ere I let fall the windowes of mine eyes:
Sleeping, and waking, oh defend me still. Sleeps.

Enter the Ghost of Prince Edward, Sonne to Henry the sixth.

Ch. to Ri. Let me sit heauy on thy soule to morrow.
Thinke how thou stab'st me in my prime of youth
At Teukesbury: Dispaire therefore, and dye.
Ghost to Richm. Be chearefull Richmond,
For the wronged Soules
Of butcher'd Princes, fight in thy behalfe:
King Henries issue Richmond comforts thee.
Enter the Ghost of Henry the sixth.
Ghost. When I was mortall, my Anointed body
By thee was punched full of holes;
Thinke on the Tower, and me: Dispaire, and dye,
Harry the sixth, bids thee dispaire, and dye.
To Richm. Vertuous and holy be thou Conqueror:
Harry that prophesied thou should'st be King,
Doth comfort thee in sleepe: Liue, and flourish. Enter

Enter the Ghost of Clarence.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy in thy soule to morrow.
I that was wash'd to death with Fulsome Wine:
Poore Clarence by thy guile betray'd to death:
To morrow in the battell thinke on me,
And fall thy edgelesse Sword, dispaire and dye.

To Richm. Thou off-spring of the house of Lancaster
The wronged heyres of Yorke do pray for thee,
Good Angels guard thy battell, Live and Flourish.

Enter the Ghosts of Rivers, Gray, and Vaughan.

Riv. Let me sit heavy in thy soule to morrow,
Rivers, that dy'd at Pomfret: dispaire, and dye.

Grey. Thinke vpon Grey, and let thy soule dispaire.

Vaugh. Thinke vpon Vaughan, and with guilty feare
Let fall thy Lance, dispaire and dye.

All to Richm. Awake,

And thinke our wrongs in Richards Bosome,
Will conquer him. Awake, and win the day.

Enter the Ghost of Lord Hastings.

Gho. Bloody and guilty: guiltily awake,
And in a bloody Battell end thy dayes.

Thinke on Lord Hastings: dispaire, and dye.

Hast. to Rich. Quiet vntroubled soule,
Awake, awake:

Arme, fight, and conquer, for faire Englands sake.

Enter the Ghosts of the two young Princes.

Ghosts. Dreame on thy Cousins
Smothered in the Tower:

Let vs be laid within thy bosome Richard,
And weigh thee downe to ruine, shame, and death,
Thy Nephewes soule bids thee dispaire and dye.

Ghosts to Richm. Sleepe Richmond,
Sleepe in Peace, and wake in Ioy,
Good Angels guard thee from the Boares annoy,
Live, and beget a happy race of Kings,
Edwards unhappy Sonnes, do bid thee flourish.

Enter the Ghost of Anne, his Wife.

Ghost to Rich. Richard, thy Wife,
That wretched Anne thy Wife,
That neuer slept a quiet houre with thee,
Now fills thy sleepe with perturbations,
To morrow in the Battaille, thinke on me,
And fall thy edgelesse Sword, dispaire and dye:

Ghost to Richm. Thou quiet soule,
Sleepe thou a quiet sleepe:

Dreame of Successe, and Happy Victory,
Thy Aduersaries Wife doth pray for thee.

Enter the Ghost of Buckingham.

Ghost to Rich. The first was I
That help'd thee to the Crowne:
The last was I that felt thy Tyranny.
O, in the Battaille thinke on Buckingham,
And dye in terror of thy guiltinesse.
Dreame on, dreame on, of bloody deeds and death,
Fainting dispaire; dispaireing yeld thy breath.

Ghost to Richm. I dyed for hope
Ere I could lend thee Ayde;
But cheere thy heart, and be thou not dismayde:
God, and good Angels fight on Richmonds side,
And Richard fall in height of all his pride.

Richard starts out of his dreame.

Rich. Giue me another Horse, bind vp my Wounds:
Haue mercy Iesu. Soft, I did but dreame.
O coward Conscience! how dost thou afflicke me?
The Lights burne blow! It is not dead midnight.
Cold fearefull drops stand on my trembling flesh.

What? do I feare my Selfe? There's none else by,
Richard loues Richard, that is, I am I.

Is there a Murderer heere? No; Yes, I am:

Then flye; What from my Selfe? Great reason: why?
Left I Reuenge. What? my Selfe vpon my Selfe?

Alacke, I loue my Selfe. Wherefore? For any good
That I my Selfe, haue done vnto my Selfe?

O no. Alas, I rather hate my Selfe,
For hatefull Deeds committed by my Selfe.

I am a Villaine: yet I Lye, I am not.
Foole, of thy Selfe speake well: Foole, do not flatter.

My Conscience hath a thousand feuerall Tongues,
And euery Tongue brings in a feuerall Tale,

And euery Tale condemnes me for a Villaine;
Periurie, in the high'st Degree,

Murther, sterne murther, in the dy'r'st degree,
All feuerall finnes, all vs'd in each degree,

Throng all to th' Barre, crying all, Guilty, Guilty.
I shall dispaire, there is no Creature loues me;

And if I die, no soule shall pittie me.
Nay, wherefore should they? Since that I my Selfe,

Finde in my Selfe, no pittie to my Selfe.
Me thought, the Soules of all that I had murder'd

Came to my Tent, and euery one did threat
To morrowes vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.

King. Who's there?

Rat. Ratcliffe my Lord, 'tis I: the early Village Cock
Hath twice done salutation to the Morne,

Your Friends are vp, and buckle on their Armour,

King. O Ratcliffe, I feare, I feare.

Rat. Nay good my Lord, be not afraid of Shadows.
King. By the Apostle Paul, shadowes to night

Haue stroke more terror to the soule of Richard,
Then can the substance of ten thousand Souldiers

Armed in prooffe, and led by shallow Richmond.
'Tis not yet neere day. Come go with me,

Vnder our Tents Ile play the Ease-dropper,
To heare if any meane to shrinke from me.

Exeunt Richard & Ratcliffe.

Enter the Lords to Richmond sitting in his Tent.

Richm. Good morrow Richmond.

Rich. Cry mercy Lords, and watchfull Gentlemen,
That you haue tane a tardie sluggard heere?

Lords. How haue you slept my Lord?

Rich. The sweetest sleepe,
And fairest boading Dreames,

That euer entred in a drowlie head,
Haue I since your departure had my Lords.

Me thought their Soules, whose bodies Richm. murder'd,
Came to my Tent, and cried on Victory:

I promise you my Heart is very iocund,
In the remembrance of so faire a dreame,

How farre into the Morning is it Lords?
Lor. Vpon the stroke of foure.

Rich. Why then 'tis time to Arme, and giue direction.
His Oration to his Souldiers.

More then I haue said, louing Countrymen,
The leysure and Inforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell vpon: yet remember this,

God

God, and our good cause, fight vpon our side,
The Prayers of holy Saints and wronged soules,
Like high rear'd Bulwarkes, stand before our Faces.
(Richard except) those whom we fight against,
Had rather haue vs win, then him they follow.
For, what is he they follow? Truly Gentlemen,
A bloody Tyrant, and a Homicide:
One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made meanes to come by what he hath,
And slaughter'd those that were the meanes to help him:
A base foule Stone, made precious by the soyle
Of Englands Chaire, where he is falsely set:
One that hath euer beene Gods Enemy.
Then if you fight against Gods Enemy,
God will in iustice ward you as his Soldiers.
If you do sweare to put a Tyrant downe,
You sleepe in peace, the Tyrant being slaine:
If you do fight against your Countries Foes,
Your Countries Fat shall pay your paines the hyre.
If you do fight in safegard of your wiues,
Your wiues shall welcome home the Conquerors.
If you do free your Children from the Sword,
Your Childrens Children quits it in your Age.
Then in the name of God, and all these rights,
Advance your Standards, draw your willing Swords.
For me, the ranfome of my bold attempt,
Shall be this cold Corpes on the earth's cold face.
But if I thrive, the gaine of my attempt,
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound Drummes and Trumpets boldly, and cheerefully,
God, and Saint George, Richmond, and Victory.

Enter King Richard, Ratcliffe, and Catesby.

R. What said Northumberland as touching Richmond?

Rat. That he was neuer trained vp in Armes.

King. He said the truth: and what said Surrey then?

Rat. He said, and said, the better for our purpose.

King. He was in the right, and so indeed it is.
Tell the clocke there. Clocke strikes.

Giue me a Kalender: Who saw the Sunne to day?

Rat. Not I my Lord.

King. Then he disdaines to shine: for by the Booke
He should haue brau'd the East an houre ago,
A blacke day will it be to somebody. Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.

King. The Sun will not be seene to day,
The sky doth frowne, and lowre vpon our Army.
I would these dewy teares were from the ground.

Not shine to day? Why, what is that to me
More then to Richmond? For the selfe-same Heauen

That frownes on me, lookes sadly vpon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arme, arme, my Lord: the foe vaunts in the field.

King. Come, bustle, bustle. Caparison my horse.
Call vp Lord Stanley, bid him bring his power,
I will leade forth my Soldiers to the plaine,

And thus my Battell shall be ordred.

My Foreward shall be drawne in length,

Consisting equally of Horse and Foot:

Our Archers shall be placed in the mid'st;

John Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Earle of Surrey,

Shall haue the leading of the Foot and Horse.

They thus directed, we will follow

In the maine Battell, whose puissance on either side
Shall be well-winged with our cheefest Horse:
This, and Saint George to boote.

What think'st thou Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction warlike Soueraigne,
This found I on my Tent this Morning.

Lockey of Norfolk, be not so bold,

For Dickon thy maister is bought and sold.

King. A thing deuised by the Enemy.

Go Gentlemen, euery man to his Charge,

Let not our babling Dreames affright our soules:

For Conscience is a word that Cowards vse,

Deuis'd at first to keepe the strong in awe,

Our strong armes be our Conscience, Swords our Law.

March on, ioyne brauely, let vs too't pell mell,

If not to heauen, then hand in hand to Hell!

What shall I say more then I haue infer'd?

Remember whom you are to cope withall,

A sort of Vagabonds, Rascals, and Run-aways,

A scum of Brittaines, and base Lackey Pezants,

Whom their o're-cloyed Country vomits forth

To desperate Aduentures, and assur'd Destruction.

You sleeping safe, they bring you to vnrest:

You hauing Lands, and blest with beauteous wiues,

They would refraine the one, distaine the other,

And who doth leade them, but a pa'try Fellow?

Long kept in Britaine at our Mothers cost,

A Milke-sop, one that neuer in his life

Felt so much cold, as ouer shooes in Snow:

Let's whip these straglers o're the Seas againe,

Lash hence these over-weening Ragges of France,

These famish'd Beggars, weary of their liues,

Who (but for dreaming on this fond exploit)

For want of meanes (poore Rats) had hang'd themselues.

If we be conquered, let men conquer vs,

And not these bastard Brittaines, whom our Fathers

Haue in their owne Land beaten, bob'd, and thump'd,

And on Record, left them the heires of shame.

Shall these enioy our Lands? lye with our Wiues?

Rauish our daughters? Drum as farre off.

Hearke, I heare their Drumme,

Right Gentlemen of England, fight boldly yeomen,

Draw Archers draw your Arrowes to the head,

Spurre your proud Horses hard, and ride in blood,

Amaze the welkin with your broken stauces.

Enter a Messenger.

What sayes Lord Stanley, will he bring his power?

Mes. My Lord, he doth deny to come.

King. Off with his sonne Georges head.

Nor. My Lord, the Enemy is past the Marsh:

After the battaille, let George Stanley dye.

King. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom.

Advance our Standards, set vpon our Foes,

Our Ancient word of Courage, faire S. George

Inspire vs with the spleene of fiery Dragons:

Vpon them, Victorie sits on our helpe.

Alarums, excursions. Enter Catesby.

Cat. Rescue my Lord of Norfolk,

Rescue, Rescue;

The King enacts more wonders then a man,

Daring an opposite to euery danger:

His horse is slaine, and all on foot he fights,

Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death:

Rescue faire Lord, or else the day is lost.

Alarums.

12

Enter

Enter Richard.

Rich. A Horse, a Horse, my Kingdome for a Horse.
 Cates. Withdraw my Lord, He helpe you to a Horse.
 Rich. Slaue, I haue set my life vpon a cast,
 And I will stand the hazard of the Dye:
 I thinke there be fixe Richmonds in the field,
 Finchaue I slaine to day, in stead of him,
 A Horse, a Horse, my Kingdome for a Horse.

Alarums. Enter Richard and Richmond, they fight, Richard is slaine.

Retreat and Flourish. Enter Richmond, Derby bearing the Crowne, with diuers other Lords.

Richm. God, and your Armes
 Be prais'd Victorious Friends;
 The day is ours, the bloody Dogge is dead.
 Der. Courageous Richmond,
 Well hast thou acquit thee: Lo,
 Heere these long vsurped Royalties,
 From the dead Temples of this bloody Wretch,
 Haue I pluck'd off, to grace thy Browes withall.
 Weare it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of Heauen, say Amen to all.
 But tell me, is yong George Stanley liuing?

Der. He is my Lord, and safe in Leicester Towne,
 Whither (if you please) we may withdraw vs.

Richm. What men of name are slaine on either side?

Der. Iohn Duke of Norfolk, Walter Lord Ferris,
 Sir Robert Brokenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Interre their Bodies, as become their Birth,
 Proclaime a pardon to the Soldiers fled,
 That in submission will returne to vs,
 And then as we haue tane the Sacrament,
 We will vnite the White Rose, and the Red.
 Smile Heauen vpon this faire Coniunction,
 That long haue frown'd vpon their Enmity:
 What Traitor heares me, and sayes not Amen?
 England hath long bene mad, and fear'd her selfe;
 The Brother blindly shed the Brothers blood;
 The Father, rashly slaughtered his owne Sonnes;
 The Sonne compell'd, beene Butcher to the Sire;
 All this diuided Yorke and Lancaster,
 Diuided, in their dire Diuision.

O now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,
 The true Succeeders of each Royall House,
 By Gods faire ordinance, conioyne together:
 And let thy Heires (God if thy will be so)
 Enrich the time to come, with Smoothe-fac'd Peace,
 With smiling Plenty, and faire Prosperous dayes.
 Abate the edge of Traitors, Gracious Lord,
 That would reduce these bloody dayes againe,
 And make poore England weepe in Streames of Blood;
 Let them not lue to taste this Lands increafe,
 That would with Treason, wound this faire Lands peace.
 Now Ciuill wounds are stopp'd, Peace liues agen;
 That she may long liue heere, God say, Amen. Exeunt

FINIS.

The Famous History of the Life of King HENRY the Eighth.

THE PROLOGUE.

Come no more to make you laugh, Things now,
 That beare a Weighty, and a Serious Brow,
 Sad, high, and working, full of State and woe:
 Such Noble Scenes, as draw the Eye to flow
 We now present. Those that can Pity, heere
 May (if they thinke it well) let fall a Teare,
 The Subject will deserue it. Such as gine
 Their Money out of hope they may beleue,
 May heere finde Truth too. Those that come to see
 Onely a show or two, and so a gree,
 The Play may passe: If they be still, and willing,
 He undertake may see away their shilling
 Richly in two short houres. Onely they
 That come to heare a Merry, Bawdy Play,
 A noyse of Targets: Or to see a Fellow
 In a long Motley Coate, garaded with Tellow,

Will be decey'd. For gentle Hearers, know
 To ranke our chosen Truth with such a show
 As Foole, and Fight is, beside forfetting
 Our owne Braines, and the Opinion that we bring
 To make that onely true, we now intend,
 Will leane vs neuer an vnderstanding Friend.
 Therefore, for Goodnesse sake, and as you are knowne
 The First and Happiest Hearers of the Towne,
 Be sad, as we would make ye. Thinke ye see
 The very Persons of our Noble Story;
 As they were Liuing: Thinke you see them Great,
 And follow'd with the generall throng, and sweat
 Of thousand Friends: Then, in a moment, see
 How soone this Mightinesse, meets Misery:
 And if you can be merry then, He say,
 A Man may weepe vpon his Wedding day.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk at one doore. At the other,
 the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Aburghenny.

Buckingham.

Good morrow, and well met. How haue ye done
 Since last we saw in France?
 Norf. I thanke your Grace:
 Healthfull, and euer since a fresh Admirer
 Of what I saw there.

Buck. An vntimely Ague
 Staid me a Prisoner in my Chamber, when Those Sunnes of Glory, those two Lights of Men
 Met in the vale of Andren.

Norf. Twixt Guynes and Arde,
 I was then present, saw them salute on Horsebacke,
 Beheld them when they lighted, how they clung
 In their Embrace, as they grew together,
 Which had they,
 What foure Thron'd ones could haue weigh'd
 Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
 I was my Chambers Prisoner.

Norf. Then you lost
 The view of earthly glory: Men might say
 Till this time Pompe was single, but now married
 To one about it selfe. Each following day
 Became the next dayes master, till the last
 Made former Wonders, it's. To day the French,
 All Clinquant all in Gold, like Heathen Gods
 Shone downe the English; and to morrow, they Made Britaine, India: Euery man that stood, Shew'd like a Mine. Their Dwarfish Pages were
 As Cherubins, all gilt: the Madams too,
 Not vs'd to toyle, did almost sweat to beare
 The Pride vpon them, that their very labour
 Was to them, as a Painting. Now this Maske
 Was cry'd incomparable; and th'ensuing night
 Made it a Foole, and Begger. The two Kings
 Equall in lustre, were now best, now worst
 As presence did present them: Him in eye,
 Still him in praise, and being present both,
 'Twas said they saw but one, and no Discerner
 Durst wagge his Tongue in censure, when these Sunnes
 (For so they phrase 'em) by their Heralds challeng'd
 The Noble Spirits to Armes, they did performe

Beyond

Beyond thoughts Compass, that former fabulous storie
Being now scene, possible enough, got credit
That Buc was beleu'd.

Buc. Oh you go farre.

Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In Honor, Honesty, the tract of eu'ry thing,
Would by a good Discourser loofe some life,
Which Actions selfe, was tongue too.

Buc. All was Royall,
To the disposing of it nought rebell'd,
Order gaue each thing view. The Office did
Distinctly his full Function: who did guide,
I meane who set the Body, and the Limbes
Of this great Sport together?

Nor. As you guesse:
One certes, that promises no Element
In such a businesse.

Buc. I pray you who, my Lord?

Nor. All this was ordred by the good Discretion
Of the right Reuerend Cardinal of Yorke.

Buc. The diuell speed him: No mans Pyc is freed
From his Ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fierce Vanities? I wonder,
That such a Keech can with his very bulke
Take vp the Rayes o'th'beneficiall Sun,
And keepe it from the Earth.

Nor. Surely Sir,
There's in him stiffe, that put's him to these ends:
For being not propt by Auncstry, whose grace
Chalkes Successors their way; nor call'd vpon
For high feats done to'th' Crowne; neither Allied
To eminent Assistants; but Spider-like
Out of his Selfe-drawing Web, O giues vs note,
The force of his owne merit makes his way
A guift that heauen giues for him, which buyes
A place next to the King.

Abur. I cannot tell
What Heauen hath giuen him: let some Grauer eye
Pierce into that, but I can see his Pride
Peepe through each part of him: whence ha's he that,
If not from Hell? The Diuell is a Niggard,
Or ha's giuen all before, and he begins
A new Hell in himselfe.

Buc. Why the Diuell,
Vpon this French going out,ooke he vpon him
(Without the priuity o'th' King) t'appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes vp the File
Of all the Gentry; for the most part such
To whom as great a Charge, as little Honor
He meant to lay vpon: and his owne Letter
The Honourable Boord of Councell, out
Must fetch him in, he Papers.

Abur. I do know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that haue
By this, so sickn'd their Estates, that neuer
They shall abound as formerly.

Buc. O many
Haue broke their backes with laying Mannors on 'em
For this great Iourney. What did this vanity
But minister communication of
A most poore issue.

Nor. Greeungly I thinke,
The Peace betwene the French and vs, not yalues
The Cost that did conclude it.

Buc. Every man,
After the hideous storme that follow'd, was

A thing Inspir'd, and not consulting, broke
Into a generall Prophecie; That this Tempest
Dashing the Garment of this Peace, aboarded
The sodaine breach on't.

Nor. Which is budded out,
For France hath flaw'd the League, and hath attach'd
Our Merchants goods at Burdeaux.

Abur. Is it therefore?
Th' Ambassador is silenc'd?

Nor. Marry is't.
Abur. A proper Title of a Peace, and purchas'd?
At a superfluous rate.

Buc. Why all this Businesse
Our Reuerend Cardinal carried.

Nor. Like it your Grace,
The State takes notice of the priuate difference
Betwixt you, and the Cardinal. I aduise you
(And take it from a heart, that wishes towards you Honor, and plenteous safety) that you reade
The Cardinals Malice, and his Potency
Together; To consider further, that What his high Hatred would effect, wants not A Minister in his Power. You know his Nature,
That he's Reuengefull; and I know, his Sword
Hath a sharpe edge: It's long, and't may be saide
It reaches farre, and where't will not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosome vp my counsell,
You'll finde it wholefome. Lo, where comes that Rock
That I aduise your shunning.

Enter Cardinal Wolsey, the Purse borne before him, certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with Papers: The Cardinal in his passage, fixeth his eye on Buck-ham, and Buckingham on him, both full of disdain.

Car. The Duke of Buckingham's Surueyor? Ha?
Where's his Examination?

Secr. Heere so please you.

Car. Is he in person, ready?

Secr. I, please your Grace.

Car. Well, we shall then know more, & Buckingham
Shall lessen this bigge looke.

Exeunt Cardinal, and his Train.
Buc. This Butchers Curre is venom'd-mouth'd, and I
Haue not the power to muzzle him, therefore best
Not wake him in his slumber. A Beggars booke,
Out-worths a Nobles blood.

Nor. What are you chaff'd?
Aske God for Temp'rance, that's th'appliance onely
Which your disease requires.

Buc. I read in's looks
Matter against me, and his eye reuil'd
Me as his abiect obiect, at this instant
He bores me with some trick; He's gone to'th' King:
He follow, and out-stare him.

Nor. Stay my Lord,
And let your Reason with your Choller question
What 'tis you go about: to climbe steepe hills
Requires slow pace at first. Anger is like
A full hot Horse, who being allow'd his way
Selfe-mettle tyres him: Not a man in England
Can aduise me like you: Be to your selfe,
As you would to your Friend.

Buc. He to the King,
And from a mouth of Honor, quite cry downe

This

This Ipswich fellowes insolence; or proclaime,
There's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be aduic'd;
Heat not a Furnace for your foe so hot
That it do singe your selfe. We may out-runne
By violent swiftnesse that which we run at;
And lose by over-running: know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor till't run ore,
In seeming to augment it, waits it: be aduic'd;
I say againe there is no English Soule
More stronger to direct you then your selfe;
If with the sap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir,
I am thankfull to you, and I'll goe along
By your prescription: but this top-proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions, by Intelligence,
And proofes as cleere as Founts in Italy, when
We see each graine of grauell; I doe know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not treasonous.
Buck. To th' King I'll say't, & make my vouch as strong
As shore of Rocks: attend. This holy Foxe,
Or Wolfe, or both (for he is equall rau'nous
As he is subtil, and as prone to mischief,
As able to perform't) his minde, and place
Infecting one another, yea reciprocally,
Only to shew his pompe, as well in France,
As here at home, suggests the King our Master
To this last costly Treaty: Th'enteruiew,
That swallowed so much treasure, and like a glasse
Did breake it wrenching.

Nor. Faith, and so it did.
Buck. Pray giue me fauour Sir: This cunning Cardinal
The Articles o'th' Combination drew
As himselfe pleas'd; and they were ratified
As he crieth thus let be, to as much end,
As giue a Crutch to th'dead. But our Count-Cardinal
Has done this, and tis well: for worthy Wolsey
(Who cannot erre) he did it. Now this followes, (Which as I take it, is a kinde of Puppie To'th' old dam Treason) Charles the Emperour, Vnder pretence to see the Queene his Aunt,
(For twas indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey) here makes visitation,
His feares were that the Interview betwixt
England and France, might through their amity
Breed him some preiudice; for from this League,
Peep'd harmes that menac'd him. Priuily
Deales with our Cardinal, and as I troa

Which I doe well; for I am sure the Emperour
Paid ere he promis'd, whereby his Suit was granted
Ere it was ask'd. But when the way was made
And paid with gold: the Emperour thus desir'd,
That he would please to alter the Kings course,
And breake the foresaid peace. Let the King know
(As soone he shall by me) that thus the Cardinal
Does buy and sell his Honour as he pleases,
And for his owne aduantage.

Nor. I am forry
To heare this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in't.

Buck. No, not a fillable:
I doe pronounce him in that very shape
He shall appeare in proofe.

Enter Brandon, a Sergeant at Armes before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Brandon. Your Office Sergeant: execute it.

Sergeant. Sir,
My Lord the Duke of Buckingham, and Earle
Of Hereford, Stafford and Northampton, I
Arrest thee of High Treason, in the name
Of our most Soueraigne King.

Buck. Lo you my Lord,
The net has falne vpon me, I shall perishe
Vnder deuice, and practise:

Bran. I am sorry,
To see you tane from liberty, to looke on
The busines present. Tis his Highnes pleasure
You shall to th' Tower.

Buck. It will helpe me nothing
To plead mine Innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit't part, black. The will of Hea'n
Be done in this and all things: I obey.
O my Lord Aburgany: Fare you well.

Bran. Nay, he must beare you company. The King
Is pleas'd you shall to th' Tower, till you know
How he determines further.

Abur. As the Duke said,
The will of Heauen be done, and the Kings pleasure
By me obey'd.

Bran. Here is a warrant from
The King, t'attach Lord Mornacut, and the Bodies
Of the Dukes Confessor, Iohn de la Car,
One Gilbert Pecke, his Councellour.

Buck. So, so;
These are the limbs o'th' Plot: no more I hope.

Bra. A Monke o'th' Charitreux.

Buck. O Michaell Hopkins?

Bra. He.

Buck. My Surueyor is false: The ore-great Cardinal
Hath shew'd him gold; my life is spand already:
I am the shadow of poore Buckingham,
Whose Figure euen this instant Clowd puts on,
By Darkning my cleere Sunne. My Lords farewell. Exe.

Scena Secunda.

Cornets. Enter King Henry, leaning on the Cardinals shoulder, the Nobles, and Sir Thomas Louell: the Cardinal places himselfe vnder the Kings feete on his right side.

King. My life it selfe, and the best heart of it,
Thanks you for this great care: I stood i'th' leuell
Of a full-charg'd confederacie, and giue thanks
To you that choak'd it. Let be cald before vs
That Gentleman of Buckingham's, in person,
He heare him his confessions iustifie,
And point by point the Treasons of his Maister,
He shall againe relate.

*A noise within crying roome for the Queene, usher'd by the Duke of Norfolk. Enter the Queene, Norfolk and Suffolke: she kneels. King riseth from his State, takes her vp, kisses and placeth
her by him.*

Queen. Nay, we must longer kneele; I am a Suitor.
King. Arise, and take place by vs; halfe your Suit
Neuer name to vs; you haue halfe our power:

The

The other moiety ere you aske is given,
Repeat your will, and take it.

Queen. Thanke your Maiesty
That you would loue your selfe, and in that loue
Not vnconsidered leaue your Honour, nor
The dignity of your Office; is the poynt
Of my Petition.

Kin. Lady mine proceed.

Queen. I am solicited not by a few,
And those of true condition; That your Subiects
Are in great grievance: There haue beene Commissions
Sent downe among 'em, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their Loyalties; wherein, although
My good Lord Cardinall, they vent reproches
Most bitterly on you, as putter on
Of these exactions: yet the King, our Maister (not Whose Honor Heauen shield from soile; euen he escapes
Language vnmannerly; yea, such which breakes
The sides of loyalty, and almost appeares
In lowd Rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appeares,
It doth appeare; for, vpon these Taxations,
The Clothiers all not able to maintaine
The many to them longing, haue put off
The Spinners, Carders, Fullers, Weauers, who
Vnfit for other life, compeld by hunger
And lack of other meanes, in desperate manner
Daring th'euil too th'eternall, are all in vprore,
And danger serues among them.

Kin. Taxation?

Wherein? and what Taxation? My Lord Cardinall,
You that are blam'd for it alike with vs,
Know you of this Taxation?

Card. Please you Sir,

I know but of a single part in ought Pertaines to th' State; and front but in that File
Where others tell steps with me.

Queen. No, my Lord?

You know no more then others? But you frame
Things that are knowne alike, which are not wholsome
To those which would not know them, and yet must Perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions (Whereof my Soueraigne would haue note) they are Most pestilent to th' hearing, and to beare 'em,
The Backe is Sacrifice to th' load; They say
They are deu'd by you, or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

Kin. Still Exaction?

The nature of it, in what kinde let's know,
Is this Exaction?

Queen. I am much too venturous

In tempting of your patience; but am boldned
Vnder your promis'd pardon. The Subiects grieve
Comes through Commissions, which compels from each
The sixt part of his Substance, to be leuied
Without delay; and the pretence for this
Is nam'd, your warres in France: this makes bold mouths,
Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze
Allegiance in them; their curses now
Lie where their prayers did: and it's come to passe,
This tractable obedience is a Slaue
To each incensed Will: I would your Highnesse
Would giue it quicke consideration; for
There is no primer basenesse.

Kin. By my life,

This is against our pleasure.

Card. And for me,

I haue no further gone in this, then by
A single voice, and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the Iudges: If I am
Traduc'd by ignorant Tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The Chronicles of my doing: Let me say,
'Tis but the fate of Place, and the rough Brake
That Vertue must goe through: we must not flint
Our necessary actions, in the feare
To cope malicious Censurers, which euer,
As rauenous Fishes doe a Vessell follow
That is new trim'd; but benefit no further
Then vainly longing. What we oft doe best,
By sicke Interpreters (once weake ones) is
Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft Hitting a grosser quality, is cride vp
For our best Act: if we shall stand still,
In feare our motion will be mock'd, or carp'd at,
We should take roote here, where we sit;
Or sit State: Statues onely.

Kin. Things done well,

And with a care, exempt themselves from feare:
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Haue you a President
Of this Commission? I beleue, not any.
We must not rend our Subiects from our Lawes,
And flicke them in our Will. Sixt part of each?
A trembling Contribution; why we take
From every Tree, lop, barke, and part o'th' Timber:
And though we leaue it with a roote thus hackt,
The Ayre will drinke the Sap. To every County
Where this is question'd, send our Letters, with Free pardon to each man that has deny'd
The force of this Commission: pray looke too;
I put it to your care.

Card. A word with you.

Let there be Letters writ to euery Shire,
Of the Kings grace and pardon: the greued Commons
Hardly conceiue of me. Let it be nois'd,
That through our Intercession, this Reuokement
And pardon comes: I shall anon aduise you Further in the proceeding. Exit Secret.

Enter Surrueyor.

Queen. I am sorry, that the Duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.

Kin. It grieues many:

The Gentleman is Learn'd, and a most rare Speaker,
To Nature none more bound; his trayning such,
That he may furnish and instruct great Teachers,
And neuer seeke for ayd out of himselfe: yet see,
When these so Noble benefits shall proue
Not well dispos'd, the minde growing once corrupt,
They turne to vicious formes, ten times more vgly
Then euer they were faire. This man so compleat,
Who was enrold 'mongst wonders; and when we Almost with rauish'd listning, could not finde
His houre of speech, a minute: He, (my Lady)
Hath into monstrous habits put the Graces
That once were his, and is become as blacke,
As if besmeard in hell. Sit by Vs, you shall heare
(This was his Gentleman in trust) of him
Things to strike Honour sad. Bid him recount
The fore-recited praefises, whereof
We cannot feele too little, heare too much.

Card.

Card. Stand forth, & with bold spirit relate what you
Most like a carefull Subiect haue collected
Out of the Duke of Buckingham.

Kin. Speake freely.

Sur. First, it was vsuall with him; euery day
It would infect his Speech: That if the King
Should without issue dye; hee'l carry it so
To make the Scepter his. These very words
I've heard him vtter to his Sonne in Law,
Lord Aburgany, to whom by oth he menac'd
Reuenge vpon the Cardinall.

Card. Please your Highnesse note
This dangerous conception in this point,
Not frended by his wish to your High person;
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends.

Queen. My learn'd Lord Cardinall;
Deliver all with Charity.

Kin. Speake on;

How grounded hee his Title to the Crowne
Vpon our fail; to this poynt hast thou heard him,
At any time speake ought?

Sur. He was brought to this,
By a vaine Prophecie of Nicholas Henton.

Kin. What was that Henton?

Sur. Sir, a Chartreuse Fryer,
His Confessor, who fed him euery minute
With words of Soueraignty.

Kin. How know'st thou this?

Sur. Not long before your Highnesse sped to France,
The Duke being at the Rose, within the Parish
Saint Laurence Poulney, did of me demand
What was the speech among the Londoners,
Concerning the French Iourney. I replide,
Men feare the French would proue perfidious
To the Kings danger: presently, the Duke
Said, 'twas the feare indeed, and that he doubted
'twould proue the verity of certaine words
Spoke by a holy Monke, that oft, sayes he,
Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit
Iohn de la Car, my Chaplaine, a choyce howre
To heare from him a matter of some moment:
Whom after vnder the Commissions Seale,
He solemnly had sworne, that what he spoke
My Chaplaine to no Creature liuing, but
To me, should vtter, with demure Confidence,
This pausingly ensu'd; neither the King, nor's Heyres
(Tell you the Duke) shall prosper, bid him striue
To the loue o'th' Commonalty, the Duke
Shall gouerne England.

Queen. If I know you well,

You were the Dukes Surrueyor, and lost your Office
On the complaint o'th' Tenants; take good heed
You charge not in your spleene a Noble person,
And spoyle your nobler Soule; I say, take heed;
Yes, heartily beseech you.

Kin. Let him on: Goe forward.

Sur. On my Soule, He speake but truth,
I told my Lord the Duke, by th' Diuels illusions
The Monke might be deceiu'd, and that 'twas dangerous
For this to ruminate on this so farre, vntill
It forg'd him some designe, which being beleeu'd
It was much like to doe: He answer'd, Tush,
It can doe me no damage; adding further,
That had the King in his last Sicknesse faild,
The Cardinals and Sir Thomas Louells heads

Should haue gone off.

Kin. Ha? What, so rancke? Ah, ha,
There's mischief in this man; canst thou say further?

Sur. I can my Liedge.

Kin. Proceed.

Sur. Being at Greenwich,

After your Highnesse had reprou'd the Duke

About Sir William Blumer. Quant.

Kin. I remember of such a time, being my sworn ser-

The Duke retin'd him his, But on: what hence?

Sur. If (quoth he) I for this had beene committed,

As to the Tower, I thought; I would haue plaid

The Part my Father meant to act vpon

Th' Vsurper Richard, who being at Salisbury,

Made suit to come in's presence; which if granted,

(As he made semblance of his duty) would

Haue put his knife into him.

Kin. A Gyant Traytor.

Card. Now Madam, may his Highnesse liue in freedome,

And this man out of Prison.

Queen. God mend all. (say'A?)

Kin. Ther's something more would out of thee; what

Sur. After the Duke his Father, with the knife

He stretch'd him, and with one hand on his dagger,

Another spread on's breast, mounting his eyes,

He did discharge a horrible Oath, whose tenor

Was, were he eull vs'd, he would outgoe

His Father, by as much as a performance

Do's an irresolute purpose.

Kin. There's his period,

To sheath his knife in vs: he is attach'd,

Call him to present tryall: if he may

Finde mercy in the Law, 'tis his; if none,

Let him not seek't of vs: By day and night

Hee's Traytor to th' height. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter L. Chamberlaine and L. Sandys.

L. Ch. Is't possible the spels of France should iuggle
Men into such strange mysteries?

L. San. New customes,
Though they be neuer so ridiculous,
(Nay let 'em be vmanly) yet are fallow'd.

L. Ch. As farre as I see, all the good our English

Haue got by the late Voyage, is but meere

A fit or two o'th' face, (but they are shrewd ones)

For when they hold 'em, you would sweare directly

Their very noses had been Councillours

To Pepin or Clotharius, they keepe State so.

L. San. They haue all new legs,

And lame ones; one would take it,

That neuer see 'em pace before, the Spauen

A Spring-halt rain'd among 'em.

L. Ch. Death my Lord,

Their cloathes are after such a Pagan cut too't,

That sure th' haue worne our Ch' iftendome: how now?

What newes, Sir Thomas Louell?

Enter Sir Thomas Louell.

Louell. Faith my Lord,

I heare of none but the new Proclamation,

That's clapt vpon the Court Gate.

L. Cham.

L. Cham. What is't for?
Low. The reformation of our trauel'd Gallants,
 That fill the Court with quarrels, talke, and Taylors.

L. Cham. I'm glad 'tis there;
 Now I would pray our Monseurs
 To thinke an English Courtier may be wise,
 And neuer see the Louure.

Low. They must either
 (For so run the Conditions) leaue those remnants
 Of Foole and Feather, that they got in France,
 With all their honourable points of ignorance
 Pertaining thereunto; as Fights and Fire-workes, Abusing better men then they can be
 Out of a forreigne wife dome, renouncing cleane
 The faith they haue in Tennis and tall Stockings,
 Short blifted Breeches, and those types of Trauell;
 And vnderstand againe like honest men,
 Or pack to their old Playfellowes; there, I take it,
 They may Cum Præstigio, wee away
 The lag end of their lewdnesse, and be laugh'd at.

L. San. 'Tis time to giue 'em Physicke, their diseases
 Are growne so catching.

L. Cham. What a losse our Ladies
 Will haue of these trim vanities?

Lowell. I marry,
 There will be woe indeed Lords, the flye whorsons
 Haue got a speeding trick to lay downe Ladies.
 A French Song, and a Fiddle, ha's no Fellow.

L. San. The Diuell fiddle 'em,
 I am glad they are going,
 For sure there's no conuerting of 'em: now
 An honest Country Lord as I am, beaten
 A long time out of play, may bring his plaine song,
 And haue an houre of hearing, and by'r Lady
 Held currant Musicke too.

L. Cham. Well said Lord Sands,
 Your Colts tooth is not cast yet?

L. San. No my Lord,
 Nor shall not while I haue a stump.

L. Cham. Sir Thomas,
 Whither were you a going?

Low. To the Cardinals;
 Your Lordship is a guest too.

L. Cham. O, 'tis true;
 This night he makes a Supper, and a great one,
 To many Lords and Ladies; there will be
 The Beauty of this Kingdome Ile assure you.

Low. That Churchman
 Beares a bounteous minde indeed,
 A hand as fruitfull as the Land that feeds vs,
 His dewes fall euery where.

L. Cham. No doubt hee's Noble;
 He had a blacke mouth that said other of him.

L. San. He may my Lord,
 Ha's wherewithall in him;
 Sparing would shew a worse sinne, then ill Doctrine,
 Men of his way, should be most liberall,
 They are set heere for examples.

L. Cham. True, they are so;
 But few now giue so great ones:
 My Barge stayes;
 Your Lordship shall along: Come, good Sir Thomas,
 We shall be late elie, which I would not be,
 For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guilford
 This night to be Comptrollers.

L. San. I am your Lordships.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Hoboyes. A small Table vnder a State for the Cardinall, a longer Table for the Guests. Then Enter Anne Bullen, and diuers other Ladies, & Gentlemen, as Guests at one Doore; at another Doore enter
 Sir Henry Guilford.

S. Hen. Guilf. Ladies,
 A generall welcome from his Grace
 Salutes ye all; This Night he dedicates
 To faire content, and you: None heere he hopes
 In all this Noble Beuy, has brought with her
 One care abroad: hee would haue all as merry:
 As first, good Company, good wine, good welcome,
 Can make good people.

Enter L. Chamberlaine L. Sands, and Lowell.
 O my Lord, y're tardy;
 The very thought of this faire Company,
 Clapt wings to me.

Cham. You are young Sir Henry Guilford.
San. Sir Thomas Lowell, had the Cardinall
 But halfe my Lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should finde a running Banket, ere they rested,
 I thinke would better please 'em: by my life,
 They are a sweet society of faire ones.

Low. O that your Lordship were but now Confessor,
 To one or two of these.

San. I would I were,
 They should finde easie penance.

Low. Faith how easie?
San. As easie as a downe bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet Ladies will it please you sit; Sir Henry Place you that side, Ile take the charge of this:
 His Grace is entring. Nay, you must not freeze,
 Two women plac'd together, makes cold weather:
 My Lord Sands, you are one will keepe 'em waking:
 Pray sit betwene these Ladies.

San. By my faith,
 And thanke your Lordship: by your leaue sweet Ladies,
 If I chance to talke a little wilde, forgie me:
 I had it from my Father.

An. Bul. Was he mad Sir?
San. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in loue too;
 But he would bite none, iust as I doe now,
 He would Kisse you Twenty with a breath.

Cham. Well said my Lord:
 So now y're fairly seated: Gentlemen,
 The penance lyes on you; if these faire Ladies
 Passe away frowning.

San. For my little Cure,
 Let me alone.

Hoboyes. Enter Cardinall Wolsey, and takes his State.
Card. Y're wel: come my faire Guests; that noble Lady
 Or Gentleman that is not freely merry
 Is not my Friend. This to confirme my welcome,
 And to you all good health.

San. Your Grace is Noble,
 Let me haue such a Bowle may hold my thanks,
 And saue me so much talking.

Card. My Lord Sands,

I am beholding to you: cheere your neighbours:
 Ladies you are not merry; Gentlemen,
 Whose fault is this?

San. The red wine first must rise
 In their faire cheekes my Lord, then wee shall haue 'em,
 Talke vs to silence.

An. B. You are a merry Gamster
 My Lord Sands.

San. Yes, if I make my play:
 Heer's to your Ladiship, and pledge it Madam:
 For tis to such a thing.

An. B. You cannot shew me.
Drum and Trumpet, Chambers dischargd.

San. I told your Grace, they would talke anon.
Card. What's that?

Cham. Looke out there, some of ye.

Card. What warlike voyce,
 And to what end is this? Nay, Ladies, feare not;
 By all the lawes of Warre y're prunedg'd.

Enter a Seruant.
Cham. How now, what is't?
Ser. A noble troupe of Strangers,
 For so they seeme; th'haue left their Barge and landed,
 And hither make, as great Embassadors
 From forraigne Princes.

Card. Good Lord Chamberlaine,
 Go, giue 'em welcome; you can speake the French tongue
 And pray receiue 'em Nobly, and conduct 'em
 Into our presence, where this heauen of beauty
 Shall shine at full vpon them. Some attend him.

All rise, and Tables remou'd.
 You haue now a broken Banket, but wee'l mend it.
 A good digestion to you all; and once more
 I shoue a welcome on yee: welcome all.

Hoboyes. Enter King and others as Maskers, habited like Shepheards, vnder'd by the Lord Chamberlaine. They passe directly before the Cardinall, and gracefully salute him.

A noble Company: what are their pleasures?
Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they praid
 To tell your Grace: That hauing heard by fame
 Of this so Noble and so faire assembly,
 This night to meet heere they could doe no lesse,
 (Out of the great respect they beare to beauty)
 But leaue their Flockes, and vnder your faire Conduct
 Craue leaue to view these Ladies, and entreat
 An houre of Reuels with 'em.

Card. Say, Lord Chamberlaine,
 They haue done my poore house grace:
 For which I pay 'em a thousand thankses,
 And pray 'em take their pleasures.

Choise Ladies, King and An. Bullen.
King. The fairest hand I euer touch'd: O Beauty, Till now I neuer knew thee.

Musicke, Dance.

Card. My Lord.
Cham. Your Grace.
Card. Pray tell 'em thus much from me:
 There should be one amongst 'em by his person
 More worthy this place then my selfe, to whom
 (If I but knew him) with my loue and duty
 I would surrender it.

Cham. I will my Lord.
Card. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confesse
 There is indeed, which they would haue your Grace
 Find out, and he will take it.

Card. Let me see then,
 By all your good leaues Gentlemen; heere Ile make
 My royall choyce.

Kim. Ye haue found him Cardinall,
 You hold a faire Assembly; you doe well Lord:
 You are a Churchman, or Ile tell you Cardinall,
 I should iudge now vnhappyly.

Card. I am glad
 Your Grace is growne so pleasant.

Kim. My Lord Chamberlaine,
 Prethee come hither, what faire Ladie's that?

Cham. An't please your Grace,
 Sir Thomas Bullens Daughter, the Viscount Rochford,
 One of her Highnesse women.

Kim. By Heauen she is a dainty one, Sweet heart,
 I were vmannerly to take you out,
 And not to kisse you. A health Gentlemen,
 Let it goe round.

Card. Sir Thomas Lowell, is the Banket ready
 I th' Priuy Chamber?

Low. Yes, my Lord.

Card. Your Grace
 I feare, with dancing is a little heated.

Kim. I feare too much.

Card. There's fresher ayre my Lord,
 In the next Chamber.

Kim. Lead in your Ladies eu'ry one: Sweet Partner,
 I must not yet forsake you: Let's be merry,
 Good my Lord Cardinall: I haue halfe a dozen healths,
 To drinke to these faire Ladies, and a measure
 To lead 'em once againe, and then let's dreame
 Who's best in fauour, Let the Musicke knock it.

Exeunt with Trumpets.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen at severall Doores.
 1. Whether away so fast?
 2. O, God saue ye:
 Eu'n to the Hall, to heare what shall become
 Of the great Duke of Buckingham.

1. Ile saue you
 That labour Sir. All's now done but the Ceremony
 Of bringing backe the Prisoner.
 2. Were you there?
 1. Yes indeed was I.
 2. Pray speake what ha's happen'd.
 1. You may guesse quickly what.
 2. Is he found guilty?
 1. Yes truly is he,
 And condemn'd vpon't.

2. I am sorry for't.
 1. So are a number more.
 2. But pray how past it?
 1. Ile tell you in a little. The great Duke
 Came to the Bar; where, to his accusations
 He pleaded still not guilty, and alledged
 Many sharpe reasons to defeat the Law.
 The Kings Attorney on the contrary,
 Vrg'd on the Examinations, proofes, confessions

Of diners witnesses, which the Duke desir'd
To him brought vina voce to his face;
At which appear'd against him, his Surueyor
Sir Gilbert Pecke his Chancellour, and John Car,
Confessor to him, with that Diuell Monke,
Hopkins, that made this mischief.

2. That was hee.

That fed him with his Prophecies.

1. The faine,

All these accus'd him strongly, which he faine
Would haue flung from him; but indeed he could not;
And so his Peeres vpon this euidence,
Haue found him guilty of high Treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly for life: But all
Was either pittied in him, or forgotten.

2. After all this, how did he beare himselfe?

1. When he was brought agen to th' Bar, to heare
His Knell rung out, his Iudgement, he was fir'd
With such an Agony, he sweat extremly,
And something spoke in choller, ill, and hasty:
But he fell to himselfe againe, and sweetly,
In all the rest shew'd a most Noble patience.

2. I doe not thinke he feares death.

1. Sure he does not,

He neuer was so womanish, the cause
He may a little grieue at.

2. Certainly,

The Cardinall is the end of this.

1. Tis likely,

By all coniectures: First Kildares Attendure;
Then Deputy of Ireland, who remou'd
Earle Surrey, was sent thither, and in hast too,
Least he should helpe his Father.

2. That trickes of State

Was a deepe enuious one,

1. At his returne,

No doubt he will requite it; this is noted:
(And generally) who euer the King fauours,
The Cardinall instantly will finde employment,
And farre enough from Court too.

2. All the Commons

Hate him perniciously, and o' my Conscience
With him ten faddom deepe: This Duke as much
They loue and doate on: call him bounteous Buckingham,
The Mirror of all courtelie.

Enter Buckingham from his Arraignement, Tipstanes before him, the Axe with the edge towards him, Halberds on each side, accompanied with Sir Thomas Louell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir Walter Sands, and common people, &c.

1. Stay there Sir,

And see the noble ruin'd man you speake of.

2. Let's stand close and behold him.

Buck. All good people,
You that thus farre haue come to pittie me;
Heare what I say, and then goe home and lose me.
I haue this day receiu'd a Traitors iudgement,
And by that name must dye; yet Heauen beare witness,
And if I haue a Conscience, let it sinke me,
Euen as the Axe falls, if I be not faithfull.
The Law I beare no mallice for my death,
Thas done vpon the premisses, but Iustice:
But those that sought it, I could wish more Christians;
(Be what they will) I heartily forgive 'em;
Yet let 'em looke they glory not in mischiefe.

Nor build their euils on the graues of great men;
For then, my guiltlesse blood must cry against 'em.
For further life in this world I be're hope,
Nor will I sue, although the King haue mercies
More then I dare make faults.
You few that lou'd me,
And dare be bold to weepe for Buckingham,
His Noble Friends and Fellowes; whom to leaue
Is only bitter to him, only dying:
Goe with me like good Angels to my end,
And as the long diuorce of Steele fals on me,
Make of your Prayers one sweet Sacrifice,
And lift my Soule to Heauen.
Lead on a Gods name.

Louell. I doe beseech your Grace, for charity
If euer any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Louell, I as free forgive you
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all.
There cannot be those numberlesse offences
Gainst me, that I cannot take peace with:
No blacke Enuy shall make my Graue.
Commend mee to his Grace:

And if he speake of Buckingham; pray tell him,
You met him halfe in Heauen: my vowes and prayers
Yet are the Kings; and till my Soule forsake,
Shall cry for blessings on him. May he liue
Longer then I haue time to tell his yeares;
Euer belou'd and louing, may his Rule be;
And when old Time shall lead him to his end,
Goodnesse and he, fill vp one Monument.

Lou. To th' water side I must conduct your Grace;
Then giue my Charge vp to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who vnder takes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there,
The Duke is coming: See the Barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture as suites
The Greatnesse of his Person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone; my State now will but mock me.
When I came hither, I was Lord High Constable,
And Duke of Buckingham: now, poore Edward Bohun,
Yet I am richer then my base Accusers,
That neuer knew what Truth meant: I now scale it;
And with that blood will make 'em one day groane for it.

My noble Father Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against Vsurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his Seruant Banister,
Being distress'd; was by that wretch betray'd,
And without Tryall, fell; Gods peace be with him.
Henry the Seauenth succeeding, truly pitying
My Fathers losse; like a most Royall Prince
Restor'd me to my Honours: and out of ruines
Made my Name once more Noble. Now his Sonne,
Henry the Eight, Life, Honour, Name and all
That made me happy; at one stroke ha's taken
For euer from the World. I had my Tryall,
And must needs say a Noble one; which makes me
A little happier then my wretched Father:
Yet thus farre we are one in Fortunes; both Fell by our Seruants, by those Men we lou'd most:
A most vn naturall and faithlesse Seruice.
Heauen ha's an end in all: yet, you that heare me,
Be thus farre we are one in Fortunes; both
Where you are liberrall of your loues and Counceils,
Be sure you be not loose; for those you make friends,

And giue your hearts to; when they once perceiue
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, neuer found againe
But where they meane to sinke ye: all good people
Pray for me, I must now forsake ye; the last houre
Of my long weary life is come vpon me:
Farewell; and when you would say something that is sad,
Speake how I fell.
I haue done; and God forgive me.

Exeunt Duke and Traine.

1. O, this is full of pittie; Sir, it eals
Feare, too many curses on their heads
That were the Authors:
2. If the Duke be guiltlesse,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can giue you inckling
Of an ensuing euill, if it fall,
Greater then this.

1. Good Angels keepe it from vs:
What may it be? you doe not doubt my faith Sir?
2. This Secret is so weighty, 'twill require
A strong faith to conceale it.
1. Let me haue it:
I doe not talke much.

2. I am confident;
You shall Sir: Did you not of late dayes heare
A buzzing of a Separation
Betwene the King and Katherine?
1. Yes, but it held not;
For when the King once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the Lord Mayor straight
To stop the rumor; and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.

2. But that slander Sir,
Is found a truch now: for it growes agen
Presther then e're it was; and held for certaine
The King will venture at it. Either the Cardinall,
Or some about him neere, haue out of malice
To the good Queene, posselt him with a scruple
That will vndoe her: To confirme this too,
Cardinall Campeius is arriv'd, and lately,
As all thinke for this busines.

1. Tis the Cardinall;
And meere to reuenge him on the Emperour,
For not bestowing on him at his asking,
The Archbishopricke of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

2. I thinke
You haue hit the marke; but is't not cruell,
That he should feele the smart of this: the Cardinall
Will haue his will, and she must fall.

1. Tis wofull.
Wee are too open heere to argue this:
Let's thinke in priuate more. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine, reading this Letter.

My Lord, the Horses your Lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnisht.
They were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the North. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my Lord Cardinalls by Commission, and maine power tooke em from me, with this reason: his maister would bee seru'd before a Subiect, if not before the King, which stop'd our mouths

Sir.
I feare he will indeede; well, let him haue them; hee will haue all I thinke.

Enter to the Lord Chamberlaine, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke.

Nor. Well met my Lord Chamberlaine.

Cham. Good day to both your Graces.

Suff. How is the King imployd?

Cham. I left him priuate,

Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause?

Cham. It seemes the Marriage with his Brothers Wife

Ha's crept too neere his Conscience.

Suff. No, his Conscience

Ha's crept too neere another Ladie.

Nor. Tis so;

This is the Cardinalls doing: The King-Cardinall,
That blinde Priest, like the eldest Sonne of Fortune,
Turnes what he list. The King will know him one day.

Suff. Pray God he doe,

Hee'l neuer know himselfe else.

Nor. How holily he workes in all his businesse,
And with what zeale? For now he has crackt the League
Betwene vs & the Emperour (the Queens great Nephew)
He diues into the Kings Soule, and there teaters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the Conscience,
Feares, and despaires, and all these for his Marriage.

And out of all these, to restore the King,
He counsels a Diuorce, a losse of her
That like a Jewell, ha's hung twenty yeares
About his necke, yet neuer lost her lustre;
Of her that loues him with that excellence,
That Angels loue good men with: Euen of her,
That when the greatest stroke of Fortune falls
Will blasse the King: and is not this course pious?

Cham. Heauen keep me from such counsel: tis most true
These newes are euer where, every tongue speaks 'em,
And euer true heart weepes for't. All that dare
Looke into these affaires, see this maine end,
The French Kings Sister. Heauen will one day open
The Kings eyes, that so long haue slept vpon
This bold bad man.

Suff. And free vs from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliuerance;
Or this imperious man will worke vs all
From Princes into Pages: all mens honours
Lie like one lumpe before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.

Suff. For me, my Lords,
I loue him not, nor feare him, there's my Creede:
As I am made without him, so he stand,
If the King please: his Curses and his blessings
Touch me alike: thare breath I not beleue in.
I knew him, and I know him: so I leaue him
To him that made him proud; the Pope.

Nor. Let's in;

And with some other busines, put the King
From these sad thoughts, that work too much vpon him:
My Lord, youle beare vs company?

Cham. Excuse me,

The King ha's sent me otherwhere: Besides
You'l finde a most vnfit time to disturbe him:
Health to your Lordships.

Nor.

Norfolke. Thanks my good Lord Chamberlaine.
Exit Lord Chamberlaine, and the King drives the Curtaine and sits reading pensively.

Suff. How sad he looks; sure he is much afflicted.

Kin. Who's there? Ha?

Norff. Pray God he be not angry. (sides)

Kin. Who's there I say? How dare you thrust your Into my private Meditations?
Who am I? Ha?

Norff. A gracious King, that pardons all offences
Malice ne're meant: Our breach of Duty this way,
Is businesse of Estate; in which, we come
To know your Royall pleasure.

Kin. Ye are too bold:

Go too; Ile make ye know your times of businesse:
Is this an houre for temporall affaires? Ha?

Enter Wolsey and Campeius with a Commission.

Who's there? my good Lord Cardinall? O my Wolsey,
The quiet of my wounded Conscience;
Thou art a cure fit for a King; you'r welcome
Most learned Reuerend Sir, into our Kingdome,
Vie vs, and it: My good Lord, haue great care,
I be not found a Talker.

Wol. Sir, you cannot;
I would your Grace would giue vs but an houre
Of priuate conference.

Kin. We are busie, goe.

Norff. This Priest ha's no pride in him?

Suff. Not to speake of:

I would not be so sicke though for his place;
But this cannot continue.

Norff. If it doe, Ile venture one; haue at him.

Suff. I another.

Exeunt Norfolke and Suffolke.

Wol. Your Grace ha's giuen a President of wisdom
About all Princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voyce of Christendome:
Who can be angry now? What Enuy reach you?
The Spaniard tide by blood and fauour to her,
Must now confesse, if they haue any goodnesse,
The Tryall, iust and Noble. All the Clerkes,
(I meane the learned ones in Christian Kingdomes)
Haue their free voyces. Rome (the Nurse of Iudgement)
Inuited by your Noble selfe, hath sent
One generall Tongue vnto vs. This good man,
This iust and learned Priest, Cardinall Campeius,
Whom once more, I present vnto your Highnesse.

Kin. And once more in mine armes I bid him welcome,
And thanke the holy Conclau for their loues,
They haue sent me such a Man, I would haue wish'd for.

Cam. Your Grace must needs deserue all strangers loues,
You are so Noble: To your Highnesse hand
I tender my Commission; by whose vertue,
The Court of Rome commanding. You my Lord
Cardinall of Yorke, are ioyn'd with me their Seruant,
In the vnpartial iudging of this Businesse. (red)

Kin. Two equall men: The Queene shall be acquainted Forthwith for what you come. Where's Gardiner?

Wol. I know your Maiesty, ha's alwayes lou'd her
So deare in heart, not to deny her that
A Woman of lesse Place might aske by Law;
Schollers allow'd freely to argue for her.

Kin. I, and the best she shall haue; and my fauour
To him that does best; God forbid els: Cardinall, Prethee call Gardiner to me, my new Secretary.
I find him a fit fellow.

Enter Gardiner.

Wol. Giue me your hand: much ioy & fauour to you,
You are the Kings now.

Gard. But to be commanded

For euer by your Grace, whose hand ha's rais'd me.

Kin. Come hither Gardiner.

Walkes and whispers.

Cam. My Lord of Yorke, was not one Doctor Page
In this mans place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes surely.

Cam. Beleue me, there's an ill opinion spread then,
Euen of your selfe Lord Cardinall.

Wol. How? of me?

Cam. They will not sticke to say, you enuide him;
And fearing he would rise (he was so vertuous)
Kept him a forraigne man still, which so greued him,
That he ran mad, and dide.

Wol. Heau'ns peace be with him:

That's Christian care enough: for liuing Murmurers,
There's places of rebuke. He was a Foole;
For he would needs be vertuous. That good Fellow,
If I command him followes my appointment,

I will haue none so neere els. Learne this Brother,
We liue not to be grip'd by meaner persons.

Kin. Deliu'r this with modesty to th' Queene.

Exit Gardiner.

The most conuenient place, that I can thinke of
For such receipt of Learning, is Black-Fryers:
There ye shall meete about this waighy busines.
My Wolsey, see it furnish'd, O my Lord,
Would it not grieue an able man to leaue
So sweet a Bedfellow? But Conscience, Conscience;
O 'tis a tender place, and I must leaue her. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Anne Bullen, and an old Lady.

An. Not for that neither; here's the pang that pinches.
His Highnesse, hauing liu'd so long with her, and she
So good a Lady, that no Tongue could euer
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life,
She neuer knew harme-doing: Oh, now after
So many courses of the Sun enthroned,
Still growing in a Maiesty and pompe, the which
To leaue, a thousand fold more bitter, then
'Tis sweet at first to acquire. After this Proceffe,
To giue her the auant, it is a pittie
Would moue a Monster.

Old La. Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her.

An. Oh Gods will, much better
She ne're had knowne pompe; though't be temporall,
Yet if that quarrell. Fortune, do diuorce
It from the bearer, 'tis a sufferance, panging
As foule and bodies feuering.

Old La. Alas poore Lady,
Shee's a stranger now againe.

An. So much the more
Must pittie drop vpon her; verily
I sweare, 'tis better to be lowly borne,

And

And range with humble liuers in Content,
Then to be perk'd vp in a glistering griefe,
And weare a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content

Is our best hauiing.

Anne. By my troth, and Maidenhead,
I would not be a Queene.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would,

And venture Maidenhead for't, and to would you
For all this spice of your Hypocrisie:

You that haue so faire parts of Woman on you,
Haue (too) a Womans heart, which euer yet
Affected Enuience, Wealth, Soueraignty;
Which, to say sooth, are Blessings; and which giuists
(Suing your mincing) the capacity

Of your lost Chiuereil Conscience, would receiue,
If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth.

Old L. Yes troth, & troth, you would not be a Queene?

Anne. No, not for all the riches vnder Heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange; a threepence bow'd would hire me

Old L. I am, to Queene it: but I pray you,

What thinke you of a Dutchesse? Haue you limbs

To beare that load of Title?

An. No in truth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made; plucke off a little,

I would not be a young Count in your way,

For more then blushing comes to: If your backe

Canot vouchsafe this burthen, 'tis too weake

Euer to get a Boy.

An. How you doe talke;

I sweare againe, I would not be a Queene,

For all the world:

Old L. In faith, for little England

You'd venture an enballing: I my selfe

Would for Carnaruanshire, although there long'd

No more to th' Crowne but that: Lo, who comes here?

Enter Lord Chamberlaine.

(know

L. Cham. Good morrow Ladies; what wer't worth to

The secret of your conference?

An. My good Lord,

Not your demand; it values not your asking:

Our Mistis Sorrowes we were pittying.

Cham. It was a gentle businesse, and becoming

The action of good women, there is hope

All will be well.

An. Now I pray God, Amen.

Cham. You beare a gentle minde, & heau'nly blessings

Follow such Creatures. That you may, faire Lady

Perceiue I speake sincerely, and high notes

Tane of your many vertues; the Kings Maiesty

Commends his good opinion of you, to you; and

Doe's purpose honour to you no lesse flowing,

Then Marchionesse of Pembroke; to which Title,

A Thousand pound a yeare, Annuall support,

Out of his Grace, he addes.

An. I doe not know

What kinde of my obedience, I should tender;

More then my All, is Nothing: Nor my Prayers

Are not words duely hallowed; nor my Wishes

More worth, then empty vanities: yet Prayers & Wishes

Are all I can returne. Beseech your Lordship,

Vouchsafe to speake my thanks, and my obedience,

As from a blushing Handmaid, to his Highnesse;

Whose health and Royalty I pray for.

Cham. Lady;

I shall not faile to approue the faire conceit
The King hath of you. I haue perus'd her well,
Beauty and Honour in her are mingled,
That they haue caught the King: and who knowes yet
But from this Lady, may proceed a lemme,
To lighten all this Ile. Ile to the King,
And say I spoke with you.

Exit Lord Chamberlaine.

An. My honour'd Lord.

Old L. Why this it is: See, see,

I haue beene begging sixteene yeares in Court

(Am yet a Courtier beggely) nor could Come pat betwix too early, and too late

For any suit of pounds: and you, (oh fate)

A very fresh Fish heere; syc, syc, syc vpon

This compell'd fortune: haue your mouth fill'd vp,

Before you open it.

An. This is strange to me.

Old L. How taste it? Is it bitter? Forty pence, no:

There was a Lady once (tis an old Story)

That would not be a Queene, that would she not

For all the mud in Egypt; haue you heard it?

An. Come you are pleasant.

Old L. With your Theame, I could

O're-mount the Larke: The Marchionesse of Pembroke?

A thousand pounds a yeare, for pure respect?

No other obligation? by my Life,

That promises mo thousands: Honours traine

Is longer then his fore-skirt; by this time

I know your backe will beare a Dutchesse. Say,

Are you not stronger then you were?

An. Good Lady,

Make your selfe mirth with your particular fancy,

And leaue me out on't. Would I had no being

If this salute my blood a iot; it faints me

To thinke what followes.

The Queene is comfortlesse, and wee forgetfull

In our long absence: pray doe not deliuer,

What heere y'haue heard to her.

Old L. What doe you thinke me ——— Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Trumpets, Sennet, and Cornets.

Enter two Vergers, with short silver wands; next them two Scribes in the habite of Doctors; after them, the Bishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishops of Lincolne, Ely, Rochester, and S. Asaph: Next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the Purse, with the great Seale, and a Cardinals Hat: Then two Priests, bearing each a Silver Crosse: Then a Gentleman vnder bareheaded, accompanied with a Sergeant at Armes, bearing a Silver Mace: Then two Gentlemen bearing two great Silver Pillers: After them, side by side, the two Cardinals, two Noblemen, with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place vnder the Cloth of State. The two Cardinalls sit vnder him as Iudges. The Queene takes place some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the Court in manner of a Consistory: Below them the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in conuenient order about the Stage.

Card.

Car. Whil'ft our Commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded.

King. What's the need?
It hath already publickly bene read,
And on all sides th' Authority allow'd,
You may then spare that time.

Car. Bee't so, proceed.

Scri. Say, Henry K. of England, come into the Court.

Crier. Henry King of England, &c.

King. Heere.

Scribe. Say, Katherine Queene of England,
Come into the Court.

Crier. Katherine Queene of England, &c.

The Queene makes no answer, rises out of her Chaire, goes about the Court, comes to the King, and kneeles at his Feete. Then speaks.

Sir, I desire you do me Right and Iustice,
And to bestow your pittie on me; for
I am a most poore Woman, and a Stranger,
Borne out of your Dominions: having heere
No Iudge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equall Friendship and Proceeding. Alas Sir:
In what have I offended you? What cause
Hath my behaviour giuen to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceede to put me off,
And take your good Grace from me? Heauen witness,
I haue bene to you, a true and humble Wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Euer in feare to kindle your Dislike,
Yea, subiect to your Countenance: Glad, or sorry,
As I saw it inclin'd? When was the houre
I euer contradicted your Desire?
Or made it nor mine too? Or which of your Friends
Haue I nor stroue to loue, although I knew
He were mine Enemy? What Friend of mine,
That had to him deri'd your Anger, did I Continue in my Liking? Nay, gaue notice
He was from thence discharg'd? Sir, call to minde,
That I haue bene your Wife, in this Obedience,
Vpward of twenty yeares, and haue bene blest
With many Children by you. If in the court
And processe of this time, you can report,
And proue it too, against mine Honour, aught;
My bond to Wedlocke, or my Loue and Dutie
Against your Sacred Person; in Gods name
Turne me away: and let the fowl'st Contempt
Shut doore vpon me, and so giue me vp
To the sharpest kinde of Iustice. Please you, Sir,
The King your Father, was reputed for
A Prince most Prudent; of an excellent
And vnmatch'd Wit, and Iudgement. Ferdinand
My Father, King of Spaine, was reckon'd one
The wisest Prince, that there had reign'd, by many
A yeare before. It is not to be question'd,
That they had gather'd a wise Councell to them
Of every Realme, that did debate this Businesse,
Who deem'd our Marriage lawfull. Wherefore I humbly
Beseech you Sir, to spare me, till I may
Be by my Friends in Spaine, aduis'd; whose Counsaile
I will implore. If not, in the name of God
Your pleasure be fulfill'd.

Vol. You haue heere Lady,
(And of your choice) these Reuerend Fathers, men
Of singular Integrity, and Learning;
Yea, the elect o'th' Land, who are assembled
To pleade your Cause. It shall be therefore bootlesse,

That longer you desire the Court, as well
For your owne quiet, as to rectifie
What is vnsted in the King.

Camp. His Grace
Hath spoken well, and iustly: Therefore Madam,
It's fit this Royall Session do proceed,
And that (without delay) their Arguments
Be now produc'd, and heard.

Que. Lord Cardinall, to you I speake.

Vol. Your pleasure, Madam.

Que. Sir, I am about to weepe; but thinking that
We are a Queene (or long haue dream'd so) certaine
The daughter of a King, my drops of teares,
He turne to sparkes of fire.

Vol. Be patient yet.

Que. I will, when you are humble; Nay before,
Or God will punish me. I do beleue (Induc'd by potent Circumstances) that
You are mine Enemy, and make my Challenge,
You shall not be my Iudge. For it is you
Haue blowne this Coale, betwixt my Lord, and me;
(Which Gods dew quenche) therefore, I say againe,
I utterly abhorre; yea, from my Soule
Refuse you for my Iudge, whom yet once more:
I hold my most malicious Foe, and thinke not
At all a Friend to truth.

Vol. I do professe
You speake not like your selfe: who euer yet
Haue stood to Charity, and display'd the effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdomes,
Ore-topping womans powre. Madam, you do me wrong
I haue no Spleene against you, nor iniustice
For you, or any: how farre I haue proceeded,
Or how farre further (shall) is warranted
By a Commission from the Consistorie,
Yea, the whole Consistorie of Rome. You charge me,
That I haue blowne this Coale: I do deny it,
The King is present: If it be knowne to him,
That I gainsay my Deed, how may he wound,
And worthily my Falsehood, yea, as much
As you haue done my Truth. If he know
That I am free of your Report, he knowes
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me, and the Cure is to Remoue these Thoughts from you. The which before
His Highnesse shall speake in, I do beseech
You (gracious Madam) to vnthinke your speaking,
And to say so no more.

Queen. My Lord, my Lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. You are meek, & humble-mouth'd
You signe your Place, and Calling, in full seeming,
With Meeknesse and Humilitie: but your Heart
Is cramm'd with Arrogancie, Spleene, and Pride.
You haue by Fortune, and his Highnesse fauors,
Gone slightly o're lowe steppes, and now are mounted
Where Powres are your Retainers, and your words
(Domestickes to you) serue your will, as't please
Your selfe pronounce their Office. I must tell you,
You tender more your persons Honor, then
Your high profession Spirituall. That agen
I do refuse you for my Iudge, and heere
Before you all, Appeale vnto the Pope,
To bring my whole Cause fore his Holinesse,
And to be iudg'd by him.

She Curries to the King, and offers to depart.

Camp.

Camp. The Queene is obstinate,
Stubborne to Iustice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainfull to be tri'd by't: tis not well.
Shee's going away.

King. Call her againe.

Crier. Katherine, Q. of England, come into the Court.

Gen. Vse. Madam, you are call'd backe.

Que. What need you note it? pray you keep your way,

When you are call'd returne. Now the Lord helpe,

They vex me past my patience, pray you passe on;

I will not tarry: no, nor euer more.

Vpon this businesse my appearance make,

In any of their Courts.

Exit Queene, and her Attendants.

King. Goe thy wayes Kate,
That man i'th' world, who shall report he has
A better Wife, let him in naught be trusted,
For speaking false in that; thou art alone
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentlenessse,
Thy meeknesse Saint-like, Wile-like Government,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Soureraigne and Pious els, could speake thee out)
The Queene of earthly Queenes: Shee's Noble borne;
And like her true Nobility, she has Carried her selfe towards me.

Vol. Most gracious Sir,
In humblest manner I require your Highnes,
That it shall please you to declare in hearing
Of all these cares (for where I am rob'd and bound,
There must I be vnloos'd, although not there
At once, and fully satisfide) whether euer I Did broach this businesse to your Highnes, or Laid any scruple in your way. whi. h might Induce you to the question on't: or euer
Haue to you, but with thanks to God for such A Royall Lady, spake one, the least word that might Beto the preiudice of her present State,
Or touch of her good Person?

King. My Lord Cardinall,
I doe excuse you; yea, vpon mine Honour,
If free you from't: You are not to be taught
That you haue many enemies, that know not
Why they are so; but like to Village Curres, Bake when their fellowes doe. By some of these
The Queene is put in anger; y'are excus'd:
But will you be more iustifi'd? You euer
Haue wish'd the sleeping of this businesse, neuer desir'd
It to be stir'd; but o't haue hindred, o't
The passages made toward it; on my Honour,
I speake my good Lord Cardinall, to this point;
And thus farre cleare him.

Now, what mou'd me too't,
I will be bold with time and your attention: (too't)
Then make th' inducement. Thus it came; giue heede
My Conscience first recei'd a tendernes,
Scruple, and pricke, on certaine Speeches vtter'd
By th' Bishop of Bayn, then French Embassador,
Who had bene hither sent on the debating
And Marriage 'twixt the Duke of Orleans, and
Our Daughter Mary: I'th' Progresse of this busines,
Ere a determinate resolution, hee
(I meane the Bishop) did require a respite,
Wherein he might the King his Lord aduertise,
Whether our Daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our Marriage with the Dowager.
Sometimes our Brothers Wife. This respite shooke

The bosome of my Conscience, enter'd me;
Yea, with a spitting power, and made to resemble
The region of my Breast, which fore'd such way,
That many maz'd considerings, did throng
And prest in with this Caution. First, me thought
I stood not in the smile of Heaven, who had Commanded Nature, that my Ladies wombe
If it concei'd a male-child by me, should Doe no more Offices of life too't; then
The Grave does to th' dead: For her Male Issue,
Or di'de where they were made, or shortly after
This world had ayr'd them. Hence I took a thought,
This was a Iudgement on me, that my Kingdomes
(Well worthy the best Heyre o'th' World) should not Be gladd in't by me. Then follows, that I weigh'd the danger which my Realmes stood in
By this my Issues faile, and that gaue to me
Many a groaning throw: thus hulling in
The wild Sea of my Conscience, I did steere Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present heere together: that's to say,
I meant to rectifie my Conscience, which
I then did feeble full sicke, and yet not well,
By all the Reuerend Fathers of the Land,
And Doctors learn'd. First I began in priuate,
With you my Lord of Lincolne; you remember
How vnder my oppression I did reeke
When I first mou'd you.

B. Lin. Very well my Liedge.

King. I haue spoke long, be pleas'd your selfe to say
How farre you satisfide me.

Lin. So please your Highnes,
The question did at first so stagger me,
Bearing a State of mighty moment in't,
And consequence of death, that I committed
The darrest Counsaile which I had to doubt,
And did entreate your Highnes to this course,
Which you are running heere.

King. I then mou'd you,
My Lord of Canterbury, and got your leave
To make this present Summons vn-solicited.
I left no Reuerend Person in this Court;
But by particular consent proceeded
Vnder your hands and Seales; therefore goe on,
For no dislike i'th' world against the person
Of the good Queene; but the sharpe thorny points
Of my alleaged reasons, driues this forward:
Proue but our Marriage lawfull, by my Life,
And Kingly Dignity, we are contented
To weare our mortall State to come, with her,
(Katherine our Queene) before the primeest Creature
That's Parragon o'th' World.

Camp. So please your Highnes,
The Queene being absent, 'tis a needfull fitnessse,
That we adiourne this Court till further day;
Meane while, must be an earnest motion
Made to the Queene to call backe her Appeale
She intends vnto his Holinesse.

King. I may perceiue
These Cardinals trifle with me: I abhorre
This dilatory sloth, and trickes of Rome.
My learn'd and welbeloued Seruant Crammer,
Prethee returne, with thy approach: I know,
My comfort comes along: breake vp the Court;
I say, set on.

Exeunt, in manner as they enter'd.

v 3

Actus

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Queene and her Women as at worke.

Queen. Take thy Lute wench,
My Soule growes sad with troubles,
Sing, and disperse 'em if thou canst: leaue working:

SONG.

O Rphens with his Lute made Trees,
And the Mountaine tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing.
To his Musicke, Plants and Flowers
Enter sprung; as Sunne and Showers,
There had made a lasting Spring.
Every thing that heard him play,
Euen the Billowes of the Sea,
Hung their heads, & then lay by.
In sweet Musicke is such Art,
Killing care, & griefe of heart,
Fall asleepe, or hearing dyes.

Enter a Gentleman.

Queen. How now?

Gent. And please your Grace, the two great Cardinals Wait in the presence.

Queen. Would they speake with me?

Gent. They wil'd me say so Madam.

Queen. Pray their Graces

To come neere: what can be their busines
With me, a poore weake woman, false from fauour?
I doe not like their comming; now I thinke on't,
They should bee good men, their affaires as righteous:
But all Hoods, make not Monkes.

Enter the two Cardinals, Wolsey & Campion.

Wol. Peace to your Highnesse.

Queen. Your Graces find me heere part of a Houwife, (I would be all) against the worst may happen:

What are your pleasures with me, reuerent Lords?

Wol. May it please you Noble Madam, to withdraw
Into your priuate Chamber; we shall giue you
The full cause of our comming.

Queen. Speake it heere.

There's nothing I haue done yet o' my Conscience
Deserues a Corner: would all other Women
Could speake this with as free a Soule as I doe.

My Lords, I care not (so much I am happy Abooue a number) if my actions

Were tri'd by eu'ry tongue, eu'ry eye saw 'em,
Enny and base opinion set against 'em,

I know my life so euen. If your busines
Seeke me out, and that way I am Wife in;

Out with it boldly: Truth loues open dealing.

Card. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas Regina serenissima.

Queen. O good my Lord, no Latin;

I am not such a Truant since my comming,
As not to know the Language I haue liu'd in: (ous:
A strange Tongue makes my cause more strange, suspiti-
Pray speake in English; heere are some will thanke you, if you speake truth, for their poore Mistis sake;
Beleeue me she ha's had much wrong. Lord Cardinall,
The willing'st I haue euer yet committed,
May be absolud in English.

Card. Noble Lady,

I am sorry my integrity shoul breed,
(And seruice to his Maiefty and you)
So deepe suspicion, where all faith was meant;
We come not by the way of Accusation,
To taint that honour euery good Tongue blesses;
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;
You haue too much good Lady: But to know
How you stand minded in the waighy difference
Betweene the King and you, and to deliuer
(Like free and honest men) our iust opinions,
And comforts to our cause.

Camp. Most honour'd Madam,
My Lord of Yorke, out of his Noble nature,
Zeale and obedience he still bore your Grace,
Forgetting (like a good man) your late Censure
Both of his truth and him (which was too farr)
Offers, as I doe, in a signe of peace,
His Seruice, and his Counsell.

Queen. To betray me.
My Lords, I thanke you both for your good wills,
Ye speake like honest men, (pray God ye proue so)
But how to make ye sodainly an Answer
In such a poynt of weight, so neere mine Honour,
(More neere my Life I feare) with my weake wit,
And to such men of grauity and learning;
In truth I know not. I was set at worke,
Among my Maids, full little (God knowes) looking Either for such men, or such businesse;
For her sake that I haue beene, for I feele
The last fit of my Greatnesse; good your Graces
Let me haue time and Counsell for my Cause:
Alas, I am a Woman friendlesse, hopelesse.

Wol. Madam,
You wrong the Kings loue with these feares,
Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Queen. In England,
But little for my profit can you thinke Lords,
That any English man dare giue me Counsell?
Or be a knowne friend against his Highnes pleasure,
(Though he be growne so desperate to be honest)
And liue a Subject? Nay forsooth, my Friends,
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, liue not heere,
They are (as all my other comforts) far hence
In mine owne Countrey Lords.

Camp. I would your Grace
Would leaue your griefes, and take my Counsell.

Queen. How Sir?

Camp. Put your maine cause into the Kings protection, Hee's louing and most gracious. I will be much,
Both for your Honour better, and your Cause:
For if the tryall of the Law o'retake ye,
You'l part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tels you rightly.

Queen. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruine:
Is this your Christian Counsell? Out vpon ye.
Heauen is aboue all yet; there sits a Iudge,
That no King can corrupt.

Camp. Your rage mistakes vs.

Queen. The more shame for ye; holy men I thought ye,
Vpon my Soule two reuerend Cardinall Vertues:
But Cardinall Sins, and hollow hearts I feare ye:
Mend 'em for shame my Lords: Is this your comfort?
The Cordiall that ye bring a wretched Lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh't at, scorn'd?
I will not wish ye halfe my miseries,

I haue more Charity. But say I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heauens sake take heed, least at once
The burthen of my sorrowes, fall vpon ye.

Car. Madam, this is a meere distraction,

You turne the good we offer, into enny.

Queen. Ye turne me into nothing. Woe vpon ye,
And all such false Professors. Would you haue me

(If you haue any iustice, any Pity,

If ye be any thing but Churchmens habits)

Put my sicke cause into his hands, that hates me?

Alas, ha's banish'd me his Bed already,

His Loue, too long ago. I am old my Lords,

And all the Fellowship I hold now with him

Is onely my Obedience. What can happen

To me, about this wretchednesse? All your Studies
Make me a Curse, like this.

Camp. Your feares are worse.

Qu. Haue I liu'd thus long (let me speake my selfe, Since Vertue findes no friends) a Wife, a true one?

A Woman (I dare say without Vainglory)

Neuer yet branded with Suspicion?

Haue I, with all my full Affections

Still met the King? Lou'd him next Heau'n? Obey'd him?

Bin (our offondoesse) superstitious to him?

Almost forgot my Prayres to content him?

And am I thus rewarded? 'Tis not well Lords,

Bring me a constant woman to her Husband,

One that ne're dream'd a Ioy, beyond his pleasure;

And to that Woman (when she has done most)

Yet will I adde an Honor; a great Patience.

Car. Madam, you wander from the good

We ayme at.

Qu. My Lord,

I dare not make my selfe so guiltie,

To giue vp willingly that Noble Title

Your Master wed me to: nothing but death

Shall e're diuorce my Dignities.

Car. Pray heare me.

Qu. Would I had neuer trod this English Earth,

Or felt the Flatteries that grow vpon it:

Ye haue Angels Faces; but Heauen knowes your hearts.

What will become of me now, wretched Lady?

I am the most vnhappy Woman liuing.

Alas (poore Wenches) where are now your Fortunes?

Shipwrack'd vpon a Kingdome, where no Pity,

No Friends, no Hope, no Kindred weepe for me?

Almost no Graue allow'd me? Like the Lilly

That once was Mistis of the Field, and flourish'd,

He hang my head, and perish.

Car. If your Grace

Could but be brought to know, our Ends are honest,

You'd feele more comfort. Why shold we (good Lady)

Vpon what cause wrong you? Alas, our Places,

The way of our Profession is against it;

We are to Cure such sorrowes, not to fowe 'em.

For Goodnesse sake, consider what you do,

How you may hurt your selfe: I, vterly

Grow from the Kings Acquaintance, by this Carriage.

The hearts of Princes kisse Obedience,

So much they loue it. But to Rubborne Spirits,

They swell and grow, as terrible as stormes.

I know you haue a Gentle, Noble temper,

A Soule as euen as a Calme; Pray thinke vs,

Those we professe, Peace-makers, Friends, and Seruants.

Camp. Madam, you'l finde it so:

You wrong your Vertues

With these weake Womens feares. A Noble Spirit
As yours was, put into you, euer casts
Such doubts as false Coine from it. The King loues you, Beware you loofe it not: For vs (if you please
To trust vs in your businesse) we are ready
To vse our vtmost Studies, in your seruice.

Qu. Do what ye will, my Lords:

And pray forgive me;

If I haue vs'd my selfe vnmanerly,

You know I am a Woman, lacking wit

To make a seemely answer to such persons.

Pray do my seruice to his Maiefty,

He ha's my heart yet, and shall haue my Prayers

While I shall haue my life. Come reuerend Fathers,

Bestow your Counsels on me. She now begges

That little thought when she fet footing heere,

She should haue bought her Dignities so deere. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, Duke of Suffolke, Lord Surrey, and Lord Chamberlaine.

Nor. If you will now vrite in your Complaints,
And force them with a Constancy, the Cardinall
Cannot stand vnder them. If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustaine moe new disgraces,
With these you beare alreadye.

Suf. I am ioyfull

To meete the least occasion, that may giue me
Remembrance of my Father-in-Law, the Duke,
To be reueng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the Peeres

Haue vncontemn'd gone by him, or at least

Strangely neglected? When did he regard

The stampe of Noblenesse in any perion

Out of himselfe?

Cham. My Lords, you speake your pleasures:

What he deserues of you and me, I know:

What we can do to him (though now the time

Gies way to vs) I much feare. If you cannot Barre his access to'th King, neuer attempt

Any thing on him: for he hath a Witchcraft

Over the King in's Tongue.

Nor. O feare him not,

His spell in that is out: the King hath found

Matter against him, that for euer marres

The Hony of his Language. No, he's settled

(Not to come off) in his displeasure.

Suf. Sir,

I should be glad to heare such Newes as this

Once euery houre.

Nor. Beleeue it, this is true.

In the Diuorce, his contrarie proceedings

Are all vnfolded: wherein he appeares,

As I would wish mine Enemy.

Suf. How came

His practises to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Suf. O how? how?

Suf. The Cardinals Letters to the Pope miscarried,

And

And came to th'eye o'th'King, wherein was read
How that the Cardinall did intreat his Holinesse
To stay the Iudgement o'th'Diuorce; for if
It did take place, I do (quoth he) perceiue
My King is tangled in affection, to A Creature of the Queenes, Lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Ha's the King this?

Suf. Beleue it.

Sur. Will this worke?

Cham. The King in this perceiues him, how he coasts
And hedges his owne way. But in this point,
All his trickes founder, and he brings his Physicke
After his Patients death; the King already Hath married the faire Lady.

Sur. Would he had.

Suf. May you be happy in your with my Lord,
For I professe you haue it.

Sur. Now all my ioy

Trace the Coniunction.

Suf. My Amen too't.

Nor. All mens.

Suf. There's order giuen for her Coronation:
Marry this is yet but yong, and may be left
To some eares vnrecounted. But my Lords
She is a gallant Creature, and compleate
In minde and feature. I perswade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this Land, which shall
In it be memoriz'd.

Sur. But will the King

Digest this Letter of the Cardinals?

The Lord forbid.

Nor. Marry Amen.

Suf. No, no:

There be moe Waspes that buz about his Nose,
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinall Campeius,
Is stolne away to Rome, hath tane no leave,
Ha's left the cause o'th'King vnhanded, and
Is posted as the Agent of our Cardinall,
To second all his plot. I do assure you,
The King cry'de Ha, at this.

Cham. Now God incense him,
And let him cry Ha, lowder.

Nor. But my Lord

When returns Crammer?

Suf. He is return'd in his Opinions, which Haue satisfied the King for his Diuorce,
Together with all famous Colledges,
Almost in Christendome: shortly (I beleue)
His second Marriage shall be publish'd, and Her Coronation. Katherine no more
Shall be call'd Queene, but Princesse Dowager,
And Widdow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Crammer's
A worthy Fellow, and hath tane much paine
In the Kings businesse.

Suf. He ha's, and we shall see him
For it an Arch-bishop.

Nor. So I heare.

Suf. Tis so.

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.
The Cardinall.

Nor. Obserue, obserue, hee's moody.

Car. The Packet Cromwell,

Gau't you the King?

Crom. To his owne hand, in's Bed-chamber.

Card. Look'd he o'th'inside of the Paper?

Crom. Presently

He did vnseale them, and the first he view'd,
He did it with a Serious minde: a heede
Was in his countenance. You he bad
Attend him heere this Morning.

Card. Is he ready to come abroad?

Crom. I thinke by this he is.

Card. Leaueme a while.

Exit Cromwell.
It shall be to the Dutches of Alanfon,

The French Kings Sister; He shall marry her.

Anne Bullen? No: Ile no Anne Bullens for him,

There's more in't then faire Visage. Bullen?

No, wee'l no Bullens: Speedily I wish

To heare from Rome. The Marchionesse of Penbroke?

Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be he heares the King

Does whet his Anger to him.

Sur. Sharpe enough,

Lord for thy Iustice.

Car. The late Queenes Gentlewoman?

A Knights Daughter

To be her Mistis Mistis? The Queenes, Queene?

This Candle burnes not cleere, 'tis I must snuffe it,

Then out it goes. What though I know her veruous

And well deserv'd? yet I know her for

A spleeny Lutheran, and not wholsome to

Our cause, that she should lye i'th'bosome of

Our hard rul'd King. Againe, there is sprung vp

An Heretique, an Arch-onc; Crammer, one

Hath crawl'd into the fauour of the King,

And is his Oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Enter King reading of a Seedeule.

Sur. I would 'twere something y' would fret the string,
The Master-cord on's heart.

Suf. The King, the King.

King. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his owne portion? And what expence by th'houre Seemes to flow from him? How, i'th' name of Thrift Does he rake this together? Now my Lords,
Saw you the Cardinall?

Nor. My Lord, we haue
Stood heere obseruing him. Some strange Commotion
Is in his braine: He bites his lip, and starts,
Stops on a sodaine, looks vpon the ground,
Then layes his finger on his Temple: straight
Springs out into fast gate, then stops againe,
Strikes his brest hard, and anon, he casts
His eye against the Moone: in most strange Postures
We haue seene him set himselfe.

King. It may well be,
There is a mutiny in's minde. This morning,
Papers of State he sent me, to peruse
As I requir'd: and wot you what I found
There (on my Conscience put vnwittingly)
Forsooth an Inuentory, thus importing
The seuerall parcels of his Plate, his Treasure, Rich Stuffles and Ornaments of Household, which I finde at such proud Rate, that it out-speakes
Possession of a Subiect.

Nor. It's Heauens will,

Some Spirit put this paper in the Packet,

To blesse your eye withall.

King. If we did thinke

His

His Contemplation were above the earth,
And fixt on Spirituall object, he should still Dwell in his Musings, but I am afraid
His Thinkings are below the Moone, not worth
His Serious considering.

King takes his Seat, whispers Lowell, who goes

Car. Heauen forgive me, I should haue said
Ever God blesse your Highnesse, should haue said
King. Good my Lord,

You are full of Heauenly stiffe, and beare the Inuentory
Of your best Grades, in your minde; the which
You were now running o're, you haue scarce time
To steale from Spirituall Ioy, a briefe span
To keepe your earthly Audit, sure in that
I deeme you an ill Husband, and am gald
To haue you therein my Companion.

Car. Sir,

For Holy Offices I haue a time; a time
To thinke vpon the part of businesse, which
I beare i'th' State: and Nature does requite

Her times of preleruation, which perforce
I her fraile sonne, amongst my Brethren mortall,
Must giue my tendance to.

King. You haue said well.

Car. And ever may your Highnesse yoke together,
(As I will lend you cause) my doing well,

With my well saying.

King. 'Tis well said agen,
And 'tis a kinde of good deede to say well,

And yet words are no deeds. My Father lou'd you,
He said he did, and with his deed did Crowne
His word vpon you. Since I had my Office,

I haue kept you next my Heart, haue not alone
Imploy'd you where high Profits might come home,
But par'd my present Hauings, to bestow
My Bounties vpon you.

Car. What should this meane?

Sur. The Lord increase this businesse.

King. Haue I not made you
The prime man of the State? I pray you tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you haue found true:
And if you may confesse it, say withall
If you are bound to vs, or no. What say you?

Car. My Soueraigne, I confesse your Royall graces
Shew'd on me daily, haue bene more then could
My studied purposes requite, which went Beyond all mans endeauours. My endeauours,
Haue euer come too short of my Desires,
Yet fill'd with my Abilities: Mine owne ends
Haue bene mine so, that euermore they pointed To th'good of your most Sacred Person, and
The profit of the State. For your great Graces
Heap'd vpon me (poore Vnderferuer) I
Can nothing render but Allegiant thanks,

My Prayres to heauen for you; my Loyaltie
Which euer ha's, and euer shall be growing,
Till death (that Winter) kill it.

King. Fairly answer'd:
A Loyall, and obedient Subiect is Therein illustrated, the Honor of it
Does pay the Act of it, as i'th'contrary

The fowlenesse is the punishment. I presume,
That as my hand ha's open'd Bounty to you,
My heart drop'd Loue, my powre rain'd Honor, more
On you, then any: So your Hand, and Heart,

Your Braine, and euery Function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in Loues particular, be more
To me your Friend, then any.

Car. I do professe,

That for your Highnesse good, I euer labour'd
More then mine owne: that am, haue, and will be (Though all the world should cracke their duty to you,
And throw it from their Soule, though perils did Abound, as thicke as thought could make 'em, and Appare in formes more horrid) yet my Duty,
As doth a Rocke against the chiding Flood,
Should the approach of this wilde Riuer breake,
And stand vnshaken yours.

King. 'Tis Nobly spoken:

Take notice Lords, he ha's a Loyall brest,

For you haue seene him open't. Read o're this,

And after this, and then to Breakfast with
What appetite you haue.

Exit King, frowning vpon the Cardinall, the Nobles throng after him smiling, and whispering.

Car. What should this meane?

What sodaine Anger's this? How haue I reap'd it?

He parted Frowning from me, as if Ruine
Leap'd from his Eyes. So looks the chafed Lyon
Vpon the daring Huntsman that has gall'd him:

Then makes him nothing. I must reade this paper:
I feare the Story of his Anger. 'Tis so:

This paper ha's vndone me: 'Tis th'Accompt
Of all that world of Wealth I haue drawne together
For mine owne ends, (Indeed to gaine the Popedom,
And see my Friends in Rome.) O Negligence!
Fit for a Foole to fall by: What crosse Diuell
Made me put this maine Secret in the Packet

I sent the King? Is there no way to cure this?

No new deuce to beate this from his Braines?

I know 'twill stirre him strongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spight of Fortune
Will bring me off againe. What's this? To th' Pope?

The Letter (as I liue) with all the Businesse
I writ too's Holinesse. Nay then, farewell:
I haue touch'd the highest point of all my Greatnesse,
And from that full Meridian of my Glory,
I haue now to my Setting, I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the Euening,
And no man see me more.

Enter to Wolsey, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolke, the Earle of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlaine.

Nor. Heare the Kings pleasure Cardinall,
Who commands you

To render vp the Great Seale presently
Into our hands, and to Confine your selfe
To Asher-houfe, my Lord of Winchesters,

Till you heare further from his Highnesse.

Car. Stay:

Where's your Commission? Lords, words cannot carrie Authority so weighty.

Suf. Who dare crosse 'em,
Bearing the Kings will from his mouth expressly?

Car. Till I finde more shen will, or words to do it,
(I meane your malice) know, Officious Lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now I feele
Of what course Mettle ye are molded, Enuy,
How eagerly ye follow my Disgraces

As

As if it fed ye, and how sleeke and wanton
Ye appeare in euery thing may bring my ruine?
Follow your enuious courtes, men of Malice;
You haue Christian warrant for 'em, and no doubt
In time will finde their fit Rewards. That Seale
You aske with such a Violence, the King
(Mine, and your Master) with his owne hand, gaue me:
Bad me enioy it, with the Place, and Honors
During my life; and to confirme his Goodnesse, Ti'de it by Letters Patents. Now, who'll take it?

Sur. The King that gaue it.

Car. It must be him selfe then.

Sur. Thou art a proud Traitor, Priest.

Car. Proud Lord, thou lyest:

Within these fortie houres, Surrey durst better
Haue burnt that Tongue, then saide so.

Sur. Thy Ambition

(Thou Scarlet sinne) robb'd this bewailing Land
Of Noble Buckingham, my Father-in-Law,
The heads of all thy Brother-Cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a haire of his. Plague of your policie,
You sent me Deputie for Ireland,
Farre from his succour; from the King, from all
That might haue mercie on the fault, thou gau'st him:
Whil'st your great Goodnesse, out of holy pittie,
Absolu'd him with an Axe.

Vol. This, and all else

This talking Lord can lay vpon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The Duke by Law Found his defects. How innocent I was
From any priuate malice in his end,
His Noble Iurie, and foule Cause can witness:
If I lou'd many words, Lord, I should tell you,
You haue as little Honesty, as Honor,
That in the way of Loyaltie, and Truth,
Toward the King, my euer Royall Master,
Dare mate a sounder man then Surrie can be,
And all that loue his follies.

Sur. By my Soule,

Your long Coat (Priest) protects you,
Thou should'st feele
My Sword it's life blood of thee else. My Lords,
Can ye endure to heare this Arrogance?
And from this Fellow? If we liue thus tamely,
To be thus laded by a peece of Scarlet,
Farewell Nobilitie: let his Grace go forward,
And dare vs with his Cap, like Larkes.

Card. All Goodnesse

Is poyson to thy Stomacke.

Sur. Yes, that goodnesse

Of gleaning all the Lands wealth into one,
Into your owne hands (Card'nall) by Extortion:
The goodnesse of your intercepted Packets
You writ to th' Pope, against the King: your goodnesse
Since you prouoke me, shall be most notorious.
My Lord of Norfolk, as you are truly Noble,
As you respect the common good, the State
Of our despis'd Nobilitie, our Issues,
(Whom if he liue, will scarce be Gentlemen)
Produce the grand summe of his finnes, the Articles
Collected from his life. He startle you
Worse then the Sacring Bell, when the browne Wench
Lay kissing in your Armes, Lord Cardinall.

Car. How much me thinks, I could despise this man,
But that I am bound in Charitie against it.

Nor. Those Articles, my Lord, are in the Kings hand;
But thus much, they are foule ones.

Vol. So much fairer

And spotlesse, shall mine Innocence arise,
When the King knowes my Truth.

Sur. This cannot saue you:

I thanke my Memorie, I yet remember
Some of these Articles, and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and crie guiltie Cardinall,
You'll shew a little Honesty.

Vol. Speake on Sir,

I dare your worst Obiections: If I blush,
It is to see a Nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want those, then my head;
Haue at you.

First, that without the Kings assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a Legate, by which power
You maim'd the Iurisdiction of all Bishops.

Nor. Then, That in all you writ to Rome, or else
To Forraigne Princes, Ego & Rex meus
Was still inscrib'd: in which you brought the King
To be your Seruant.

Suf. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of King or Councell, when you went Ambassador to the Emperour, you made bold
To carry into Flanders, the Great Seale.

Sur. Item, You sent a large Commission
To Gregory de Cassado, to conclude
Without the Kings will, or the States allowance,
A League betwene his Highnesse, and Ferrara.

Suf. That out of meere Ambition, you haue caus'd
Your holy Hat to be stamp'd on the Kings Coine.

Sur. Then, That you haue sent innumerable substance,
(By what meanes got, I leaue to your owne conscience)
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the wayes
You haue for Dignities, to the meere yndooing
Of all the Kingdome. Many more there are,
Which since they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my Lord,

Prese not a falling man too farre: 'tis Vertue:
His faults lye open to the Lawes, let them
(Not you) correct him. My heart weepes to see him
So little, of his great Selfe.

Sur. I forgive him.

Suf. Lord Cardinall, the Kings further pleasure is,
Because all those things you haue done of late
By your power Legatiue within this Kingdome,
Fall into th' compasse of a Premunire;
That therefore such a Writ be sued against you,
To forfeit all your Goods, Lands, Tenements,
Castles, and whatsoever, and to be
Out of the Kings protection. This is my Charge.

Nor. And so wee'll leaue you to your Meditations
How to liue better. For your stubborn answer
About the giuing backe the Great Seale to vs,
The King shall know it, and (no doubt) shal thanke you.
So fare you well, my little good Lord Cardinall.

Exeunt all but Wolsey.

Vol. So farewell, to the little good you beare me.
Farewell? A long farewell to all my Greatnesse.
This is the fate of Man; to day he puts forth
The tender Leues of hopes, to morrow Blossomes,
And beares his blushing Honors thicke vpon him:
The third day, comes a Frost; a killing Frost,
And when he thinks, good easie man, full surely

His

His Greatnesse is a ripening, nippes his roote,
And then he falls as I do. I haue ventur'd
Like little wanton Boyes that swim on bladders:
This many Summers in a Sea of Glory,
But sacre beyond my depth: my high-blowne Pride
At length broke vnder me, and now ha's left me
Weary, and old with Seruice, to the mercy
Of a rude streame, that must for euer hide me.
Vaine pompe, and glory of this World, I hate ye,
I feele my heart new open'd. Oh how wretched
Is that poore man, that hangs on Princes fauours?
There is bewixt that smile we would aspire too,
That sweet Aspect of Princes, and their ruine,
More pangs, and feares then warres, or women haue;
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Neuer to hope againe.

Enter Cromwell, standing amazed.

Why how now Cromwell?

Crom. I haue no power to speake Sir.

Car. What, amaz'd

At my misfortunes? Can thy Spirit wonder
A great man should decline. Nay, and you weep
I am false indeed.

Crom. How does your Grace.

Card. Why well:

Neuer so truly happy, my good Cromwell,
I know my selfe now, and I feele within me,
A peace about all earthly Dignities,
A still, and quiet Conscience. The King ha's cur'd me,
I humbly thanke his Grace: and from these shoulders
These ruin'd Pillers, out of pittie, taken
A load, would sinke a Nauy, (too much Honor.)
O'tis a burden Cromwell, 'tis a burden
Too heauy for a man, that hopes for Heauen.

Crom. I am glad your Grace,

Has made that right vse of it.

Card. I hope I haue:

I am able now (me thinks)

(Out of a Fortitude of Soule, I feele)

To endure more Miseries, and greater farre

Then my Weake-hearted Enemies, dare offer.

What Newes abroad?

Crom. The heauiest, and the worst,

Is your displeasure with the King.

Card. God blesse him.

Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas Moore is chosen
Lord Chancellor, in your place.

Card. That's somewhat sodain.

But he's a Learned man. May he continue
Long in his Highnesse fauour, and do Iustice
For Truths sake, and his Conscience; that his bones,
When he ha's run his course, and sleepes in Blessings,
May haue a Tombe of Orphants teares wept on him.
What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome;
Instal'd Lord Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

Card. That's Newes indeed.

Crom. Last, that the Lady Anne,
Whom the King hath in secrecie long married,
This day was view'd in open, as his Queene,
Going to Chappell: and the voyce is now
Onely about her Coronation.

Card. There was the waight that pull'd me downe.
O Cromwell,

The King ha's gone beyond me: All my Glories
In that one woman, I haue lost for euer.

No Sun, shall euer vsher forth mine Honors,
Or gilde againe the Noble Troopes that waighted
Vpon my smiles. Go get thee from me Cromwell,
I am a poore false man, vaworthy now
To be thy Lord, and Master. Seeke the King
(That Sun, I pray may neuer set) I haue told him,
What, and how true thou art; he will aduance thee:
Some little memory of me, will stirre him
(I know his Noble Nature) not to let Thy hopefull seruice perishe too. Good Cromwell
Neglect him not; make vse now, and prouide
For thine owne future safety.

Crom. O my Lord,

Must I then leaue you? Must I needes forgo
So good, so Noble, and so true a Master?
Beare witness, all that haue not hearts of Iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaues his Lord.
The King shall haue my seruice; but my prayres
For euer, and for euer shall be yours.

Card. Cromwell, I did not thinke to shed a teare
In all my Miseries: But thou hast forc'd me
(Out of thy honest truth) to play the Woman.

Let's dry our eyes: And thus farre heare me Cromwell,
And when I am forgotten, as I shall be,

And sleepe in dull cold Marble, where no mention
Of me, more must be heard of: Say I taught thee;

Say Wolsey, that once trod the wayes of Glory,
And founded all the Depths, and Shoales of Honor,

Pound thee a way (out of his wracke) to rise in:
A sure, and safe one, though thy Master mist it.

Marke but my Fall, and that that Ruin'd me:

Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away Ambition,
By that sinne fell the Angels: how can man then

(The Image of his Maker) hope to win by it?
Loue thy selfe last, cherish those hearts that hate thee;

Corruption wins not more then Honesty.

Still in thy right hand, carry gentle Peace

To silence enuious Tongues. Be iust, and feare not;

Let all the ends thou aim'st at, be thy Countries,

Thy Gods, and Truths. Then if thou fall'st (O Cromwell)

Thou fall'st a blessed Martyr.

Serue the King: And prythee leade me in:

There take an Inuentory of all I haue,

To the last peny, 'tis the Kings. My Robe,

And my Integrity to Heauen, is all,

I dare now call mine owne. O Cromwell, Cromwell,

Had I but seru'd my God, with halfe the Zeale

I seru'd my King: he would not in mine Age

Haue left me naked to mine Enemies.

Crom. Good Sir, haue patience.

Card. So I haue. Farewell

The Hopes of Court, my Hopes in Heauen do dwell.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.

1 Yare well met once againe.

2 So are you.

1 You come to take your stand heere, and behold
The Lady Anne, passe from her Coronation.

2 'Tis

2 'Tis all my businesse. At our last encounter,
The Duke of Buckingham came from his Triall.

1 'Tis very true. But that time offer'd sorrow,
This generall ioy.

2 'Tis well: The Citizens

I am sure haue shewne at full their Royall minds,
As let 'em haue their rights they are euer forward
In Celebration of this day with Shewes,
Pageants, and Sights of Honor.

1 Neuer greater,

Nor Ile assure you better taken Sir.

2 May I be bold to aske what that contains,
That Paper in your hand.

1 Yes, 'tis the List

Of those that claime their Offices this day,
By custome of the Coronation.

The Duke of Suffolke is the first, and claimes
To be high Steward; Next the Duke of Norfolke,
He to be Earle Marshall: you may reade the rest.

1 I thanke you Sir: Had I not known those customs,
I should haue bene beholding to your Paper:

But I beseech you, what's become of Katherine
The Princesse Dowager? How goes her businesse?

1 That I can tell you too. The Archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned, and Reuerend Fathers of his Order,
Held a late Court at Dunstable; fixe miles off
From Amptill, where the Princesse lay, to which
She was often cyted by them, but appear'd not:
And to be short, for not Appearance, and
The Kings late Scruple, by the maine assent
Of all these Learned men, she was diuorced,
And the late Marriage made of none effect:
Since which, she was remou'd to Kymmation,
Where she remains now sicke.

2 Alas good Lady.

The Trumpets sound: Stand close,

The Queene is coming.

Ho-boys.

The Order of the Coronation.

1 A lincly Flourish of Trumpets.

2 Then, two Iudges.

3 Lord Chancellor, with Purse and Mace before him.

4 Quiristers singing. Musicke.

5 Maior of London, bearing the Mace. Then Garter, in his Coate of Armes, and on his head he wore a Gilt Copper Crowne.

6 Marquesse Dorset, bearing a Scepter of Gold, on his head, a Demy Coronall of Gold. With him, the Earle of Surrey, bearing the Rod of Silver with the Dove, Crowned with an Earles Coronet. Collars of Esses.

7 Duke of Suffolke, in his Robe of Estate, his Coronet on his head, bearing a long white Wand, as High Steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolke, with the Rod of Marshallship, a Coronet on his head. Collars of Esses.

8 A Canopy, borne by foure of the Cinque-Ports, vnder it the Queene in her Robe; in her haire, richly adorned with Pearle, Crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London, and Winchester.

9 The Olde Dutcheffe of Norfolke, in a Coronall of Gold, wrought with Flowers, bearing the Queenes Traine.

10 Certaine Ladies or Countesses, with plaine Circlets of Gold, without Flowers.

Exeunt, first passing ouer the Stage in Order and State, and then, A great Flourish of Trumpets.

2 A Royall Traine beleue me: These I know:
Who's that that beares the Scepter?

1 Marquesse Dorset,

And that the Earle of Surrey, with the Rod.

2 A bold braue Gentleman. That should bee
The Duke of Suffolke.

1 'Tis the same: high Steward.

2 And that my Lord of Norfolke?

1 Yes.

2 Heauen blesse thee,

Thou hast the sweetest face I euer look'd on.

Sir, as I haue a Soule, she is an Angell;

Our King has all the Indies in his Armes,

And more, and richer, when he straines that Lady,
I cannot blame his Conscience.

1 They that beare

The Cloath of Honour ouer her, are foure Barons
Of the Cinque Ports.

2 Those men are happy,

And so are all, are neerer her.

I take it, she that carries vp the Traine,

Is that old Noble Lady, Dutcheffe of Norfolke.

1 It is, and all the rest are Countesses.

2 Their Coronets say so. These are Starres indeede,
And sometimes falling ones.

2 No more of that.

Enter a third Gentleman.

1 God saue you Sir. Where haue you bin broiling?

3 Among the crow'd i'th' Abbey, where a finger

Could not be wedg'd in more: I am stifled

With the meere ranknesse of their ioy.

2 You saw the Ceremony?

3 That I did.

1 How was it?

3 Well worth the seeing.

2 Good Sir, speake it to vs?

3 As well as I am able. The rich streame

Of Lords, and Ladies, hauing brought the Queene

To a prepar'd place in the Quire, fell off

A distance from her, while her Grace sat downe

To rest a while, some halfe an houre, or so,

In a rich Chaire of State, opposing freely

The Beauty of her Person to the People.

Beleue me Sir, she is the goodliest Woman

That euer lay by man: which when the people

Had the full view of, such a noyse arose,

As the shrowdes make at Sea, in a stiffe Tempest,

As lowd, and to as many Tunes. Hats, Cloakes,

(Doublets, I thinke) flew vp, and had their Faces

Bin loose, this day they had bene lost. Such ioy

I neuer saw before. Great belly'd women,

That had not halfe a weeke to go, like Rammes

In the old time of Warre, would shake the prease

And make 'em reele before 'em. No man liuing

Could say this is my wife there, all were wouen

So strangely in one peece.

2 But what follow'd?

3 At length, her Grace rose, and with modest paces

Came to the Altar, where she kneel'd, and Saint-like

Cast her faire eyes to Heauen, and pray'd deuoutly.

Then rose againe, and bow'd her to the people:

When by the Arch-bishop of Canterbury,

She had all the Royall makings of a Queene;

As holy Oyle, Edmard Confessors Crowne,

The Rod, and Bird of Peace, and all such Emblemes

Laid Nobly on her: which perform'd, the Quire

With

With all the choycest Musicke of the Kingdome,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full State pac'd backe againe
To Yorke-Place, where the Feast is held.

1 Sir,

You must no more call it Yorke-place, that's past:

For since the Cardinall fell, that Titles lost,

'Tis now the Kings, and call'd White-Hall.

3 I know it:

But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name

Is fresh about me.

2 What two Reuerend Byshops

Were those that went on each side of the Queene?

3 Stokeley and Gardiner, the one of Winchester,

Newly prefer'd from the Kings Secretary:

The other London.

2 He of Winchester

Is held no great good louer of the Archbishops.

The virtuous Cranmer.

3 All the Land knowes that:

How euer, yet there is no great breach, when it comes

Cranmer will finde a Friend will not shrinke from him.

2 Who may that be, I pray you.

3 Thomas Cranwell,

A man in much esteeme with th'King, and truly

A worthy Friend. The King ha's made him

Master of th' Tewell House,

And one already of the Priuy Councell.

2 He will deserue more.

3 Yes without all doubt.

Come Gentlemen, ye shall go my way,

Which is to th' Court, and there ye shall be my Guests:

Something I can command. As I walke thither,

Ile tell ye more.

Borb. You may command vs Sir.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Katherine Dowager, sicke, lead betweene Griffith, her Gentleman, and Patientia her Woman.

Griff. How do's your Grace?

Kath. O Griffith, sicke to death:

My Legges like loaden Branches bow to th' Earth,

Willing to leaue their burthen: Reach a Chaire,

So now (me thinkes) I feele a little ease.

Didst thou not tell me Griffith, as thou lead'st mee,

That the great Childe of Honor, Cardinall Wolsey

Was dead?

Griff. Yes Madam: but I thanke your Grace

Out of the paine you suffer'd, gaue no care too't.

Kath. Pre'thee good Griffith, tell me how he dy'de.

If well, he slept before me happily

For my example.

Griff. Well, the voyce goes Madam,

For after the stout Earle Northumberland

Arrested him at Yorke, and brought him forward

As a man sorely tainted, to his Answer,

He fell sicke suddenly, and grew so ill

He could not see his Mule.

Kath. Alas poore man.

Griff. At last, with easie Rodes, he came to Leicester,

Lodg'd in the Abbey; where the reuerend Abbot
With all his Couent, honourably receiu'd him;
To whom he gaue these words. O Father Abbot,
An old man, broken with the stormes of State,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye:

Giue him a little earth for Charity.

So went to bed; where eagerly his sicknesse

Pursu'd him still, and three nights after this,

About the houre of eight, which he himselfe

Foretold should be his last, full of Repentance,

Continuall Meditations, Teares, and Sorrowes;

He gaue his Honors to the world agen,

His blessed part to Heauen, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest,

His Faults lye gently on him:

Yet thus saith Griffith, giue me leaue to speake him,

And yet with Charity. He was a man

Of an vnbounded stomacke, euer ranking

Himselfe with Princes. One that by suggestion

Ty'd all the Kingdome. Symonie, was faire play,

His owne Opinion was his Law. I'th' presence

He would say vntruths, and be euer double

Both in his words, and meaning. He was neuer

(But where he meant to Ruine) pitifull.

His Promises, were as he then was, Mighty:

But his performance, as he is now, Nothing:

Of his owne body he was ill, and gaue

The Clergy ill example.

Griff. Noble Madam:

Mens euill manners, liue in Brasse, their Vertues

We write in Water. May it please your Highnesse

To heare me speake his good now?

Kath. Yes good Griffith,

I were malicious else.

Griff. This Cardinall,

Though from an humble Stocke, vndoubtedly

Was fashion'd to much Honor. From his Cradle

He was a Scholler, and a ripe, and good one:

Exceeding wise, faire spoken, and perswading:

Lofty, and sower to them that lou'd him not:

But, to those men that sought him, sweet as Summer:

And though he were vnfacis'd in getting,

(Which was a sinne) yet in bestowing, Madam,

He was most Princely: Euer witnesse for him

Those twinnes of Learning, that he rais'd in you,

Ipswich and Oxford: one of which, fell with him;

Vnwillig to out-lie the good that did it.

The other (though vnfortu'd) yet so famous,

So excellent in Art, and still so rising,

That Christendome shall euer speake his Vertue.

His Ouertthrow, heap'd Happinesse vpon him:

For then, and not till then, he felt himselfe,

And found the Blessednesse of being little.

And to adde greater Honors to his Age

Then man could giue him; he dy'de, fearing God.

Kath. After my death, I wish no other Herald;

No other speaker of my liuing Actions,

To keepe mine Honor, from Corruption,

But such an honest Chronicler as Griffith.

Whom I most hated Liuing, thou hast made mee

With thy Religious Truth, and Modestie,

(Now in his Affes) Honor: Peace be with him.

Patience, be neere me still, and set me lower,

I haue not long to trouble thee: Good Griffith;

Cause the Musicians play me that sad note

I nam'd my Knell; whilst I sit meditating

On

On that Cœlestiall Harmony I go too.

Sad and solemn Musicke.

Grif. She is asleep: Good wench, let's sit down quiet,
For feare we wake her. Softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision.

Enter solemnly tripping one after another, sixe Personages, clad in white Robes, wearing on their beades Garlands of Bayes, and golden Vizards on their faces, Branches of Bayes or Palme in their hands. They first Conge unto her, then Dance: and at certaine Changes, the first two hold a spare
Garland over her Head, at which the other foure make re-uerend Curties. Then the two that held the Garland, deli-uer the same to the other next two, who obserue the same order in their Changes, and holding the Garland over her head. Which done, they deliuer the same Garland to the last two: who likewise obserue the same Order. At which (as it were by inspiration) she makes (in her sleepe) signes of reioycing, and holdeth up her hands to heauen. And so, in their Dancing vanish, carrying the Garland with them.
The Musicke continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?
And leaue me heere in wretchednesse, behinde ye?

Grif. Madam, we are heere.

Kath. It is not you I call for,
Saw ye none enter since I slept?

Grif. None Madam.

Kath. No? Saw you not euen now a blessed Troope
Inuite me to a Banquet, whose bright faces
Cast thousand beames vpon me, like the Sun?
They promis'd me eternall Happinesse,
And brought me Garlands (Griffith) which I feele
I am not worthy yet to weare: I shall assuredly.

Grif. I am most ioyfull Madam, such good dreames Possesse your Fancy.

Kath. Bid the Musicke leaue,
They are harsh and heauy to me.

Musicke ceases.

Pati. Do you note

How much her Grace is alter'd on the sodaine?
How long her face is drawne? How pale she lookes,
And of an earthy cold? Marke her eyes?

Grif. She is going Wench. Pray, pray.

Pati. Heauen comfort her.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. And 't like your Grace

Kath. You are a sawcy Fellow,

Deserue we no more Reuerence?

Grif. You are too blame,
Knowing she will not loose her wonted Greatnesse
To vse so rude behaviour. Go too, kneele.

Mes. I humbly do entreat your Highnesse pardon,
My haist made me vnmanerly. There is staying
A Gentleman sent from the King, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance Griffith. But this Fellow
Let me see him againe.

Exit Messeng.

Enter Lord Capuchins.

If my sight faile not,
You should be Lord Ambassador from the Emperor,
My Royall Nephew, and your name Capuchins.

Cap. Madam the same, Your Seruant.

Kath. O my Lord,
The Times and Titles now are alter'd strangely
With me, since first you knew me.
But I pray you,
What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble Lady,

First mine owne seruice to your Grace, the next
The Kings request, that I would visit you,
Who grieues much for your weaknesse, and by me
Sends you his Princely Commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O my good Lord, that comfort comes too late,
'Tis like a Pardon after Execution;

That gentle Physicke giuen in time, had cur'd me:
But now I am past all Comforts heere, but Prayers.
How does his Highnesse?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he euer do, and euer flourish,
When I shall dwell with Wormes, and my poore name
Banish'd the Kingdome. Patience, is that Letter
I caus'd you write, yet sent away?

Pati. No Madam.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliuer
This to my Lord the King.

Cap. Most willing Madam.

Kath. In which I haue commended to his goodnesse
The Modell of our chaste loues: his yong daughter,
The dewes of Heauen fall thicke in Blessings on her,
Beseeching him to giue her vertuous breeding.
She is yong, and of a Noble modest Nature,
I hope she will deserue well; and a little
To loue her for her Mothers sake, that lou'd him,
Heauen knowes how deere.

My next poore Petition,
Is, that his Noble Grace would haue some pittie
Vpon my wretched women, that so long
Haue follow'd both my Fortunes, faithfully,
Of which there is not one, I dare auow
(And now I should not lye) but will deserue
For Vertue, and true Beautie of the Soule,
For honestie, and decent Carriage

A right good Husband (let him be a Noble)
And sure those men are happy that shall haue 'em.
The last is for my men, they are the poorest,
(But pouerty could neuer draw 'em from me)
That they may haue their wages, duly paid 'em,
And something ouer to remember me by.
If Heauen had pleas'd to haue giuen me longer life
And able meanes, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole Contents, and good my Lord,
By that you loue the deere'st in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to soules departed,
Stand these poore peoples Friend, and vrge the King
To do me this last right.

Cap. By Heauen I will,
Or let me loose the fashion of a man.

Kath. I thanke you honest Lord. Remember me
In all humilitie vnto his Highnesse:
Say his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world. Tell him in death I blest him
(For so I will) mine eyes grow dimme. Farewell
My Lord. Griffith farewell. Nay Patience,
You must not leaue me yet. I must to bed,
Call in more women. When I am dead, good Wench,
Let me be vs'd with Honor; strew me ouer
With Maiden Flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste Wife, to my Graue; Embalne me,
Then lay me forth (although vnqueen'd) yet like
A Queene, and Daughter to a King enterre me.
I can no more.

Scene

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a Torch before him, met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gard. It's one a clocke Boy, is't not?

Boy. It hath stooke.

Gard. These should be houres for prelaties, to be
Not for delights: Times to rephoyse our Nature
With comforting repose, and not for vs
To waste these times. Goodnight of night Sir Thomas.

Whether so late?

Lov. Came you from the King, my Lord?

Gard. I did Sir Thomas, and left him at Primero
With the Duke of Suffolke.

Lov. I must to him too.

Gard. Before he go to bed. He take my leaue.

Lov. Not yet Sir Thomas Lovell: what's the matter?

It seems you are in haste, and if there be
No great offence belongs too't, giue your Friend
Some touch of your late businesse: Affaires that walke
(As they say Spirits do) at midnight, haue
In them a wilder Nature, then the businesse of the day.
That seeks dispatch by day.

Lov. My Lord, I loue you;
And duct commend a secret to your eare
Much weightier then this worke. The Queens in Labor
They say in great Extremity, and fear'd
Shee'l with the Labour, end.

Gard. The fruit she goes with
I pray for heartily, that it may finde
Good time, and liue: but for the Stocke Sir Thomas,
I wish it grubb'd vp now.

Lov. Me thinks I could Cry the Amen, and yet my Conscience sayes
Shee's a good Creature, and sweet-Ladie do's
Deserue our better wishes.

Gard. But Sir, Sir,
Heare me Sir Thomas, y'are a Gentleman
Of mine owne way. I know you Wise, Religious,
And let me tell you, it will ne be well,
'Twill not Sir Thomas Lovell, tak't of me,
Till Cranmer, Cromwel, her two hands, and shee
Sleepe in their Graues.

Lovell. Now Sir, you speake of two
The most remark'd in Kingdome: as for Cromwel,
Beside that of the Jewell-House, is made Master
Of the Rolles, and the Kings Secretary. Further Sir,
Stands in the gap and Trade of most Preferments
With which the Line will load him. Th' Archbyshop
Is the Kings hand, and tongue, and who dare speak
One syllable against him?

Gard. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas, you shall see
There are that dare, and I my selfe haue ventur'd
To speake my minde of him: and indeed this day
Sir (I may tell it you) I thinke I haue
Incens'd the Lords of th' Councell, that he is (For so I know he is, they know he is)
A most Arch-Hereticque, a Pestilence
That does infect the Land: with which, they moued
Haue broken with the King, who hath so farre
Giuen eare to our Complaint, of his great Grace,
And Princely Care, fore-seeing those fell Mischiefs,

Our Reasons layd before him, hath commanded
To morrow Morning to the Councell Boord
He be conuenced. He's a ranke weed Sir Thomas,
And we must root him out. From your Affaires
I hinder you too long: Good night, Sir Thomas.

Exit Gardiner and Page.

Lov. Many good nights, my Lord, I rest your seruant.

Enter King and Suffolke.

King. Charles, I will play no more to night,
My mudes not on't, you are too hard for me.

Suff. Sir, I did neuer win of you before.

King. But little Charles,
Nor shall you when my Fancies on my play.

Now Lovell, from the Queene what is the Newes?

Lov. I could not personally deliuer to her

What you commanded me, but by her woman,

I sent your Message, who return'd her thanks

In the great'st humblenesse, and desir'd your Highnesse

Most heartily to pray for her.

King. What say'st thou? Ha?

To pray for her? What is she crying out?

Lov. So said her woman, and that her suffrance made

Almost each pang, a death.

King. Alas good Lady,

Suff. God safely quit her of her Burthen, and

With gentle Trauaille, to the gladding of Your Highnesse with an Heire.

King. 'Tis midnight Charles,

Prythee to bed, and in thy Prayres remember

The state of my poore Queene. Leau me alone,

For I must thinke of that, which company

Would not be friendly too.

Suff. I wish your Highnesse

A quiet night, and my good Mistis will Remember in my Prayers.

King. Charles good night.

Well Sir, what followes?

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Den. Sir, I haue brought my Lord the Arch-bishop,
As you commanded me.

King. Ha? Canterbury?

Den. I my good Lord.

King. 'Tis true: where is he Denny?

Den. He attends your Highnesse pleasure.

King. Bring him to Vs.

Lov. This is about that, which the Byshop spake,

I am happily come hither.

Enter Cranmer and Denny.

King. Auoyd the Gallery.

Ha? I haue said. Be gone.

What?

Cran. I am fearefull: Wherefore frownes he thus?

'Tis his Aspect of Terror. All's not well.

King. How now my Lord?

You do desire to know wherefore

I sent for you.

Cran. It is my dutie

T'attend your Highnesse pleasure.

King. Pray you arise

My good and gracious Lord of Canterbury:

Come, you and I must walke a turne together:

I haue Newes to tell you.

Come, come, giue me your hand.

Ah my good Lord, I greeue at what I speake,

And am right sorrie to repeat what followes.

I haue, and most vnwillingly of late

x 2

Heard

Heard many greuous, I do say my Lord
Greuous complaints of you; which being consider'd, Haue mou'd Vs, and our Councell, that you shall
This Morning come before vs, where I know
You cannot with such freedome purge your selfe,
But that till further Triall, in those Charges
Which will require your Answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your house our Towre: you, a Brother of vs
It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thanke your Highnesse,
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnowed, where my Chaffe
And Corne shall flye asunder. For I know
There's none stands vnder more calumnious tongues,
Then I my selfe, poore man.

King. Stand vp, good Canterbury,
Thy Truth, and thy Integrity is rooted
In vs thy Friend. Giue me thy hand, stand vp, Prythee let's walke. Now by my Holydame,
What manner of man are you? My Lord, I look'd
You would haue giuen me your Petition, that I should haue tane some paines, to bring together
Your selfe, and your Accusers, and to haue heard you Without indurance further.

Cran. Most dread Liege,
The good I stand on, is my Truth and Honesty:
If they shall faile, I with mine Enemies
Will triumph o're my person, which I waigh not,
Being of those Vertues vacant. I feare nothing
What can be said against me.

King. Know you not
How your state stands i'th' world, with the whole world?
Your Enemies are many, and not small; their practises
Must beare the same proportion, and not euer
The Iustice and the Truth o'th' question carries
The dew o'th' Verdict with it; at what case
Might corrupt mindes procure, Knowes as corrupt
To sweare against you: Such things haue bene done,
You are Potently oppos'd, and with a Malice
Of as great Size. Weene you of better lucke,
I meane in periu'd Witness, then your Master,
Whose Minister you are, whiles heere he liu'd
Vpon this naughty Earth? Go too, go too,
You take a Precept for no leape of danger,
And woe your owne destruction.

Cran. God, and your Maiesty Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me.

King. Be of good cheere,
They shall no more p'uaile, then we giue way too:
Keepe comfort to you, and this Morning see
You do appeare before them. If they shall chance
In charging you with matters, to commit you:
The best perswasions to the contrary
Faile not to vse, and with what vehemencie
Th' occasion shall instruct you. If intreaties
Will render you no remedy, this Ring
Deliver them, and your Appeale to vs
There make before them. Looke, the goodman weeps:
He's honest on mine Honor. Gods blest Mother,
I sweare he is true-hearted, and a soule
None better in my Kingdome. Get you gone,
And do as I haue bid you. Exit Cranmer.
He has strangled his Language in his teares.

Enter Olde Lady.

Gent. within. Come backe: what meane you?
Lady. He not come backe, the rydings that I bring
Will make my boldnesse, manners. Now good Angels
Fly o're thy Royall head, and shade thy person
Vnder their blessed wings.

King. Now by thy lookes
I gesse thy Message. Is the Queene deliuer'd?
Say I, and of a boy.

Lady. I, I my Liege,
And of a louely Boy: the God of heauen
Both now, and euer blese her: 'Tis a Gytle
Promises Boyes heereafter. Sir, your Queen
Desires your Visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you,
As Cherry, is to Cherry.

King. Louell,
Lov. Sir.

King. Giue her an hundred Markes.

He to the Queene. Exit King.
Lady. An hundred Markes? By this light, he ha more.
An ordinary Groome is for such payment.
I will haue more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the Gytle was like to him? He Haue more, or else vsay't: and now, while 'tis hot,
He put it to the issue. Exit Lady.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Cranmer, Archbysop of Canterbury.

Cran. I hope I am not too late, and yet the Gentleman
That was sent to me from the Councell, pray'd me
To make great hast. All fast? What meane this? How?
Who waits there? Sure you know me?

Enter Keeper.
Keep. Yes, my Lord:
But yet I cannot helpe you.

Cran. Why?
Keep. Your Grace must waight till you be call'd for.

Enter Doctor Butts.
Cran. So.

Butts. This is a Peere of Malice: I am glad
I came this way so happily. The King
Shall vnderstand it presently. Exit Butts.

Cran. 'Tis Butts.
The Kings Physitian, as he past along
How earnestly he cast his eyes vpon me:
Pray heauen he found not my disgrace: for certaine
This is of purpose laid by some that hate me,
(God turne their hearts, I neuer sought their malice)
To quench mine Honor; they would shame to make me
Wait else at doore: a fellow Councillor
'Mong Boyes, Groomes, and Lackeyes.
But their pleasures
Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King, and Butts, at a Windowe above.

Butts. He shew your Grace the strangest sight.
King. What's that Butts?

Butts. I thinke your Highnesse saw this many a day.

King. Body a me: where is it?

Butts. There my Lord:
The high promotion of his Grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his State at doore 'mongst Pursuants,
Pages, and Foot-boyes.

King. Ha? 'Tis he indeede.

Is this the Honour they doe one another?

Tis well there's one about 'em yet; I had thought

They had parted so much honesty among 'em,

At least good manners; as not thus to suffer

A man of his Place, and to neere our fauour

To dance attendance on their Lordships pleasures,

And at the doore too, like a Post with Packes:

By holy Mary (Butts) there's knauery;

Let 'em alone, and draw the Curtaine close:

We shall heare more anon.

A Councell Table brought in with Chayres and Stoolcs, and placed vnder the State. Enter Lord Chancelour, places

Duke of Suffolke, Duke of Norfolke, Surrey, Lord Cham-

berlaine, Gardiner, seat themselves in Order on each side.

Cromwel at lower end, as Secretary.

Chan. Speake to the businesse, M. Secretary;

Why are we met in Councell?

Crom. Please your Honour,

The chiefe cause concerns his Grace of Canterbury.

Gard. Ha's he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there?

Keep. Without my Noble Lords?

Gard. Yes.

Keep. My Lord Archbishop:

And ha's done halfe an houre to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

Keep. Your Grace may enter now.

Cranmer approaches the Councell Table.

Chan. My good Lord Archbishop, I'm very sorry

To sit heere at this present, and behold

That Chayre stand empty: But we all are men

In our owne natures fraile, and capable

Of our flesh, few are Angels, out of which frailety

And want of wisdom, you that best should teach vs,

Haue misdeem'd your selfe, and not a little:

Toward the King first, then his Lawes, in filling

The whole Realme, by your teaching & your Chaplaines

(For so we are inform'd) with new opinions,

Diuers and dangerous; which are Heresies;

And not reform'd, may proue pernicious.

Gard. Which Reformation must be sodaine too

My Noble Lords; for those that tame wild Horses,

Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;

But stop their mouthes with stubborn Bits & spurres 'em,

Till they obey the maninge. If we suffer

Out of our easinesse and childish pittie

To one mans Honour, this contagious sicknesse;

Farewell all Physicke: and what follows then?

Comotions, vprores, with a generall Taint

Of the whole State; as of late dayes our neighbours,

The vpper Germany can deereely witness:

Yet freshly pittied in our memories.

Cran. My good Lords; Hitherto, in all the Progresse

Both of my Life and Office, I haue labour'd,

And with no litle study, that my teaching

And the strong course of my Authority,
Might goe one way, and safely; and the end
Was euer to doe well: nor is there living,
(I speake it with a single heart, my Lords)
A man that more detests, more flirts against,
Both in his priuate Conscience, and his place,
Defacers of a publique peace then I doe:
Pray Heauen the King may neuer find a heart
With lesse Allegiance in it. Men that make Enuy, and crooked malice, nourishment;
Dare bite the best. I doe beseech your Lordships,
That in this case of Iustice, my Accusers,
Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,
And freely vrge against me.

Staff. Nay, my Lord,

That cannot be; you are a Counsellor,

And by that vertue no man dare accuse you. (ment,

Gard. My Lord, because we haue busines of more mo-

We will be short with you. 'Tis his Highnesse pleasure

And our consent, for better vnyall of you,

From hence you be committed to the Towre,

Where being but a priuate man againe,

You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,

More then (I feare) you are provided for.

Cran. Ah my good Lord of Winchester: I thanke you,

You are alwayes my good Friend, if your will passe,

I shall both finde your Lordship, Iudge and Iuror,

You are so mercifull. I see your end,

'Tis my vndoing. Loue and meeknesse, Lord

Become a Churchman, better then Ambition:

Win straying Soules with modesty againe,

Cast none away: That I shall cleere my selfe,

Lay all the weight ye can vpon my patience,

I make as litle doubt as you doe conscience,

In doing dayly wrongs. I could say more,

But reuerence to your calling, makes me modest.

Gard. My Lord, my Lord, you are a Sectary,

That's the plaine truth; your painted glosse discouers

To men that vnderstand you, words and weaknesse.

Crom. My Lord of Winchester, y'are a little,

By your good fauour, too sharpe; Men so Noble,

How euer faultily, yet should finde respect

For what they haue beemes: 'tis a cruelty,

To load a falling man.

Gard. Good M. Secretary,

I cry your Honour mercie; you may worke

Of all this Table say so.

Crom. Why my Lord?

Gard. Doe not I know you for a Fauourer

Of this new Sect? ye are not sound,

Crom. Not sound?

Gard. Not sound I say.

Crom. Would you were halfe so honest:

Mens prayers then would seeke you, not their feares.

Gard. I shall remember this bold Language.

Crom. Doe.

Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;

Forbeare for thame my Lords.

Gard. I haue done.

Crom. And I.

Chan. Then thus for you my Lord, it stands agreed

I take it, by all voyces: That forthwith,

You be conuaid to th' Towre a Prisoner;

There to remaine till the Kings further pleasure

Be knowne vnto vs: are you all agreed Lords,

All. We are.
Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
 But I must needs to th' Tower my Lords?
Card. What other,
 Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome:
 Let some o' th' Guard be ready there.

Enter the Guard.

Cran. For me?
 Must I goe like a Traytor thither?
Card. Receiue him,
 And see him safe i'th' Tower.
Cran. Stay good my Lords,
 I haue a little yet to say. Look e there my Lords,
 By vertue of that Ring, I take my cause
 Out of the gripes of cruell men, and giue it
 To a most Noble Iudge, the King my Maister.

Cham. This is the Kings Ring.
Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.
Suff. 'Tis the right Ring, by Heauen: I told ye all,
 When we first put this dangerous stone a rowling,
 'T would fall vpon our selues.

Nor. Doe you thinke my Lords
 The King will suffer but the little finger
 Of this man to be vex'd?

Cham. 'Tis now too certaine;
 How much more is his Life in value with him?
 Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gaue me,
 In seeking tales and Informations
 Against this man, whose honesty the Diuell
 And his Disciples onely enuy at,
 Ye blew the fire that burnes ye: now haue at ye.

Enter King frowning on them, takes his Seats.

Card. Dread Soueraigne,
 How much are we bound to Heauen,
 In dayly thanks; that gaue vs such a Prince;
 Not onely good and wise, but most religious:
 One that in all obedience, makes the Church
 The cheefe ayne of his Honour, and to strengthen
 That holy duty out of deare respect,
 His Royall selfe in Iudgement comes to heare
 The cause betwixt her, and this great offender.

Kim. You were euer good at todaine Commendations, Bishop of Winchester. But know I come not
 To heare such flattery now, and in my presence
 They are too thin, and base to hide offences,
 To me you cannot reach. You play the Spaniell,
 And thinke with wagging of your tongue to win me:
 But whatsoere thou tal'st me for, I'm sure
 Thou hast a cruell Nature and a bloody.
 Good man sit downe: Now let me see the proudest
 Hee, that dares most, but wag his finger at thee,
 By all that's holy, he had better starue,
 Then but once thinke his place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your Grace;

Kim. No Sir, it doe's not please me,
 I had thought, I had had men of some vnderstanding,
 And wisdom of my Councell; but I finde none:
 Was it discretion Lords, to let this man,
 This good man (few of you deserue that Title)
 This honest man, wait like a lowlie Foot-boy
 At Chamber dore? and one, as great as you are?
 Why, what a shame was this? Did my Commission
 Bid ye so farre forget your selues? I gaue ye Power, as he was a Counsellour to try him,

Not as a Groom: There's some of ye, I see,
 More out of Malice then Integrity,
 Would trye him to the vtmost, had ye meane,
 Which ye shall neuer haue while I liue.

Chan. Thus farre.

My most dread Soueraigne, may it like your Grace,
 To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpos'd Concerning his Imprisonment, was rather (If there be faith in men) meant for his Tryall,
 And faire purgation to the world then malice,
 I'm sure in me.

Kim. Well, well my Lords reipe & him,
 Take him, and vse him well; hee's worthy of it.
 I will say thus much for him, if a Prince
 May be beholding to a Subiect; I
 Am for his loue and seruice, so to him.
 Make me no more adoe, but all embrace him;
 Be friends for shame my Lords: My Lord of Canterbury
 I haue a Suite which you must not deny mee.
 That is, a faire young Maid that yet wants Baptisme,
 You must be Godfather, and answere for her.

Cran. The greatest Monarch now aliuie may glory
 In such an honour: how may I deserue it,
 That am a poore and humble Subiect to you?

Kim. Come, come my Lord, you'd spare your spoones:
 You shall haue two noble Partners with you: the old Duchesse of Norfolk, and Lady Marquesse Dorset: will these please you?

Once more my Lord of Winchester, I charge you

Embrace, and loue this man.

Card. With a true heart,

And Brother, loue I doe it.

Cran. And let Heauen

Witnesse how deare, I hold this Confirmation. (hearts)
Kim. Good Man, those ioyfull teares shew thy true
 The common voyce I see is verified

Of thee, which sayes thus: Doe my Lord of Canterbury
 A shrewd turne, and hee's your friend for euer:
 Come Lords, we trifle time away: I long
 To haue this young one made a Christian.
 As I haue made ye one Lords, one remaine:
 So I grow stronger, you more Honour gaine. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Noyse and Tumult within: Enter Porter and his man.

Port. You'll leaue your noyse anon ye Raskalls: doe you take the Court for Parish Garden: ye rude Slaues, leaue your gaping:

Within. Good M. Porter I belong to th' Larder.

Port. Belong to th' Gallows, and be hang'd ye Rogues:
 Is this a place to roare in? Fetch me a dozen Crab-tree
 Slaues, and strong ones; these are but switches to 'em:
 Ile scratch your heads; you must be seeing Christenings?
 Do you looke for Ale, and Cakes heere, you rude Raskalls?

Man. Pray Sir be patient; 'tis as much impossible,
 Vnlesse wee sweepe 'em from the dore with Cannons,
 To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleepe.
 On May-day Morning, which will neuer be:
 We may as well push against Powles as skirre 'em.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd? Man.

Man. Alas I know not, how gets the Tide in?
 As much as one found Cudgell of foure foote,
 (You see the poore remainder) could distribute,
 I made no spare Sir.

Port. You did nothing Sir.

Man. I am not Sampson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colebrand,
 To mow 'em downe before me: but if I spar'd any
 That had a head to hit, either young or old,
 He or shee, Cuckold or Cuckold-maker:
 Let me ne're hope to see a Chine againe,
 And that I would not for a Cow, God laue her.

Within. Do you heare M. Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good M. Puppy, Keepe the dore close Sir.

Man. What would you haue me doe?

Port. What should you doe,

But knock 'em downe by th' dozens? Is this More fields to muster in? Or haue wee some strange Indian with the great Toole, come to Court, the women so besiege vs?
 Bless me, what a fry of Fornication is at dore? On my Christian Conscience this one Christening will beget a thousand, here will bee Father, God-father, and all together.

Man. The Spooones will be the bigger Sir: There is a fellow somewhat neere the dore, he should be a Bras-ter by his face, for o' my conscience twenty of the Dogdayes now reigne in's Nose; all that stand about him are vnder the Line, they need no other pennance: that Fire-Drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his Nose discharged against mee; hee stands there like a Morter-piece to blow vs. There was a Habberda-shers Wife of small wit, neere him, that rail'd vpon me, till her pinck'd porrenger fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the State. I mist the Meteor once, and hit that Woman, who cryed out Clubbes, when I might see from farre, some forty Truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope o' th' Strand where she was quartered; they fell on, I made good my place; at length they came to th' broome staffe to me, I decide 'em fill, when sodainly a File of Boyes behind 'em, loose shot, deliuer'd such a shewre of Pibbles, that I was faine to draw mine Honour in, and let 'em win the Worke, the Diuell was amongst 'em I thinke surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a Playhouse, and fight for bitten Apples, that no Audience but the tribulation of Tower Hill, or the Limbes of Limehouse, their deare Brothers are able to endure. I haue some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three dayes; besides the running Banquet of two Beadles, that is to come.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine.

Cham. Mercy o' me: what a Multitude are heere?
 They grow still too; from all Parts they are coming,
 As if we kept a Faire heere? Where are these Porters?
 These lazy knaues? Y'haue made a fine hand fellowes?
 There's a trim rabble let in: are all these
 Your faithfull friends o' th' Suburbs? We shall haue Great store of roome no doubt, left for the Ladies,
 When they passe backe from the Christening?

Port. And please your Honour,
 We are but men; and what so many may doe,
 Not being tome a pieces, we haue done:
 An Army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I liue,
 If the King blame me for't; Ile lay ye all

By th' heeles, and sodainly: and on your heads
 Clap round Fines for neglect: y'are lazy knaues,
 And heere ye lye baiting of Bombards, when Ye should doe Seruice. Harke the Trumpets sound,
 Th'are come already from the Christening,
 Go breake among the preasse, and finde away out
 To let the Troope passe fairly; or Ile finde
 A Marshallley, shall hold ye play these two Monthes.

Port. Make way there, for the Princeesse.

Man. You great fellow,

Stand close vp, or Ile make your head ake.

Port. You i'th' Chamber, get vp o' th' raile, Ile pecke you o're the pales else. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Trumpets sounding: Then two Aldermen, L. Maior, Carter, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolk with his Marshals Staffe, Duke of Suffolke, two Noblemen, bearing great standing Bowles for the Christening Gifts: Then foure Noblemen bearing a Canopy, vnder which the Dutchesse of Norfolk, Godmother, bearing the Child richly habited in a Mantle, &c. Traine borne by a Lady: Then followes the Marchionesse Dorset, the other Godmother, and Ladies. The Troope passe once about the Stage, and Garter speaks.

Card. Heauen

From thy endlesse goodnesse, send prosperous life,
 Long, and euer happie, to the high and Mighty Princeesse of England Elizabeth.

Flourish. Enter King and Guard.

Cran. And to your Royall Grace, & the good Queen,
 My Noble Partners, and my selfe thus pray
 All comfort, ioy in this most gracious Lady,
 Heauen euer laid vp to make Parents happy,
 May hourly fall vpon ye.

Kim. Thanke you good Lord Archbishop:
 What is her Name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

Kim. Stand vp Lord,
 With this Kisse, take my Blessing: God protect thee,
 Into whose hand, I giue thy Life.

Cran. Amen.

Kim. My Noble Gossips, y'haue beene too Prodigall;
 I thanke ye heartily: So shall this Lady,
 When she ha's so much English.

Cran. Let me speake Sir,

For Heauen now bids me, and the words I ytter,
 Let none thinke Flattery; for they'l finde 'em Truth,
 This Royall Infant, Heauen still moue about her;
 Though in her Cradle, yet now promises
 Vpon this Land a thousand thousand Blessings,
 Which Time shall bring to ripenesse: She shall be,
 (But few now liuing can behold that goodnesse)
 A Pattern to all Princes liuing with her,

And all that shall succeed: Saba was neuer
 More courteous of Wisedome, and faire Vertue
 Then this pure Soule shall be. All Princely Graces
 That mould vp such a mighty Piece as this is,
 With all the Vertues that attend the good,
 Shall still be doubled on her. Truth shall Nurse her,

Holy

Holy and Heauenly thoughts still Counsell her:
 She shall be lou'd and fear'd, Her owne shall blesse her;
 Her Foes shake like a Field of beaten Come,
 And hang their heads with sorrow:
 Good growes with her.
 In her dayes, Euery Man shall eate in safety,
 Vnder his owne Vine what he plants; and sing
 The merry Songs of Peace to all his Neighbours.
 God shall be truly knowne, and those about her,
 From her shall read the perfect way of Honour,
 And by those claime their greatnesse; not by Blood.
 Nor shall this peace sleepe with her: But as when
 The Bird of Wonder dyes, the Mayden Phoenix,
 Her Ashes new create another Heyre,
 As great in admiration as her selfe.
 So shall she leaue her Blessednesse to One,
 (When Heauen shal call her from this clowd of darknes)
 Who, from the sacred Ashes of her Honour
 Shall Star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
 And so stand fix'd. Peace, Plenty, Loue, Truth, Terror,
 That were the Seruants to this chosen Infant,
 Shall then be his, and like a Vine grow to him;
 Where euer the bright Sunne of Heauen shall shine,
 His Honour, and the greatnesse of his Name,
 Shall be, and make new Nations. He shall flourish,

And like a Mountaine Cedar, reach his branches,
 To all the Plaines about him: Our Childrens Children
 Shall see this, and blesse Heauen.

Km. Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be to the happinesse of England,
 An aged Princeesse; many dayes shall see her,
 And yet no day without a deed to Crowne it.
 Would I had knowne no more: But she must dye,
 She must, the Saints must haue her; yet a Virgin,
 A most vnspotted Lilly shall she passe
 To th' ground, and all the World shall mourne her.

Km. O Lord Archbishop
 Thou hast made me now a man, neuer before
 This happy Child, did I get any thing.
 This Oracle of comfort, ha's so pleas'd me,
 That when I am in Heauen, I shall desire
 To see what this Child does, and praise my Maker.
 I thanke ye all. To you my good Lord Maior,
 And you good Brethren, I am much beholding:
 I haue recei'd much Honour by your presence,
 And ye shall find me thankfull. Lead the way Lords,
 Ye must all see the Queene, and she must thanke ye,
 She will be sicke els. This day, no man thinke
 'Has businesse at his house; for all shall stay:
 This Little-One shall make it Holy-day. Exeunt.

THE EPILOGUE.

TIs ten to one, this Play can neuer please
 All that are heere: Some come to take their ease,
 And sleepe an Act or two; but those we feare
 Whose frighted with our Tumpets: so 'tis cleare, They'l say tis naught. Others to heare the City
 Abus'd extreemly, and to cry that's witty,
 Which wee haue not done neither; that I feare

All the expected good we are like to heare,
 For this Play at this time, is onely in
 The mercifull construction of good women,
 For such a one we shew'd 'em: If they smile,
 And say will doe; I know within a while,
 All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap,
 If they hold, when their Ladies bid 'em clap.

FINIS.

The Prologue.

IN Troy there lyes the Scene: From Illes of Greece
 The Princes Orgillous, their high blood chaf'd
 Haue to the Port of Athens sent their shippes
 Fraught with the ministers and instruments
 Of cruell Warre: Sixty and nine that wore
 Their Crownets Regall, from th' Athenian bay
 Put forth toward Phrygia, and their vow is made
 To ransacke Troy, within whose strong emures
 The raniish'd Helen, Menelaus Queene,
 With wanton Paris sleepes, and that's the Quarrell.
 To Tenedos they come,
 And the deepe-drawing Barke do there disgorge
 Their warlike frautage: now on Dardan Plaines
 The fresh and yet vnbruised Greekes do pitch
 Their braue Pauillions. Priams six-gated City,
 Dardan and Timbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
 And Antenonidus with massie Staples
 And corresposiue and fulfilling Bolts
 Stirre vp the Sonnes of Troy.
 Now Expectation tickling skittish spirits,
 On one and other side, Troian and Greeke,
 Sets all on hazard. And hither am I come,
 A Prologue arm'd, but not in confidence
 Of Authors pen, or Actors voyce; but suited
 In like conditions, as our Argument;
 To tell you (faire Beholders) that our Play
 Leapes ore the waunt and firflings of those broyles,
 Beginning in the middle: starting thence away,
 To what may be digested in a Play:
 Like, or finde fault, do as your pleasures are,
 Now good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of Warre.

THE TRAGEDIE OF Troilus and Cressida.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus.

Troilus. All here my Vncler, he vnarme againe.
Why should I warre without the wals of Troy
That finde such cruell battell here within?
Each Troian that is master of his heart,
Let him to field, Troilus alas hath none.

Pan. Will this geere nere be mended?
Troy. The Greeks are strong, & skilful to their strength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fiercenesse Valiant:
But I am weaker then a womans teare;
Tamer then sleepe, fonder then ignorance;
Lesse valiant then the Virgin in the night,
And skillesse as vnpractis'd Infancie.

Pan. Well, I haue told you enough of this: For my part, he not meddle nor make no farther. Hee that will haue a Cake out of the Wheate, must needs tarry the grinding.

Troy. Haue I not tarried?
Pan. I the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

Troy. Haue I not tarried?

Pan. I the bolting; but you must tarry the leauing.

Troy. Still haue I tarried.

Pan. I, to the leauening: but heeres yet in the word hereafter, the Kneading, the making of the Cake; the heating of the Ouen, and the Baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burne your lips.

Troy. Patience her selfe, what Goddesse ere she be,
Doth lesse blench at sufferance, then I doe:
At Priams Royall Table doe I sit;

And when faire Cressid comes into my thoughts,
So (Traitor) then she comes, when she is thence.

Pan. Well:
She look'd yesternight fairer, then euer I saw her looke,
Or any woman eile.

Troy. I was about to tell thee, when my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rine in twaine,
Least Hektor, or my Father should perceiue me:
I haue (as when the Sunne doth light a-scorne)
Buried this sigh, in wrinkle of a smile:
But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladnesse,
Is like that mirth, Fate turnes to sudden sadnesse.

Pan. And her haire were not somewhat darker then Helen, well go too, there were no more comparison betweene the Women. But for my part she is my Kinswoman, I would not (as they rearme it) praise it, but I wold some-body had heard her talke yesterday as I did: I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit, but

Troy. Oh Pandarus! I tell thee Pandarus;
When I doe tell thee, thier my hopes lye drown'd:
Reply not in how many Fadomes deepe
They lye indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressids loue. Thou answerst she is faire, Pow'r it in the open Vicer of my heart,
Her Eyes, her Haire, her Cheeke, her Gate, her Voice,
Handlest in thy discourse. O that her Hand
(In whose comparifon, all whites are Inke)
Writing their owne reioach; to whose soft seizure,
The Cignets Downe is harsh, and spirit of Sense
Hard as the palme of Ploughman. This thou telst me;
As true thou telst me, when I say I loue her:
But saying this, instead of Oyle and Balme,
Thou lai'st in euery gash that loue hath giuen me,
The Knife that made it.

Pan. I speake no more then truth.
Troy. Thou dost not speake so much.

Pan. Faith, he not meddle iust: Let her be as shee is, if she be faire, 'tis the better for her: and she be not, she hath the meeds in her owne hands.

Troy. Good Pandarus: How now Pandarus?

Pan. I haue had my Labour for my trauell, ill thought on of her, and ill thought on of you: Gone betweene and betweene, but small thanks for my Labour.

Troy. What art thou angry Pandarus? what with me?

Pan. Because she's kinne to me, therefore shee's not so faire as Helen, and she were not kin to me, she wold be as faire on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not and she were a Black-a-Moore, 'tis all one to me.

Troy. Say I she is not faire?

Troy. I doe not care whether you doe or no. Shee's a Foole to stay behinde her Father: Let her to the Greeks, and so he tell her the next time I see her: for my part, he meddle nor make no more i'th matter.

Troy. Pandarus? Pan. Not I.

Troy. Sweete Pandarus.

Pan. Pray you speake no more to me, I will leaue all as I found it, and there an end.

Sound Alarum.

Tro. Peace you vngracious Clamours, peace rude sounds,
Foolles on both sides, Helen must needs be faire,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus,
I cannot fight vpon this Argument:

The Tragedie of Troilus and Cressida.

79

It is too flau'd a subiect for my Sword,
But Pandarus: O Gods! How do you plague me?

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he's as teachy to be woo'd to woe,
As she is stubborne, chafte, against all suite.

Tell me Apollo for thy Daphnes Loue
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we:
Her bed is India, there she lies, a Pearle,

Between our Ilium, and where shee recides
Let it be cald the wild and wandring flood,
Our selfe the Merchant, and this sayling Pandar,
Our doubtfull hope, our conuoy and our Barke.

Alarum. Enter Aeneas.

Aeneas. How now Prince Troilus?
Wherefore not a field?

Troy. Because not there; this womans answer sorts.
For womanish it is to be from thence:

What newes Aeneas from the field to day?

Aeneas. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Troy. By whom Aeneas?

Aeneas. Troilus by Menelaus.

Troy. Let Paris bleed, 'tis but a scar to scorne,

Paris is got with Menelaus horne.

Aeneas. Harke what good sport is out of Towne to day.

Troy. Better at home, if would I might were may:

But to the sport abroad, are you bound thither?

Aeneas. In all swift haste.

Troy. Come goe wee then together.

Enter Cressid and her man.

Cre. Who were those went by?

Man. Queene Hecuba, and Hellen.

Cre. And whether go they?

Man. Vp to the Easterne Tower,

Whole height commands as subiect all the vaile,

To see the battell: Hektor whose patience,

Is as a Vertue fixt, to day was mould:

He chides Andromache and strooke his Armorer, &

And like as there were husbandry in Warre

Before the Sunne rose, hee was harness't lyte,

And to the field goe's he; where euery flower

Did as a Prophet weepe what it forlaw,

In Hektor's wrath.

Cre. What was his cause of anger?

Man. The noife goe's this;

There is among the Greekes,

A Lord of Troian blood, Nephew to Hektor,

They call him Aias.

Cre. Good; and what of him?

Man. They say he is a very man per se and stands alone.

Cre. So do all men, vnlesse they are drunke, sicke, or haue no legges.

Man. This man Lady, hath rob'd many beasts of their particular additions, he is as valiant as the Lyon, churlish as the Beare, slow as the Elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humors, that his valour is crusht into folly; his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a vertue, that he hath not a glimpse of, nor a my man an attaine, but he carries some staine of it. He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the haire, hee hath the ioynts of euery thing, but euery thing so out of ioynt, that hee is a gowtie Briareus, many hands and no vfe; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cre. But how should this man that makes me smile, make Hektor angry?

Man. They say he yesterday cop'd Hektor in the battell and strooke him downe, the disdained & shame whereof, hath euer since kept Hektor fasting and waking.

Enter Pandarus.

Cre. Who comes here?

Man. Madam your Vncler Pandarus.

Cre. Hektor's a gallant man.

Man. As may be in the world Lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cre. Good morrow Vncler Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow Cozen Cressid: what do you talke of? good morrow Alexander: how do you Cozen? when were you at Ilium?

Cre. This morning Vncler.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hektor arm'd and gon ere yea came to Ilium? Hellen was not vp? was she?

Cre. Hektor was gone but Hellen was not vp?

Pan. Eene so; Hektor was stirring early.

Cre. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cre. So he saies here.

Pan. True he was so; I know the cause too, heele lay about him to day I can tell them that, and there's Troilus will not come farre behind him, let them take heede of

Troilus; I can tell them that too.

Cre. What is he angry too?

Pan. Who Troilus?

Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cre. Oh Iupiter; there's no comparifon.

Pan. What not betweene Troilus and Hektor? do you know a man if you see him?

Cre. If I euer saw him before and knew him.

Pan. Well I say Troilus is Troilus.

Cre. Then you say as I say,

For I am sure he is not Hektor.

Pan. No not Hektor is not Troilus in some degrees.

Cre. 'Tis iust, to each of them he is himselfe.

Pan. Himselfe? alas poore Troilus I wold he were.

Cre. So he is.

Pan. Condition I had gone bare-foote to India.

Cre. He is not Hektor.

Pan. Himselfe? no? hee's not himselfe, wold a were himselfe: well, the Gods are aboue, time must friend or end: well Troilus well, I wold my heart were in her boddy; no, Hektor is not a better man then Troilus.

Cre. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cre. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th'others not come too't, you shall tell me another tale when th'others come too't: Hektor shall not haue his will this yeare.

Cre. He shall not neede it if he haue his owne.

Pan. Nor his qualities.

Cre. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beautie.

Cre. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.

Pan. You haue no iudgement Neece; Hellen her selfe swore th'other day that Troilus for a browne fauour (for so 'tis't must confesse) not browne neither.

Cre. No, but browne.

Pan. Faith to say truth, browne and not browne.

Cre. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion aboue Paris.

Cre. Why Paris hath colour inough.

Pan. So he has.

Cre. Then Troilus should haue too much, if the prais'd him aboue, his complexion is higher then his, he hauing colour

colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion, I had as lieue Hellen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I sweare to you,
I thinke Hellen loues him better then Paris.

Cre. Then thee's a merry Greeke indeed.

Jan. Nay I am sure she does, she came to him th' other day into the compast window, and you know he has not past three or foure haire on his chinne.

Cre. Indeed a Tapsters Arithmetique may soone bring his particulars therein, to a totall.

Pan. Why he is very yong, and yet will be within three pound list as much as his brother Heitor.

Cre. Is he so young a man, and so old a lister?

Pan. But to prouoe to you that Hellen loues him, she came and puts me her white hand to his clouen chin.

Cre. Inno haue mercy, how came it clouen?

Pan. Why, you know 'tis dimpled,
I thinke his smyling becomes him better then any man in all Phrigia.

Cre. Oh he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Dooes hee not?

Cre. Oh yes, and 'twere a clow'd in Autumne.

Pan. Why go to then, but to prouoe to you that Hellen loues Troilus.

Cre. Troilus will stand to thee

Prooue, if youle prouoe it so.

Pan. Troilus? why he esteemes her no more then I esteeme an addle egge.

Cre. If you loue an addle egge as well as you loue an idle head, you would eate chickens i'th' shell.

Pan. I cannot chuse but laugh to thinke how she tickled his chin, indeed thee has a maruell's whire hand I must needs confesse.

Cre. Without the racke.

Pan. And thee takes vpon her to spie a white haire on his chinne.

Cre. Alas poore chin? many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing, Queene Heenba laught that her eyes ran ore.

Cre. With Milstones.

Pan. And Cassandra laught.

Cre. But there was more temperate fire vnder the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run ore too?

Pan. And Heitor laught.

Cre. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry at the white haire that Hellen spied on Troilus chin.

Cre. And 't had beene a greene haire, I should haue laught too.

Pan. They laught not so much at the haire, as at his pretty answere.

Cre. What was his answere?

Pan. Quoth thee, heere's but two and fifty haire on your chinne; and one of them is white.

Cre. This is her question.

Pan. That's true, make no question of that, two and fiftie haire quoth hee, and one white; that white haire is my Father, and all the rest are his Sonnes. Insipit quoth she, which of these haire is Paris my husband? The forked one quoth he, pluckt out and giue it him: but there was such laughing, and Hellen so blusht, and Paris so chafte, and all the rest so laught, that it past.

Cre. So let it now,

For is has beene a great while going by.

Pan. Well Cozen,

I told you a thing yesterday, thinke on't.

Cre. So I doos.

Pan. He besworne 'tis true, he will weepe you an'twere a man borne in Aprill.

Cre. And Ile spring vp in his teares, an'twere a nettle against May.

Pan. Harke they are coming from the field, shal we stand vp here and see them, as they passe toward Illium, good Neece do, sweet Neece Cressida.

Cre. At your pleasure.

Pan. Heere, heere, here's an excellent place, heere we may see most brauely, Ile tel you them all by their names, as they passe by, but marke Troilus about the rest.

Enter Aeneas.

Cre. Speake not so low'd.

Pan. That's Aeneas, is not that a braue man, hee's one of the flowers of Troy I can you, but merke Troilus, you shal see anon.

Cre. Who's that?

Enter Antenor.

Pan. That's Antenor, he has a throw'd wit I can tell you, and hee's a man good enough, hee's one o'th' soundest iudgement in Troy whofoeuer, and a proper man of person: when comes Troilus? Ile shew you Troilus anon, if hee see me, you shal see him him nod at me.

Cre. Will he giue you the nod?

Pan. You shal see.

Cre. If he do, the rich shal haue more.

Enter Heitor.

Pan. That's Heitor, that, that, looke you, that there's a fellow. Goe thy way Heitor, there's a braue man Neece, O braue Heitor! Looke how hee lookes? there's a countenance; if not a braue man?

Cre. O braue man!

Pan. Is a not? It dooes a mans heart good, looke you what backs are on his Helmet, looke you yonder, do you see? Looke you there? There's no iesting, laying on, tak' off, who ill as they say, there be backs.

Cre. Be those with Swords?

Enter Paris.

Pan. Swords, any thing he cares not, and the diuell come to him, it's all one, by Gods lid it dooes ones heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: looke yee yonder Neece, if not a gallant man to, if not? Why this is braue now: who said he came hurt home to day? Hee's not hurt, why this will do Hellen's heart good now, ha? Would I could see Troilus now, you shal Troilus anon.

Cre. Whose that?

Enter Hellenus.

Pan. That's Hellenus, I maruell where Troilus is, that's Hellenus, I thinke he went not forth to day: that's Hellenus.

Cre. Can Hellenus fight Vncle?

Pan. Hellenus no: yee heele fight indifferent, well, I maruell where Troilus is; harke, do you not heare the people crie Troilus? Hellenus is a Priest.

Cre. What incaking fellow comes yonder?

Enter Troilus.

Pan. Where? Yonder? That's Daphobus. 'Tis Troilus! Ther's a man Neece, hem, a Braue Troilus, the Prince of Chualrie.

Cre. Peace, for shame peace.

Pan. Marke him, not him: O braue Troilus: looke well vpon him Neece, looke you how his Sword is blow'd, and his Helme more hacks then Hectors, and how hee lookes.

lookes, and how he goes. O admirable youth! he ne're saw three and twenty. Goe thy way Troilus, go thy way, had I a sister were a Grace, or a daughter a Goddesse, hee should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris? Paris is durt to him, and I warrant, Helen to change, would giue money to boot.

Enter common Souldiers.

Cre. Heere come more.

Pan. Alles, fooles, dolts, chaffe and bran, chaffe and bran; porridge after meat. I could liue and dye i'th' eyes of Troilus. Ne're looke, ne're looke; the Eagles are gon, Crows, and Dawes, Crows and Dawes: I had rather be such a man as Troilus, then Agamemnon, and all Greece.

Cre. There is among the Greekes Achilles, a better man then Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a Dray-man, a Porter, a very Camell.

Cre. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well? Why haue you any discretion? haue you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, b.auty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, vertue, youth, liberality, and so forth: the Spice, and salt that seasons a man?

Cre. Is a mine'd man, and then to be bak'd with no Date in the pye, for then the mans dates out.

Pan. You are such another woman, one knowes not at what ward you lye.

Cre. Vpon my backe, to defend my belly; vpon my wit, to defend my wiles; vpon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my Maske, to defend my beauty, and you to defend all these: and at all these wardes I lye at, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cre. Nay Ile watch you for that, and that's one of the cheefest of them too: If I cannot ward what I would not haue hit, I can watch you for telling how I rook the blow, vnclesse it swell past hiding, and then it's past watching.

Enter Boy.

Pan. You are such another.

Boy. Sir, my Lord would instantly speake with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your owne house.

Pan. Good Boy tell him I come, I doubt he bee hurt. Fare ye well good Neece.

Cre. Adieu Vncle.

Pan. Ile be with you Neece by and by.

Cre. To bring Vncle.

Pan. I, a token from Troilus.

Cre. By the same token, you are a Bawd. Exit Pan.

Words, vowes, gifts, teares, & loues full sacrifice, He offers in anothers enterprise:

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see,
Then in the glasse of Pandars praise may be;

Yerhold I off. Women are Angels wooing,
Things won are done, ioyes soule lyes in the dooing:

That the belou'd, knowes nought, that knowes not this;
Men prize the thing vngain'd, more then it is.

That the was neuer yet, that euer knew
Loue got so sweet, as when desire did sue:

Therefore this maxime out of loue I teach;
"Achieuement, is command; vngain'd, be sech."

That though my heart's Contents firme loue doth beare,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appeare. Exit.

Senet. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Vlysses, Dionides, Menelams, with others.

Agam. Princes:

What greeke hath set the Iaundies on your cheekes?

The ample proposition that hope makes

In all designes, begun on earth below.

Fayles in the promitt largenesse: cheekes and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd.

As knots by the conflux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound Pine, and diuerts his Graine

Tortine and erant from his course of growth.

Not Princes, is it matter new to vs,

That we come short of our suppose so farre,

That after seuen yeares siege, yet Troy walles stand,

Sith euerie action that hath gone before,

Whereof we haue Record, Triall did draw

Bias and thwart, not answering the ayme:

And that vn bodied figure of the thought

That gaue't furnished shape. Why then (you Princes)

Do you with cheekes abash'd, behold our workes,

And thinke them shame, which are (indeed) wrought else

But the protractiue trials of great loue,

To finde persistiue constancie in men?

The finenesse of which Mettall is not found

In Fortunes loue: for then, the Bold and Coward,

The Wise and Foole, the Artist and vn-read,

The hard and soft, seeme all affi'd, and kin.

But in the Winde and Tempest of her frowne,

Distinction with a lowd and powrefull fan,

Puffing at all, winnowes the light away;

And what hath masse, or matter by it selfe,

Lies rich in Vertue, and vamingled.

Nestor. With due Obseruance of thy godly feat,

Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply

Thy latest words.

In the reproofe of Chance,

Lies the true prooue of men: The Sea being smooth,

How many shallow bauble Boates dare saile

Vpon her patient brest, making their way

With those of Nobler bulke?

But let the Russian Boreas once enrage

The gentle Thetis, and anon behold

The strong ribb'd Barke through liquid Mountaines cut,

Bounding betweene the two moyst Elements

Like Perseus Horse. Where's then the sawcy Boate,

Whose weake vntimber'd sides but euen now

Co-riual'd Greatnesse? Either to harbour fled,

Or made a Toste for Neptune. Euen so,

Doth valours shew, and valours worth diuide

In stormes of Fortune.

For, in her ray and brightnesse,

The Heard hath more annoyance by the Breeze

Then by the Tyger: But, when the splitting winde

Makes flexible the knees of knotted Oakes,

And Flies fled vnder shade, why then

The thing of Courage,

As row'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,

And with an accent tun'd in selfe-same key,

Retypes to chiding Fortune.

Vly. Agamemnon:

Thou great Commander, Nerue, and Bone of Greece,

Heart of our Numbers, soule, and onely spirit,

In whom the tempers, and the mindes of all

Should be shut vp: Heare what Vlysses speakes,

Besides the applause and approbation

The which most mighty for thy place and sway,

And

Troilus and Cressida.

And thou most reuerend for thy stretcht-out life,
I giue to both your speeches: which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold vp high in Brasse: and such againe
As venerable Nestor (hatch'd in Silver)
Should with a bond of ayre, strong as the Axletree
In which the Heauens ride, knit all Greekes cares
To his experienc'd tongue: yet let it please both (Thou Great, and Wise) to heare Vlysses speake.

Aga. Speake Prince of Ithaca, and be of lesse expect:
That matter needlesse of importlesse burthen
Divide thy lips; then we are confident
When ranke Thersites opes his Masticke lawes,
We shall heare Musicke, Wit, and Oracle.

Vlyss. Troy yet vpon his basis had bene downe,
And the great Hectors sword had lack'd a Master
But for these instances.

The specialty of Rule hath bene neglected;
And looke how many Grecian Tents do stand
Hollow vpon this Plaine, so many hollow Factions:
When that the Generall is not like the Hue,
To whom the Forragers shall all reaire,
What Hony is expected? Degree being vizarded,
Th'vntworthiest shewes as fairely in the Maske.
The Heauens themselves, the Planets, and this Center,
Obserue degree, priority, and place,
In stature, course, proportion, season, forme,
Office, and custome, in all line of Order:

And therefore is the glorious Planet Sol
In noble eminence, enthron'd and sphear'd
Amidst the other, whose medicinable eye
Corrects the ill Aspects of Planets euill;
And postes like the Command'ment of a King,
Sans checke, to good and bad. But when the Planets
In euill mixture to disorder wander,
What Plagues, and what portents, what mutiny?
What raging of the Sea? shaking of Earth?
Commotion in the Windes? Frights, changes, horrors,
Diuert, and cracke, rend and deracinate
The vniuity, and married calme of States

Quite from their fixure? O, when Degree is shak'd,
(Which is the Ladder to all high designs)
The enterprize is sicke. How could Communities,
Degrees in Schooles, and Brother-hoods in Cities,
Peacefull Commerce from diuidable shores,
The primogeniue, and due of Byrth,
Prerogative of Age, Crownes, Scepters, Lawrels,
(But by Degree) stand in Authentique place?
Take but Degree away, vn-tune that string,
And hearken what Discord followes: each thing meetes
In meere oppugnancie. The bounded Waters,
Should lift their bosomes higher then the Shores;
And make a toppe of all this solid Globe:

Strength should be Lord of imbecility,
And the rude Sonne should strike his Father dead:
Force should be right, or rather, right and wrong;
(Betweene whose endlesse iarre, Iustice recides)
Should loose her names; and so should Iustice too:
Then every thing includes it selfe in Power,
Power into Will, Will into Appetite,
And Appetite (an vniuersall Wolfe,
So doubly seconded with Will, and Power)
Must make perforce an vniuersall prey,
And last, eate vp himselfe.

Great Agamemnon:
This Chaos, when Degree is suffocate,

Followes the choaking:

And this neglection of Degree, is it
That by a pace goes backward in a purpose
It hath to climbe. The Generall's disdain'd
By him one step below; he, by the next,
That next, by him beneath: so euery step
Exampled by the first pace that is sicke
Of his Superiour, growes to an enuious Feauer
Of pale, and bloodlesse Emulation.

And 'tis this Feauer that keeps Troy on foote,
Not her owne sinewes. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weaknesse liues, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Vlysses heere discover'd
The Feauer, whereof all our power is sicke.

Aga. The Nature of the sicknesse found (Vlysses)
What is the remedie?

Vlyss. The great Achilles, whom Opinion crownes,
The sinew, and the fore-hand of our Hoste,
Hauing his eare full of his aery Fame,
Growes dainty of his worth, and in his Tent
Lyes mocking our designs. With him, Patroclus, Vpon a lazie Bed, the hie-long day
Breakes scurrill lests,

And with ridiculous and aukward action,
(Which Slanderer, he imitation call's)
He Pageants vs. Sometime great Agamemnon,
Thy topleste deputation he puts on;

And like a strutting Player, whose conceit
Lies in his Ham-string, and dorch thinke it rich
To heare the wooden Dialogue and sound
Twixt his stretcht footing, and the Staffolage,
Such to be pittied, and ore-rested seeming
He acts thy Greatnesse in: and when he speaks,
'Tis like a Chime a mending. With teares vnusquard,
Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon drop,
Would seeme Hyperboles. At this iusty stuffe,
The large Achilles (on his prest-bed lolling)
From his deepe Chest, laughs out a lowd applause,
Cries excellent, 'tis Agamemnon iust.

Now play me Nestor; hum, and stroke thy Beard
As he, being drest to some Oration:

That's done, as neere as the extreamest ends
Of parallels; as like, as Vulcan and his Wife,
Yet god Achilles still cries excellent.
'Tis Nestor right. Now play him (me) Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night-Alarme,
And then (forsooth) the faint defects of Age
Must be the Scene of myrth, to cough, and spit,
And with a palse fumbling on his Gorgier,
Shake in and out the Riuet: and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries, O enough Patroclus,
Or, giue me ribs of Steele, I shall split all
In pleasure of my Splice. And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shap'es,
Seuerals and generals of grace exact,
Achievements, plots, orders, preuentions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Successes or losse, what is, or is not, serues
As stuffe for these two, to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twaine,
Who (as Vlysses sayes) Opinion crownes
With an Imperiall voyce, many are infect:
Aiax is growne selfe-will'd, and beares his head
In such a reyne, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles, and keeps his Tent like him;
Makes factious Feasts, railes on our state of Warre

Aga. What Trumpet? Look Meneclaus.
Men. From Troy.
Aga. What would you fore our Tent?
Aene. Is this great Agamemnon's Tent, I pray you?
Aga. Euen this.

Aene. May one that is a Herald, and a Prince,
Do a faire message to his Kingly eares?
Aga. With surety stronger then Achilles arme,
Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voyce
Call Agamemnon Head and Generall.

Aene. Faire leaue, and large security. How may
A stranger to those most Imperiall lookes,
Know them from eyes of other Mortals?
Aga. How?
Aene. I aske, that I might waken reuerence,
And on the cheek be ready with a blush
Modest as morning, when the coldy eyes
The youthfull Phcebus:
Which is that God in office guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Aga. This Trojan scornes vs, or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious Courtiers.
Aene. Courtiers as free, as debonnaire; vnarm'd,
As bending Angels: that's their Fame, in peace:
But when they would seeme Souldiers, they haue gallees,
Good armes, strong ioynts, true swords, & Iones accord,
Nothing so full of heart. But peace Aeneas,
Peace Trojan, lay thy finger on thy lips,
The worthinesse of praise distaines his worth:
If that he prais'd himselfe, bring the praise forth.
But what the repining enemy commends,
That breath Fame blowes, that praise sole pure transeends.

Aga. Sir, you of Troy, call you your selfe Aeneas?
Aene. I Greeke, that is my name.
Aga. What's your affayre I pray you?
Aene. Sir pardon, 'tis for Agamemnon's eares.
Aga. He heares nought priuately
That comes from Troy.
Aene. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him,
I bring a Trumpet to awake his eare,
To set his fence on the attentive bent,
And then to speake.
Aga. Speake frankly as the winde,
It is not Agamemnon's sleeping houre;
That thou shalt know Trojan he is awake,

Troilus and Cressida.

He tels thee so himselfe.

Aene. Trumpet blow loud;
Send thy Brasse voyce through all these lazie Tents,
And euery Greeke of mettle, let him know,
What Troy meanes fairely, shall be spoke aloud.

The Trumpets sound.
We haue great Agamemnon heere in Troy,
A Prince call'd Hector, Priam is his Father:

Who in this dull and long-confin'd Truce
Is rusty growne. He bad me take a Trumpet,
And to this purpose speake: Kings, Princes, Lords,
If there be one amongst the fayr st of Greece,
That holds his Honor higher then his ease,

That seeks his praise, more then he feares his perill,
That knowes his Valour, and knowes not his feare,
That loues his Mistis more then in confession,
(With truant vowes to her owne lips he loues)
And dare avow her Beauty, and her Worth,
In other armes then hers: to him this Challenge.

Hector, in view of Troyans, and of Greekes,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it.
He hath a Lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Then euer Greeke did compass in his armes,
And will to morrow with his Trumpet call,
Midway betweene your Tents, and walles of Troy,
To rowze a Grecian that is true in loue,

If any come, Hector shall honour him:
If none, hee'l lay in Troy when he retires;
The Grecian Dames are sun-burnt, and not worth
The splinter of a Lance: Euen so much.

Aga. This shall be told our Louers Lord Aeneas,
If none of them haue soule in such a kinde.
We left them all at home: But we are Souldiers,
And may that Souldier a meere recreant prove,
That meanes not, hath not, or is not in loue:
If then one is, or hath, or meanes to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, he be he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hectors Grandfire suckt: he is old now,
But if there be not in our Grecian mould,
One Noble man, that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his Loue; tell him from me,
He hide my Silver beard in a Gold Beauer,
And in my Vantbrace put this wither'd brawne,
And meeting him, wil tell him, that my Lady
Was fayrer then his Grandame, and as chaste
As may be in the world: his youth in flood,
He pawne this truth with my three drops of blood.

Aene. Now heauens forbid such scarcitie of youth.
Vlyss. Amen.
Aga. Faire Lord Aeneas,
Let me touch your hand:

To our Pauillion shal I leade you first:
Achilles shall haue word of this intent,
So shall each Lord of Greece from Tent to Tent:
Your selfe shall Feast with vs before you goe,
And finde the welcome of a Noble Poe.

Planet Vlysses and Nestor.
Vlyss. Nestor.
Nest. What sayes Vlysses?
Vlyss. I haue a young conception in my braine,
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is't?
Vlysses. This 'tis:
Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded Pride
That hath to this maturity blowne vp

Troilus and Cressida.

In ranke Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding breed a Nursery of like euil
To ouer-bulke vs all.
Nest. Wel, and how?
Ulys. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
How euer it is spred in general name,
Relates in purpose onely to Achilles.
Nest. The purpose is perspicuous euen as substance,
Whole grossenesse litle characters summe vp,
And in the publication make no straine;
But that Achilles, were his braine as barren
As bankes of Lybia, though (Apollo knowes)
'Tis dry enough, wil with great speede of iudgement,
I, with celerity, finde Hectors purpose
Pointing on him.
Ulys. And wake him to the answer, thinke you?
Nest. Yes, 'tis most meet; who may you else oppose
That can from Hector bring his Honor off;
If not Achilles; though't be a sportfull Combate,
Yet in this triall, much opinion dwels.
For heere the Troyans taste our deer't repute
With their fin't Pallate: and trust to me Ulyses,
Our imputation shall be oddly poiz'd
In this wilde action. For the successe
(Although particular) shall giue a scantling
Of good or bad, vnto the Generall:
And in such Indexes, although small prickes
To their subsequent Volumes, there is seene
The baby figure of the Gyant-masse
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
He that meets Hector, issues from our choise;
And choise being mutuall acte of all our soules,
Makes Merit her election, and doth boyle
As 'twere, from forth vs all: a man distill'd
Out of our Vertues; who miscarrying,
What heart from hence receyues the conquering part
To steale a strong opinion to themselves,
Which entertain'd, Limbes are in his instruments,
In no lesse working, then are Swords and Bowes
Directive by the Limbes.
Ulys. Giue pardon to my speech:
Therefore 'tis mee, Achilles meet not Hector:
Let vs (like Merchants) shew our fowlest Wares,
And thinke perchance they'll sell: If not,
The laster of the better yet to shew,
Shall shew the better. Do not consent,
That euer Hector and Achilles meete:
For both our Honour, and our Shame in this,
Are dogg'd with two strange Followers.
Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are they?
Ulys. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,
(Were he not proud) we all should weare with him:
But he already is too insolent,
And we were better parch in Affricke Sunne,
Then in the pride and salt scorne of his eyes
Should he scape Hector faire. If he were foyld,
Why then we did our maine opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No, make a Lott'ry,
And by device let blockish Ajax draw
The fort to fight with Hector: Among our selues,
Giue him allowance as the worchier man,
For that will physicke the great Myrmidon
Who broyles in lowd appiause, and make him fall
His Crest, that prouder then blew Iris bends.
If the dull brainlesse Ajax come safe off,
Wee'll dresse him vp in voyces if he faile;

Yet go we vnder our opinion still,
That we haue better men. But hit or misse,
Our proiects life this shape of fence assumes,
Ajax imploy'd, pluckes downe Achilles Plumes.
Nest. Now Ulyses, I begin to relish thy aduice,
And I wil giue a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon, go we to him straight:
Two Curres shal tame each other, Pride alone
Must tarre the Mastiffes on, as 'twere their bone. Exeunt
Enter Ajax, and Therites.
Aia. Therites?
Ther. Agamemnon, how if he had Biles (ful) allouer generally.
Aia. Therites?
Ther. And those Byles did runne, say so; did not the General run, were not that a botchy core?
Aia. Dogge.
Ther. Then there would come some matter from him:
I see none now.
Aia. Thou Bitch-Wolfes-Sonne, canst thou not heare?
Feele then. Strikes him.
Ther. The plague of Greece vpon thee thou Mungrell beefe-witted Lord.
Aia. Speake then you whinid't leauen speake, I will beate thee into handsonnesse.
Ther. I shal sooner sayle thee into wit and holinesse:
but I thinke thy Horse wil sooner con an Oracion, then learn a prayer without booke: Thou canst strike, canst thou? A red Murren o'th thy lades trickes.
Aia. Toads stoole, learne me the Proclamation.
Ther. Doest thou thinke I haue no fence thou strik'st
Aia. The Proclamation. (me thus?)
Ther. Thou art proclaim'd a foole, I thinke.
Aia. Do not Porpentine, do not; my fingers itch.
Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsom'st scab in Greece.
Aia. I say the Proclamation.
Ther. Thou grumblest & railest euery houre on A- chilles, and thou art as full of enuy at his greames, as Cer- berus is at Proserpina's beauty. I, that thou barkst at him.
Aia. Mistresse Therites.
Ther. Thou should'st strike him.
Aia. Coblose.
Ther. He would pun thee into shiuers with his fist, as a Sailor breakes a basket.
Aia. You horsef Curre. Ther. Do, do.
Aia. Thou foole for a Witch.
Ther. I, do, do, thou sodden-witted Lord: thou hast no more braine then I haue in mine elbows: An Afinico may tutor thee. Thou scuruy valiant Ass, thou art heere but to thrash Troyans, and thou art bought and solde among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slaue. If thou vse to beate me, I wil begin at thy heele, and tel what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels thou.
Aia. You dogge.
Ther. You scuruy Lord.
Aia. You Curre.
Ther. Mars his Idcor: do rudenes, do Camell, do, do.
Enter Achilles, and Patroclus.
Achil. Why how now Ajax? wherefore do you this?
How now Therites? what's the matter man?
Ther. You see him there, do you?
Achil. I, what's the matter.
Ther. Nay looke vpon him.
Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Troilus and Cressida.

Ther. Nay but regard him well.
Achil. Well, why I do so.
Ther. But yet you looke not well vpon him: for who some euer you take him to be, he is Ajax.
Achil. I know that foole.
Ther. I, but that foole knowes not himselfe.
Aia. Therefore I beate thee.
Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what medicums of wit he vtters: his cushions haue eares thus long. I haue bob'd his Braine more then he has beate my bones: I will buy nine Sparrowes for a peny, and his Pianator is not worth the ninth part of a Sparrow. This Lord (Achilles) Ajax who wears his wit in his belly, and his guttes in his head, Ile tell you what I say of him.
Achil. What?
Ther. I say this Aia —
Achil. Nay good Aia.
Ther. Has not so much wit.
Achil. Nay, I must hold you.
Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's Needle, for whom he comes to fight.
Achil. Peace foole.
Ther. I would haue peace and quietnes, but the foole will not: he there, that he, looke you there.
Aia. O thou dam'd Curre, I shall —
Achil. Will you let your wit to a Fooles.
Ther. No I warrant you, for a fooles will shame it.
Pat. Good words Therites.
Achil. What's the quarrell?
Aia. I had thee vile Owle, goe learne me the tenure of the Proclamation, and he rayles vpon me.
Ther. I serue thee not.
Aia. Well, go too, go too.
Ther. I serue heere voluntary.
Achil. Your last seruice was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary, no men is beate voluntary: Aia was heere the voluntary, and you as vnder an Impresse.
Ther. E'neto, a great deale of your wit too lies in your sinnewes, or else there be Liars. Hector shall haue a great catch, if he knocke out either of your braines, he were as good cracke a fustie nat with no kernell.
Achil. What with me to Therites?
Ther. There's Ulyses, and old Nestor, whose Wit was mouldy ere their Grandfires had nails on their toes, yoke you like draft Oxen, and make you plough vp the waite.
Achil. What? what?
Ther. Yes good sooth, to Achilles, to Aia, to —
Aia. I shall cut out your tongues.
Ther. 'Tis no matter, I shall speake as much as thou afterwards.
Pat. No more words Therites.
Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles Brooch bids me, shall I?
Achil. There's for you Patroclus.
Ther. I wil see you hang'd like Clotpoles ere I come any more to your Tents; I will keepe where there is wit sitting, and leave the faction of fooles. Exit.
Pat. A good riddance.
Achil. Marry this Sir is proclaim'd throughal our host,
That Hector by the fist houre of the Sunne,
Will with a Trumpet, twixt our Tents and Troy
To morrow morning call some Knight to Armes,
That hath a stomacke, and such a one that dare
Maintaine I know not what: 'tis trash. Farewell.
Aia. Farewell: who shall answer him?
Achil. I know not, 'tis put to Lortry: otherwise

Heknew his man.
Aia. O meaning you, I wil go learne more of it. Exit.
Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris and Helenus.
Pri. After so many houres, liues, speeches spent,
Thus once againe sayes Nestor from the Greekes,
Deliuier Helen, and all damage esse
(As honour, losse of time, trauaile, expence,
Wounds, friends, and what els deere that is consum'd
In hot digestion of this comorant Warre).
Shall be stroke off. Hector, what say you too?
Hect. Though no man lesse feares the Greekes then I,
As farre as touches my particular: yet dread Priam,
There is no Lady of more softer bowels,
More spongie, to sucke in the sense of Feare,
More ready to cry out, who knowes what follows
Then Hector is: the wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure: but modest Doubt is cal'd
The Beacon of the wife: thence that searches
To'th bottome of the worst. Let Helen go,
Since the first iword was drawne about this question,
Euery cythe soule mongst many thousand disines,
Hath bin as deere as Helen: I meane of ours:
If we haue lost so many tenths of ours
To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to vs
(Had it our name) the valew of one ten;
What merit's in that reason which denies
The yeelding of her vp.
Troy. Fic, fic, my Brother;
Weigh you the worth and honour of a King
(So great as our dread Father) in a Scale
Of common Ounces? Wil you with Counters summe
The past proportion of his infinite,
And buckle in a waste most fashonlesse,
With spannes and inches so diminutiue,
As feares and reasons? Fic for godly shame?
Hect. No maruel though you bite so sharp at reasons,
You are so empty of them, should not our Father
Beare the great sway of his affayres with reasons,
Because your speech hath none that tels him so.
Troy. You are for dreames & slumbers brother Priest
You furre your gloues with reason: here are your reasons
You know an enemy intends you harme,
You know, a sword imploy'd is perillous,
And reason flies the obiekt of all harme.
Who maruels then when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heeles:
Or like a Starre disorb'd. Nay, if we talke of Reason,
And flye like chidden Mercurie from Ioue,
Let's shut our gates and sleepe: Manhood and Honor
Should haue hard hearts, wold they but sat their thoghts
With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect,
Makes Liuers pale, and lustyhood deiekt.
Hect. Brother, she is not worth
What she doth cost the holding.
Troy. What's aught, but as 'tis valew'd?
Hect. But value dwels not in particular will,
It holds his estimate and dignitie
As well, wherein 'tis precious of it selfe,
As in the prizer: 'Tis made Idolatrie,
To make the seruice greater then the God,
And the will doates that is inclineable
To whar insectiously it selfe affects,
Without some image of th'affected merit.
Troy. I take to day a Wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my Will;

Troilus and Cressida.

My Will enkindled by mine eyes and eares,
Two traded Pylots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of Will, and Iudgement. How may I anoyde
(Although my will distaste what it elected)
The Wife I chose, there can be no euasion
To blench from this, and to stand firme by honour.
We turne not backe the Silkes vpon the Merchant
When we haue spoyl'd them; nor the remainder Viands
We do not throw in vnrespective same,
Because we now are full. It was thought meete
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greekes;
Your breath of full consent bellied his Sailes,
The Seas and Windes (old Wranglers) tooke a Truce,
And did him seruire; he touch'd the Ports desir'd,
And for an old Aunt whom the Greekes held Captiue,
He brought a Grecian Queen, whose youth & freshnesse
Wrinkles Apolloes, and makes stale the morning.
Why keepe we her? the Grecians keepe our Aunt:
Is she worth keeping? Why she is a Pearle,
Whose price hath launch'd about a thousand Ships,
And turn'd Crown'd Kings to Merchants.
If you'l auouch, 'twas wisdom Paris went,
(As you must needs, for you all cride, Go, go:)
If you'l confesse, he brought home Noble prize,
(As you must needs) for you all clapt your hands,
And cride inestimable; why do you now
The issue of your proper Wisedomes rate,
And do a deed that Fortune neuer did?
Begger the estimation which you priz'd,
Richer then Sea and Land? O Theft most bale!
That we haue stolne what we do feare to keepe.
But Theeues vnworthy of a thing so stolne,
That in their Country did them that disgrace,
We feare to warrant in our Native place.

Enter Cassandra with her haire about her eares.

Cas. Cry Troyans, cry.
Priam. What noyse? what shreeke is this?
Troy. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voyce.
Cas. Cry Troyans.
Hect. It is Cassandra.
Cas. Cry Troyans cry; lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with Propheticke teares.
Hect. Peace sister, peace.
Cas. Virgins, and Boyes; mid-age & wrinkled old,
Soft infancie, that nothing can but cry,
Adde to my clamour: let vs pay betimes
A moiety of that masse of moane to come.
Cry Troyans cry, practise your eyes with teares,
Troy must not be, nor goodly Illion stand,
Our fire-brand Brother Paris burnes vs all.
Cry Troyans cry, a Helen and a woe;
Cry, cry, Troy burnes, or else let Helen goe. Exit.
Hect. Now youthfull Troilus, do not these hie strains
Of diuination in our Sister, worke
Some touches of remorse? Or is your bloud
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
Nor feare of bad successe in a bad cause,
Can qualifie the same?
Troy. Why Brother Hector,
We may not thinke the iustnesse of each acte
Such, and no other then euent doth forme it,
Nor once deiekt the courage of our mindes;
Because Cassandra's mad, her brainicke raptures
Cannot distaste the goodnesse of a quarrell,

Which hath our severall Honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my priuate part,
I am no more touch'd, then all Priams sonnes,
And loue forbid there should be done among'st vs
Such things as might offend the weake'st spleene,
To fight for, and maintaine.

Par. Else might the world conuince of leuitie,
As well my vnder-takings as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gaued wings to my propension, and cut off
All feares attending on so dire a proiect.
For what (alas) can these my single armes?
What propugnation is in one mans valour
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrell would excite? Yet I protest,
Were I alone to passe the difficulties,
And had as ample power, as I haue will,
Paris should ne'r retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuite.

Pri. Paris, you speake
Like one be-sotted on your sweet delights;
You haue the Hony still, but these the Gall,
So to be valiant, is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not meere to my selfe,
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it:
But I would haue the foyle of her faire Rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.
What Treason were it to the ransack'd Queene,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliuer her possession vp
On termes of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a straine as this,
Should once set footing in your generous bosomes?
There's not the meanest spirit on our partie,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended: nor none so Noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death vnus'd,
Where Helen is the subiect. Then (I say)
Well may we fight for her, whom we know well,
The worlds large spaces cannot paralell.

Hect. Paris and Troilus, you haue both said well:
And on the cause and question now in hand,
Haue glaz'd, but superficially; nor much
Vnlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Vnfit to heare Morall Philosophie.
The Reasons you alledge, do more conduce
To the hot passion of disemp'rd blood,
Then to make vp a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong: For pleasure, and reuenge,
Haue eares more deafe then Adders, to the voyce
Of any true decision. Nature craues
All dues be rendred to their Owners: now
What neerer debt in all humanity,
Then Wife is to the Husband? If this law
Of Nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great mindes of partiall indulgence,
To their benummed wills resist the same,
There is a Law in each well-ordred Nation,
To curbe those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refracturie.
If Helen then be wife to Sparta's King
(As it is knowne she is) these Morall Lawes
Of Nature, and of Nation, speake aloud
To haue her backe return'd. Thus to perfit
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heauie. Hectors opinion

Troilus and Cressida.

Is this in way of truth: yet nere the lesse,
My spritely brethren, I propend to you
Inresolution to keepe Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no meane dependance,
Vpon our ioynt and severall dignities.

Tro. Why? there you touch the life of our designe:
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Then the performance of our heauing spleenes,
I would not wish a drop of Troian blood,
Spent more in her defence. But worthy Hector,
She is a theame of honour and renowne,
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds,
Whose present courage may beate downe our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize vs.
For I presume braue Hector would not loose
So rich aduantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles vpon the fore-head of this action,
For the wide worlds reueneu.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant off-spring of great Priamus,
I haue a roisting challenge sent among'st
The dull and factious nobles of the Greekes,
Will strike amazement to their drowisie spirits,
I was aduertiz'd, their Great generall slept,
Whil'st emulation in the armie crept:
This I presume will wake him. Exeunt.

Enter Therites solus.

How now Therites? what lost in the Labyrinth of thy furie? Shall the Elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beates me, and I raile at him: O worthy satisfaction, would it were otherwise: that I could beate him, whil'st he rail'd at me: Sfoote, Ile learne to coniure and raise Diuels, but Ile see some issue of my spitefull execrations. Then ther's
Achilles, an rare Engineer, If Troy be not taken till these two vndermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselues. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Ioue the King of gods: and Mercury, loose all the Serpentine craft of thy Caduceus, if thou take not that little little lesse then little wit from them that they haue, which short-arm'd ignorance it selfe knowes, is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumentation deliuer a Flye from a Spider, without drawing the masse Irons and cutting the web: after this, the vengeance on the whole Camp, or rather the bone-ach, for that me thinkes is the curse dependant on those that warre for a placket. I haue said my prayers and diuell, enuie, say Amen: What ho?
my Lord Achilles?

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Therites. Good Therites come in and raile.

Ther. If I could haue remembered a guile counterfeit, thou would'st not haue slipt out of my contemplation, but it is no matter, thy selfe vpon thy selfe. The common curse of mankinde, follie and ignorance be thine in great reueneu; heauen blesse thee from a Tutor, and Discipline come not nere thee. Let thy bloud be thy direction till thy death, then if she that laies thee out sayes thou art a faire coarfe, Ile be sworne and sworne vpon't she neuer srowded any but Lazars, Amen. Wher's Achilles?

Patr. What art thou deuout? wait thou in a prayer?
Ther. I, the heauens heare me.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?
Patr. Therites, my Lord.

Achil. Where, where, art thou come? why my cheefe, my digestion, why hast thou not seru'd thy selfe into my Table, so many meales? Come, what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy Commander Achilles, then tell me Patro-clus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy Lord Therites: then tell me I pray thee, what's thy selfe?

Ther. Thy knower Patroclus: then tell me Patroclus,
what art thou?

Patr. Thou maist tell that know'st.

Achil. O tell, tell.

Ther. Ile decline the whole question: Agamemnon commands Achilles, Achilles is my Lord, I am Patroclus know-er, and Patroclus is a foole.

Patr. You rascall.

Ter. Peace foole, I haue not done.

Achil. He is a priuileg'd man, proceede Therites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole, Achilles is a foole, Ther-sites is a foole, and as aforesaid, Patroclus is a foole.

Achil. Deriue this? come?

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole to offer to command Achilles, Achilles is a foole to be commanded of Agamemnon, Therites is a foole to serue such a foole: and Patroclus is a foole positiu.

Patr. Why am I a foole?

Enter Agamemnon, Vlisses, Nestor, Diomedes, Ajax, and Chalcas.

Ther. Make that demand to the Creator, it suffises me thou art. Looke you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, Ile speake with no body: come in with me Therites. Exit.

Ther. Here is such patcherie, such iugling, and such knauerie: all the argument is a Cuckold and a Whore, a good quarrel to draw emulations, factions, and bleede to death vpon: Now the dry Suppeago on the Subiect, and Warre and Lecherie confound all.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his Tent, but ill dispos'd my Lord.

Agam. Let it be knowne to him that we are here:

He sent our Messengers, and we lay by
Our appertainments, visiting of him:
Let him be told of, so perchance he thinke
We dare not moue the question of our place,
Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall so say to him.

Ulis. We saw him at the opening of his Tent,
He is not sicke.

Aia. Yes, Lyon sicke, sicke of proud heart; you may call it Melancholly if will fauour the man, but by my head, this pride, but why, why, let him show vs the cause?
A word my Lord.

Nes. What moues Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulis. Achilles hath inuicigled his Foole from him.

Nes. Who, Therites?

Ulis. He.

Nes. Then will Ajax lacke matter, if he haue lost his Argument.

Ulis. No, you see he is his argument that has his argument Achilles.

Nes. All the better, their faction is more our wish then their faction; but it was a strong counsell that a Foole could disunite.

Ulis. The amitie that wisdom knits, not folly may easily vntie. Enter Patroclus.

Here

Troilus and Cressida.

Here comes Patroclus.

Nes. No Achilles with him?

Ulf. The Elephant hath ioynts, but none for curtesie:
His legges are legs for necessitie, not for flight.

Patro. Achilles bids me say he is much sorry:
If any thing more then your sport and pleasure,
Did moue your greatnesse, and this noble Seate,
To call vpon him; he hopes it is no other,
But for your health, and your digestion sake;
An after Dinners breath.

Aga. Heare you Patroclus:

We are too well acquainted with these answers:
But his enation winged thus swift with scorn,
Cannot outflye our apprehensions.
Much attribute he hath, and much the reason,
Why we ascribe it to him, yet all his vertues,
Not vertuously of his owne part beheld,
Doe in our eyes, begin to loose their gloss;
Yea, and like faire Fruit in an vnholdsome dish,
Are like to rot vntasted: goe and tell him,
We came to speake with him; and you shall not sinne,
If you doe say, we thinke him ouer proud,
And vnder honesty in selfe-assumption greater
Then in the note of iudgement; & worthier then himselfe
Here tends the sauege strangenesse he puts on,
Disguise the holy strength of their command:
And vnder write in an obsequing kinde
His humorous predominance, yea watch
His pettish lines, his ebs, his flowes, as if
The passage and whole carriage of this action
Rode on his tyde. Goe tell him this, and adde,
That if he ouerhold his price so much,
Wee none of him; but let him, like an Engin
Not portable, lye vnder this report.
Bring action hither, this cannot goe to warre:
A stirring Dwarfie, we doe allowance giue,
Before a sleeping Gyant: tell him so.

Pat. I shall, and bring his answer presently.

Aga. In second voyce wee be not satisfied,
We come to speake with him, Ulfiss enter you.

Exit Ulfiss.

Ajax. What is he more then another?

Aga. No more then what he thinke he is.

Aia. Is he so much, doe you not thinke, he thinke himselfe a better man then I am?

Ag. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is?

Ag. No, Noble Ajax, you are as strong, as valiant, as wite, no lesse noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Aia. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what it is.

Aga. Your minde is the cleerer Ajax, and your vertues the fairer; he that is proud, eates vp himselfe; Pride is his owne Glasse, his owne trumpeter, his owne Chronicle, and what euer praises it selfe but in the deede, deuoures the deede in the praise.

Enter Ulfiss.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the ingendring of Toades.

Nes. Yet he loues himselfe: is't not strange?

Ulf. Achilles will not to the field to morrow.

Ag. What's his excuse?

Ulf. He doth relye on none,
But carries on the streame of his dispose,

Without obseruance or respect of any,

In will peculiar, and in selfe admission.

Aga. Why, will he not vpon our faire request,
Vntent his person, and share the ayre with vs?

Ulf. Things small as nothing, for requests sake onely
He makes important; posselt he is with greatnesse,
And speakes not to himselfe, but with a pride
That quarrels at selfe-breath. Imagin'd wroth
Holds in his bloud such swolne and hot discourse,
That twixt his mentall and his active parts,
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
And batters gainst it selfe; what should I say?
He is so plaguy proud, that the death tokens of it,
Cry no recovery.

Ag. Let Ajax goe to him.

Deare Lord, goe you and greete him in his Tent;
Tis said he holds you well, and will be led
At your request a little from himselfe.

Ulf. O Agamemnon, let it not be so.
Weele consecrate the steps that Ajax makes,
When they goe from Achilles; shall the proud Lord,
That bastes his arrogance with his owne seame,
And neuer suffers matter of the world,
Enter his thoughts: saue such as doe reuolue
And ruminare himselfe. Shall he be worshipt,
Of that we hold an Idoll, more then hee?
No, this thrice worthy and right valiant Lord,
Must not so staule his Palme, nobly acquird,
Nor by my will asubingate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is: by going to Achilles,
That were to enlard his fat already, pride,
And adde more Coles to Cancer, when he burnes
With entertaining great Hiperion.
This L. goe to him? Iupiter forbid,
And say in thunder, Achilles goe to him.

Nes. O this is well, he rubs the veine of him.

Dia. And how his silence drinckes vp this applause.

Aia. If I goe to him, with my armed fist, Ile pass him ore the face.

Ag. O no, you shall not goe.

Aia. And abe proud with me, ile phese his pride: let me goe to him.

Ulf. Nor for the worth that hangs vpon our quarrel.

Aia. A pauntry insolent fellow.

Nes. How he describes himselfe.

Aia. Can he not be sociable?

Ulf. The Raven chides blacknesse.

Aia. Ile let his humours bloud.

Ag. He will be the Physitian that should be the patient.

Aia. And all men were a my minde.

Ulf. Wit would be out of fashon.

Aia. A should not beare it so, a should eate Swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nes. And 'twould, you'd carry halfe.

Ulf. A would haue ten shares.

Aia. I will knede him, Ile make him supple, hee's not yet through warme.

Nes. Force him with praises, poure in, poure in: his ambition is dry.

Ulf. My L. you feede too much on this dislike.

Nes. Our noble Generall, doe not doe so.

Dia. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ulf. Why, 'tis this naming of him doth him harme.
Here is a man, but 'tis before his face,
I will be silent.

Nes. Wherefore should you so?

He

Troilus and Cressida.

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulf. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Aia. A horson dog, that shal palter thus with vs, would he were a Trojan.

Nes. What a vice were it in Ajax now —

Ulf. If he were proud.

Dia. Or covetous of praise.

Ulf. I, or surley borne.

Dia. Or strange, or selfe affected.

Ulf. Thank the heavens L. thou art of sweet compofure;

Praise him that got thee, she that gaue thee sucke:

Fame be thy Tutor, and thy parts of nature

Thrice faim'd beyond, beyond all erudition;

But he that disciplin'd thy armes to fight,

Let Mars deuide Eternity in twaine,

And giue him halfe, and for thy vigour,

Ball-bearing Milo: his addition yeelde

To honowre Ajax: I will not praise thy wisdom,

Which like a bourne, a pale, a shore confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts; here's Nestor

Instructed by the Antiquary times:

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise.

But pardon Father Nestor, were your dayes

As greene as Ajax, and your braine so temper'd,

You should not haue the eminence of him,

But be as Ajax.

Aia. Shall I call you Father?

Ulf. I my good Sonne.

Dia. Be rul'd by him Lord Ajax.

Ulf. There is no tarrying here, the Hart Achilles

Keepes thicker: please it our Generall,

To call together all his state of warre,

Fresh Kings are come to Troy to morrow

We must with all our maine of power stand fast:

And here's a Lord, come Knights from East to West,

And cull their flowre, Ajax shall cope the best.

Ag. Goe we to Counsaile, let Achilles sleepe;

Light Botes may faile swift, though greater bulkes draw deepe. Exeunt. Musicke sounds within.

Enter Pandarus and a Seruant.

Par. Friend, you, pray you a word: Doe not you follow the yong Lord Paris?

Ser. I sir, when he goes before me.

Par. You depend vpon him I meane?

Ser. Sir, I doe depend vpon the Lord.

Par. You depend vpon a noble Gentleman: I must needes praise him.

Ser. The Lord be praised.

Pa. You know me, doe you not?

Ser. Faith sir, superficially.

Pa. Friend know me better, I am the Lord Pandarus.

Ser. I hope I shall know your honour better.

Pa. I doe desire it.

Ser. You are in the state of Grace?

Pa. Grace, not so friend, honor and Lordship are my title: What Musique is this?

Ser. I doe but partly know sir: it is Musicke in parts.

Pa. Know you the Musicians.

Ser. Wholly sir.

Pa. Who play they to?

Ser. To the hearers sir.

Pa. At whose pleasur friend?

Ser. At mine sir, and theirs that loue Musicke.

Pa. Command, I meane friend.

Ser. Who shall I command sir?

Pa. Friend, we vnderstand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request doe these men play?

Ser. That's too't indeede sir: marry sir, at the request of Paris my L. who's there in person; with him the mortall Venus, the heart bloud of beauty, loues inuisible soule.

Pa. Who? my Cofin Cressida.

Ser. No sir, Helen, could you not finde out that by her attributes?

Pa. It should seeme fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressida. I come to speake with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a complementall assault vpon him, for my businesse seethes.

Ser. Sudden businesse, there's a stewed phrase indeede.

Enter Paris and Helena.

Par. Faire be to you my Lord, and to all this faire company: faire desires in all faire measure fairly guide them, especially to you faire Queene, faire thoughts be your faire pillow.

Hel. Deere L. you are full of faire words.

Par. You speake your faire pleasure sweete Queene:
faire Prince, here is good broken Musicke.

Par. You haue broke it cozen: and by my life you shall make it whole againe, you shall peece it out with a peece of your performance. Nel, he is full of harmony.

Pa. Truly Lady no.

Hel. O sir.

Par. Rude in sooth, in good sooth very rude.

Paris. Well said my Lord: well, you say so in fits.

Par. I haue businesse to my Lord, deere Queene: my Lord will you vouchsafe me a word.

Hel. Nay, this shall not hedge vs out, wee heare you sing certainly.

Par. Well sweete Queene you are pleasant with me, but marry thus my Lord, my deere Lord, and most esteem-med friend your brother Troilus.

Hel. My Lord Pandarus, hony sweete Lord.

Par. Go too sweete Queene, gae to.

Commends himselfe most affectionately to you.

Hel. You shall not bob vs out of our melody:

If you doe, our melancholly vpon your head.

Par. Sweete Queene, sweete Queene, that's a sweete
Queene I faith —

Hel. And to make a sweet Lady sad, is a sower offence.

Par. Nay, that shall not serue your turne, that shall it not in truth la. Nay, I care not for such words, no, no.
And my Lord he desires you, that if the King call for him at Supper, you will make his excuse.

Hel. My Lord Pandarus?

Par. What saies my sweete Queene, my very, very sweete Queene?

Par. What exploit's in hand, where sups he to night?

Hel. Nay but my Lord?

Par. What saies my sweete Queene? my cozen will fall out with you.

Hel. You must not know where he sups.

Par. With my disposer Cressida.

Par. No, no; no such matter, you are wide, come your disposer is sicke.

Par. Well, Ile make excuse.

Par. I good my Lord: why should you say Cressida?
no, your poore disposer's sicke.

Par. I spie.

Par. You

Troilus and Cressida.

Pan. You spie, what doe you spie: come, giue me an Instrument now sweete Queene.

Hel. Why this is kindly done?

Pan. My Neece is horrible in loue with a thing you haue sweete Queene.

Hel. She shall haue it my Lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pan. Hee? no, theese none of him; they two are twaine.

Hel. Falling in after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, Ile heare no more of this, Ile sing you a song now.

Hel. I, I, prethee now: by my troth sweet Lord thou hast a fine fore-head.

Pan. I you may, you may.

Hel. Let thy song be loue: this loue will vndoe vs al.

Pan. Loue? I that it shall yfaith.

Pan. I good now loue, lone, no thing but loue.

Pan. In good troth it begins so.

Loue, loue, nothing but loue, still more:

For O loues Bow,

Shootes 'Bucke and Doe:

The Shaft confounds not that it wounds,

But tickles still the sore:

These Louers cry, oh ho they dye;

Yet that which seemes the wound, to kill,

Doth turne oh ho, to ha ha he:

So dying loue lines still,

O ho a while, but ha ha ha;

O ho groines out for ha ha ha---hey ho.

Hel. In loue yfaith to the very tip of the nose.

Pan. He eates nothing but dounes loue; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deedes, and hot deedes is loue.

Pan. Is this the generation of loue? Hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deedes, why they are Vipers, is Loue a generation of Vipers?

Sweete Lord whose asfeld to day?

Pan. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallyntie of Troy. I would faine haue arm'd to day, but my Noll would not haue it so.

How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Hel. He hangs the lippe at something; you know all Lord Pandarus?

Pan. Not I hony sweete Queene: I long to heare how they sped to day.

Youle remember your brothers excuse?

Pan. To a hayre.

Pan. Farewell sweete Queene.

Hel. Commend me to your Neece.

Pan. I will sweete Queene.

Sound a retreat.

Pan. They're come from field: let vs to Priams Hall To greete the Warriors. Sweet Helen, I must wooe you, To helpe vnrarme our Hector: his stubborne Buckles, With these your white enchaning fingers touchs, Shall more obey then to the edge of Steele, Or force of Greekish finewes: you shall doe more Then all the Hand Kings, disarm great Hector.

Hel. 'Twill make vs proud to be his seruant Paris:

Yea what he shall receiue of vs in duetie,

Giues vs more palme in beautie then we haue:

Yea ouershines our selfe.

Sweete about thought I loue thee.

Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus Man.

Pan. How now, where's thy Maister, at my Couzen Cressida?

Man. No fir, he staves for you to conduct him thither.

Enter Troilus.

Pan. O here he comes: How now, how now?

Troy. Sirra walke off.

Pan. Haue you scene my Cousin?

Troy. No Pandarus: I Ralke about her doore Like a strange soule vpon the Stigian banks Staying for wastage. O be thou my Charon, And giue me swift transporance to those fields, Where I may wallow in the Lilly beds Propos'd for the deseruer. O gentle Pandarus, From Cupids shoulder plucke his painted wings, And flye with me to Cressid.

Pan. Walke here in Orchard, Ile bring her straight.

Exit Pandarus.

Troy. I am giddy; expectation whirles me round, Th'imaginary relish is so sweete, That it inchantis my sence: what will it be When that the watry pallat taste indeede Loues thrice reputed Nectar? Death I feare me Sounding distruction, or some ioy too fine, Too subtile, potent, and too sharpe in sweetnesse, For the capacite of my ruder powers; I feare it much, and I doe feare besides, That I shall loose distinction in my ioyes, As doth a battaile, when they charge on heapes The enemy flying.

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. Shee's making her ready, sheele come straight; you must be witty now, she does so blush, & fetches her winde so short, as if she were fraid with a spire: Ile fetch her; it is the prettiest villaine, she fetches her breath so short as a new tane Sparrow.

Exit Pand.

Troy. Euen such a passion doth embrace my bosome. My heart beates thicker then a feavorous pulse, And all my powers doe their bestowing loose, Like vassalage at vnawares encountering The eye of maiestie.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what neede you blush? Shames a babie; here she is now, sweare the oathes now to her, that you haue sworne to me. What are you gone a-gaine, you must be watcht ere you be made tame, must you? come your wayes, come your wayes, and you draw backward weele put you i'th hils: why doe you not speak to her? Come draw this curtaine, & let's see your picture. Alasse the day, how loath you are to offend day light; and 'twere darke you'd close looner: So, so, rub on, and kisse the mistresse; how now, a kisse in fee-farme? build there Carpenter, the ayre is sweete. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The Faulcon, as the Tercell, for all the Ducks in Riuier: go too, go too.

Troy. You haue bereft me of all words Lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts; giue her deedes: but sheele bereaue you 'oth' deedes too, if shee call your actiuitie in question: what billing againe? here's in witness where-of the Parties interchangeably. Come in, come in, Ile go get a fire?

Cres. Will you walke in my Lord?

Troy. O Cressida, how often haue I wisht me thus?

Cres. Wisht my Lord? the gods grant? O my Lord,

Troy. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption: what too curious dreg espies my sweete Lady in the fountaine of our loue?

Cres. More

Troilus and Cressida.

Cres. More dregs then water, if my teares haue eyes. Troy. Feares make diuels of Cherubins, they neuer see truly.

Cres. Blinde feare, that seeing reason leads, findes safe footing, then blinde reason, stumbling without feare: to feare the worst, oft cures the worse.

Troy. Oh let my Lady apprehend no feare,

In all Cupids Pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Not nothing monstrous neither?

Troy. Nothing but our vnder takings, when we vowe to weepe seas, lue in fire, eate rockes, tame Tygers; thinking it harder for our Mistresse to deuise imposition enough, then for vs to vndergoe any difficultie imposed. This is the monstrousie in loue Lady, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd; that the desire is boundlesse, and the act a snare to limit.

Cres. They say all Louers sweare more performance then they are able, and yet referue an ability that they neuer performe: vowing more then the perfection of ten; and discharging lesse then the tenth part of one. They that haue the voyce of Lyons, and the act of Hares: are they not Monsters?

Troy. Are there such? such are not we: Praise vs as we are tasted, allow vs as we proue: our head shall goe bare till merit crowne it: no perfection in reuerfion shall haue a praise in present: wee will not name desert before his birth, and being borne his addition shall be humble: few words to faire faith. Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what enuie can say worst, shall be a mocke for his truth; and what truth can speake truest, not truer then Troilus.

Cres. Will you walke in my Lord?

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. What blushing still? haue you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well Vnckle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thanke you for that: if my Lord get a Boy of you, youle giue him me: be true to my Lord, if he flinch, chide me for it.

Troy. You know now your hostages: your Vnckles word and my firme faith.

Pan. Nay, Ile giue my word for her too: our kindred though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant being wonne: they are Burres I can tell you, they'le sticke where they are throwne.

Cres. Boldnesse comes to mee now, and brings mee heart: Prince Troilus, I haue lou'd you night and day, for many weary moneths.

Troy. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seeme won: but I was won my Lord With the first glance; that euer pardon me, If I confesse much you will play the tyrant: I loue you now, but not till now so much.

But I might maister it; in faith I lye:

My thoughts were like vobridled children grow

Too head-strong for their mother: see we fooles,

Why haue I blab'd: who shall be true to vs

When we are so vnfeare to our selues?

But though I lou'd you well, I would you not,

And yet good faith I wisht my selfe a man;

Or that we women had mens priuiledge

Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue,

For in this rapture I shall surely speake

The thing I shall repent: see, see, your silence

Commings in dumbnesse, from my weakenesse drawes

My soule of counsell from me. Stop my mouth.

Troy. And shall, albeit sweete Musicke issues thence.

Pan. Pretty yfaith.

Cres. My Lord, I doe beseech you pardon me, 'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kisse:

I am asham'd; O Heauens, what haue I done!

For this time will I take my leaue my Lord.

Troy. Your leaue sweete Cressid?

Pan. Leauie: and you take leaue till to morrow morning.

Cres. Pray you content you.

Troy. What offends you Lady?

Cres. Sir, mine owne company.

Troy. You cannot shun your selfe.

Cres. Let me goe and try:

I haue a kinde of selfe recides with you:

But an vnkinde selfe, that it selfe will leaue,

To be anothers foole. Where is my wit?

I would be gone: I speake I know not what.

Troy. Well know they what they speake, that speakes so wisely.

Cres. Perchance my Lord, I shew more craft then loue,

And fell so roundly to a large confession,

To Angle for your thoughts: but you are wise,

Or else you loue not: for to be wise and loue,

Exceedes mans might, that dwels with gods above,

Troy. O that I thought it could be in a woman:

As if it can, I will presume in you,

To feede for aye her lampe and flames of loue.

To keepe her constancie in plight and youth,

Out-living beauties outward, with a minde

That doth renew swifter then blood decays:

Or that perswasion could but thus conuince me,

That my integritie and truth to you,

Might be affronted with the match and waight

Of such a winnowed puritie in loue:

How were I then vp-listed! but alas,

I am as true, as truths simplicitie,

And simpler then the infancie of truth.

Cres. In that Ile warre with you.

Troy. O vertuous fight,

When right with right wars who shall be most right:

True swaines in loue, shall in the world to come

Approue their truths by Troilus, when their times,

Full of protest, of oath and big compare;

Wants similes, truth tir'd with iteration,

As true as Steele, as plantage to the Moone:

As Sunne to day: as Turtle to her mate:

As Iron to Adamant: as Earth to th' Center:

Yet after all comparisons of truth,

(As truths authentick author to be cited)

As true as Troilus, shall crowne vp the Verse,

And sanctifie the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be:

If I be false, or swerue a haire from truth,

When time is old and hath forgot it selfe:

When water drops haue worne the Stones of Troy;

And blinde obliuion swallow'd Cities vp;

And mightie States characterlesse are grated

To dustie nothing; yet let memory,

From false to false, among false Maids in loue,

Vpbraid my falsehood, when they'are said as false,

As Aire, as Water, as Winde, as sandie earth;

As Foxe to Lambe; as Wolfe to Heifers Calfe;

Pard to the Hinde, or Stepdame to her Sonne;

Yea, let them say, to sticke the heart of falsehood,

As

Troilus and Cressida.

As false as Cressida.

Pand. Go too, a bargain made: scale it, scale it, Ile be the witness here I hold your hand: here my Cousins, if euer you proue false one to another, since I haue taken such paines to bring you together, let all pittifull goers betweene be cal'd to the worlds end after my name: call them all Panders; let all constant men be Troylusses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers betweene, Panders: say, Amen.

Troy. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen.

Whereupon I will shew you a Chamber, which bed, because it shall not speake of your prettie encounters, presse it to death: away.

And Cupid grant all long-tide Maidens heere, Bed, Chamber, and Pander, to prouide this geere. Exeunt.

Enter Phylis, Diomedes, Nestor, Agamemnon, Menelaus and Chalcas. Flourish.

Cal. Now Princes for the seruice I haue done you, Th' advantage of the time prompts me aloud, To call for recompence: appeare it to your minde, That through the sight I beare in things to loue, I haue abandon'd Troy, left my possession, Incur'd a Traitors name, expos'd my selfe, From certaine and posselt conueniences, To doubtfull fortunes, sequetring from me all That time, acquaintance, custome and condition, Made tame, and most familiar to my nature: And here to doe you seruice am become, As new into the world, strange, vnacquainted, I doe beseech you, as in way of taste, To giue me now a little benefit: Out of those many registred in promise, Which you say, liue to come in my behalfe.

Agas. What wouldst thou of vs Troian? make demand?

Cal. You haue a Troian prisoner, call'd Antenor. Yesterday tooke: Troy holds him very deere. Oft haue you (often haue you, thanks therefore) Desir'd my Cressida in right great exchange. Whom Troy hath still deni'd: but this Antenor, I know is such a wrest in their affaires, That their negotiations all must slacke, Wanting his mannage: and they will almost, Giue vs a Prince of blood, a Sonne of Priam, In change of him. Let him be sent great Princes, And he shall buy my Daughter: and her presence, Shall quite strike off all seruice I haue done, In most accepted paine.

Agas. Let Diomedes beare him, And bring vs Cressida hither: Calcas shall haue What he requests of vs: good Diomed Furnish you fairly for this interchange; Withall bring word, if Hektor will to morrow Be answer'd in his challenge. Aias is ready.

Dio. This shall I vnder take, and 'tis a burthen Which I am proud to beare. Exit.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus in their Tent. Ulis. Achilles stands 'th entrance of his Tent; Please it our Generall to passe strangely by him, As if he were forgot: and Princes all, Lay negligent and loose regard vpon him; I will come last, 'tis like heele question me,

Why such vnplausiue eyes are bent? why turn'd on him? If so, I haue derision medicinable, To vse betweene your strangeness and his pride, Which his owne will shall haue desire to drinke; It may doe good, pride hath no other glasse To show it selfe, but pride: for supple knees, Feede arrogance, and are the proud mans fees. Agas. Weele execute your purpose, and put on A forme of strangeness as we passe along, So doe each Lord, and either greete him not, Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more, Then if not look on: I will lead the way.

Achil. What comes the Generall to speake with me?

You know my minde, Ile fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agas. What saies Achilles, would he ought with vs?

Nes. Would you my Lord ought with the Generall?

Achil. No.

Nes. Nothing my Lord.

Agas. The better.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How doe you? how doe you?

Achil. What, do's the Cuckold scorne me?

Aias. How now Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow Aias?

Aias. Ha.

Achil. Good morrow.

Aias. I, and good next day too. Exeunt.

Achil. What meane these fellows? know they not Achilles?

Patr. They passe by strangely: they were vs'd to bend To send their smiles before them to Achilles:

To come as humbly as they vs'd to creepe to holy Altars.

Achil. What am I poure of late?

'Tis certaine, greatness once false out with fortune,

Must fall out with men too: what the decline'd is,

He shall as soone reade in the eyes of others,

As seele in his owne fall: for men like butter-flies,

Shew not their meale wings, but to the Summer;

And not a man for being simply man,

Has any honour; but honour'd for those honours

That are without him; as place, riches, and fauour,

Prizes of accident, as oft as merit:

Which when they fall, as being slippery standers;

The loue that leand on them as slippery too,

Doth one plucke downe another, and together

Dye in the fall. But 'tis not so with me;

Fortune and I are friends, I doe enjoy

At ample point, all that I did possesse,

Saueth these mens looks: who do me thinkes finde out

Something not worth in me such rich beholding;

As they haue often giuen. Here is Ulis,

He interrupt his reading: how now Ulis?

Ulis. Now great Theris Sonne,

Achil. What are you reading?

Ulis. A strange fellow here

Writes me, that man, how dearely euer parted,

How much in hauing: or without, or in,

Cannot make boast to haue that which he hath;

Nor fees not what he owes, but by reflection:

As when his vertues shining vpon others,

Heate them, and they retort that heate againe

To the first giuer.

Achil. This is not strange Ulis:

The beautie that is borne here in the face,

The beaer knowes not, but commends it selfe,

Nor going from it selfe: but eye to eye oppos'd,

Troilus and Cressida.

Salutes each other with each others forme; For speculation turnes not to it selfe, Till it hath traual'd, and is married there Where it may see it selfe: this is not strange at all.

Ulis. I doe not straine it at the position, It is familiar; but at the Authors drift, Who in his circumstance, expressly proues That no may is the Lord of any thing.

(Though in and of him there is much confisting,) Till he communicate his parts to others: Nor doth he of himselfe know them for ought, Till he behold them formed in th' applause,

Where they are extended: who like an arch reuerb'rate The voyce againe; or like a gate of Steele, Fronting the Sunne, receiues and renders backe His figure, and his heate. I was much rapt in this, And apprehended here immediately:

The vnknowne Aias;

Heauens what a man is there! a very Horse,

That has he knowes not what. Nature, what things there

Most abiect in regard, and deare in vse.

What things againe most deere in the esteeme,

And poore in worth: now shall we see to morrow,

An act that very chance doth throw vpon him?

Aias renown'd? O heauens, what some men doe,

While some men leaue to doe!

How some men creepe in skittish fortunes hall,

Whiles others play the Ideots in her eyes:

How one man eates into anothers pride,

While pride is feasting in his wantonnesse

To see these Grecian Lords; why, euen already,

They clasp the lubber Aias on the shoulder,

As if his foote were on braue Hektor's brest,

And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I doe beleue it:

For they past by me, as my fers doe by beggars,

Neither gaue to me good word, nor looke:

What are my deedes forgot?

Ulis. Time hath (my Lord) a wallet at his backe,

Wherein he puts almes for obliuion:

A great siz'd monster of ingratitude:

Those scraps are good deedes past,

Which are deuour'd as fast as they are made,

Forgot as soone as done: perseuerance, deere my Lord,

Keeps honor bright, to haue done, is to hang

Quite out of fashion, like a rustie male,

In monumentall mockrie: take the instant way,

For honor travels in a straight so narrow,

Where one but goes a breast, keepe then the path:

For emulation hath a thousand Sonnes,

That one by one pursue; if you giue way,

Or hedge aside from the direct forth right;

Like to an entred Tyde, they all rush by,

And leaue you hindmost:

Or like a gallant Horse false in first ranke,

Lye there for pauement to the abiect, neere

Ore-run and trampled on: then what they doe in present,

Though lesse then yours in past, must ore-top yours:

For time is like a fashionable Hoste,

That slightly shakes his parting Guest by th' hand;

And with his armes out-stretcht, as he would flye,

Grasps in the commer: the welcome euer smiles,

And farewells goes out fighting: O let not vertue seeke

Remuneration for the thing it was: for beautie, wit,

High birth, vigor of bone, desert in seruice,

Loue, friendship, charity, are subiects all

To enuious and calumniating time:

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin:

That all with one consent praise new borne gaudes,

Though they are made and moulded of things past,

And goe to dust, that is a little guilt,

More laud then guilt ore dusted;

The present eye praises the present object:

Then maruell not thou great and compleat man,

That all the Greekes begin to worship Aias;

Since things in motion begin to catch the eye,

Then what not flits: the cry went out on thee,

And still it might, and yet it may againe,

If thou wouldst not entombe thy selfe aliue,

And case thy reputation in thy Tent;

Whose glorious deedes, but in these fields of late,

Made emulous millions 'mongst the gods themselves,

And draue great Mars to faction.

Achil. O this my priuacie,

I haue strong reasons.

Ulis. But 'gainst your priuacie

The reasons are more potent and heroy call:

'Tis knowne Achilles, that you are in loue

With one of Priam's daughters.

Achil. Ha? knowne?

Ulis. Is that a wonder?

The prouidence that's in a watchfull State,

Knowes almost euery graine of Plutoes gold;

Findes bottom in th' vncomprehensiu deapes;

Keepes place with thought; and almost like the gods,

Doeth thoughts vnaile in their dumbe cradles;

There is a myserie (with whom relation Durst neuer meddle) in the soule of State;

Which hath an operation more diuine,

Then breath or pen can giue expresseure to:

All the comperle that you haue had with Troy,

As perfectly is ours, as yours, my Lord.

And better would it fit Achilles much,

To throw downe Hektor then Polixena.

But it must grieue young Pirhus now at home,

When fame shall in her land sound her trumpe;

And all the Greekish Girdles shall tripping sing,

Great Hektor's sister did Achilles winne;

But our great Aias brauely beate downe him:

Farewell my Lord: I as your louer speake;

The foole slides ore the lce that you should breake.

Patr. To this effect Achilles haue I mou'd you:

A woman impudent and mannish grown,

Is not more loth'd, then an effeminate man,

In time of action: I stand condemn'd for this;

They thinke my little stomacke to the warre,

And your great loue to me, restraines you thus:

Sweete, rouse your selfe; and the weak wanton Cupid

Shall from your necke vnloose his amorous fould,

And like a dew drop from the Lyons mane,

Be shooke to ayrie ayre.

Achil. Shall Aias fight with Hektor?

Patr. I, and perhaps receiue much honor by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake,

My fame is shrowdly goerd.

Patr. O then beware:

Those wounds heale ill, that men doe giue themselves;

Omission to doe what is necessary,

Scales a commission to a blanke of danger,

And danger like an ague subtly taints,

Euen then when we sit idly in the sunne.

Achil. Goe call Theris hither, sweet Patroclus,

Troilus and Cressida.

He send the soote to Aiax, and desire him
T'invite the Trojan Lords after the Combat
To see vs here vnarm'd: I haue a womans longing,
An appetite that I am sicke withall;
To see great Hektor in his weedes of peace; Enter Thersites.
To talke with him, and to behold his visage,
Euen to my full of view. A labour sau'd.

Ther. A wonder.

Achil. What?

Ther. Aiax goes vp and downe the field, asking for himselfe.

Achil. How so?

Ther. Hee must fight singly to morrow with Hektor, and is so prophetically proud of an heroicall cudgelling,
that he raues in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why he stalkes vp and downe like a Peacock, a stride and a stand: ruminates like an hollesse, that hath no Arithmatique but her braine to set downe her reckoning: bites his lip with a politike regard, as who should say, there were wit in his head and two'd out; and so there is: but it lyes as coldly in him, as fire in a flint, which will not shew without knocking. The mans vndone for euer; for if Hektor breake not his necke i'th' combat, heele break't himselfe in vaine-glory. He knowes not mee: I said, good morrow Aiax; And he replies, thanks Agamemnon. What thinke you of this man, that takes me for the Generall? Hee's growne a very land-fish, languagelesse, a monster: a plague of opinion, a man may weare it on both sides like a leather Ierkin.

Achil. Thou must be my Ambassador to him Thersites.

Ther. Who, I: why, heele answer no body: he professes not answering; speaking is for beggers: he weares his tongue in's armes: I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make his demands to me, you shall see the Pageant of Aiax.

Achil. To him Patroclus; tell him, I humbly desire the valiant Aiax, to inuite the most valorous Hektor, to come vnarm'd to my Tent, and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the magnanimous and most illustrious, fixe or seauen times honour'd Capitaine, Generall of the Grecian Armie Agamemnon, &c. doe this.

Patro. Ioue bleste great Aiax.

Ther. Hum.

Patro. I come from the worthy Achilles.

Ther. Ha?

Patro. Who most humbly desires you to inuite Hektor
to his Tent.

Ther. Hum.

Patro. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patro. My Lord.

Ther. Ha?

Patro. What say you too't.

Ther. God buy you with all my heart.

Patro. Your answer sir.

Ther. If to morrow be a faire day, by eleuen a clocke it will goe one way or other; howsoeuer, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patro. Your answer sir.

Ther. Fare you well withall my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out a tune thus: what musicke will be in him when Hektor has knockt out his braines; I know not: but I am sure none, vnlesse the Fidler Apollo get his finewes to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt beare a Letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me carry another to his Horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My minde is troubled like a Fountaine stir'd,
And I my selfe see not the bottome of it.

Ther. Would the Fountaine of your minde were cleere againe, that I might water an Assc at it: I had rather be a Ticke in a Sheepe, then such a valiant ignorance.

Enter at one doore Aeneas with a Torch, at another
Paris, Diophras, Antenor, Diomed the Grecian, with Torches.

Par. See hoa, who is that there?

Diophr. It is the Lord Aeneas.

Aene. Is the Prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lye long

As you Prince Paris, nothing but heauenly businesse,
Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Diom. That's my minde too: good morrow Lord
Aeneas.

Par. A valiant Greeke Aeneas, take his hand, Witness the proccesse of your speech within;
You told how Diomed, in a whole weeke by dayes
Did haunt you in the Field.

Aene. Health to you valiant sir,
During all question of the gentle truce:
But when I meete you arm'd, as blacke defiance,
As heart can thinke, or courage execute.

Diom. The one and other Diomed embraces,
Our blouds are now in calme; and so long health:
But when contention, and occasion meetes,
By Ioue, Ile play the hunter for thy life,
With all my force, pursuite and pollicy.

Aene. And thou shalt hunt a Lyon that will flye
With his face backward, in humane gentlenessse:
Welcome to Troy; now by Anchises life,
Welcome indeede: by Venus hand I sweare,
No man aloue can loue in such a sort,
The thing he meanes to kill, more excellently.

Diom. We sympathize. Ioue let Aeneas liue
(If to my sword his fate be not the glory)
A thousand compleate courses of the Sunne,
But in mine emulous honor let him dye:
With euery ioynt a wound, and that to morrow.

Aene. We know each other well.

Diom. We doe, and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most, despightful'ft gentle greeting;
The noblest hatefull loue, that ere I heard of.

What businesse Lord so early?

Aene. I was sent for to the King; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meete you; it was to bring this Greeke
To Calchas's house; and there to render him,

For the enfrued Antenor, the faire Cressida:

Lers haue your company; or if you please,

Haste there before vs. I constantly doe thinke

(Or rather call my thought a certaine knowledge)

My brother Troilus lodges there to night.

Rouse him, and giue him note of our approach,

With the whole quality whereof, I feare

We shall be much vnwelcome.

Aene. That I assure you;

Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece,

Then Cressida borne from Troy.

Par. There

Troilus and Cressida.

Par. There is no helpe:

The bitter disposition of the time will haue it so.

On Lord, weele follow you.

Aene. Good morrow all.

Exit Aeneas

Par. And tell me noble Diomed; faith tell me true,

Euen in the soule of sound good fellow ship,

Who in your thoughts meints faire Helen most?

My selfe, or Meneclaus?

Diom. Both alike.

He merits well to haue her, that doth seeke her,

Not making any scruple of her foyleure,

With such a hell of paine, and world of charge.

And you as well to keepe her, that defend her,

Not palliating the taste of her dishonour,

With such a costly losse of wealth and friends:

He like a puling Cuckold, would drinke vp

The lees and dregs of a flat tamed peece:

You like a lecher, out of whorish loynes,

Are pleas'd to breede out your inheritors:

Both merits payz'd, each weighs no lesse nor more,

But heas he, which heauier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your country-woman.

Diom. Shee's bitter to her country: heare me Paris,

For euery false drop in her bandy veines,

A Grecians life hath funke: for euery scruple

Other contaminated carrion weight,

A Trojan hath becme slaine. Since she could speake,

She hath not giuen so many good words breath,

As for her, Greekes and Troians suffred death.

Par. Faire Diomed, you doe as chapmen doe,

Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy:

But we in silence hold this vertue well;

Weele not commend, what we intend to sell.

Here lyes our way.

Exeunt.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. Deere trouble not your selfe: the morne is cold.

Cres. Then sweet my Lord, he call mine Vackle down;

He shall vnbolt the Gates.

Tro. Trouble him not:

To bed, to bed: sleepe kill those pritty eyes,

And giue as lost attachment to thy senses,

As Infants empty of all thought.

Cres. Good morrow then.

Tro. I prithee now to bed.

Cres. Are you a weary of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busie day

Wak't by the Larke, hath rous'd the ribauld Crowes,

And dreaming night will hide our eyes no longer:

I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath becne too briefe. (stays,

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights she

As hideously as hell; but flies the graspes of loue,

With wings more momentary, swift then thought:

You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Prithee tarry, you men will neuer tarry;

O foolish Cressida, I might haue still held off,

And then you would haue tarried. Harke, ther's one vp?

Pand. within. What's all the doores open here?

Tro. It is your Vackle.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. A pestilence on him: now will he be mocking:

I shall haue such a life.

Pand. How now, how now? how goe maiden-heads?

Heare you Made: wher's my cozin Cressida?

Cres. Go hang your self, you naughty mocking Vackle:

You bring me to doo---and then you floute me too.

Pand. To do what? to do what? let her say what:

What haue I brought you to doe?

Cres. Come, come, beshrew your heart: youle nere be good, nor suffer others.

Pand. Ha, ha: alas poore wretch: a poore Chippochia, ha!st not slept to night? would he not (a naughty man) let it sleepe: a bug-beare take him. One knocks.

Cres. Did not I tell you? would he were knockt i'th' head. Who's that at doore? good Vackle goe and see.

My Lord, come you againe into my Chamber:

You smile and mocke me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha.

Cres. Come you are deceiu'd, I thinke of no such thing.
How earnestly they knocke: pray you come in. Knocks.

Pand. Who's there? what's the matter? will you beate downe the doore? How now, what's the matter?

Aene. Good morrow Lord, good morrow.

Pand. Who's there my Lord Aeneas? by my troth I knew you not: what newes with you so early?

Aene. Is not Prince Troilus here?

Pand. Here? what should he doe here?

Aene. Come he is here, my Lord, doe not deny him:

It doth import him much to speake with me.

Pand. Is he here say you? tis more then I know, Ile be sworne: For my owne part I came in late: what should he doe here?

Aene. Who, nay then: Come, come, youle doe him wrong, ere yare ware: youle be so true to him, to be false to him: Doe not you know of him, but yet goe fetch him hither, goe.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. How now, what's the matter?

Aene. My Lord, I scarce haue leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash: there is at hand,

Paris your brother, and Diophras,

The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor:

Deliu'd to vs, and for him forth-with,

Ere the first sacrifice, within this houre,

We must giue vp to Diomed's hand

The Lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it concluded so?

Aene. By Priamus, and the generall state of Troy,

They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my atchievements mocke me;

I will goe meete them: and my Lord Aeneas,

We met by chance; you did not finde me here.

Aene. Good, good, my Lord, the secrets of nature

Haue not more gift in taciturnitie. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pand. Is't possible? no sooner got but lost: the diuell take Antenor; the yong Prince will goe mad: a plague vpon Antenor; I would they had brok's necke.

Cres. How now? what's the matter? who was here?

Pand. Ah, ha!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? wher's my Lord?
gone? tell me sweet Vackle, what's the matter?

Pand. Would I were as deepe vnder the earth as I am aboue.

Cres. O the gods! what's the matter?

Pand. Prythee get thee in: would thou had't nere been borne; I knew thou would't be his death. O poore Gentleman: a plague vpon Antenor.

Cres. Good

Troilus and Cressida.

Cres. Good Vnckle I beseech you, on my knees, I beseech you what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone wench, thou must be gone; thou art chang'd for Antenor: thou must to thy Father, and be gone from Troilus: 'twill be his death: 'twill be his baine, he cannot beare it.

Cres. O you immortall gods! I will not goe.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not Vnckle: I haue forgot my Father: I know no touch of consanguinitie: No kin, no loue, no blood, no soule, so neere me, As the sweet Troilus: O you gods diuine! Make Cressida name the very crowne of falsehood! If euer she leaue Troilus: time, orce and death, Do to this body what extremitie you can; But the strong base and building of my loue, Is as the very Center of the earth, Drawing all things to it. I will goe in and weepe.

Pan. Doe, doe.

Cres. Teare my bright heire, and scratch my praised cheekes, Cracke my cleere voyce with sobs, and breake my heart With sounding Troilus. I will not goe from Troy. Exeunt.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Aeneas, Deiphobus, Antenor and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the houre prefix Offer deliuerie to this valiant Greeke Comes fast vpon: good my brother Troilus, Tell you the Lady what she is to doe, And haue her to the purpose.

Troy. Walke into her house: Ile bring her to the Grecian presently; And to his hand, when I deliuer her, Think it an Altar, and thy brother Troilus A Priest, there offering to it his heart.

Par. I know what 'tis to loue, And would, as I shall pittie, I could helpe. Please you walke in, my Lords. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation? The griefe is true, full perfect that I taste, And no lesse in a sence as strong As that which causeth it. How can I moderate it? If I could temporise with my affection, Or brew it to a weake and colder pallat, The like alaiment could I giue my griefe: My loue admits no qualifying crosse; Enter Troilus. No more my griefe, in such a precious losse.

Pan. Here, here, here, he comes, a sweet ducky.

Cres. O Troilus, Troilus!

Pan. What a paire of spectacles is here? let me embrace too: oh harr, as the goodly saying is; O heart, heauie heart, why sighst thou without breaking? where he answers againe; because thou canst not ease thy smart by friendship, nor by speaking: there was neuer a truer time; let vs cast away nothing, for we may liue to haue neede of such a Verse: we see it, we see it: how now Lambs?

Troy. Cressida: I loue thee in so strange a puritie; That the blest gods, as angry with my fancie, More bright in zeale, then the deuotion which Cold lips blow to their Deities: take thee from me.

Cres. Haue the gods enuie?

Pan. I, I, I, 'tis too plaine a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must goe from Troy? Troy. A hatefull truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Troy. From Troy, and Troilus.

Cres. Ist possible?

Troy. And sodainely; where iniurie of chance Puts backe leaue-taking, iustles roughly by All time of pause; rudely beguiles our lips Of all reioyndure: forcibly preuents Our lockt embrasures; strangles our deare vowes, Euen in the birth of our owne laboring breath. We two, that with so many thousand sighes Did buy each other, must poorely sell our selues, With the rude breuitie and discharge of our Iniurious time; now with a robbers haste Crams his rich theuerie vp, he knowes not how. As many farwels as be stars in heauen, With distinct breath, and consign'd kisses to them, He fumbles vp into a loose adieu; And scants vs with a single famish kisse, Distasting with the salt of broken teares. Enter Aeneas.

Aeneas within. My Lord, is the Lady ready?

Troy. Harke, you are call'd: some say the genius so Cries, come to him that instantly must dye. Bid them haue patience: she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my teares? raine, to lay this winde, or my heart will be blowne vp by the root.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Troy. No remedy.

Cres. A wofull Cressida 'mongst the merry Greekes.

Troy. When shall we see againe?

Troy. Here me my loue: be thou but true of heart.

Cres. I true? how now? what wicked deeme is this?

Troy. Nay, we must vse expostulation kindly, For it is parting from vs:

I speake not, be thou true, as fearing thee:

For I will throw my Gloue to deare himselfe,

That there's no maculation in thy heart:

But be thou true, say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation: be thou true,

And I will see thee.

Cres. O you shall be expos'd, my Lord to dangers As infinite, as imminent: but Ile be true.

Troy. And Ile grow friend with danger;

Weare this Sleeue.

Cres. And you this Gloue.

When shall I see you?

Troy. I will corrupt the Grecian Centinels,

To giue thee nightly visitation.

But yet be true.

Cres. O heauens: be true againe?

Troy. Heare why I speake it; Loue:

The Grecian youths are full of qualitie,

Their louing well compos'd, with guift of nature,

Flawing and swelling ore with Arts and exercise:

How nouelties may moue, and parts with persen.

Alas, a kinde of godly ielousie;

Which I beseech you call a vertuous sinne:

Makes me affraid.

Cres. O heauens, you loue me not!

Troy. Dye I a villaine then:

In this I doe not call your faith in question

So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,

Nor heele the high Laolt; nor sweeten talke;

Nor play at subtil games; faire vertues all;

Troilus and Cressida.

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant: But I can tell that in each grace of these,

There lurkes a still and dumb-dilcoursue diuell,

That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Doe you thinke I will:

Troy. No, but something may be done that we wil not:

And sometimes we are diuels to our selues,

When we will tempt the frailtie of our powers,

Presuming on their changefull potencie.

Aeneas within. Nay, good my Lord?

Troy. Come kisse, and let vs part.

Paris within. Brother Troilus?

Troy. Good brother come you hither,

And bring Aeneas and the Grecian with you. Exit.

Cres. My Lord, will you be true?

Troy. Who I? alas it is my vice, my fault:

Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,

I, with great truth, catch meere simplicitie;

Whil'ft some with cunning guild their copper crownes,

With truth and plainnesse I doe weare mine bare:

Enter the Greekes.

Fear not my truth; the mortall of my wit

Is plaine and true, ther's all the reach of it.

Welcome fir Diomed, here is the Lady

Which for Antenor, we deliuer you.

At the port (Lord) Ile giue her to thy hand,

And by the way possesse thee what she is.

Entreate her faire; and by my soule, faire Greeke,

If ere thou stand at mercy of my Sword,

Name Cressida, and thy life shall be as safe

As Priamus is in Illion?

Diom. Faire Lady Cressida,

So please you saue the thanks this Prince expects:

The lustre in your eye, heauen in your cheek,

Pleades your faire visage, and to Diomed

You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Troy. Grecian, thou do'st not vse me curteously,

To shame the scale of my petition towards,

I praing her. I tell thee Lord of Greece:

Shee is as farre high soaring o're thy praies,

As thou vnworthy to be call'd her seruant:

I charge thee vse her well, euen for my charge:

For by the dreadfull Pinto, if thou do'st not,

(Though the great bulke Achilles be thy guard)

Ile cut t' h- throat.

Diom. Oh be not mou'd Prince Troilus;

Let me be priuileg'd by my place and message,

To be a speaker free? when I am hence,

Ile answer to my lust: and know my Lord;

Ile nothing doe on charge: to her owne worth

She shall be priz'd: but that you say, be't so;

Ile speake it in my spirit and honor, no.

Troy. Come to the Port. Ile tell thee Diomed,

This braue, shall oft make thee to hide thy head;

Lady, giue me your hand, and as we walke,

To our owne selues bend we our needefull talke.

Sound Trumpet.

Par. Harke, Hectors Trumpet.

Aeneas. How haue we spent this morning

The Prince must thinke me tardy and remisse,

That swore to ride before him in the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus fault: come, come, to field with him. Exeunt.

Diom. Let vs make ready straight.

Aeneas. Yea, with a Bridegroomes fresh alacritie

Let vs addresse to read on Hectors heeles:

The glory of our Troy doth this day lye

On his faire worth, and single Chualrie.

Enter Ajax armed, Achilles, Patroclus, Agamemnon, Menelaus, Vlisses, Nestor, Calcas, &c.

Aga. Here art thou in appointment fresh and faire, Anticipating time. With starting courage, Giue with thy Trumpet a loud note to Troy Thou dreadfull Ajax, that the appauled aire May pierce the head of the great Combatant, And hale him hither.

Aia. Thou, Trumpet, ther's my purse; Now cracke thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe: Blow villaine, till thy spher'd Bias cheek Out-swell the collicke of puffed Aquilon: Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood: Thou blowest for Hector.

Vliss. No Trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early dayes.

Aga. Is not yong Diomed with Calcas daughter?

Vliss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gate,

Heriles on the toe: that spirit of his

In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Aga. Is this the Lady Cressida?

Diom. Euen she.

Aga. Most deeply welcome to the Greekes, sweete Lady.

Nest. Our Generall doth salute you with a kisse.

Vliss. Yet is the kindenesse but particular, 'twere better she were kist in generall.

Nest. And very courtly counsell: Ile begin. So much for Nestor.

Achil. Ile take that winter from your lips faire Lady

Achilles bids you welcome.

Mene. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patro. But that's no argument for kissing now;

For thus pop't Paris in his hardiment.

Vliss. Oh deadly gall, and theame of all our scornes,

For which weloofe our heads, to gild his hornes.

Patro. The first was Menelaus kisse, this mine:

Patroclus kisses you.

Mene. Oh this is trim.

Patro. Paris and I kisse evermore for him.

Mene. Ile haue my kisse fir: Lady by your leaue.

Cres. In kissing doe you render, or receiue.

Patro. Both take and giue.

Cres. Ile make my match to liue,

The kisse you take is better then you giue: therefore no kisse.

Mene. He giue you boote, Ile giue you three for one.

Cres. You are an odde man, giue euen, or giue none.

Mene. An odde man Lady, eury man is odde.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for you know 'tis true,

That you are odde, and he is euen with you.

Mene. You fillip me a th' head.

Cres. No, ile be sworne.

Vliss. It were no match, your naile against his horne:

May I sweete Lady beg a kisse of you?

Cres. You may.

Vliss. I doe desire it.

Cres. Why begge then?

Vliss. Why then for Venus sake, giue me a kisse:

When Hellen is a maide againe, and his

Cres. I am your debtor, claime it when 'tis due.

¶ 93

Vliss. Neuer's

Troilus and Cressida.

Ulys. Neuer's my day, and then a kisse of you.
Diom. Lady a word, Ile bring you to your Father.
Nest. A woman of quicke sence.
Ulys. Fic, sic, vpon her:
 Ther's a language in her eye, her cheek, her lip;
 Nay, her foot speakes, her wanton spirit looks out
 At every ioynt, and motiue of her body:
 Oh these encounterers so glib of tongue,
 That giue a coasting welcome ere it comes;
 And wide vnclasp the tables of their thoughts,
 To every tickling reader: set them downe,
 For sluttish spoiles of opportunitie;
 And daughters of the game. Exeunt.
Enter all of Troy, Hector, Paris, Aeneas, Helenus and Attendants. Flourish.
All. The Troians Trumpet.
Agas. Yonder comes the troope.
Aene. Haile all you state of Greece: what shalbe done
 To him that victory commands? or doe you purpose,
 A victor shall be knowne: will you the Knights
 Shall to the edge of all extremitie
 Pursue each other, or shall be diuided
 By any voyce, or order of the field: Hector bad aske?
Agas. Which way would Hector haue it?
Aene. He cares not, heele obey conditions.
Agas. 'Tis done like Hector, but secretly done,
 A little proudly, and great deale disprizing
 The Knight oppos'd.
Aene. If not Achilles sir, what is your name?
Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.
Aene. Therefore Achilles: but what ere, know this,
 In the extremity of great and little:
 Valour and pride excell themselves in Hector;
 The one almost as infinite as all;
 The other blanke as nothing: weigh him well:
 And that which looks like pride, is curtesie:
 This Ajax is halfe made of Hector's blood;
 In loue whereof, halfe Hector staies at home:
 Halfe heart, halfe hand, halfe Hector, comes to seeke
 This blended Knight, halfe Trojan, and halfe Greeke.
Achil. A maiden battaile then? O I perceiue you.
Agas. Here is sir, Diomed: goe gentle Knight, Stand by our Ajax: as you and Lord Aeneas
 Consent vpon the order of their fight,
 So be it: either to the vttermost,
 Or else a breach: the Combatants being kin,
 Halfe stints their strife, before their strokes begin.
Ulys. They are oppos'd already.
Agas. What Trojan is that same that lookes so heauy?
Ulys. The youngest Sonne of Priam;
 A true Knight; they call him Troilus;
 Not yet mature, yet matchlesse, firme of word,
 Speaking in deedes, and deedeslesse in his tongue;
 Not soone prouok't, nor being prouok't, soone calm'd;
 His heart and hand both open, and both free:
 For what he has, he giues; what thinks, he shewes;
 Yet giues he not till iudgement guide his bounty,
 Nor dignifies an impaire thought with breath:
 Mainly as Hector, but more dangerous;
 For Hector in his blaze of wrath subscribes
 To tender objects; but he, in heate of action,
 Is more vindicative then ialous loue.
 They call him Troilus; and on him erect,
 A second hope, as fairely built as Hector.
 Thus saies Aeneas, one that knowes the youth,
 Euen to his inches: and with priuate soule,

Did in great Illion thus translate him to me.
Agas. They are in action. Alarm.
Nest. Now Ajax hold thine owne.
Troy. Hector, thou sleepest, awake thee.
Agas. His blowes are wel dispos'd there Ajax. trumpets
Diom. You must no more. cease.
Aene. Princes enough, so please you.
Aia. I am not warme yet, let vs fight againe.
Diom. As Hector pleases.
Hect. Why then will I no more:
 Thou art great Lord, my Fathers sisters Sonne;
 A cousin german to great Priams seede:
 The obligation of our blood forbids
 A gorie emulation 'twixt vs twaine:
 Were thy commixion, Greeke and Trojan so,
 That thou could'st say, this hand is Grecian all,
 And this is Trojan: the sinewes of this Legge,
 All Greeke, and this all Troy: my Mothers blood
 Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
 Bounds in my fathers: by Ioue multipotent,
 Thou should'st not beare from me a Greekish member
 Wherein my sword had not impresse made
 Of our ranke feud: but the iust gods gainesay,
 That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
 My sacred Aunt, should by my mortall sword
 Be drained. Let me embrace thee Ajax:
 By him that thunders, thou hast lustie Armes;
Hector would haue them fall vpon him thus,
 Cozen, all honor to thee.
Aia. I thanke thee Hector:
 Thou art too gentle, and too free a man:
 I came to kill thee Cozen, and beare hence
 A great addition, earned in thy death.
Hect. Not Neoptolymus so mirable,
 On whose bright crest, same with her lowd ft (O yes)
 Cries, This is he; could'st promise to himselfe,
 A thought of added honor, torne from Hector.
Aene. There is expectation here from both the sides,
 What further you will doe?
Hect. Weele answer it:
 The issue is embracement: Ajax, farewell.
Aia. If I might in entreaties finde successe,
 As feld I haue the chance; I would desire
 My famous Cousin to our Grecian Tents.
Diom. 'Tis Agamemnon with, and great Achilles
 Doth long to see vnarm'd the valiant Hector.
Hect. Aeneas, call my brother Troilus to me:
 And signifie this louing interview
 To the expecters of our Trojan part:
 Desire them home. Giue me thy hand, my Cousin:
 I will goe eate with thee, and see your Knights.
Enter Agamemnon and the rest.
Aia. Great Agamemnon comes to meete vs here.
Hect. The worthiest of them, tell me name by name:
 But for Achilles, mine owne serching eyes
 Shall finde him by his large and portly size.
Agas. Worthy of Armes: as welcome as to one:
 That would be rid of such an enemy.
 But that's no welcome: vnderstand more cleere
 What's past, and what's to come, is strew'd with huskes,
 And formelesse ruine of obliuion:
 But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
 Strain'd purely from all hollow bias drawing:
 Bids thee with most diuine integritie,
 From heart of very heart, great Hector welcome.
Hect. I thanke thee most imperious Agamemnon. Agas. My

Troilus and Cressida.

Agas. My well-fam'd Lord of Troy, no lesse to you.
Men. Let me confirme my Princely brothers greeting,
 You brace of warlike Brothers, welcome hither.
Hect. Who must we answer?
Aene. The Noble Meneclaus.
Hect. O, you my Lord, by Mars his gauntlet thanks,
 Mocke not, that I affect th'vntraded Oath,
 Your quondam wife sweares still by Venus Gloue
 Shee's well, but bad me not commend her to you.
Men. Name her nor now sir, she's a deadly Theame.
Hect. O pardon, I offend.
Nest. I haue (thou gallant Trojan) scene thee oft Labouring for destiny, make cruell way
 Through ranks of Greekish youth: and I haue seen thee
 As hot as Perseus, spurre thy Phrygian Steed,
 And scene thee scorning forfeits and subduments,
 When thou hast hung thy aduanced sword i'th'ayre,
 Not letting it decline, on the declined:
 That I haue said vnto my standers by,
 Loe Iupiter is yonder, dealing life.
 And I haue scene thee pause, and take thy breath,
 When that a ring of Greekes haue hem'd thee in,
 Like an Olympian wrestling. This haue I scene,
 Bathis thy countenance (still lockt in Steele)
 I neuer saw till now. I knew thy Grandfire,
 And once fought with him; he was a Souldier good,
 But by great Mars, the Capitaine of vs all,
 Neuer like thee. Let an oldman embrace thee,
 And (worthy Warriour) welcome to our Tents.
Aene. 'Tis the old Nestor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee good old Chronicle,
 That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time:
 Most reuerend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.
Nest. I would my armes could match thee in contention
 As they contend with thee in courtesie.
Hect. I would they could.
Nest. Had by this white beard I'd fight with thee to morrow. Well, welcom, welcome: I haue seen the time.
Ulys. I wonder now, how yonder City stands,
 When we haue here her Base and pillar by vs.
Hect. I know your fauour Lord Ulysses well.
 Ah sir, there's many a Greeke and Trojan dead,
 Since first I saw your selfe, and Diomed
 In Illion, on your Greekish Embassie.
Ulys. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue,
 My prophesie is but halfe his iourney yet;
 For yonder wals that perily front your Towne,
 Yond Towers, whose wanton tops do buse the clouds,
 Most kisse their owne feet.
Hect. I must not belecue you:
 There they stand yet: and modestly I thinke,
 The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
 A drop of Grecian blood: the end crownes all,
 And that old common Arbitrator, Time,
 Will one day end it.
Ulys. So to him we leaue it.
 Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome;
 After the Generall, I beseech you next
 To Feast with me, and see me at my Tent.
Achil. I shall forestall thee Lord Ulysses, thou:
 Now Hector I haue fed mine eyes on thee,
 I haue with exact view perus'd thee Hector,
 And quoted ioynt by ioynt.
Hect. Is this Achilles?
Achil. I am Achilles.
Hect. Stand faire I prythee, let me looke on thee.

Achil. Behold thy fill.
Hect. Nay, I haue done already: I shall see thee
Achil. Thou art to breefe, I will the second time,
 As I would buy thee, view thee, limbe by limbe.
Hect. O like a Booke of sport thou'lt read me ere:
 But there's more in me then thou vnderstand'st.
 Why dost thou so oppresse me with thine eye?
Achil. Tell me you Heauens, in which part of his body
 Shall I destroy him? Whether there, or there, or there,
 That I may giue the locall wound a name,
 And make distinct the very breach, where our
Hectors great spirit shew. Answer me heauens.
Hect. It would discredit the blest Gods, proud man,
 To answer such a question: Stand againe:
 Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,
 As to prenominate in nice coniecture
 Where thou wilt hit me dead?
Achil. I tell thee yea.
Hect. Wert thou the Oracle to tell me so,
 I'd not beleue thee: henceforth guard thee well,
 For Ile not kill thee there, nor there, nor there,
 But by the forge that stythied Mars his helme,
 Ile kill thee euery where, yea, ere and ere.
 You wisest Grecians, pardon me this bragge,
 His insolence drawes folly from my lips,
 But Ile endeavour deeds to match these words,
 Or may I neuer—
Aia. Do not chafe thee Cozin:
 And you Achilles, let these threats alone
 Till accident, or purpose bring you too't.
 You may euery day enough of Hector
 If you haue stomacke. The generall state I feare,
 Can scarce intreat you to be odde with him.
Hect. I pray you let vs see you in the field,
 We haue had pelting Warres since you refus'd
 The Grecians cause.
Achil. Dost thou intreat me Hector?
 To morrow do I meete thee fell as death,
 To night, all Friends.
Hect. Thy hand vpon that match.
Agas. First, all you Peeres of Greece go to my Tent,
 There in the full conuie you: Afterwards,
 As Hectors leysure, and your bounties shall Concur together, feuerally intreat him,
 Beate lowd the Taborins, let the Trumpets blow,
 That this great Souldier may his welcome know. Exeunt.
Troy. My Lord Ulysses, tell me I beseech you,
 In what place of the Field doth Calchas keepe?
Ulys. At Meneclaus Tent, most Princely Troilus,
 There Diomed doth feast with him to night,
 Who neither looks on heauen, nor on earth,
 But giues all gaze and bent of amorous view
 On the faire Cressid.
Troy. Shall I (sweet Lord) be bound to thee so much,
 After we part from Agamemnon's Tent,
 To bring me thither?
Ulys. You shall command me sir:
 As gentle tell me, of what Honour was
 This Cressida in Troy, had she no Louer there
 That wailes her absence?
Troy. O sir, to such as boasting shew their scarres,
 A mocke is due: will you walke on my Lord?
 She was belou'd, she lou'd; she is, and dooth;
 But still sweet Loue is food for Fortunes tooth. Exeunt.
Enter Achilles, and Patroclus.
Achil. Ile heat his blood with Greekish wine to night,
 Which

Troilus and Cressida.

Which with my Cemitar Ile coole to morrow:

Patroclus, let vs Feast him to the night.

Pat. Heere comes Thersites. Enter Thersites.

Achil. How now, thou core of Envy?

Thou crusty batch of Nature, what's the newes?

Ther. Why thou picture of what thou seem'st, & I doll of Ideot-worshippers, here's a Letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, Fragment?

Ther. Why thou full dish of Foole, from Troy.

Pat. Who keeps the Tent now?

Ther. The Surgeons box, or the Patients wound.

Pat. Well said aduersity, and what need these tricks?

Ther. Prythee be silent boy, I profit not by thy talke, thou art thought to be Achilles male Varlot.

Patro. Male Varlot you Rogue? What's that?

Ther. Why his masculine Whore. Now the rotten diseases of the South, guts, griping Ruptures, Catarres, Loades a grauell i'th' backe, Lethargies, cold Palfies, and the like, take and take againe, such preposterous discoueries.

Pat. Why thou damnable box of enuy thou, what mean'st thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Pat. Why no, you ruinous But, you whorson indistinguishable Curte.

Ther. No? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle, immateriall skiene of Sleyd filke; thou Greene Sarcenet flap for a fore eye, thou tassell of a Prodigals purse thou: Ah how the poore world is pestred with such water-flies, diminutives of Nature.

Pat. Our gall.

Ther. Finch Egge.

Ach. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite

From my great purpose in to morrowes battell:

Heere is a Letter from Queene Hecuba,

A token from her daughter, my faire Loue,

Both taxing me, and gaging me to keepe

An Oath that I haue sworne. I will not breake it,

Fall Greekes, faile Fame, Honor or go, or stay,

My maior vow lyes heere; this Ile obey:

Come, come Thersites, helpe to trim my Tent,

This night in banquetting must all be spent.

Away Patroclus. Exit.

Ther. With too much blood, and too little Brain, these two may run mad: but if with too much braine, and too little blood, they do, Ile be a curer of madmen. Heere's

Agamemnon, an honest fellow enough, and one that loues

Quailes, but he has not so much Braine as care-wax; and the goodly transformation of Jupiter there his Brother, the Bull, the primatiue Statue, and oblique memoriall of Cuckolds, a thrifty shoeing-horne in a chaine, hanging at his Brothers legges, to what forme but that he is, shold

wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turne him too: to an Ass were nothing; hee is both Ass and Oxe; to an Oxe were nothing, hee is both Oxe and Ass:

to be a Dogge, a Mule, a Cat, a Fitchew, a Toade, a Lizard, an Owle, a Puttocke, or a Herring without a Roe,

I would not care: but to be Menelaus, I would conspire against Destiny. Aske me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites: for I care not to bee the lowse of a Lazar, so I were not Menelaus. Hoy-day, spirits and fires.

Enter Hektor, Ajax, Agamemnon, Vlisses, Ne-

stor, Diomed, with Lights.

Ag. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No yander 'tis, there where we see the light.

Hekt. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Enter Achilles.

Vliss. Heere comes himselfe to guide you?

Achil. Welcome braue Hektor, welcome Princes all.

Agam. So now faire Prince of Troy, I bid goodnight.

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hekt. Thanks, and goodnight to the Greeks general.

Men. Goodnight my Lord.

Hekt. Goodnight sweet Lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: sweet quoth-a? sweet sinke, sweet sure.

Achil. Goodnight and welcom, both at once, to those that go, or tarry.

Ag. Goodnight.

Achil. Old Nestor carries, and you too Diomed, keepe Hektor company an houre, or two.

Dio. I cannot Lord, I haue important businesse,

The tide whereof is now, goodnight great Hektor.

Hekt. Give me your hand.

Vliss. Follow his Torch, he goes to Chalcas Tent,

Ile keepe you company.

Troy. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hekt. And so good night.

Achil. Come, come, enter my Tent. Exit.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted Rogue, a most vnjust Knaue; I will no more trust him when hee leeres, then I will a Serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth & promise, like Brabler the Hound; but when he performs, Astronomers foretell it, that it is prodigious, there will come some change: the Sunne borrowes of the Moone when Diomed keepe his word. I will rather leaue to see Hektor, then not to dogge him: they say,

he keepe a Trojan Drab, and vses the Traitour Chalcas his Tent. Ile after— Nothing but Lecherie? All incontinent Varlets. Exit.

Enter Diomed.

Dio. What are you vp here ho? speake?

Chal. Who calls?

Dio. Diomed, Chalcas (I thinke) wher's your Daughter?

Chal. She comes to you.

Enter Troilus and Vlisses.

Vliss. Stand where the Torch may not discouer vs.

Enter Cressida.

Troy. Cressida comes forth to him.

Dio. How now my charge?

Cres. Now my sweet gardian: harke a word with you.

Troy. Yea, so familiar?

Vliss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may finde her, if he can take her life: she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Cal. Remember? yes.

Dio. Nay, but doe then; and let your minde be coupled with your words.

Troy. What should she remember?

Vliss. List?

Cres. Sweete hony Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery.

Dio. Nay then.

Cres. Ile tell you what.

Dio. Fo, fo, come tell a pin, you are a forsworne.

Cres. In faith I cannot: what would you haue me do?

Ther. A iugling trick, to be seerely open.

Dio. What did you sweare you would bestow on me?

Cres. I prethee do not hold me to mine oath,

Bid me doe nor any thing but that sweete Greeke.

Dio. Good

Troilus and Cressida.

Dio. Good night.

Troy. Hold, patience.

Vliss. How now Trojan?

Cres. Diomed.

Dio. No, no, good night: Ile be your foole no more.

Troy. Thy better must.

Cres. Harke one word in your eare.

Troy. O plague and madnesse!

Vliss. You are moued Prince, let vs depart I pray you,

Left your displeasure should enlarge it selfe

To wrathfull tearmes: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly: I beseech you goe.

Troy. Behold, I pray you.

Vliss. Nay, good my Lord goe off:

You flow to great distraction: come my Lord?

Troy. I pray thee stay?

Vliss. You haue not patience, come.

Troy. I pray you stay? by hell and heil torments,

I will not speake a word.

Dio. And so good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Troy. Doth that grieue thee? O withered truth!

Vliss. Why, how now Lord?

Troy. By Ioue I will be patient.

Cres. Gardian? why Greeke?

Dio. Fo, fo, adew, you paster.

Cres. In faith I doe not: come hither once againe.

Vliss. You shake my Lord at something; will you goe?

you will breake out.

Troy. She strokes his cheek.

Vliss. Come, come.

Troy. Nay stay, by Ioue I will not speake a word.

There is betwene my will, and all offences,

A guard of patience; stay a little while.

Ther. How the duell Luxury with his fat rumpe and potato finger, tickles these together: fyre lechery, fyre.

Dio. But will you then?

Cres. In faith I will lo; neuer trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. Ile fetch you one. Exit.

Vliss. You haue sworne patience.

Troy. Feare me not sweete Lord.

I will not be my selfe, nor haue cognition

Of what I feele: I am all patience. Enter Cressida.

Ther. Now the pledge, now, now, now.

Cres. Here Diomed, keepe this Sleeue.

Troy. O beautie! where is thy Faith?

Vliss. My Lord.

Troy. I will be patient, outwardly I will.

Cres. You looke vpon that Sleeue? behold it well:

Helou'd me: O false wench: giue't me againe.

Dio. Whose was't?

Cres. It is no matter now I haue't againe.

I will not meete with you to morrow night:

I prythee Diomed visite me no more.

Ther. Now she sharpens: well said Whetstone.

Dio. I shall haue it.

Cres. What, this?

Dio. I that.

Cres. O all you gods! O prettie, prettie pledge;

Thy Maister now lies thinking in his bed

Of thee and me, and sighes, and takes my Gloue,

And giues memociall daintie kisses to it;

As I kisse thee.

Dio. Nay, doe not snatch it from me.

Cres. He that takes that, rakes my heart withall.

Dio. I had your heart before, this followes it.

Troy. I did sweare patience.

Cres. You shall not haue it Diomed; faith you shall not:

Ile giue you something else.

Dio. I will haue this: whose was it?

Cres. It is no matter.

Dio. Come tell me whose it was?

Cres. 'Twas one that lou'd me better then you will.

But now you haue it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it?

Cres. By all Diana waiting women yond:

And by her selfe, I will not tell you whose.

Dio. To morrow will I weare it on my Helme,

And grieue his spirit that dares not challenge it.

Troy. Wert thou the diuell, and wor't it on thy horne,

It should be challeng'd.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past; and yet it is not:

I will not keepe my word.

Dio. Why then farewell,

Thou neuer shalt mocke Diomed againe.

Cres. You shall not goe: one cannot speake a word,

But it strait starts you.

Dio. I doe not like this fooling.

Ther. Nor I by Pluto; but that that likes not me, pleases me best.

Dio. What shall I come? the houre.

Cres. I, come: O Ioue! doe, come: I shall be plagu'd.

Dio. Farewell till then. Exit.

Cres. Good night: I prythee come:

Troilus farewell; one eye yet looks on thee;

But with my heart, the other eye, doth see.

Ah poore our sexe; this fault in vs I finde:

The errour of our eye, directs our minde.

What errour leads, must erre: O then conclude,

Mindes swai'd by eyes, are full of turpitude. Exit.

Ther. A prooue of strength she could not publish more;

Vnlesse she say, my minde is now turn'd whore.

Vliss. Al's done my Lord.

Troy. It is.

Vliss. Why stay we then?

Troy. To make a recordation to my soule

Of euery syllable that here was spoke;

But if I tell how these two did coact;

Shall I not lye, in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart:

An esperance so obstinately strong,

That doth inuert that test of eyes and eares;

As if those organs had deceptious functions,

Created onely to calumniate.

Was Cressida here?

Vliss. I cannot coniure Trojan.

Troilus and Cressida.

If soules guide vowes; if vowes are sanctimonie;
If sanctimonie be the gods delight:
If there be rule in vniuersitie;
This is not she: O madnesse of discourse!
That cause iers vp, with, and against thy selfe
By foule authoritie: where reason can reuolt
Without perdition, and losse assume all reason,
Without reuolt. This is; and is not Cressid:
Within my soule, there doth conduce a fight
Of this strange nature, that a thing inseperate,
Diuides more wider then the skie and earth:
And yet the spacious bredth of this diuision,
Admits no Orifex for a point as subtle,
As Ariachnes broken woofe to enter:
Instance, O instance! strong as Plutoes gates:
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heauen;
Instance, O instance, strong as heauen it selfe:
The bonds of heauen are slip, dissolud, and loos'd,
And with another knot fure finger tied,
The factions of her faith, ors of her loue:
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greazie reliques,
Of her ore-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.
Ulys. May worthy Troilus be halfe attached
With that which here his passion doth expresse?
Troy. I Greeke: and that shall be divulged well
In Characters, as red as Mars his heare
Inflam'd with Venus: neuer did yong man fancy
With so eternall, and so fixt a soule.
Harke Greek: as much I doe Cressid loue;
So much by weight, hate I her Diomed.
That Sleeue is mine, that heele beare in his Helme:
Were it a Caske compos'd by Vulcans skill,
My Sword should bite it: Not the dreadfull spout,
Which Shipmen doe the Hurricano call,
Constring'd in masse by the almighty Fenne,
Shall dizzle with more clamour Neptunes care.
In his discent; then shall my prompted sword,
Falling on Diomed.
Ther. Heele tickle it for his concupie.
Troy. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false:
Let all vntruths stand by thy stained name,
And theyle seeme glorious.
Ulys. O containe your selfe:
Your passion drawes eares hither.

Enter Aeneas.
Aeneas. I haue bene seeking you this houre my Lord:
Hector by this is arming him in Troy.
Ajax your Guard, staies to conduct you home.
Troy. Haue with you Prince: my courteous Lord adew:
Farewell reuolted faire: and Diomed,
Stand fast, and weare a Caske on thy head.
Ulys. He bring you to the Gates.
Troy. Accept distracted thanks.
Enter Troilus, Aeneas, and Ulysses.
Ther. Would I could meete that roaguer Diomed, I would croke like a Raven: I would bode, I would bode:
Patroclus will giue me any thing for the intelligence of his whore: the Parrot will not doe more for an Almond, then he for a commodious drab: Lechery, lechery, still warres and lechery, nothing else holds fashion, A burning diuell take them.
Enter Hector and Andromache.
And. When was my Lord so much vnghently temper'd,
To stop his eares against admonishment?
Vnarme, vnarme, and doe not fight to day.
Hect. You traine me to offend you: get you gone.

By the euerslasting gods, Ile goe.
And. My dreames will sure proue ominous to the day.
Hect. No more I say.
Cassa. Where is my brother Hector?
And. Here sister, arm'd, and bloody in intent:
Confort with me in loud and deere petition:
pursue we him on knees: for I haue dreamt
Of bloody turbulence; and this whole night
Hath nothing bene but shapers, and formes of slaughter.
Cass. O, 'tis true.
Hect. Ho? bid my Trumpet sound.
Cass. No notes of fallie, for the heauens, sweet brother.
Hect. Begon I say: the gods haue heard me sweare.
Cass. The gods are deafe to hot and peeuish vowes:
They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Then spotted Liuers in the sacrifice.
And. O be perswaded, doe not count it holy,
To hurt by being iust; it is as lawfull:
For we would count giue much to as violent thefts,
And rob in the behalfe of charitie.
Cass. It is the purpose that makes strong the vowe:
But vowes to every purpose must not hold:
Vnarme sweete Hector.
Hect. Hold you still I say:
Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds deere, but the deere man
Holds honor farre more precious, deere, then life.
Enter Troilus.
How now yong man? mean'st thou to fight to day?
And. Cassandra, call my father to perswade.
Exit Cassandra.
Hect. No faith yong Troilus; doste thy harnesse youth.
I am to day ith' vaine of Chiuallries
Let grow thy Sinews till their knots be strong;
And tempt not yet the brushes of the warre.
Vnarme thee, goe; and doubt thou not braue boy,
Ile stand to day, for thee, and me, and Troy.
Troy. Brother, you haue a vice of mercy in you;
Which better fits a Lyon, then a man.
Hect. What vice is that? good Troilus chide me for it.
Troy. When many times the captiue Grecians fals, Euen in the fenne and winde of your false Sword:
You bid them rise, and liue.
Hect. O 'tis faire play.
Troy. Fooles play, by heauen Hector.
Hect. How now? how now?
Troy. For th' loue of all the gods
Let's leaue the Hermit Pitty with our Mothers;
And when we haue our Armors buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride vpon our Swords,
Spur them to ruthfull worke, reine them from ruth.
Hect. Pie sauage, fie.
Troy. Hector, then 'tis warres.
Hect. Troilus, I would not haue you fight to day.
Troy. Who should with-hold me?
Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars,
Beckning with fierie truncheon my retire;
Not Priamus, and Hecuba on knees;
Their eyes ore-galled with recourse of teares;
Nor you my brother, with your true sword drawne
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way:
But by my ruine.
Enter Priam and Cassandra.
Cass. Lay hold vpon him Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy crutch; now if thou loose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning; and all Troy on thee,

Troilus and Cressida.

Fall all together.
Priam. Come Hector, come, goe backe:
Thy wife hath dreamt: thy mother hath had visions;
Cassandra doth foresee; and I my selfe,
Am like a Prophet suddenly enapt,
To tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore come backe.
Hect. Aeneas is a field,
And I do stand engag'd to many Greekes,
Euen in the faith of valour, to appeare
This morning to them.
Priam. I, but thou shalt not goe.
Hect. I must not breake my faith:
You know me dutifull, therefore deare sir,
Let me not shame respect; but giue me leaue
To take that course by your content and voice,
Which you doe here forbid me, Royall Priam.
Cass. O Priam, yeelde not to him.
And. Doe not deere father.
Hect. Andromache I am offended with you:
Vpon the loue you beare me, get you in.
Exit Andromache.
Troy. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girle,
Makes all these bodements.
Cass. O farewell, deere Hector:
Looke how thou diest; looke how thy eye turnes pale:
Looke how thy wounds doth bleed at many vents:
Harke how Troy roares; how Hecuba cries out;
How poore Andromache shrits her dolour forth;
Behold distraction, frenzie, and amazement,
Like wildeffe Antickes one another meete,
And all cry Hector, Hectors dead: O Hector!
Troy. Away, away.
Cass. Farewell: yes, soft: Hector I take my leaue;
Thou dost thy selfe, and all our Troy deceiue.
Exit.
Hect. You are amaz'd, my Liege, at her exclaime:
Goe in and cheere the Towne, weeke forth and fight:
Doe deedes of praise, and tell you them at night.
Priam. Farewell: the gods with safetie stand about thee.
Alarum.
Troy. They are at it, harke: proud Diomed, belecue
I come to loose my arme, or winne my Sleeue.

Enter Pandar.
Pand. Doe you heare my Lord? do you heare?
Troy. What now?
Pand. Here's a Letter come from yond poore girle.
Troy. Let me reade.
Pand. A whorson tislike, a whorson rascally tislike, so troubles me; and the foolish fortune of this girle, and what one thing, what another, that I shall leaue you one of this dayes: and I haue a rheume in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones; that vlesse a man were cur'd,
I cannot tell what to thinke on't. What sayes shee
there?
Troy. Words, words, meere words, no matter from the heart;
Th' effect doth operate another way.
Goe winde to winde, there turne and change together:
My loue with words and errors still she feedes;
But edifies another with her deedes.
Pand. Why, but heare you?
Troy. Hence brother lackie; ignomie and shame
Pursue thy life, and liue aye with thy name.
A Larum. Exeunt.

Enter Therites in excursion.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another, Ile goe looke on: that dissembling abhominable varlet Diomed, has got that same scurvie, doting, foolish yong knaues Sleeue of Troy, there in his Helme: I would faine see them meet; that, that same yong Trojan asse, that loues the whore there, might send that Greekish whore-mai-sterly villaine, with the Sleeue, backe to the dissembling luxurious drabbe, of a Sleeuelesse errant, O th' other side, the pollicie of those craftie swearing rascals; that stole old Mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor: and that same dogfoxe Ulysses is not prou'd worth a Black-berry. They set me vp in pollicy, that mungrell curie Ajax, against that dogge of as bad a kinde, Achilles. And now is the curie
Ajax prouder then the curie Achilles, and will not arme to day. Whereupon, the Grecians began to proclaime barbarisme; and pollicie growes into an ill opinion.
Enter Diomed and Troilus.
Soft, here comes Sleeue, and th' other.
Troy. Flye not: for should'st thou take the River Stix,
I would swim after.
Diom. Thou dost miscall retire:
I doe not flye; but aduantageous care
Withdrew me from the oddes of multitude:
Haue at thee?
Ther. Hold thy whore Grecian: now for thy whore Troian: Now the Sleeue, now the Sleeue.
Enter Hector.
Hect. What art thou Greek? art thou for Hectors match?
Art thou of blood, and honour?
Ther. No, no: I am a rascall: a scurvie railing knaue:
a very filthy roaguer.
Hect. I doe beleue thee, liue.
Ther. God a mercy, that thou wilt beleue me; but a plague breake thy necke—for frightening me: what's become of the wenching rogues? I thinke they haue swallowed one another. I would laugh at that miracle—yet in a sort, lecherie eates it selfe: Ile seeke them.
Exit.
Enter Diomed and Servants.
Diom. Goe, goe, my seruant, take thou Troilus Horfes;
Present the faire Steede to my Lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my seruice to her beauty;
Tell her, I haue chastis'd the amorous Trojan.
And am her Knight by prooffe.
Ser. I goe my Lord. Enter Agamemnon.
Agam. Renew, renew, the fierce Polidamus
Hath beate downe Menon: bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner.
And stands Callosus-wife wauing his beame,
Vpon the pasted courses of the Kings:
Epistropus and Cedus, Polixenes is slaine;
Amphimachus, and Thous deadely hurt;
Patroclus tane or slaine, and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised; the dreadfull Sagittary
Appaulls our numbers, haste we Diomed
To re-enforcement, or we perish all.
Enter Nestor.
Nest. Goe beare Patroclus body to Achilles,
And bid the snail-pac'd Ajax arme for shame;
There is a thousand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathe his Horfe,
And there lacks worke: and he's there a foote,
And there they flye or dye, like scaled sculs,

Before

Troilus and Cressida.

Before the belching Whale; then is he yonder,
And there the fraying Greekes ripe for his edge,
Fall downe before him, like the mowers swath;
Here, there, and every where, he leaues and takes;
Dexteritie so obaying appetite,
That what he will, he does, and does so much,
That prooffe is call'd impossibility.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. Oh, courage, courage Princes: great Achilles
Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance;
Patroclus wounds haue rouz'd his drowzie blood,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
That noselesse, handlelesse, backt and chipt, come to him;
Crying on Hektor. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And foames at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it:
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to day,
Mad and fantastick execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himselfe,
With such a carelessse force, and forcelesse care,
As if that luck in very sight of cunning, bad him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Aia. Troilus, thou coward Troilus. Exit.

Dio. I, there, there.

Nest. So, so, we draw together. Exit.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hektor?

Come, come, thou boy-queller, shew thy face:

Know what it is to meete Achilles angry.

Hektor, where's Hektor? I will none but Hektor. Exit.

Enter Ajax.

Aia. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, shew thy head.

Enter Diomed.

Dio. Troilus, I say, where's Troilus?

Aia. What would'st thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Aia. Were I the General,

Thou should'st haue my office,

Ere that correction: Troilus I say, what Troilus?

Enter Troilus.

Troy. Oh traitour Diomed!

Turne thy false face thou traitor,

And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse.

Dio. Ha, art thou there?

Aia. He fight with him alone, stand Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize, I will not looke vpon.

Troy. Come both you cōging Greekes, haue at you

Exit Troilus.

Enter Hektor.

Hekt. Yea Troilus? O well fought my yongest Brother.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now doe I see thee; haue at thee Hektor.

Hekt. Pause if thou wilt.

Achil. I doe disdaine thy curtesie, proud Troian;

Be happy that my armes are out of vse;

My rest and negligence befriends thee now;

But thou anon shalt heare of me againe:

Till when, goe seeke thy fortune. Exit.

Hekt. Fare thee well.

I would haue bene much more a fresher man,

Had I expected thee: how now my Brother?

Enter Troilus.

Troy. Ajax hath rane Aeneas; shall I be?

No, by the flame of yonder glorious heauen;

He shall not carry him: He be rane too;

Or bring him off: Fate heare me what I say;

I wreake nor, though thou end my life to day.

Enter one in Armour.

Hekt. Stand, stand, thou Greeke,

Thou art a goodly marke:

No? wilt thou not? I like thy armour well,

He frush it, and vnlocke the rivets all,

But He be maister of it: wilt thou not beate abide?

Why then flye on, He hunt thee for thy hide.

Enter Achilles with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me you my Myrmidons:

Marke what I say; attend me where I wheele:

Strike not a stroke, but keepe your selues in breath;

And when I haue the bloudy Hektor found,

Empale him with your weapons round about:

In fellest maner execute your arme.

Follow me first, and my proceedings eye;

It is decreed, Hektor the great must dye.

Enter Therites, Menelaus, and Paris.

Ther. The Cuckold and the Cuckold maker are at it:

now bull, now dogge, lows; Paris lowe; now my double hen'd sparrow; lowe Paris, lowe; the bull has the game: ware hornes ho?

Exit Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. Turne slaue and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Bast. A Bastard Sonne of Priams.

Ther. I am a Bastard too, I loue Bastards, I am a Bastard begot, Bastard instructed, Bastard in minde, Bastard in valour, in euery thing illegitimate: one Beare will not bite another, and wherefore should one Bastard? take heede, the quarrell's most ominous to vs: if the Sonne of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts iudgement: farewell

Bastard.

Bast. The diuell take thee coward. Exit.

Enter Hektor.

Hekt. Most putrified core so faire without:

Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.

Now is my daies worke done; He take good breath:

Rest Sword, thou hast thy fill of bloud and death.

Enter Achilles and his Myrmidons.

Achil. Looke Hektor how the Sunne begins to set;

How vgly night comes breathing at his heeles,

Euen with the vaile and darking of the Sunne.

To close the day vp, Hektors life is done.

Hekt. I am vnarm'd, forgoe this vantage Greeke.

Achil. Strike fellowes, strike, this is the man I seeke.

So I'llon fall thou: now Troy sinke downe;

Here lyes thy heart, thy sinewes, and thy bone.

On Myrmidons, cry you all a maine;

Achilles hath the mighty Hektor slaine. Reuen.

Harke, a retreat vpon our Grecian part.

Gree. The Troian Trumpets sounds the like my Lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night ore-spreads the earth

And stickler-like the Armies seperates

My halfe supt Sword, that frankly would haue fed,

Pleas'd with this dainty bed; thus goes to bed.

Come, tye his body to my horses taylor;

Along the field, I will the Troian traile. Exit.

Sound Retreat. Shout.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor,

Diomed, and the rest marching.

Ag. Harke, harke, what shout is that?

Nest. Peace Drums.

Sol. Achil.

Troilus and Cressida.

Sol. Achilles, Achilles, Hektor's slaine, Achilles.

Dio. The brute is, Hektor's slaine, and by Achilles.

Aia. If it be so, yet braglesse let it be:

Great Hektor was a man as good as he.

Agam. March patiently along; let one be sent

To pray Achilles see vs at our Tent.

If in his death the gods haue vs befrended,

Great Troy is ours, and our sharpe wars are ended. Exeunt.

Enter Aeneas, Paris, Antenor and Deiphobus.

Aene. Stand hoe, yet are we maisters of the field,

Neuer goe home; here stand we out the night.

Enter Troilus.

Troy. Hektor is slaine.

Ach. Hektor? the gods forbid.

Troy. Hee's dead: and at the murderers Hors'es taile,

In beasty sort, drag'd through the shamefull Field:

Frowne on you heauens, effect your rage with speede:

Sit gods vpon your throanes, and smile at Troy.

I lay at once, let your briefe plagues be mercy,

And linger not our sure destructions on.

Aene. My Lord, you doe discomfort all the Hoste.

Troy. You vnderstand me not, that tell me so:

I doe not speake of flight, of feare, of death,

But dare all imminence that gods and men,

Adresse their dangers in. Hektor is gone:

Who shall tell Priam so? or Hecuba?

Let him that will a screechoule aye be call'd,

Goe in to Troy, and say there, Hektor's dead:

There is a word will Priam turne to stone;

Make wel, and Niobes of the maidens and wiues;

Coolle statues of the youth: and in a word,

Scare Troy out of it selfe. But march away,

Hektor is dead: there is no more to say.

Stay yet: you vile abominable Tents,
Thus proudly pight vpon our Phrygian plaines:
Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
He through, and through you; & thou great siz'd coward:
No space of Earth shall sunder our two hates,
He haunt thee, like a wicked conscience still,
That mouldeth goblins swift as frenesies thoughts.
Strike a free march to Troy, with comfort goe:
Hope of reuenge, shall hide our inward wo.

Enter Pandarus.

Pand. But heare you? heare you?

Troy. Hence broker, lackie, gnomie, and shame

Pursue thy life, and liue aye with thy name. Exeunt.

Pan. A goodly medicine for mine aking bones: oh world, world, world! thus is the poore agent dispisde: Oh trait-ours and bawdes; how earnestly are you set aworke, and how ill requited? why should our indevour be so desir'd, and the performance so loath'd? What Verse for it? what instance for it? let me see.

Full merrily the humble Bee doth sing,

Till he hath lost his hony, and his sting.

And being once subdu'd in armed taile,

Sweete hony, and sweete notes together faile.

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloathes;

As many as be here of Panders hall,

Your eyes haife out, weepe out at Pandars fall:

Or if you cannot weepe, yet giue some grones;

Though not for me, yet for your aking bones:

Brethren and sisters of the hold-dore trade,

Some two months hence, my will shall here be made:

It should be now, but that my feare is this:

Some galled Goose of Winchester would hisse:

Till then, He sweare, and seeke about for eases;

And at that time bequeath you my diseases. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Tragedy of Coriolanus:

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Company of Mutinous Citizens, with Staves, Clubs, and other weapons.

1. Citizen.

Before we proceed any further, heare me speake.

All. Speake, speake.

1. Cit. You are all resolu'd rather to dy then to famish?

All. Resolu'd, resolu'd.

1. Cit. First you know, Caius Martius is chiefe enemy to the people.

All. We know't, we know't.

1. Cit. Let vs kill him, and wee'l haue Corne at our own price. Is't a Verdict?

All. No more talking on't; Let it be done, away, away

2. Cit. One word, good Citizens.

1. Cit. We are accounted poore Citizens, the Patricians good: what Authority lursers one, would relieue vs. If they would yeelde vs but the superfluitie while it were wholsome, wee might guesse they relieued vs humanely: But they thinke we are too deere, the leanness that afflicts vs, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance, our sufferance is a gaine to them. Let vs reuenge this with our Pikes, ere we become Rakes. For the Gods know, I speake this in hunger for Bread, not in thirst for Reuenge.

2. Cit. Would you proceede especially against Caius Martius.

All. Against him first: He's a very dog to the Commonalty.

2. Cit. Consider you what Seruices he ha's done for his Country?

1. Cit. Very well, and could bee content to giue him good report for't, but that hee payes himselfe with being proud.

All. Nay, but speake not maliciously.

1. Cit. I say vnto you, what he hath done Famouslie, he did it to that end: though soft conscienc'd men can be content to say it was for his Countrey, he did it to please his Mother, and to be partly proud, which he is, euen to the altitude of his vertue.

2. Cit. What he cannot helpe in his Nature, you account a Vice in him: You must in no way say he is covetous.

1. Cit. If I must not, I neede not be barren of Accusations he hath faults (with surplus) to tyre in repetition.

Shows within.

What showts are these? The other side a th City is risen: why stay we prating heere? To th Capitoll.

All. Come, come.

1. Cit. Soft, who comes heere?

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

2. Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa, one that hath alwayes lou'd the people.

1. Cit. He's one honest enough, wold al the rest wer so.

Men. What work's my Countymen in hand?

Where go you with Bats and Clubs? The matter

Speake I pray you.

2. Cit. Our busines is not vnknowne to th Senat, they haue had inking this fortnight what we intend to do, w now wee'l shew em in deeds: they say poore Suters haue strong breaths, they shal know we haue strong arms too.

Menen. Why Masters, my good Friends, mine honest Neighbours, will you vndo your selues?

2. Cit. We cannot Sir, we are vndone already.

Men. I tell you Friends, most charitable care Haue the Patricians of you for your wants.

Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the Heauen with your staves, as lift them

Against the Roman State, whose course will on The way it takes: cracking ten thousand Curbes

Of more strong linke asunder, then can euert Appeare in your impediment. For the Dearth,

The Gods, not the Patricians make it, and Your knes to them (not armes) must helpe. Alacke,

You are transported by Calamity Thether, where more attends you, and you slander

The Helmes o'th State; who care for you like Fathers, When you curse them, as Enemies.

2. Cit. Care for vs? True indeed, they nere car'd for vs yet.

Suffer vs to famish, and their Store-houses cramm'd with Graine: Make Edicts for Vsurie, to support Vsurers; repeale daily any wholsome Act established against the rich, and prouide more piercing Statutes daily, to chaine vp and restraine the poore. If the Warres eate vs not vpp, they will; and there's altheloue they beare vs.

Menen. Either you must Confesse your selues wondrous Malicious,

Or be accus'd of Folly. I shall tell you

A pretty Tale, it may be you haue heard it,

But since it serues my purpose, I will venture

To scale't a little more.

2. Citizen. Well,

He heare it Sir: yet you must not thinke

To fobbe off our disgrace with a tale:

But and I please you deliuer.

Men. There was a time, when all the bodies members Rebell'd against the Belly; thus accus'd it:

That onely like a Gulfe it did remaine a a

Tch

FINIS

Th' midd' of a th' body, idle and vnactive,
Still cubbordering the Viand, neuer bearing
Like labour with the rest, where th' other Instruments
Did see, and heere, deuise, instruct, walke, seele,
And mutually participate, did minister
Vnto the appetite; and affection common
Of the whole body, the Belly answer'd.

2. Cit. Well fir, what answer made the Belly,

Men. Sir, I shall tell you with a kinde of Smile,
Which we're came from the Lungs, but euen thus:
For looke you I may make the Belly Smile,
As well as speake, it taintingly replied
To th' discontented Members, the mutinous parts
That enuied his receite: euen so most fitly,
As you maligne our Senators, for that
They are not such as you.

2. Cit. Your Bellies answer: What
The Kingly crown'd head, the vigilant eye,
The Counsaillor Heart, the Arme our Souldier,
Our Steed the Legge, the Tongue our Trumpeter,
With other Muniments and petty helps
In this our Fabricke, if that they—

Men. What then? For me, this Fellow speakes.
What then? What then?

2. Cit. Should by the Cormorant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sinke a th' body.

Men. Well, what then?

2. Cit. The former Agents, if they did complaine,
What could the Belly answer?

Men. I will tell you,

If you'll bestow a small (of what you haue little)
Patience awhile; you'll heare the Bellies answer.

2. Cit. Y'are long about it.

Men. Note me this good Friend;
Your most graue Belly was deliberate,
Not rash like his Accusers, and thus answered.
True is it my Incorporate Friends (quoth he)
That I receiue the generall Food at first
Which you do liue vpon: and fit it is,
Because I am the Store-house, and the Shop
Of the whole Body. But, if you do remember,
I send it through the Riuetts of your blood
Euen to the Court, the Heart, to th' leate o'th' Braine,
And through the Crankes and Offices of man,
The strongest Nerues, and small inferiour Veines
From me receiue that naturall competencie
Whereby they liue. And though that all at once
(You my good Friends, this sayes the Belly) marke me.

2. Cit. I fir, well, well.

Men. Though all at once, cannot See what I do deliuer out to each,
Yet I can make my Awdit vp, that all
From me do backe receiue the Flowre of all,
And leaue me but the Bran. What say you too'r?

2. Cit. It was an answer, how apply you this?

Men. The Senators of Rome, are this good Belly,
And you the mutinous Members: For examine
Their Counsailes, and their Carés; digest things rightly,
Touching the Weale a'th Common, you shall finde
No publique benefit which you receiue
But it proceeds, or comes from them to you,
And no way from your selues. What do you thinke?
You, the great Toe of this Assembly?

2. Cit. I the great Toe? Why the great Toe?

Men. For that being one o'th' lowest, basest, poorest
Of this most wise Rebellion, thou goest formost:

Thou Rascall, that art worst in blood to run,
Lead'st first to win some vantage,
But make you ready your stiffe bars and clubs,
Rome, and her Rats, are at the point of battell,
The one side must haue baile.

Enter Caius Martius.

Hayle, Noble Martius.

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter you dissentious rogues
That rubbing the poore Itch of your Opinion,
Make your selues Scabs.

2. Cit. We haue euer your good word.

Mar. He that will giue good words to thee, will flatter
Beneath abhorring. What would you haue, you Curses,
That like nor Peace, nor Warre? The one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you,
Where he should finde you Lyons, findes you Hares:
Where Foxes, Geese you are: No surer, no,
Then is the coale of fire vpon the Ice,
Or Hailstone in the Sun. Your Vertue is,
To make him worthy, whose offence subdues him,
And curse that Iustice did it. Who deserves Greatnes, Deserues your Hate: and your Affections are
A sickmans Appetite; who desires most that Which would encrease his euill. He that depends
Vpon your fauours, swimmes with finnes of Leade,
And hewes downe Oakes, with rushes. Hang your trust
With euery Minute you do change a Minde,
And call him Noble, that was now your Hate:
Him wilde, that was your Garland. What's the matter,
That in these seuerall places of the Citie,
You cry against the Noble Senate, who (Vnder the Gods) keepe you in awe, which else
Would feede on one another? What's their seeking?

Men. For Corne at their owne rates, whereof they say
The Citie is well stor'd.

Mar. Hang 'em: They say?

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
What's done i'th' Capitoll: Who's like to rise,
Who thrives, & who declines: Side factions, & giue out
Coniecturall Marriages, making parties strong,
And feebling such as stand not in their liking,
Below their cobled Shooes. They say their's grain enough
Would the Nobility lay aside their ruth,
And let me vse my Sword, I'd make a Quarrie
With thousands of these quarter'd slaues, as high
As I could picke my Lance.

Men. Nay these are almost thoroughly perswaded:
For though abundantly they lacke discretion
Yet are they passing Cowardly. But I beseech you,
What sayes the other Troope?

Mar. They are dissol'd: Hang 'em;
They said they were an hungry, sigh'd forth Prouerbes
That Hunger-broke stone wals: that dogges must eate
That meate was made for mouths. That the gods sent not Corne for the Richmen onely: With these threats
They vented their Complaining, which being answer'd
And a petition granted them, a strange one,
To breake the heart of generosity,
And make bold power looke pale, they threw their caps
As they would hang them on the hornes a'th' Moone, Shooting their Emulation.

Men. What is graunted them?

Mar. Five Tribunes to defend their vulgar wisdom
Of their owne choice. One's Iunius Brutus,
Sicinius Velutus, and I know not. Sdeath,

The rabble should haue first vnroo'd the City
Ere so preuail'd with me; it will in time
Win vpon power, and throw forth greater Theames
For Inturrections arguing.

Men. This is strange.

Mar. Go get you home you Fragments.

Enter a Messenger hastily.

Mess. Where's Caius Martius?

Mar. Heere: what's the matter?

Mess. The newes is fit, the Volcies are in Armes.

Mar. I am glad on't, then we shall haue meanes to vent
Our mustie superfluity. See our best Elders.

Enter Sicinius Velutus, Annulus Brutus Cominius, Titus
Lartius, with other Senators.

1. Sen. Martius 'tis true, that you haue lately told vs,
The Volces are in Armes.

Mar. They haue a Leader,
Tullus Aufidius that will put you too'r:
I thinke in enuying his Nobility:

And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wish me onely he.

Com. You haue fought together?

Mar. Were halfe to halfe the world by th' eares, & he vpon my partie, I'd reuolt to make Onely my warres with him. He is a Lion
That I am proud to hunt.

1. Sen. Then worthy Martius,

Attend vpon Cominius to these Warres.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir it is,

And I am constant: Titus Lucius, thou

Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus face.

What art thou stiffe? Stand'st out?

Tit. No Caius Martius,

I leane vpon one Crutch, and fight with rother,

Ere stay behind this Businesse.

Men. Oh true-bred.

Sen. Your Company to th' Capitoll, where I know
Our greatest Friends attend vs.

Tit. Lead you on: Follow Cominius, we must followe
you, right worthy you Priority.

Com. Noble Martius,

Sen. Hence to your homes, be gone.

Mar. Nay let them follow,

The Volces haue much Corne: take these Rats thither,
To gnaw their Garners. Worshipfull Mutiners,
Your valour puts well forth: Pray follow. Exeunt.

Citizens steale away. Manet Sicinius & Brutus.

Sicinius. Was euer man so proud as is this Martius?

Brutus. He has no equall.

Sicinius. When we were chosen Tribunes for the people.

Brutus. Mark'd you his lip and eyes.

Sicinius. Nay, but his taunts.

Brutus. Being mou'd, he will not spare to gird the Gods.

Sicinius. Bemocke the modest Moone.

Brutus. The present Warres deuoure him, he is growne
Too proud to be so valiant.

Sicinius. Such a Nature, tickled with good success, dis-daines the shadow which he treads on at noone, but I do wonder, his insolence can brooke to be commanded vnder Cominius?

Brutus. Fame, at the which he aymes,

In whom already he's well grac'd, cannot Better be held, nor more attain'd then by

A place below the first: for what mil carries
Shall be the Generals fault, though he performe
To th' utmost of a man, and giddy censure
Will then cry out of Martius: Oh, if he Had borne the businesse.

Sicinius. Besides, if things go well,

Opinion that so stickes on Martius, shall

Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Brutus. Come; halfe all Cominius Honors are to Martius

Though Martius earn'd them not: and all his faults

To Martius shall be Honors, though indeed

In ought he merit not.

Sicinius. Let's hence, and heare

How the dispatch is made, and in what fashion

More then his singularity, he goes

Vpon this present Action.

Brutus. Let's along. Exeunt.

Enter Tullus Aufidius with Senators of Corioli.

1. Sen. So, your opinion is Aufidius,
That they of Rome are entred in our Counsailes,

And know how we proceede,

Auf. Is it not yours?

What euer haue bin thought one in this State

That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome

Had circumuention: 'tis not foure dayes gone

Since I heard thence, these are the words, I thinke

I haue the Letter heere: yes, heere it is;

They haue prest a Power, but it is not knowne

Whether for East or West: the Dearth is great,

The people Mutinous: And it is rumour'd,

Cominius, Martius, your old Enemy

(Who is of Rome worse hated then of you)

And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,

These three leade on this Preparation

Whether 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you:

Consider of it.

1. Sen. Our Armie's in the Field:

We neuer yet made doubt but Rome was ready

To answer vs.

Auf. Nor did you thinke it folly,

To keepe your great pretences vayl'd, till when

They needs must shew themselves, which in the hatching

It seem'd appear'd to Rome. By the discouery,

We shalbe shortned in our ayme, which was

To take in many Townes, ere (almost) Rome

Should know we were a-foot.

2. Sen. Noble Aufidius,

Take your Commission, hyc you to your Bands,

Let vs alone to guard Corioli

If they set downe before's: for the remoue

Bring vp your Army: but (I thinke) you'll finde

Th' haue not prepar'd for vs.

Auf. O doubt not that,

I speake from Certainties. Nay more,

Some parcels of their Power are forth already,

And onely hitherward. I leaue your Honors.

If we, and Caius Martius chance to meete,

'Tis sworn betwene vs, we shall euer strike

Till one can do no more.

All. The Gods assist you.

Auf. And keepe your Honors safe.

1. Sen. Farewell.

2. Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell. Exeunt omnes.

Enter

Enter Volunna and Virgilia, mother and wife to Martius:
They set them downe on two lowe stools and sowe.

Volun. I pray you daughter sing, or expresse your selfe in a more comfortable sort: If my Sonne were my Husband, I should freelier reioyce in that absence wherein he wonne Honor, then in the embracements of his Bed, where he would shew most loue. When yett hee was but tender-bodied, and the onely Sonne of my womb; when youth with comelinesse pluck'd all gaze his way; when for a day of Kings entreaties, a Mother should not see him an houre from her beholding; I considering how Honour would become such a person, that it was no better then Picture-like to hang by th' wall, if renowne made it not stirre, was pleas'd to let him seeke danger, where he was like to finde fame: To a cruell Warre I sent him, from whence he return'd, his browes bound with Oake. Tell thee Daughter, I sprang not more in ioy at first hearing he was a Man-child, then now in first seeing he had proued himselfe a man.

Virg. But had he died in the Businesse Madame, how then?

Volun. Then his good report should haue bene my Sonne, I therein would haue found issue. Heare me profess sincerely, had I a dozen sons each in my loue alike, and none lesse deere then thine, and my good Martius, I had rather had eleuen dye Nobly for their Countrey, then one voluptuously surfeit out of Action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Virg. Beseech you giue me leaue to retire my selfe.

Volun. Indeed you shall not:

Me thinks, I heare hither your Husbands Drumme: See him plucke Aufidius downe by th' haire: (As children from a Beare) the Volces thunning him: Me thinks I see him stampe thus, and call thus, Come on you Cowards, you were got in feare Though you were borne in Rome; his bloody brow With his nail'd hand, then wiping, forth he goes Like to a Haruest man, that task'd to mowe Or all, or loose his hyre.

Virg. His bloody Brow? Oh Iupiter, no blood.

Volun. Away you Foole; it more becomes a man, Then gilt his Trophie. The brefts of Hecuba When she did suckle Hector, look'd not louelier Then Hectors forehead, when it spit forth blood At Grecian sword. Contemning, tell Valeria We are fit to bid her welcome.

Exit Gent.

Vir. Heauens blesse my Lord from fell Aufidius.

Vol. Hee'l beat Aufidius head below his knee, And treade vpon his necke.

Enter Valeria with an Vsher, and a Gentlewoman.

Val. My Ladies both good day to you.

Vol. Sweet Madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your Ladyship.

Val. How do you both? You are manifest house-keepers. What are you sowing heere? A fine sporte in good faith. How does your little Sonne?

Vir. I thanke your Ladyship: Well good Madam.

Vol. He had rather see the swords, and heare a Drum, then looke vpon his Schoolmaster.

Val. A my word the Fathers Sonne: He sweare 'tis a very pretty boy. A my troth, I look'd vpon him a Week-day halfe an houre together: ha's such a confirm'd countenance. I saw him run after a gilded Butterfly, & when he caught it, he let it go againe, and after it againe, and ouer and ouer he comes, and vp againe: catcht it again: or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how 'twas, hee did so set his teeth, and teare it. Oh, I warrant how he mammotht it.

Vol. One on's Fathers moods.

Val. Indeed I, tis a Noble childe.

Virg. A Cracke Madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery, I must haue you play the idle Huswife with me this afternoone.

Virg. No (good Madam)

I will not out of doores:

Val. Not out of doores?

Volun. She shall the shall.

Virg. Indeed no, by your patience; Hee not ouer the threshold, till my Lord returne from the Warres.

Val. Fye, you confine your selfe most vnreasonably: Come, you must go visit the good Lady that lies in.

Virg. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers: but I cannot go thither.

Volun. Why I pray you.

Virg. 'Tis not to saue labour, nor that I want loue.

Val. You would be another Penelope: yet they say, all the yeaer she spun in Ulysses absence, did but fill Achilles full of Mothes. Come, I would your Cambricke were sensible as your finger, that you might leaue pricking it for pittie. Come you shall go with vs.

Vir. No good Madam, pardon me, indeed I will not forth.

Val. In truth I go with me, and I'll tell you excellent newes of your Husband.

Virg. Oh good Madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily I do not test with you: there came newes from him last night.

Vir. Indeed Madam.

Val. In earnest it's true; I heard a Senatour speake it. Thus it is: the Volcies haue an Army forth, against who Cominius the Generall is gone, with one part of our Roman power. Your Lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their Citie Corioles, they nothing doubt preuailling, and to make it breefe Warres. This is true on mine Honor, and so I pray go with vs.

Virg. Giue me excuse good Madame, I will obey you in euery thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone Ladie, as she is now:

She will but disease our better mirth.

Valeria. In troth I thinke she would:

Fare you well then. Come good sweet Ladie.

Prythee Virgilia turne thy solemnesse out a doore,

And go along with vs.

Virgil. No

At a word Madam; Indeed I must not,

I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then farewell.

Exeunt Ladies

Enter Martius, Titus Lartius, with Drumme and Colours, with Captaines and Souldiers, as before the Citie Coriolanus: to them a Messenger.

Martius. Yonder comes Newes:

A Wager they haue met.

Lar. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. Tis done.

Lar. Agreed.

Mr.

Mar. Say, ha's our Generall met the Enemy?

Mess. They lye in view, but haue not spoke as yet.

Lar. So, the good Horse is mine.

Mar. He buy him of you.

Lar. No, Hee nor sell, nor giue him: Lend you him I will

For halfe a hundred yeaers: Summon the Towne.

Mar. How farre off lye these Armies?

Mess. Within this mile and halfe.

Mar. Then shall we heare their Larum, & they Ours.

Now Mars, I prythee make vs quicke in worke,

That we with smoaking swords may march from hence

To helpe our fielded Friends: Come, blow thy blast:

They sound a Parley: Enter two Senatours with others on the Walles of Coriolanus.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your Walles?

Senat. No, nor a man that feares you lesse then he,

That's lesse then a little. Drum a farre off.

Hecke, our Drummes

Are bringing forth our youth: Wee'l breake our Walles

Rather then they shall pound vs vp our Gates;

Which yet seeme shut, we haue but pin'd with Rushes,

They're open of themselves. Harke you, farre off

There is Aufidius. Lift what worke he makes

Amongst your clouen Army.

Mar. Oh they are at it.

Lar. Their noise be our instruction. Ladders ho.

Enter the Army of the Volces.

Mar. They feare vs not, but issue forth their Citie.

Now put your Shields before your hearts, and fight

With hearts more prooue then Shields.

Aduance braue Titus,

They do disdaine vs much beyond our Thoughts, which makes me sweat with wrath. Come on my fellows

He that retires, He take him for a Volce,

And he shall feele mine edge.

Alarum, the Romans are beat back to their Trenches

Enter Martius (singing).

Mar. All the contagion of the South, light on you,

You Shames of Rome: you Heard of Byles and Plagues

Plaster you o're, that you may be abhor'd

Farther then scene, and one infect another

Against the Winde a mile: you soules of Geese,

That beare the shapes of men, how haue you run

From Slaues, that Apes would beate; Pluto and Hell,

All hurt behinde, backs red, and faces pale

With flight and agued feare, mend and charge home,

Or by the fires of heauen, He leaue the Foe,

And make my Warres on you: Looke too't: Come on,

If you'l stand fast, wee'l beate them to their Wiues,

As they vs to our Trenches followes.

Another Alarum, and Martius followes them to gates, and is shot in.

So, now the gates are open: now proue good Seconds,

'Tis for the followers Fortune, widens them,

Not for the flyers: Marke me, and do the like.

Enter the Gati.

1. Sol. Foole-hardinesse, not I.

2. Sol. Nor I.

1. Sol. See they haue shut him in. Alarum continues

All. To th' pot I warrant him. Enter Titus Lartius

Tit. What is become of Martius?

All. Staine (Sir) doubtlesse.

1. Sol. Following the Flyers at the very heeles,

With them he enters: who vpon the sodaine

Clapt to their Gates, he is himselfe alone,

To answer all the City.

Lar. Oh Noble Fellow!

Who sensibly out-dares his fencelesse Sword,

And when it bowes, stand'st vp: Thou art left Martius,

A Carbuncle intire: as big as thou art

Weare not so rich a Iewell. Thou was't a Souldier

Euen to Calues wish, not fierce and terrible

Onely in strokes, but with thy grim lookes, and

The Thunder-like percussio of thy sound

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the World

Were Feauorous, and did tremble.

Enter Martius bleeding, assaulted by the Enemy.

1. Sol. Looke Sir.

Lar. O 'tis Martius.

Let's fetch him off, or make remaine alike.

They fight, and all enter the City.

Enter certaine Romanes with spoiles.

1. Rom. This will I carry to Rome.

2. Rom. And I this.

3. Rom. A Murrain on't, I tooke this for Silver. exeunt.

Alarum continues still a-farre off.

Enter Martius, and Titus with a Trumpet.

Mar. See heere these mouers, that do prize their hours

At a crack'd Drachme: Cushions, Leaden Spooones,

Irons of a Doit, Dublets that Hangmen would

Bury with those that wore them. These base slaues,

Ere yet the fight be done, packe vp, downe with them.

And harke, what noyse the Generall makes: To him

There is the man of my soules hate, Aufidius,

Piercing our Romanes: Then Valiant Titus take

Conuenient Numbers to make good the City,

Whil' st I with those that haue the spirit, wil haste

To helpe Cominius:

Lar. Worthy Sir, thou bleed'st,

Thy exercise hath bin too violent,

For a second course of Fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not:

My worke hath yet not warm'd me. Fare you well:

The blood I drop, is rather Physicall

Then dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus, I will appear

Lar. Now the faire Goddess Fortune, (and fight)

Fall deepe in loue with thee, and her great charmes

Misguide thy Opposers swords, Bold Gentleman:

Prosperity be thy Page.

Mar. Thy Friend no lesse,

Then those the placeth highest: So farewell.

Lar. Thou worthiest Martius,

Go found thy Trumpet in the Market place;

Call thither all the Officers a th' Towne,

Where they shall know our minde. Away. Exeunt

Enter Cominius as it were in retire, with soldiers.

Com. Breath you my friends, wel fought, we are come

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands, (off,

Nor Cowardly in retire: Beleue me Sirs,

We shall be charg'd againe. Whiles we haue strooke

By Interims and conueying gifts, we haue heard

The Charges of our Friends. The Roman Gods,

Leade their successes, as we wish our owne,

That both our powers, with smiling Fronts encountering,

May giue you thankfull Sacrifice. Thy Newes?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Cittizens of Corioles haue yssued,

And giuen to Lartius and to Martius Battaille:

I saw

I saw our party to their Trenches driuen,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speakest truth,
Me thinks thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Mar. About an houre, my Lord.

Com. 'Tis not a mile: briefly we heard their drummes.
How could'st thou in a mile confound an houre,
And bring thy Newes so late?

Mar. Spies of the Volces

Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheele
Three or foure miles about, else had I fir
Halfe an houre since brought my report.

Enter Martius.

Com. Whose yonder,
That doe's appeare as he were Flead? O Gods,
He has the stampe of Martius, and I haue
Before time seene him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The Shepherd knowes not Thunder frō a Taber,
More then I know the sound of Martius Tongue
From euery meaner man.

Martius. Come I too late?

Com. I, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your owne.

Mar. Oh! let me clip ye

In Armes as sound, as when I woo'd in heart;
As merry, as when our Nuptiall day was done,
And Tapers burnt to Bedward.

Com. Flower of Warriors, how is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about Decrees:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile,
Ransoming him, or pittying, threatening th'other;
Holding Corioles in the name of Rome,
Euen like a fawning Grey-hound in the Leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that Slaue
Which told me they had beate you to your Trenches?
Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone,

He did informe the truth: but for our Gentlemen,
The common file, (a plague-Tribunes for them)
The Mouse ne're shunn'd the Cat, as they did budge
From Rascals worse then they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serue to tell, I do not thinke:
Where is the enemy? Are you Lords a'th Field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Martius, we haue at disadvantage fought,
And did retyre to win our purpose.

Mar. How lies their Battell? Know you on w' side
They haue plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guesse Martius,

Their Bands i'th Vaward are the Antients
Of their best trust: O're them Aufidius,
Their very heart of Hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,

By all the Battailles wherein we haue fought,
By th' Blood we haue shed together,
By th' Vowes we haue made

To endure Friends, that you directly set me
Against Aufidius, and his Antients,

And that you not delay the present (but Filling the aire with Swords aduanc'd) and Darts,
We proue this very houre.

Com. Though I could wish,

You were conducted to a gentle Bath,
And Balmes applyed to you, yet dare I neuer
Deny your asking, take your choice of those
That best can ayde your action.

Mar. Those are they

That most are willing; if any such be heere,
(As it were sinne to doubt) that loue this painting
Wherein you see me smear'd, if any feare
Lessen his person, then an ill report:
If any thinke, braue death out-weighes bad life,
And that his Countreys deerer then himselfe,
Let him alone: Or so many so minded,
Waue thus to expresse his disposition,
And follow Martius.

They all shout and waue their swords, take him up in their Armes, and cast up their Caps.

Oh me alone, make you a sword of me:

If these shewes be not outward, which of you

But is foure Volces? None of you, but is Able to beare against the great Aufidius

A Shield, as hard as his. A certaine number

(Though thanks to all) must I select from all:

The rest shall beare the businesse in some other fight

(As cause will be obey'd:) please you to March,

And foure shall quickly draw out my Command,

Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on my Fellowes:

Make good this ostentation, and you shall

Diuide in all, with vs.

Exeunt.

Titus Lartius, hauing set a guard vpon Corioles, going with Drum and Trumpet toward Cominius, and Caius Mar-tius, Enters with a Lieutenant, other Souldiours, and a Scout.

Lar. So, let the Ports be guarded; keepe your Duties
As I haue set them downe. If I do send, dispatch

Those Centuries to our ayd, the rest will serue

For a short holding, if we loose the Field,

We cannot keepe the Towne.

Lien. Feare not our care Sir.

Lar. Hence; and shut your gates vpon's:

Our Guider come, to th' Roman Campe conduct vs; Exit Alarum, as in Battail.

Enter Martius and Aufidius at seuerall doores.

Mar. He fight with none but thee, for I do hate thee
Worse then a Promise-breaker.

Aufid. We hate alike:

Not Affricke owne's a Serpent I abhorre

More then thy Fame and Enuy: Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first Budger dye the others Slaue,

And the Gods doome him after.

Auf. If I flye Martius, hollow me like a Hare.

Mar. Within these three houres Tullus

Alone I fought in your Corioles wallies,

And made what worke I pleas'd: 'Tis not my blood,

Wherein thou see'st me maskt, for thy Reuenge

Wrench vp thy power to th' highest.

Auf. Wer't thou the Helior,

That was the whip of your bragg'd Progeny,

Thou should'st not scape me heere.

Here they fight, and certaine Volces come in the ayde

of Aufid. Martius fights til they be driuen in breathles.

Officious and not valiant, you haue sham'd me

In your condemned Seconds.

Flourish.

Flourish. Alarum. A Retreat is sounded. Enter at one Doore Cominius, with the Romanes: At another Doore Martius, with his Arme in a Scarfe.

Com. If I should tell thee o're this thy dayes Worke, Thou'st not beleene thy deeds: but Ile report it,
Where Senators shall mingle teares with smiles,
Where great Patricians shall attend, and shrug,
T'end admire: where Ladies shall be frighted,
And gladly quak'd, heare more: where the dull Tribunes,
That with the fustie Plebeians, hate thine Honors,
Shall say against their hearts, We thanke the Gods
Our Rome hath such a Souldier.
Yet can'st thou to a Morfell of this Feast,
Hauing fully din'd before.

Enter Titus with his Power, from the Pursuit.

Titus Lartius. Oh Generall:
Here is the Steed, wee the Caparison:
Hast thou beheld—

Martius. Pray now, no more:

My Mother, who ha's a Charter to extoll her Bloud,

When she do's prayse me, grieues me:

I haue done as you haue done, that's what I can,

Induc'd as you haue beene, that's for my Countrey:

He that ha's but effected his good will,

Hath ouertane mine Act.

Com. You shall not be the Graue of your deseruing,

Rome must know the value of her owne:

'Twere a Concealement worse then a Theft,

No lesse then a Traducement,

To hide your doings, and to silence that,

Which to the spire, and top of prayse's vouch'd,

Would seeme but modest: therefore I beseech you,

In signe of what you are, not to reward

What you haue done, before our Armie heare me.

Martius. I haue some Wounds vpon me, and they smart

To heare themselves remembred.

Com. Should they not:

Well might they fester 'gainst Ingratitude,

And tent themselves with death: of all the Horfes,

Whereof we haue ta'ne good, and good store of all,

The Treasure in this field atchicued, and Citie,

We render you the Tenth, to be ta'ne forth,

Before the common distribution,

At your onely choyle.

Martius. I thanke you Generall:

But cannot make my heart consent to take

A Bribe, to pay my Sword: I doe refuse it,

And stand vpon my common part with those,

That haue beheld the doing.

A long flourish. They all cry, Martius, Martius, cast up their Caps and Launces: Cominius and Lartius stand bare.

Mar. May these same Instruments, which you prophane, Neuer sound more: when Drums and Trumpets shall F'ith field proue flatterers, let Courts and Cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing:
When Steele growes soft, as the Parasites Silke,
Let him be made an Overture for th' Warres:
No more I say, for that I haue not wash'd

My Nose that bled, or foyl'd some debile Wretch,
Which without note, here's many else haue done,
You shoot me forth in acclamations hyperbolically,
As if I lou'd my little should be dieted
In prayse, sawe't with Lyes.

Com. Too modest are you:

More cruell to your good report, then gratefull
To vs, that giue you truly: by your patience,
If 'gainst your selfe you be incens'd, wee'le put you (Like one that meanes his proper harme) in Manacles,
Then reason safely with you: Therefore be it knowne,
As to vs, to all the World, That Caius Martius
Weares this Warres Garland: in token of the which,
My Noble Steed, knowne to the Campe, I giue him,
With all his trim belonging; and from this time,
For what he did before Corioles, call him,
With all th' applause and Clamor of the Hoast,
Marcus Caius Coriolanus. Beare th' addition Nobly euer?

Flourish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.

Omnes. Marcus Caius Coriolanus.

Martius. I will goe wash:

And when my Face is faire, you shall perceiue
Whether I blush, or no: howbeit, I thanke you,
I meane to stride your Steed, and at all times

To vnder-crest your good Addition,

To th' faireness of my power.

Com. So, to our Tent:

Where ere we doe repose vs, we will write
To Rome of our successe: you Titus Lartius

Must to Corioles backe, send vs to Rome

The best, with whom we may articulate,

For their owne good, and ours.

Lartius. I shall, my Lord.

Martius. The Gods begin to mocke me:

I that now refus'd most Princely gifts,

Am bound to begge of my Lord Generall.

Com. Tak't, 'tis yours: what is't?

Martius. I sometime lay here in Corioles,

At a poore mans house: he vs'd me kindly,

He cry'd to me: I saw him Prisoner:

But then Aufidius was within my view,

And Wrath o're-whelm'd my pittie: I request you

To giue my poore Host freedom.

Com. Oh well begg'd:

Were he the Butcher of my Sonne, he should

Be free, as is the Winde: deliuer him, Titus.

Lartius. Martius, his Name.

Martius. By Iupiter forgot:

I am wearie, yea, my memorie is tyr'd:

Haue we no Wine here?

Com. Goe we to our Tent:

The bloud vpon your Visage dryes, 'tis time

It should be lookt too: come.

Exeunt.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullus Aufidius blondie, with two or three Souldiours.

Aufid. The Towne is ta'ne.

Sould. 'Twill be deliuer'd backe on good Condition.

Aufid. Condition?

I would I were a Roman, for I cannot,

Being a Volce, be that I am. Condition?

What good Condition can a Treatie finde

I'th part that is at mercy? sue times, Martius,

I haue fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me:

And would'st doe so, I thinke, should we encounter

As

As often as we eate. By th' Elements,
If ere againe I meet him beard to beard,
He's mine, or I am his: Mine Emulation
Hath not that Honor in't it had: For where
I thought to crush him in an equall Force,
True Sword to Sword: He potche at him some way,
Or Wrath, or Craft may get him.

Sol. He's the diuell.

Ans. Bolder, though not so subtle: my valors poison'd,
With onely suffring staine by him: for him
Shall flye out of it selfe, nor sleepe, nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sicke, nor Phane, nor Capitoll,
The Prayers of Priests, nor times of Sacrifice:
Embarquements all of Fury, shall lift vp
Their rotten Priuiledge, and Custome gainst
My hate to Martius. Where I finde him, were it
At home, vpon my Brothers Guard, euen there
Against the hospitable Canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in's heart. Go you to th' Citie, Learne how 'tis held, and what they are that must Be Hostages for Rome.

Soul. Will not you go?

Ans. I am attended at the Cyprus groue. I pray you (Tis South the City Mills) bring me word thither
How the world goes: that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey.

Soul. I shall sir.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Menenius with the two Tribunes of the people, Sicinius & Brutus.

Men. The Agurer tels me, wee shall haue Newes to night.

Brut. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they loue not Martius.

Sicinius. Nature teaches Beasts to know their Friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the Wolfe loue?

Sicinius. The Lambe.

Men. I, to deuour him, as the hungry Plebeians would the Noble Martius.

Brut. He's a Lambe indeed, that baes like a Beare.

Men. Hee's a Beare indeede, that liues like a Lambe. You two are old men, tell me one thing that I shall aske you.

Both. Well sir.

Men. In what enormity is Martius poore in, that you two haue not in abundance?

Brut. He's poore in no one fault, but stor'd withall.

Sicinius. Especially in Pride.

Brut. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: Do you two know, how you are censured here in the City, I mean of vs a'th' right hand File, do you?

Both. Why? ho ware we censur'd?

Men. Because you talke of Pride now, will you not be angry.

Both. Well, well sir, well.

Men. Why 'tis no great matter: for a very little theefe of Occasion, will rob you of a great deale of Patience:

Giue your dispositions the reines, and bee angry at your pleasures (at the least) if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so: you blame Martius for being proud.

Brut. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can doe very little alone, for your helpees are many, or else your actions would growe wondrous single: your abilities are to Infant-like, for doing much alone. You talke of Pride: Oh, that you could turn your eyes toward the Napes of your neckes, and make but an Interiour survey of your good selues. Oh that you could.

Both. What then sir?

Men. Why then you should discouera brace of vndermeriting, proud, violent, testie Magistrates (alias Fooles) as any in Rome.

Sicinius. Menenius, you are knowne well enough too.

Men. I am knowne to be a humorous Patritian, and one that loues a cup of hot Wine, with not a drop of slaying Tiber in't: Said, to be something imperfect in fauouring the first complaint, hasty and Tinder-like vpon, to triall motion: One, that conuerfes more with the Buttocks of the night, then with the forehead of the morning. What I think, I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. Meeting two such Weales men as you are (I cannot call you Licurgusses), if the drinke you giue me, touch my Palat aduersly, I make a crooked face at it, I can say, your Worshippes haue deliuer'd the matter well, when I finde the Ass in compound, with the Maior part of your syllables. And though I must be content to beate with those, that say you are reuerend graue men, yet they lye deadly, that tell you haue good faces, if you see this in the Map of my Microcosme, folloves it that I am knowne well enough too? What harme can your beesome Conspicuities gleane out of this Character, if I be knowne wellemough too.

Brut. Come sir come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither mee, your selues, nor any thing: you are ambitious, for poore knaues cappes and legges: you weare out a good wholesome Forenoone, in hearing a cause betwene an Orendge wife, and a Forrester, and then reiourne the Controuersie of three-pence to a second day of Audience. When you are hearing a matter betwene party and parry, if you chauce to bee pinch'd with the Collicke, you make faces like Mummings, set vp the bloodie Flagge against all Patience, and in roaring for a Chamber-pot, dismissthe the Controuersie bleeding, the more intrangled by your hearing: All the peace you make in their Cause, is calling both the parties Knaues. You are a payre of strange ones.

Brut. Come, come, you are well vnderstood to bee a perfecter gyber for the Table, then a necessary Bencher in the Capitoll.

Men. Our very Priests must become Mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous Subiects as you are, when you speake best vnto the purpose. It is not worth the wagging of your Beards, and your Beards deserue not so honourable a graue, as to stufte a Botchers Cushion, or to be intomb'd in an Asses Packe-saddle: yet you must bee saying, Martius is proud: who in a cheape estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Dencalion, though peraduenture some of the best of 'em were hereditarie bangmen. Godden to your Worships, more of your conuersation would infect my Braine, being the Heardsmen of the Beasty Plebeians. I will be bold to take my leaue of you.

Brut. and Sic.

Aside.

Enter

Enter Volumina, Virgilia, and Valeria.

How now (my as faire as Noble) Ladies, and the Moone were thee Earthly, no Nobler; whither doe you follow your Eyes so fast?

Volum. Honorable Menenius, my Boy Martius approaches: for the loue of Iuno let's goe.

Men. Ha? Martius comming home?

Volum. I, worthy Menenius, and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my Cappe Iupiter, and I thanke thee: hoo, Martius comming home?

Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Volum. Looke, here's a Letter from him, the State hath another, his Wife another, and (I thinke) there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reele to night:

A Letter for me?

Virgil. Yes certaine, there's a Letter for you, I saw't.

Men. A Letter for me? it giues me an Estate of seuen yeeres health; in which time, I will make a Lippe at the Physician: The most soueraigne Prescription in Galen, is but Emperick quique; and to this Preferuatiue, of no better report then a Horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded?

Virgil. Oh no, no, no.

Volum. Oh, he is wounded, I thanke the Gods for't.

Men. So doe I too, if it be not too much: brings a Victorie in his Pocket the wounds become him.

Volum. On's Browes: Menenius, hee comes the third time home with the Oaken Garland.

Men. Ha's he disciplin'd Aufidius soundly?

Volum. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too, Ile warrant him that: and he had stay'd by him, I would not haue been so fiddious'd, for all the Chests in Carioles, and the Gold that's in them. Is the Senate posselt of this?

Volum. Good Ladies let's see. Yes, yes, yes: The Senate ha's Letters from the Generall, wherein hee giues my Sonne the whole Name of the Warre: he hath in this action out-done his former deeds doubly.

Valer. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous: I, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Virgil. The Gods graunt them true.

Volum. True? pow waw.

Men. True? He be sworne they are true: where is hee wounded, God saue your good Worships? Martius is comming home: hee ha's more cause to be proud: where is he wounded?

Volum. Ith' Shoulder, and ith' left Arme: there will be large Cicatrices to shew the People, when hee shall stand for his place: hee receiued in the repulse of Tarquinius seuen hurts ith' Body.

Men. One ith' Neck, and two ith' Thigh, there's nine that I know.

Volum. Hee had, before this last Expedition, twentie fine Wounds vpon him.

Men. Now it's twentie seuen; euery gash was an Enemies Graue. Hearke, the Trumpets.

A shout, and flourish.

Volum. These are the Vshers of Martius:

Before him, hee carries Noys; And behinde him, hee leaues Teares:

Death, that darke Spirit, in's neruie Arme doth lye, Which being aduanc'd, declines, and then men dye.

A Sennet. Trumpets sound.

Enter Cominius the Generall, and Titus Lartius: betwene them Coriolanus, crown'd with an Oaken Garland, with Captaines and Souldiers, and a Herald.

Herald. Know Rome, that all alone Martius did fight Within Corioles Gates: where he hath wonne, With Fame, a Name to Martius Caius: These in honor folloves Martius Caius Coriolanus. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus.

Sound. Flourish.

Al. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus.

Coriol. No more of this, it does offend my heart: pray now no more.

Com. Looke, Sir, your Mother.

Coriol. Oh! you haue, I know, petition'd all the Gods for my prosperitie.

Kneels.

Volum. Nay, my good Souldier, vp:

My gentle Martius, worthy Caius, And by deed-atchieuing Honor newly nam'd, What is it (Coriolanus) must I call thee? But oh, thy Wife.

Corio. My gracious silence, hayle: Wouldst thou haue laugh'd, had I come Coffin'd home, That weep't to see me triumph? Ah my deare, Such eyes the Widowes in Carioles were, And Mothers that lacke Sonnes.

Men. Now the Gods Crowne thee.

Com. And liue you yet? Oh my sweet Lady, pardon.

Volum. I know not where to turne.

Oh welcome home: and welcome Generall, And y're welcome all.

Men. A hundred thousand Welcomes:

I could weepe, and I could laugh,

I am light, and heauie; welcome:

A Curse begin at very roor on's heart,

That is not glad to see thee.

You are three, that Rome should dote on:

Yet by the faith of men, we haue

Some old Crab-trees here at home,

That will not be grafted to your Rallies.

Yet welcome Warriors:

Wee call a Nettle, but a Nettle;

And the faults of fooles, but folly.

Com. Euer right.

Cor. Menenius, euer, euer.

Herald. Giue way there, and goe on.

Cor. Your Hand, and yours?

Ere in our owne house I doe shade my Head,

The good Patricians must be visited,

From whom I haue receiue'd not onely greetings,

But with them, change of Honors.

Volum. I haue liued,

To see inherited my very Wishes,

And the Buildings of my Fancie:

Onely there's one thing wanting,

Which (I doubt not) but our Rome

Will cast vpon thee.

Cor. Know, good Mother,

I had rather be their seruant in my way,

Then sway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitall. Flourish. Cornets.

Exeunt in State, as before.

Enter

Enter Brutus and Scicinius.

Brut. All tongues speake of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prating Nurse
Into a rapture lets her Baby crye,
While she chats him: the Kitchen Malkin pinnes
Her richest Lockram 'bout her recchie necke,
Clambring the Walls to eye him:
Stalls, Bulkes, Windows, are smother'd vp,
Leades fill'd, and Ridges hors'd
With variable Complexions; all agreeing
In earnestnesse to see him: seld-showne Flamins
Doe presse among the popular Throngs, and puffe
To winne a vulgar station: our veyld Dames
Commit the Warre of White and Damaske
In their nicely gawded Cheekes, to th' wanton spoyle
Of Phobus burning Kisses: such a poother,
As if that whatsoeuer God, who leades him,
Were flyly crept into his humane powers,
And gaue him gracefull posture.

Scicini. On the suddaine, I warrant him Confull.

Brutus. Then our Office may, during his power, goe leepe.

Scicini. He cannot temp'rately transport his Honors,
From where he should begin, and end, but will Lose those he hath wonne.

Brutus. In that there's comfort.

Scicini. Doubt not,

The Commoners, for whom we stand, but they Vpon their ancient mallice, will forget
With the least cause, these his new Honors,
Which that he will giue them, make I as little question,
As he is proud to doo't.

Brutus. I heard him sweare,
Were he to stand for Confull, neuer would he Apparee i'th' Market place, nor on him put
The Naples Vesture of Humilitie,
Nor shewing (as the manner is) his Wounds
To th' People, begge their stinking Breaths.

Scicini. 'Tis right.

Brutus. It was his word:
Oh he would misse it, rather then carry it,
But by the suite of the Gentry to him,
And the desire of the Nobles.

Scicini. I wish no better, then haue him hold that purpose, and to put it in execution.

Brutus. 'Tis most like he will.

Scicini. It shall be to him then, as our good wills; a sure destruction.

Brutus. So it must fall out
To him, or our Authorities, for an end.
We must suggest the People, in what hatred
He still hath held them: that to's power he would Haue made them Mules, silenc'd their Pleaders,
And dispropertied their Freedomes; holding them,
In humane Action, and Capacitie,
Of no more Soule, nor fittnesse for the World,
Then Cammels in their Warre, who haue their Prouand
Onely for bearing Burthens, and fore blowes
For sinking vnder them.

Scicini. This (as you say) suggested,
At some time, when his soaring Insolence
Shall teach the People, which time shall not want,
If he be put vpon't, and that's as easie,
As to set Dogges on Sheepe, will be his fire

To kindle their dry Stubble: and their Blaze
Shall darken him for euer.

Enter a Messenger.

Brutus. What's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitoll:

'Tis thought, that Martius shall be Confull:

I haue seene the dumbe men throng to see him,
And the blind to heare him speake: Matrons fling Gloues,
Ladies and Maids their Scarfes, and Handkerchers,
Vpon him as he pass'd: the Nobles headed
As to Ioues Statue, and the Commons made
A Shower, and Thunder, with their Caps, and Showts:
I neuer saw the like.

Brutus. Let's to the Capitoll,
And carry with vs Eares and Eyes for th' time,
But Hearts for the event.

Scicini. Haue with you.

Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions, as it were, in the Capitoll.

1. Off. Come, come, they are almost here: how many stand for Consulships?

2. Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of euery one,
Coriolanus will carry it.

1. Off. That's a brave fellow: but hee's vengeance prowd, and loues not the common people.

2. Off. 'Faith, there hath bene many great men that haue flatter'd the people, who ne're loued them; and there be many that they haue loued, they know not wherefore:
so that if they loue they know not why, they haue vpon no better a ground. Therefore, for Coriolanus neyther to care whether they loue, or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he ha's in their disposition, and out of his Noble carelesnesse lets them plainly see't.

1. Off. If he did not care whether he had their loue, or no, hee waued indifferently, twixt doing them neyther good, nor harme: but hee seekes their hate with greater deuotion, then they can render it him; and leaues nothing vndone, that may fully discouer him their opposite. Now to seeme to affect the mallice and displeasure of the People, is as bad, as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their loue.

2. Off. Hee hath deserued worthily of his Countrey, and his assent is not by such easie degrees as those, who haue bene supple and courteous to the People, Bon-netted, without any further deed, to haue them at all into their estimation, and report: but hee hath so planted his Honors in their Eyes, and his actions in their Hearts, that for their Tongues to be silent, and not confesse so much, were a kinde of ingratefull Iniurie: to report otherwise, were a Mallice, that giuing it selfe the Lye, would plucke reprooffe and rebuke from euery Eare that heard it.

1. Off. No more of him, hee's a worthy man: make way, they are coming.

A Sennet. Enter the Patricians, and the Tribunes of the People, Litours before them: Coriolanus, Men-enius, Cominius the Confull, Scicinius and Brutus take their places by themselves: Coriolanus stands.

Menen. Having determin'd of the Volces,
And to send for Titus Lartius: it remains,
As the maine Point of this our after-meeting,

To

To gratifie his Noble seruice; that hath
Thus stood for his Countrey. Therefore please you,
Most reuerend and graue Elders, to desire
The present Confull, and last Generall,
In our well-found Successes, to report
A little of that worthy Worke, perform'd
By Martius Caius Coriolanus: whom
We met here, both to thanke, and to remember,
With Honors like himselfe.

1. Sen. Speake, good Cominius:
Leaue nothing out for length, and make vs thinke
Rather our states defectiue for requitall,
Then we to stretch it out. Masters a'th' People,
We doe request your kindest cares: and after
Your lowest motion toward the common Body,
To yeeld what passes here.

Scicini. We are conuented vpon a pleasing Treatie, and haue hearts inclinable to honor and aduance the Theame of our Assembly.

Brutus. Which the rather wee shall be blest to doe, if he remember a kinder value of the People, then he hath hereto priz'd them at.

Menen. That's off, that's off: I would you rather had been silent: Please you to heare Cominius speake?

Brutus. Most willingly: but yet my Caution was more pertinent then the rebuke you giue it.

Menen. He loues your People, but eye him not to be their Bed-fellow: Worthie Cominius speake.

Coriolanus rises, and offers to goe away.

Nay, keepe your place.

Senat. Sit Coriolanus: neuer shame to heare
What you haue Nobly done.

Coriol. Your Honors pardon:

I had rather haue my Wounds to heale againe,
Then heare say how I got them.

Brutus. Sir, I hope my words dis-bench'd you not?

Coriol. No Sir: yet oft,
When blowes haue made me stay, I fled from words.
You tooth'd not, therefore hurt not: but your People,
I loue them as they weigh—

Menen. Pray now sit downe.

Corio. I had rather haue one scratch my Head i'th' Sun,
When the Alarum were strucke; then idly sit
To heare my Nothings monster'd.

Exit Coriolanus

Menen. Masters of the People,

Your multiplying Spawne, how can he flatter?

That's thousand to one good one, when you now see
He had rather venture all his Limbes for Honor,
Then on ones Eares to heare it. Proceed Cominius.

Com. I shall lacke voyce: the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be vtter'd feebly: it is held,
That Valour is the chiefest Vertue,
And most dignifies the hauer: if it be,
The man I speake of, cannot in the World
Be singly counter-boys'd. At sixteene yeeres,
When Tarquinius made a Head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the marke of others: our then Dictator,
Whom with all prayse I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian Shinne he drone
The brizled Lippes before him: he bestrid
An o're-prest Roman, and i'th' Confull view
Slew three Opposers: Tarquinius selfe he met,
And struke him on his Knee: in that dayes feates,
When he might act the Woman in the Scene,
He prou'd best man i'th' field; and for his meed
Was Brow-bound with the Oake. His Pupill age

Man-entred thus, he waxed like a Sea,
And in the brunt of seuentene Battails since,
He lurcht all Swords of the Garland: for this last,
Before, and in Corioles, let me say
I cannot speake him home: he stop't the flyers,
And by his rare example made the Coward
Turne terror into sport: as Weeds before
A Vessell vnder sayle, so men obey'd,
And fell below his Stem: his Sword, Deaths stampe,
Where it did marke, it tooke from face to foot:
He was a thing of Blood, whose euery motion
Was tim'd with dying Cryes: alone he entred
The mortall Gate of th' Citie, which he painted
With shunlesse destinie: aydelesse came off,
And with a sudden re-inforcement stricke
Corioles like a Planet: now all's his,
When by and by the dinne of Warre gan pierce
His readie sence: then straight his doubled spirit
Requickned what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the Battaille came he, where he did
Runne reeking o're the liues of men, as if 'twere
A perpetuall spoyle: and till we call'd
Both Field and Citie ours, he neuer stood
To ease his Brest with panting.

Menen. Worthy man.

Senat. He cannot but with measure fit the Honors which we deuisse him.

Com. Our spoyles he kickt at,
And look'd vpon things precious, as they were
The common Muck of the World: he courts lesse
Then Miserie it selfe would giue; rewards his deeds
With doing them, and is content
To spend the time, to end it.

Menen. Hee's right Noble, let him be call'd for.

Senat. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appeare.

Enter Coriolanus.

Menen. The Senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd to make thee Confull.

Corio. I doe owe them still my Life, and Seruices.

Menen. It then remains, that you doe speake to the People.

Corio. I doe beseech you,

Let me o're-leape that custome: for I cannot Put on the Gowne, stand naked, and entreat them
For my Wounds sake, to giue their sufferage:

Please you that I may passe this doing.

Scicini. Sir, the People must haue their Voyces;

Neyther will they bate one ior of Ceremonie.

Menen. Put them not too't:

Pray you goe fit you to the Custome,
And take to you, as your Predecessors haue,
Your Honor with your forme.

Corio. It is a part that I shall blush in acting;
And might well be taken from the People.

Brutus. Marke you that.

Corio. To brag vnto them, thus I did, and thus Shew them th'vaking Skarres, which I should hide;
As if I had receiu'd them for the hyre
Of their breath onely.

Menen. Doe not stand vpon't:
We recommend to you Tribunes of the People
Our purpose to them, and to our Noble Confull
Wish we all Ioy, and Honor.

Senat. To

Senat. To

Senat. To Coriolanus come all ioy and Honor.
Flourish Cornets.

Then Exeunt. Menet Sicinius and Brutus.

Brut. You see how he intends to vse the people.

Sicim. May they perceiue's intent: he wil require them
As if he did contemne what he requested,
Should be in them to giue.

Brut. Come, we'll informe them
Of our proceedings heere on th' Market place,
I know they do attend vs.

Enter seven or eight Citizens.

1. Cit. Once if he do require our voyces, wee ought not to deny him.

2. Cit. We may Sir if we will.

3. Cit. We haue power in our selues to do it, but it is a power that we haue no power to do: For, if hee shew vs his wounds, and tell vs his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speake for them: So if he tel vs his Noble deeds, we must also tell him our Noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingratfull, were to make a Monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring our selues to be monstrous members.

1. Cit. And to make vs no better thought of a little helpe will serue: for once we stood vp about the Corne, he himselfe stucke not to call vs the many-headed Multitude.

3. Cit. We haue beene call'd so of many, not that our heads are some browne, some blacke, some Abram, some bald; but that our wits are so diuersly Coulord; and true-ly I thinke, if all our wittes were to issue out of one Scull, they would flye East, West, North, South, and their consent of one direct way, should be at once to all the points a'th' Compasse.

2. Cit. Thinke you so? Which way do you iudge, my wit would flye.

3. Cit. Nay your wit will not so soone out as another mans will, 'tis strongly wadg'd vp in a blocke-head: but if it were at liberty, 'twould sure Southward.

2. Cit. Why that way?

3. Cit. To loose it selfe in a Fogge, where being three parts melted away with rotten Dewes, the fourth would returne for Conscience sake, to helpe to get thee a Wife.

2. Cit. You are neuer without your trickes, you may, you may.

3. Cit. Are you all resolu'd to giue your voyces? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it, I say. If hee would incline to the people, there was neuer a worthier
man.

Enter Coriolanus in a gowne of Humility, with Menenius.

Heere he comes, and in the Gowne of humility, marke his behaviour: we are not to stay altogether, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, & by threes.
He's to make his requests by particulars, wherein euery one of vs has a single Honor, in giuing him our own voices with our owne tongues, therefore follow me, and he direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content.

Men. Oh Sir, you are not right: haue you not knowne
The worthiest men haue done't?

Corio. What must I say, I pray Sir?

Plague vpon't, I cannot bring

My tongue to such a pace. Looke Sir, my wounds,

I got them in my Countries Service, when

Some certaine of your Brethren roar'd, and ranne

From th' noise of our owne Drummes.

Menet. Oh me the Gods, you must not speak of that,
You must desire them to thinke vpon you.

Coriol. Thinke vpon me? Hang 'em,
I would they would forget me, like the Vertues
Which our Diuines lose by em.

Men. You'll marre all,

He leaue you: Pray you speake to em, I pray you
In wholesome manner.

Enter three of the Citizens.

Corio. Bid them wash their Faces,
And keepe their teeth cleane: So, heere comes a brace,
You know the cause (Sir) of my standing heere.

3. Cit. We do Sir, tell vs what hath brought you too't.

Corio. Mine owne desert.

2. Cit. Your owne desert.

Corio. I, but mine owne desire.

3. Cit. How not your owne desire?

Corio. No Sir, 'twas neuer my desire yet to trouble the poore with begging.

3. Cit. You must thinke if we giue you any thing, we hope to gaine by you.

Corio. Well then I pray, your price a'th' Consulship.

1. Cit. The price is, to aske it kindly.

Corio. Kindly sir, I pray let me ha't: I haue wounds to shew you, which shall bee yours in priuate: your good voice Sir, what say you?

2. Cit. You shall ha't worthy Sir.

Corio. A match Sir, there's in all two worthie voyces begg'd: I haue your Almes, Adieu.

3. Cit. But this is something odde.

2. Cit. And 'twere to giue againe: but 'tis no matter.

Exeunt. Enter two other Citizens.

Coriol. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voyces, that I may bee Consul, I haue heere the Customarie Gowne.

1. You haue deserued Nobly of your Country, and you haue not deserued Nobly.

Coriol. Your Enigma.

1. You haue bin a course to her enemies, you haue bin a Rod to her Friends, you haue not indeede loued the Common people.

Coriol. You should account mee the more Vertuous, that I haue not bin common in my Loue, I will sir flatter my sworne Brother the people to earne a deerer estimation of them, 'tis a condition they account gentle: & since the wisdom of their choice, is rather to haue my Hat, then my Heart, I will practice the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfetly, that is sir, I will counter-fet the bewitchment of some popular man, and giue it bountifull to the desirers: Therefore beseech you, I may be Consul.

2. Wee hope to finde you our friend: and therefore giue you our voyces heartily.

1. You haue receyued, many, wounds for your Coun-treys.

Coriol. I will not Seale your knowledge with shewing them. I will make much of your voyces, and so trouble you no farther.

Both. The Gods giue you ioy Sir heartily.

Coriol. Most sweet Voyces:

Better it is to dye, better to sterue,

Then craue the higher, which first we do deserue.

Why in this Wooluith tongue should I stand heere,

To begge of Hob and Dicke, that does appeere

Their

Their needlesse Vouches: Custome calls me too't.
What Custome wills in all things, should we doo't?

The Dust on antique Time would lye vnswep't,
And mountainous Error be too highly heapt,
For Truth to o're-peere. Rather then foole it so,
Let the high Office and the Honor go

To one that would doe thus. I am halfe through,
The one part suffered, the other will I doe.

Enter three Citizens more.

Here come moe Voyces.

Your Voyces? for your Voyces I haue fought,
Watch for your Voyces: for your Voyces, beare
Of Wounds, two dozen odde: Battailies thrice six

I haue seene, and heard of: for your Voyces,
Haue done many things, some lesse, some more:
Your Voyces? Indeede I would be Consul.

1. Cit. Hee ha's done Nobly, and cannot goe without any honest mans Voyce.

2. Cit. Therefore let him be Consul: the Gods giue him ioy, and make him good friend to the People.

All. Amen, Amen. God saue thee, Noble Consul.

Corio. Worthy Voyces.

Enter Menenius, with Brutus and Sicinius.

Menet. You haue stood your Limitation:
And the Tribunes endue you with the Peoples Voyce,

Remaines, that in th' Officiall Markes inuested,
You anon doe meet the Senate.

Corio. Is this done?

Sicim. The Custome of Request you haue discharg'd:
The People doe admit you, and are summon'd

To meet anon, vpon your approbation.

Corio. Where? at the Senate-house?

Sicim. There, Coriolanus.

Corio. May I change these Garments?

Sicim. You may, Sir.

Corio. That he straight do: and knowing my selfe again,

Repayre toth' Senate-house.

Menet. He keepe you company. Will you along?

Brut. We stay here for the People.

Sicim. Fare you well. Exeunt Coriol. and Menet.

He ha's it now: and by his Lookes, me thinks,

Tis warme at's heart.

Brut. With a proud heart he wore his humble Weeds:

Will you dismisst the People?

Enter the Plebeians.

Sicim. How now, my Masters, haue you chose this man?

1. Cit. He ha's our Voyces, Sir.

Brut. We pray the Gods, he may deserue your loues.

2. Cit. Amen, Sir: to my poore vnworthy notice,

Hemock'd vs, when he begg'd our Voyces.

3. Cit. Certainly, he flowted vs downe-right.

1. Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech: he did not mock vs.

2. Cit. Not one amongst vs, saue your selfe, but sayes

He's vs scornfully: he should haue shew'd vs

His Marks of Merit, Wounds receiv'd for's Country.

Sicim. Why to he did, I am sure.

All. No, no: no man saw 'em.

3. Cit. Hee said hee had Wounds,

Which he could shew in priuate:

And with his Hat, thus waving it in scorne,

I would be Consul, sayes he: aged Custome,

But by your Voyces, will not so permit me.

Your Voyces therefore: when we graunted that,

Here was, I thanke you for your Voyces, thanke you

Your most sweet Voyces: now you haue left your Voyces,
I haue no further with you. Was not this mockerie?

Sicim. Why eyther were you ignorant to see't?
Or seeing it, of such Childish friendlinesse,

To yeeld your Voyces?

Brut. Could you not haue told him,

As you were lesson'd: When he had no Power,

But was a pettie seruant to the State,

He was your Enemy, euer spake against

Your Liberties, and the Charters that you beare

I'th' Body of the Weale: and now arriving

A place of Potencie, and sway o'th' State,

If he should still malignantly remaine

Past Foe toth' Plebey, your Voyces might

Be Curses to your selues. You should haue said,

That as his worthy deeds did clayme no lesse

Then what he stood for: so his gracious nature

Would thinke vpon you, for your Voyces,

And translate his Mallice towards you, into Loue,

Standing your friendly Lord.

Sicim. Thus to haue said,

As you were fore-aduis'd, had toucht his Spirit,

And try'd his Inclination: from him pluckt

Eyther his gracious Promise, which you might

As cause had call'd you vp, haue held him to;

Or else it would haue gall'd his fury nature,

Which easily endures not Article,

Tying him to ought, so putting him to Rage,

You should haue ta'en th' aduantage of his Choller,

And pat's'd him vnlected.

Brut. Did you perceiue,

He did sollicite you in free Contempt,

When he did need your Loues: and doe you thinke,

That his Contempt shall not be brushing to you,

When he hath power to crush? Why, had your Bodyes

No Heart among you? Or had you Tongues, to cry

Against the Rectorship of Iudgement?

Sicim. Haue you ere now, deny'd the asker:

And now againe, of him that did not aske, but mock,

Bestow your su'd. for Tongues?

3. Cit. Hee's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2. Cit. And will deny him:

He haue five hundred Voyces of that sound.

1. Cit. I twice five hundred, & their friends, to piece 'em.

Brut. Get you hence instantly, and tell those friends,

They haue chose a Consul, that will from them take

Their Liberties, make them of no more Voyce

Then Dogges, that are as often beat for barking,

As therefore kept to doe so.

Sicim. Let them assemblé: and on a safer Iudgement,

All reuoke your ignorant election: Enforce his Pride,

And his old Hate vnto you: besides, forget not

With what Contempt he wore the humble Weed,

How in his Suit he scorn'd you: but your Loues,

Thinking vpon his Seruices, tooke from you

Th' apprehension of his present portance,

Which most gibingly, vngraciously, he did fashion

After the inueterate Hate he beares you.

Brut. Lay a fault on vs, your Tribunes,

That we labour'd (no impediment betweene)

But that you must cast your Election on him.

Sicim. Say you chose him, more after our commandment,

Then as guided by your owne true affections, and that

Your Minds pre-occupy'd with what you rather must do,

Then what you should, made you against the graine

To Voyce him Consul. Lay the fault on vs.

b b Brut. I.

Brut. I spare vs not: Say, we read Lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serue his Countrey,
How long continued, and what stock he springs of,
The Noble House o'th' Martians: from whence came
That Ancus Martius, Numa's Daughters Sonne:
Who after great Hosilius here was King,
Of the same House Publius and Quintus were,
That our best Water, brought by Conduits hither,
And Nobly nam'd, so twice being Censor,
Was his great Ancestor.

Scioin. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought,
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances: but you haue found,
Skaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy; and reuoke
Your suddaine approbation.

Brut. Say you ne're had don't,
(Harpe on that still) but by our putting on:
And presently, when you haue drawne your number,
Repaire toth' Capitoll.

All. We will so: almost all repent in their election.

Exeunt Plebeians.

Brut. Let them goe on:
This Mutinie were better put in hazard,
Then stay past doubt, for greater:
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both obserue and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Scioin. Toth' Capitoll, come:
We will be there before the streame o'th' People:
And this shall seeme, as partly 'tis, their owne,
Which we haue goaded on-ward. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, all the Gentry,
Cominius, Titus Lati, and other Senators.

Corio. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head,
Lati. He had, my Lord, and that it was which caus'd
Our swifter Composition.

Corio. So then the Volces stand but as at first,
Readie when time shall prompt them, to make roade
Vpon's againe.

Com. They are worne (Lord Confull) so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their Banners waue againe.

Corio. Saw you Aufidius?

Lati. On safegard he came to me, and did curse
Against the Volces, for they had so vildly
Yielded the Towne: he is rettyred to Antium.

Corio. Spoke he of me?

Lati. He did, my Lord.

Corio. How? what?

Lati. How often he had met you Sword to Sword:
That of all things vpon the Earth, he hated
Your person most: That he would pawne his fortunes
To hopelesse restitution, so he might Be call'd your Vanquisher.

Corio. At Antium liues he?

Lati. At Antium.

Corio. I wish I had a cause to seeke him there,
To oppose his hatred fully. Welcome home.

Enter Scioin and Brutus.

Behold, these are the Tribunes of the People,
The Tongues o'th' Common Mouth. I do despise them:

For they doe pranke them in Authoritie,
Against all Noble sufferance.

Scioin. Passe no further.

Cor. Hah? what is that?

Brut. It will be dangerous to goe on-- No further.

Corio. What makes this change?

Mene. The matter?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the Noble, and the Common?

Brut. Cominius, no.

Corio. Haue I had Childrens Voyces?

Senat. Tribunes giue way, he shall toth' Market place.

Brut. The People are incens'd against him.

Scioin. Stop, or all will fall in broyle.

Corio. Are these your Heard?

Must these haue Voyces, that can yeeld them now,
And straight disclaim their tounge? what are your Offices?
You being their Mouthes, why rule you not their Teeth?
Haue you not set them on?

Mene. Be calme, be calme.

Corio. It is a purpos'd thing, and growes by Plot,
To cutbe the will of the Nobilitie:
Suffer it, and liue with such as cannot rule,
Nor euer will be ruled.

Brut. Call't not a Plot:

The People cry you mockt them: and of late,
When Corne was giuen them gratis, you repin'd,
Scandal'd the Suppliants: for the People, call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to Noblenesse.

Corio. Why this was knowne before.

Brut. Not to them all.

Corio. Haue you inform'd them thence?

Brut. How? I informe them?

Com. You are like to doe such businesse.

Brut. Not vnlike each way to better yours.

Corio. Why then should I be Confull? by yond Clouds
Let me deferue so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow Tribune.

Scioin. You shew too much of that,
For which the People stirre: if you will passe
To where you are bound, you must enquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit,
Or neuer be so Noble as a Confull,
Nor yoke with him for Tribune.

Mene. Let's be calme.

Com. The People are abus'd: set on, this paltring Becomes not Rome: nor ha's Coriolanus
Deferu'd this so dishonor'd Rub, layd falsely I'th' plaine Way of his Merit.

Corio. Tell me of Corne: this was my speech,
And I will speak't againe.

Mene. Not now, not now.

Senat. Not in this heat, Sir, now.

Corio. Now as I liue, I will.

My Nobler friends, I craue their pardons:

For the mutable ranke-sented Meynie,

Let them regard me, as I doe not flatter,

And therein behold themselves: I say againe,

In soothing them, we nourish gainst our Senate

The Cockle of Rebellion, Insolence, Sedition,

Which we our selues haue plow'd for, sow'd & scatter'd,

By mingling them with vs, the honor'd Number,

Who lack not Vertue, no, nor Power, but that

Which they haue giuen to Beggars.

Mene. Well, no more.

Senat. No more words, we beseech you.

Corio. How? no more?

As for my Countrey, I haue shed my blood,
Not fearing outward force: So shall my Lungs
Coine words till their decay, against those Meazels
Which we disdaine should Tetter vs, yet fought
The very way to catch them.

Brut. You speake a'th' people, as if you were a God,
To punish; Not a man, of their Infirmitie.

Scioin. 'Twere well we let the people know't.

Mene. What, what? His Choller?

Cor. Choller? Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Ioue, 'twould be my minde.

Scioin. It is a minde that shall remain a poison

Where it is: not payson any further.

Corio. Shall remaine?

Heare you this Triton of the Minnotes? Marke you
His absolute Shall?

Com. 'Twas from the Cannon.

Cor. Shall? O God! but most vnwise Patricians: why

You graue, but wreakelesse Senators, haue you thus

Giuen Hydra heere to choole an Officer,

That with his peremptory Shall, being but

The borne, and noise o'th' Monsters, wants not spirit

To say, hee'l turne your Current in a ditch,

And make your Channell his? If he haue power,

Then wale your Ignorance: If none, awake

Your dangerous Lenity: If you are Learn'd,

Be not as common Fooles: if you are not,

Let them haue Cushions by you. You are Plebeians,

If they be Senators: and they are no lesse,

When both your voices blended, the great'st taste

Most pallates theirs. They choole their Magistrate,

And such a one as he, who puts his Shall,

His popular Shall, against a grauer Bench

Then euer frown'd in Greece. By Ioue himselfe,

It makes the Confulls base; and my Soule akes

To know, when two Authorities are vp,

Neither Supream; How soone Confusion

May enter 'twixt the gap of Both, and take

The one by th' other.

Com. Well, on to th' Market place.

Corio. Who euer gaue that Counsell, to giue forth

The Corne a'th' Store-house gratis, as 'twas vs'd

Sometime in Greece.

Mene. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. Though there the people had more absolute powre

I say they noristh disobedience: fed, the ruin of the State.

Brut. Why shall the people giue

One that speaks thus, their voyce?

Corio. Ile giue my Reasons,

More worthier then their Voyces. They know the Corne

Was not our recompence, resting well assur'd

They ne're did seruice for't: being prest to'th' Warre,

Even when the Nauell of the State was touch'd,

They would not thred the Gates: This kinde of Seruice

Did not deferue Corne gratis. Being i'th' Warre,

There Mutinies and Reuolts, wherein they shew'd

Most Valour, spoke not for them. Th' Accusation

Which they haue often made against the Senate,

All cause vnborne, could neuer be the Native

Of our so franke Donation. Well, what then?

How shall this Bosome-multiplied, digest

The Senates Courtresie? Let deeds expresse

What's like to be their words. We did request it,

We are the greater pole, and in true feare

They gaue vs our demands. Thus we debase

The Nature of our Seats, and make the Rabble

Call our Cares, Feares; which will in time
Breake ope the Lockes a'th' Senate, and bring in
The Crowes to pecke the Eagles.

Mene. Come enough.

Brut. Enough, with ouer measure.

Corio. No, take more.

What may be sworne by, both Diuine and Humane,
Seale what I end withall. This double worship,
Whereon part do's disdaine with cause, the other
Insult without all reason: where Gentry, Title, wisdom
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no

Of generall Ignorance, it must omit

Reall Necessities, and giue way the while

To vnstable Slightnesse. Purpose to barr'd, it followes,

Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore beseech you,

You that will be lesse fearefull, then discreet,

That loue the fundamentall part of State

More then you doubt the change on't: That preferre

A Noble life, before a Long, and Wish,

To iumpe a Body with a dangerous Physicke,

That's sure of death without it: at once plucke out

The Multitudinous Tongue, let them not like

The sweet which is their payson. Your dishonor

Mangles true iudgement, and bereaues the State

Of that Integrity which should becom't:

Not hauing the power to do the good it would

For th'ill which doth controul't.

Brut. Has said enough.

Scioin. Ha's spoken like a Traitor, and shall answer

As Traitors do.

Corio. Thou wretch, despight ore-whelme thee:

What should the people do with these bald Tribunes?

On whom depending, their obedience failes

To'th' greater Bench, in a Rebellion:

When what's not meet, but what must be, was Law,

Then were they chosen: in a better houre,

Let what is meet, be said: it must be meet,

And throw their power i'th' dust.

Brut. Manifest Treason.

Scioin. This a Confull? No.

Enter an Edile.

Brut. The Ediles hee: Let him be apprehended:

Scioin. Go call the people, in whose name thy Selfe

Attach thee as a Traitorous Innouator:

A Foe to'th' publike Weale. Obey I charge thee,

And follow to thine answer.

Corio. Hence old Goat.

All. Wee'l Surety him.

Com. Ag'd sir, hands off.

Corio. Hence rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy Garments.

Scioin. Helpe ye Citizens.

Enter a rabble of Plebeians with the Ediles.

Mene. On both sides more respect.

Scioin. Heere's hee, that would take from you all your power.

Brut. Seize him Ediles!

All. Downe with him, downe with him.

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons:

They all bustle about Coriolanus.

Tribunes, Patricians, Citizens: what ho:

Scioin, Brutus, Coriolanus, Citizens.

All. Peace, peace, peace, stay, hold, peace.

Mene. What is about to be? I am out of Breath;

Confusions neere, I cannot speake. You, Tribunes

To'th' people: Coriolanus, patience: Speake good Scioin.

Bb 2

Scioin.

Scii. Heare me, People peace.
All. Let's here our Tribune: peace, speake, speake, speake.
Scii. You are at point to lose your Liberties: Martius would haue all from you; Martius, Whom late you haue nam'd for Confull.
Mene. Fic, fie, fie, this is the way to kindle, not to quench.
Sena. To vnbuild the Citie, and to lay all flat.
Scii. What is the Citie, but the People?
All. True, the People are the Citie.
Brut. By the consent of all, we were establish'd the Peoples Magistrates.
All. You so remaine.
Mene. And so are like to doe.
Com. That is the way to lay the Citie flat, To bring the Roofe to the Foundation, And burie all, which yet distinctly raunges In heapes, and piles of Ruine.
Scii. This deserues Death.
Brut. Or let vs stand to our Authoritie, Or let vs lose it: we doe here pronounce, Vpon the part o'th' People, in whose power We were elected theirs, Martius is worthy Of present Death.
Scii. Therefore lay hold of him: Beare him roth' Rock Tarpeian, and from thence Into destruction cast him.
Brut. Adiles seize him.
All Ple. Yeeld Martius, yeeld.
Mene. Heare me one word, 'beseech you Tribunes, heare me but a word.
Adiles. Peace, peace.
Mene. Be that you seeme, truly your Countries friend, And temporarily proceed to what you would Thus violently redresse.
Brut. Sir, those cold wayes, That seeme like prudent-helpe, are very poysonous, Where the Disease is violent. Lay hands vpon him, And beare him to the Rock. Corio. drawes his Sword.
Corio. No, Ile die here:
 There's some among you haue beheld me fighting, Come trie vpon your selues, what you haue scene me.
Mene. Downe with that Sword, Tribunes withdraw a while.
Brut. Lay hands vpon him.
Mene. Helpe Martius, helpe: you that be noble, helpe him young and old.
All. Downe with him, downe with him. Exeunt.
In this Matinie, the Tribunes, the Adiles, and the People are beat in.
Mene. Goe, get you to our House: be gone, away, All will be naught else.
2. Sena. Get you gone.
Com. Stand fast, we haue as many friends as enemies.
Mene. Shall it be put to that?
Sena. The Gods forbid:
 I prythee noble friend, home to thy House, Leane vs to cure this Cause.
Mene. For 'tis a Sore vpon vs, You cannot Tent your selfe: be gone, 'beseech you.
Corio. Come Sir, along with vs.
Mene. I would they were Barbarians, as they are, Though in Rome litter'd as not Romans, as they are not, Though calu'd i'th' Porch o'th' Capitoll: Be gone, put not your worthy Rage into your Tongue,

One time will owe another.
Corio. On faire ground, I could beat fortie of them.
Mene. I could my selfe take vp a Brace o'th' best of them, yea, the two Tribunes.
Com. But now 'tis oddes beyond Arithmetick, And Manhood is call'd Foolerie, when it stands Against a falling Fabrick. Will you hence, Before the Tagge returne? whose Rage doth rend Like interrupted Waters, and o're-beare What they are vs'd to beare.
Mene. Pray you be gone:
 Ile trie whether my old Wit be in request With those that haue but little: this must be patche With Cloth of any Colour.
Com. Nay, come away. Exeunt Coriolanus and Cominius.
Patri. This man ha's marr'd his fortune.
Mene. His nature is too noble for the World: He would not flatter Neptune for his Trident, Or Ioue, for's power to Thunder: his Heart's his Mouth, What his Brest forges, that his Tongue must vent, And being angry, does forget that euer He heard the Name of Death. A Noise within.
Patri. I would they were a bed.
Mene. I would they were in Tyber.
 What the vengeance, could he not speake 'em faire?
Enter Brutus and Sicinius with the rabble againe.
Sicini. Where is this Viper, That would depopulate the city, & be cuery man himselfe?
Mene. You worthy Tribunes.
Sicini. He shall be throwne downe the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands: he hath resisted Law, And therefore Law shall scorne him further Trial: Then the feuerity of the publike Power, Which he so sets at naught.
1 Cit. He shall well know the Noble Tribunes are The peoples mouths, and we their hands.
All. He shall sure ont.
Mene. Sir, sir, Sicini. Peace.
Me. Do not cry hauocke, where you shold but hunt With modest warrant.
Sicini. Sir, how com'st that you haue holpe To make this rescue?
Mene. Heere me speake? As I do know The Consuls worthinesse, so can I name his Faults.
Sicini. Consull? what Consull?
Mene. The Consull Coriolanus.
Brut. He Consull.
All. No, no, no, no, no.
Mene. If by the Tribunes leaue, And yours good people, I may be heard, I would craue a word or two, The which shall turne you to no further harme, Then so much losse of time.
Sic. Speake brecefly then, For we are peremptory to dispatch This Viperous Traitor: to elect him hence Were but one danger, and to keepe him heere Our certaine death: therefore it is decreed, He dyes to night.
Mene. Now the good Gods forbid, That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude Towards her deserued Children, is enroll'd In Ioues owne Booke, like an vnaturall Dam Should now eate vp her owne.

Sicini. He's a Disease that must be cut away.
Mene. On he's a Limbe, that ha's but a Disease Mortall, to cut it off: to cure it, easie.
 What ha's he done to Rome, that's worthy death? Killing our Enemies, the blood he hath lost (Which I dare vouch, is more then that he hath By many an Ounce) he dropp'd it for his Country: And what is left, to loose it by his Countrey, Were to vs all that doo't, and suffer it A brand to th'end a'th World.
Sicini. This is cleane kammie.
Brut. Meerely awry:
 When he did loue his Country, it honour'd him.
Mene. The seruice of the foote Being once gangren'd, is not then respected For what before it was.
Brut. Wee'l heare no more: Pursue him to his house, and plucke him thence, Least his infection being of catching nature, Spred further.
Mene. One word more, one word: This Tiger-footed-rage, when it shall find The harme of vnscan'd swiftnesse, will (too late) Tye Leaden pounds too's heeles. Proceed by Proesse, Least parties (as he is belou'd) breake out, And facke great Rome with Romanes.
Brut. If it were so?
Sicini. What do ye talke?
 Haue we not had a taste of his Obedience? Our Ediles smot: our selues resisted: come.
Mene. Consider this: He ha's bin bred i'th' Warres Since a could draw a Sword, and is ill-schoold In boulded Language: Meale and Bran together He throwes without distinction. Giue me leaue, Ile go to him, and vndertake to bring him in peace, Where he shall answer by a lawfull Forne (In peace) to his vtmost perill.
1. Sen. Noble Tribunes, It is the humane way: the other course Will proue to bloody: and the end of it, Vnknowne to the Beginning.
Sic. Noble Mene, be you then as the peoples officer: Masters, lay downe your Weapons.
Brut. Go not home.
Sic. Meet on the Market place; wee'l attend you there: Where if you bring not Martius, wee'l proceede In our first way.
Mene. Ile bring him to you.
 Let me desire your company: he must come, Or what is worst will follow.
Sena. Pray you let's to him. Exeunt Omnes.
Enter Coriolanus with Nobles.
Corio. Let them pull all about mine eares, present me Death on the Wheele, or at wilde Horses heeles, Or pile ten hilles on the Tarpeian Rocke, That the precipitation might downe stretch Below the beame of fight; yet will I still Be thus to them. Enter Volumentia.
Noble. You do the Nobler.
Corio. I muse my Mother Do's not approue me further, who was wont To call them Wolven Vassalles, things created To buy and sell with Groats, to shew bare heads In Congregations, to yawne, be still, and wonder, When one but of my ordinance stood vp

To speake of Peace, or Warre. I talke of you, Why did you wish me milder? Would you haue me False to my Nature? Rather say, I play The man I am.

Volunt. Oh sir, sir, sir, I would haue had you put your power well on Before you had worne it out.

Corio. Let go.

Vol. You might haue beene enough the man you are, With struing lesse to be so: Lesser had bin The things of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd them how ye were dispos'd Ere they lack'd power to crosse you.

Corio. Let them hang.

Volunt. I, and burne too.

Enter Menenius with the Senators.

Mene. Come, come, you haue bin too rough, something too rough: you must returne, and mend it.

Sen. There's no remedy, Vnlesse by not so doing, our good Citie Cleaue in the midd'l, and perishe.

Volunt. Pray be counsaill'd: I haue a heart as little apt as yours, But yet a braine, that leades my vie of Anger To better vantage.

Mene. Well said, Noble woman: Before he should thus stoop to th' heart, but that The violent fit a'th' time craues it as Physicke For the whole State; I would put mine Armour on, Which I can scarcely beare.

Corio. What must I do?

Mene. Returne to th' Tribunes.

Corio. Well, what then? what then?

Mene. Repent, what you haue spoke.

Corio. For them, I cannot do it to the Gods, Must I then doo't to them?

Volunt. You are too absolute, Though therein you can neuer be too Noble, But when extremities speake. I haue heard you say, Honor and Policy, like vnseuer'd Friends, I'th' Warre do grow together: Grant that, and tell me In Peace, what each of them by th' other loose, That they combine not there?

Corio. Tush, tush.

Mene. A good demand.

Volunt. If it be Honor in your Warres, to seeme The same you are not, which for your best ends You adopt your policy: How is it lesse or worse That it shall hold Companionship in Peace With Honour, as in Warre; since that to both It stands in like request.

Corio. Why force you this?

Volunt. Because, that

Now it lyes you on to speake to th' people: Not by your owne instruction, nor by th' matter Which your heart prompts you, but with such words That are but roared in your Tongue; Though but Bastards, and Syllables Of no allowance, to your bosomes truth. Now, this no more dishonors you at all, Then to take in a Towne with gentle words, Which else would put you to your fortune, and The hazard of much blood.

I would dissemble with my Nature, where My Fortunes and my Friends at stake, requir'd I should do so in Honor. I am in this

bb 3

Your

Your Wife, your Sonne: These Senators, the Nobles,
And you, will rather shew our generall Lowts,
How you can frowne, then spend a fawne vpon 'em,
For the inheritance of their Loues, and safegard
Of what that want might ruine.

Mene. Noble Lady,
Come goe with vs, speake faire: you may saue so,
Nor what is dangerous present, but the losse
Of what is past.

Volum. I pry thee now, my Sonne,
Goe to them, with this Bonnet in thy hand,
And thus farre hauing stretcht it (here be with them)
Thy Knee bussing the stones: for in such businesse
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th'ignorant
More learned then the eares, waung thy head,
Which often thus correct thy stout heart,
Now humble as the ripest Mulberry,
That will not hold the handling: or say to them,
Thou art their Souldier, and being bred in broyles,
Hast not the soft way, which thou do'st confesse
Were fit for thee to vse, as they to clayme,
In asking their good Loues, but thou wilt frame
Thy selfe (forsooth) hereafter theirs so farre,
As thou hast power and person.

Mene. This but done,
Euen as she speakes, why their hearts were yours:
For they haue Pardons, being ask'd, as free,
As words to little purpose.

Volum. Prythee now,
Goe, and be rul'd: although I know thou hadst rather Follow thine Enemie in a fierie Gulfe,
Then flatter him in a Bower. Enter Cominius.
Here is Cominius.

Com. I haue bene i'th' Market place: and Sir 'tis fit
You make strong partie, or defend your selfe
By calmnesse, or by absence: all's in anger.

Mene. Onely faire speech.

Com. I thinke 'twill serue, if he can thereto frame his spirit.

Volum. He must, and will:
Prythee now say you will, and goe about it.

Corio. Must I goe shew them my vnbar'd Sconce?
Must I with my base Tongue giue to my Noble Heart
A Lye, that it must beare well? I will doo't:
Yet were there but this single Plot, to loose
This Mould of Martius, they to dust should grinde it,
And throw't against the Winde. Toth' Market place:
You haue put me now to such a part, which neuer
I shall discharge toth' Life.

Com. Come, come, wee'le prompt you.

Volum. I prythee now sweet Son, as thou hast said
My praises made thee first a Souldier; so
To haue my praise for this, performe a part
Thou hast not done before.

Corio. Well, I must doo't:
Away my disposition, and possesse me
Some Harlots spirit: My throat of Warre be turn'd,
Which quiet'd with my Drumme into a Pipe,
Small as an Eunuch, or the Virgin voyce
That Babies lull a-sleepe: The smiles of Knaues
Tent in my cheekes, and Schoole-boyes Teares take vp
The Glasses of my sight: A Beggars Tongue
Make motion through my Lips, and my Arm'd knees
Who bow'd but in my Stirrop, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an Almes. I will not doo't,
Least I surrende to honor mine owne truth.

And by my Bodies action, teach my Minde
A most inherent Basenesse.

Volum. At thy choice then:
To begge of thee, it is my more dishonor,
Then thou of them. Come all to ruine, let Thy Mother rather feeble thy Pride, then feare
Thy dangerous Stoutnesse: for I mocke at death
With as bigge heart as thou. Do as thou list,
Thy Valiantnesse was mine, thou suck'st it from me:
But owe thy Pride thy selfe.

Corio. Pray be content:
Mother, I am going to the Market place:
Chide me no more. Ile Mountebanke their Loues,
Cogge their Hearts from them, and come home beloud
Of all the Trades in Rome. Looke, I am going:
Commend me to my Wife, Ile returne Consull,
Or neuer trust to what my Tongue can do
I'th way of Flattery further.

Volum. Do your will. Exit Volum.
Com. Away, the Tribunes do attend you: arm your selfe
To answer mildly: for they are prepar'd
With Accusations, as I heare more strong
Then are vpon you yet.

Corio. The word is, Mildely. Pray you let vs go,
Let them accuse me by inuention: I
Will answer in mine Honor.

Mene. I, but mildly.

Corio. Well mildly be it then, Mildely. Exit.

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.
Br. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannicall power: If he euade vs there,
Inforce him with his enuy to the people,
And that the Spoile got on the Antians
Was ne're distributed. What, will he come?

Enter an Edile.
Edile. Hee's comming.
Br. How accompanied?
Edile. With old Meneius, and those Senators
That alwayes fauour'd him.
Sic. Haue you a Catalogue
Of all the Voices that we haue procur'd, ser'd downe by th'
Edile. I haue: 'tis ready. (Pole)
Sic. Haue you collected them by Tribes?
Edile. I haue.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither:
And when they heare me say, it shall be so,
I'th' right and strength a'th' Commodus: be it either
For death, for fine, or Banishment; then let them
If I say Fine, cry Fine; if Death, cry Death,
Insisting on the olde prerogative
And power i'th' Truth a'th' Cause.

Edile. I shall informe them.

Br. And when such time they haue begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a dinne confus'd
Inforce the present Execution
Of what we chance to Sentence.

Edi. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint
When we shall hap to giue them.

Br. Go about it.
Put him to Choller straight, he hath bene vs'd
Euer to conquer, and to haue his worth
Of contradiction. Being once chaf'd, he cannot Be rein'd againe to Temperance, then he speaks

What's in his heart, and that is there which looks
With vs to breake his necke.

Enter Coriolanus, Meneius, and Cominius, with others.

Sic. Well, heere he comes.

Mene. Calmely, I do beseech you.

Corio. I, as an Hostler, that fourth poorest peece

Will beare the Knaue by'th Volume:

Th'honor'd Goddes

Keepe Rome in safety, and the Chaires of Iustice
Supplied with worthy men, plant loue amongs
Through our large Temples with shewes of peace
And not our streets with Warre.

Sic. Amen, Amen.

Mene. A Noble wish.

Enter the Edile with the Plebeians.

Sic. Draw neere ye people.

Edile. List to your Tribunes. Audience:

Peace I say.

Corio. First heere me speake.

Both Tri. Well, say: Peace hee.

Corio. Shall I be charg'd no further then this present?

Must all determine heere?

Sic. I do demand,

If you submit you to the peoples voices,

Allow their Officers, and are content

To suffer lawfull Censure for such fautes

As shall be prou'd vpon you.

Corio. I am Content.

Mene. Lo Citizens, he sayes he is Content.

The warlike Seruice he ha's done, consider: Thinke
Vpon the wounds his body beares, which shew
Like Graues i'th' holy Church-yard.

Corio. Scratches with Briars, scarres to moue Laughter onely.

Mene. Consider further:

That when he speakes not like a Citizen,
You finde him like a Soldier: do not take
His rougher Actions for malicious founds:
But as I say, such as become a Soldier,
Rather then enuy you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Corio. What is the matter,

That being past for Consull with full voyce:

I am so dishonour'd, that the very houre

You take it off againe.

Sic. Answer to vs.

Corio. Say then: 'tis true, I ought so

Sic. We charge you, that you haue contri'd to take

From Rome all season'd Office, and to winde

Your selfe into a power tyrannicall,

For which you are a Traitor to the people.

Corio. How? Traitor?

Mene. Nay temperately: your promise.

Corio. The fires i'th' lowest hell. Fould in the people:

Call me their Traitor, thou inuiolous Tribune.

Within thine eyes fate twenty thousand deaths

In thy hands clutcht: as many Millions in Thy lying tongue, both numbers. I would say

Thou yest vnto thee, with a voice as free,

As I do pray the Gods.

Sic. Marke you this people?

All. To'th' Rocks, to'th' Rocks with him.

Sic. Peace:

We neede not put new matter to his charge:

What you haue seene him do, and heard him speake:

Beating your Officers, cursing your selues,
Opposing Lawes with strokes, and heere defying
Those whose great power must try him.
Euen this so criminall, and in such capitall kinde
Deserues th'extremest death.

Br. But since he hath seru'd well for Rome,

Corio. What do you prate of Seruice.

Br. I talke of that, that know it.

Corio. You?

Mene. Is this the promise that you made your mother.

Com. Know, I pray you.

Corio. Ile know no further:

Let them pronounce the sleepe Tarpeian death,

Vagabond exile, Fleeing, pent to linger

But with a graine a day, I would not buy

Their mercie, at the price of one faire word,

Nor checke my Courage for what they can giue,

To haue't with saying, Good morrow.

Sic. For that he ha's

(As much as in him lies) from time to time

Enui'd against the people; seeking meanes

To plucke away their power: as now at last,

Given Hostile strokes, and that not in the presence

Of dreaded Iustice, but on the Ministers

That doth distribute it. In the name a'th' people,

And in the power of vs the Tribunes, wee

(Eu'n from this instant) banish him our Citie

In perill of precipitation

From off the Rocks Tarpeian, neuer more

To enter our Rome gates. I'th' Peoples name,

I say it shall bee so.

All. It shall be so, it shall be so: let him away:

Hee's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Com. Heare me my Masters, and my common friends.

Sic. He's sentenc'd: No more hearing.

Com. Let me speake:

I haue bene Consull, and can shew from Rome

Her Enemies markes vpon me. I do loue

My Countries good, with a respect more tender,

More holy, and profound, then mine owne life,

My deere Wives estimate, her wombes encrease,

And treasure of my Loynes: then if I would Speake that.

Sic. We know your drift. Speake what?

Br. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd

As Enemy to the people, and his Country.

It shall bee so.

All. It shall be so, it shall be so.

Corio. You common cry of Curs, whose breath I hate,

As reeke a'th' rotten Femmes: whose Loues I prize,

As the dead Carcasses of vnburied men,

That do corrupt my Ayre: I banish you,

And heere remaine with your vncertaintie.

Let euery feeble Rumor shake your hearts:

Your Enemies with nodding of their Plumes

Fan you into dispaire: Haue the power still

To banish your Defenders, till at length

Your ignorance (which findes not till it feelles,

Making but reueration of your selues,

Still your owne Foes) deliuer you

As most abated Captiues, to some Nation

That wonne you without blowes, despising

For you the City. Thus I turne my backe;

There is a world elsewhere.

Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, with C.
They all shout, and throw up their Caps.

Edile

Edile. The peoples Enemy is gone, is gone.
All. Our enemy is banish'd, he is gone: Hoo, oo.
Sicin. Go see him out at Gates, and follow him
 As he hath follow'd you, with all despite Give him deseru'd vexation. Let a guard
 Attend vs through the City.
All. Come, come, lets see him out at gates, come:
 The Gods preferue our Noble Tribunes, come. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Coriolanus, Volunna, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius,
with the young Nobility of Rome.

Corio. Come leaue your teares: a briefe farewell: the best
 With many heads butts me away. Nay Mother,
 Where is your ancient Courage? You were vs'd
 To say, Extremities was the trier of spirits,
 That common chances. Common men could beare,
 That when the Sea was calme, all Boats alike
 Shew'd Mastership in floating. Fortunes blowes,
 When most strooke home, being gentle wounded, craues
 A Noble cunning. You were vs'd to load me
 With Precepts that would make invincible
 The heart that connd'them.

Virg. Oh heaueus! O heaueus!

Corio. Nay, I prythee woman.

Vol. Now the Red Pestilence strike al Trades in Rome,
 And Occupations perish.

Corio. What, what, what:

I shall be lou'd when I am lack'd. Nay Mother,
 Resume that Spirit, when you were wont to say,
 If you had bene the Wife of Hercules,
 Six of his Labours you'd haue done, and sau'd
 Your Husband so much sweeter. Cominius.
 Doope not, Adieu: Farewell my Wife, my Mother,
 Ile do well yet. Thou old and true Menenius,
 Thy teares are salter then a yonger mans,
 And venomous to thine eyes. My (sometime) Generall,
 I haue seene the Sterne, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hardning spectacles. Tell these sad women,
 'Tis fond to waile inenitable strokes,
 As 'tis to laugh at 'em. My Mother, you wot well
 My hazards still haue bene your solace, and Belceue't not lightly, though I go alone
 Like to a lonely Dragon, that his Fenne
 Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more then seene: your Sonne
 Will or exceed the Common, or be caught
 With cautelous baits and practice.

Volunna. My first sonne,

Whether wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
 With thee awhile: Determine on some course
 More then a wilde exposure, to each chance
 That start's i'th' way before thee.

Corio. O the Gods!

Com. Ile follow thee a Moneth, deuise with thee
 Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st heare of vs,
 And we of thee. So if the time thrust forth
 A cause for thy Repeale, we shall not send O're the vast world, to seeke a single man,
 Whose aduantage which doth euer coole
 And sense of the needer.

Corio. Fare ye well:

Thou hast yeares vpon thee, and thou art too full

Of the warres fursers, to go roue with one
 That's yet vnbruis'd: bring me but out at gate.
 Come my sweet wife, my dearest Mother, and
 My Friends of Noble touch: when I am forth,
 Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you come:
 While I remaine about the ground, you shall Heare from me still, and neuer of me oughe
 But what is like me formerly.

Menen. That's worthily
 As any eare can heare. Come, let's not weepe,
 If I could shake off but one seuen yeeres
 From these old armes and legges, by the good Gods
 I'd with thee, euery foot.

Corio. Giue me thy hand, come.

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus,
with the Edile.

Sicin. Bid them all home, he's gone: & wee'l no further,
 The Nobility are vexed, whom we see haue sided
 In his behalfe.

Brut. Now we haue shewne our power,
 Let vs seeme humbler after it is done,
 Then when it was a doeing.

Sicin. Bid them home: say their great enemy is gone,
 And they, stand in their ancient strength.

Brut. Dismiss them home. Here comes his Mother.

Enter Volunna, Virgilia, and Menenius.

Sicin. Let's not meet her.

Brut. Why?

Sicin. They say she's mad.

Brut. They haue rane note of vs: keepe on your way.

Volunna. Oh yare well met:

Th' hoorded plague a'th' Gods requit your loue.

Menen. Peace, peace, be not so loud.

Volunna. If that I could for weeping, you should beare,
 Nay, and you shall heare some. Will you be gone?

Virg. You shall stay too: I would I had the power
 To say so to my Husband.

Sicin. Are you mankinde?

Volunna. I foole, is that a shame. Note but this Foole,

Was not a man my Father? Had'st thou Foxship

To banish him that strooke more blowes for Rome

Then thou hast spoken words.

Sicin. Oh blessed Heaueus!

Volunna. Moe Noble blowes, then euer y wife words.

And for Rome's good, Ile tell thee what: yet goe:

Nay but thou shalt stay too: I would my Sonne

Were in Arabia, and thy Tribe before him,

His good Sword in his hand.

Sicin. What then?

Virg. What then? Hee'd make an end of thy posterity

Volunna. Bastards, and all.

Good man, the Wounds that he does beare for Rome!

Menen. Come, come, peace.

Sicin. I would he had continued to his Country

As he began, and not vnknit himselfe

The Noble knot he made.

Brut. I would he had.

Volunna. I would he had? 'Twas you incens'd the rabble.

Cats, that can iudge as fitly of his worth,

As I can of those Mysteries which heauen

Will not haue earth to know.

Brut. Pray let's go.

Volunna. Now pray sit get you gone.

You haue done a braue deede: Ere you go, heare this:

As farre as doth the Capitoll exceede

The meanest house in Rome; so farre my Sonne

This

This Ladies Husband heere; this (do you see)
 Whom you haue banish'd, does exceed you all.

Brut. Well, well, wee'l leaue you.

Sicin. Why stay we to be baited

With one that wants her Wits. Exit Tribunes.

Volunna. Take my Prayers with you.

I would the Gods had nothing else to do,

But to confirme my Curses. Could I meete 'em

But once a day, it would vnclodge my heart

Of what lyes heavy too't.

Menen. You haue told them home,

And by my troth you haue cause: you'l Sup with me.

Volunna. Angers my Meate: I suppe vpon my selfe,

And so shall sterue with Feeding: Come, let's go,

Leaue this faint-pulling, and lament as I do,

In Anger, Iuno-like: Come, come, come. Exeunt

Menen. Fie, fie, fie. Exit.

Enter a Roman, and a Volce.

Rom. I know you well sir, and you know mee: your name I thinke is Adrian.

Volce. It is so sir, truly I haue forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman, and my Seruices are as you are, against 'em. Know you me yet.

Volce. Nicanor: no.

Rom. The same sir.

Volce. You had more Beard when I last saw you, but your Fauour is well appear'd by your Tongue. What's the Newes in Rome: I haue a Note from the Volcan state to finde you out there. You haue well sau'd mee a dayes journey.

Rom. There hath bene in Rome strange Insurrections:
 The people, against the Senatours, Patricians, and Nobles.

Vol. Hath bin; is it ended then? Our State thinks not so, they are in a most warlike preparation, & hope to com

upon them, in the heate of their diuision

Rom. The maine blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame againe. For the Nobles receiue so to heart, the Banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptnesse, to take al power from the peo ple, and to plucke from them their Tribunes for euer.

This lyes glowing I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus Banish'd?

Rom. Banish'd sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence Ni

canor.

Rom. The day serues well for them now. I haue heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a mans Wife, is when she's false out with her Husband. Your Noble Tullus

Aufidius well appeare well in these Warres, his great Opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his coun trei.

Volce. He cannot choose: I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you. You haue ended my Bu sinnesse, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall betwene this and Supper, tell you most strange things from Rome: all tending to the good of their Aduersaries. Haue you an Army ready say you?

Vol. A most Royall one: The Centurions, and their charges distinctly billeted already in th'entertainment, and to be on foot at an houres warning.

Rom. I am ioyfull to heare of their readinesse, and am the man I thinke, that shall set them in present Action. So fit, heartily well met, and most glad of your Company.

Volce. You take my part from me sir, I haue the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let vs go together. Exeunt.

Enter Coriolanus in meane Apparrell, Dis
guis'd, and muffled.

Corio. A goodly City is this Antium. City,
 'Tis I that made thy Widdowes: Many an heyte
 Of these faire Edifices fore my Warres
 Haue I heard groane, and drop: Then know me not,
 Least that thy Wiues with Spits, and Boyes with Stones
 In puny Battell slay me. Saue you fir.

Enter a Citizen.

Cit. And you.

Corio. Direct me, if it be your will, where great Auf
idius lies: Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and Feasts the Nobles of the State, at his house this night.

Corio. Which is his house, beseech you?

Cit. This heere before you.

Corio. Thanke you sir, farewell. Exit Citizen

Oh World, thy slippery turnes! Friends now fast sworn,
 Whose double bosomes seemes to weare one heart,

Whose Houres, whose Bed, whose Meale and Exercise
 Are still together: who Twin (as 'twere) in Loue,

Vnsparable, shall within this house,
 On a diffention of a Doit, breake out

To bitterest Enmity: So tellst Foes,
 Whose Passions, and whose Plots haue broke their sleep

To take the one the other, by some chance,
 Some trick not worth an Egge, shall grow deere friends

And inter-ioyne their yssues. So with me,
 My Birth-place haue I, and my loues vpon

This Enemie Towne: He enter, if he slay me
 He does faire Iustice: if he giue me way,

Ile do his Country Service. Exit.

Musicke plays. Enter a Seruingman.

1 Ser. Wine, Wine, Wine: What seruice is heere? I thinke our Fellowes are asleepe.

Enter another Seruingman.

2 Ser. Where's Cotrus? My Ma calls for him: Cotrus. Exit
Enter Coriolanus.

Corio. A goodly House:
 The Feast smells well: but I appeare not like a Guest.

Enter the first Seruingman.

1 Ser. What would you haue Friend? whence are you?
 Here's no place for you: Pray go to the doore? Exit

Corio. I haue deseru'd no better entertainment, in be ing Coriolanus. Enter second Seruant.

2 Ser. Whence are you sir? Ha's the Porter his eyes in his head, that he giues entrance to such Companions?

Pray get you out.

Corio. Away.

2 Ser. Away? Get you away.

Corio. Now th'art troublesome.

2 Ser. Are you so braue: He haue you talkt with anon

Enter 3 Seruingman, the 1 meets him.

3 What Fellowes this?

1 A strange one as euer I look'd on: I cannot get him out o'th' house: Prythee call my Master to him.

3 What haue you to do here fellow? Pray you auoid
the house.

Corio. Let me but stand, I will not hurt your Harth.

3 What are you?

Corio. A Gentleman.

3 A mar'illous poore one.

Corio. True, so I am.

3 Pray you poore Gentleman, take vp some other sta tion.

tion: Heere's no place for you, pray you anoid: Come.
Corio. Follow your Function, go, and batten on colde bits.

3 What you will not? Prythee tell my Maister, what a strange Guest he ha's heere.

2 And I shall.

Exit second Servingman.

3 Where dwel'st thou?

Corio. Under the Canopy.

3 Under the Canopy?

Corio. I.

3 Where's that?

Corio. I'th City of Kites and Crows.

3 I'th City of Kites and Crows? What an Ass it is, then thou dwel'st with Dawes too?

Corio. No, I serue not thy Maister.

3 How sir? Do you meddle with my Maister?

Corio. It is an honest seruice, then to meddle with thy Mistis: Thou prat'st, and prat'st, serue with thy trencher: Hence.

Enter Aufidius with the Servingman.

Auf. Where is this Fellow?

2 Here sir, I'de haue beaten him like a dogge, but for disturbing the Lords within.

Auf. Whence com'st thou? What would'st? Thy name? Why speake'st not? Speake man: What's thy name?

Corio. If Tullus not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not thinke me for the man I am, necessitie commands me name my selfe.

Auf. What is thy name?

Corio. A name vnmuscall to the Volcians eares, I And harsh in sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?

Thou hast a Grim apparance, and thy Face Beares a Command in't: Though thy Tackles torne, Thou shew'st a Noble Vessell: What's thy name?

Corio. Prepare thy brow to frowne: know'st thou me yet?

Auf. I know thee not? Thy Name?

Corio. My name is Caius Martius, who hath done To thee particularly, and to all the Volces Great hurt and Mischiefe: thereto withesse may My Surname Coriolanus. The painfull Service, The extreme Dangers, and the droppes of Blood Shed for my thanklesse Country, are requited: But with that Surname, a good memorie And withesse of the Malice and Displeasure Which thou should'st beare me, only that name remains. The Cruelty and Enuy of the people, Permitted by our dastard Nobles, who Haue all forsooke me, hath deuour'd the rest: And suffer'd me by thy voyce of Slaues to be Hoop'd out of Rome. Now this extremity, Hath brought me to thy Haith, not out of Hope (Mistake me not) to saue my life: for if I had fear'd death, of all the Men i'th World, I would haue voided thee. But in meere spight To be full quit of those my Banishers, Stand I before thee heere: Then if thou hast A heart of wreake in thee, that wilt reuenge Thine owne particular wrongs, and stop those maimes Of shame seene through thy Country, speed thee straight And make my misery serue thy turne: So vse it, That my reuengefull Services may proue As Benefits to thee. For I will fight Against my Cankred Countrey, with the Spileene Of all the vnder Fiends. But if so be, Thou dar'st not this, and that to proue more Fortunes

Th'art ty'd, then in a word, I also am Longer to liue most wearie: and present My throat to thee, and to thy Ancient Malice: Which not to cut, would shew thee but a Foole, Since I haue euer followed thee with hate, Drawne Tunnes of Blood out of thy Countries breast, And cannot liue but to thy shame, vnlesse It be to do thee seruice.

Auf. Oh Martius, Martius! Each word thou hast spoke, hath weeded from my heart A roote of Ancient Enuy. If Iupiter Should from yond clowd speake diuine things, And say 'tis true; I'de not belecue them more Then thee all-Noble Martius. Let me twine Mine armes about that body, where against My grained Ash an hundred times hath broke, And scarr'd the Moone with splinters: heere I sleep The Anvile of my Sword, and do contest As hotly, and as Nobly with thy Loue, As euer in Ambitious strength, I did Contend against thy Valour. Know thou first, I lou'd the Maid I married: neuer man Sigh'd truer breath. But that I see thee heere Thou Noble thing, more dances my rape heart, Then when I first my wedded Mistis saw Beside my Threshold. Why, thou Mars I tell thee, We haue a Power on foote: and I had purpose Once more to hew thy Target from thy Brawne, Or loose mine Arme for't: Thou hast beate mee out Twelue feuerall times, and I haue nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thy selfe and me: We haue benee downe together in my sleepe, Vnbuckling Helmes, fistting each others Throat, And wak'd halfe dead with nothing. Worthy Martius, Had we no other quarrell else to Rome, but that Thou art thence Banish'd, we would muster all From twelue, to seuentie: and pouring Warre Into the bowels of vngratefull Rome, Like a bold Flood o're-beate. Oh come, go in, And take our Friendly Senators by'th hands Who now are heere, taking their leaues of mee, Who am prepar'd against your Territories, Though not for Rome it selfe.

Corio. You blisse me Gods.

Auf. Therefore most absolute Sir, if thou wilt haue The leading of thine owne Reuenges, take Th'one halfe of my Commission, and set downe As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st Thy Countries strength and weaknesse, thine own waies Whether to knocke against the Gates of Rome, Or rudely visit them in parts remote, To fright them, ere destroy. But come in, Let me commend thee first, to those that shall Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes, And more a Friend, then ere an Enemy, Yet Martius that was much. Your hand; most welcome.

Enter two of the Servingmen.

1 Heere's a strange alteration?
2 By my hand, I had thought to haue stroken him with a Cudgell, and yet my minde gaue me, his clothes made a false report of him.

1 What an Arme he has, he turn'd me about with his finger and his thumbe, as one would set vp a Top.

2 Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him. He had sir, a kinde of face me thought, I cannot tell how to tearme it.

1 He had so, looking as it were, would I were hang'd but I thought there was more in him, then I could thinke.

2 So did I, he be sworne: He is simply the rarest man i'th world.

1 I thinke he is: but a greater soldier then he, You wot one.

2 Who my Maister?

1 Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Worth six on him.

1 Worth not so neither: but I take him to be the greater Souldiour.

2 Faith looke you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the Defence of a Towne, our Generall is excellent.

1 I, and for an assault too.

Enter the third Servingman.

3 Oh Slaues, I can tell you Newes, News you Rascals

Both. What, what, what? Let's partake.

3 I would not be a Roman of all Nations; I had as lieue be a condemn'd man.

Both. Wherefore? Wherefore?

3 Why here's he that was wont to thwacke our Generall, Caius Martius.

1 Why do you say, thwacke our Generall?

3 I do not say thwacke our Generall, but he was alwayes good enough for him.

2 Come we are fellows and friends: he was euer too hard for him, I haue heard him say so himselfe.

1 He was too hard for him directly, to say the Troth on't before Corioles, he scotch'd him, and notch'd him like a Carbinado.

2 And hee had bin Cannibally giuen, hee might haue boyld and eaten him too.

1 But more of thy Newes.

3 Why he is so made on heere within, as if hee were Son and Heire to Mars, set at vpper end o'th Table: No question askt him by any of the Senators, but they stand bald before him. Our Generall him selfe makes a Mistis of him, Sanctifies himselfe with's hand, and turns vp the white o'th'eye to his Discourse. But the bottome of the Newes is, our Generall is cut i'th middle, & but one halfe of what he was yesterday. For the other ha's halfe, by the intreaty and graunt of the whole Table. Hee'l go he sayes, and sole the Porter of Rome Gates by the eares. He will mowe all downe before him, and leaue his passage pould.

2 And he's as like to do't, as any man I can imagine.

3 Doo't he will doo't: for look you sir, he has as many Friends as Enemies: which Friends sir as it were, durst not (looke you sir) shew themselves (as we terme it) his Friends, whilst he's in Directiude.

1 Directiude? What's that?

3 But when they shall see his Crest vp againe, and the man in blood, they will out of their Burroughes (like Conies after Raine) and reuell all with him.

1 But when goes this forwardly?

3 To morrow, to day, presently, you shall haue the Drum stroke vp this afternoone: 'Tis as it were a parcel of their Feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Why then wee shall haue a stirring World againe: This peace is nothing, but to rust Iron, increase Taylors, and breed Ballad-makers.

1 Let me haue Warre say I, it exceeds peace as farre as day do's night: It's sprightly walking, audible, and full of Vent. Peace, is a very Apoplexy, Lethargie, mull'd, deafe, sleepe, insensible, a getter of more bastard Children, then warres a destroyer of men.

2 'Tis so, and as warres in some sort may be saide to be a Rauisher, so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of Cuckolds.

1 I, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Reason, because they then lesse neede one another: The Warres for my money. I hope to see Romanes as cheape as Volcians. They are rising, they are rising.

Both. In, in, in, in. Exit.

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius and Brutus.

Sic. We heare not of him, neither need we fear him, His remedies are tame, the present peace,

And quietnesse of the people, which before Were in wilde hurry. Heere do we make his Friends

Blush, that the world goes well: who rather had, Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold

Dissentious numbers pestering streets, then see Our Tradesmen singing in their shops, and going

About their Functions friendly.

Enter Menenius.

Br. We stood too't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O he is grown most kind of late: Haile Sir.

Men. Haile to you both.

Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much mist, but with his Friends: the Commonwealth doth stand, and so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well, and might haue bene much better, if he could haue temporiz'd.

Sic. Where is he, heere you?

Men. Nay I heare nothing: His Mother and his wife, heare nothing from him.

Enter three or foure Citizens.

All. The Gods preserue you both.

Sic. Gooden our Neighbours.

Br. Gooden to you all, gooden to you all.

1 Our selues, our wiues, and children, on our knees, Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live, and thrive.

Br. Farewell kinde Neighbours:

We wisht Coriolanus had lou'd you as we did.

All. Now the Gods keepe you.

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. Exit Citizens.

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time, Then when these Fellowes ran about the streets, Crying Confusion.

Br. Caius Martius was A worthy Officer i'th Warre, but Insolent, O'recome with Pride, Ambitious, past all thinking Selfe-louing.

Sic. And affecting one sole Throne, without assistance

Men. I thinke not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our Lamention, If he had gone forth Consul, found it so.

Br. The Gods haue well preuented it, and Rome Sits safe and still, without him.

Enter an Edile.

Edile. Worthy Tribunes, There is a Slaue whom we haue put in prison, Reports the Volces with two feuerall Powers

Are entred in the Roman Territories, And with the deepest malice of the Warre, Destroy, what lies before 'em.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius, Who hearing of our Martius Banishment, Thrusts forth his hornes againe into the world Which were In-shell'd, when Martius stood for Rome, And

And durst not once peepe out.

Sicin. Come, what talke you of Martius.

Brut. Go see this Rumor whipt, it cannot be,
The Volces dare breake with vs.

Mene. Cannot be?

We haue Record, that very well it can,
And three examples of the like, hath bene
Within my Age. But reason with the fellow
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Least you shall chance to whip your Information,
And beate the Messenger, who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sicin. Tell not me: I know this cannot be.

Brut. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The Nobles in great earnestnesse are going
All to the Senate-house: some newes is coming
That turnes their Countenances.

Sicin. 'Tis this Slaue:

Go whip him fore the peoples eyes: His raising,
Nothing but his report.

Mes. Yes worthy Sir,

The Slaues report is seconded, and more
More fearfull is deliuer'd.

Sicin. What more fearefull?

Mes. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
How probable I do not know, that Martius
Ioyn'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome,
And vouches Reuenge as spacious, as betwene
The yong't and oldest thing.

Sicin. This is most likely.

Brut. Rais'd onely, that the weaker sort may wish
Good Martius home againe.

Sicin. The very trick on't.

Mene. This is unlikely,
He, and Aufidius can no more attone
Then violent't Contrariety.

Enter Messenger.

Mes. You are sent for to the Senate:
A fearefull Army, led by Caius Martius,
Associated with Aufidius, Rages
Vpon our Territories, and haue already O're-borne their way, consum'd with fire, and tooke
What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. Oh you haue made good worke.

Mene. What newes? What newes?

Com. You haue help to raiuish your owne daughters, &
To melt the City Leades vpon your pates,
To see your Wiues dishonour'd to your Noses.

Mene. What's the newes? What's the newes?

Com. Your Temples burned in their Ciment, and Your Franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an Augurs boare.

Mene. Pray now, your Newes:

You haue made faire worke I feare me: pray your newes,
If Martius should be ioyn'd with Volceans.

Com. If He is their God, he leads them like a thing
Made by some other Deity then Nature,
That shapen man Better: and they follow him
Against vs Brats, with no lesse Confidence,
Then Boyes pursuing Summer Butter-flies,
Or Butchers killing Flies.

Mene. You haue made good worke,
You and your Apron men: you, that stood so much Vpon the voyce of occupation, and

The breath of Garlick-eaters.

Com. Hee'l shake your Rome about your eares.

Mene. As Hercules did shake downe Mellow Fruite:
You haue made faire worke.

Brut. But is this true sir?

Com. I, and you'l looke pale

Before you finde it other. All the Regions
Do smilingly Reuolt, and who resists
Are mock'd for valiant Ignorance,
And perish constant Fooles: who is't can blame him?
Your Enemies and his, finde something in him.

Mene. We are all vndone, vnlesse

The Noble man haue mercy.

Com. Who shall aske it?

The Tribunes cannot doo't for shame: the people
Deserue such pittie of him, as the Wolfe
Doe's of the Shepheards: For his best Friends, if they Should say be good to Rome, they charg'd him, euen
As those should do that had deseru'd his hate,
And therein shew'd like Enemies.

Mes. 'Tis true, if he were putting to my house, the brand
That should consume it, I haue not the face
To say, beseech you cease. You haue made faire hands,
You and your Crafts, you haue crafted faire.

Com. You haue brought
A Trembling vpon Rome, such as was neuer
S'inceapeable of helpe.

Tri. Say not, we brought it.

Mene. How? Was't we? We lou'd him,
But like Beasts, and Cowardly Nobles,
Gaued way vnto your Clusters, who did hoore
Him out o'th' City.

Com. But I feare

They'l roare him in againe. Tullus Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeyes his points
As if he were his Officer: Desperation,
Is all the Policy, Strength, and Defence
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troope of Citizens.

Mene. Heere come the Clusters.

And is Aufidius with him? You are they
That made the Ayre vnuholosome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasie Caps, in hooting
At Coriolanus Exile. Now he's coming,
And not a haire vpon a Souldiers head
Which will not proue a whip: As many Coxcombes
As you threw Caps vp, will he tumble downe,
And pay you for your voyces. 'Tis no matter,
If he could burne vs all into oue coale,
We haue deseru'd it.

Omnes. Faith, we heare fearefull Newes.

1 Cit. For mine owne part,

When I said banish him, I said 'twas pittie.

2 And so did I.

3 And so did I: and to say the truth, so did very many of vs, that we did we did for the best, and though we willingly consented to his Banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. Yare goodly things, you Voyces.

Mene. You haue made good worke

You and your cry. Shal's to the Capitoll?

Com. Oh I, what else?

Sicin. Go Masters get you home, be not dismayd,
These are a Side, that would be glad to haue
This true, which they so feeme to feare. Go home,
And shew no signe of Feare.

1. Cit.

1 Cit. The Gods bee good to vs: Come Masters let's home, I euer said we were i'th wrong, when we banish'd him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home. Exit Cit.

Brut. I do not like this Newes.

Sicin. Nor I.

Brut. Let's to the Capitoll: would halfe my wealth

Would buy this for a lye.

Sicin. Pray let's go. Exeunt Tribunes.

Enter Aufidius with his Lieutenant.

Ans. Do they still lye to'th' Roman?

Lien. I do not know what Witchcraft's in him: but Your Soldiers vse him as the Grace 'fore meate,
Their talke at Table, and their Thankes at end,
And you are darked in this action Sir,
Euen by your owne.

Ans. I cannot helpe it now,
Vnlesse by vsing meanes I lame the foot
Of our designe. He beares himselfe more proudlier, Euen to my person, then I thought he would
When first I did embrace him. Yet his Nature
In that's no Changeling, and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Lien. Yet I wish Sir,
(I meane for your particular) you had not Ioyn'd in Commission with him: but either haue borne
The action of your selfe, or else to him, had left it folly.

Ans. I vnderstand thee well, and be thou sure
When he shall come to his account, he knowes not
What I can vrge against him, although it seemes
And so he thinks, and is no lesse apparant
To th' vulgar eye, that he beares all things fairely:
And shewes good Husbandry for the Volcian State,
Fights Dragon-like, and does atcheue as soone
As draw his Sword: yet he hath left vndone
That which shall breake his necke, or hazard mine,
When ere we come to our account.

Lien. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome?

Ans. All places yeelds to him ere he sits downe,

And the Nobility of Rome are his:

The Senators and Patricians loue him too:

The Tribunes are no Soldiers: and their people

Will be as rash in the repeale, as hasty

To expell him thence. I thinke hee'l be to Rome

As is the Aspray to the Fish, who takes it

By Soueraignty of Nature. First, he was

A Noble seruant to them, but he could not

Carry his Honors euen: whether 'twas Pride

Which out of dayly Fortune euer taints

The happy man; whether defect of iudgement,

To faile in the disposing of those chances

Which he was Lord of: or whether Nature,

Not to be other then one thing, not moouing

From th' Caske to th' Cussion: but commanding peace

Euen with the same austerity and garbe,

As he controll'd the warre. But one of these

(As he hath spies of them all) not all,

For I dare so farre free him, made him feare'd,

So hard, and so banish'd: but he hath a Merit

To choake it in the vantage: So our Vertue

Lies in th' interpretation of the time,

And power vnto it selfe most commendable,

Hath not a Tombe so euident as a Chaire,

Textoll what it hath done.

One fire drives out one fire; one Naile, one Naile;

Rights by rights fouler, strengths by strengths do faile.

Come let's away: when Caius Rome is thine,
Thou art poor't of all; then shortly art thou mine.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus,
the two Tribunes, with others.

Mene. No, He not go: you heare what he hath said
Which was sometime his Generall: who loued him
In a most deere particular. He call'd me Father:
But what o'that? Go you that banish'd him
A Mile before his Tent, fall downe, and knee
The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd
To heare Cominius speake, He keepe at home.

Com. He would not seeme to know me.

Mene. Do you heare?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:

I vrg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we haue bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer too: Forbad all Names,
He was a kinde of Nothing, Titlelesse,
Till he had forg'd himselfe a name a'th' fire
Of burning Rome.

Mene. Why so: you haue made good worke:
A paire of Tribunes, that haue wrack'd for Rome,
To make Coales cheape: A Noble memory.

Com. I minded him, how Royall 'twas to pardon
When it was lesse expected. He replied
It was a bare petition of a State
To one whom they had punish'd.

Mene. Very well, could he say lesse.

Com. I offered to awaken his regard

For's priuate Friends. His answer to me was

He could not stay to picke them, in a pile

Of noysome musty Chaffe. He said, 'twas folly

For one poore graine or two, to leaue vnburnt

And still to note th' offence.

Mene. For one poore graine or two?

I am one of those: his Mother, Wife, his Childe;

And this brave Fellow too: we are the Graines,

You are the musty Chaffe, and you are smelt

Above the Moone. We must be burnt for you.

Sicin. Nay, pray be patient: If you refuse your ayde

In this so neuer-needed helpe, yet do not

Vpbraid's with our distresse. But sure if you

Would be your Countries Pleader, your good tongue

More then the instant Armie we can make

Might stop our Countryman.

Mene. No: He not meddle.

Sicin. Pray you go to him.

Mene. What should I do?

Brut. Onely make triall what your Loue can do,

For Rome, towards Martius.

Mene. Well, and say that Martius returne mee,

As Cominius is return'd, vnheard: what then?

But as a discontented Friend, greese-shot

With his vnkindnesse. Say't be so?

Sicin. Yet your good will Must haue that thankes from Rome, after the measure

As you intended well.

Mene. He vnderstand't:

I thinke hee'l heare me. Yet to bite his lip,

And humme at good Cominius, much vnhearts mee.

cc

Hee

He was not taken well, he had not din'd,
The Veines vnfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We powt vpon the Morning, are vnapt
To giue or to forgiue; but when we haue Rufft
These Pipes, and these Conueyances of our blood
With Wine and Feeding, we haue suppler Soules
Then in our Priest-like Fafts: therefore Ile watch him
Till he be dieted to my request,
And then Ile set vpon him.

Brut. You know the very rode into his kindnesse,
And cannot lose your way.

Mene. Good faith Ile proue him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long, haue knowledge
Of my successe.

Cons. Hee'l neuer heare him.

Sicin. Not.

Cons. I tell you, he doe's sit in Gold, his eye
Red as 'twould burne Rome: and his Injury
The Gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before him,
'Twas very faintly he said Rise: dismiss me
Thus with his speechlesse hand. What he would do
He sent in writing after me: what he would not,
Round with an Oath to yeeld to his conditions:
So that all hope is vaine, vnlesse his Noble Mother,
And his Wife, who (as I heare) meane to sollicite him
For mercy to his Countrey: therefore let's hence,
And with our faire intreaties haile them on.

Enter Menenius to the Watch or Guard.

1 War. Stay: whence are you.

2 War. Stand, and go backe.

Me. You guard like men, 'tis well. But by your leaue,
I am an Officer of State, & come to speak with Coriolanus.

1 From whence?

Mene. From Rome.

1 You may not passe, you must returne: our Generall will no more heare from thence.

2 You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before You'll speake with Coriolanus.

Mene. Good my Friends,

If you haue heard your Generall talke of Rome,
And of his Friends there, it is Lots to Blankes,
My name hath touch't your eares: it is Menenius.

1 Be it so, go back: the vertue of your name,
Is not heere passable.

Mene. I tell thee Fellow,

Thy Generall is my Louer: I haue beene
The booke of his good Acts, whence men haue read
His Fame vnparallel'd, happily amplified:
For I haue euer verified my Friends,
(Of whom hee's cheefe) with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: Nay, sometimes,
Like to a Bowle vpon a suble ground
I haue tumbled past the throw: and in his praise
Haue (almost) stamp't the Leasing. Therefore Fellow,
I must haue leaue to passe.

1 Faith Sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalfe, as you haue vttered words in your owne, you should not passe heere: no, though it were as vertuous to lye, as to liue chastly. Therefore go backe.

Mene. Prythee fellow, remember my name is Menenius, alwayes factionary on the party of your Generall.

2 Howsoeuer you haue bin his Lier, as you say you haue, I am one that telling true vnder him, must say you cannot passe. Therefore go backe.

Mene. Ha's he din'd can't thou tell? For I would not speake with him, till after dinner.

1 You are a Roman, are you?

Mene. I am as thy Generall is.

1 Then you should hate Rome, as he do's. Can you, when you haue pusht out your gates, the very Defender of them, and in a violent popular ignorance, giuen your enemy your shield, thinke to front his reuenges with the easie groanes of old women, the Virginall Palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decay'd Dotant as you seeme to be? Can you thinke to blow out the intended fire, your City is ready to flame in, with such weake breath as this? No, you are deceiu'd, therefore backe to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemn'd, our Generall has sworne you out of repentence and pardon.

Mene. Sirra, if thy Captaine knew I were heere,
He would vse me with estimation.

1 Come, my Captaine knowes you not.

Mene. I meane thy Generall.

1 My Generall cares not for you. Back I say, go: least
I let forth your halfe pinte of blood. Backe, that's the ver-most of your hauing, backe.

Mene. Nay but fellow, fellow.

Enter Coriolanus with Aufidius.

Corio. What's the matter?

Mene. Now you Companion: Ile say an arrant for you:
you shall know now that I am in estimation: you shall perceiue, that a Iacke gardant cannot office me from my Son Coriolanus, guesse but my entertainment with him: if thou stand'st not 'till state of hanging, or of some death more long in Spectatorship, and crueller in suffering, behold now presently, and swoond for what's to come vpon thee. The glorious Gods sit in hourely Synod about thy particular prosperity, and loue thee no worse then thy old Father Menenius do's. O my Son, my Son! thou art preparing fire for vs: looke thee, heere's water to quench it.
I was hardly moued to come to thee: but being assured none but my selfe could moue thee, I haue bene blowne out of your Gates with sighes: and coniuire thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary Countymen. The good Gods aswage thy wrath, and turne the dregs of it, vpon this Varlet heere: This, who like a blocke hath denyed my access to thee.

Corio. Away.

Mene. How? Away?

Corio. Wife, Mother, Child, I know not. My affaires
Are seruanted to others: Though I owe
My Reuenge properly, my remission lies
In Volcan brefts. That we haue beene familiar, Ingrate forgetfulnesse shall poison rather
Then pity: Note how much, therefore be gone.
Mine eares against your suites, are stronger then
Your gates against my force. Yet for I loued thee,
Take this along, I writ it for thy sake,
And would haue sent it. Another word Menenius,
I will not heare thee speake. This man Aufidius
Was my belou'd in Rome: yet thou behold'st.

Aufid. You keepe a constant temper.

Manet the Guard and Menenius.

1 Now sir, is your name Menenius?

2 'Tis a spell you see of much power:

You know the way home againe.

1 Do you heare how wee are shent for keeping your greatnesse backe?

2 What cause do you thinke I haue to swoond?

Mene. I neither care for th' world, nor your Generall:
for such things as you, I can scarce thinke ther's any, y<sup>e</sup>re so slight. He that hath a will to die by himselfe, feares it not from another: Let your Generall do his worst. For you, bee that you are, long; and your misery encrease with your age. I say to you, as I was said to, Away. Exit.

1 A Noble Fellow I warrant him.

2 The worthy Fellow is our Generall. He's the Rock,
The Oake not to be winde-shaken.

Enter Coriolanus and Aufidius.

Corio. We will before the walls of Rome to morrow
Set downe our Hoast. My partner in this Action,
You must report to th' Volcan Lords, how plainly
I haue borne this Businesse.

Auf. Onely their ends you haue respected,
Stopt your eares against the generall suite of Rome:
Neuer admitted a priuat whisper, no nor with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Corio. This last old man,

Whom with a crack'd heart I haue sent to Rome,
Loud me, about the measure of a Father,
Nay godded me indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him: for whose old Loue I haue
(Though I shew'd sowlly to him) once more offer'd
The first Conditions which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him onely,
That thought he could do more: A very little
I haue yeilded too. Fresh Embassies, and Suites,
Nor from the State, nor private friends heereafter Will I lend eare to. Ha? what shout is this? Shout within Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the same time 'tis made? I will not.

Enter Virgilia, Voluminia, Valeria, young Martius, with Attendants.

My wife comes formost, then the honour'd mould
Wherein this Trunke was fram'd, and in her hand
The Grandchilde to her blood. But our affection,
All bond and priuiledge of Nature breake;
Let it be Vertuous to be Obstinate.
What is that Curt'sie worth? Or those Doves eyes,
Which can make Gods forsworne? I melt, and am not Offstronger earth then others: my Mother bowes,
As if Olympus to a Mole-hill should
In supplication Nod: and my yong Boy
Hath an Aspect of intercession, which Great Nature cries, Deny not. Let the Volces
Plough Rome, and harrow Italy, Ile neuer
Be such a Gosling to obey instinct: but stand
As if a man were Author of himself, & knew no other kin
Virgil. My Lord and Husband.

Corio. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Virg. The sorrow that deliuevs vs thus chang'd,
Makes you thinke so.

Corio. Like a dull Actor now, I haue forgot my part,
And I am out, euen to a full Disgrace. Best of my Fleish, Forgiue my Tyranny: but do not say,
For that forgiue our Romanes. O a kisse
Long as my Exile, sweet as my Reuenge!
Now by the ialous Queene of Heauen, that kisse
I carried from thee deare; and my true Lippe
Hath Virgin'd it ere since. You Gods, I pray,
And the most noble Mother of the world
League vnshured: Sink my knee 'till earth,
Of thy deepe duty, more impression shew
Then that of common Sonnes.

Volum. Oh stand vp blest!

Whil't with no softer Cushion then the Flint
I kneele before thee, and vnproperly
Shew duty as mistaken, all this while,

Betweene the Childe, and Parent.

Corio. What's this? your knees to me?

To your Corrected Sonne?

Then let the Pibbles on the hungry beach
Fillop the Starres: Then, let the mutinous windes
Strike the proud Cedars 'gainst the fiery Sun:
Murdring Impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight worke.

Volum. Thou art my Warriour, I hope to frame thee
Do you know this Lady?

Corio. The Noble Sister of Publicola;
The Moone of Rome: Chaste as the Isicle
That's curdled by the Frost, from purest Snow,
And hangs on Dians Temple: Deere Valeria.

Volum. This is a poore Epitome of yours,
Which by th' interpretation of full time,
May shew like all your selfe.

Corio. The God of Souldiers:
With the consent of supream Ioue, informe
Thy thoughts with Noblenesse, that thou mayst proue
To shame vnvulnerable, and sticke 'till Warres
Like a great Sea-marke standing euer flaw,
And sauing those that eye thee.

Volum. Your knee, Sirrah.

Corio. That's my braue Boy.

Volum. Euen he, your wife, this Ladie, and my selfe,
Are Sutors to you.

Corio. I beseech you peace:
Or if you'd aske, remember this before;
The thing I haue forsworne to graunt, may neuer
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my Souldiers, or capitulate
Again, with Rome's Mechanickes. Tell me not Wherein I seeme vnnaturall: Desire not allay
My Rages and Reuenges, with your colder reasons.

Volum. Oh no more, no more:

You haue said you will not grant vs any thing:
For we haue nothing else to aske, but that
Which you deny already: yet we will aske,
That if you faile in our request, the blame
May hang vpon your hardnesse, therefore heare vs.

Corio. Aufidius, and you Volces marke, for wee'l Heare nought from Rome in priuate. Your request?

Volum. Should we be silent & not speak, our Raiment
And state of Bodies would bewray what life
We haue led since thy Exile. Thinke with thy selfe,
How more vnfortunate then all liuing women
Are we come hither; since that thy fight, which should Make our eies flow with ioy, harts dance with comforts,
Constraines them weepe, and shake with feare & sorrow,
Making the Mother, wife, and Childe to see,
The Sonne, the Husband, and the Father rearing
His Countries Bowels out; and to poore we Thine enmities most capitall: Thou barr'st vs
Our prayers to the Gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enioy. For how can we?
Alas! how can we, for our Country pray?
Whereto we are bound, together with thy victory:
Whereto we are bound: Alacke, or we must loose
The Countrey our deere Nurse, or else thy person
Our comfort in the Countrey. We must finde
An euident Calamity, though we had
Our wish, which side should win. For either thou Must as a Foraine Recreant be led
With Manacles through our streets, or else
Triumphantly treade on thy Countries ruine;

And beare the Palme, for hauing branely shed
Thy Wife and Childrens blood: For my selfe, Sonne,
I purpose not to waite on Fortune, till
These warres determine: If I cannot perswade thee,
Rather to shew a Noble grace to both parts,
Then seeke the end of one; thou shalt no looner
March to assault thy Country, then to treade
(Trust too't, thou shalt not) on thy Mothers wombe
That brought thee to this world.

Virg. I, and mine, that brought you forth this boy,
To keepe your name liuing to time.

Boy. A shall not tread on me: He run away
Till I am bigger, but then He fight.

Corio. Not of a womans tendernesse to be,
Requires nor Child, nor womans face to see:
I haue fate too long.

Volum. Nay, go not from vs thus:
If it were so, that our request did tend
To saue the Romanes, thereby to destroy
The Volces whom you serue, you might condemne vs
Aspoysonous of your Honour. No, our suite
Is that you reconcile them: While the Volces
May say, this mercy we haue shew'd: the Romanes,
This we recei'd, and each in either side
Giue the All-haile to thee, and cry be Blest
For making vp this peace. Thou know'st (great Sonne)
The end of Warres vncertaine: but this certaine,
That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reape, is such a name
Whose repetition will be dogg'd with Curses:
Whose Chronicle thus writ, The man was Noble,
But with his last Attempt, he wip'd it out:
Destroy'd his Country, and his name remaines
To th'insuing Age, abhor'd. Speake to me Son:
Thou hast affected the fine straines of Honor,
To imitate the graces of the Gods.
To teare with Thunder the wide Cheekes a'th' Ayre,
And yet to change thy Sulphure with a Boulte
That should but riuie an Oake. Why do'st thou not speake?
Think'st thou it Honourable for a Nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, speake you:
He cares not for your weeping. Speake thou Boy,
Perhaps thy childishnesse will moue him more
Then can our Reasons. There's no man in the world
More bound to's Mother, yet heere he let's me prate
Like one i'th' Stockes. Thou hast neuer in thy life,
Shew'd thy deere Mother any curtesie,
When she (poore Hen) fond of no second brood,
Ha's clock'd thee to the Warres: and safelie home
Loden with Honor. Say my Request's vniust,
And spurme me backe: But, if it be not so
Thou art not honest, and the Gods will plague thee
That thou restrain'st from me the Duty, which
To a Mothers part belongs. He turnes away:
Down Ladies: let vs shame him with him without knees
To his sur-name Coriolanus longs more pride
Then pittie to our Prayers. Downe: an end,
This is the last. So, we will home to Rome,
And dye among our Neighbours: Nay, behold's,
This Boy that cannot tell what he would haue,
But kneeles, and holds vp hands for fellowship,
Doe's reason our Petition with more strength
Then thou hast to deny't. Come, let vs go:
This Fellow had a Volcean to his Mother:
His Wife is in Corioles, and his Child
Like him by chance: yet giue vs our dispatch:

I am hush't vntill our City be afire, & then He speake a litle
Holds her by the hand, silent.

Corio. O Mother, Mother!
What haue you done? Behold, the Heauens do ope,
The Gods looke downe, and this vnaturall Scene
They laugh at. Oh my Mother, Mother: Oh!
You haue wonne a happy Victory to Rome.
But for your Sonne, beleue it: Oh beleue it,
Most dangerously you haue with him preuail'd,
If not most mortall to him. But let it come:
Aufidius, though I cannot make true Warres,
He frame conuenient peace. Now good Aufidius,
Were you in my steed, would you haue heard
A Mother lesse? or granted lesse Aufidius?

Auf. I was mou'd withall.
Corio. I dare be sworne you were:

And fir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But (good fir)
What peace you'l make, aduise me: For my part,
He not to Rome, He backe with you, and pray you Stand to me in this cause. Oh Mother! Wife!

Auf. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy, & thy Honor
At difference in thee: Out of that He worke
My selfe a former Fortune.

Corio. I by and by: But we will drinke together.
And you shall beare
A better witness backe then words, which we
On like conditions, will haue Counter-seal'd.
Come enter with vs: Ladies you deserue
To haue a Temple built you: All the Swords
In Italy, and her Confederate Armes,
Could not haue made this peace.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.
Men. See you yon'd Coin a'th Capitol, yon'd corner
Sicin. Why what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the Ladies of Rome, especially his Mother, may preuaile with him. But I say, there is no hope in't, our throats are sentenc'd, and stay vpon execution.

Sicin. Is't possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man.

Men. There is differency between a Grub & a Butterfly, yet your Butterfly was a Grub: this Martius, is growne from Man to Dragon: He has wings, hee's more then a creeping thing.

Sicin. He lou'd his Mother deere.

Men. So did he mee: and he no more remembers his Mother now, then an eight yeare old horse. The tarmesse of his face, sowes ripe Grapes. When he walks, he moues like an Engine, and the ground shrinks before his Treas-ding. He is able to pierce a Corset with his eye: Talks like a knell, and his hum is a Battery. He sits in his State, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids bee done, is finisht with his bidding. He wants nothing of a God but Eternity, and a Heauen to Throne in.

Sicin. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the Character. Mark what met-cy his Mother shall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, then there is milke in a male-Tyger, that shall our poore City finde: and all this is long of you.

Sicin. The Gods be good vnto vs.

Men. No, in such a case the Gods will not bee good vnto vs, When we banish'd him, we respected not them:
and he returning to breake our necks, they respect not vs.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you'd saue your life, flye to your House,
The Plebeians haue got your Fellow Tribune,
And hale him vp and downe; all swearing, if
The Roman Ladies bring not comfort home,
They'l giue him death by Inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sicin. What's the Newes? (preuail'd)
Mess. Good Newes, good newes, the Ladies haue
The Volcians are dislodg'd, and Martius gone:
A merrier day did neuer yet greet Rome,
No, not th'expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sicin. Friend, art thou certaine this is true?
Is't most certaine.

Mess. As certaine as I know the Sun is fire:
Where haue you lurk'd that you make doubt of it:
Ne're through an Arch so hurried the blowne Tide,
As the recomforted through th'gates. Why harke you:
Trumpets, Hoboyes, Drums beate, altogether.

The Trumpets, Sack-buts, Plaleries, and Fifes,
Tabors, and Symboles, and the shewing Romans,
Make the Sunne dance. Hearke you. (A shout within)
Mene. This is good Newes:

I will go meete the Ladies. This Volumnia,
Is worth of Consuls, Senators, Patricians,
A City full: Of Tribunes such as you,
A Sea and Land full: you haue pray'd well to day:
This Morning, for tenthousand of your throates,
I'de not haue giuen a doit. Harke, how they ioy.

Sound still with the Shouts.

Sicin. First, the Gods blesse you for your tydings:
Next, accept my thankfulness.

Mess. Sir, we haue all great cause to giue great thanks.

Sicin. They are neere the City.

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sicin. Wee'l meet them, and helpe the ioy. Exeunt.

Enter two Senators, with Ladies, passing over the Stage, with other Lords.

Sena. Behold our Patronesse, the life of Rome:
Call all your Tribes together, praise the Gods,
And make triumphant fires, strew Flowers before them:
Vnshoot the noise that Banish'd Martius;
Repeale him, with the welcome of his Mother:
Cry welcome Ladies, welcome.

All. Welcome Ladies, welcome.

A Flourish with Drummes & Trumpets.

Enter Titus & Aufidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the Lords a'th City, I am heere:
Deliver them this Paper: hauing read it,
Bid them repaire to th'Market place, where I
Euen in theirs, and in the Commons eares
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse:
The City Ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appeare before the People, hoping
To purge himselfe with words. Dispatch.

Enter 3 or 4 Conspirators of Aufidius Faction.
Most Welcome.

1. Con. How is it with our Generall?

Auf. Euen so, as with a man by his owne Almes impoylon'd, and with his Charity flaine.

2. Con. Most Noble Sir, If you do hold the same intent Wherein you wish vs parties: Wee'l deliuer you
Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell,

We must proceed as we do finde the People.

3. Con. The People will remaine vncertaine, whil'st
'Twixt you there's difference: but the fall of either
Makes the Suruiuor heyre of all.

Auf. I know it:

And my pretext to strike at him, admits
A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine Honor for his truth: who being so heighten'd,
He watered his new Plants with dewes of Flattery,
Seducing so my Friends: and to this end,
He bow'd his Nature, neuer knowne before,
But to be rough, vnswayable, and free.

3. Consp. Sir, his stoutnesse
When he did stand for Confull, which he lost
By lacke of stooping.

Auf. That I would haue spoket of:
Being banish'd for't, he came vnto my Harth,
Presented to my knife his Throat: I tooke him,
Made him ioynt-servant with me: Gaue him way
In all his owne desires: Nay, let him choose
Out of my Files, his proiects, to accomplish
My best and freshest men, seru'd his designements
In mine owne person: holpe to reape the Fame
Which he did end all his; and tooke some pride
To do my selfe this wrong: Till at the last
I seem'd his Follower, not Partner; and
He wadg'd me with his Countenance, as if I had bin Mercenary.

1. Con. So he did my Lord:
The Army marueyl'd at it, and in the last,
When he had cartied Rome, and that we look'd
For no lesse Spoile, then Glory.

Auf. There was it:
For which my sinewes shall be stretcht vpon him,
At a few drops of Womens rhewme, which are
As cheape as Lies; he sold the Blood and Labour
Of our great Action; therefore shall he dye,
And He renew me in his fall. But hearke.

Drummes and Trumpets sounds, with great shouts of the people.

1. Con. Your Native Towne you enter'd like a Poste,
And had no welcomes home, but he returnes
Splitting the Ayre with noyse.

2. Con. And patient Fooles,
Whose children he hath slaine, their base throats teare
With giuing him glory.

3. Con. Therefore at your vantage,
Ere he expresse himselfe, or moue the people
With what he would say, let him feelee your Sword:
Which we will second, when he lies along
After your way. His Tale pronounc'd, shall bury His Reasons, with his Body.

Auf. Say no more. Heere come the Lords,

Enter the Lords of the City.

All Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I haue not deseru'd it.

But worthy Lords, haue you with heede perused
What I haue written to you?

All. We haue.

1. Lord. And greete to heare't:
What faults he made before the last, I thinke
Might haue found easie Fines: But there to end
Where he was to begin, and giue away
The benefit of our Leuiies, answering vs
With our owne charge: making a Treatie, where
There was a yeelding; this admits no excuse.

Auf.

Auf. He approaches, you shall heare him.
Enter Coriolanus marching with Drumme, and Colours. The Commoners being with him.

Corio. Haile Lords, I am return'd your Souldier:
No more infected with my Countries lone
Then when I parted hence: but still subsisting
Vnder your great Command. You are to know,
That prosperously I haue attempted, and
With bloody passage led your Warres, euen to
The gates of Rome: Our spoiles we haue brought home
Doth more then counterpoize a full third part
The charges of the Action. We haue made peace
With no lesse Honor to the Antiates
Then shame to th'Romans. And we heere deliuer Subscrib'd by th' Consuls, and Patricians, Together with the Seale a th' Senat, what
We haue compounded on.

Auf. Read it not Noble Lords,
But tell the Traitor in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your Powers.

Corio. Traitor? How now?

Auf. I Traitor, Martius.

Corio. Martius?

Auf. I Martius, Cainus Martius: Do'st thou thinke
Ile grace thee with that Robbery, thy stolne name
Coriolanus in Corioles?

You Lords and Heads a th' State, perfidiously
He ha's betray'd your businesse, and giuen vp
For certaine drops of Salt, your City Rome:
I say your City to his Wife and Mother,
Breaking his Oath and Resolution, like
A twist of rotten Silke, neuer admitting Counsaile a th' warre: But at his Nurfes teares
He whin'd and roar'd away your Victory,
That Pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wond'ring each at others.

Corio. Hear'st thou Mars?

Auf. Name not the God, thou boy of Teares.

Corio. Ha?

Aufid. No more.

Corio. Measurelesse Lye, thou hast made my heart
Too great for what contains it. Boy? Oh Slaue,
Pardon me Lords, 'tis the first time that euer
I was forc'd to scould. Your iudgments my graue Lords Must giue this Curre the Lye: and his owne Notion,
Who weares my stripes imprest vpon him, that Must beare my beating to his Graue, shall ioyne
To thrust the Lye vnto him.

1. Lord. Peace both, and heare me speake.

Corio. Cut me to peeces Volces men and Lads,
Staine all your edges on me. Boy, false Hound:
If you haue writ your Annales true, 'tis there,
That like an Eagle in a Doue-coat, I

Flatter'd your Volcians in Corioles.
Alone I did it, Boy.

Auf. Why Noble Lords,
Will you be put in minde of his blinde Fortune,
Which was your shame, by this vnholly Braggart?
Fore your owne eyes, and eares?

All Consp. Let him dye for't.

All People. Teare him to peeces, do it presently:
He kill'd my Sonne, my daughter, he kill'd my Cofine
Marcus, he kill'd my Father.

2. Lord. Peace hoe: no outrage, peace:

The man is Noble, and his Fame folds in
This Orbe o th' earth: His last offences to vs
Shall haue Iudicious hearing: Stand Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Corio. O that I had him, with six Aufidiuses, or more:
His Tribe, to vse my lawfull Sword.

Auf. Insolent Villaine.

All Consp. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

Draw both the Conspirators, and kill Martius, who falls, Aufidius stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.

Auf. My Noble Masters, heare me speake.

1. Lord. O Tullius.

2. Lord. Thou hast done a deed, whereat
Valour will weepe.

3. Lord. Tread not vpon him Masters, all be quiet,
Put vp your Swords.

Auf. My Lords,

When you shall know (as in this Rage
Prouok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger
Which this mans life did owe you, you'll reioyce
That he is thus cut off. Please it your Honours
To call me to your Senate, Ile deliuer
My selfe your loyall Seruant, or endure
Your heauiest Censure.

1. Lord. Beare from hence his body,
And mourne you for him. Let him be regarded As the most Noble Coarse, that euer Herald
Did follow to his Vrne.

2. Lord. His owne impatience,
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame:
Let's make the Best of it.

Auf. My Rage is gone,
And I am stricke with sorrow. Take him vp:
Helpe three a th' cheefest Souldiers, Ile be one,
Beate thou the Drumme that it speake mournfully:
Traile your Steele Pikes. Though in this City hee
Hath widdowed and vnchilded many a one,
Which to this houre bewaile the Injury,
Yeche shall haue a Noble Memory. Assist.

Exeunt bearing the Body of Martius. A dead March Sounded.

FINIS.

The Lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Flourish. Enter the Tribunes and Senators aloft. And then enter Saturninus and his Followers at one doore, and Bassianus and his Followers at the other, with Drum & Colours.

Saturninus.

Oble Patricians, Patrons of my right,
Defend the iustice of my Cause with Armes.
And Countrey-men, my louing Followers,
Pleade my Successiue Title with your Swords.

I was the first borne Sonne, that was the last
That wore the Imperiall Diadem of Rome:
Then let my Fathers Honours liue in me,
Nor wrong mine Age with this indignitie.

Bassianus. Romaines, Friends, Followers,
Fauourers of my Right:

If euer Bassianus, Caesars Sonne,
Were gracious in the eyes of Rovall Rome,
Keepe then this passage to the Capitoll:
And suffer not Dishonour to approach
Th' Imperiall Seate to Vertue: consecrate
To Iustice, Continence, and Nobility:
But let Desert in pure Election shine;
And Romanes, fight for Freedome in your Choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus aloft with the Crowne.

Princes, that strine by Factions, and by Friends,
Ambitiously for Rule and Empery:
Know, that the people of Rome for whom we stand
A speciall Party, haue by Common voyce
In Election for the Romane Emperie,
Chosen Andronicus, Sur-named Pious,
For many good and great deserts to Rome.
A Nobler man, a brayer Warriour,
Lives not this day within the City Wallles.
He by the Senate is accited home,
From weary Warres against the barbarous Gothes,
That with his Sonnes (a terror to our Foes)
Hath yok'd a Nation strong, train'd vp in Armes.
Ten yeares are spent, since first he vndertooke
This Cause of Rome, and chasticed with Armes
Our Enemies pride. Five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his Valiant Sonnes
In Coffins from the Field.
And now at last, laden with Honours Spoiles,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in Armes.

Let vs intreat, by Honour of his Name,
Whom (worthily) you would haue now succede,
And in the Capitoll and Senates right,
Whom you pretend to Honour and Adore,
That you withdraw you, and abate your Strength,
Dismiss your Followers, and as Suters should,
Pleade your Deserts in Peace and Humblenesse.

Saturnine. How fayre the Tribune speakes,
To calme my thoughts.

Bassia. Marcus Andronicus, so I do asse
In thy vprightnesse and Integrity:
And so I Loue and Honor thee, and thine,
Thy Noble Brother Titus, and his Sonnes,
And Her (to whom my thoughts are humbled all)
Gracious Lavinia, Romes rich Ornament,
That I will heere dismiss my louing Friends:
And to my Fortunes, and the Peoples Fauour,
Commit my Cause in ballance to be weigh'd.

Exit Souldiours.

Saturnine. Friends, that haue beene
Thus forward in my Right,
I thanke you all, and heere Dismiss you all,
And to the Loue and Fauour of my Countrey,
Commit my Selfe, my Person, and the Cause:
Rome, be as iust and gracious vnto me,
As I am confident and kinde to thee.
Open the Gates, and let me in.

Bassia. Tribunes, and me, a poore Competitor.

Flourish. They go vp into the Senat house.

Enter a Captaine.

Cap. Romanes make way: the good Andronicus,
Patron of Vertue, Romes best Champion,
Successfull in the Battailles that he fights,
With Honour and with Fortune is return'd,
From whence he circumscribed with his Sword,
And brought to yoke the Enemies of Rome.

Sound Drummes and Trumpets. And then enter two of Titus Sonnes; After them, two men bearing a Coffin covered with blacke, then two other Sonnes. After them, Titus Andronicus, and then Tamora the Queene of Gothes, & her two Sonnes Chiron and Demetrius, with Aaron the Moore, and others, as many as can bee: They set downe the Coffin, and Titus speakes.

Andronicus. Haile Rome: Victorious in thy Mourning Weedes:

Loc.

Loe as the Barke that hath discharg'd his fraught,
Returns with precious lading to the Bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her Anchorage:
Commeth Andronicus bound with Lawrell bowes,
To resalute his Country with his teares,
Teares of true ioy for his returne to Rome,
Thou great defender of this Capitoll,
Stand gracious to the Rites that we intend.
Romaines, of five and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
Halfe of the number that King Priam had,
Behold the poore remanes aliue and dead!
These that Surnine, let Rome reward with Loue:
These that I bring vnto their latest home,
With buriall amongst their Ancestors.
Heere Gothes haue giuen me leaue to sheath my Sword:
Titus vnkinde, and carelesse of thine owne,
Why suffer'st thou thy Sonnes vburied yet,
To houer on the dreadfull shore of Stix?
Make way to lay them by their Bretheren.

They open the Tombe.

There greeke in silence as the dead are wont,
And sleepe in peace, slaine in your Countries warres:
O sacred receptacle of my ioyes,
Sweet Cell of vertue and Nobilitie,
How many Sonnes of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt neuer render to me more?

Luc. Giue vs the proudest prisoner of the Gothes,
That we may hew his limbes, and on a pile
Admannus fratrum, sacrifice his flesh:
Before this earthly prison of their bones,
That so the shadowes be not vnappes'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.

Tit. I giue him you, the Noblest that Surniues,
The eldest Son of this distressed Queene.
Luc. Stay Romaine Bretheren, gracious Conqueror, Victorious Titus, true the teares I shed,
A Mothers teares in passion for her sonne:
And if thy Sonnes were euer deere to thee,
Oh thinke my Sonnes to be as deere to mee.
Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome
To beautifie thy Triumphs, and returne
Captiue to thee, and to thy Romaine yoke,
But must my Sonnes be slaughtered in the streetes,
For Valiant doings in their Countries cause?
O! If to fight for King and Common-weale,
Were piety in thine, it is in these:
Andronicus, slaine not thy Tombe with blood.
Wilt thou draw neere the nature of the Gods?
Draw neere them then in being mercifull,
Sweet mercy is Nobilities true badge,
Thrice Noble Titus, spare my first borne sonne.

Tit. Patient your selfe Madam, and pardon me.
These are the Bretheren, whom you Gothes beheld
Aliue and dead, and for their Bretheren slaine,
Religiously they aske a sacrifice:
To this your sonne is markt, and die he must,
T'appease their groaning shadowes that are gone.
Luc. Away with him, and make a fire straight,
And with our Swords vpon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbes till they be cleane consum'd.

Exit Sonnes with Alarbus.

Tamo. O cruell irreligious piety.
Chi. Was euer Scythia halfe so barbarous?
Dem. Oppose me Scythia to ambitious Rome,

Alarbus goes to rest, and we suruiue,
To tremble vnder Titus threatening looks,
Then Madam stand resolu'd, but hope withall,
The selfe same Gods that arm'd the Queene of Troy
With opportunitie of sharpe reuenge
Vpon the Thracian Tyant in his Tent,
May fauour Tamora the Queene of Gothes,
(When Gothes were Gothes, and Tamora was Queene)
To quit the bloody wrongs vpon her foes.

Enter the Sonnes of Andronicus againe.

Luci. See Lord and Father, how we haue perform'd
Our Romaine rightes, Alarbus limbes are lopt,
And intrals feede the sacrificiing fire,
Whose smoke like incense doth perfume the skie,
Remaineth nought but to interre our Bretheren,
And with low'd Larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their soules.

Flourish.

Then Sound Trumpets, and lay the Coffins in the Tombe.
In peace and Honour rest you heere my Sonnes,
Romes readiest Champions, repose you heere in rest,
Secure from worldly chaunces and mishaps:
Heere lurks no Treason, heere no enuie swels,
Heere grow no dammed grudges, heere are no stormes,
No noyle, but silence and Eternall sleepe,
In peace and Honour rest you heere my Sonnes.

Enter Lavinia.

Lavi. In peace and Honour, liue Lord Titus long,
My Noble Lord and Father, liue in Fame:
Loe at this Tombe my tributarie teares,
I render for my Bretherens Obsequies:
And at thy fecte I kneele, with teares of ioy
Shed on the earth for thy returne to Rome.
O blesse me heere with thy victorious hand,
Whole Fortune Romes best Citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome,
That hast thus louingly referu'd
The Cordiall of mine age to glad my hart,
Lavinia liue, out-liue thy Fathers dayes:
And Fames eternall date for vertues praise.

Marc. Long liue Lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious Triumpher in the eyes of Rome,
Tit. Thanks Gentle Tribune,
Noble brother Marcus.

Marc. And welcome! Nephews from successfull wars,
You that suruiue and you that sleepe in Fame:
Faire Lords your Fortunes are all alike in all,
That in your Countries seruice drew your Swords.
But safer Triumph is this Funerall Pompe,
That hath aspir'd to Solons Happines,
And Triumphs ouer chaunce in honours bed.
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in iustice thou hast euer bene,
Send thee by me their Tribune and their trust,
This Palliament of white and spotlesse Hue,
And name thee in Election for the Empire,
With these our late deceased Emperours Sonnes:
Be Candidatus then, and put it on,
And helpe to set a head on headlesse Rome.

Tit. A better head her Glorious body fits,
Then his that shakes for age and feeblenesse.

What

What should I d'on this Robe and trouble you,
Be chosen with proclamations to day,
To morrow yeeld vp rule, resigne my life,
And set abroad new businesse for you all.
Rome I haue bene thy Souldier forty yeares,
And led my Countries strength successfull,
And buried one and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
Knighted in Field, slaine manfully in Armes,
In right and Service of their Noble Countie:
Giue me a staffe of Honour for mine age,
But not a Scepter to controule the world,
Vpright he held it Lords, that held it last.

Marc. Titus, thou shalt obtaine and aske the Emperie.

Sat. Proud and ambitious Tribune canst thou tell?

Titus. Patience Prince Saturninus.

Sat. Romaines do me right.

Patricians draw your Swords, and sheath them not

Till Saturninus be Romes Emperour:

Andronicus would thou wert shipt to hell,

Rather then rob me of the peoples harts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That Noble minded Titus meanes to thee.

Tit. Content thee Prince, I will restore to thee
The peoples harts, and weane them from themselves.

Bass. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee

But Honour thee, and will doe till I die:

My Faction if thou strengthen with thy Friend?

I will most thankfull be, and thanks to men

Of Noble mindes, is Honourable Meede.

Tit. People of Rome, and Noble Tribune heere,

I aske your voyces and your Suffrages,

Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Tribunes. To gratifie the good Andronicus,

And Gratulate his safe returne to Rome,

The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes I thanke you, and this sure I make,

That you Create your Emperours eldest sonne,

Lord Saturnine, whose Vertues will I hope,

Reflect on Rome as Tyrans Rayes on earth,

And ripen Iustice in this Common-weale:

Then if you will elect by my aduise,

Crowne him, and say: Long liue our Emperour.

Marc. An. With Voyces and applause of euery sort,

Patricians and Plebeians we Create

Lord Saturninus Romes Great Emperour.

And say, Long liue our Emperour Saturnine.

A long Flourish till they come downe.

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy Fauours done,

To vs in our Election this day,

I giue thee thanks in part of thy Deserts,

And will with Deeds requite thy gentleness:

And for an Onset Titus to aduance

Thy Name, and Honorable Familie,

Lavinia will I make my Emperesse,

Rome's Royall Mistis, Mistis of my hart

And in the Sacred Pathe her espouse:

Tell me Andronicus doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth my worthy Lord, and in this match,

I hold me Highly Honoured of your Grace,

And heere in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,

King and Commander of our Common-weale,

The Wide-worlds Emperour, do I Consecrate,

My Sword, my Chariot, and my Prisoners,

Presents well Worthy Romes Imperiall Lord:

Receiue them then, the Tribute that I owe,

Mine Honours Ensignes humbled at my fecte.

Sat. Thanks Noble Titus, Father of my life,
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts
Rome shall record, and when I do forget
The least of these vspeakable Deserts,
Romans forget your Fealtie to me.

Tit. Now Madam are your prisoner to an Emperour,
To him that for you Honour and your State,
Will vse you Nobly and your followers.

Sat. A goodly Lady, trust me of the Hue
That I would choose, were I to choose a new:
Cleere vp Faire Queene that cloudy countenance,
Though chance of warre

Hath wrought this change of cheere,
Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome:
Princely shall be thy vsage euery way.

Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes: Madam he comforts you,
Can make your Greater then the Queene of Gothes?
Lavinia you are not displeas'd with this?

Lau. Not I my Lord, fith true Nobilitie,
Warrants these words in Princely curtesie.

Sat. Thanks sweete Lavinia, Romans let vs goe: Ransomelesse heere we set our Prisoners free,
Proclaime our Honors Lords with Trumpe and Drum.

Bass. Lord Titus by your leaue, this Maid is mine.

Tit. How sir? Are you in earnest then my Lord?

Bass. I Noble Titus, and resolu'd withall,

To doe my selfe this reason, and this right.

Marc. Sum cuiquam, is our Romaine Iustice,

This Prince in Iustice ceazeth but his owne.

Luc. And that he will and shall, if Lucius liue.

Tit. Traytors auant, where is the Emperours Guard?

Treason my Lord, Lavinia is surpris'd.

Sat. Surpris'd, by whom?

Bass. By him that iustly may

Beare his Betroth'd, from all the world away.

Muti. Brothers helpe to conuey her hence away,

And with my Sword Ile keepe this doore safe.

Tit. Follow my Lord, and Ile soone bring her backe.

Mut. My Lord you passe not heere.

Tit. What villaine Boy, bar'st me my way in Rome?

Mut. Helpe Lucius helpe. He kills him.

Luc. My Lord you are vnjust, and more then to,

In wrongfull quarrell, you haue slaine your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he are any sonnes of mine;

My sonnes would neuer so dishonour me.

Traytor restore Lavinia to the Emperour.

Luc. Dead if you will, but not to be his wife,

That is anothers lawfull promitt Loue.

Enter aloft the Emperour with Tamora and her two sonnes, and Aaron the Moore.

Empe. No Titus, no, the Emperour needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stocke:
Ile trust by Leifure him that mocks me once,
Thee neuer: nor thy Trayterous haughty sonnes,
Confederates all, thus to dishonour me.

Was none in Rome to make a stale
But Saturnine? Full well Andronicus

Agree these Deeds, with that proud bragge of thine,
That said'st, I beg'd the Empire at thy hands?

Tit. O monstrous, what reproachfull words are these?

Sat. But goe thy wayes, goe giue that changing peece,

To him that flourishe for her with his Sword:

A Valliant sonne in-law thou shalt enioy:

One, fit to bandy with thy lawlesse Sonnes,

To

To ruffle in the Common-wealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are Razors to my wounded hart.

Sat. And therefore louely Tamora Queene of Gothes,
That like the stately Troie mong' her Nymphs
Dost ouer-shine the Gallant' Rome Dames of Rome,
If thou be pleas'd with this my sodaine choise,
Behold I choise thee Tamora for my Bride,
And will Create thee Empresse of Rome.
Speake Queene of Goths dost thou applaud my choise?
And heere I sweare by all the Romaine Gods,
Sith Priest and Holy-water are so neere,
And Tapers burne so bright, and euery thing
In readines for Hymeneus stand,
I will not resalute the streets of Rome,
Or clime my Pallace, till from forth this place,
I leade espous'd my Bride along with me.

Tamo. And heere in sight of heauen to Rome I sweare,
If Saturnine aduance the Queene of Gothes,
Shew will a Hand-maid be to his desires,
A louing Nurse, a Mother to his youth.

Satur. Ascend Faire Queene,
Pantheon Lords, accompany
Your Noble Emperour and his louely Bride,
Sent by the heauens for Prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her Fortune Conquered,
There shall we Consummate our Spousall rites,

Tit. I am not bid to waite vpon this Bride:
Titus when wert thou wont to walke alone,
Dishonoured thus and Challenged of wrongs?

Enter Marcus and Titus Sonnes.

Mar. O Titus see! O see what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrell, slaine a Vertuous sonne.

Tit. No foolish Tribune, no: No sonne of mine,
Nor thou, nor these Confederates in the deed,
That hath dishonoured all our Family,
Vnworthy brother, and vnworthy Sonnes.

Luci. But let vs giue him buriall as he comes:
Giue Mutius buriall with our Bretheren.

Tit. Traytors away, he rest's not in this Tombe:
This Monument fise hundred yeares hath stood,
Which I haue Sumptuously re-edified:
Heere none but Souldiers, and Romes Seruitors,
Repose in Fame: None basely slaine in braules,
Bury him where you can, he comes not heere.

Mar. My Lord this is impiety in you,
My Nephew Mutius deeds do plead for him,
He must be buried with his bretheren.

Titus two Sonnes speaks.

And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall! What villaine was it spake that word?

Titus sonne speaks.

He that would vouch'd it in any place but heere.

Tit. What would you bury him in my despight?

Mar. No Noble Titus, but intreat of thee,
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, Euen thou hast stroke vpon my Crest,
And with these Boyes mine Honour thou hast wounded,
My foes I doe repute you euery one.
So trouble me no more, but get you gone.

1. Sonne. He is not himselfe, let vs withdraw.

2. Sonne. Not I tell Mutius bones be buried.

The Brother and the Sonnes kneele.

Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plea'd.

2. Sonne. Father, and in that name doth nature speak.

Tit. Speake thou no more if all the rest will speake.

Mar. Renowned Titus more then halfe my soule.

Luci. Deare Father, soule and substance of vs all.

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to interre
His Noble Nephew heere in vertues nest,
That died in Honour and Lavinia's cause.
Thou art a Romaine, be not barbarous:
The Greekes vpon aduise did bury Aias
That slew himselfe: And Laertes sonne,
Did graciously plead for his Funerals:
Let not young Mutius then that was thy ioy,
Be bar'd his entrance heere.

Tit. Rise Marcus, rise,

The dismall' Tit day is this that ere I saw,
To be dishonored by my Sonnes in Rome:
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

They put him in the Tombe.

Luci. There lie thy bones sweet Mutius with thy Till we with Trophees do adorne thy Tombe: (friends
They all kneele and say.

No man shed teares for Noble Mutius,
He liues in Fame, that di'd in vertues cause.

Mar. My Lord to step out of these sudden dumps,
How comes it that the subtle Queene of Gothes,
Is of a sodaine thus aduanc'd in Rome?

Tit. I know not Marcus: but I know it is,
(Whether by deuise or no) the heauens can tell,
Is the not then beholding to the man,
That brought her for this high good turne so fatte?
Yes, and will Nobly him remunerate.

Flourish.

Enter the Emperour, Tamora, and her two sons, with the Monie at one doore. Enter at the other doore Bassianus and Lavinia with others.

Sat. So Bassianus, you haue plaid your prize,
God giue you ioy fir of your Gallant Bride.

Bass. And you of yours my Lord: I say no more,
Nor wish no lesse, and so I take my leaue.

Sat. Traytor, if Rome haue law, or we haue power,
Thou and thy Faction shall repent this Rape.

Bass. Rape call you it my Lord, to cease my owne,
My true betrothed Loue, and now my wife?
But let the lawes of Rome determine all,
Meane while I am posselt of that is mine.

Sat. 'Tis good fir: you are very short with vs,
But if we liue, wee be as sharpe with you.

Bass. My Lord, what I haue done as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life,

Onely thus much I giue your Grace to know,

By all the duties that I owe to Rome,

This Noble Gentleman Lord Titus heere,

Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd,

That in the rescue of Lavinia,

With his owne hand did slay his youngest Son,

In zeale to you, and highly mou'd to wrath.

To be controul'd in that he frankly gaue:

Receiue him then to fauour Saturnine,

That hath exprest himselfe in all his deeds,

A Father and a friend to thee, and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus leaue to plead my Deeds,

'Tis thou, and those, that haue dishonoured me,

Rome and the righteous heauens be my iudge,

How I haue lou'd and Honour'd Saturnine.

Tam. My worthy Lord if euer Tamora,

Were

Were graecious in those Princely eyes of thine,
Then heare me speake indifferently for all:

And at my sute (sweet) pardon what is past.

Satur. What Madam, be dishonoured openly,

And basely put it vp without reuenge?

Tam. Not so my Lord,

The Gods of Rome for-fend,

I should be Authour to dishonour you.

But on mine honour dare, I vndertake

For good Lord Titus innocence in all:

Whose fury not dissembled speaks his griefes:

Then at my sute looke graciously on him,

Loose not so noble a friend on vaine suppose,

Nor with sowre looks afflict his gentle heart.

My Lord, be rul'd by me, be wonne at last,

Dissemble all your griefes and discontents,

You are but newly planted in your Throne,

Least then the people, and Patricians too,

Vpon a iust suruey take Titus part,

And so supplant vs for ingratitude,

Which Rome reputes to be a hainous sin ne.

Yield at intreats, and then let me alone:

Ile finde a day to massacre them all,

And race their faction, and their familie,

The cruell Father, and his trayt'rous sonnes,

To whom I sued for my deare sonnes life.

And make them know what 'tis to let a Queene

Kneele in the streetes, and beg for grace in vaine.

Come, come, sweet Emperour, (come Andronicus)

Take vp this good old man, and cheere the heart,

That dies in tempest of thy angry frowne.

King. Rise Titus, rise,

My Empresse hath preuail'd.

Titus. I thank your Maiestie,

And her my Lord.

These words, these looks,

Infuse new life in me.

Tamo. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,

A Roman now adopted happily.

And must aduise the Emperour for his good,

This day all quarrels die Andronicus.

And let it be mine honour good my Lord,

That I haue reconcil'd your friends and you.

For you Prince Bassianus, I haue past

My word and promise to the Emperour,

That you will be more milde and tractable.

And feare not Lords:

And you Lavinia,

By my aduise all humbled on your knees,

You shall aske pardon of his Maiestie.

Son. We doe,

And vow to heauen, and to his Highnes,

That what we did, was mildly, as we might,

Tending our sisters honour and our owne.

Mar. That on mine honour heere I do protest.

King. Away and talke not, trouble vs no more.

Tamora. Nay, nay,

Sweet Emperour, we must all be friends,

The Tribune and his Nephews kneele for grace,

I will not be denied, (sweet hart) looke back.

King. Marcus,

For thy sake and thy brothers heere,

And at my louely Tamora's intreats,

I doe remitte these young mens haynous faults.

Stand vp: Lavinia, though you left me like a churle,

I found a friend, and sure as death I sweare,

I would not part a Batchellour from the Priest.
Come, if the Emperours Court can feast two Brides,
You are my guest Lavinia, and your friends:
This day shall be a Loue-day Tamora.

Tit. To morrow and it please your Maiestie,

To hunt the Panther and the Hart with me,

With horne and Hound,

Weele giue your Grace Bon iour.

Satur. Be it so Titus, and Gramercy to.

Exeunt.

Actus Secunda.

Flourish. Enter Aaron alone.

Aron. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus toppe,
Safe out of Fortunes shot, and sits aloft,
Secure of Thunders cracke or lightning flash,
Aduanc'd about pale enuies threatening reach:
As when the golden Sunne salutes the morne,
And hauing gilt the Ocean with his beames,
Gallops the Zodiacke in his glistring Coach,
And ouer-looks the highest ptering hills:
So, Tamora!

Vpon her wit doth earthly honour waite,
And vertue stoopes and trembles at her frowne.
Then Aaron arme thy hart, and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy Emperiall Mistis,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fettered in amorous chaines,
And faster bound to Aarons charming eyes,
Then is Prometheus ti'd to Caucasus.
Away with flauish weedes, and idle thoughts,
I will be bright and shine in Pearle and Gold,
To waite vpon this new made Empresse.
To waite said I? To wanton with this Queene,
This Goddesse, this Semiramis, this Queene,
This Syren, that will charme Romes Saturnine,
And see his shipwracke, and his Common weales.
Hollo, what storme is this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius braning.

Dem. Chiron thy yerres wants wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners to intru'd where I am grac'd,
And may for ought thou know'st affected be.

Chi. Demetrius, thou doo'st ouer-weene in all,
And so in this, to beare me downe with braues,
'Tis not the difference of a yeere or two
Makes me lesse gracious, or thee more fortunate:
I am as able, and as fit, as thou;

To serue, and to deserue my Mistis grace,
And that my sword vpon thee shall approue,
And plead my passions for Lavinia's loue.

Aron. Clubs, clubs, these louers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why Boy, although our mother (vnaduised)

Gaue you a daunsing Rapier by your side,

Are you so desperate growne to threat your fitends?

Goe too: haue your Lath glued within your sheath,

Till you know better how to handle it.

Chi. Meane while fir, with the little skill I haue,

Full well shalt thou perceiue how much I dare.

Dem. I Boy, grow ye so braue?

Aron. Why how now Lords?

So nere the Emperours Pallace dare you draw,

And

And maintaine such a quarrell openly?
Full well I wote, the ground of all this grudge.
I would not for a million of Gold,
The cause were knowne to them it most concernes.
Nor would your noble mother for much more
Be so dishonored in the Court of Rome:
For shame put vp.

Deme. Not I, till I haue sheath'd
My rapier in his bosome, and withall
Thrust these reprochfull speeches downe his throgar,
That he hath breath'd in my dishonour heere.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd, and full resolu'd, Foule spoken Coward,
That thundrest with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing dar'st performe.

Aron. A way I say.
Now by the Gods that warlike Gothes adore,
This pretty brabble will vndoe vs all:
Why Lords, and thinke you not how dangerous
It is to set vpon a Princes right?
What is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her loue such quarrels may be broacht,
Without controulement, Iustice, or reuenge?
Young Lords beware, and should the Empresse know,
This discord ground, the mulicke would not please.

Chi. I care not I, knew she and all the world,
I loue Lavinia more then all the world.

Deme. Youngling,
Learne thou to make some meaner choise,
Lavinia is thine elder brothers hope.

Aron. Why are ye mad? Or know ye not in Rome,
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brooke Competitors in loue?
I tell you Lords, you doe but plot your deaths,
By this deuise.

Chi. Aron, a thousand deaths would I propose,
To archieue her whom I do loue.

Aron. To archieue her, how?

Deme. Why, mak'st thou it so strange?

Shee is a woman, therefore may be woo'd,
Shee is a woman, therefore may be wonne,
Shee is Lavinia therefore must be lou'd.
What man, more water glideth by the Mill
Then wots the Miller of, and ealie it is
Of a cut loose to steale a shiue we know:
Though Bassianus be the Emperours brother,
Better then he haue worne Vulcans badge.

Aron. Ty and as good as Saturnus may.

Deme. Then why should he dispaire that knowes to
With words, faire lookes, and liberality: (court it
What hast not thou full often stricke a Doe,
And borne her cleanly by the Keepers nose?

Aron. Why then it seemes some certaine snatch or so
Would serue your turnes.

Chi. I so the turne were serued.

Deme. Aron thou hast hit it.

Aron. Would you had hit it too,
Then should not we be tir'd with this adoo:

Why harke yee, harke yee, and are you such fooles,
To square for this? Would it offend you then?

Chi. Faith not me.

Deme. Not me, so I were one.

Aron. For shame be friends, & ioyne for that you iar:

'Tis pollicie, and stratageme must doe
That you affect, and so must you resolute,

That what you cannot as you would atchieue,
You must perforce accomplish as you may:
Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaste
Then this Lavinia, Bassianus loue,
A speedier course this lingring languishment
Must we pursue, and I haue found the path:
My Lords, a solemne hunting is in hand,
There will the lovely Roman Ladies troope:
The Forrest walks are wide and spacious,
And many vnfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kinde for rape and villanie:
Single you thicker then this dainty Doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words:
This way or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our Empresse with her sacred wit
To villanie and vengeance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend,
And she shall file our engines with aduise,
That will not suffer you to square your selues,
But to your wishes height aduance you both.
The Emperours Court is like the house of Fame,
The pallace full of tongues, of eyes, of eares:
The Woods are ruthlesse, dreadfull, deafe, and dull:
There speake, and strike braue Boyes, & take your turnes.
There serue your lusts, shadow'd from heauens eye,
And reuell in Lavinia's Treasure.

Chi. Thy counsell Lad smells of no cowardise,
Deme. Sylus aut nefas, till I finde the streames,
To coole this heat, a Charme to calme their fits,
Per Stigia per manes Vebor.

Enter Titus Andronicus and his three sonnes, making a noise with hounds and hornes, and Arcus.

Tit. The hunt is vp, the morne is bright and gray,
The fields are fragrant, and the Woods are greene,
Vncouple heere, and let vs make a bay,
And wake the Emperour, and his lovely Bride,
And rouse the Prince, and ring a hunters peale,
That all the Court may eccho with the noyse.
Sonnes let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To attend the Emperours person carefully:
I haue bene troubled in my sleepe this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Winds Hornes.

Heere a cry of houndes, and winds hornes in a peale, then Enter Saturnus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lavinia, Chiron, Demetrius, and their Attendants.

Tit. Many good morrowes to your Maicstie,
Madam to you as many and as good.
I promised your Grace, a Hunters peale.

Satur. And you haue rung it lustily my Lords,
Somewhat to earely for new married Ladies.

Bass. Lavinia, how say you?

Lavi. I say no:

I haue bene awake two houres and more.

Satur. Come on then, horse and Chariots let vs haue,
And to our sport: Madam, now shall ye see,
Our Romaine hunting.

Mar. I haue dogges my Lord,
Will rouse the proudest Panther in the Chase,
And clime the highest P omontary top.

Tit. And I haue horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and runnes like Swallowes ore. the plaine

Deme. Chiron

Deme. Chiron we hunt not we, with Horse nor Hound
But hope to plucke a dainty Doe to ground. Exeunt
Enter Aaron alone.

Aron. He that had wit, would thinke that I had none,
To bury so much Gold vnder a Tree,
And neuer after to inherit it.
Let him that thinks of me so abiectly,
Know that this Gold must coine a stratageme,
Which cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent peece of villany:
And so repose sweet Gold for their vnrest,
That haue their Almshouses out of the Empresse Chest.

Enter Tamora to the Moore.
Tamora. My lovely Aaron,
Wherefore look'st thou sad,
When euery thing doth make a Gleefull boast?
The Birds chaunt melody on euery bush,
The Snake lies rolled in the chearefull Sunne,
The greene leaues quier with the cooling winde,
And make a cheker'd shadow on the ground:
Vnder their sweet shade, Aaron let vs sit,
And whilst the babling Echo mock's the Hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well tun'd Hornes,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,
Let vs sit downe, and make their yelping noyse:
And after conflict, such as was suppos'd,
The wandering Prince and Dido once enioy'd,
When with a happy storme they were surpris'd,
And Curtain'd with a Counsaile-keeping Caue,
We may each wreathed in the others armes,
(Our pastimes done) possesse a Golden slumber,
Whiles Hounds and Hornes, and sweet Melodious Birds
Beate vs vs, as is a Nurses Song
Of Lullabie, to bring her Babe asleepe.

Aron. Madame, Venus gouerne your desires,
Saturne is Dominator ouer mine:
What signifies my deadly standing eye,
My silence, and my Cloudy Melancholie,
My fleece of Woolly haire, that now vneurles,
Euen as an Adder when she doth vnrowle
To do some fatal execution?
No Madam, these are no Veneriall signes,
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood, and reuenge, are Hammering in my head.
Hark Tamora, the Empresse of my Soule,
Which neuer hopes more heauen, then rests in thee,
This is the day of Doome for Bassianus;
His Philomet must loose her tongue to day,
Thy Sonnes make Pillage of her Chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus blood.
Seest thou this Letter, take it vp I pray thee,
And giue the King this fatal plotted Scrowle,
Now question me no more, we are espied,
Heere comes a parcell of our hopefull Booty,
Which dreads not yet their liues destruction.

Enter Bassianus and Lavinia.

Tamora. Ah my sweet Moore:
Sweeter to me then life.

Aron. No more great Empresse, Bassianus comes,
Be crosse with him, and Ile goe fetch thy Sonnes
To backe thy quarrell what so ere they be.

Bass. Whom haue we heere?

Romes Royall Empresse,

Vnfurnisht of our well besecming troope?
Or is it Dian habited like her,
Who hath abandoned her holy Groves,
To see the generall Hunting in this Forrest?
Tamora. Saweie controuler of our priuate steps:
Had I the power, that some say Dian had,
Thy Temples should be planted presently.
With Hornes, as was Alteus, and the Hounds
Should driue vpon his new transformed limbes,
Vnmannerly Intruder as thou art.

Lavi. Vnder your patience gentle Empresse,
'Tis thought you haue a goodly gift in Horning,
And to be doubted, that your Moore and you
Are flagled forth to try experiments:
Ioue shield your husband from his Hounds to day,

'Tis pittie they should take him for a Stag.
Bass. Beleue me Queen, your swarth Cymmerion,
Doth make your Honour of his bodies Hue;

Spotted, drest, and abhominable.
Why are you sequestred from all your traine?
Discounted from your Snow-white goodly Steed,
And wandred hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moore;

If soule desire had not conducted you
To this valley, where you are intercepted in your sport,
Lavi. And being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my Noble Lord, be rare
For Saucinesse, I pray you let vs hence,
And let her ioy her Raven coloured loue.

This valley fits the purpose passing well.
Bass. The King my Brother shall haue notice of this.
Lavi. I, for these slips haue made him noted long,
Good King, to be so mightily abused.

Tamora. Why I haue patience to endure all this?
Enter Chiron and Demetrius.

Deme. How now deere Soueraigne
And our gracious Mother,
Why doth your Highnes looke so pale and wan?

Tamora. Haue I not reason thinke you to looke pale?
These two haue tie'd me hither to this place:
A barren, drest, vale you see it is.

The Trees though Sommer, yet forlorne and leane;
Ore-come with Mosse, and balefull Mistletoe,
Heere neuer shines the Sunne, heere nothing breeds;
Vnlesse the nightly Owle, or fatal Raven:
And when they shew'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me heere at dead time of the night,
A thousand Fiends, a thousand hissing Snakes,
Ten thousand swelling Toades, as many Vrchins,
Would make such fearefull and confused cries,

As any mortall body hearing it,
Should strait fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But strait they told me they would binde me heere,
Vnto the body of a dismall yew,
And leaue me to this miserable death.

And then they call'd me foule Adulteresse,
Lasciuious Goth, and all the bitterest tearmes
That euer eare did heare to such effect.

And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed:
Reuenge it, as you loue your Mothers life,
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my Children.

Deme. This is a witnesse that I am thy Sonne. stab him.
Chi. And this for me,

Strook home to shew my strength.
Lavi. I come Semeramus day Barbarous Tamora.

For no name fits thy nature but thy owne.

Tam. Give me thy poynard, you that know my boyes
Your Mothers hand shall right your Mothers wrong.

Deme. Stay Madam heere is more belongs to her,
First thrash the Corne, then after burne the straw.

This Minion stood vpon her chastity,
Vpon her Nuptiall yow, her loyaltie,
And with that painted hope, braues your Mightinesse,
And shall she carry this vnto her graue?

Chi. And if she doe,
I would I were an Eunuch,
Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead Trunke Pillow to our lust.

Tamo. But when ye haue the hony we desire,
Let not this Waspe out-lug vs both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you Madam we will make that sure:
Come Mistris, now perforce we will enjoy,

That nice-preferr'd honesty of yours:
Lau. Oh Tamora, thou hast beat the woman face.

Tamo. I will not heare her speake, away with her.
Lau. Swears Lords, intreat her heere me, but a word.

Deme. Listen faire Madam, let it be your glory,
To see her teares, but be your hart to them.

As vnto a flint, to drops of raine.
Lau. When did the Tigers young ones teach the dam?

O doe not learne her wrath, she taught it thee,
The milke thou suckt from her did turne to Marble.

Euen at thy Teat thou hadst thy Tyranny,
Yet every Mother breeds not Sonnes alike.

Do thou intreat her shew a woman pittie:
Chiro. What?

Wouldst thou haue me proue my selfe a bastard?
Lau. 'Tis true.

The Raven doth not hatch a Larke,
Yet haue I heard, Oh could I finde it now.

The Lion mou'd with pittie, did indure
To haue his Princely pawes par'd all away.

Some say, that Ravens foster forlorne children,
The while't their owne birds famish in their nests:

Oh be to me though thy hart hart say no,
Nothing so kind but something pittifull.

Tamo. I know not what it means, away with her.
Lau. Oh let me teach thee for my Fathers sake.

That gaue thee life when well he might haue slaine thee:
Be not obdurate, open thy deafe eares.

Tamo. Hadst thou in person once offended me,
Euen for his sake am I pittifull.

Remember Boyes I pow'd forth teares in vaine,
To saue your brother from the sacrifice,

But fierce Andronicus would not relent,
Therefore away with her, and vse her as you will.

The worse to her, the better lou'd of me.
Lau. Oh Tamora,

Be call'd a gentle Queene,
And with thine owne hands kill me in this place.

For 'tis not life that I haue beg'd so long,
Poore I was slaine, when Basianus dy'd.

Tamo. What beg'st thou then? fond woman let me go?
Lau. 'Tis present death I beg, and one thing more,

That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:
Oh keepe me from their worse then killing lust,

And tumble me into some loathsome pit,
Where neuer mans eye may behold my body;

Doe this, and be a charitable murderer.
Tamo. So should I rob my sweet Sonnes of their fee,

No let them satisfie their lust on thee.

Deme. Away,
For thou hast staid vs heere too long.

Lavinia. No Garace,
No womankind? Ah beastly creature,

The blot and enemy to our generall name,
Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay then Ile stop your mouth,
Bring thou her husband,

This is the Hole where Aaron hid vs hide him,
Tamo. Farewell my Sonnes, see that you make her sure,

Nere let my heart know merry theere indeed,
Till all the Andronicus be made away.

Now will I hence to seeke my lovely Moore,
And let my spleenefull Sonnes this Trunk despoile.

Enter Aaron with two of Titus Sonnes.
Aron. Come on my Lords, the better foote before,

Straight will I bring you to the cloth some pit,
Where I espied the Panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very deail what ere it bodes.
Marti. And mine I promise you, were it not for shame,

Well could I leaue our sport to sleepe a while,
Quin. What art thou fallen to?

What subtle Hole is this?
Whose mouth is couered with Rude growing Briars,

Vpon whose leaues are drops of new-shed blood,
As fresh as mornings dew distill'd on flowers.

A very facall place it seemes to me:
Speake Brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Marti. Oh Brother,
With the dismallst object

Thar euer eye with sight made heart lament.
Aron. Now will I fetch the King to finde them heere,

That he thereby may haue a likely gesse,
How these were they that made away his Brother.

Marti. Why dost not comfort me and helpe me out,
From this vnhallow'd and blood-stained Hole?

Quin. I am surpris'd with an vncouth feare,
A chilling sweat ore-runs my trembling ioynts,

My heart suspects more then mine eie can see.
Marti. To proue thou hast a true diuining heart,

Aron and thou looke downe into this den,
And see a fearefull sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone,
And my compassionate heart

Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
The thing whereat it trembles by surmise:

Oh tell me how it is, for nere till now
Was I a child, to feare I know not what.

Marti. Lord Basianus lies embrewed heere,
All on a heape like to the slaughtred Lambe,

In this detested, darke, blood-drinking pit.
Quin. If it be darke, how dost thou know 'tis he?

Marti. Vpon his bloody finger he doth weare
A precious Ring, that lightens all the Hole:

Which like a Taper in some Monument,
Doth shine vpon the dead mans earthly cheekes,

And shewes the ragged intrails of the pit:
So pale did shine the Moone on Piramus,

When he by night lay bath'd in Maiden blood:
O Brother helpe me with thy fainting hand.

If feare hath made thee faint, as mee it hath,
Out of this fell deuouring receptacle,

As hatefull as Oculus milke mouth.
Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may helpe thee out.

Or

Or wanting strength to doe thee so much good,
I may be pluckt into the swallowing wombe,

Of this deepe pit, poore Basianus graue:
I haue no strength to plucke thee to the brink.

Marti. Nor I no strength to clime without thy help.
Quin. Thy hand once more, I will not loose againe,

Till thou art heere aloft, or I below,
Thou canst not come to me, I come to thee.

Enter the Emperour, Aaron the Moore.
Satur. Along with me, Ile see what hole is heere,

And what he is that now is leapt into it.
Say, who art thou that lately didst descend,

Into this gaping hollow of the earth?
Marti. The vnhappie sonne of old Andronicus,

Brought hither in a most vnluckie houre,
To finde thy brother Basianus dead.

Satur. My brother dead? I know thou dost but iest,
He and his Lady both are at the Lodge;

Vpon the North-side of this pleasant Chase,
'Tis not an houre since I left him there.

Marti. We know not where you left him all aliue,
But our alas, heere haue we found him dead.

Enter Tamora, Andronicus, and Lucius.
Tamo. Where is my Lord the King?

King. Heere Tamora, though grieu'd with killing griefe.
Tamo. Where is thy brother Basianus?

King. Now to the bottom doe thou search my wound,
Poore Basianus heere lies murdered.

Tamo. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ,
The complot of this timelesse Tragedie,

And wonder greatly that mans face can fold,
In pleasing smiles such murderous Tyrannie.

She giueth Saturnine a Letter.
Saturninus reads the Letter.

And if we misse to meete him hartomely,
Sweet hunt him, Basianus 'tis we meane,

Do thou so much as dig the graue for him,
Thou know'st our meaning, looke for thy reward

Among the Nettles at the Elder tree:
Whichouer shades the mouth of that same pit,

Where we decreed to bury Basianus
Doe this and purchase vs thy lasting friends.

King. Oh Tamora, was euer heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the Elder tree,

Looke sirs, if you can finde the huntsman out,
That should haue murdered Basianus heere.

Aron. My gracious Lord heere is the bag of Gold.
King. Two of thy whelpes, fell Curs of bloody kind

Haue heere bereft my brother of his life:
Sirs drag them from the pit vnto the prison,

There let them bide vntill we haue deuiz'd
Some neuer heard-of torturing paine for them.

Tamo. What are they in this pit,
Oh wondrous thing!

How easily murder is discovered?
Tit. High Emperour, vpon my feeble knee,

I beg this boone, with teares, not lightly shed,
That this fell fault of my accursed Sonnes,

Accursed, if the faultes be prou'd in them,
King. If it be prou'd? you see it is apparant,

Who found this Letter, Tamora was it you?
Tamora. Andronicus himselfe did take it vp.

Tit. I did my Lord,
Yet let me be their baile.

For by my Fathers reuerent Tombe I vow
They shall be ready at your Highnes will,

To answere their suspicion with their liues.
King. Thou shalt not baile them, see thou follow me:

Some bring the murdered body, some the murderers,
Let them not speake a word, the guilt is plaine,

For by my soule, were there worse end then death,
That end vpon them should be executed.

Tamo. Andronicus I will entreat the King,
Feare not thy Sonnes, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come Lucius come,
Stay not to talke with them.

Exit.

Who found this Letter, Tamora was it you?
Tamora. Andronicus himselfe did take it vp.

Tit. I did my Lord,
Yet let me be their baile.

For by my Fathers reuerent Tombe I vow
They shall be ready at your Highnes will,

To answere their suspicion with their liues.
King. Thou shalt not baile them, see thou follow me:

Some bring the murdered body, some the murderers,
Let them not speake a word, the guilt is plaine,

For by my soule, were there worse end then death,
That end vpon them should be executed.

Tamo. Andronicus I will entreat the King,
Feare not thy Sonnes, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come Lucius come,
Stay not to talke with them.

Exit.

Enter the Emperesse Sonnes, with Lavinia, her hands cut off and her tongue cut out, and drunke.

Deme. So now goe tell and if thy tongue can speake,
Who 'twas that cut thy tongue and rauisht thee.

Chi. Write downe thy mind, bewray thy meaning so,
And if thy Rumpes will let thee play the Scribe:

Deme. See how with signes and tokens she can scowle.
Chi. Goe home,

Call for sweet water, wash thy hands.
Deme. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash.

And so let's leaue her to her silent walks.
Chi. And were my cause, I should goe hang my selfe.

Deme. If thou hadst hands to helpe thee knit the cord.
Exit.

Winde Hornes.
Enter Marcus from hunting, to Lavinia.

Who is this, my Neece that flies away so fast?
Cosen a word, where is your husband?

If I doe wake, would all my wealth would wake me;
If I doe wake, some Planet strike me downe,

That I may slumber in eternall sleepe.
Speake gentle Neece, what steepe vngentle hands

Hath lopt, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet Ornaments

Whole circkling shadowes, Kings haue fought to sleepe in
And might not gaine so great a happines

As halfe thy Loue: Why dost not speake to me?
Alas, a Crimson river of warme blood,

Like to a bubling fountaine stir'd with winde,
Doth rise and fall betweene thy Rosed lips,

Comming and going with thy hony breath.
But sure some Tereus hath deflower'd thee,

And least thou shouldst detect them, cut thy tongue.
Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame:

And notwithstanding all this losse of blood,
As from a Conduit with their issuing Spouts,

Yet doe thy cheekes looke red as Tians face;
Blushing to be encountred with a Cloud,

Shall I speake for thee? Shall I say 'tis so?
Oh that I knew thy hart, and knew the beast

That I might raile at him to ease my mind.
Sorrow concealed, like an Ouen stoppt,

Doth burne the hart to Cinders where it is.
Faile Philomela she but lost her tongue,

And in a tedious Sampler sowed her minde.
But lovely Neece, that meane is cut from thee,

A craftier Tereus hast thou met, withall
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,

dd 2

That

That could haue better sowed then Philomel.
Oh had the monster scene those Lilly hands,
Tremble like Aspen leaues vpon a Lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kisse them,
He would not then haue toucht them for his life.
Or had he heard the heavenly Harmony,
Whic h that sweet tongue hath made:
He would haue dropt his knife and fell asleepe,
As Cerberus at the Thracian Poets feet.
Come, let vs goe, and make thy father blinde,
For such a sight will blinde a fathers eye.
One houres storme will drowne the fragrant meades,
What, will whole months of teares thy Fathers eyes?
Doe not draw backe, for we will mourne with thee:
Oh could our mourning ease thy misery.

Exeunt

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Iudges and Senators with Titus two sonnes bound, passing on the Stage to the place of execution, and Titus going before pleading.

Ti. Heare me graue fathers, noble Tribunes stay,
For pittie of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous warres, whilst you securely slept:
For all my blood in Romes great quarrell shed,
For all the frosty nights that I haue watcht,
And for these bitter teares, which now you see,
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheekes,
Be pittifull to my condemned Sonnes,
Whose soules is not corrupted as tis thought:
For two and twenty sonnes I neuer wept,
Because they died in honours lofty bed.

Andronicus lyeth downe, and the Iudges passe by him.
For these, Tribunes, in the dust I write
My harts deepe languor, and my soules sad teares:
Let my teares stanch the earths drie appetite.
My sonnes sweet blood, will make it shame and blis:
O earth! I will be friend thee more with raine
That shall distill from these two ancient ruines,
Then youthfull Aprill shall with all his showres
In summers drought: He drop vpon thee still,
In Winter with warme teares He melt the snow,
And keepe eternall spring time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drinke my deare sonnes blood.

Enter Lucius, with his weapon drawne.

Oh reuerent Tribunes, oh gentle aged men,
Vnbide my sonnes, reuerie the doome of death,
And let me say (that neuer wept before)
My teares are now preualing Oratours.

Lu. Oh noble father, you lament in vaine,
The Tribunes heare not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrowes to a stone.

Ti. Ah Lucius for thy brothers let me plead,
Graue Tribunes, once more I intreat of you.

Lu. My gracious Lord, no Tribune heares you speake.

Ti. Why tis no matter man, if they did heare
They would not marke me: oh if they did heare
They would not pittie me.
Therefore I tell my sorrowes bootles to the stones.

Who though they cannot answere my distresse,
Yet in some sort they are better then the Tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale:
When I doe weepe, they humbly at my feete
Receiue my teares, and seeme to weepe with me,
And were they but attired in graue weedes,
Rome could afford no Tribune like to these.
A stone is as soft waxe,
Tribunes more hard then stones:
A stone is silent, and offendeth not,
And Tribunes with their tongues doome men to death.
But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawne?

Lu. To rescue my two brothers from their death,
For which attempt the Iudges haue pronounc'd
My euerslasting doome of banishment.

Ti. O happy man, they haue befriended thee:
Why foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceiue
That Rome is but a wilderness of Tigers?
Tigers must pray, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou then,
From these deuourers to be banished?
But who comes with our brother Marcus heere?

Enter Marcus and Lavinia.

Mar. Titus, prepare thy noble eyes to weepe,
Or if not so, thy noble heart to breake:

I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Ti. Will it consume me? Let me see it then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Ti. Why Marcus so she is.

Luc. Ayme this obiect kills me.

Ti. Faint-hearted boy, arise and looke vpon her,
Speake Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handlesse in thy Fathers sight?
What foole hath added water to the Sea?
Or brought a faggot to bright burning Troy?
My griefe was at the height before thou cam'st,
And now like Nylus it disdained bounds:
Giue me a sword, He chop off my hands too,
For they haue fought for Rome, and all in vaine:
And they haue nur'd this woe,
In feeding life:

In bootlesse prayer haue they bene held vp,
And they haue seru'd me to effectlesse vse.
Now all the seruice I require of them,
Is that the one will helpe to cut the other:
'Tis well Lavinia, that thou hast no hands,
For hands to do Rome seruice, is but vaine.

Luci. Speake gentle sister, who hath martyrd thee?

Mar. O that delightfull engine of her thoughts,
That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torne from forth that pretty hallow cage,
Where like a sweet melodious bird it sung,
Sweet varied notes inchanting euery eare.

Luci. Oh say thou for her,
Who hath done this deed?

Mar. Oh thus I found her straying in the Parke, Seeking to hide herselfe as doth the Deere
That hath receiue some vnrecuring wound.

Ti. It was my Deere,
And he that wounded her,
Hath hurt me more, then had he kild me dead:
For now I stand as one vpon a Rocke,
Inuiron'd with a wilderness of Sea:
Who markes the waxing tide,
Grow waue by waue,

Expecting

Expecting euer when some enuious surge,
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sonnes are gone:
Heere stands my other sonne, a banisht man,
And heere my brother weeping at my woes.
But that which giues my soule the greatest spurne,
Is deere Lavinia, deerer then my soule.
Had I but seene thy picture in this plight,
It would haue madded me. What shall I doe?
Now I behold thy liuely body so?
Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy teares,
Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyrd thee:
Thy husband he is dead, and for his death
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.
Looke Marcus, ah sonne Lucius looke on her:
When I did name her brothers, then fresh teares
Stood on her cheekes, as doth the hony dew,
Vpon a gathred Lillie almost withered.

Mar. Perchance she weepes because they kil'd her husband,
Perchance because she knowes him innocent.

Ti. If they did kill thy husband then be ioyfull,
Because the law hath tane reuenge on them.
Nay, no, they would not doe so foule a deepe,
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.
Gentle Lavinia let me kisse thy lips,
Or make some signes how I may do thee ease:
Shall thy good Vncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou and I sit round about some Fountaine,
Looking all downewards to behold our cheekes
How they are stain'd in meadowes, yet not dry
With miery slime left on them by a flood:
And in the Fountaine shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that cleerenes,
And made a brine pit with our bitter teares?
Or shall we cut away our hands like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumbe shewes
Passe the remainder of our hatefull dayes?
What shall we doe? Let vs that haue our tongues
Plot some deuise of further miseries
To make vs wondred at in time to come.

Lu. Sweet Father cease your teares, for at your griefe
See how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Mar. Patience deere Neece, good Titus drie thine eyes.

Ti. Ah Marcus, Marcus, Brother well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drinke a teare of mine,
For thou poore man hast drown'd it with thine owne.

Lu. Ah my Lavinia I will wipe thy cheekes.

Ti. Marke Marcus marke, I vnderstand her signes,
Had she a tongue to speake, now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee:
His Napkin with her true teares all bewet,
Can do no seruice on her sorrowfull cheekes.
Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
As farre from helpe as Limbo is from blisse,

Enter Aron the Moore alone.

Moore. Titus Andronicus, my Lord the Emperour,
Sends thee this word, that if thou loue thy sonnes,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thy selfe old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the King: he for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sonnes aliue,
And that shall be the ranfome for their fault.

Ti. Oh gracious Emperour, oh gentle Aron.
Did euer Raven sing so like a Lark,
That giues sweet tydings of the Sunnes vprise?
With all my heart, He send the Emperour my hand,
Good Aron wilt thou help to chop it off?

Lu. Stay Father, for that noble hand of thine,
That hath throwne downe so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serue the turne,
My youth can better spare my blood then you,
And therefore mine shall saue my brothers liues.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,
And reard aloft the bloody Batticaxe,
Writing destruction on the enemies Castle?
Oh none of both but are of high desert:
My hand hath bin but idle, let it serue
To ranfome my two nephewes from their death,
Then haue I kept it to a worthy end.

Moore. Nay come agree, whose hand shall goe along
For feare they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall goe.

Lu. By heauen it shall not goe.

Ti. Sirs strue no more, such withered hearbs as these Are meete for plucking vp, and therefore mine.

Lu. Sweet Father, if I shall be thought thy sonne,
Let me redeeme my brothers both from death.

Mar. And for our fathers sake, and mothers care,
Now let me shew a brothers loue to thee.

Ti. Agree betweene you, I will spare my hand.

Lu. Then He goe fetch an Axe.

Mar. But I will vse the Axe.

Exeunt

Ti. Come hither Aron, He deceiue them both,
Lend me thy hand, and I will giue thee mine.

Moore. If that be cal'd deceit, I will be honest,
And neuer whilst I liue deceiue men so:
But He deceiue you in another sort,
And that you'll say ere halfe an houre passe.

He cuts off Titus hand.

Enter Lucius and Marcus againe.

Ti. Now stay you strife, what shall be, is dispatch:
Good Aron giue his Maiestie me hand,
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers: bid him bury it:
More hath it merited: That let it haue.
As for my sonnes, say I account of them,
Asiewels purchast at an easie price,
And yet deere too, because I bought mine owne.

Aron. I goe Andronicus, and for thy hand,
Looke by and by to haue thy sonnes with thee:
Their heads I meane: Oh how this villany
Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it.
Let foolles doe good, and faire men call for grace,
Aron will haue his soule blacke like his face.

Exit

Ti. O heere I lift this one hand vp to heauen,
And bow this feeble ruine to the earth,
If any power pitties wretched teares,
To that I call: what wilt thou kneele with me?
Doe then deare heart, for heauen shall heare our prayers,
Or with our sighs weele breath the welkin dimme,
And staine the Sun with fogge as sometime cloudes;
When they do hug him in their melting bosomes.

Mar. Oh brother speake with possibilities,
And do not breake into these deepe extreames.

Ti. Is not my sorrow deepe, hauing no bottome?

d d 3

Then

Then be my passions bottomlesse with them.

Mar. But yet let reason gouerne thy lament.

Titus. If there were reason for these miseries,

Then into limits could I binde my woes:

When heaven doth weepe, doth not the earth ore flow?

If the windes rage, doth not the Sea wax mad,

Threatning the welkin with his big-swolne face?

And wilt thou haue a reason for this coile?

I am the Sea. Harke how her sighes doe flow:

Shee is the weeping welkin, I the earth:

Then must my Sea be moued with her sighes,

Then must my earth with her continuall teares,

Become a deluge: ouerflow'd and drown'd:

For why, my bowels cannot hide her woes,

But like a drunkard must I vomit them;

Then giue me leaue, for loofers will haue leaue,

To ease their stomackes with their bitter tongues,

Enter a messenger with two heads and a hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid,

For that good hand thou sentst the Emperour:

Heere are the heads of thy two noble sonnes.

And heeres thy hand in scorn to thee sent backe:

Thy griefes, their sports: Thy resolution mockt,

That woe is me to thinke vpon thy woes,

More then remembrance of my fathers death. Exit.

Mar. Now let hot Aena coole in Cicilie,

And be my heart an euer-burning hell:

These miseries are more then may be borne.

To weepe with them that weepe, doth ease some deale,

But sorrow flouted at, is double death.

Luci. Ah that this sight should make so deep a wound,

And yet detested life not shrinke thereat:

That euer death should let life beare his name,

Where life hath no more interest but to breath.

Mar. Alas poore hart that kisse is comfortlesse,

As frozen water to a starved snake.

Titus. When will this fearefull slumber haue an end?

Mar. Now farwell flatterie, die Andronicus,

Thou dost not slumber, see thy two sons heads,

Thy warlike hands, thy mangled daughter here:

Thy other banisht sonnes with this deere sight

Strucke pale and bloodlesse, and thy brother I,

Euen like a stony Image, cold and numme.

Ah now no more will I controule my griefes,

Rent off thy siluer haire, thy other hand

Gnawing with thy teeth, and be this dismall sight

The closing vp of our most wretched eyes:

Now is a time to storme, why art thou still?

Titus. Ha, ha, ha,

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this houre.

Ti. Why I haue not another teare to shed:

Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,

And would vsurpe vpon my watry eyes,

And make them blinde with tributarie teares,

Then which way shall I finde Reuenges Cause?

For these two heads doe seeme to speake to me,

And threat me, I shall neuer come to blisse,

Till all these mischiefs be returned againe,

Euen in their throats that haue committed them.

Come let me see what taske I haue to doe,

You heauie people, circle me about,

That I may turne me to each one of you,

And sweare vnto my soule to right your wrongs.

The vow is made, come Brother take a head,

And in this hand the other will I beare.

And Lavinia thou shalt be employd in these things:

Beare thou my hand sweet wench betwene thy teeth:

As for thee boy, goe get thee from my sight,

Thou art an Exile, and thou must not stay,

Hie to the Gothes, and raise an army there,

And if you loue me, as I thinke you doe,

Let's kisse and part, for we haue much to doe. Exeunt.

Manet Lucius.

Luci. Farewell Andronicus my noble Father:

The wofullst man that euer liu'd in Rome:

Farewell proud Rome, til Lucius come againe,

Heloues his pledges dearer then his life:

Farewell Lavinia my noble sister,

O would thou wert as thou to fore hast beene,

But now, nor Lucius nor Lavinia liues

But in obliuion and hateful griefes:

If Lucius liue, he will requit your wrongs,

And make proud Saturnine and his Emperesse

Beg at the gates like Tarquin and his Queene,

Now will I to the Gothes and raise a power,

To bereueng'd on Rome and Saturnine. Exit Lucius.

A Banquet.

Enter Andronicus, Marcus, Lavinia, and the Boy.

An. So, so, now sit, and looke you eate no more

Then will preferre iust so much strength in vs

As will reuenge these bitter woes of ours:

Marcus vnknit that sorrow-wreath knot:

Thy Neece and I (poore Creatures) want our hands

And cannot passionate our tenfold griefe,

With foulded Armes. This poore right hand of mine,

Is left to tyrannize vpon my breast,

Who when my hart all mad with misery,

Bears in this hollow prison of my flesh,

Then thus I thumpe it downe.

Thou Map of woe, that thus dost talk in signes,

When thy poore hart beates without ragious beating,

Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still?

Wound it with fighting girdle, kil it with grooves:

Or get some little knife betwene thy teeth,

And iust against thy hart make thou a hole,

That all the teares that thy poore eyes let fall

May run into that sinke, and soaking in,

Drowne the lamenting foole, in Sea salt teares.

Mar. Fy brother fy, teach her not thus to lay

Such violent hands vpon her tender life.

An. How now! Has sorrow made thee doate already?

Why Marcus, no man should be mad but I:

What violent hands can she lay on her life:

Ah, wherefore dost thou vrge the name of hands,

To bid Aeneas tell the tale twice ore

How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?

O handle not the theame, to talke of hands,

Least we remember still that we haue none,

Fie, fie, how Frantiquely I square my talke

As if we should forget we had no hands:

If Marcus did not name the word of hands,

Come, lets fall too, and gentle girdle ease this,

Heere is no drinke? Harke Marcus what she saies,

I can interpret all her martir'd signes,

She saies, she drinke no other drinke but teares

Speechlesse complaynet, I will learne thy thought:

In thy dumb action, will I be as perfect

As begging Hermits in their holy prayers.

Thou shalt not sigh nor hold thy stumps to heauen,

Nor winke, nor nod, nor kneele, nor make a signe,

But I (of these) will wrest an Alphabet,

And by still practice, learne to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandfire leaue these bitter deepe laments,

Make my Aunt merry, with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas, the tender boy in passion mou'd,

Doth weepe to see his grandfires heauinesse.

An. Peace tender Sapling, thou art made of teares,

And teares will quickly melt thy life away.

Marcus strikes the dist with a knife.

What dost thou strike at Marcus with knife.

Mar. At that that I haue kil'd my Lord, a Flys

An. Out on the murderour: thou kil'st my hart,

Mine eyes cloi'd with view of Tyrannie:

A deed of death done on the innocent

Becoms not Titus brother: get thee gone,

I see thou art not for my company.

Mar. Alas (my Lord) I haue but kild a flie.

An. But? How: if that flie had a father and mother?

How would he hang his slender gilded wings

And buz lamenting doings in the ayer,

Poore harmelesse Fly,

That with his pretty buzzing melody,

Came heere to make vs merry,

And thou hast kil'd him.

Mar. Pardon me sir,

It was a blacke illfaur'd Fly,

Like to the Emperesse Moore, therefore I kild him.

An. O, o, o,

Then pardon me for reprehending thee,

For thou hast done a Charitable deed:

Giue me thy knife, I will insult on him,

Flattering my selfe, as if it were the Moore,

Come hither purposely to poison me.

There's for thy selfe, and thats for Tamira: Ah sirra,

Yet I thinke we are not brought so low,

But that betwene vs, we can kill a Fly,

That comes in likenesse of a Cole-blacke Moore.

Mar. Alas poore man, griefe ha's so wrought on him,

Hetakes false shadowes, for true substances.

An. Come, take away: Lavinia, goe with me,

Ile to thy closet, and goe read with thee

Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.

Come boy, and goe with me, thy sight is young,

And thou shalt read, when mine begin to dazell. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter young Lucius and Lavinia running after him, and the Boy flies from her with his bookes vnder his arme.

Enter Titus and Marcus.

Boy. Helpe Grandfire helpe, my Aunt Lavinia,

Followes me euery where I know not why.

Good Vncle Marcus see how swift she comes,

Alas sweet Aunt, I know not what you meane.

Mar. Stand by me Lucius, doe not feare thy Aunt.

Titus. She loues thee boy too well to doe thee harme

Boy. I when my father was in Rome she did.

Mar. What meanes my Neece Lavinia by these signes?

Ti. Feare not Lucius, somewhat doth she meane:

See Lucius see, how much she makes of thee:

Some whether would she haue thee goe with her.

Ah boy, Cornelia neuer with more care

Read to her sonnes, then she hath read to thee,

Sweet Poetry, and Tullies Oratour:

Canst thou not gesse wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My Lord I know not, I nor can I gesse,

Vnlesse some fit or frenzie do possesse her:

For I haue heard my Grandfire say full oft,

Extremie of griefes would make men mad.

And I haue read that Heccube of Troy,

Ran mad through sorrow, that made me to feare,

Although my Lord, I know my noble Aunt,

Loues me as deare as ere my mother did,

And would not but in fury fright my youth,

Which made me downe to throw my bookes, and flie

Causles perhaps, but pardon me sweet Aunt,

And Madam, if my Vncle Marcus goe,

I will most willingly attend your Ladyship.

Mar. Lucius I will.

Ti. How now Lavinia, Marcus what meanes this?

Some booke there is that she desires to see,

Which is it girle of these? Open them boy,

But thou art deeper read and better skild,

Come and take choyse of all my Library,

And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heauens

Reueale the damn'd contriuer of this deed.

What booke?

Why lifts she vp her armes in sequence thus?

Mar. I thinke she meanes that ther was more then one

Confederate in the fact, I more there was:

Or else to heauen she heaues them to reuenge.

Ti. Lucius what booke is that she toseth so?

Boy. Grandfire 'tis Ouids Metamorphosis,

My mother gaue it me.

Mar. For loue of her that's gone,

Perhabs she culd it from among the rest.

Ti. Soft, so busily she turnes the leaues,

Helpe her, what would she finde? Lavinia shall I read?

This is the tragicke tale of Philomel?

And treates of Tereus treason and his rape,

And rape I feare was roote of thine annoy.

Mar. See brother see, note how she quotes the leaues

Ti. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpriz'd sweet girle,

Rauisht and wrong'd as Philomela was?

Forc'd in the ruthlesse, vast, and gloomy woods?

See, see, I such a place there is where we did hunt,

(O had we neuer, neuer hunted there)

Patern'd by that the Poet heere describes,

By nature made for murders and for rapes.

Mar. O why should nature build so foule a den,

Vnlesse the Gods delight in tragedies?

Ti. Giue signes sweet girle, for heere are none but friends

What Romaine Lord it was durst do the deed?

Or slunke not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,

That left the Campe to sinne in Lucrece bed.

Mar. Sit downe sweet Neece, brother sit downe by me,

This after me, I haue writ my name,
Without the helpe of any hand at all.
Curst be that hart that forc't vs to that shift:
Write thou good Neece, and heere display at last
What God will haue discouered for reuenge,
Heauen guide thy pen to print thy sorrowes plaine,
That we may know the Traytors and the truth.

She take the staffe in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps and writes.

Ti. Oh doe ye read my Lord what she hath writs?
Sturpin, Chiron, Demetrius.

Mar. What, what, the lustfull sonnes of Tamora,
Performers of this hainous bloody deed?

Ti. Magni Dominator poli,

Tam lentus audis scelera, tam lentus vides?

Mar. Oh calme thee gentle Lord: Although I know
There is enough written vpon this earth,
To stirre a mutinie in the mildest thoughts,
And arme the mindes of infants to exclaimes.
My Lord kneele downe with me: Launina kneele,
And kneele sweet boy, the Romaine Hectors hope,
And sweare with me, as with the wofull Feere
And father of that chaste dishonoured Dame,
Lord Iunius Brutus sweare for Lucrece rape,
That we will prosecute (by good aduise)
Mortall reuenge vpon these traytorous Gothes,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

Ti. 'Tis sure enough, and you knew how.
But if you hunt these Beare-whelpes, then beware
The Dam will wake, and if she winde you once,
Shee's with the Lyon deeply still in league.
And lulls him whilst she palyeth on her backe,
And when he sleepes will she do what she list.
You are a young huntsman Marcus, let it alone:
And come, I will goe get a lease of brasse,
And with a Gad of Steele will write these words,
And lay it by: the angry Northerne winde
Will blow these sands like Sibels leaues abroad,
And wheres your lesson then. Boy what say you?

Boy. I say my Lord, that if I were a man,
Their mothers bed-chamber should not be safe,
For these bad bond-men to the yoke of Rome.

Mar. I that's my boy, thy father hath full oft,
For his vngratefull country done the like.

Boy. And Vncle so will I, and if I liue.

Ti. Come goe with me into mine Armorie,
Lucius Ile fit thee, and withall, my boy
Shall carry from me to the Empreffe sonnes,
Presents that I intend to send them both,
Come, come, thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?

Boy. I with my dagger in their bosomes Grandfire:
Ti. No boy not so, Ile teach thee another course,

Launina come, Marcus looke to my house,
Lucius and Ile goe braue it at the Court,
I marry will we fit, and weele be waited on. Exeunt.

Mar. O heauens! Can you heare a good man grone
And not relent, or not compassion him?

Marcus attend him in his extasie,
That hath more fears of sorrow in his heart,
Then foe-mens markes vpon his batter'd shield,
But yet so iust, that he will not reuenge,
Reuenge the heauens for old Andronicus. Exit

Enter Aron, Chiron and Demetrius at one doore, and at another doore young Lucius and another, with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ vpon them.

Chi. Demetrius heeres the sonne of Lucius,
He hath some message to deliuer vs.

Aron. I some mad message from his mad Grandfather,
Boy. My Lords, with all the humblenesse I may,

I greete your honours from Andronicus,
And pray the Romaine Gods confound you both.

Dem. Gramercie louely Lucius, what's the newes?
For villanie's markt with rape. May it please you,
My Grandfire well aduif'd hath sent by me,

The goodliest weapons of his Armorie,
To gratifie your honourable youth,

The hope of Rome, for so he bad me say:
And so I doe, and with his gifts present

Your Lordships, when euer you haue need,
You may be armed and appointed well,

And so I leave you both: like bloody villaines. Exit
Dem. What's heere? a scrole, & written round about?

Let's see.
Integer vixit scelerisque purus, non egit maury iaculis nec ar-
cus.

Chi. O 'tis a verse in Horace, I know it well.
I read it in the Grammer long agoe.

Moore. I iust, a verse in Horace: right, you haue it,
Now what a thing it is to be an Affe?

And sends the weapons wrapt about with lines,

That wound (beyond their feeling) to the quick:
But were our witty Empreffe well a foot,

She would applaud Andronicus conceits:
But let her rest, in her worst a while.

And now young Lords, wa's not a happy starre
Led vs to Rome strangers, and more then so;

Captiues, to be aduanced to this height?
It did me good before the Pallace gate,

To braue the Tribune in his brothers hearing.
Dem. But me more good, to see so great a Lord

Basely insinuate, and send vs gifts.
Moore. Had he not reason Lord Demetrius?

Did you not vse his daughter very friendly?
Dem. I would we had a thousand Romaine Dames

At such a bay, by turne to serue our lust.
Chi. A charitable wish, and full of loue.

Moore. Heere lack's but you mother for to say, Amen.
Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let vs go, and pray to all the Gods
For our beloued mother in her paines.

Moore. Pray to the deuils, the gods haue giuen vs ouer,
Flourish.

Dem. Why do the Emperors trumpets flourish thus?
Chi. Belike for ioy the Emper our hath a sonne.

Dem. Soft, who comes heere?
Enter Nurse with a blacke a Moore child.

Nur. Goodmorrow Lords:
O tell me, did you see Aaron the Moore?

Aron. Well, more or lesse, or nere a whit at all,
Heere Aaron is, and what with Aaron now?

Nurse. Oh gentle Aaron, we are all vndone,
Now helpe, or woe betide thee euermore.

Aron. Why, what a catterwallow dost thou keepe?
What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine armes?

Nurse. O that which I would hide from heauens eye,
Our Empreffe shame, and stately Romes disgrace,

She is deliuered Lords, she is deliuered.
Aron. To whom?

Nurse. I meane she is brought a bed?
Aron. Wel God giue her good rest. What

What hath he sent her?

Nurse. A deuill.

Aron. Why then the is the Deuils Dam: a ioyfull issue.
Nurse. A ioylesse, dismall, blacke & sorrowfull issue,

Heere is the babe as loathsome as a toad,
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime,

The Empreffe sends it thee, thy stampe, thy seale,
And bids thee christen it with thy daggers point.

Aron. Out you whore, is black so base a hue?
Sweet blowse, you are a beauious blossome fure:

Dem. Villaine what hast thou done?
Aron. That which thou canst not vndoe.

Chi. Thou hast vndone our mother.
Dem. And therein hellish dog, thou hast vndone,

Woe to her chance, and damnd her loathed choyce,
Accur't the off-spring of so foule a fiend,

Chi. It shall not liue.
Aron. It shall not die.

Nurse. Aaron it must, the mother wils it so.
Aron. What, must it Nurse? Then let no man but I

Doe execution on my flesh and blood.
Dem. Ile broach the Taspole on my Rapiers point:

Nurse giue it me, my sword shall toone dispatch it.
Aron. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels vp.

Stay murderous villaines, will you kill your brother?
Now by the burning Tapers of the skie,

That sh'one so brightly when this Boy was got,
He dies vpon my Semitars sharpe point,

That touches this my first borne sonne and heire.
I tell you young lings, not Enceladus

With all his threatening band of Typhons broode,
Nor great Alerdes nor the God of warre,

Shall eaze this prey out of his fathers hands:
What, what, ye sanguine shallow harted Boyes,

Ye white-limb'd walls, ye Ale-house painted signes,
Cole-blacke is better then another hue:

In that it seemes to beare another hue:
For all the water in the Ocean,

Can neuer turne the Swans blacke legs to white,
Although she laue them hourly in the flood:

Tell the Empreffe from me, I am of age
To keepe mine owne, excuse it how she can.

Dem. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistris thus?
Aron. My mistris is my mistris: this my selfe,

The vigour, and the picture of my youth:
This, before all the world do I preferre,

This mager all the world will I keepe safe,
Or some of you shall smooke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for euer sham'd.
Chi. Rome will despise her for this foule escape.

Nur. The Emperour in his rage will doome her death.
Chi. I blush to thinke vpon this ignominie.

Aron. Why ther's the priuiledge your beauty beares:
Fie trecherous hue, that will betray with blushing

The close enacts and counsels of the hart:
Heer's a young Lad fram'd of another leere,

Looke how the blacke flauie smiles vpon the father;
As who should say, old Lad I am thine owne.

He is your brother Lords, sensibly fed
Of that selfe blood that first gaue life to you,

And from that wombe where you imprisoned were
He is enfranchised and come to light:

Nay he is your brother by the surer side,
Although my seale be stamped in his face.

Nurse. Aaron what shall I say vnto the Empreffe?
Dem. Aduise thee Aaron, what is to be done,

And we will all subscribe to thy aduise:
Saue thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aron. Then sit we downe and let vs all consult.
My sonne and I will haue the winde of you:

Keepe there, now talke at pleasure of your safety.
Dem. How many women saw this childe of his?

Aron. Why so braue Lords, when we ioyne in league
I am a Lambe: but if you braue the Moore,

The chafed Bore, the mountaine Lyonesse,
The Ocean swells not so at Aaron stormes:

But say againe, how many saw the childe?
Nurse. Cornelia, the midwife, and my selfe,

And none else but the deliuered Empreffe.
Aron. The Empreffe, the Midwife, and your selfe,

Two may keepe counsell, when the third's away:
Goe to the Empreffe, tell her this I said, He kills her

Weekes, weekes, so cries a Pigge prepared to th' spit.
Dem. What mean'st thou Aaron?

Wherefore did'st thou this?
Aron. O Lord sir, 'tis a deed of pollicie?

Shall she liue to betray this guilt of our's?
A long tongu'd babling Gossip? No Lords no:

And now be it knowne to you my full intent.
Not farre, one Mulissus my Country-man

His wife but yesternight was brought to bed,
His childe is like to her, faire as you are:

Goe packe with him, and giue the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all,

And how by this their Childe shall be aduanc'd,
And be receiued for the Emperours heire,

And substituted in the place of mine,
To colme this tempest whirling in the Court,

And let the Emperour dandle him for his owne.
Harke ye Lords, ye see I haue giuen her physicke,

And you must needs bestow her funerall,
The fields are nere, and you are gallant Groomes:

This done, see that you take no longer daies
But send the Midwife presently to me.

The Midwife and the Nurse well made away,
Then let the Ladies tattle what they please.

Chi. Aaron I see thou wilt not trust the ayre with se
Dem. For this care of Tamora, Exeunt.

Her selfe, and hers are highly bound to thee. Exeunt.
Aron. Now to the Gothes, as swift as Swallow flies,

There to dispose this treasure in mine armes,
And secretly to greete the Empreffe friends:

Come on you thick-lipt-flaue, Ile beare you hence,
For it is you that puts vs to our shifts:

Ile make you feed on berries, and on rootes,
And feed on curds and whay, and sucke the Goate,

And cabbin in a Caue, and bring you vp
To be a warriour, and command a Campe. Exit

Enter Titus, old Marcus, young Lucius, and other gentlemen with bowes, and Titus beares the arrowes with Letters on the end of them.

Ti. Come Marcus, come, kinsmen this is the way.
Sir Boy let me see your Archerie,

Looke yee draw home enough, and 'tis there straight:
Terras Astrea reliquit, be you remembred Marcus.

She's gone, she's fled, first take you to your tooles,
You Cosens shall goe found the Ocean:

And cast your nets, haply you may find her in the Sea,
Yet ther's as little iustice as at Land:

No Publius and Sempronius, you must doe it, Tis

Is you must dig with Mattocke, and with Spade,
And pierce the inmost Center of the earth:
Then when you come to Pluto's Region,
I pray you deliver him this petition,
Tell him it is for iustice, and for aide,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with sorrowes in vngatefull Rome,
Ah Rome! Well, well, I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the peoples suffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize ore me.
Goe get you gone, and pray be carefull all,
And leaue you not a man of warre vnsearcht,
This wicked Emperour may haue shippe her hence,
And kinmen then we may goe pipe for iustice.

Marc. O Publius is not this a heauie case
To see thy Noble Vnckle thus distraet?

Publ. Therefore my Lords it highly vs concerns,
By day and night attend him carefully:
And feede his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some carefull remedie.

Marc. Kinmen, his sorrowes are past remedie.
Ioyne with the Gothes, and with reuengefull warre,
Take wreake on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the Traytor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius how now? how now my Maisters?
What haue you met with her?

Publ. No my good Lord, but Pluto sends you word,
If you will haue reuenge from hell you shall,
Marrie for iustice she is so imploy'd,
He thinkes with Ioue in heauen, or some where else:
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delayes,
He diue into the burning Lake below,
And pull her out of Aeareon by the heeles:
Marcus we are but shrubs, no Cedars we,
No big-bon'd-men, fram'd of the Cyclops size,
But mettall Marcus, Steele to the very backe,
Yet wrung with wrongs more then our backe can beare:
And fith there's no iustice in earth nor hell,
We will sollicite heauen, and moue the Gods:
To send downe iustice for to wreake our wrongs:
Come to this geare, you are a good Archer Marcus.

He giues them the Arrows.

Ad Iouem, that's for you: here ad Apollonem,
Ad Martem, that's for my selfe.

Heere Boy to Pallas, heere to Mercury,
To Saturnine, to Caius, not to Saturnine,
You were as good to shoote against the winde,
Too it Boy, Marcus loose when I bid:
Of my word, I haue written to effect,
There's not a God left vnfollicited.

Marc. Kinmen, shoot all your shafts into the Court,
We will afflict the Emperour in his pride.

Tit. Now Maisters draw, Oh well said Lucius:
Good Boy in Virgins lap, giue it Pallas.

Marc. My Lord, I aime a Mile beyond the Moone,
Your letter is with Iupiter by this.

Tit. Ha, ha, Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?
See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus hornes.

Marc. This was the sport my Lord, when Publius shot,
The Bull being gal'd, gaue Aries such a knoeke,
That downe fell both the Rams hornes in the Court,
And who should finde them but the Emperesse villaine:
She laught, and told the Moore he should not choose
But giue them to his Maister for a present.

Tit. Why there it goes, God giue your Lordship ioy.

Enter the Clowne with a basket and two Pigeons in it.
Titus. Newes, newes, from heauen,
Marcus the poast is come.

Sirrah, what tydings? haue you any letters?
Shall I haue iustice, what sayes Iupiter?

Clowne. Ho the libbetmaker, he sayes that he hath taken them downe againe, for the man must not be hang'd till the next weeke.

Tit. But what sayes Iupiter I aske thee?

Clowne. Alas sir I know not Iupiter:

I neuer dranke with him in all my life.

Tit. Why villaine art not thou the Carrier?

Clowne. I of my Pigeons sir, nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heauen?

Clowne. From heauen? Alas sir, I neuer came there, God forbid I should be so bold, to presse to heauen in my young dayes. Why I am going with my pigeons to the Tribunall Plebs, to take vp a matter of brawle, betwixt my Vnckle, and one of the Emperiall's men.

Marc. Why sir, that is as fit as can be to serue for your Oration, and let him deliuer the Pigeons to the Emperour from you.

Tit. Tell mee, can you deliuer an Oration to the Em-perour with a Grace?

Clowne. Nay truly sir, I could neuer say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah come hither, make no more adoe,

But giue your Pigeons to the Emperour,

By me thou shalt haue iustice at his hands.

Hold, hold, meane while her's money for thy charges,
Giue me pen and inke.

Sirrah, can you with a Grace deliuer a Supplication?

Clowne. I sir

Titus. Then here is a Supplication for you, and when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneele, then kisse his foote, then deliuer vp your Pigeons, and then looke for your reward. Ile be at hand sir, see you do it brauely.

Clowne. I warrant you sir, let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah hast thou a knife? Come let me see it,

Heere Marcus, fold it in the Oration,

For thou hast made it like an humble Suppliant:

And when thou hast giuen it the Emperour,

Knocke at my dore, and tell me what he sayes.

Clowne. God be with you sir, I will.

Tit. Come Marcus let vs goe, Publius follow me.

Enter Emperour and Emperesse, and ber two sonnes, the Emperour brings the Arrows in his hand that Titus shot at him.

Satur. Why Lords,
What wrongs are these? was euer seene
An Emperour in Rome thus ouerborne,
Troubled, Confronted thus, and for the extent
Of eg all iustice, v'd in such contempt?
My Lords, you know the mightfull Gods,
(How euer these disturbers of our peace
Buz in the peoples eares) there nought hath past,
But euen with law against the willfull Sonnes
Of old Andronicus. And what and if
His sorrowes haue so ouerwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreakes,
His fits, his frenzie, and his birterneffe?
And now he writes to heauen for his redresse.
See, heeres to Ioue, and this to Mercury,

This

This to Apollo, this to the God of warre:

Sweet scrowles to flie about the streets of Rome:

What's this but Libelling against the Senate?

And blazoning our Iniustice every where?

A goodly humour, is it not my Lords?

As who would say, in Rome no iustice were.

But if I liue, his fained extasies

Shall be no shelter to these outrages:

But he and his shall know, that iustice liues

In Saturnine health; whom if he sleepe,

Hee'l so awake, as he in fury shall

Cut off the proud'st Conspirator that liues.

Tam. My gracious Lord, my louely Saturnine,

Lord of my life, Commander of my thoughts,

Calme thee, and beare the faults of Titus age,

The effects of sorrow for his valiant Sonnes,

Whose losse hath pierc'd him deepe, and scard his heart;

And rather comfort his distressed plight,

Then persecute the meanest or the best

For these contempts. Why thus it shall become High witted Tamora to glose with all:

But Titus, I haue touch'd thee to the quicke,

Thy life blood out: If Aaron now be wise,

Then is all safe, the Anchor's in the Port.

Enter Clowne.

How now good fellow, wouldst thou speake with vs?

Clow. Yea forsooth, and your Mistrisship be Emperiall.

Tam. Emperesse I am, but yonder sits the Emperour.

Clow. 'Tis he; God & Saint Stephen giue you good den;

I haue brought you a Letter, & a couple of Pigeons heere.

He reads the Letter.

Satur. Goe take him away, and hang him presently.

Clowne. How much money must I haue?

Tam. Come sirrah you must be hang'd.

Clow. Hang'd? ber Lady, then I haue brought vp a neck to a faire end.

Satur. Despightfull and intollerable wrongs,

Shall I endure this monstrous villany?

I know from whence this fame deuise proceedes:

May this be borne? As if his traytrous Sonnes,

That dy'd by law for murder of our Brother,

Haue by my meanes beene butcher'd wrongfully?

Goe dragge the villaine hither by the haire,

Nor Age, nor Honour, shall shape priuiledge:

For this proud mocke, Ile be thy slaughter man:

Sly franticke wretch, that holp't to make me great,

In hope thy selfe should gouerne Rome and me.

Enter Nuntius Emillius.

Satur. What newes with thee Emillius?

Emil. Arme my Lords, Rome neuer had more cause,

The Gothes haue gather'd head, and with a power

Of high resolu'd men, bent to the spoyle

Of Lucius, Sonne to old Andronicus:

Who threats in course of this reuenge to do

As much as euer Coriolanus did.

King. Is warlike Lucius Generall of the Gothes?

These tydings nip me, and I hang the head

As flowers with frost, or grasse beat downe with stormes:

I now begin our sorrowes to approach,

'Tis he the common people loue so much,

My selfe hath often heard them say,

(When I haue walked like a priuate man)

That Lucius banishment was wrongfully,

And they haue wish't that Lucius were their Emperour.

Tam. Why should you feare? Is not our City strong?

King. I, but the Cittizens fauour Lucius,

And will reuolt from me, to succour him.

Tam. King, be thy thoughts Imperious like thy name.

Is the Sunne dim'd, that Gnats do flie in it?

The Eagle suffers little Birds to sing,

And is not carefull what they meane thereby,

Knowing that with the shadow of his wings,

He can at pleasure stint their melodie.

Euen so mayest thou, the giddy men of Rome,

Then cheare thy spirit, for know thou Emperour,

I will enchaunt the old Andronicus,

With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous

Then baits to fish, or hony stalkes to sheepe;

When as the one is wounded with the baite,

The other rotted with delicious foode.

King. But he will not entreat his Sonne for vs.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will;

For I can smooth and fill his aged eare,

With golden promises, that were his heart

Almost Impregnable, his old eares deafe,

Yet should both eare and heart obey my tongue.

Goe thou before to our Embassadour,

Say, that the Emperour requests a parly

Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting;

King. Emillius do this message Honourably,

And if he stand in Hottage for his safety,

Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.

Emil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,

And temper him with all the Art I haue,

To plucke proud Lucius from the warlike Gothes,

And now sweet Emperour be blithe againe;

And bury all thy feare in my deuises.

Satur. Then goe successefully and plead for him.

Actus Quintus.

Flourish. Enter Lucius with an Army of Gothes,
with Drum and Souldiers.

Luci. Approued, warriours, and my faithfull Friends,
I haue receiued Letters from great Rome,
Which signifies what hate they beare their Emperour,
And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore great Lords, be as your Titles witnesse,
Imperious and impatient of your wrongs,
And wherein Rome hath done you any leathe,
Let him make treble satisfaction.

Goth. Braue slip, sprung from the Great Andronicus,
Whose name was once our terrour, now our comfort,
Whose high exploits, and honourable Deeds,
Ingratefull Rome requiries with foule contempt:
Behold in vs, wee le follow where thou lead'st,
Like stinging Bees in hottest Summers day;

Led by their Maister to the flowred fields,
And be aueng'd on curst Tamora:
And as he saith, so say we all with him.

Luci. I humbly thanke him, and I thanke you all,
But who comes heere, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth leading of Aaron with his child in his armes.

Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troups I straid,
To gaze vpon a ruinous Monastrie,

And

And as I earnestly did fixe mine eye
Vpon the wastefull building, suddainly
I heard a childe cry vnderneath a wall:
I made vnto the noyse, when soone I heard,
The crying babe control'd with this discourse:
Peace Tawny slave, halfe me, and halfe thy Dam,
Did not thy Hue bewray whose brat thou art?
Had nature lent thee, but thy Mothers looke,
Villaine thou might'st haue bene an Emperour.
But where the Bull and Cow are both milke-white,
They neuer do beget a cole-blacke Calfe:
Peace, villaine peace, euen thus he rates the babe,
For I must heare thee to a trusty Goth,
Who when he knowest thou art the Emperesse babe,
Will hold thee dearely for thy Mothers sake.
With this my weapon drawne I rusht vpon him,
Surpriz'd him suddainly, and brought him hither
To vse, as you thinke needefull of the man.

Luci. Oh worthy Goth, this is the incarnate deuill,
That rob'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the Pearle that pleas'd your Emperesse eye,
And heere's the Bafe Fruit of his burning lust.
Say wall-cy'd slave, whether would'st thou conuay
This growing Image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speake? what deafe? Not a word?

Aron. Touch not the Boy, he is of Royall blood.
Luci. Too like the Syre for euer being good.
First hang the Child that he may see it sprall,
A sight to vex the Fathers soule withall.

Aron. Get me a Ladder Lucius, I haue the Childe,
And beare it from me to the Emperesse:
If thou do this, Ile shew thee wondrous things,
That highly may aduantage thee to heare;
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
Ile speake no more: but vengeance rot you all.

Luci. Say on, and if it please me which thou speak'st,
Thy child shall liue, and I will see it Nourish.

Aron. And if it please thee? why assure thee Lucius,
I'll vexe thy soule to heare what I shall speake:
For I must talke of Murders, Rapes, and Massacres,
Acts of Blacke-night, abominable Deeds,
Complots of Mischief, Treason, Villanies
Ruthfull to heare, yet pittiously preform'd,
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Vnlesse thou sweare to me my Childe shall liue.

Luci. Tell on thy minde,
I say thy Childe shall liue.

Aron. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin.
Luci. Who should I sweare by,

Thou beleeuest no God;
That graunted, how can'st thou beleeue an oath?

Aron. What if I do not, as indeed I do not,
Yet for I know thou art Religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called Conscience,
With twenty Popish trickes and Ceremonies,
Which I haue seene thee carefull to obserue:
Therefore I vge thy oath, for that I know
An Ideot holds his Bauble for a God,
And keeps the oath which by that God he sweares,
To that Ile vge him: therefore thou shalt vow
By that same God, what God so ere it be
That thou adorest, and hast in reuerence,
To saue my Boy, to nourish and bring him vp,
Ore else I will discouer nought to thee.

Luci. Euen by my God I sweare to thee I will,
Aron. First know thou,
I be got him on the Emperesse.

Luci. Oh most Insatiate luxurious woman!
Aron. Tut Lucius, this was but a deed of Charitie,
To that which thou shalt heare of me anon,
I was her two Sonnes that murdered Bassianus,
They cut thy Sisters tongue, and rauisht her,
And cut her hands off, and crim'd her as thou saw'st.
Luci. Oh detestable villaine!
Call'st thou that Trimming?

Aron. Why she was wastefull, and cut, and trim'd,
And 'twas trim sport for them that had the doing of it.
Luci. Oh barbarous beastly villaines like thy selfe!
Aron. Indeepe, I was their Tutor to instruct them,
That Coddling spirit had they from their Mother,
As sure a Card as euer wonne the Set:

That bloody minde I thinke they learn'd of me,
As true a Dog as euer fought at head.
Well, let my Deeds be witness of my worth:
I fray'd thy Bretheren to that guilefull Hole,
Where the dead Corps of Bassianus lay:
I wrote the Letter, that thy Father found,
And hid the Gold within the Letter mention'd,
Confederate with the Queene, and her two Sonnes,
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of Mischeife in it.

I play'd the Cheater for thy Fathers hand,
And when I had it, drew my selfe apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreame laughter,
I pri'd me through the Crevice of a Wall,
When for his hand, he had his two Sonnes head,
Beheld his teares, and laugh'd so hartily,
That both mine eyes were rainie like to his:
And when I told the Emperesse of this sport,
She founded almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tydings, gaue me twenty kisses.

Goth. What canst thou say all this, and neuer blush?
Aron. I, like a blacke Dogge, as the saying is,
Luci. Art thou not sorry for these hainous deedes?
Aron. I, that I had not done a thousand more:

Euen now I curse the day, and yet I thinke
Few come within few compasse of my curse,
Wherein I did not some Notorious ill,
As kill a man, or else deuise his death,
Rauish a Maid, or plot the way to do it,
Accuse some Innocent, and forweare my selfe,
Set deadly Enmity betweene two Friends,
Make poore mens Cattell breake their neckes,
Set fire on Barnes and Haystackes in the night,
And bid the Owners quench them with the teares:
Oft haue I dig'd vp dead men from their graues,
And set them vp right at their deere Friends doore,
Euen when their sorrowes almost was forgot,
And on their skinnies, as on the Barke of Trees,
Haue with my knife carued in Romaine Letters,
Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead.
Tut, I haue done a thousand dreadfull things
As willingly, as one would kill a Fly,
And nothing greenes me hartily indeede,
But that I cannot doe ten thousand more.

Luci. Bring downe the diuell, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aron. If there be diuels, would I were a deuill,
To liue and burne in euermolting fire,
So I might haue your company in hell,

Luci. Bring downe the diuell, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aron. If there be diuels, would I were a deuill,
To liue and burne in euermolting fire,
So I might haue your company in hell,

Luci. Bring downe the diuell, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

But to torment you with my bitter tongue.
Luci. Sirs stop his mouth, & let him speake no more.
Enter Emilius.

Goth. My Lord, there is a Messenger from Rome
Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luci. Let him come neere.
Enter Emilius. What the newes from Rome?

Emi. Lord Lucius, and you Princes of the Gothes,
The Romaine Emperour greetes you all by me,
And for he vnderstands you are in Armes,
He craues a parly at your Fathers house,
Willing you to demand your Hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliuered.

Goth. What saies our Generall?
Luci. Emilius, let the Emperour giue his pledges
Vnto my Father, and my Vncle Marcius,
And we will come: march away.

Enter Tamora, and her two Sonnes disguised.

Tam. Thus in this strange and sad Habilliment,
I will encounter with Andronicus,
And say, I am Reuenge sent from below,
To ioyne with him and right his hainous wrongs:
Knocke at his study where they say he keepes,
To ruminat strange plots of dire Reuenge,
Tell him Reuenge is come to ioyne with him,
And worke confusion on his Enemies.

They knocke and Titus opens his study doore.

Tit. Who doth molest my Contemplation?
Is it your tricke to make me ope the doore,
That so my sad decrees may flie away,
And all my studie be to no effect?
You are decei'd, for what I meane to do,
See here in bloody lines I haue set downe:
And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talke with thee,
Tit. No not a word: how can I grace my talke,
Wanting a hand to giue it action,
Thou hast the ods of me, therefore no more.

Tam. If thou did'st know me,
Thou would'st talke with me.

Tit. I am not mad, I know thee well enough,
Witness this wretched stump,
Witness these crimson lines,
Witness these Irenches made by griefe and care,
Witness the tyring day, and heauie night,
Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud Emperesse, Mighty Tamora:
Is not thy comming for my other hand?

Tam. Know thou sad man, I am not Tamora,
She is thy Enemie, and I thy Friend,
I am Reuenge sent from this infernall Kingdome,
To ease the gnawing Vulture of the mind,
By working wreakfull vengeance on my Foes:
Come downe and welcome me to this worlds light,
Conferre with me of Murder and of Death,
There's not a hollow Caue or lurking place,
No Vast obscurity, or Misty vale,
Where bloody Murder or detested Rape,
Can couch for feare, but I will finde them out,
And in their eares tell them my dreadfull name,
Reuenge, which makes the foule offenders quake.

Tit. Art thou Reuenge? and art thou sent to me,
To be a torment to mine Enemies?

Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.

Tit. Doe me some seruice ere I come to thee:
Loe by thy side where Rape and Murder stands,
Now giue some surance that thou art Reuenge,
Stab them, or teare them on thy Chariot wheeles,
And then Ile come and be thy Waggoner,
And whirle along with thee about the Globes,
Prouide thee two proper Palfries, as blacke as Iet,
To hale thy vengefull Waggon swift away,
And finde out Murder in their guilty cares,
And when thy Car is loaden with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the Waggon wheele,
Trot like a Seruile footeman all day long,
Euen from Eptons rising in the East,
Vntill his very downefall in the Sea.
And day by day Ile do this heauy taske,
So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there.

Tam. These are my Ministers, and come with me.
Tit. Are they thy Ministers, what are they call'd?
Tam. Rape and Murder, therefore call'd so,
Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good Lord how like the Emperesse Sonnes they are,
And you the Emperesse: But we worldly men,
Haue miserable mad mistaking eyes:
Oh sweet Reuenge, now do I come to thee,
And if one armes embracement will content thee,
I will embrace thee in it by and by.

Tam. This closing with him, fits his Lunacie,
What ere I forge to feede his braine-sicke fits,
Do you vphold, and maintaine in your speeches,
For now he firmly takes me for Reuenge,
And being Credulous in this mad thought,
Ile make him send for Lucius his Sonne,
And whilst I at a Banquet hold him sure,
Ile find some cunning practise out of hand
To scatter and disperse the giddie Gothes,
Or at the least make them his Enemies:
See heere he comes, and I must play my theame.

Tit. Long haue I bene forlorne, and all for thee,
Welcome dread Fury to my woefull house,
Rapine and Murther, you are welcome too,
How like the Emperesse and her Sonnes you are.
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moore,
Could not all hell afford you such a deuill?
For well I wote the Emperesse neuer wags;
But in her company there is a Moore,
And would you represent our Queene aright
It were conuenient you had such a deuill:
But welcome as you are, what shall we doe?

Tam. What would'st thou haue vs doe Andronicus?
Dem. Shew me a Murderer, Ile deale with him.
Cbi. Shew me a Villaine that hath done a Rape,
And I am sent to be reueng'd on him.

Tam. Shew me a thousand that haue done thee wrong,
And Ile be reuenged on them all.

Tit. Looke round about the wicked streets of Rome,
And when thou find'st a man that's like thy selfe,
Good Murder stab him, hee's a Murderer.
Goe thou with him, and when it is thy hap
To finde another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine stab him, he is a Rauisher.
Goe thou with them, and in the Emperours Court,
There is a Queene attended by a Moore,
Well maist thou know her by thy owne proportion,
For vp and downe she doth resemble thee,
I pray thee doe on them some violent death,
They haue bene violent to me and mine.

Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.

Tit. Doe me some seruice ere I come to thee:
Loe by thy side where Rape and Murder stands,
Now giue some surance that thou art Reuenge,
Stab them, or teare them on thy Chariot wheeles,
And then Ile come and be thy Waggoner,
And whirle along with thee about the Globes,
Prouide thee two proper Palfries, as blacke as Iet,
To hale thy vengefull Waggon swift away,
And finde out Murder in their guilty cares,
And when thy Car is loaden with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the Waggon wheele,
Trot like a Seruile footeman all day long,
Euen from Eptons rising in the East,
Vntill his very downefall in the Sea.
And day by day Ile do this heauy taske,
So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there.

Tam. These are my Ministers, and come with me.
Tit. Are they thy Ministers, what are they call'd?
Tam. Rape and Murder, therefore call'd so,
Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good Lord how like the Emperesse Sonnes they are,
And you the Emperesse: But we worldly men,
Haue miserable mad mistaking eyes:
Oh sweet Reuenge, now do I come to thee,
And if one armes embracement will content thee,
I will embrace thee in it by and by.

Tam. This closing with him, fits his Lunacie,
What ere I forge to feede his braine-sicke fits,
Do you vphold, and maintaine in your speeches,
For now he firmly takes me for Reuenge,
And being Credulous in this mad thought,
Ile make him send for Lucius his Sonne,
And whilst I at a Banquet hold him sure,
Ile find some cunning practise out of hand
To scatter and disperse the giddie Gothes,
Or at the least make them his Enemies:
See heere he comes, and I must play my theame.

Tit. Long haue I bene forlorne, and all for thee,
Welcome dread Fury to my woefull house,
Rapine and Murther, you are welcome too,
How like the Emperesse and her Sonnes you are.
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moore,
Could not all hell afford you such a deuill?
For well I wote the Emperesse neuer wags;
But in her company there is a Moore,
And would you represent our Queene aright
It were conuenient you had such a deuill:
But welcome as you are, what shall we doe?

Tam. What would'st thou haue vs doe Andronicus?
Dem. Shew me a Murderer, Ile deale with him.
Cbi. Shew me a Villaine that hath done a Rape,
And I am sent to be reueng'd on him.

Tam. Shew me a thousand that haue done thee wrong,
And Ile be reuenged on them all.

Tit. Looke round about the wicked streets of Rome,
And when thou find'st a man that's like thy selfe,
Good Murder stab him, hee's a Murderer.
Goe thou with him, and when it is thy hap
To finde another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine stab him, he is a Rauisher.
Goe thou with them, and in the Emperours Court,
There is a Queene attended by a Moore,
Well maist thou know her by thy owne proportion,
For vp and downe she doth resemble thee,
I pray thee doe on them some violent death,
They haue bene violent to me and mine.

Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.

Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd vs, this shall we do,
But would it please thee good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius thy thrice Valiant Sonne,
Who leades towards Rome a Band of Warlike Gothes,
And bid him come and banquet at thy house.
When he is heere, euen at thy Solemne Feast,
I will bring in the Empreffe and her Sonnes,
The Emperour himselfe, and all thy Foes,
And at thy mercy shall they stoop, and kneele,
And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart:
What saies Andronicus to this deuise?

Enter Marcus.

Tit. Marcus my Brother, 'tis sad Titus calls,
Go gentle Marcus to thy Nephew Lucius,
Thou shalt enquire him out among the Gothes,
Bid him repaire to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefeest Princes of the Gothes,
Bid him encampe his Souldiers where they are,
Tell him the Emperour, and the Empreffe too,
Feasts at my house, and he shall feast with them,
This do thou for my loue, and so let him,
As he regards his aged Fathers life.

Mar. This will I do, and soone returne againe.

Tam. Now will I hence about thy businesse,
And take my Ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me,
Or els Ile call my Brother backe againe,
And cleaue to no reuenge but Lucius.

Tam. What say you Boyes, will you bide with him,
Whiles I goe tell my Lord the Emperour,
How I haue gouern'd our determined selfe?
Yeeld to his Humour, smooth and speake him faire,
And tarry with him till I turne againe.

Tit. I know them all, though they suppose me mad,
And will ore-reach them in their owne deuises,
A payre of curst hell-hounds and their Dam.

Dem. Madam depart at pleasure, leaue vs heere.

Tam. Farewell Andronicus, reuenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy Foes.

Tit. I know thou doo'st, and sweet reuenge farewell.
Chi. Tell vs old man, how shall we be employ'd?

Tit. Tut, I haue worke enough for you to doe,
Publius come hither, Caius, and Valentine.

Pub. What is your will?

Tit. Know you these two?

Pub. The Empreffe Sonnes

I take them, Chiron, Demetrius.

Titus. Fie Publius, fie, thou art too much deceau'd,

The one is Murder, Rape is the others name,

And therefore bind them gentle Publius,

Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them,

Oft haue you heard me wish for such an houre,

And now I find it, therefore binde them sure,

Chi. Villaines forbeare, we are the Empreffe Sonnes.

Pub. And therefore do we, what we are commanded.

Stop close their mouthes, let them not speake a word,
Is he sure bound, looke that you binde them fast. Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus with a knife, and Lavinia with a Basin.

Tit. Come, come Lavinia, looke, thy Foes are bound,
Sirs stop their mouthes, let them not speake to me,
But let them heare what fearefull words I vtter.

Oh Villaines, Chiron, and Demetrius,
Here stands the spring whom you haue stain'd with mud,
This goodly Sommer with your Winter mixt,
You kill'd her husband, and for that vill'd fault,
Two of her Brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry iest,
Both her sweet Hands, her Tongue, and that more deere
Then Hands or tongue, her spotlesse Chastity,
Inhumaine Traytors, you constrain'd and for't.
What would you say, if I should let you speake?
Villaines for shame you could not beg for grace.
Harke Wretches, how I meane to martyr you,
This one Hand yet is left, to cut your throats,
Whil'ft that Lavinia twene her stumps doth hold:
The Basen that receiues your guilty blood.
You know your Mother meane to feast with me,
And calls herselfe Reuenge, and thinks me mad.
Harke Villaines, I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, Ile make a Paste,
And of the Paste a Coffin I will reare,
And make two Pasties of your shamefull Heads,
And bid that strumpet your vnhalloved Dam,
Like to the earth swallow her increase.
This is the Feast, that I haue bid her to,
And this the Banquet she shall surfet on,
For worse then Pholomey you vs'd my Daughter,
And worse then Progne, I will be reueng'd,
And now prepare your throats: Lavinia come,
Receiue the blood, and when that they are dead,
Let me goe grind their Bones to powder small,
And with this hatefull Liquor temper it,
And in that Paste let their vill'd Heads be bak't,
Come, come, be euery one officious,
To make this Banquet, which I wish might proue,
More steepe and bloody then the Centaures Feast.

He cuts their throats.

So now bring them in, for Ile play the Cooke,
And see them ready, gainst their Mother comes. Exeunt.

Enter Lucius, Marcus, and the Gothes.

Luc. Vnckle Marcus, since 'tis my Fathers minde
That I repaire to Rome, I am content.

Goth. And ours with thine befall, what Fortune will.

Luc. Good Vnckle take you in this barbarous Moore,

This Rauenous Tiger, this accursed deuill,

Let him receiue no sustenance, fetter him,

Till he be brought vnto the Emperours face,

For testimony of her foule proceedings.

And see the Ambush of our Friends be strong,

If ere the Emperour meane no good to vs.

Aron. Some deuill whisper curses in my eare,

And prompt me that my tongue may vtter for th,

The Venemous Mallice of my swelling heart.

Luc. Away Inhumaine Dogge, Vnhalloved Slave,

Sirs, helpe our Vnckle, to conuey him in, Flourish.

The Trumpets shew the Emperour is at hand.

Sound Trumpets. Enter Emperour and Empreffe, with Tribunes and others.

Sat. What, hath the Firemament more Suns then one?

Luc. What bootes it thee to call thy selfe a Sonne?

Mar. Romes Emperour & Nephewe breake the parte

These quarrells must be quietly debated,

The Feast is ready which the careful Titus,

Hath

Hath ordained to an Honourable end,
For Peace, for Loue, for League, and good to Rome:
Please you therefore draw nie and take your places.
Satur. Marcus we will. Hoboyes.

*A Table brought in.
Enter Titus like a Cooke, placing the meat on the Table, and Lavinia with a viall ouer her face.*

Titus. Welcome my gracious Lord,
Welcome Dread Queene,
Welcome ye Warlike Gothes, welcome Lucius,
And welcome all: although the cheere be poore,

Twill fill your stomachs, please you eat of it.

Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd Andronicus?

Tit. Because I would be sure to haue all well,

To entertaine your Highnesse, and your Empreffe.

Tam. We are beholding to you good Andronicus?

Tit. And if your Highnesse knew my heart, you were:

My Lord the Emperour resolue me this,

Was it well done of rath Virginia,

To slay his daughter with his owne right hand.

Because she was enfor't, stain'd, and deflowr'd?

Satur. It was Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, Mighty Lord?

Sat. Because the Gille, should not furuine her shame,

And by her presence still renew his sorrowes.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectuall,

A patterne, president, and liuely warrant,

For me (most wretched) to performe the like:

Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee,

And with thy shame, thy Fathers sorrow die.

He kills her.

Sat. What hast done, vnnatural and vnkinde?

Tit. Kill'd her for whom my teares haue made me blind.

I am as wofull as Virginia was,

And haue a thousand times more cause then he.

Sat. What was she rauisht? tell who did the deed,

Tit. Wilt please you eat,

Wilt please you Hignesse feed?

Tam. Why hast thou slaine thine onely Daughter?

Titus. Not I, 'twas Chiron and Demetrius,

They rauisht her, and cut away her tongue,

And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.

Satur. Go fetch them hither to vs presently.

Tit. Why there they are both, bak'd in that Pie,

Whereof their Mother dantly hath fed,

Eating the flesh that she herselfe hath bred.

'Tis true, 'tis true, witness my knives sharpe point.

He stabs the Empreffe.

Satur. Die franticke wretch, for this accursed deed.

Luc. Can the Sonnes eye, behold his Father bleed?

There's meede for meede, death for a deadly deed.

Mar. You sad fac'd men, people and Sonnes of Rome,

By spores seuer'd like a flight of Fowle,

Scattered by windes and high tempestuous gusts:

Oh let me teach you how, to knit againe

This scattered Come, into one mutuall sheafe,

These broken limbs againe into one body.

Goth. Let Rome herselfe be bane vnto herselfe,

And shee whom mightie Kingdomes curse too,

Like a forlome and desperate castaway,

Doe shamefull execution on her selfe.

But if my frostie signes and chaps of age,

Grave witness of true experience,

Cannot induce you to attend my words,

Speake Romes deere friend, as 'erft our Auncestor,

When with his solemne tongue he did discourse
To loue-sicke Didoes sad attending eare,
The story of that balefull burning night,
When subtil Greekes surpriz'd King Priams Troy:
Tell vs what Simon hath bewicht our eares,
Or who hath brought the fatall engine in,
That giues our Troy, our Rome the ciuill wound.
My heart is not compact of flint nor Steele,
Nor can I vtter all our bitter grieve,
But floods of teares will drowne my Oratorie,
And breake my very vtterance, euen in the time
When it should moue you to attend me most,
Lending your kind hand Commiseration.
Heere is a Captaine, let him tell the tale,
Your hearts will throb and weepe to heare him speake.

Luc. This Noble Auditory, be it knowne to you,
That curst Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murthered our Emperours Brother,
And they it were that rauisht our Sister,
For their fell faults our Brothers were beheaded,
Our Fathers teares despis'd, and basely couen'd,
Of that true hand that fought Romes quarrell out,
And sent her enemies vnto the graue.
Lastly, my selfe vnkindly banished,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg reliefe among Romes Enemies,
Who drow'd their enmity in my true teares,
And op'd their armes to embrace me as a Friend:
And I am turned forth, be it knowne to you,
That haue prefer'd her welfare in my blood,
And from her bosome tooke the Enemies point,
Sheathing the Steele in my aduenturous body.
Alas you know, I am no Vaunter I,
My scars can witnesse, dumbe although they are,
That my report is iust and full of truth:
But soft, me thinks I do digresse too much,
Cytting my worthlesse praise: Oh pardon me,
For when no Friends are by, men praise themselves.

Marc. Now is my turne to speake: Behold this Child,
Of this was Tamora deliuered,
The issue of an Irreligious Moore,
Chiefe Architect and plotter of these woes,
The Villaine is aliue in Titus house,
And as he is, to witnesse this is true.
Now iudge what course had Titus to reuenge
These wrongs, vnspokeable past patience,
Or more then any liuing man could beare.

Now you haue heard the truth, what say you Romaines?
Haue we done ought amisse? shew vs wherein,
And from the place where you behold vs now,
The poore remainder of Andronicus,
Will hand in hand all headlong cast vs downe,
And on the ragged stones beat forth our braines,
And make a mutuall closure of our house:
Speake Romaines speake, and if you say we shall,
Loe hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Emili. Come come, thou reuerent man of Rome,
And bring our Emperour gently in thy hand,
Lucius our Emperour: for well I know,
The common voyce do cry it shall be so.

Mar. Lucius, all haile Romes Royall Emperour, Goe, goe into old Titus sorrowfull house,
And hither hale that misbelieuing Moore,
To be adiudg'd some direfull slaughtering death,
As punishment for his most wicked life.
Lucius all haile to Romes gracious Gouvernour,

Luc. Thanks gentle Romanes, may I gouerne so,
To heale Romes harmes, and wipe away her woe.
But gentle people, giue me ayme a-while,
For Nature puts me to a heauy taske:
Stand all aloofe, but Vnckle draw you neere,
To shed obsequious teares vpon this Trunke:
Oh take this warme kisse on thy pale cold lips,
These sorrowfull drops vpon thy bloud-staine face,
The last true Duties of thy Noble Sonne.

Mar. Teare for teare, and louing kisse for kisse,
Thy Brother Marcus tenders on thy Lips:
O were the summe of these that I should pay
Countlesse, and infinit, yet would I pay them.

Luc. Come hither Boy, come, come, and learne of vs
To melt in showres: thy Grandfire lou'd thee well:
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee:
Sung thee asleepe, his Louing Brest, thy Pillow:
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meete, and agreeing with thine Infancie:
In that respect then, like a louing Childe,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender Spring,
Because kinde Nature doth require it so:
Friends, should associate Friends, in Greefe and Wo.
Bid him farwell, commit him to the Graue,
Do him that kindnesse, and take leaue of him.

Boy. O Grandfire, Grandfire: euen with all my heart
Would I were Dead, so you did Liue againe.
O Lord, I cannot speake to him for weeping,
My teares will choake me, if I ope my mouth.

Romans. You sad Andronicus, haue done with woes,
Giue sentence on this execrable Wretch,
That hath bene breeder of these dire euent.

Luc. Set him brest deepe in earth, and famish him:
There let him stand, and raue, and cry for foode:
If any one releues, or pitties him,
For the offence, he dyes. This is our doome:
Some stay, to see him fast ned in the earth.

Aron. O why should wrath be mute, & Fury dumbe?
I am no Baby I, that with base Prayers
I should repent the Evils I haue done.
Ten thousand worse, then euer yet I did,
Would I performe if I might haue my will:
If one good Deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very Soule.

Lucius. Some louing Friends conuey the Emp. hence,
And giue him buriall in his Fathers graue.
My Father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our Households Monument:

As for that heynous Tyger Tamora,
No Funerall Rite, nor man in mournfull Weeds:
No mournfull Bell shall ring her Buriall:
But throw her forth to Beasts and Birds of prey:
Her life was Beast-like, and deuoid of pity,
And being so, shall haue like want of pity.
See Iustice done on Aaron that damn'd Moore,
From whom, our heauy happes had their beginning:
Then afterwards, to Order well the State,
That like Euent, may ne're it Ruinate. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF ROMEO and IULIET.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Sampson and Gregory with Swords and Bucklers, of the House of Capulet.

Sampson.

Gregory: A my word wee'l not carry coales.
Greg. No, for then we should be Colliers.
Samp. I mean, if we be in choller, wee'l draw.
Greg. I, While you liue, draw your necke out o'th Collar.

Samp. I strike quickly, being mou'd.
Greg. But thou art not quickly mou'd to strike.
Samp. A dog of the house of Montague, moues me.
Greg. To moue, is to stir: and to be valiant, is to stand:
Therefore, if thou art mou'd, thou runst away.

Samp. A dogge of that house shall moue me to stand.
I will take the wall of any Man or Maid of Montagues.
Greg. That shewes thee a weakelie slaue, for the weak-kest goes to the wall.

Samp. True, and therefore women being the weaker Vessels, are euer thrust to the wall: therefore I will push Montagues men from the wall, and thrust his Maides to the wall. (their men.)

Greg. The Quarrell is betweene our Masters, and vs
Samp. 'Tis all one, I will shew my selfe a tyrant: when I haue fought with the men, I will bee ciuill with the Maids, and cut off their heads.

Greg. The heads of the Maids?
Samp. I, the heads of the Maids, or their Maiden-heads,
Take it in what sence thou wilt.

Greg. They must take it sence, that feele it.
Samp. Me they shall feele while I am able to stand:
And 'tis knowne I am a pretty peece of flesh.

Greg. 'Tis well thou art not Fish: If thou had'st, thou had'st bene poore Iohn. Draw thy Toole, here comes of the House of the Montagues.

Enter two other Servingmen.

Samp. My naked weapon is out: quarrell, I wil back thee
Gre. How? Turne thy backe, and run,

Samp. Feare me not.
Gre. No marry: I feare thee.

Samp. Let vs take the Law of our sides: let them begin.
Gr. I wil frown as I passe by, & let the take it as they list

Samp. Nay, as they dare. I wil bite my Thumb at them, which is a disgrace to them, if they beare it.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumb at vs sir?
Samp. I do bite my Thumb, sir.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumb at vs, sir?
Samp. Is the Law of our side, if I say I? Gre. No.

Samp. No sir, I do not bite my Thumb at you sir: but I bite my Thumb sir.

Greg. Do you quarrell sir?
Abra. Quarrell sir? no sir. (as you)
Samp. If you do sir, I am for you, I serue as good a man
Abra. No better? Samp. Well sir.

Enter Benvolio.

Gr. Say better: here comes one of my masters kinsmen.
Samp. Yes, better.

Abra. You Lye.
Samp. Draw if you be men. Gregory, remember thy washing blow. They Fight.

Ben. Part Fooles, put vp your Swords, you know not what you do.

Enter Tybalt.

Tyb. What art thou drawne, among these heartlesse Hindes? Turne thee Benvolio, looke vpon thy death.

Ben. I do but keepe the peace, put vp thy Sword,
Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What draw, and talke of peace? I hate the word
As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee:
Haue at thee Coward. Fight.

Enter three or foure Citizens with Clubs.

Offi. Clubs, Bils, and Partisans, strike, beat them downe
Downe with the Capulets, downe with the Montagues.

Enter old Capulet in his Gowne, and his wife.

Cap. What noise is this? Giue me my long Sword ho.
Wife. A crutch, a crutch: why call you for a Sword?

Cap. My Sword I say: Old Montague is come,
And flourishes his Blade in spight of me.

Enter old Montague, & his wife.

Moun. Thou villaine Capulet, Hold me not, let me go
Wife. Thou shalt not stir a foote to seeke a Foe.

Enter Prince Escalus, with his Train.

Prince. Rebellious Subiects, Enemies to peace,
Prophaners of this Neighbor-stained Steele,
Will they not heare? What hoe, you Men, you Beasts,
That quench the fire of your pernicious Rage,
With purple Fountaines issuing from your Veines:
On paine of Torture, from those bloody hands
Throw your mistemper'd Weapons to the ground,
And heare the Sentence of your moued Prince.
Three ciuill Broyles, bred of an Ayery word,
By thee old Capulet and Montague,
Haue thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets,
And made Verona's ancient Citizens
Cast by their Graue beseeching Ornaments,
To wield old Partizans, in hands as old,

cc 3

Caukred

Cankred with peace, to part your Cankred hate,
If euer you disturbe our streets againe,
Your liues shall pay the forfeit of the peace.
For this time all the rest depart away:
You Capulet shall goe along with me,
And Montague come you this afternoone,
To know our Fathers pleasure in this case:
To old Free-towne, our common iudgement place:
Once more on paine of death, all men depart. Exeunt.

Moun. Who set this auncient quarrell new abroad?
Speake Nephew, were you by, when it began?

Ben. Heere were the seruants of your aduersarie,
And yours close fighting ere I did approach,
I drew to part them, in the instant came
The fiery Tibalt, with his sword prepar'd,
Which as he breath'd defiance to my eares,
He swong about his head, and cut the windes,
Who nothing hurt withall, hist him in scorne.
While we were enterchanging thrusts and blowes,
Came more and more, and fought on part and part,
Till the Prince came, who parted either part.

Wife. O where is Romeo, saw you him to day?
Right glad am I, he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an houre before the worshipt Sun
Peerd forth the golden window of the East,
A troubled mind draue me to walke abroad,
Where vnderneath the groue of Sycamore,
That West-ward rooteth from this City side:
So carely walking did I see your Sonne:
Towards him I made, but he was ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood,
I measuring his affections by my owne,
Which then most fought, when most might not be found;
Being one too many by my weary selfe,
Pursued my Honour, not pursuing his
And gladly shunn'd, who gladly fled from me.

Moun. May a morning hath he there beene seene,
With teares augmenting the fresh mornings dew,
Adding to cloudes, more cloudes with his deepe sighes,
But all so soone as the all-cheering Sunne,
Should in the farthest East begin to draw
The shady Curtaines from Auroras bed,
Away from light steales home my heauy Sonne,
And priuate in his Chamber penes himselfe,
Shuts vp his windowes, lockes faire day-light out,
And makes himselfe an artificiall night:
Blacked and portendous must this humour proue,
Vnlesse good counsell may the cause remoue.

Ben. My Noble Vncle doe you know the cause?

Moun. I neither know it, nor can learne of him.

Ben. Haue you importun'd him by any meanes?

Moun. Both by my selfe and many others Friends,
But he his owne affections counseller,
Is to himselfe (I will not say how true)
But to himselfe so secret and so close,
So farre from sounding and discovery,
As is the bud bit with an enuious worme,
Ere he can spread his sweete leaues to the ayre,
Or dedicate his beauty to the same.
Could we but learne from whence his sorrowes grow,
We would as willingly giue cure, as know.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. See where he comes, so please you step aside,
He know his greivance, or be much denide.

Moun. I would thou wert so happy by thy stay,
To heare true shrift. Come Madam let's away. Exeunt.

Ben. Good morrow Cousin.

Rom. Is the day so young?

Ben. But new strooke nine.

Rom. Ay me, sad houres seeme long.

Was that my Father that went hence, so fast?

Ben. It was: what sadness lengthens Romeo's houres?

Rom. Not hauing that, which hauing, makes them short.

Ben. In loue.

Romeo. Out.

Ben. Of loue.

Rom. Out of her fauour where I am in loue.

Ben. Alas that loue so gentle in his view,

Should be so tyrannous and rough in prooffe.

Rom. Alas that loue, whose view is muffled still,

Should without eyes, see path-ways to his will:

Where shall we dine? O me: what fray was heere?

Yet tell me not, for I haue heard it all:

Heere's much to do with hate, but more with loue:

Why then, O bawling loue, O louing hate,

O any thing, of nothing first created:

O heaue lightnesse, serious vanitie,

Mishapen Chaos of welteeing formes,

Feather of lead, bright smoake, cold fire, sick health,

Still waking sleepe, that is not what it is:

This loue feele I, that feele no loue in this.

Doeft thou not laugh?

Ben. No Coze, I rather weepe.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good hearts oppression.

Rom. Why such is loues transgression.

Griefes of mine owne lie heaue in my breast,

Which thou wilt propagate to haue it preast

With more of thine, this loue that thou hast showne,

Doth adde more griefe, to too much of mine owne,

Loue is a smoake made with the fume of sighes,

Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in Louers eyes,

Being vent, a Sea nourisht with louing teares,

What is it else? a madnesse, most discrete,

A choking gall, and a preserving sweet:

Farewell my Coze.

Ben. Soft I will goe along.

And if you leaue me so, you do me wrong.

Rom. Tut I haue lost my selfe, I am not here,

This is not Romeo, heere's some other where.

Ben. Tell me in sadnesse, who is that you loue?

Rom. What shall I grone and tell thee?

Ben. Grone, why no: but sadly tell me who.

Rom. A sickle man in sadnesse makes his will:

A word ill vrg'd to one that is so ill:

In sadnesse Cozin, I do loue a woman.

Ben. I aynd so neare, when I suppos'd you lou'd.

Rom. A right good make man, and shee's faire I loue

Ben. A right faire make, faire Coze, is soonest hit,

Rom. Well in that hit you misse, shee's not be hit

With Cupids arrow, she hath Dians wit:

And in strong prooffe of chastity well arm'd:

From loues weak childifish Bow, she liues vncharm'd.

Shee will not stay the siege of louing tearmes,

Nor bid th'incounter of assailing eyes.

Nor open her lap to Sainct-seducing Gold:

O she is rich in beautie, onely poore,

That when she dies, with beautie dies her store.

Ben. Then she hath sworne, that she will still liue chaste?

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing make huge wast?

For beauty steru'd with her feuerity,

Cuts beauty off from all posterity.

She

She is too faire, too wisewi: sely too faire,

To merit blisse by making me dispaire:

She hath forsworne to loue, and in that vow

Do I liue dead, that liue to tell it now.

Ben. Be rul'd by me, forget to thinke of her.

Rom. O teach me how I should forget to thinke.

Ben. By giuing liberty vnto thine eyes,

Examine other beauties.

Rom. 'Tis the way to call hers (exquisite) in question more,

Thee happy maskes that kisse faire Ladies browes,

Being blacke, puts vs in mind they hide the faire:

He that is strooken blind, cannot forget

The precious treasure of his eye-sight lost:

Shew me a Mistresse that is passing faire,

What doth her beauty serue but as a note,

Where I may read who past that passing faire.

Farewell thou canst not teach me to forget,

Ben. Ile pay that doctrine, or else die in debt. Exeunt.

Enter Capulet, Countie Paris, and the Clowne.

Capu. Montague is bound as well as I,

In penalty alike, and 'tis not hard I thinke,

For men so old as wee, to keepe the peace.

Par. Of Honourable reckoning are you both,

And pittie 'tis you liu'd at odds so long:

But now my Lord, what say you to my sute?

Capu. But saying ore what I haue said before,

My Child is yet a stranger in the world,

Shew hath not seene the change of foueteene yeares,

Let two more Summers wither in their pride,

Ere we may thinke her ripe to be a Bride.

Par. Younger then she, are happy mothers made.

Capu. And too soone mar'd are those so early made:

Earth hath swallowed all my hopes but she,

Shee's the hopefull Lady of my earth:

But wooe her gentle Paris, get her heart,

My will to her consent, is but a part.

And shee agree, within her scope of choise,

Lyes my consent, and faire according voice:

This night I hold an old accustomed Feast,

Whereto I haue inuited many a Guest,

Such as I loue, and you among the store,

One more, most welcome makes my number more:

At my poore house, looke to behold this night,

Earth-treading staters, that make darke heauen light,

Such comfort as do lusty young men feele,

When well apparel'd Aprill on the heele

Of limping Winter treads, euen such delight

Among fresh Fennell buds shall you this night

Inherit at my house: heere all, all see:

And like her most, whose merit most shall be:

Which one more view, of many, mine being one,

May stand in number, though in reckning none.

Come, goe with me: goe sirrah trudge about,

Through faire Verona, find those perions out,

Whose names are written there, and to them say,

My house and welcome, on their pleasure stay. Exit.

Ser. Find them out whose names are written.

Heere it is written, that the Shoemaker should meddle with his Yard, and the Tayler with his Last, the Fisher with his Penfill, and the Painter with his Nets. But I am sent to find those perions whose names are writ, & can neuer find what names the writing person hath here writ, (I must to the learned) in good time.

Enter Benvolio, and Romeo.

Ben. Tut man, one fire burnes out anothers burning,

One paine is leched by anothers anguish:

Turne giddie, and be holpe by backward turning:

One desperate greefe, cures with anothers laugh:

Take thou some new infection to the eye,

And the rank poyson of the old wil die.

Rom. Your Plantan lease is excellent for that.

Ben. For what I pray thee?

Rom. For your broken shin.

Ben. Why Romeo art thou mad?

Rom. Not mad, but bound more then a mad man is:

Shut vp in prison, kept without my foode,

Whipt and tormented: and Godden good fellow,

Ser. Goddigoden, I pray fir can you read?

Rom. I mine owne fortune in my miserie.

Ser. Perhaps you haue learn'd it without booke:

But I pray can you read any thing you see?

Rom. If I know the Letters and the Language.

Ser. Ye say honestly, rest you merry.

Rom. Stay fellow, I can read.

He reads the Letter.

S. Eigneur Martino, and his wife and daughter: Countie An- selme and his beauntous sisters: the Lady widow of Utra-

no, Seigneur Placentio, and his lovely Neece: Mercutio and his brother Valentine: mine vncle Capulet his wife and daughters: my faire Neece Rosaline, Luina, Seigneur Valentino, & his Cosen Tybalt: Lucio and the lovely Helena.

A faire assembly, whither should they come?

Ser. Vp.

Rom. Whither? to supper?

Ser. To our house.

Rom. Whose house?

Ser. My Maisters.

Rom. Indeed I should haue askt you that before.

Ser. Now Ile tell you without asking. My maister is the great rich Capulet, and if you be not of the house of

Montague I pray come and crush a cup of wine. Rest you merry. Exit.

Ben. At this same auncient Feast of Capulet's

Supps the faire Rosaline, whom thou looues:

With all the admired Beauties of Verona, shall be

Go thither and with vnattainted eye,

Compare her face with some that I shall show:

And I will make thee thinke thy Swan a Crow.

Rom. When the deuout religion of mine eye

Maintaines such falshood, then turne teares to fire:

And these who often drown'd could neuer die,

Transparent Heretiques be burnt for liers.

One fairer then my loue: the all-seeing Sun

Nere saw her match, since first the world begun.

Ben. Tut, you saw her faire, none else being by,

Herselfe poyl'd with herselfe in either eye:

But in that Christall scales, let there be waid,

Your Ladies loue against some other Maid

That I will show you, shining at this Feast,

And shee shall want shell, well, that now shewes best.

Rom. Ile goe along, no such fight to be showne,

But to reioyce in splendor of mine owne.

Enter Capulet's wife and Nurse.

Wife. Nurse wher's my daughter? call her forth to me.

Nurse. Now by my Maidenhead, at twelue yeare old

I had her come, what Lamb: what Ladi-bird, God forbid, Wher's this Gille? what Juliet?

Enter Juliet.

Juliet. How now, who calls?

Nur. Your Mother.

Juliet. Madam I am heere, what is your will?

Wife. This is the matter: Nurse giue leaue awhile, we must must talke in secret. Nurse come backe againe, I haue remembred me, thou'lt heare our counsell. Thou knowest my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. Faith I can tell her age vnto an houre.

Wife. Shee's not fourteene.

Nurse. Ile say fourteene of my teeth, And yet to my teene be it spoken, I haue but foure, shee's not fourteene. How long is it now to Lammas tide?

Wife. A fortnight and odde dayes.

Nurse. Euen or odde, of all daies in the yeare come Lammas Eue at night shall she be fourteene. Susan & she, God rest all Christian soules, were of an age. Well Susan is with God, she was too good for me. But as I said, on Lammas Eue at night shall she be fourteene, that shall she marie, I remember it well. 'Tis since the Earth-quake now eleuen yeares, and she was wean'd I neuer shall forget it, of all the daies of the yeare, vpon that day: for I had then laid Worme-wood to my Dug sitting in the Sunne vnder the Douchouse wall, my Lord and you were then at Mantua, nay I doe beare a braine. But as I said, when it did tast the Worme-wood on the nipple of my Dugge, and felt it bitter, pretty foole, to see it teachie, and fall out with the Dugge, Shake quoth the Douch-house, 'twas no neede I trow to bid mee trudge: and since that time it is a eleuen yeares, for then she could stand alone, nay bi'th' roode she could haue runne, & waded all about: for euen the day before she broke her brow, & then my Husband God be with his soule, a was a merrie man, tooke vp the Child, yea quoth hee, doest thou fall vpon thy face? thou wilt fall backward when thou hast more wit, wilt thou not Julie? And by my holy-dam, the pretty wretch left crying, & said I: to see now how a Telt shall come about. I warrant, & I shall liue a thousand yeares, I neuer should forget it: wilt thou not Julie quoth hee, and pretty foole it stinted, and said I.

Old La. Inough of this, I pray thee hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes Madam, yet I cannot chuse but laugh, to thinke it should leaue crying, & say I: and yet I warrant it had vpon it brow, a bume as big as a young Cockrels stone? A perillous knock, and it cryed bitterly. Yea quoth my husband, fall't vpon thy face, thou wilt fall backward when thou comest to age: wilt thou not Julie? It stinted, and said I.

Julie. And stint thou too, I pray thee Nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace I haue done: God marke thee too his grace thou wast the prettiest Babe that ere I nurst, and I might liue to see thee married once, I haue my wish.

Old La. Marry that marry is the very theame I came to talke of, tell me daughter Julie,

How stands your disposition to be Married?

Julie. It is an houre that I dreame not of.

Nurse. An houre, were not I thine onely Nurse, I would say thou had'st suckt wisdom from thy tear.

Old La. Well thinke of marriage now, yonger then you Heere in Verona, Ladies of esteeme, Are made already Mothers. By my count I was your Mother, much vpon these yeares That you are now a Maide, thus then in bricfe: The valiant Paris seekes you for his loue.

Nurse. A man young Lady, Lady, such a man as all the world. Why hee's a man of waxe.

Old La. Verona's Summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay hee's a flower, in faith a very flower.

Old La. What say you, can you loue the Gentleman? This night you shall behold him at our Feast,

Read ore the volume of young Paris face, And find delight, writ there with Beauties pen: Examine euery seuerall liniment, And see how one another lends content: And what obscur'd in this faire volumelies, Find written in the Margent of his eyes, This precious Booke of Loue, this vnbound Louer, To Beautifie him, onely lacks a Cover, The fish liues in the Sea, and 'tis much pride For faire without, the faire within to hide: That Booke in manies eyes doth share the glorie, That in Gold claspes, Lockes in the Golden storie: So shall you share all that he doth possesse, By hauing him, making your selfe no lesse.

Nurse. No lesse, nay bigger: women grow by men.

Old La. Speake briefly, can you like of Paris loue?

Julie. Ile looke to like, if looking liking moue, But no more deepe will I endart mine eye, Then your consent giues strength to make flye.

Enter a Serving man.

Ser. Madam, the guests are come, supper seru'd vp, you cal'd, my young Lady askt for, the Nurse cur'd in the Pantery, and euery thing in extremitie: I must hence to wait, I beseech you follow straight.

Mo. We follow thee, Julie, the Countie staies.

Nurse. Goe Gyrle, seeke happy nights to happy daies.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, with five or six other Maskers, Torch-bearers.

Rom. What shall this speech be spoke for our excuse? Or shall we on without Apologie?

Ben. The date is out of such prolixitie, Weele haue no Capit, hood winkt with a skarfe, Bearing a Tartars painted Bow of lath, Skaring the Ladies like a Crow-keeper. But let them measure vs by what they will. Weele measure them a Measure, and be gone.

Rom. Giue me a Torch, I am not for this ambling. Being but heavy I will beare the light.

Mer. Nay gentle Romeo, we must haue you dance.

Rom. Not I belecue me, you haue dancing shooes With nimble soles, I haue a soale of Lead

So stokes me to the ground, I cannot moue.

Mer. You are a Louer, borrow Capit's wings, And soare with them about a common bound.

Rom. I am too fore enpearced with his shaft, To soare with his light feathers, and to bound: I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe, Vnder loues heavy burthen doe I sinke.

Hor. And to sinke in it should you burthen loue, Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is loue a tender thing? it is too rough, Too rude, too boysterous, and it pricks like thorne.

Mer. If loue be rough with you, be rough with loue, Pricke loue for pricking, and you beat loue downe, Giue me a Case to put my visage in, A Visor for a Visor, what care I

What curious eye doth quote deformities: Here are the Beetle-browes shall blush for me.

Ben. Come knocke and enter, and no sooner in, But euery man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A Torch for me, let wantons light of heart Tickle the senselesse rushes with their heeles: For I am prouerbd with a Grandier Phrase, Ile be a Candle-holder and looke on, The game was nere so faire, and I am done.

Mer. Tut.

Mer. Tut, duns the Mouse, the Constables owne word, If thou art dun, weele draw thee from the mire. Or saue your reuerence loue, wherein thou stickest Vp to the eares, come we burne day-light ho.

Rom. Nay that's not so.

Mer. I meant sir I delay.

We wast our lights in vaine, lights, lights, by day: Take our good meaning, for our Iudgement fits Five times in that, ere once in our fine wits.

Rom. And we meane well in going to this Maske, Eutis no wit to go.

Mer. Why may one aske?

Rom. I dreamt a dreame to night.

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lye.

Rom. In bed a sleepe while they doe dreame things true.

Mer. O then I see Queene Mab hath bene with you: She is the Fairies Midwife, & she comes in shape no bigger then an Agat-stone, on the fore-finger of an Alderman, drawne with a teeme of little Atomics, ouer mens noses as they lie asleepe: her Waggon Spokes made of long Spinners legs: the Cover of the wings of Grashoppers, her

Traces of the smallest Spiders web, her coullers of the Moonshines watry Beames, her Whip of Crickets bone, the Lash of Philome, her Waggoner, a small gray-coated Gnat, not halfe so bigge as a round little Worme, prickt from the Lazie-finger of a man. Her Chariot is an emptie Haselnut, made by the Ioyner Squirrel or old Grub, time out a mind, the Fairies Coach-makers: & in this state she gallops night by night, through Louers braines: and then they dreame of Loue. On Courtiers knees, that dreame on

Curles strait: ore Lawyers fingers, who strait dreame on Fees, ore Ladies lips, who strait on kisses dreame, which off a the angry Mab with blisters plagues, because their breath with Sweet meats tainted are. Sometime she gallops ore a Courtiers nose, & then dreames he of smelling our asure: & sometime comes she with Tith pigs tale, tickling a Parsons nose as he lies asleepe, then he dreames of another Benefice. Sometime she driueth ore a Souldiers necke, & then dreames he of cutting Fortaine throats. Of Breaches, Ambuscados, Spanish Blades: Of Healths fine

Padome deepe, and then anon drums in his eares, at which he startes and wakes; and being thus frighted, sweares a prayer or two & sleepe againe: this is that very Mab that plats the manes of Horses in the night: & bakes the Ellocks in foule fluttish haies, which once vntangled, much misfortune bodes, This is the hag, when Maides lie on their backs, That presses them, and learnees them first to beare, Making them women of good carriage: This is she.

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio peace, Thou talk'st of nothing.

Mer. True, I talke of dreames: Which are the children of an idle braine, Begot of nothing, but vaine phantasie, Which is as thin of substance as the ayre, And more inconstant then the wind, who woos

Euen now the frozen bosome of the North: And being anger'd, puffes away from thence, Turning his side to the dew dropping South.

Ben. This wind you talke of blowes vs from our selues, Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

Rom. I feare too early, for my mind misgiues, Some consequence yet hanging in the starres,

Shall bitterly begin his fearefull date With this nights reuels, and expire the tearme Of a despised life clos'd in my breast:

By some vile forfeit of vntimely death,

But he that hath the stirrage of my course,

Direct my sute: on lustie Gentlemen.

Ben. Strike Drum.

They march about the Stage, and Serving men come forth with their napkins.

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away? He shift a Trencher? he scrape a Trencher?

1. When good manners, shall lie in one or two mens hands, and they vnwast too, 'tis a foule thing.

Ser. Away with the loynstooles, remoue the Court-cubbord, looke to the Plate: good thou, saue mee a piece of Marchpane, and as thou louest me, let the Porter let in Susan Grindstone, and Nell, Anthony and Potpan.

2. I Boy readie.

Ser. You are lookt for, and cal'd for, askt for, & sought for, in the great Chamber.

1. We cannot be here and there too, chearly Boyes, Be brisk awhile, and the longer huer take all.

Exeunt.

Enter all the Guests and Gentlewomen to the Maskers.

1. Capu. Welcome Gentlemen, Ladies that haue their toes

Vnplag'd with Cornes, will walke about with you: Ah my Mistresses, which of you all

Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty, She Ile sweare hath Cornes: am I come neare ye now? Welcome Gentlemen, I haue scene the day

That I haue worne a Visor, and could tell A whispering tale in a faire Ladies eare: Such as would please: 'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone, You are welcome Gentlemen, come Musicians play:

Musicke plaies: and the dance.

A Hall, Hell, giue roome, and foote it Girles, More light you knaues, and turne the Tables vp: And quench the fire, the Roome is growne too hot, Ah firrh, this vnlookt for sport comes well: Nay sit, nay sit, good Cozin Capulet, For you and I are past our dauncing daies: How long 'ist now since last your selfe and I

Were in a Maske?

2. Capu. Berlady thirty yeares.

1. Capu. What man: 'tis not so much, 'tis not so much, 'Tis since the Nuptiall of Lucentio, Come Pentycost as quickly as it will, Some five and twenty yeares, and then we Maskt.

2. Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more, his Sonne is elder sir: His Sonne is thirty.

3. Cap. Will you tell me that? His Sonne was but a Ward two yeares agoe.

Rom. What Ladie is that which dothni rich (the hand Of yonder Knight?

Ser. I know not sir.

Rom. O she doth teach the Torch to burne bright: It seemes she hangs vpon the cheek of night, As a rich Iewel in an Ethiops care: Beauty too rich for vs, for earth too deare: So shewes a Snowy Doue trooping with Crowes, As yonder Lady ore her fellowes showes; The measure done, Ile watch her place of stand, And touching hers, make blessed my rude hand.

Did

Did my heart loue till now, forswear it sight,
For I neuer saw true Beauty till this night.

Tib. This by his voice, should be a Mountague.
Fetch me my Rapier Boy, what dares the flaue
Come hither couer'd with an antique face,
To floure and scorne at our Solemnitie?
Now by the stocke and Honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

Cap. Why how now kinsman,
Wherefore storme you so?

Tib. Vncle this is a Mountague, our foe:
A Villaine that is hither come in spight,
To scorne at our Solemnitie this night.

Cap. Young Romeo is it?

Tib. 'Tis he, that Villaine Romeo.

Cap. Content thee gentle Coz, let him alone,
A beares him like a portly Gentleman:
And to say truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a vertuous and well gouern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all the towne,
Here in my house do him disparagement:
Therefore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will, the which if thou respect,
Shew a faire presence, and put off these frownes,
An ill becoming semblance for a Feast.

Tib. It fies when such a Villaine is a guest,
He not endure him.

Cap. He shall be endur'd.
What Goodman boy, I say he shall go too,
Am I the Maister here or you? go too,
Youle not endure him, God shall mend my soule,
Youle make a Mutinie among the Guests:
You will set cocke a hoope, youle be the man.

Tib. Why Vncle, 'tis a shame.

Cap. Go too, go too,
You are a sawcy Boy, 'tis so indeed?
This trick may chance to scath you, I know what,
You must contrary me, marry 'tis time.
Well said my hearts, you are a Princ Cox, goe,
Be quiet, or more light, more light for shame,
He make you quiet. What, chearely my hearts.

Tib. Patience perforce, with wilfull choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting:
I will withdraw, but this intrusion shall
Now seeming sweet, conuert to bitter gall. Exit.

Rom. If I prophane with my vnworthiest hand,
This holy shrine, the gentle sin is this,
My lips to blushing Pilgrims did ready stand,
To smooth that rough touch, with a tender kisse.

Iul. Good Pilgrime,

You do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly deuotion shewes in this,
For Saints haue hands, that Pilgrims hands do tuch,
And palme to palme, is holy Palmers kisse.

Rom. Haue not Saints lips, and holy Palmers too?

Iul. I Pilgrim, lips that they must vse in prayer.

Rom. O then deare Saint, let lips do what hands do,
They pray (grant thou) least faith turne to dispaire.

Iul. Saints do not moue,

Though grant for prayers sake.

Rom. Then moue not while my prayers effect I take:
Thus from my lips, by thine my sin is purg'd.

Iul. Then haue my lips the sin that they haue tooke.

Rom. Sin from my lips? O trespasse sweetly vrg'd:

Giue me my sin againe.

Iul. You kisse by th' booke.

Nur. Madam your Mother craues a word with you.
Rom. What is her Mother?

Nur. Marrie Batcheler,

Her Mother is the Lady of the house,
And a good Lady, and a wife, and Vertuous,
I Nur't her Daughter that you talkt withall:
I tell you, he that can lay hold of her,
Shall haue the chinkes.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?

O deare account! My life is my foes debt.

Ben. Away, be gone, the sport is at the best.

Rom. I so I feare, the more is my vnrest.

Cap. Nay Gentlemen prepare not to be gone,
We haue a trifling foolish Banquet towards:

Is it e'ne so? why then I thank you all.

I thanke you honest Gentlemen, good night:

More Torch'es here: come on, then let's to bed.

Ah sirrah, by my faie it waxes late,

He to my rest.

Iul. Come hither Nurse,

What is yond Gentleman?

Nur. The Sonne and Heire of old Tyberio.

Iul. What's he that now is going out of doore?

Nur. Marrie that I thinke be young Petruchio.

Iul. What's he that follows here that would not dance?

Nur. I know not.

Iul. Go aske his name, if he be married,

My graue is like to be my wedded bed.

Nur. His name is Romeo, and a Mountague,

The onely Sonne of your great Enemy.

Iul. My onely Loue sprung from my onely hate,

Too early seene, vnknowne, and knowne too late,

Prodigious birth of Loue it is to me,

That I must loue a loathed Enemy.

Nur. What's this? what's this?

Iul. A rime, I learne euen now

Of one I can't withall.

Nur. Anon, anon:

Come let's away, the strangers all are gone.

Chorus.

Now old desire doth in his death bed lie,

And yong affection gapes to be his Heire,

That faire, for which Loue gron'd for and would die,

With tender Iuliet matcht, is now not faire.

Now Romeo is beloued, and Loues againe,

A like bewitched by the charme of lookes:

But to his foe suppos'd he must complaine,

And she steale Loues sweete bait from fearefull hookes:

Being held a foe, he may not haue accesse

To breath such vowes as Louers vse to sweare,

And she as much in Loue, her meanes much lesse,

To meete her new Beloued any where:

But passion lends them Power, time, meanes to meete,

Temp'ring extremities with extreme sweete.

Enter Romeo alone.

Rom. Can I goe forward when my heart is here?

Turne backe dull earth, and find thy Center out.

Enter Benuolio, with Mercutio.

Ben. Romeo, my Cozen Romeo, Romeo.

Merc. He is wise,

And on my life hath stolne him home to bed.

Ben. He ran this way and leapt this Orchard wall.

Call good Mercutio:

Nay, he coniuere too.

Mer.

Rom.

Iul.

Cap.

Tib.

Nur.

Chorus.

Exit.

Enter Romeo alone.

Rom.

Iul.

Cap.

Tib.

Nur.

Chorus.

Exit.

Mer. Romeo, Humours, Madman, Passion, Louer, Appeare thou in the likeness of a sigh,

Speake but one rime, and I am satisfied:

Cry me but ay me, Prouant, but Loue and day,

Speake to my gossip Venus one faire word,

One Nickname for her purblind Sonne and her,

Young Abraham Cupid he that shot so true,

When King Cophetua lou'd the begger Maid,

He heareth not, he stireth not, he moueth not,

The Ape is dead, I must coniuere him,

I coniuere thee by Rosalines bright eyes,

By her High forehead, and her Scarlet lip,

By her Fine foote, Straight leg, and Quivering thigh,

And the Demeanes, that there Adiacent lie,

That in thy likeness thou appeare to vs.

Ben. And if he heare thee thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him, 'twould anger him

To raise a spirit in his Mistresse circle,

Of some strange nature, letting it stand

Till he had laid it, and coniuere it downe,

That were some spight.

My inuocation is faire and honest, & in his Mistis name,

I coniuere onely but to raise vp him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himselfe among these Trees

To be comforted with the Humorous night:

Blind is his Loue, and best befits the darke.

Mer. If Loue be blind, Loue cannot hit the marke,

Now will he sit vnder a Medler tree,

And wish his Mistresse were that kind of Fruite,

As Maides call Medlers when they laugh alone,

O Romeo that she were, O that she were

An open, or thou a Poprin Peare,

Romeo goodnight, He to my Truckle bed,

This Field-bed is to cold for me to sleepe,

Come shall we go?

Ben. Go then, for 'tis in vaine to seeke him here

That meanes not to be found. Exeunt.

Rom. He icasts at Scarres that neuer felt a wound,

But soft, what light through yonder window breaks?

'Tis the East, and Iuliet is the Sunne,

Arise faire Sun and kill the enuious Moone,

Who is already sicke and pale with griefe,

That thou her Maid art far more faire then she:

Benot her Maid since she is enuious,

Her Vestal liuery is but sicke and Greene,

And none but fool'es do weare it, cast it off:

It is my Lady, O it is my Loue, O that she knew she were,

She speaks, yet she sayes nothing, what of that?

Here eye discourses, I will answer it:

I am too bold 'tis not to me she speaks:

Two of the fairest starres in all the Heauen,

Hauing some businesse do entreat her eyes,

To twinkle in their Spheres till they retorne.

What if her eyes were there, they in her head,

The brightnesse of her cheek'e would flame those starres,

As day-light doth a Lampe, her eye in heauen,

Would through the ayre Region streame so bright,

That Birds would sing, and thinke it were not night:

See how she leanes her cheek'e vpon her hand.

O that I were a Gloue vpon that hand,

That I might touch that cheek'e.

Iul. Ayme.

Rom. She speaks.

Oh speake againe bright Angell, for thou art

As glorious to this night being ore my head,

As is a winged messenger of heauen.

Iul.

Cap.

Tib.

Nur.

Chorus.

Exit.

Enter Romeo alone.

Rom.

Iul.

Cap.

Tib.

Nur.

Chorus.

Exit.

Vnto the white vpturned wondring eyes
Of mortalls that fall backe to gaze on him,
When he bestrides the lazic puffing Cloudes,
And sailes vpon the bosome of the ayre.

Iul. O Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou Romeo?
Denie thy Father and refuse thy name:

Or if thou wilt not, be but swome my Loue,

And Ile no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I heare more, or shall I speake at this?

Iul. 'Tis but thy name that is my Enemy:

Thou art thy selfe, though not a Mountague,

What's Mountague? it is nor hand nor foote,

Nor arme, nor face, O be some other name

Belonging to a man.

What? in a names that which we call a Rose,

By any other word would smell as sweete,

So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,

Retaine that deare perfection which he owes,

Without that title Romeo, doff thy name,

And for thy name which is no part of thee,

Take all my selfe.

Rom. I take thee at thy word:

Call me but Loue, and Ile be new baptiz'd,

Hence forth I neuer will be Romeo.

Iul. What man art thou, that thus bescreen'd in night

So stumblest on my counsell?

Rom. By a name,

I know not how to tell thee who I am:

My name deare Saint, is hatefull to my selfe,

Because it is an Enemy to thee,

Had I it written, I would teare the word.

Iul. My eares haue yet not drunke a hundred words

Of thy tongues vttering, yet I know the sound.

Art thou not Romeo, and a Mountague?

Rom. Neither faire Maid, if either thee dislike.

Iul. How cam'st thou hither.

Tell me, and wherefore?

The Orchard walls are high, and hard to climbe,

And the place death, considering who thou art,

If any of my kinsmen find thee here,

Rom. With Loues light wings

Did I ore-perch these Walls,

For stony limits cannot hold Loue out,

And what Loue can do, that dares Loue attempt:

Therefore thy kinsmen are no stop to me.

Iul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

Rom. Alacke there lies more perill in thine eye,

Then twenty of their Swords, looke thou but sweete,

And I am prooue against their enmity.

Iul. I would not for the world they saw thee here.

Rom. I haue nights cloake to hide me from their eyes

And but thou loue me, let them finde me here,

My life were better ended by their hate,

Then death proroged wanting of thy Loue.

Iul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

Rom. By Loue that first did prompt me to enquire,

He lent me counsell, and I lent him eyes,

I am no Pylot, yet wert thou as far

As that vast shore-washer with the farthest Sea,

I should aduenture for such Marchandise.

Iul. Thou knowest the maske of night is on my face,

Else would a Maiden blush besaint my cheek

And I will take thy word, yet if thou swear'st,
Thou maiest proue false: at Louers periuries
They say Ioue laugh, oh gentle Romeo,
If thou dost Loue, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou thinkest I am too quickly wonne,
Ile frowne and be peruerse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt wooe: But else not for the world.
In truth faire Mountague I am too fond:
And therefore thou maiest thinke my behauiour light,
But trust me Gentleman, Ile proue more true,
Then those that haue coying to be strange,
I should haue bene more strange, I must confesse,
But that thou overheard'st ere I was ware
My true Loues passion, therefore pardon me,
And not impute this yeelding to light Loue,
Which the darke night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder Moone I vow,
That tips with siluer all these Fruite tree tops.

Jul. O sweare not by the Moone, th'inconstant Moone,
That monethly changes in her circled Orbe,
Least that thy Loue proue likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I sweare by?

Jul. Do not sweare at all:

O if thou wilt sweare by thy gracious selfe,
Which is the God of my Idolatry,
And Ile beleue thee.

Rom. If my hearts deare loue.

Jul. Well do not sweare, although I loy in thee:
I haue no ioy of this contract to night,
It is too rash, too vnaduis'd, too sudden.

Too like the lightning which doth cease to be
Ere, one can say, it lightens, Sweete good night:
This bud of Loue by Summers ripening breath,
May proue a beaurious Flower when next we meete:

Goodnight, goodnight, as sweete repose and rest,
Come to thy heart, as that within my breast.

Rom. O wilt thou leaue me so vn-satisfied?

Jul. What satisfaction can'st thou haue to night?

Rom. Th'exchange of thy Loues faithfull vow for mine.

Jul. I gaue thee mine before thou did'st request it:

And yet I would it were to giue againe.

Rom. Would'st thou withdraw it,

For what purpose Loue?

Jul. But to be franke and giue it thee againe,

And yet I wish but for the thing I haue,

My bounty is as boundlesse as the Sea,

My Loue as deepe, the more I giue to thee

The more I haue, for both are Infinite:

I heare some noyse within deare Loue adue:

Anon good Nurse, sweet Mountague be true:

Stay but a little, I will come againe.

Rom. O blessed blessed night, I am as fear'd

Being in night, all this is but a dreame,

Too flattering sweet to be substantiall.

Jul. Three words deare Romeo,

And goodnight indeed,

If that thy bent of Loue be Honourable,

Thy purpose marriage, send me word to morrow,

By one that Ile procure to come to thee,

Where and what time thou wilt performe the right,

And all my Fortunes at thy foote Ile lay,

And follow thee my Lord throughout the world.

Within: Madam.

I come, anon: but if thou meanest not well,

I do beseech thee

Within: Madam.

(By and by I come)

To cease thy strife, and leaue me to my griefe,
To morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soule.

Jul. A thousand times goodnight.

Rom. A thousand times the worse to want thy light,
Loue goes toward Loue as school-boys fro thier books,
But Loue fro Loue, towards schoole with heauie looks.

Enter Juliet againe.

Jul. Hift Romeo hift: O for a Falkners voice,
To lure this Tassell gentle backe againe,
Bondage is hoarse, and may not speake aloud,
Else would I teare the Caue where Echo lies,
And make her ayrie tongue more hoarse, then
With repetition of my Romeo.

Rom. It is my soule that calls vpon my name,
How siluer sweet, sound Louers tongues by night,
Like softest Musicke to attending eares.

Jul. Romeo.

Rom. My Neece.

Jul. What a clock to morrow

Shall I send to thee?

Rom. By the houre of nine.

Jul. I will not faile, 'tis twenty yeares till then,
I haue forgot why I did call thee backe.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.

Jul. I shall forget, to haue thee still stand there,

Remembering how I Loue thy company.

Rom. And Ile still stay, to haue thee still forget,

Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would haue thee gone,

And yet no further then a wantons Bird,

That let's it hop a little from his hand,

Like a poore prisoner in his twisted Gyues,

And with a silken thred plucks it backe againe,

So louing Iealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would I were thy Bird.

Jul. Sweet so would I,

Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing:

Good night, good night.

Rom. Parting is such sweete sorrow,

That I shall say goodnight, till it be morrow.

Jul. Sleepe dwell vpon thine eyes, peace in thy breast.

Rom. Would I were sleepe and peace so sweet to rest,

The gray ey'd morne smiles on the frowning night,

Checking the Easterne Clouds with streakes of light,

And darknesse fleckel'd like a drunkard reeles,

From forth dayes pathway, made by Titans wheeles.

Hence will I to my ghostly Fries close Cell,

His helpe to craue, and my deare hap to tell.

Exit.

Enter Friar alone with a basket.

Fri. The gray ey'd morne smiles on the frowning night,

Checking the Easterne Cloudes with streakes of light:

And fleckled darknesse like a drunkard reeles,

From forth daies path, and Titans burning wheeles:

Now ere the Sun aduance his burning eye,

The day to cheere, and nights danke dew to dry,

I must vpfill this Offer Cage of ours,

With balefull weedes, and precious Iuiced flowers,

The earth that's Natures mother, is her Tombe,

What is her burying graue that is her wombe:

And from her wombe children of diuers kind

We

We sucking on her naturall bosome find:

Many for many vertues excellent:

None but for some, and yet all different.

Onicke is the powerfull grace that lies

In Plants, Hearbs, Stones, and their true qualities:

For nought so vile, that on the earth doth liue,

But to the earth some speciall good doth giue.

Nor ought so good, but strain'd from that faire vs,

Reuolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse:

Vertue it selfe turnes vice being misapplied,

And vice sometime by action dignified.

Enter Romeo.

Within the infant rind of this weake flower,

Poyson hath residence, and medicine power:

For this being smelt, with that part cheeres each part,

Being tasted slayes all fences with the heart.

Two such opposed Kings encampe them still,

In man as well as Hearbes, grace and rude will:

And where the worser is predominant,

Full soone the Canker death eates vp that Plant.

Rom. Good morrow Father.

Fri. Benedicite.

What early tongue so sweet salueth me?

Young Sonne, it argues a distemper'd head,

So soone to bid goodmorrow to thy bed;

Care keeps his watch in euery old mans eye,

And where Care lodges, sleepe will neuer lye:

But where vnbrused youth with vnstuffed braine

Doth couch his lims, there, golden sleepe doth raigne;

Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,

Thou art vprou'd with some distemperature;

Or if not so, then here I hit it right.

Our Romeo hath not bene in bed to night.

Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. God pardon sin: wast thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly Father? No,

I haue forgot that name, and that names woe.

Fri. That's my good Son, but wher hast thou bin then?

Rom. Ile tell thee ere thou aske it me agen:

I haue bene feasting with mine enemy,

Where on a sudden one hath wounded me,

That's by me wounded: both our remedies

Within thy helpe and holy phisicke lies:

I beare no hatred, blessed man: for loe

My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plaine good Son, rest homely in thy drift,

Ridling confession, findes but ridling shrift.

Rom. Then plainly know my hearts deare Loue is set,

On the faire daughter of rich Capulet:

As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine;

And all combin'd, saue what thou must combine

By holy marriage: when and where, and how,

We met, we wooed, and made exchange of vow:

Ile tell thee as we passe, but this I pray,

That thou consent to marrie vs to day.

Fri. Holy S. Francis, what a change is heere?

Is Rosaline that thou didst Loue so deare

So soone forsaken? young mens Loue then lies

Not truely in their hearts, but in their eyes.

Iesu Maria, what a deale of brine

Hath wasteth thy fallow cheekes for Rosaline?

How much salt water throwne away in wast,

To season Loue that of it doth not tast.

The Sun not yet thy sighes, from heauen cleares,

Thy old groanes yet ringing in my ancient eares:

Lo here vpon thy cheek the staine doth sit,

Of an old teare that is not washt off yet.

If ere thou wast thy selfe, and these woes thine,

Thou and these woes, were all for Rosaline.

And art thou chang'd? pronounce this sentence then,

Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou chid'st me oft for louing Rosaline.

Fri. For doting, not for louing pupill mine.

Rom. And bad'st me bury Loue.

Fri. Not in a graue,

To lay one in, another out to haue.

Rom. I pray thee chide me not, her I Loue now

Doth grace for grace, and Loue for Loue allow:

The other did not so.

Fri. O she knew well,

Thy Loue did read by rote, that could not spell:

But come young wauerer, come goe with me,

In one respect, Ile thy assistant be:

For this alliance may so happy proue,

To turne your houshold rancor to pure Loue.

Rom. O let vs hence, I stand on sudden hest.

Fri. Wisely and slow, they Rumble that run fast.

Exeunt

Enter Benuolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the deu le should this Romeo be? came he not home to night?

Ben. Not to his Fathers, I spoke with his man.

Mer. Why that same pale hard-hearted wench, that Ro-seline vorments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tibalt, the kinsman to old Capulet, hath sent a Letter to his Fathers house.

Mer. A challenge on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answere it.

Mer. Any man that can write, may answere a Letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answere the Letters Master how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas poore Romeo, he is already dead stab'd with a white wenches blacke eye, runne through the care with a Loue song, the very pinne of his heart, cleft with the blind Bowe-boys but- shaft, and is he a man to encounter

Tybal?

Ben. Why what is Tibalt?

Mer. More then Prince of Cats. Oh hee's the Couragi-ous Capitaine of Complements: he fights as you sing pricksong; keeps time, distance, and proportion, he rests his minum, one, two, and the third in your bosom: the very butcher of a silk burton, a Duellist, a Gentleman of the very first house of the first and second cause: sh the immortall Passado, the Punto reuerfo, the Hay.

Ben. The what?

Mer. The Pox of such antique lisping affecting phan-tacies, these new tuners of accent: Iesu a very good blade, a very tall man, a very good whore. Why is not this a lamentable thing Grandfire, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies: these fashion Mongers, these pardon-mee's, who stand so much on the new form, that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench. O their bones, their

French slop: you gauevs the the counterfeit fairly last night.

Romeo. Good morrow to you both, what counterfeit did I giue you?

Mer. The slip sir, the slip, can you not conceiue?

Rom. Pardon Mercutio, my businesse was great, and in such a case as mine, a man may straine curtesie.

Mer. That's as much as to say, such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning to curfie.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly bit it.

Rom. A most curteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pinck of curtesie.

Rom. Pinke for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why then is my Pump well flow'd.

Mer. Sure wit, follow me this ieaft, now till thou hast worne out thy Pump, that when the single sole of it is worne, the ieaft may remaine after the wearing, sole-fingular.

Rom. O single sol'd ieaft,

Soly singular for the singlenesse.

Mer. Come betwene vs good Benolio, my wits faints.

Rom. Swits and spurs,

Swits and spurs, or Ile crie a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the Wild-Goose chase, I am done: For thou hast more of the Wild-Goose in one of thy wits, then I am sure I haue in my whole sue. Was I with you there for the Goose?

Rom. Thou wast neuer with mee for any thing, when thou wast not there for the Goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the eare for that iest.

Rom. Nay, good Goose bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very Bitter-sweeting, It is a most sharpe sawce.

Rom. And is it not well seru'd into a Sweet-Goose?

Mer. Oh here's a wit of Cheuerell, that stretches from an ynch narrow, to an ell broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word, broad, which added to the Goose, proues thee farre and wide, abroad Goose.

Mer. Why is not this better now, then groning for Loue, now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo: now art thou what thou art, by Art as well as by Nature, for this dricling Loue is like a great Naturall, that runs lolling vp and downe to hid his bable in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desir'st me to stop in my tale against the Ben. Thou would'st else haue made thy tale large. (haire.

Mer. O thou art deceiu'd, I would haue made it short, or I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant indeed to occupie the argument no longer.

Enter Nurse and her man.

Rom. Here's goodly geare.

A sayle, a sayle.

Mer. Two, two: a Shirt and a Smocke.

Nur. Peter?

Peter. Anon.

Nur. My Fah Peter?

Mer. Good Peter to hide her face?

For her Fans the fairer face?

Nur. God ye good morrow Gentlemen.

Mer. God ye gooden faire Gentlewoman.

Nur. Is it gooden?

Mer. 'Tis no lesse I tell you: for the bawdy hand of the Dyall is now vpon the prick of Noone.

Nur. Out vpon you: what a man are you?

Rom. One Gentlewoman,

That God hath made, himselfe to mar.

Nur. By my troth it is said, for himselfe to, mar quotha: Gentlemen, can any of you tel me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you: but young Romeo will be older when you haue found him, then he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worle.

Nur. You say well.

Mer. Yea is the worst well,

Very well tooke: I faith, wisely, wisely.

Nur. If you be he sir,

I desire some confidence with you?

Ben. She will endite him to some Supper.

Mer. A baud, a baud, a baud. So no.

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No Hare sir, vnlesse a Hare sir in a Lenten pie, that is something stale and hoare ere it be spent. An old Hare hoare, and an old Hare hoare is very good meat in Lent.

But a Hare that is hoare is too much for a score, when it hoares ere it be spent,

Romeo will you come to your Fathers? Weele to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell auncient Lady: Farewell Lady, Lady, Lady.

Exit. Mercutio, Benedick.

Nur. I pray you sir, what sawcie Merchant was this that was so full of his roperie?

Rom. A Gentleman Nurse, that loues to heare himselfe talke, and will speake more in a minute, then he will stand to in a Moneth.

Nur. And a speake any thing against me, Ile take him downe, & a were lustier then he is, and twentie such knockes, and if I cannot, Ile finde those that shall: scurvie knaue, I am none of his flurt-gils, I am none of his skaines mates, and thou must stand by to see and suffer euery knaue to vie me at his pleasure.

Pet. I saw no man vse you at his pleasure: if I had, my weapon should quickly haue bene out, I warrant you, I dare draw as soone as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrell, and the law on my side.

Nur. Now afore God, I am so vext, that every part about me quiuers, skurne knaue: pray you sir a word: and as I told you, my young Lady bid me enquire you out, what she bid me say, I will keepe to my selfe: but first let me tell ye, if ye should leade her in a foolies paradise, as they say, it were a very grosse kind of behauiour, as they say: for the Gentlewoman is yong: & therefore, if you should deale double with her, truly it were an ill thing to be offered to any Gentlewoman, and very weake dealing.

Nur. Nurse commend me to thy Lady and Mistresse, I protest vnto thee.

Nur. Good heart, and yfaith I will tell her as much: Lord, Lord she will be a ioyfull woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her Nurse? thou dost not marke me?

Nur. I will tell her sir, that you do protest, which as I take it, is a Gentleman-like offer.

Rom. Bid her deuise some meanes to come to shifte this And there she shall at Frier Lawrence Cell

Beshriu'd and married: here is for thy paines.

Nur. No truly sir not a penny.

Rom. Go too, I say you shall.

Nurse

Nur. This afternoon sir? well she shall be there.

Rom. And stay thou good Nurse behind the Abbey wall, Within this houre my man shall be with thee,

And bring thee Cords made like a rackled faire,

Which to the high top gallant of my ioy,

Must be my conuoy in the secret night.

Farewell, be trustie and Ile quite thy paines:

Farewell, commend me to thy Mistresse.

Nur. Now God in heauen blesse thee: haake you sir,

Rom. What faist thou my deare Nurse?

Nur. Is your man secret, did you nere heare say two may keepe counsell putting one away.

Rom. Warrant thee my man as true as Steele.

Nur. We'l sit my Mistresse is the sweetest Lady, Lord,

Lord, when 'twas a little prating thing. O there is a Noble man in Towne one Paris, that would faine lay knife aboard: but she good soule had as leuee a see Toade, a very

Paris is the properer man, but Ile warrant you, when I say so, shee lookes as pale as any clout in the versall world.

Doth not Rosemarie and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. I Nurse, what of that? Both with an R

Nur. A mocker that's the dogsname: R is for the no,

I know it begins with some other letter, and shee hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and Rosemarie, that it would do you good to heare it:

Rom. Commend me to thy Lady.

Nur. I a thousand times. Peter?

Pet. Anon.

Nur. Before and apace.

Exit Nurse and Peter.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. The clocke strooke nine, when I did send the Nurse,

In halfe an houre she promised to returne, perchance she cannot meete him: that's not so:

Oh she is lame, Loues Herauld should be thoughts,

Which ten times faster glides then the Sunnes beames,

Driving backe shadowes ouer lowring hills:

Therefore do nimble Pinion'd Doves draw Loue,

And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings:

Now is the Sun vpon the highmost hill

Of this daies iourney, and from nine till twelue,

I three long houres, yet she is not come.

Had she affections and warme youthfull blood,

She would be as swift in motion as a ball,

My words would bandy her to my sweete Loue,

And his to me, but old folkes,

Many faime as they were dead,

Vnwieldie, slow, heavy, and pale as lead, and me I

O God she comes, O hony Nurse what newes?

Enter Nurse.

Jul. Hast thou met with him? send thy man away.

Nur. Peter stay at the gate.

Jul. Now good sweet Nurse?

Nur. Lord, why lookest thou sad?

Jul. Though newes be sad, yet tell them merrily.

Nur. If good thou shalt the musicke of sweet newes,

By playing it to me, with so fower a face,

How my bones ache, what a iaine haue I had?

Jul. I would thou had'st my bones, and I thy newes:

Nur. Nay come I pray thee speake, good good Nurse speake.

Jul. Iesu what hast thou said? can you not stay a while?

Nur. Do you not see that I am out of breath?

Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast breath

To lay to me, that thou art out of breath?

Nur. The excuse that thou dost make in this delay,

Is longer then the tale thou dost excuse.

Is thy newes good or bad? answer to that,

Say either, and Ile stay the circumstance:

Let me be satisfied, ift good or bad?

Nur. Well, you haue made a simple choice, you know not how to chuse a man: Romeo, no not he though his face be better then any mans, yet his legs excels all mens, and for a hand, and a foote, and a body, though they be not to be talkt on, yet they are past compare: he is not the flower of curtesie, but Ile warrant him as gentle a Lambe: go thy waies wench, serue God, What haue you din'd at home?

Jul. No no: but all this this did I know before

What saies he of our marriage? what of that?

Nur. Lord how my head akes, what a head haue I?

It beates as it would fall in twenty peeces.

My backe a tother side to my backe, my backe:

Bethrew your heart for sending me about

To catch my death with iawning vp and downe.

Jul. Hark! am I forie that that thou art so well?

Sweet sweet, sweet Nurse, tell me what saies my Lotie?

Nur. Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman,

And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome,

And I warrant a vertuous: where is your Mother?

Jul. Where is my Mother?

Why she is within, where should she be?

How odly thou replist!

Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman:

Where is your Mother?

Nur. O Gods Lady deare,

Are you so hot? marrie come vp I trow,

Is this the Poulis for my aking bones?

Henceforward do your messages your selfe.

Jul. Heere's such a colic, come what saies Romeo?

Nur. Have you got leaue to go to shrifte to day?

Jul. I haue.

Nur. Then high you hence to Frier Lawrence Cell,

There stales a Husband to make you a wife:

Now comes the wanton blond vp in your cheekes,

Their be in Scarlet straight at any newes:

Hie you to Church, I must an other way,

To fetch a Ladder by the which your Loue

Must climde a birds nest Soone when it is darke:

I am the drudge, and toile in your delight:

But you shall beare the burthen soone at night:

Go Ile to dinner, hie you to the Cell.

Jul. He to high Fortune, honest Nurse, farewell. Exit Nurse.

Enter Frier and Romeo.

Fri. So smile the heauens vpon this holy act,

That after houres, with sorrow chide vs not.

Rom. Amen, amen, but come what sorrow can,

It cannot counteruail the exchange of ioy:

That one short minute giues me in her sight:

Do thou but close our hands with holy words,

Then Loue-dououring death do what he dare,

It is enough, I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights haue violent endes;

And in their triumph die like fire and powder;

Which as they kisse consume. The sweetest honey

Is loathsome in his owne deliciousnesse,

And in the taste confounds the appetite.

Therefore Loue moderately, long Loue doth so,

Too swift arriues as tardie as too slow.

Enter Juliet.

Here comes the Lady. Oh so light a foot

Will nere weare out the euerslasting flint,

A Louer may bestride the Gossamours,
That ydles in the wanton Summer ayre,
And yet not fall, so light is vanitie.

Jul. Good euen to my ghostly Confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thanke thee Daughter for vs both.

Jul. As much to him, else in his thanks too much.

Fri. Ah Juliet, if the measure of thy ioy
Be heapt like mine, and that thy skill be more
To blason it, then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbour ayre, and let rich musickes tongue,
Vnfold the imagin'd happinesse that both
Receiue in either, by this deere encounter.

Jul. Conceit more rich in matter then in words,
Brags of his substance, not of Ornament:
They are but beggers that can count their worth,
But my true Loue is growne to such such excessse,
I cannot sum vp some of halfe my wealth.

Fri. Come, come with me, & we will make short worke,
For by your leaues, you shall not stay alone,
Till holy Church incorporate two in one.

Enter Mercutio, Benuolio, and men.

Ben. I pray thee good Mercutio lets retire,
The day is hot, the *Capulet*s abroad:
And if we meet, we shal not scape a brawle, for now these hot dayes, is the mad blood stirring.

Mer. Thou art like one of these fellowes, that when he enters the confines of a Tauerne, claps me his Sword vpon the Table, and sayes, God send me no need of thee: and by the operation of the second cup, drawes him on the Drawer, when indeed there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a Fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Iacke in thy mood, as any in Italie: and as soon moued to be moodie, and as soone moodie to be mou'd.

Ben. And what too?

Mer. Nay, and there were two such, we should haue none shortly, for one would kill the other: thou, why thou wilt quarrell with a man that hath a haire more, or a haire lesse in his beard, then thou hast: thou wilt quarrell with a man for cracking Nuts, hauing no other reason, but because thou hast hairell eyes: what eye, but such an eye, would spee out such a quarrell? thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egge is full of meat, and yet thy head hath bin beaten as addle as an egge for quarreling: thou hast quarrel'd with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy Dog that hath laine asleepe in the Sun. Didst thou not fall out with a Tailor for wearing his new Doub-let before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old Riband, and yet thou wilt Tutor me from quarrelling?

Ben. And I were so apt to quarrell as thou art, any man should buy the Fee-simple of my life, for an houre and a quarter.

Mer. The Fee-simple? O simple.

Enter Tybalt, Petruchio, and others.

Ben. By my head here comes the *Capulet*s.

Mer. By my heele I care not.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speake to them.
Gentlemen, Good den, a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of vs couple it with something, make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You shall find me apt enough to that sir, and you will giue me occasion.

Mercus. Could you not take some occasion without giuing?

Tyb. Mercutio thou comfort'st with Romeo.

Mer. Comfort? what dost thou make vs Minstrels? & thou make Minstrels of vs, looke to heare nothing but discords: here's my fiddlestick, heere's that shall make you daunce. Come consort.

Ben. We talke here in the publike haunt of men:
Either withdraw vnto some private place,
Or reason coldly of your greiuances:
Or else depart, here all eyes gaze on vs.

Mer. Mens eyes were made to looke, and let them gaze,
I will not budge for no mans pleasure I.

Enter Romeo.

Tyb. Well peace be with you sir, here comes my man.
Mer. But he be hang'd sir if he weare your Livery,
Marry go before to field, heele be your follower,
Your worship in that sense, may call him man.

Tyb. Romeo, the loue I beare thee, can afford
No better terme then this: Thou art a Villaine.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I haue to loue thee,
Doth much excuse the appertaining rage
To such a greeting: Villaine am I none;
Therefore farewell, I see thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries
That thou hast done me, therefore turne and draw.

Rom. I do protest I neuer iniur'd thee,
But lou'd thee better then thou canst deuise:
Till thou shalt know the reason of my loue,
And so good Capulet, which name I tender
As dearly as my owne, be satisfied.

Mer. O calme, dishonourable, vile submission!
Alla stuccho carries it away.

Tybalt, you Rat-catcher, will you walke?

Tyb. What woulds thou haue with me?

Mer. Good King of Cats, nothing but one of your nine liues, that I meane to make bold withall, and as you shall vse me hereafter dry beate the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your Sword out of his Pilcher by the eares? Make hast, least mine be about your eares ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you.

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy Rapier vp.

Mer. Come sir, your Passado.

Rom. Draw Benuolio, beat downe their weapons:

Gentlemen, for shame forbear this outrage,

Tybalt, Mercutio, the Prince expressly hath

Forbidden bandying in Verona streetes.

Hold Tybalt, good Mercutio.

Exit Tybalt.

Mer. I am hurt.

A plague a both the Houses, I am sped:

Is he gone and hath nothing?

Ben. What art thou hurt?

Mer. I, I, a scratch, a scratch, marry 'tis inough,

Where is my Page? go Villaine fetch a Surgeon.

Rom. Courage man, the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No: 'tis not so deepe as a well, nor so wide as a Church doore, but 'tis inough, 'twill serue: aske for me tomorrow, and you shall find me a graue man. I am pepper'd

I warrant, for this world: a plague a both your houses.
What, a Dog, a Rat, a Mouse, a Cat to scratch a man to death: a Braggart, a Rogue, a Villaine, that fights by the booke of Arithmetike, why the deuile came you be-twene vs? I was hurt vnder your arme.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Helpe me into some house Benuolio,

Or I shall faint: a plague a both your houses.

They haue made wormes meat of me,

I haue it, and soundly to your Houses.

Rem. This Gentleman the Princes neere Alie,

My very Friend hath got his mortall hurt.

To my behalfe, my reputation stain'd

With *Tybalt*s flander, Tybalt that an houre

Hath bene my Cozin: O Sweet Juliet,

Thy Beauty hath made me Effeminate,

And in my temper softned Valours Steele.

Enter Benuolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, braue Mercutio's is dead,

That Gallant spirit hath aspir'd the Cloudes,

Which too vntimely here did scorne the earth.

Rom. This daies blacke Fate, on mo daies doth depend,

This but begins, the wo others must end.

Enter Tybalt.

Ben. Here comes the Furious Tybalt batke againe:

Rom. He gon in triumph, and Mercutio laine?

Away to heauen respectiue Lenitie,

And fire and Fury, be my condole now.

Now Tybalt take the Villaine backe againe

That late thou gau'st me, for *Mercutio*s soule

Is but a little way aboue our heads,

Staying for thine to keepe him companie:

Either thou or I, or both, must goe with him.

Tyb. Thou wretched Boy that didst comfort him here,

Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This shall determine that.

They fight. Tybalt falls.

Ben. Romeo, away be gone:

The Citizens are vp, and Tybalt laine,

Stand not amaz'd, the Prince will Doome thee death

If thou art taken: hence, be gone, away.

Rom. O I am Fortunes foole.

Ben. Why dost thou stay?

Exit Romeo.

Enter Citizens.

Citi. Which way ran he that kild Mercutio?

Tybalt that Murtherer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

Citi. Vp sir go with me:

I charge thee in the Princes names obey.

Enter Prince, old Montague, Capulet, their

Wines and all.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this Fray?

Ben. O Noble Prince, I can discouer all

The vnluckie Mannage of this fatall brall:

There lies the man laine by young Romeo,

That slew thy kinsman braue Mercutio.

Cap. Wi. Tybalt, my Cozin? O my Brothers Child,

O Prince, O Cozin, Husband, O the blood is spild

Of my deare kinsman, Prince as thou art true,

For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague.

O Cozin, Cozin,

Prin. Benuolio, who began this Fray?

Ben. Tybalt here laine, whom Romeo's hand did slay,

Romeo that spoke him faire, bid him be thinke

How nice the Quarrell was, and vrg'd withall

Your high displeasure: all this vttered,

With gentle breath, calme looke, knees humbly bow'd

Could not take truce with the vnruely spleene

Of *Tybalt*s deafe to peace, but that he Tilts

With Peircing Steele at bold Mercutio's breast,

Who all as hot, turnes deadly point to point,

And with a Martiall scorne, with one hand beares

Cold death aside, and with the other sends

It back to Tybalt, whose dextery

Retorts it: Romeo he cries aloud,

Hold Friends, Friends part, and swifter then his tongue,

His aged arme, beats downe their fatal points,

And twixt them rushes, vnderneath whose arme,

An enuious thrust from Tybalt, hit the life,

Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled:

But by and by comes backe to Romeo,

Who had but newly entertained Reuenge,

And too't they goe like lightning, for ere I

Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt laine:

And as he fell, did Romeo turne and flie:

This is the truth, or let Benuolio die.

Cap. Wi. He is a kinsman to the *Montague*s:

Affection makes him false, he speaks not true:

Some twenty of them fought in this blacke strife,

And all those twenty could but kill one life:

I beg for Iustice, which thou Prince must giue:

Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not liue.

Prin. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio,

Who now the price of his deare blood doth owe.

Cap. Nor Romeo Prince, he was *Mercutio*s Friend,

His fault concludes, but what the law should end,

The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And for that offence,

Immediately we doe exile him hence:

I haue an interest in your hearts proceeding:

My blood for your rude brawles doth lie a bleeding.

But lie Americ you with so strong a fine,

That you shall all repent the losse of mine.

It will be deafe to pleading and excuses,

Nor teares, nor prayers shall purchase our abuses:

Therefore vse none, let Romeo hence in haste,

Else when he is found, that houre is his last:

Bear hence this body, and attend our will:

Mercy not Murders, pardoning those that kill.

Exit.

Enter Juliet alone.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery footed steedes,

Towards *Phoebe*s lodging, such a Wagoner

As Phaeton would whip you to the west,

And bring in Cloudie night immediately.

Spred thy close Curtaine Loue-performing night,

That run-aways eyes may weeke, and Romeo

Leape to these armes, vntalk of and vnseene,

Louers can see to doe their Amorous rights,

And by their owne Beauties: or if Loue be blind,

It best agrees with night: come ciuill night,

Thou sober fured Matron all in blacke,

And learne me how to loose a winning match,

Plaid for a paire of Rainelesse Maidenhoods,

Hood my vniuan'd blood bayting in my Cheekes,

With thy Blacke mantle, till strange Loue grow bold,

Thinke true Loue acted simple modestie:

Come night, come Romeo, come thou day in night,

For thou wilt lie vpon the wings of night

Whiter then new Snow vpon a Ravens backe:

Come gentle night, come louing blackebrow'd night,

Giue me my Romeo, and when I shall die,

Take him and cut him out in little starres,

And he will make the Face of heauen so fine,

That all the world will be in Loue with night;

And pay no worship to the Garish Sun,

O I haue bought the Mansion of a Loue;

But not posselt it, and though I am fold,

Not yet enioy'd, so tedious is this day,

As is the night before some Festiuall,

To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not wear them, O here comes my Nurse:

Enter Nurse with cords.

And she brings newes and euery tongue that speaks
But Romeo, name, speaks heavenly eloquence:
Now Nurse, what newes? what hast thou there?

The Cords that Romeo bid thee fetch?

Nur. I, the Cords.

Jul. Ay me, what newes?

Why dost thou wring thy hands?

Nur. A welady, hee's dead, hee's dead,

We are vndone Lady, we are vndone.

Alacke the day, hee's gone, hee's kil'd, hee's dead.

Jul. Can heauen be so enuious?

Nur. Romeo can,

Though heauen cannot, O Romeo, Romeo,

Who euer would haue thought it Romeo.

Jul. What diuill art thou,

That dost torment me thus?

This torture should be roar'd in dismall hell,

Hath Romeo slaine himselfe? say thou but I,

And that bare vowell I shall poyson more

Then the death-darting eye of Cockatrice,

I am not I, if there be such an I.

Or those eyes shot, that makes thee answer I:

If he be slaine say I, or if not, no.

Briefe, sounds, determine of my weale or wo.

Nur. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,

God saue the marke, here on his manly brest,

A piteous Coarse, a bloody piteous Coarse:

Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaw'd in blood,

All in gore blood, I sounded at the fight.

Jul. O breake my heart,

Poore Banckrout breake at once,

To prison eyes, nere looke on libertie.

Vile earth to earth resigne, end motion here,

And thou and Romeo presse on heauie beere.

Nur. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best Friend I had:

O curteous Tybalt honest Gentleman,

That euer I should liue to see thee dead.

Jul. What storme is this that blowes so contrarie?

Is Romeo slauhtred? and is Tybalt dead?

My dearest Cozen, and my dearer Lord:

Then dreadfull Trumpet found the generall doome,

For who is liuing, if those two are gone?

Nur. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banished,

Romeo that kil'd him, he is banished.

Jul. O God!

Did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's blood

It did, it did, alas the day, it did.

Nur. O Serpent heart, bid with a flowring face.

Jul. Did euer Dragon keepe so faire a Caue?

Beautiful Tyrant, fiend Angelicall:

Rauenous Dove-feather'd Rauon,

Woluisht-rauening Lambe,

Dispers'd substance of Diuinest show:

Iust opposite to what thou iustly seem'st,

A diuine Saint, an Honourable Villaine:

O Nature! what had'st thou to doe in hell,

When thou did'st bower the spirit of a fiend

In mortall paradise of such sweet flesh?

Was euer booke containing such vile matter

So fairely bound? O that deceit should dwell

In such a gorgeous Pallace.

Nur. There's no trust, no faith, no honestie in men,

All perjur'd, all forsworne, all naught, all dissemblers,

Ah where's my man? giue me some Aqua-vitæ?
These griefes, these woes, these sorrowes make me old.
Shame come to Romeo.

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue

For such a wish, he was not borne to shame:

Vpon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;

For 'tis a throane where Honour may be Crown'd

Sole Monarch of the vniuersall earth:

O what a beast was I to chide him?

Nur. Will you speake well of him,

That kil'd your Cozen?

Jul. Shall I speake ill of him that is my husband?

Ah poore my Lord, what tongue shall smooth thy name,

When I thy three houres wife haue mangled it?

But wherefore Villaine did'st thou kill my Cozin?

That Villaine Cozin would haue kil'd my husband:

Backe foolish teares, backe to your native spring,

Your tributarie drops belong to woe,

Which you mistaking offer vp to ioy:

My husband liues that Tibalt would haue slaine,

And Tibalt dead that would haue slaine my husband:

All this is comfort, wherefore weepe I then?

Some words there was worser then Tybalt's death

That murdered me, I would forget it feine,

But oh, it presses to my memory,

Like damned guilty deedes to sinners minds,

Tybalt is dead and Romeo banished:

That banished, that one word banished,

Hath slaine ten thousand Tibalts: Tibalt's death

Was woe inough if it had ended there:

Or if slower woe delights in fellowship,

And needly will be rankt with other griefes,

Why followed not when she said Tibalt's dead,

Thy Father or thy Mother, nay or both,

Which moderne lamentation might haue mou'd,

But which a rere-ward following Tybalt's death

Romeo is banished to speake that word,

Is Father, Mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,

All slaine, all dead: Romeo is banished,

There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,

In that words death, no words can that woe sound,

Where is my Father and my Mother Nurse?

Nur. Weeping and wailing ouer Tybalt's Coarse,

Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wash they his wounds with tears: mine shall be spent

When theirs are drie for Romeo's banishment.

Take vp those Cordes, poore ropes you are beguil'd,

Both you and I for Romeo's exild:

He made you for a high-way to my bed,

But I a Maid, die Maiden widowed.

Come Cord, come Nurse, Ile to my wedding bed,

And death not Romeo, take my Maiden head.

Nur. Hie to your Chamber, Ile find Romeo

To comfort you, I wor well where he is:

Harke ye your Romeo will be heere at night,

Ile to him, he is hid at Lawrence Cell.

Jul. O find him, giue this Ring to my true Knight,

And bid him come, to take his last farewell.

Enter Friar and Romeo.

Fri. Romeo come forth,

Come forth thou fearfull man,

Affliction is enamor'd of thy parts:

And thou art wedded to calamitie.

Rom. Father what newes?

What

What is the Princes Doome?

What sorrow craues acquaintance at my hand,

That I yet know not?

Fri. Too familiar

Is my deare Sonne with such sowre Company:

I bring thee tydings of the Princes Doome.

Rom. What lesse then Doomesday,

Is the Princes Doome?

Fri. A gentler iudgement vanish from his lips,

Not bodies death, but bodies banishment.

Rom. Ha, banishment? be mercifull, say death:

For exile hath more terror in his looke,

Much more then death: do not say banishment.

Fri. Here from Verona art thou banished:

Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walles,

But Purgatorie, Torture, hell it selfe:

Hence banished, is banish'd from the world,

And worlds exile is death. Then banished,

Is death, misteare'd, calling death banished,

Thou cut'st my head off with a golden Axe,

And smilest vpon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O deadly sin, O rude vnthankfulnesse!

Thy fault our Law calles death, but the kind Prince

Taking thy part, hath rusht aside the Law,

And turn'd that blacke word death, to banishment.

This is deare mercy, and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'Tis Torture and not mercy, heauen is here

Where Juliet liues, and euery Cat and Dog,

And little Mouse, euery vnworthy thing

Liue here in Heauen and may looke on her,

But Romeo may not. More Validitie,

More Honourable state, more Courtship liues

In carrion Flies, then Romeo: they may leaze

On the white wonder of deare Juliet's hand,

And steale immortall blessing from her lips,

Who euen in pure and vestall modestie

Still blush, as thinking their owne kisses sin.

This may Flies doe, when I from this must flie,

And saist thou yet, that exile is not death?

But Romeo may not, hee is banished.

Had'st thou no poyson mixt, no sharpe ground knife,

No sudden meane of death, though nere so meane,

But banished to kill me? Banished?

O Friar, the damned vfe that word in hell:

Howlings attends it, how hast thou the hart

Being a Diuine, a Ghostly Confessor,

A Sin-Absoluer, and my Friend profest:

To mangle me with that word, banished?

Fri. Then fond Mad man, heare me speake.

Rom. O thou wilt speake againe of banishment.

Fri. Ile giue thee Armour to keepe off that word,

Aduersities sweete milke, Philosophie,

To comfort thee, though thou art banished.

Rom. Yet banished? hang vp Philosophie:

Vnlesse Philosophie can make a Juliet,

Displant a Towne, reuerse a Princes Doome,

It helpes not, it preuailes not, talke no more.

Fri. O then I see, that Mad men haue no cares.

Rom. How should they,

When wisemen haue no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispaire with thee of thy estate,

Rom. Thou can'st not speake of that I do not feele,

Wert thou as young as Juliet my Loue:

An houre but married, Tybalt murdered,

Doting like me, and like me banished,

Then mightest thou speake,

Then mightest thou teare thy hayre,

And fall vpon the ground as I doe now,

Taking the measure of an vnmade graue.

Enter Nurse, and knockes.

Frier. Arise one knockes,

Good Romeo hide thy selfe.

Rom. Not I,

Vnlesse the breath of Harticke groanes

Mist-like infold me from the search of eyes.

Knocke

Fri. Harke how they knocke:

(Who's there) Romeo arise,

Thou wilt be taken, stay a while, stand vp:

Knocke.

Run to my study: by and by, Gods will

What simplenesse is this: I come, I come.

Knocke.

Who knocks so hard?

Whence come you? what's your will?

Enter Nurse.

Nur. Let me come in,

And you shall know my errand:

I come from Lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome then.

Nur. O holy Frier, O tell me holy Frier,

Where's my Ladies Lord? where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground,

With his owne teares made drunke.

Nur. O he is euen in my Mistresse case,

Iust in her case. O wofull sympathy:

Pititious predicament, euen so lies she,

Blubbring and weeping, weeping and blubbring,

Stand vp, stand vp, stand and you be a man,

For Juliet's sake, for her sake rise and stand:

Why should you fall into so deepe an O.

Rom. Nurse.

Nur. Ah sir, ah sir, deaths the end of all.

Rom. Speake'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?

Doth not she thinke me an old Murtherer,

Now I haue stain'd the Childhood of our ioy,

With blood remoued, but little from her owne?

Where is she? and how doth she? and what sayes

My conceal'd Lady to our conceal'd Loue?

Nur. Oh she sayes nothing sir, but weeps and weeps,

And now falls on her bed, and then starts vp,

And Tybalt calls, and then on Romeo cries,

And then downe falls againe.

Rom. As if that name shot from the dead leuell of a Gun,

Did murder her, as that names curst hand

Murdred her kinsman. Oh tell me Frier, tell me,

In what vile part of this Anatomie

Doth my name lodge? Tell me, that I may sacke

The hateful Mansion.

Since birth, and heaven and earth, all three do meete
In thee at once, which thou at once wouldst looke.
Fie, fie, thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit,
Which like a Viceroy bound'st in all the world
And v'st none in that true v'st indeed,
Which should bedecke thy shape, thy love, thy wit:
Thy Noble shape, is but a forme of waxe,
Digressing from the Valour of a man,
Thy deare Loue is borne but hallow periurie,
Killing that Loue which thou hast vow'd to cherish.
Thy wit, that Ornament, to shape and Loue,
Mishapen in the conduct of them both:
Like powder in a skilless Souldiers flaske,
Is set a fire by thine owne ignorance,
And thou dismembred with thine owne defence.
What rowse thee man, thy Juliet is aliue,
For whose deare sake thou wast but lately dead.
There art thou happy. Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou slewest Tybalt, there art thou happy.
The law that threatned death became thy Friend,
And turn'd it to exile, there art thou happy.
A packe or blessing light vpon thy backe,
Happinesse Courts thee in her best array,
But like a mishapen and fullen wench,
Thou putt'st vp thy Fortune and thy Loue:
Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.
Goe get thee to thy Loue as was decreed,
Ascend her Chamber, hence and comfort her:
But looke thou stay not till the watch be set,
For then thou canst not passe to Mantua,
Where thou shalt liue till we can finde a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your Friends,
Beg pardon of thy Prince, and call thee backe,
With twenty hundred thousand times more ioy
Then thou went'st forth in lamentation.
Goe before Nurse, commend me to thy Lady,
And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heauy sorrow makes them apt vnto.
Romeo is coming.

Nur. O Lord, I could haue staid here all night,
To heare good counsell: oh what learning is!
My Lord he tell my Lady you will come.
Rom. Do so, and bid my Sweete prepare to chide.
Nur. Heere sir, a Ring she bid me giue you sir:
Hie you, make hast, for it growes very late.
Rom. How well my comfort is reui'd by this.
Fri. Go hence,
Goodnight, and here stands all your state:
Either be gone before the watch be set,
Or by the breake of day disguis'd from hence,
Soiourne in Mantua, he find out your man,
And he shall signifie from time to time,
Every good hap to you, that chaunces heere:
Giue me thy hand, 'tis late, farewell, goodnight.
Rom. But that a ioy past ioy, calls out on me,
It were a griefe, so briefe to part with thee:
Farewell.

Enter old Capulet, his Wife and Paris.

Cap. Things haue fallne out sir so vnluckily,
That we haue had no time to moue our Daughter:
Looke you, she Lou'd her kinsman Tybalt dearely,
And so did I. Well, we were borne to die:
'Tis very late, she's not come downe to night:
I promise you, but for your company,

I would haue bin a bed an houre ago.

Par. These times of wo, afford no times to woo:
Madam goodnight, commend me to your Daughter.

Lady. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow,
To night, she is mew'd vp to her heauinesse.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
Of my Childes loue: I thinke she will be rul'd
In all respects by me: nay more, I doubt it not.
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed,
Acquaint her here, of my Sonne Paris Loue,
And bid her, marke you me, on Wednesday next,
But fofte, what day is this?

Par. Monday my Lord.

Cap. Monday, ha ha well Wednesday is too soone,
A Thursday let it be: A Thursday tell her,
She shall be married to this Noble Earle:
Will you be ready? do you like this hast?
Weele keepe no great adoe, a Friend or two,
For harke you, Tybalt being slaine so late,
It may be thought we held him carelesly,
Being our kinsman, if we reuell much:
Therefore weele haue some halfe a dozen Friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

Paris. My Lord,

I would that Thursday were to-morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone, a Thursday, be it then:
Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her wife, against this wedding day.
Farewell my Lord, light to my Chamber hee,
Afore me, it is so late, that we may call it early by and by,
Goodnight.

Enter Romeo and Juliet aloft.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? It is not yet neere day:
It was the Nightingale, and not the Larke,
That pierc'd the searefull hollow of thine eare,
Nightly she sings on yond Pomegranet tree,
Beloeue me Loue, it was the Nightingale.

Rom. It was the Larke the Herald of the Morn:
No Nightingale: looke Loue what enuious fireakes
Do lace the feuring Cloudes in yonder East:
Nights Candles are burnt out, and second day
Stands tipto on the mistie Mountaines tops,
I must be gone and liue, or stay and die.

Jul. You'd light is not daylight, I know it I:
It is some Meteor that the Sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a Torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua.

Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone,
Rom. Let me be true, let me be put to death,
I am content, so thou wilt haue it so.

He say you gray is not the mornings eye,
'Tis but the pale reflexe of Cymbria brow.
Nor that is not Larke whose noates do beate
The vaulty heauen so high about our heads,
I haue more care to stay, then will to go:
Come death and welcome, Juliet wills it so.

How oft my soule, lets talke, it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is, he hence be gone away:

It is the Larke that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh Discords, and vnpleasing Sharps.
Some say the Larke makes sweete Diuision;
This doth not so: for she diuiderth vs.
Some say, the Larke and loathed Toad change eyes,
O now I would they had chang'd voyces too:

Since

Since arme from arme that voyce doth vs affray,
Hunting thee hence, with Hunt-svp to the day,
O now be gone, more light and idly growes.
Rom. More light & light, more darke & darke our woes.

Enter Madam and Nurse.

Nur. Madam.

Jul. Nurse.

Nur. Your Lady Mother is coming to your chamber,
The day is broke, be wary, looke about.

Jul. Then window let day in, and let life out.

Rom. Farewell, farewell, one kisse and Ile descend.

Jul. Art thou gone for Loue, Lord, ay Husband, Friend,

I must heare from thee euery day in the houre,

For in a minute there are many dayes,

O by this count I shall be much in yeares,

Ere I againe behold my Romeo.

Rom. Farewell:

I will omit no opportunitie,

That may conuey my greetings Loue, to thee.

Jul. O thinkest thou we shall euer meet againe?

Rom. I doubt it not, and all these woes shall serue

For sweete discourses in our time to come.

Juliet. O God! I haue an ill Diuining soule,

Me thinks I see thee now, thou art so lowe,

As one dead in the bottom of a Tombe,

Either my eye-sight failes, or thou look'st pale.

Rom. And trust me Loue, in my eye so do you:

Drie sorrow drinkes our blood. Adue, adue.

Jul. O Fortune, Fortune, all men call thee fickle,

If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him

That is renown'd for faith? be fickle Fortune:

For then I hope thou wilt not keepe him long,

But send him backe.

Enter Mother.

Lad. Ho Daughter, are you vp?

Jul. Who ist that calls? Is it my Lady Mother.

Is she not downe so late, or vp so early?

What vnaccustom'd cause procures her hither?

Lad. Why how now Juliet?

Jul. Madam I am not well.

Lad. Euen more weeping for your Cozins death?

What wilt thou wash him from his graue with teares?

And if thou could'st, thou could'st not make him liue:

Therefore haue done, some griefe shewes much of Loue,

But much of griefe, shewes still some want of wit.

Jul. Yet let me weepe, for such a feeling losse.

Lad. So shall you feele the losse, but not the Friend

Which you weepe for.

Jul. Feeling to the losse,

I cannot chuse but euer weepe the Friend.

Lad. Well, Griefe, thou weep'st not so much for his death,

As that the Villaine liues which slaughter'd him.

Jul. What Villaine, Madam?

Lad. That same Villaine Romeo.

Jul. Villaine and he, be many Miles assunder:

God pardon, I doe with all my heart:

And yet no man like he, doth grieue my heart.

Lad. That is because the Traitor liues.

Jul. I Madam from the reach of these my hands

Would none but I might venge my Cozins death.

Lad. We will haue vengeance for it, feare thou not.

Then weepe no more, Ile send to one in Mantua,

Where that same banisht Run-agate doth liue,

Shall giue him such an vnaccustom'd dram

That he shall soone keepe Tybalt company:

And then I hope thou wilt be satisfied.

Jul. Indeed I neuer shall be satisfied

With Romeo, till I behold him. Dead

Is my poore heart so for a kinsman vext:

Madam if you could find out but a man

To beare a poyson, I would temper it;

That Romeo should vpon receipt thereof,

Soone sleepe in quiet. O how my heart abhors

To heare him nam'd, and cannot come to him;

To wreake the Loue I bore my Cozin,

Vpon his body that hath slaughter'd him.

Mo. Find thou the meanes, and Ile find such a man.

But now Ile tell thee ioyfull tidings Gyrle.

Jul. And ioy comes well, in such a needie time;

What are they, beseech your Ladyship?

Mo. Well, well, thou hast a carefull Father Child:

One who to put thee from thy heauinesse,

Hath sort'd out a sudden day of ioy,

That thou expects not, nor I lookt not for.

Jul. Madam in happy time, what day is this?

Mo. Marry my Child, early next Thursday morn,

The gallant, young, and Noble Gentleman,

The Countie Paris at Saint Peters Church,

Shall happily make thee a ioyfull Bride.

Jul. Now by Saint Peters Church, and Peter too,

He shall not make me there a ioyfull Bride;

I wonder at this hast, that I must wed

Ere he that should be Husband comes to woo:

I pray you tell my Lord and Father Madam,

I will not marrie yet, and when I doe, I sweare

It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate

Rather then Paris. These are newes indeed.

Mo. Here comes your Father, tell him so your selfe,

And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the Sun sets, the earth doth drizzle daew

But for the Sunset of my Brothers Sonne,

It raines downright.

How now? A Conduit Gyrle, what still in teares?

Euen more showing in one little body?

Thou counterfais a Barke, a Sea Wind

For still thy eyes, which I may call the Sea,

Do ebbe and flow with teares, the Barke thy body is Saying in this fast floud, the windes thy sighes;

Who raging with the teares and they with them,

Without a sudden calme will ouer set

Thy tempest tossed body. How now wife?

Haue you deliuered to her our decree?

Lady. I sir;

But she will none, she giues you thanks;

I would the foole were married to her graue.

Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you wife,

How, will she none? doth she not giue vs thanks?

Is she not proud? doth she not count her blest?

Vnworthy as she is, that we haue wrought

So worthy a Gentleman, to be her Bridegrome

Jul. Not proud you haue;

But thankfull that you haue:

Proud can I neuer be of what I haue;

But thankfull euen for hate, that is meant Loue.

Cap. How now?

How now? Chopt Logicke? what is this?

Proud, and I thanke you, and I thanke you not;

Thanke me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,

But settle your fine ioints 'gainst Thursday next,

To

To go with Paris to Saint Peters Church:
Or I will drag thee on a Hurdle thither.
Out you greene sicknesse carrion, out you baggage,
You tallow face.

Lady. Fie, fie, what are you mad?

Jul. Good Father, I beseech you on my knees
Heare me with patience, but to speake a word.

Fa. Hang thee young baggage, disobedient wretch,
I tell thee what, get thee to Church a Thursday,
Or neuer after looke me in the face.
Speake not, reply not, do not answere me.
My fingers itch, wife: we scarce thought vs blest,
That God had lent vs but this onely Child,
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we haue a curse in hauing her:
Out on her Hilding.

Nur. God in heauen, blesse her,
You are too blame my Lord to rate her so.

Fa. And why my Lady wisdome hold your tongue,
Good Prudence, smatter with your gossip, go.

Nur. I speake no treason,

Father, O Godigoden,
May not one speake?

Fa. Peace you mumbling foole,
Vtter your grauitie ore a Gossips bowles
For here we need it not.

La. You are too hot.

Fa. Gods bread, it makes me mad:

Day, night, houre, ride, time, worke, play,

Alone in companie, still my care hath bin

To haue her matcht, and hauing now prouided

A Gentleman of Noble Parentage,

Of faire Demeanes, Youthfull, and Nobly Allied,

Stuft as they say with Honourable parts,

Proporcion'd as ones thought would with a man,

And then to haue a wretched puling foole,

A whining mammet, in her Foraynes tender,

To answer, Ile not wed, I cannot Loue:

I am too young, I pray you pardon me,

But, and you will not wed, Ile pardon you:

Graze where you will, you shall not heuse with me:

Looke too't, thinke on't, I do not vlcio to iest.

Thursday is neere, lay hand on heart, aduise,

And you be mine, Ile giue you to my Friend:

And you be not, hang, beg, starue, die in the streets,

For by my soule, Ile nere acknowledge thee,

Nor what is mine shall neuer do thee good:

Trust too't, betinke you, Ile not be forsworne.

Jul. Is there no pitty sitting in the Cloudes,

That sees into the bottome of my griefe?

O sweet my Mother, canst thou not away,

Delay this marriage for a month, a weeke,

Or if you do not, make the Bridall bed

In that dim Monument where Tybalt lies.

Mo. Talk not to me, for Ile not speake a word,

Do as thou wilt, for I haue done with thee.

Jul. O God!

O Nurse, how shall this be prevented?

My Husband is on earth, my faith in heauen,

How shall that faith returne againe to earth,

Vnlesse that Husband send it from heauen?

By leauing earth? Comfort me, counsaile me,

Hacke, alacke, that heauen should practise stratagems

Vpon so soft a subject as my selfe.

What faith thou hast thou not a word of ioy?

Some comfort, Nurse.

Nur. Faith here it is,

Romeo is banished, and all the world to nothing,

That he dares nere come backe to challenge you:

Or if he do, it needs must be by stealth.

Then since the case so stands as now it doth,

I thinke it best you married with the Countie,

O hee's a Louely Gentleman:

Romeo's a dish-clout to him: an Eagle Madam

Hath not so greene, so quicke, so faire an eye

As Paris hath, beshrow my very heart,

I thinke you are happy in this second match,

For it excels your first: or if it did not,

Your first is dead, or 'twere as good he were,

As liuing here and you no vse of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?

Nur. And from my soule too,

Or else beshrew them both.

Jul. Amen.

Nur. What?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much,

Go in, and tell my Lady I am gone,

Hauing displeas'd my Father, to Lawrence Cell,

To make confession, and to be absolu'd.

Nur. Marrie I will, and this is wisely done.

Jul. Auncient damnation, O most wicked fiend!

It is more sin to wish me thus forsworne,

Or to dispraise my Lord with that same tongue

Which she hath prais'd him with aboue compare,

So many thousand times? Go Countellor,

Thou and my bosom chenchforth shall be twaine,

Ile to the Frier to know his remedie,

If all else faile, my selfe haue power to die.

Enter Frier and Countie Paris.

Fri. On Thursday sir the time is very short.

Par. My Father Capulet will haue it so,

And I am nothing flow to slack his hast.

Fri. You say you do not know the Ladies mind?

Vneuen is the course, I like it not.

Pa. Immoderately she weepes for Tybalts death,

And therefore haue I little talke of Loue.

For Venus smiles not in a house of teares.

Now sir, her Father counts it dangerous

That she doth giue her sorrow so much sway:

And in his wisdom, hafts our marriage,

To stop the inundation of her teares,

Which too much minded by her selfe alone,

May be put from her by societie.

Now doe you know the reason of this hast?

Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.

Looke sir, here comes the Lady towards my Cell.

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my Lady and my wife.

Jul. That may be sir, when I may be a wife.

Par. That may be, must be Loue, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. That's a certaine text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this Father?

Jul. To answere that, I should confesse to you.

Par. Do not denie to him, that you Loue me.

Jul. I will confesse to you that I Loue him.

Par. So will ye, I am sure that you Loue me.

Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price,

Benig spoke behind your backe, then to your face.

Par. Poore soule, thy face is much abus'd with teares.

Jul. The

Jul. The teares haue got small victorie by that:

For it was bad enough before their spight.

Pa. Thou wrong'st it more then teares with that report.

Jul. That is no slander sir, which is a truth,

And what I spake, I spake it to thy face.

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd it.

Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine owne.

Are you at leisure, Holy Father now,

Or shall I come to you at euening Masse?

Fri. My leisure serues me penfull daughter now.

My Lord you must intreat the time alone.

Par. God sheild: I should disturbe Deuotion,

Juliet, on Thursday early will I rowse yee,

Till then adue, and keepe this holy kisse. Exit Paris.

Jul. O shut the doore, and when thou hast done so,

Come weepe with me, past hope, past care, past helpe.

Fri. O Juliet, I already know thy griefe,

It streames me past the compasse of my wits:

I heare thou must and nothing may prorogue it,

On Thursday next be married to this Countie.

Jul. Tell me not Frier that thou hearest of this,

Vnlesse thou tell me how I may prevent it:

If thy wisdom, thou canst giue no helpe,

Do thou but call my resolution wife,

And with his knife, he helpe is presently.

God ioynd my heart, and Romeo's, thou our hands,

And ere this hand by thee to Romeo seal'd,

Shall be the Labell to another Deede,

Or my true heart with trecherous reuolt,

Turne to another, this shall slay them both:

Therefore out of thy long expetien't time,

Giue me some present counsell, or behold

Twixt my extreames and me, this bloody knife

Shall play the vniuersall arbitrator, that,

Which the commission of thy yeares and art,

Could to no issue of true honour bring:

Be not so long to speake, I long to die,

If what thou speakest, speake not of remedie.

Fri. Hold Daughter, I doe pitie a kind of hope,

Which craues as desperate an execution,

As that is desperate which we would prevent.

It rather then to marrie Countie Paris

Thou hast the strength of will to stay thy selfe,

Then is it likely thou wilt vndertake

A thinglike death to chide away this shame,

That coap't with death himselfe, to scape fro it:

And if thou dar'st, Ile giue thee remedie.

Jul. Oh bid me leape, rather then marrie Paris,

From of the Battlements of any Tower,

Or walke in the sunnys waies, or bid me lurke

Where Serpents are: chaine me with roaring Beares

Or hide me nightly in a Charnell house,

Orecovered quite with dead mens rattling bones,

With reekie shankes and yellow chappels skulls:

Or bid me go into a new made graue,

And lide me with a dead man in his graue,

Things that to heare them told, haue made me tremble,

And I will doe it without feare or doubt,

To line an vnstained wife to my sweet Loue.

Fri. Hold then: goe home, be merrie, giue consent,

To marrie Paris: wenday is to morrow,

To morrow night looke that thou lie alone,

Let not thy Nurse be with thee in thy Chamber:

Take thou this Violl being then in bed,

And this distilling liquor drinke thou off,

When presently through all thy veines shall run,

A cold and drowzie humour: for no pulse
Shall keepe his native progresse, but surcease:
No warmth, no breath shall testifie thou liuest,
The Roses in thy lips and cheekes shall fade
To many ashes, the eyes windowes fall
Like death when he shut vp the day of life:
Each part depriu'd of supple gouernment,
Shall stiffe and starke, and cold appeare like death,
And in this borrowed likenesse of shrunke death
Thou shalt continue two and forty houres,
And then awake, as from a pleasant sleepe.
Now when the Bridegroome in the morning comes,
To rowse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then as the manner of our country is,
In thy best Robes vncover'd on the Beere,
Be borne to buriall in thy kindreds graue:
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie,
In the meane time against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my Letters know our drift,
And hither shall he come, and that very night
Shall Romeo beare thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame,
If no inconstant toy nor womanish feare,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Giue me, giue me, O tell not me of feare.

Fri. Hold get you gone, be strong and prosperous:

In this resolve, Ile send a Frier with speed

To Mantua with my Letters to thy Lord.

Is. Loue giue me strength,

And strength shall helpe afford:

Farewell deare father. Exit

Enter Father Capulet, Mother, Nurse, and

Seruing men, two or three.

Cap. So many guests inuite as here are writ,

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning Cookes.

Ser. You shall haue none ill sir, for Ile trie if they can licke their fingers.

Cap. How canst thou trie them so?

Ser. Marrie sir, 'tis an ill Cooke that cannot licke his owne fingers: therefore he that cannot licke his fingers goes not with me.

Cap. Go be gone, we shall be much vn furnisht for this time: what is my Daughter gone to Frier Lawrence?

Nur. I forsooth.

Cap. Well he may chance to do some good on her,

A peeuish selfe-wild harlotry it is.

Enter Juliet.

Nur. See where she comes from shrift

With merrie looke.

Cap. How now my headstrong,

Where haue you bin gadding?

Jul. Where I haue learnt me to repent the sin

Of disobedient opposition:

To you and your behests, and am enioyn'd

By holy Lawrence, to fall prostrate here,

To beg your pardon: pardon I beseech you,

Henceforward I am euer rul'd by you.

Cap. Send for the Countie, goe tell him of this,

Ile haue this knot knit vp to morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthfull Lord at Lawrence Cell,

And gaue him what becomed Loue I might,

Not stepping ore the bounds of modestie.

Cap. Why I am glad on't, this is well, stand vp,

This

This is as it should be, let me see the County:
I marrie go I say, and fetch him hither.

Now afore God, this reuerend holy Frier,
All our whole Cittie is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse will you goe with me into my Closet,
To helpe me sort such needfull ornaments,
As you thinke fit to furnish me to morrow?

Mo. No not till Thursday, there's time inough.

Fa. Go Nurse, go with her,
Weele to Church to morrow.

Exeunt Juliet and Nurse.

Mo. We shall be short in our prouision,
Tis now neere night.

Fa. Tush, I will stirre about,
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee wife:

Go thou to Juliet, helpe to decke vp her,
He not to bed to night, let me alone:

He play the huswife for this once. What ho?

They are all forth, well I will walke my selfe
To Countie Paris, to prepare him vp

Against to morrow, my heart is wondrous light,
Since this same way-ward Gyle is so reclaim'd.

Exeunt Father and Mother.

Enter Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. I those attires are best, but gentle Nurse

I pray thee leaue me to my selfe to night:

For I haue need of many Orysons,

To moue the heauens to smile vpon my state,

Which well thou know'st, is croffe and full of sin.

Enter Mother.

Mo. What are you busie ho? need you my help?

Jul. No Madam, we haue cul'd such necessities

As are behoouefull for our state to morrow:

So please you, let me now be left alone;

And let the Nurse this night sit vp with you,

For I am sure, you haue your hands full all,

In this so sudden businesse.

Mo. Goodnight.

Get thee to bed and rest, for thou hast need.

Jul. Farewell:

God knows when we shall meete againe.

I haue a faint cold feare thrills through my veines,

That almost freezes vp the heate of fire:

He call them backe againe to comfort me.

Nurse, what should the do here?

My dismall Sceane, I needs must act alone:

Come Viall, what if this mixture do not worke at all?

Shall I be married then to morrow morning?

No, no, this shall forbid it. Lie thou there,

What if it be a poyson which the Frier

Subtily hath ministred to haue me dead,

Least in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,

Because he married me before to Romeo?

I feare it is, and yet me thinks it should not,

For he hath still bene tried a holy man.

How, if when I am laid into the Tombe,

I wake before the time that Romeo

Come to redeeme me? There's a fearefull point:

Shall I not then be stifled in the Vault?

To whose foule mouth no healthsome ayre breaths in,

And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes.

Or if I liue, is it not very like,

The horrible conceit of death and night,

Together with the terror of the place,

As in a Vaulte, an ancient receptacle,

Where for these many hundred yeeres the bones

Of all my buried Aunccestors are packt,

Where bloody Tybalt, yet but greene in earth,

Lies festring in his shrow'd, where as they say,

At some houres in the night, Spirits resort:

Alacke, alacke, is it not like that I

So early waking, what with loathsome smells,

And shrieks like Mandrakes torne out of the earth,

That liuing mortalls hearing them, run mad,

O if I walke, shall I not be distraught,

Inuironed with all these hideous feares,

And madly play with my forefathers ioynts?

And plucke the mangled Tybalt from his shrow'd?

And in this rage, with some great kinmans bone,

As (with a club) dash out my desperate braines.

O looke, me thinks I see my Cozins Ghost,

Seeking out Romeo that did spit his body

Vpon my Rapier's point: stay Tybalt, stay;

Romeo, Romeo, Romeo, here's drinke: I drinke to thee.

Enter Lady of the house, and Nurse.

Lady. Hold,

Take these keies, and fetch more spices Nurse.

Nur. They call for Dates and Quinces in the Pastrie.

Enter old Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir,

The second Cocke hath Crow'd,

The Curfew Bell hath rung, 'tis three a clocke:

Looke to the bak't meates; good Angelica,

Spare not for cost.

Nur. Go you Cot-queane, go,

Get you to bed, faith youle be sicke to morrow

For this nights watching.

Cap. No not a whit: what? I haue watcht ere now

All night for lesse cause, and nere bene sicke.

La. I you haue bin a Mouse-hunt in your time,

But I will watch you from such watching now.

Exit Lady and Nurse.

Cap. A iecalous hood, a iecalous hood,

Now fellow, what there?

Enter three or foure with spits, and logs, and baskets.

Fel. Things for the Cooke sir, but I know not what.

Cap. Make hast, make hast, firrah, fetch drier Logs.

Call Peter, he will shew thee where they are.

Fel. I haue a head sir, that will find out logs,

And neuer trouble Peter for the matter.

Cap. Masse and well said, a merrie horsen, ha,

Thou shalt be loggerhead; good Father, 'tis day.

Play Musick.

The Countie will be here with Musicke straight,

For so he said he would, I heare him neere,

Nurse, wife, what ho? what Nurse I say?

Enter Nurse.

Go waken Juliet, go and trim her vp,

He go and chat with Paris: hie, make hast,

Make hast, the Bridegroome, he is come already:

Make hast I say.

Nur. Mistress, what Mistress? Juliet? Fast I warrant her she.

Why Lambe, why Lady, sic you sluggabed,

Why Loue I say? Madam, sweet heart: why Bride?

What not a word? You take your peniworths now.

Sleepe for a weeke, for the next night I warrant

The Countie Paris hath set vp his rest,

That you shall rest but little, God forgive me:

Marrie and Amen: how sound is she a sleepe?

I must needs wake her: Madam, Madam, Madam,

I let the Countie take you in your bed,

Heele fright you vp yiaith. Will it not be?

What drest, and in your clothes, and downe againe?

I must needs wake you: Lady, Lady, Lady?

Alas, alas, helpe, helpe, my Ladyes dead,

Oh weladay, that euer I was borne.

Some Aqua-vita ho, my Lord, my Lady?

Mo. What noife is heere? Enter Mother.

Nur. O lamentable day.

Mo. What is the matter?

Nur. Looke, looke, oh heauie day.

Mo. O me, O me, my Child, my onely life:

Reuie, looke vp, or I will die with thee:

Helpe, helpe, call helpe.

Enter Father.

Fa. For shame bring Juliet forth, her Lord is come.

Nur. Shee's dead: decess't, shee's dead: alacke the day.

M. Alacke the day, shee's dead, shee's dead, shee's dead.

Fa. Ha? Let me see her: out alas shee's cold,

Her blood is fild and her ioynts are stiffe:

Life and these lips haue long bene sep'rated:

Death lies on her like an vntimely frost

Vpon the sweetest flower of all the field.

Nur. O Lamentable day!

Mo. O wofull time.

Fa. Death that hath rane her hence to make me waille,

Ties vp my tongue, and will not let me speake.

Enter Frier and the Countie.

Fri. Come, is the Bride ready to go to Church?

Fa. Ready to go, but neuer to returne.

O Sonne, the night before thy wedding day,

Hath death laine with thy wife: there she lies,

Flower as she was, deflowred by him.

Death is my Sonne in law, death is my Heire,

My Daughter he hath wedded. I will die,

And leaue him all life liuing, all is deaths.

Pa. Haue I thought long to see this mornings face,

And doth it giue me such a fight as this?

Mo. Accur'd, vnhappie, wretched fatefull day,

Most miserable houre, that ere time saw

In lasting labour of his Pilgrimage.

But one poore one, one poore and louing Child,

But one thing to reioyce and solace in,

And cruell death hath catcht it from my sight.

Nur. O wo, O wofull, wofull, wofull day,

Most lamentable day, most wofull day,

That euer euer, I did yet behold.

O day, O day, O day, O hatefull day,

Neuer was seene so blacke a day as this:

O wofull day, O wofull day.

Pa. Beguil'd, diuorced, wronged, spighted, laine,

Most detestable death by thee beguil'd,

By cruell, cruell thee, quite ouerthrowne:

O loue, O life, not life, but loue in death.

Fa. Despis'd, distressed, hated, martir'd, kill'd,

Vned comfortable time, why cam'st thou now?

To murther, murther our solemnitie?

O Child, O Child, my soule, and not my Child,

Dead art thou, alacke my Child is dead,

And with my Child, my ioyes are buried.

Fri. Peace be for shame, confusions: Care liues not

In these confusions, heauen and your selfe

Had part in this faire Maid, now heauen hath all,

And all the better is it for the Maid:

Your part in her, you could not keepe from death,

But heauen keeps his part in eternall life:

The most you sought was her promotion,

For 'twas your heauen, she shouldst be aduanc't

And weepe ye now, seeing she is aduanc't

Above the Cloudes, as high as Heauen it selfe?

O in this loue, you loue your Child so ill,

That you run mad, seeing that she is well:

Shee's not well married, that liues married long,

But shee's best married, that dies married yong.

Drie vp your teares, and sticke your Rosemarie

On this faire Coarse, and as the custome is,

And in her best array beare her to Church:

For though some Nature bids all vs lament,

Yet Natures teares are Reasons inerriment.

Fa. All things that we ordain'd Festiuall,

Turne from their office to blacke Funerall:

Our instruments to melancholy Bells,

Our wedding cheare, to a sad buriall Feast:

Our solenne Hymnes, to sullen Dyrges change:

Our Bridall flowers serue for a buried Coarse:

And all things change them to the contrarie.

Fri. Sir go you in; and Madam, go with him,

And go fir Paris, euery one prepare

To follow this faire Coarse into her graue:

The heauens do lowre vpon you, for some ill:

Moue them no more, by crossing their high will. Exeunt.

Mu. Faith we may put vp our Pipes and be gone.

Nur. Honest goodfellowes: Ah put vp, put vp,

For well you know, this is a pitifull case.

Mu. I by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter Peter.

Pet. Musitions, oh Musitions,

Hearts ease, hearts ease,

O, and you will haue me liue, play hearts ease.

Mu. Why hearts ease;

Pet. O Musitions,

Because my heart is selfe plaies, my heart is full.

Mu. Not a dump we, 'tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not then?

Mu. No.

Pet. I will then giue it you soundly.

Mu. What will you giue vs?

Pet. No money on my faith, but the gleeke.

I will giue you the Minstrell.

Mu. Then will I giue you the Seruing creature.

Pet. Then will I lay the seruing Creatures Dagger on your pate. I will carie no Crochets, He Re you, He Pa

you, do you note me?

Mu. And you Re vs, and Fa vs, you Note vs.

2. M. Pray you put vp your Dagger,

And put out your wit.

Then haue at you with my wit.

Pet. I will drie-beate you with an yron wit,

And put vp my yron Dagger.

Answer me like men:

When griping griefes the heart doth wound, then Mu-sicke with her siluer sound.

Why siluer sound? why Musicke with her siluer sound?

what say you Simon Carling?

Mu. Mary sir, because siluer hath a sweet sound.

Because Musitions haue no gold for sounding:
Then Musicke with her siluer sound, with speedy helpe doth lend redresse. Exit.

M. What a pestilent knaue is this same?

M. 2. Hang him lacke, come weeke in here, tarric for the Mourners, and stay dinner. Exit.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering truth of sleepe,
My dreames preface some ioyfull newes at hand:
My bosome L. sits lightly in his throne:
And all thisan day an vccustom'd spirit,
Lifts me about the ground with cheerefull thoughts.
I dreamt my Lady came and found me dead,
(Strange dreame that giues a dead man leaue to thinke,)
And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,
That I reuiu'd and was an Emperour.
Ah me, how sweet is loue it selfe possesse,
When but loues shadowes are rich in ioy.

Enter Romeo's man.

Newes from Verona, how now Balbazzer?
Dost thou not bring me Letters from the Frier?
How doth my Lady? Is my Father well?
How doth my Lady Juliet? that I aske againe,
For nothing can be ill, if she be well.

Man. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill.
Her body sleepest in Capels Monument,
And her immortall part with Angels liue,
I saw her laid low in her kindreds Vault,
And presently tooke Poste to tell it you:
O pardon me for bringing these ill newes,
Since you did leaue it for my office Sir.

Rom. Is it euen so?

Then I denie you Starres.
Thou knowest my lodging, get me inke and paper,
And hire Post-Horses, I will hence to night.

Man. I do beseech you sir, haue patience:
Your lookes are pale and wild, and do import
Some misaduenture.

Rom. Tush, thou art deceiu'd,
Leaue me, and do the thing I bid thee do,
Hast thou no Letters to me from the Frier?

Man. No my good Lord.

Exit Man.

Rom. No matter: Get thee gone,
And hyre those Horses, Ile be with thee straight.
Well Juliet, I will lie with thee to night:
Lets see for meanes: O mischief thou art swift,
To enter in the thoughts of desperate men:
I do remember an Apothecarie,
And here abouts dwells, which late I noted
In tattered weeds, with ouerwhelming browes,
Culling of Simples, meager were his lookes,
Sharpe miserie had worne him to the bones:
And in his needie shop a Tortoyrs hung,
An Allegator stuf, and other skins
Of ill shap'd fishes, and about his shelves,
A beggerly account of emptie boxes,
Greene earthen pots, Bladders, and mustie seedes,
Remnants of packthred, and old cakes of Roses
Were thinly scatter'd, to make vp a shew.
Noting this penury, to my selfe I said,
An if a man did need a poyson now,
Whose sale is perfer death in Mantua,
Here liues a Caitiffe wretch would sell it him.
O this same thought did but fore-run my need,
And this same needie man must sell it me.

As I remember, this should be the house,
Being holy day, the beggers shop is shut.
What ho? Apothecarie?

Enter Apothecarie.

App. Who call's so low'd?

Rom. Come hither man, I see that thou art poore,
Hold, there is fortie Duckets, let me haue
A dram of poyson, such soone speeding geare,
As will disperse it selfe through all the veines,
That the life-wearie-taker may fall dead,
And that the Trunke may be discharg'd of breath,
As violently, as hasty powder fier'd
Doth hurrie from the fatal Canons wombe.

App. Such mortall drugs I haue, but Mantua law
Is death to any he, that vtters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare and full of wretchednesse,
And fear'st to die? Famine is in thy cheekes,
Need and opression starueth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggery hangs vpon thy backe:
The world is not thy friend, nor the worlds law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich.
Then be not poore, but breake it, and take this.

App. My pouerty, but not my will consents.

Rom. I pray thy pouerty, and not thy will.

App. Put this in any liquid thing you will
And drinke it off, and if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.

Rom. There's thy Gold,
Worse poyson to mens soules,
Doing more murther in this loathsome world,
Then these poore compounds that thou maifest not sell,
I sell thee poyson, thou hast sold me none,
Farewell, buy food, and get thy selfe in flesh.
Come Cordiall, and not poyson, go with me
To Juliet graue, for there must I vse thee.

Exit.

Enter Frier Iohn to Frier Lawrence.

Iohn. Holy Francis can Frier, Brother, ho?

Enter Frier Lawrence.

Law. This same should be the voice of Frier Iohn.
Welcome from Mantua, what sayes Romeo?
Or if his mind be writ, giue me his Letter.

Iohn. Going to find a bare-foote Brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here in this Citie visiting the sick,
And finding him, the Searchers of the Towne
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did raigne,
Seal'd vp the doores, and would not let vs forth,
So that my speed to Mantua there was staid.

Law. Who bare my Letter then to Romeo?

Iohn. I could not send it, here it is againe,
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearefull were they of infection.

Law. Vnhappie Fortune: by my Brotherhood
The Letter was not nice, but full of charge,
Of deare import, and the neglecting it
May do much danger: Frier Iohn go hence,
Get me an Iron Crow, and bring it straight
Vnto my Cell.

Iohn. Brother Ile go and bring it thee.

Law. Now must I to the Monument alone,
Within this three houres will faire Juliet wake,
Shew will bestrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents:
But I will write againe to Mantua,

And

And keepe her at my Cell till Romeo come,
Poore liuing Coarse, clos'd in a dead mans Tombe, Exit.

Enter Paris and his Page.

Par. Giue me thy Torch Boy, hence and stand aloft,
Yet put it out, for I would not be seene:
Vnder yond young Trees lay thee all along,
Holding thy eare close to the hollow ground,
So shall no foot vpon the Churchyard tread,
Being loose, vnfirm with digging vp of Graues,
But thou shalt heare it: whistle then to me,
As signall that thou hearest some thing approach,
Giue me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the Churchyard, yet I will aduenture.

Pa. Sweet Flower with flowers thy Bridall bed strew:
O woe, thy Canopie is dust and stones,
Which with sweet water nightly I will dewe,
Or wanting that, with teares desil'd by mones;
The obsequies that I for thee will keepe,
Nightly shall be, to strew thy graue, and weepe.

Whistle Boy.

The Boy giues warning, something doth approach,
What curld foot wanders this wayes to night,
To crosse my obsequies, and true loues right?
What with a Torch? Muffle me night a while.

Enter Romeo and Peter.

Rom. Giue me that Mattocke, & the wrenching Iron,
Hold take this Letter, early in the morning
See thou deliuer it to my Lord and Father,
Giue me the light; vpon thy life I charge thee,
What ere thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloofe,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is partly to behold my Ladies face:
But chiefly to take thence from her dead finger,
A precious Ring: a Ring that I must vse,
In deare employment, therefore hence be gone:
But if thou icalous dost retuge to prie
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heauen I will teare thee ioynt by ioynt,
And strew this hungry Churchyard with thy limbe:
The time, and my intents are sauage wilde:
More fierce and more inexorable farre,
Then emptie Tygers, or the roaring Sea.

Per. I will be gone sir, and not trouble you

Ro. So shalt thou shew me friendship: take thou that,
Liue and be prosperous, and farewell good fellow.

Per. For all this same, Ile hide me here about,
His lookes I feare, and his intents I doubt.

Rom. Thou detestable mawe, thou wombe of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsell of the earth:
Thus I enforce thy rotten lawes to open,
And in despight, Ile cram thee with more food.

Par. This is that banisht haughtie Mountague,
That murderd my Loues Cozin; with which griefe,
It is supposed the faire Creature died,
And here is come to do some villanous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.
Stop thy vnhalloved toyle, vile Mountague:
Can vengeance be pursued further then death?
Condemned vaine, I do apprehend thee.
Obey and go with me, for thou must die,

Rom. I must indeed, and therefore came I hither:
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man,
Flie hence and leaue me, thinke vpon those gone,
Let them affright thee. I beseech thee Youth,
Put not an other sin vpon my head,
By vrging me to furie. O be gone,
By heauen I loue thee better then my selfe,
For I come hither arm'd against my selfe:
Stay not, be gone, liue, and hereafter say,
A mad mans mercy bid thee run away.

Par. I do desie thy commiseration,
And apprehend thee for a Fellon here.

Ro. Wilt thou prouoke me? Then haue at thee Boy.

Per. O Lord they fight, I will go call the Watch.

Pa. O I am slaine, if thou be mercifull,
Open the Tombe, lay me with Juliet.

Rom. In faith I will, let me peruse this face:

Mercutius kinsman, Noble Countie Paris,
What said my man, when my betossed soule
Did not attend him as we rode? I thinke
He told me Paris should haue married Juliet,
Said he not so? Or did I dreame it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talke of Juliet,
To thinke it was so? O giue me thy hand,
One, writ with me in sowre misfortunes booke.
Ile burie thee in a triumphant graue.

A Graue; O no, a Lanthorne; slaughterd Youth:
For here lies Juliet, and her beautie makes
This Vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death lie thou there, by a dead man inter'd.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Haue they bene merrie? Which their Keepers call
A lightning before death? Oh how may I
Call this a lightning? O my Loue, my Wife,
Death that hath suckt the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet vpon thy Beautie:
Thou are not conquer'd: Beauties ensigne yet
Is Crymson in thy lips, and in thy cheekes,
And Deaths pale flag is not aduanced there.
Tybalts, ly'st thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O what more sauour can I do to thee,
Then with that hand that cut thy youth in twaine,
To funder his that was thy enemy?

Forgiue me Cozen. Ah deare Juliet:

Why art thou yet so faire? I will beleue,
Shall I beleue, that vnsubstanciall death is amorous?
And that the leane abhorred Monster keepes
Thee here in darke to be his Paramour?
For feare of that, I still will stay with thee,
And neuer from this Pallace of dym night
Depart againe: come lie thou in my armes,
Heere's to thy health, where ere thou tumblest in.
O true Apothecarie!

Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kisse I die.
Depart againe; here, here will I remaine,
With Wormes that are thy Chambermaides: O here
Will I see vp my euerlasting rest:
And shake the yoke of inauspicious starres
From this world-wearied flesh: Eyes looke your last:
Armes take your last embrace: And lips, O you
The doores of breath, scale with a righteous kisse
A datelesse bargaine to ingrossing death:
Come bitter conduct, come vnfloury guide,
Thou desperate Pilot, now at once run on
The dashing Rocks, thy Sea-sicke wearie Barke:
Heere's to my Loue. O true Apothecary:

ggz

Thy

Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kisse I die.

Enter Friar with Lamborne, Crow, and Spade.

Fri. Se. Francis be my speed, how oft to night
Have my old feet, stumbled at graues? Who's there?

Man. Here's one, a Friend, & one that knowes you well.

Fri. Blisse be vpon you. Tell me good my Friend

What Torch is yond that vainly lends his light

To grubs, and eyelesse Sculles? As I discerne,

It burneth in the Capels Monument.

Man. It doth so holy sir,

And there's my Master, one that you loue.

Fri. Who is it?

Man. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he bin there?

Man. Full halfe an houre.

Fri. Go with me to the Vault.

Man. I dare not Sir.

My Master knowes not but I am gone hence,

And fearefully did menace me with death,

If I did stay to looke on his entents.

Fri. Stay, then Ile go alone, feares comes vpon me,

O much I feare some ill vnluckie thing.

Man. As I did sleepe vnder this young tree here,

I dreamt my maister and another fought,

And that my Maister slew him.

Fri. Romeo.

Alacke, alacke, what blood is this which stains

The stony entrance of this Sepulcher?

What means these Masterlesse, and goarie Swords

To lie discoloured by this place of peace?

Romeo, oh pale: who else what Paris too?

And sleept in blood? Ah what an vnkind houre

Is guiltie of this lamentable chance?

The Lady stirs.

Iul. O comfortable Friar, where's my Lord?

I do remember well where I should be:

And there I am, where is my Romeo?

Fri. I heare some noyse Lady, come from that nest

Of death, contagion, and vnnaturall sleepe,

A greater power then we can contradict

Hath thwarted our entents, come, come away,

Thy husband in thy bosome there lies dead:

And Paris too: come Ile dispose of thee,

Among a Sisterhood of holy Nunnas:

Stay not to question, for the watch is comming.

Come, go good Iuliet, I dare no longer stay. Exit.

Iul. Go get thee hence, for I will not away,

What's here? A cup clos'd in my true loes hand?

Poyson I see hath bin his timelesse end

O churle, drinke all, and leaue no friendly drop,

To helpe me after, I will kisse thy lips,

Happie some po yson yet doth hang on them,

To make me die with a restorative.

Thy lips are warme.

Enter Boy and Watch.

Watch. Lead Boy, which way?

Iul. Yea noife?

Then ile be briefe, O happy Dagger.

'Tis in thy sheath, there rust and let me die. Kills herselfe.

Boy. This is the place,

There where the Torch doth burne

Watch. The ground is bloody,

Search about the Churchyard.

Go some of you, who ere you find attach,

Pittifull sight, here lies the Countie slaine,

And Iuliet bleeding, warme and newly dead

Who here hath laine these two dayes buried.

Go tell the Prince, runne to the Capulets,

Raife vp the Mountagnes, some others search,

We see the ground whereon these woes do lye,

But the true ground of all these piteous woes,

We cannot without circumstance descry.

Enter Romeo's man.

Watch. Here's Romeo's man,

We found him in the Churchyard.

Con. Hold him in safety, till the Prince come hither.

Enter Friar, and another Watchman.

3. Wat. Here is a Friar that trembles, sighes, and weepes

We tooke this Matrooke and this Spade from him,

As he was comming from this Church-yard side.

Con. A great suspicion, stay the Friar too.

Enter the Prince.

Prin. What misadventure is so early vp,

That calls our person from our mornings rest?

Enter Capulet and his wife.

Cap. What should it be that they so shrike abroad?

Wife. O the people in the streete crie Romeo.

Some Iuliet, and some Paris, and all runne

With open outcry toward our Monument.

Fri. What feare is this which startles in your eares?

Wat. Soueraigne, here lies the Countie Paris slaine,

And Romeo dead, and Iuliet dead before,

Warne and new kil'd.

Prin. Search,

Seeke, and know how, this foule murder comes.

Wat. Here is a Friar, and Slaughter'd Romeo's man,

With Instruments vpon them fit to open

These dead mens Tombs.

Cap. O heauen!

O wife looke how our Daughter bleedes!

This Dagger hath mistaine, for loe his house

Is empty on the backe of Mountague,

And is misheathed in my Daughters bosome.

Wife. O me, this sight of death, is as a Bell

That waines my old age to a Sepulcher.

Enter Mountague.

Fri. Come Mountague, for thou art early vp

To see thy Sonne and Heire now early downe.

Mount. Alas my liege, my wife is dead to night,

Griefe of my Sonnes exile hath stoppt her breath:

What further wee conspires against my age?

Prin. Look: and thou shalt see.

Mount. O thou vncaught, what manners in is this,

To presse before thy Father to a graue?

Prin. Seale vp the mouth of outrage for a while,

Till we can cleare these ambiguities,

And know their spring, their head, their true descent,

And then will I be generall of your woes,

And lead you euen to death: meane time forbeare,

And let mischance be slauie to patience,

Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to doe least,

Yet most suspected as the time and place

Doth make against me of this direfull murder:

And heere I stand both to impeach and purge

My selfe condemned, and my selfe excus'd.

Prin. Then say at once, what thou dost know in this?

Fri. I will be briefe, for my short date of breath

Is not so long as is a tedious tale.

Romeo there dead, was husband to that Iuliet,

And she there dead, that's Romeo's faithfull wife:

I married them; and their stolne marriage day

Was Tybalts Doomesday: whose vntimely death

Banish'd the new-made Bridegroom from this Citie:

For whom (and not for Tybalts) Iuliet pinde.

You, to remoue that siege of Greefe from her,

Betroth'd, and would haue married her perforce

To Countie Paris. Then comes she to me,

And (with wilde lookes) bid me deuise some meanes

To rid her from this second Marriage,

Or in my Cell there would she kill her selfe.

Then gaue I her (so Tutor'd by my Art)

A sleeping Potion, which so tooke effect

As I intended, for it wrought on her

The forme of death. Meane time, I writ to Romeo,

That he should hither come, as this dyre night,

To helpe to take her from her borrowed graue,

Being the time the Portions force should cease.

But he which bore my Letter, Frier Iohn,

Was stay'd by accident; and yesternight

Return'd my Letter backe. Then all alone,

At the prefixed houre of her waking,

Came I to take her from her Kindreds vault,

Meaning to keepe her closely at my Cell,

Till I conveniently could send to Romeo.

But when I came (some Minute ere the time

Other awaking) heere vntimely lay

The Noble Paris, and true Romeo dead,

Shee wakes, and I intreated her come forth,

And beare this worke of Heauen, with patience:

But then, a noyse did scarme me from the Tombe,

And she (too desperate) would not go with me,

But (as it seemes) did violence on her selfe.

All this I know, and to the Marriage her Nurse is priuy:

And if fought in this misfarr'd by my fault,

Let my old life be sacrific'd, some houre before the time,

Vnto the rigour of severest Law.

Prin. We still haue knowne thee for a Holy man.

Where's Romeo's man? What can he say to this?

Boy. I brought my Master newes of Iuliet's death,

And then in poste he came from Mantua

To this same place, to this same Monument.

This Letter he early bid me giue his Father,

And threatned me with death, going in the Vault,

If I departed not, and left him there.

Prin. Giue me the Letter, I will look on it.

Where is the Counties Page that rais'd the Watch?

Sirra, what made your Master in this place?

Page. He came with flowres to strew his Ladies graue,

And bid me stand aloofe, and so I did:

Anon comes one with light to ope the Tombe,

And by and by my Maister drew on him,

And then I ran away to call the Watch.

Prin. This Letter doth make good the Friars words,

Their course of Loue, the rydings of her death:

And heere he writes, that he did buy a poyson

Of a poore Potheecarie, and therewithall

Came to this Vault to dye, and lye with Iuliet.

Where be these Enemies? Capulet, Mountague,

See what a scourge is laide vpon your hate,

That Heauen finds meanes to kill your ioyes with Loue;

And I, for winking at your discords too,

Have lost a brace of Kinsmen: All are punish'd.

Cap. O Brother Mountague, giue me thy hand,

This is my Daughters ioynture, for no more

Can I demand.

Mount. But I can giue thee more:

For I will raise her Statue in pure Gold,

That whiles Verona by that name is knowne,

There shall no figure at that Rate be set,

As that of True and Faithfull Iuliet.

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his Lady ly,

Poore sacrifices of our enmity.

Prin. A glooming peace this morning with it brings,

The Sunne for sorrow will not shew his head;

Go hence, to haue more talke of these sad things,

Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished.

For neuer was a Storie of more Wo,

Then this of Iuliet, and her Romeo. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE LIFE OF TYMON OF ATHENS.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and Mercer, at severall doores.

Poet.

Good day Sir.

Pain. I am glad y're well.

Poet. I have not seen you long, how goes the World?

Pain. It weares fir, as it growes.

Poet. I that's well knowne:

But what particular Rarity? What strange,
Which manifold record not matches: see
Magick of Bounty, all these spirits thy power
Hath coniur'd to attend.
I know the Merchant.

Pain. I know them both: th'others a Jeweller.

Mer. O'tis a worthy Lord.

Jew. Nay that's most fixt.

Mer. A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were,
To an vntyreable and continuat goodness:
He passes.

Jew. I have a Jewell heere.

Mer. O pray let's see't. For the Lord Timon, sir?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate. But for that—

Poet. When we for recompence haue prais'd the vild,
It flames the glory in that happy Verse,
Which aptly sings the good.

Mer. 'Tis a good forme.

Jew. And rich: heere is a Water looke ye.

Pain. You are rapt sir, in some worke, some Dedication to the great Lord.

Poet. A thing slip't idly from me.
Our Poetrie is as a Cowne, which vles
From whence 'tis nourish't: the fire i'th Flint
Shewes not, till it be strooke: our gentle flame
Prouokes it selfe, and like the currant flies
Each bound it chafes. What haue you there?

Pain. A Picture sir: when comes your Booke forth?

Poet. Vpon the heeles of my presentment sir.

Let's see your peece.

Pain. 'Tis a good Peece.

Poet. So 'tis, this comes off well, and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable: How this grace
Speakes his owne standing: what a mentall power
This eye shootes forth? How bigge imagination
Moues in this Lip, to th' dumbnesse of the gesture,

One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life:

Heere is a touch: Is't good?

Poet. I will say of it,

It Tutors Nature, Artificiall strife
Lives in these touches, liuelier then life.

Enter certaine Senators.

Pain. How this Lord is followed.

Poet. The Senators of Athens, happy men.

Pain. Looke mee.

Po. You see this confluence; this great flood of visitors,
I haue in this rough worke, shap'd out a man
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hugge
With amplest entertainment: My free drift
Halts not particularly, but moues it selfe
In a wide Sea of wax, no leuell'd malice
Infects one comma in the course I hold,
But flies an Eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leauing no Tract behinde.

Pain. How shall I vnderstand you?

Poet. I will vnboile to you.

You see how all Conditions, how all Mindes,
As well of glib and slippry Creatures, as
Of Graue and austere qualitie, tender downe
Their seruices to Lord Timon: his large fortune,
Vpon his good and gracious Nature hanging,
Subdues and properties to his loue and tendance
All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glasse-fac'd Flatterer
To Apemantus, that few things loues better
Then to abhorre himselfe; euen hee drops downe
The knee before him, and returns in peace
Most rich in Timons nod.

Pain. I saw them speake together.

Poet. Sir, I haue vpon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd,
The Base o'th Mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kinde of Natures
That labour on the bosome of this Sphere,
To propagate their stases; amongst them all,
Whose eyes are on this Soueraigne Lady fixt,
One do I personate of Lord Timons frame,
Whom Fortune with her luery hand waits to her,
Whose present grace, to present slauage and seruants
Translates his Riuals.

Pain. 'Tis concey'd, to scope
This Throne, this Fortune, and this Hill me thinks

With

With one man becken'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepe Mount
To climbe his happinesse, would be well exprest
In our Condition.

Poet. Nay Sir, but heere me on:

All those which were his Fellowes but of late,
Some better then his valed; on the moment
Follow his strides, his Lobbies fill with tendance,
Raine Sacrificall whisperings in his care,
Make Sacred euen his styrop; and through him
Drinke the free Ayre.

Pain. I marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune in her shift and change of mood
Spurnes downe her late beloued; all his Dependants
Which labour'd after him to the Mountaines top,
Euen on their knees and hand, let him sit downe,
Nor one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:

A thousand morall Paintings I can shew,
That shall demonstrate these quicke blowes of Fortunes,
More pregnantly then words. Yet you do well,
To shew Lord Timon, that meane eyes haue seene
The foot about the head.

Trumpets sound.

Enter Lord Timon, addressing himselfe curtously to every Sutor.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Mer. My good Lord, five Talents is his debt,
His meanes most short, his Creditors most strait:
Your Honourable Letter he desires
To those haue shut him vp, which failing,
Perishes his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius, well:

I am not of that Feather, to shake off
My Friend when he must neede me. I do know him
A Gentleman, that well deserues a helpe,
Which he shall haue. He pay the debt, and free him.

Mer. Your Lordship euer binds him.

Tim. Commend me to him, I will send his ransome,
And being enfranchiz'd bid him come to me;

'Tis not enough to helpe the Feeble vp,
But to support him after. Fare you well.

Mer. All happinesse to your Honor.

Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Oldm. Lord Timon, heere me speake.

Tim. Freely good Father.

Oldm. Thou hast a Seruant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I haue so: What of him?

Oldm. Most Noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he heere, or not Lucilius?

Luc. Heere at your Lordships seruice.

Oldm. This Fellow heere, L. Timon, this thy Creature,
By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first haue bene inclin'd to thrift,
And my estate deserues an Heyre more rais'd,
Then one which holds a Trencher.

Tim. Well: what further?

Old. One onely Daughter haue I, no Kin else,
On whom I may conferre what I haue got:
The Maid is faire, a th' youngest for a Bride,
And I haue bred her at my dearest cost
In Qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her loue: I pry thee (Noble Lord)

Ioyne with me to forbid him her resort,
My selfe haue spoke in vaine.

Tim. The man is honest.

Oldm. Therefore he will be Timon,
His honesty rewards him in it selfe,
It must not beare my Daughter.

Tim. Does she loue him?

Oldm. She is yong and apt:

Our owne precedent passions do instruct vs
What leuities in youth.

Tim. Loue you the Maid?

Luc. I my good Lord, and she accepts of it.

Oldm. If in her Marriage my consent be missing,
I call the Gods to witnesse, I will choose
Mine heyre from forth the Beggars of the world,
And dispossesse her all.

Tim. How shall she be endowed,
If she be mated with an equall Husband?

Oldm. Three Talents on the present; in future, all.

Tim. This Gentleman of mine

Hath seru'd me long:

To build his Fortune, I will straine a little,
For 'tis a Bond in men. Giue him thy Daughter,
What you bestow, in him Ile counterpoize,
And make him weigh with her.

Oldm. Most Noble Lord,

Pawne me to this your Honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee,

Mine Honour on my promise.

Luc. Humbly I thanke your Lordship, neuer may
That state or Fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owed to you.

Exit.

Poet. Vouchsafe my Labour,
And long live your Lordship.

Tim. I thanke you, you shall heere from me anon:
Go not away. What haue you there, my Friend?

Pain. A peece of Painting, which I do beseech
Your Lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.

The Painting is almost the Naturall man:
For since Dishonor Traffickes with mans Nature,
He is but out-side: These Pensil'd Figures are Euen such as they giue out. I like your worke,
And you shall finde I like it; Waite attendance
Till you heere further from me.

Pain. The Gods preferre ye.

Tim. Well fare you Gentleman: giue me your hand.
We must needs dine together: fir your Jewell
Hath suffer'd vnder praise.

Jew. What my Lord, dispraise?

Tim. A meere facety of Commendations,
If I should pay you for't as 'tis extold,
It would vnclew me quite.

Jew. My Lord, 'tis rated

As those which sell would giue: but you well know,
Things of like valed differing in the Owners,
Are prized by their Masters. Beleeu't deere Lord,
You mend the Jewell by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd. Enter Apemantus.

Mer. No my good Lord, he speakes y common toong
Which all men speake with him.

Tim. Looke who comes heere, will you be chid?

Jew. Wee'l beare with your Lordship.

Mer. Hee'l spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee,
Gentle Apemantus.

gg 2

Aper.

Ape. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow.
When thou art Timon's dogge, and these Knaues honest.

Tim. Why dost thou call them Knaues, thou know'st them not?

Ape. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Ape. Then I repent not.

Iew. You know me, Apemantus?

Ape. Thou know'st I do, I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud Apemantus?

Ape. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.

Tim. Whether art going?

Ape. To knocke out an honest Athenians braines.

Tim. That's a deed thou'lt dye for.

Ape. Right, if doing nothing be death by th' Law.

Tim. How lik'st thou this picture Apemantus?

Ape. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it.

Ape. He wrought better that made the Painter, and yet he's but a filthy peece of worke.

Pain. Yare a Dogge.

Ape. Thy Mothers of my generation: what's she, if I be a Dogge?

Tim. Wilt dine with me Apemantus?

Ape. No: I eate not Lords.

Tim. And thou should'st, should'st anger Ladies.

Ape. O they eate Lords;

So they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Ape. So, thou apprehend'st it.

Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this Jewell, Apemantus?

Ape. Not so well as plain-dealing, which wil not cast a man a Doit.

Tim. What dost thou thinke 'tis worth?

Ape. Not worth my thinking.

How now Poet?

poet. How now Philosopher?

pe. Thou lyest.

Poet. Art not one?

Ape. Yes.

Poet. Then I lye not.

Ape. Art not a Poet?

Poet. Yes.

Ape. Then thou lyest:

Looke in thy last worke, where thou hast segin'd him a worthy Fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd, he is so.

Ape. Yes he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour. He that loues to be flattered, is worthy o' th' flatterer. Heavens, that I were a Lord.

Tim. What wouldst do then Apemantus?

Ape. E'ne as Apemantus does now, hate a Lord with my heart.

Tim. What thy selfe?

Ape. I.

Tim. Wherefore?

Ape. That I had no angry wit to be a Lord.]

Art not thou a Merchant?

Mer. I Apemantus.

Ape. Traffick confound thee, if the Gods will not.

Mer. If Trafficke do it, the Gods do it.

Ape. Traffickes thy God, & thy God confound thee.

Trumpet sounds. Enter a Messenger.

Tim. What Trumpets that?

Mef. 'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty Horse

All of Companionship?

Tim. Pray entertaine them, giue them guide to vs.
You must needs dine with me: go not you hence
Till I haue thank you: when dinners done
Shew me this peece, I am ioyfull of your fights.

Enter Alcibiades with the rest.

Most welcome Sir.

Ape. So, so; their Aches contract, and sterue your supple ioynts: that there should bee small loue amongst these sweet Knaues, and all this Curtesie. The straine of mans bred out into Baboon and Monkey.

Alc. Sir, you haue fau'd my longing, and I feed
Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome Sir:

Ere we depart, we'll share a bounteous time
In different pleasures.

Pray you let vs in.

Enter two Lords.

Exeunt.

1. Lord. What time a day is't Apemantus?

Ape. Time to be honest.

1. That time seruies still.

Ape. The most accursed thou that still omitst it.

2. Thou art going to Lord Timon's Feast.

Ape. I, to see meate fill Knaues, and Wine heat fooles.

2. Farthee well, farthee well.

Ape. Thou art a Foole to bid me farewell twice.

2. Why Apemantus?

Ape. Should'st haue kept one to thy selfe, for I meant to giue thee none.

1. Hang thy selfe.

Ape. No I will do nothing at thy bidding:

Make thy requests to thy Friend.

2. Away vnpeaceable Dogge,

Or Ile spurne thee hence.

Ape. I will flye like a dogge, the heeles a'th' Ass.

1. Hee's opposite to humanity.

Comes shall we in,

And taste Lord Timon's bountie: he out-goes
The verie heart of kindnesse.

2. Hewries it out: Plutus the God of Gold

Is but his Steward: no meede but he repayes
Seven-fold about it selfe: No guift to him,

But breeds the giuer a returne: exceeding
All vse of quittance.

1. The Noblest minde he carries,

That euer govern'd man.

2. Long may he liue in Fortunes. Shall we in?

Ile keepe you Company.

Exeunt.

Hoboyes Playing lowd Musicke.

A great Banquet seru'd in: and then, Enter Lord Timon, the States, the Athenian Lords, Ventigius which Timon redeem'd from prison. Then comes dropping after all Apemantus discontentedly like himselfe.

Ventig. Most honoured Timon,

It hath pleas'd the Gods to remember my Fathers age,

And call him to long peace:

He is gone happy, and has left me rich:

Then, as in gratefull Vertue I am bound

To your free heart, I do returne those Talents

Doubled with thanks and seruice, from whose helpe

I deriu'd libertie.

Tim. O by no means,

Honest Ventigius: You mistake my loue,

I gaue

I gaue it freely euer, and ther's none

Can truly say he giue, if he receiues:

If our betters play at that game, we must not dare

To imitate them: faults that are rich are saue.

Vint. A Noble spirit.

Tim. Nay my Lords, Ceremony was but deuic'd at first

To let a glosse on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,

Recanting goodnesse, sorry ere 'tis showne:

But where there is true friendship, there needs none.

Pray sit, more welcome are ye to my Fortunes,

Then my Fortunes to me.

1. Lord. My Lord, we alwaies haue confest it.

Ape. Ho ho, confest it? Handg'd it? Haue you not?

Tim. O Apemantus, you are welcome.

Ape. No: You shall not make me welcome:

I come to haue thee thrust me out of doores.

Tim. Fie, th'art a churle, ye haue got a humour there

Does not become a man, 'tis much too blame:

They say my Lords, Israfur or brenis est,

But yond man is verie angrie.

Go, let him haue a Table by himselfe:

For he does neither affect companie,

Nor is he fit for't indeed.

Ape. Let me stay at thine appetill Timon,

I come to obserue, I giue thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heede of thee: Th'art an Athenian, therefore welcome: I my selfe would haue no power,

pythee let my meate make thee silent.

Ape. I scorne thy meate, 'twould choake me: for I should nere flatter thee. Oh you Gods! What a number of men eats Timon, and he sees 'em not? It greues me to see so many dip there meate in one mans blood, and all the madnesse is, he cheeres them vp too.

I wonder men dare trust themselves with men.

Me thinks they should enuie them without knives,

Good for there meate, and safer for their liues:

There's much example for't, the fellow that sits next him, now parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a diuided draught: is the readiest man to kill him. 'Tas beene proued, if I were a huge man I should feare to drinke at meales, least they should spie my wind-pipes dangerous noates, great men should drinke with harnessse on their throates.

Tim. My Lord in heart: and let the health go round.

2. Lord. Let it flow this way my good Lord.

Ape. Flow this way? A braue fellow. He keeps his tides well, those healths will make thee and thy state looke ill, Timon.

Heere's that which is too weake to be a sinner,

Honest water, which nere left man i'th' mire:

This and my food are equals, there's no ods,

Feasts are to proud to giue thanks to the Gods.

Apemantus Grace.

Immortal Gods, I craue no pelfe,

I pray for no man but my selfe,

Graunt I may neuer proue so fond,

To rest man on his Oath or Bond.

Or a Harlot for her weeping,

Or a Dogge that seemes asleeping,

Or a keeper with my freedom,

Or my friends if I should need 'em.

Amen. So fall too't:

Richmen sin, and I eat root.

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus is

Tim. Captaine,

Alcibiades, your hearts in the field now.

Alc. My heart is euer at your seruice, my Lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of Enemies, then a dinner of Friends.

Alc. So they were bleeding new my Lord, there's no meat like 'em, I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Ape. Would all those Flatterers were thine Enemies

then, that then thou might'st kill 'em: & bid me to 'em.

1. Lord. Might we but haue that happinesse my Lord, that you would once vse our hearts, whereby we might expresse some part of our zeales, we should thinke our selues for euer perfect.

Tim. Oh no doubt my good Friends, but the Gods themselves haue prouided that I shall haue much helpe from you: how had you beene my Friends else. Why haue you that charitable title from thousands? Did not you chiefly belong to my heart? I haue told more of you to my selfe, then you can with modestie speake in your owne behalfe. And thus farre I confirme you. Oh you Gods (thinke I), what need we haue any Friends; if we should nere haue need of 'em? They were the most needlesse Creatures liuing; should we nere haue vse for

'em? And would most resemble sweete Instruments hung vp in Cases, that keepe there sounds to themselves. Why I haue often wisht my selfe poorer, that I might come neerer to you: we are borne to do benefits. And what better or properer can we call our owne, then the riches of our Friends? Oh what a pretious comfort 'tis, to haue so many like Brothers commanding

one anothers Fortunes. Oh ioyes, e'ne made away er't can be borne: mine eies cannot hold out water me thinks to forget their Faults. I drinke to you.

Ape. Thou weep'st to make them drinke, Timon.

2. Lord. Ioy had the like conception in our eies,

And at that instant, like a babe sprung vp.

Ape. Ho, ho: I laugh to thinke that babe a bastard.

3. Lord. I promise you my Lord you mou'd me much.

Ape. Much.

Sound Tucket. Enter the Maskers of Amazons, with

Lutes in their hands, dauncing and playing.

Tim. What meanes that Trumpe? How now?

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Please you my Lord, there are certaine Ladies

Most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? what are their wills?

Ser. There comes with them a fore-runner my Lord, which beares that office, to signifie their pleasures,

Tim. I pray let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid with the Maske of Ladies.

Cup. Haile to thee worthy Timon and to all that of his Bounties tastest: hee five best Sences a knowledge thee their Patron, and come freely to gratulate thy plentiful bosome.

There tast, touch all, pleas'd from thy Table rise:

They onely now come but to Feast thine eies.

Tim. They'r welcome all, let 'em haue kind admissance. Musicke make their welcome.

Luc. You see my Lord, how ample y'are belou'd.

Ape. Hoyday,

What a sweepe of vanitie comes this way.

They daunce? They are madwomen,

g g 3

Like

Like Madnesse is the glory of this life,
As this pompe shewes to a little oyle and roote.
We make our selues Fooles, to disport our selues,
And spend our Flatteries, to drinke those men,
Vpon whose Age we voyde it vp agen
With poysonous Spight and Enay.
Who liues, that's not depraued, or depraues;
Who dyes, that beares not one spurne to their graues
Of their Friends guift:
I should feare, those that dance before me now,
Would one day stampe vpon me: 'Tas bene done,
Men shut their doores against a setting Sunne.

The Lords rise from Table, with much adoring of Timon, and to show their loues, each single out an Amazon, and all Dance, men with women, a loose straine or two to the Hoboyes, and cease.

Tim. You haue done our pleasures
Much grace (faire Ladies)
Set a faire fashion on our entertainment,
Which was not halfe so beautifull, and kinde:
You haue added worth vnto o't, and luster,
And entertain'd me with mine owne deuice.
I am to thanke you for't.

1 Lord. My Lord you take vs euen at the best.

Aper. Faith for the worst is filthy, and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends you,
Please you to dispose your selues.

All La. Most thankfully, my Lord.

Tim. Flauus.

Fla. My Lord.

Tim. The little Casket bring me hither.

Fla. Yes, my Lord. More Jewels yet?

There is no crossing him in's humor,
Else I should tell him well, yfaith I should;
When all's spent, hee'd be croft then, and he could:
Tis pittie Bounty had not eyes behinde,
That man might ne're be wretched for his minde. Exit.

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Ser. Heere my Lord, in readinesse.

2 Lord. Our Horses.

Tim. O my Friends:

I haue one word to say to you: Looke you, my good L.
I must intreat you honour me so much,
As to aduance this fewell, accept it, and weare it,
Kinde my Lord.

1 Lord. I am so farre already in your guifts.

All. So are we all.

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. My Lord, there are certaine Nobles of the Senate newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Enter Flauus.

Fla. I beseech your Honor, vouchsafeme a word, it does concerne you neere.

Tim. Neere? why then another time Ile heare thee.
I prythee let's be prouided to shew them entertainment.

Fla. I feare know how.

Enter another Seruant.

Ser. May it please your Honor, Lord Lucius
(Out of his free loue) hath presented to you
Foure Milke-white Horses, trapt in Silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the Presents
Be worthily entertain'd.

Enter a third Seruant.

How now? What newes?

3 Ser. Please you my Lord, that honourable Gentleman Lord Lucullus, entreats your companie to morrow, to hunt with him, and ha's sent your Honour two brace of Grey-hounds.

Tim. Ile hunt with him,
And let them be receiue'd, not without faire Reward.

Fla. What will this come to?
He commands vs to prouide, and giue great guifts, and all out of an empty Coffer:

Nor will he know his Purse, or yeeld me this,
To shew him what a Begger his heart is,
Being of no power to make his wishes good.
His promises flye so beyond his state,
That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes for eu'ry word:
He is so kinde, that he now payes interest for't;
His Land's put to their Bookes. Well, would I were Gently put out of Office, before I were forc'd out:
Happier is he that has no friend to feede,
Then such that do e'ne Enemies exceede.
I bleed inwardly for my Lord.

Tim. You do your selues much wrong,
You bate too much of your owne merits,
Heere my Lord, a trifle of our Loue.

2 Lord. With more then common thanks
I will receiue it.

3 Lord. O he's the very soule of Bounty.

Tim. And now I remember my Lord, you gaue good words the other day of a Bay Courser I rod on, tis yours because you lik'd it.

1 L. Oh, I beseech you pardon mee, my Lord, in that,
Tim. You may take my word my Lord: I know no man can iustly praise, but what he does affect. I weigh my Friends affection with mine owne: Ile tell you true, Ile call to you.

All Lor. O none so welcome.

Tim. I take all, and your feuerall visitations

So kinde to heart, tis not enough to giue:

Me thinks, I could deale Kingdomes to my Friends,

And nere be wearie. Alcibiades,

Thou art a Soldiour, therefore sildome rich,

It comes in Charitie to thee: for all thy liuing

Is mong' st the dead: and all the Lands thou hast

Lye in a pitch field.

Alc. I, deuil'd Land, my Lord.

1 Lord. We are so vertuously bound.

Tim. And so am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely ender'd.

Tim. All to you. Lights, more Lights.

1 Lord. The best of Happines, Honor, and Fortunes

Keepe with you Lord Timon.

Tim. Ready for his Friends. Exit Lord

Aper. What a coiles heere, seruing of becks, and iut-ting out of bummes, I doubt whether their Legges be worth the summes that are giuen for 'em.

Friendships full of dregges,

Me thinks false hearts, should neuer haue found legges.

Thus honest Fooles lay out their wealth on Curtises.

Tim. Now Apemantus (if thou wert not fullen)

I would be good to thee.

Aper. No, Ile nothing; for if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to raile vpon thee, and then thou wouldst sune the faster. Thou giu'st so long Timon (I feare me) thou wilt giue away thy selfe in paper shortly.

What needs these Feasts, pompes, and Vaine-glories?

Tim.

Tim. Nay, and you begin to raile on Societie once, I am sworne not to giue regard to you. Farewell, & come with better Musicke. Exit

Aper. So: Thou wilt not heare mee now, thou shalt not then. Ile locke thy heauen from thee:
Oh that mens eares should be
To Counsell deafe, but not to Flatterie. Exit

Enter a Senator.

Ser. And late five thousand: to Varro and to Isidore
He owes nine thousand, besides my former summe,
Which makes it fine and twenty. Still in motion
Of raging wastef: It cannot hold, it will not.
If I want Gold, steale but a beggers Dogge,
And giue it Timon, why the Dogge comes Gold.
If I would sell my Horse, and buy twenty moe
Better then he; why giue my Horse to Timon.
Aske nothing, giue it him, it Poles me straight
And able Horses: No Porter at his gate,
But rather one that smiles, and still inuities
All that passe by. It cannot hold, no reason
Can sound his state in safety. Caphis ho,
Caphis I say.

Enter Caphis.

Ca. Heere sir, what is your pleasure.

Ser. Get on your cloake, & haft you to Lord Timon,
Importune him for my Moneyes, be not ceast
With slight deniall; nor then silene'd, when Commend me to your Master, and the Cap
Plays in the right hand, thus: but tell him,
My Vles cry to me; I must serue my turne
Out of mine owne, his dayes and times are past,
And my reliances on his fracted dates
Haue smit my credit. I loue, and honour him,
But must not breake my backe, to heale his finger.
Immediate are my needs, and my reliefe
Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,
But finde supply immediate. Get you gone,
Put on a most importunate aspect,
A visage of demand: for I do feare
When euery Feather tickes in his owne wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull;
Which flashes now a Phoenix, get you gone.

Ca. I go sir.

Ser. I go sir?

Take the Bonds along with you,

And haue the dates in. Come.

Ca. I will Sir.

Ser. Go. Exit

Enter Steward, with many billes in his hand.

Stew. No care, no stop, so senselesse of expence,
That he will neither know how to maintaine it,
Nor cease his flow of Riot. Takes no account
How things go from him, nor resume no care
Of what is to continue: neuer minde,
Was to be so vnwise, to be so kinde.
What shall be done, he will not heare, till feele:
I must be round with him, now he comes from hunting,
Fye, sic, sic, sic.

Enter Caphis, Isidore, and Varro.

Cap. Good euen Varro: what, you come for money?

Var. Is't not your businesse too?

Cap. It is, and yours too, Isidore?

Isid. It is so.

Cap. Would we were all discharg'd.

Var. I feare it,

Cap. Heere comes the Lord.

Enter Timon, and his Traine.

Tim. So soone as dinners done, wee'l forth againe
My Alcibiades. With me, what is your will?

Cap. My Lord, heere is a note of certaine dues.

Tim. Dues? whence are you?

Cap. Of Athens heere, my Lord.

Tim. Go to my Steward.

Cap. Please it your Lordship, he hath put me off
To the succession of new dayes this moneth:
My Master is awak'd by great Occasion,
To call vpon his owne, and humbly prayes you,
That with your other Noble parts, you'll suite,
In giuing him his right.

Tim. Mine honest Friend,
I prythee but repaire to me next morning.

Cap. Nay, good my Lord.

Tim. Containe thy selfe, good Friend.

Var. One Varroes seruant, my good Lord.

Isid. From Isidore, he humbly prayes your speedy payment.

Cap. If you did know my Lord, my Masters wants.

Var. 'Twas due on forfeiture my Lord, sixe weekes,
and past.

Isid. Your Steward puts me off my Lord, and I Am sent exprefely to your Lordship.

Tim. Giue me breath:

I do beseech you good my Lords keepe on,
Ile waite vpon you instantly. Come hither: pray you
How goes the world, that I am thus encountred
With clamorous demands of debt, broken Bonds,
And the detention of long since due debts
Against my Honor?

Stew. Please you Gentlemen,

The time is vnagreeable to this businesse:

Your importunacie cease, till after dinner,

That I may make his Lordship vnderstand,

Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so my Friends, see them well entertain'd.

Stew. Pray draw neere. Exit.

Enter Apemantus and Foole.

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the Foole with Apeman- tus, let's ha some sport with 'em.

Var. Hang him, hee'l abuse vs.

Isid. A plague vpon him dogge.

Var. How dost Foole?

Ape. Dost Dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. I speake not to thee.

Ape. No 'tis to thy selfe. Come away.

Isid. There's the Foole hangs on your backe already.

Ape. No thou stand'st single, th'art not on him yet.

Cap. Where's the Foole now?

Ape. He last ask'd the question. Poore Rogues, and Vsurers men, Bauds betweene Gold and want.

All. What are we Apemantus?

Ape. Asses.

All. Why?

Ape. That you ask me what you are, & do not know your selues. Speake to 'em Foole.

Foole. How do you Gentlemen?

All. Gramercies good Foole:

How does your Mistris?

Foole.

Foole. She's e'ne setting on water to scald such Chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth.
 Ape. Good, Gramercy.

Enter Page.

Foole. Looke you, heere comes my Masters Page.

Page. Why how now Captaine? what do you in this wife Company.

How dost thou Apemantus?

Ape. Would I had a Rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Boy. Prythee Apemantus read me the superscription of these Letters, I know not which is which.

Ape. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Ape. There will little Learning dye then that day thou art hang'd. This is to Lord Timon, this to Alcibiades. Go thou wast borne a Bastard, and thou't dye a Bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelp'd a Dogge, and thou shalt famish a Dogges death.

Answer not, I am gone.

Exit

Ape. Ene so thou out-runst Grace,
 Foole. I will go with you to Lord Timons.

Foole. Will you leave me there?

Ape. If Timon stay at home.

You three serve three Vsurers?

All. I would they seru'd vs.

Ape. So would I:

As good a trick as ever Hangman seru'd Theefe.

Foole. Are you three Vsurers men?

All. I Foole.

Foole. I thinke no Vsurer, but ha's a Foole to his Seruant. My Mistis is one, and I am her Foole: when men come to borrow of your Masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry: but they enter my Masters house merrily, and go away sadly. The reason of this?

Var. I could render one.

Ape. Do it then, that we may account thee a Whoremaster, and a Knaue, which notwithstanding thou shalt be no lesse esteemed.

Varro. What is a Whoremaster Foole?

Foole. A Foole in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit, sometime 't appears like a Lord, sometime like a Lawyer, sometime like a Philosopher, with two stones more then's artificiall one. Hee is verie often like a Knight; and generally, in all shapes that man goes vp and downe in, from fourescore to thirteen, this spirit walkes in.

Var. Thou art not altogether a Foole.

Foole. Nor thou altogether a Wife man,
 As much foolerie as I haue, so much wit thou lack'st.

Ape. That answer might haue become Apemantus.

All. Aside, aside, heere comes Lord Timon.

Enter Timon and Steward.

Ape. Come with me (Foole) come.

Foole. I do not alwayes follow Louer, seldier Brother, and Woman, sometime the Philosopher.

Stew. Pray you walk on eere,

He speake with you anon.

Exeunt.

Tim. You make me meruell wherefore ere this time

Had you not fully laide my state before me,

That I might so haue rated my expence

As I had leaue of meanes.

Stew. You would not heare me:

At many leysures I propose.

Tim. Go too:

*Perchance some single vantages you tooke,
 When my indisposition put you backe,
 And that vnaptnesse made your minister
 Thus to excuse your selfe.*

Stew. O my good Lord,

*At many times I brought in my accompts,
 Laid them before you, you would throw them off,
 And say you found them in mine honestie,
 When for some trifling present you haue bid me
 Returne so much, I haue shooke my head, and wept:
 Yea 'gainst th' Authoritie of manners, pray'd you
 To hold your hand more close: I did indure
 Not sildome, nor no slight checkes, when I haue
 Prompted you in the ebbe of your estate,
 And your great flow of debts; my lou'd Lord,
 Though you heare now (too late) yes nowes a time,
 The greatest of your hauing, lacks a halfe,
 To pay your present debts.*

Tim. Let all my Land be sold.

Stew. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone,
 And what remains will hardly stop the mouth
 Of present dues; the future comes apace:
 What shall defend the interim, and at length
 How goes our reck'ning?

Tim. To Lacedemon did my Land extend.

Stew. O my good Lord, the world is but a word,
 Were it all yours, to giue it in a breath,
 How quickly were it gone.

Tim. You tell me true.

Stew. If you suspect my Husbandry or Falshood,
 Call me before th' exactest Auditors,
 And set me on the prooffe. So the Gods blesse me,
 When all our Offices haue bene oppress'd
 With riotous Feuders, when our Vaults haue wept
 With drunken spilt of Wine; when every roome
 Hath blaz'd with Lights, and braid with Minstrelle,
 I haue retyr'd me to a wastefull cocke,
 And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prythee no more.

Stew. Heauens haue I said, the bounty of this Lord:
 How many prodigall bits haue Slaues and Pezants
 This night englutted: who is not Timons,
 What heart, head, sword, force, meanes, but is L. Timons:
 Great Timon, Noble, Worthy, Royall Timon:
 Ah, when the meanes are gone, that buy this praise,
 The breath is gone whereof this praise is made:
 Feast won, fast lost; one cloud of Winter showres,
 These flies are coucht.

Tim. Come sermon me no further.

*No villanous bounty yet hath past my heart;
 Vnwisely, not ignobly haue I giuen.
 Why dost thou weepe, canst thou the conscience lacke,
 To thinke I shall lacke friends: secure thy heart,
 If I would broach the vessels of my loue,
 And try the argument of hearts, by borrowing,
 Men, and mens fortunes could I frankly vse
 As I can bid thee speake.*

Ste. Assurance blesse your thoughts.

Tim. And in some sort these wants of mine are crown'd,
 That I account them blessings. For by these Shall I trie Friends. You shall perceiue
 How you mistake my Fortunes:
 I am wealthie in my Friends.

Within there, Flaminus, Sernilinus?

Enter

Enter three Seruants.

Ser. My Lord, my Lord.

Tim. I will dispatch you severally.

You to Lord Lucius, to Lord Lucullus you, I hunted with his Honor to day; you to Sempronius; commend me to their loues; and I am proud say, that my occasions haue found time to vse 'em toward a supply of moey: let the request be fifty Talents.

Flam. As you haue said, my Lord.

Stew. Lord Lucius and Lucullus? Humh.

Tim. Go you fir to the Senators;

*Of whom, euen to the States best health; I haue
 Deser'd this Hearing: bid 'em send o'th instant
 A thousand Talents to me.*

Ste. I haue bene bold

(For that I knew it the most generall way)

To them, to vse your Signet, and your Name,

But they do shake their heads, and I am heere

No richer in returne.

Tim. Is't true? Can't be?

Stew. They answer in a ioynt and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall, want Treasure cannot

Do what they would, are sorrie: you are Honourable,

But yet they could haue wish't, they know not,

Something hath bene amiss; a Noble Nature

May catch a wench; would all were well; tis pittie,

And so intending other serious matters,

After distastefull lookes; and these hard Fractions

With certaine halfe-caps, and cold mouing nods,

They froze me into Silence.

Tim. You Gods reward them:

Prythee man looke cheerefully. These old Fellowes

Haue their ingratitude in them Hereditary:

Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it sildome flowes,

'Tis lacke of kindly warmth, they are not kinde;

And Nature, as it growes againe toward earth,

Is fashion'd for the iourney, dull and heavy.

Go to Ventidius (prythee be not sad,

Thou art true, and honest; Ingeniously I speake,

No blame belongs to thee: Ventidius lately

Buried his Father, by whose death hee's stepp'd

Into a great estate: When he was poore,

Imprison'd, and in fearfull of Friends,

I cleer'd him with fife Talents: Greet him from me,

Bid him suppose, some good necessity

Touches his Friend, which craves to be remembred

With those fife Talents; that had, giue't these Fellowes

To whom 'tis instant due. Neu't speake, or thinke,

That Timons fortunes 'mong his Friends can sinke.

Stew. I would I could not thinke it:

That thought is Bounties Foe;

Being free it selfe, it thinkes all others so. Exeunt

Flaminus waiting to speake with a Lord from his Master, enters a seruant to him.

Ser. I haue told my Lord of you, he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thanke you Sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Ser. Heere's my Lord.

Luc. One of Lord Timons men? A Guist I warrant.
 Why this hits right: I dreamt of a Siluer Bason & Ewre to night. Flaminus, honest Flaminus, you are verie re-spectiue welcome fir. Fill me some Wine. And how does that Honourable, Compleate, Free-hearted Gentleman of Athens, thy very bouitfull good Lord and Mayster?

Flam. His health is well fir.

Luc. I am right glad that his health is well fir: and what hast thou there vnder thy Cloake, pretty Flaminus?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box Sir, which in my Lords behalfe, I come to intreat your Honor to supply: who, hauing great and instant occasion to vse fiftie Talents, hath sent to your Lordship to furnish him: nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Luc. La, la, la, la: Nothing doubting sayes hee? Alas good Lord, a Noble Gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep to good a house. Many a time and often I ha din'd with him, and told him on't, and come againe to supper to him of purpose, to haue him spend lesse, and yet he wold embrace no counsell, take no warning by my coming, eue-ry man has his fault, and honesty is his. I ha told him on't, but I could nere get him from't.

Enter Seruant with Wine.

Ser. Please your Lordship, heere is the Wine.

Luc. Flaminus, I haue noted thee alwayes wife.

Heere's to thee.

Flam. Your Lordship speakes your pleasure.

Luc. I haue obserued thee alwayes for a towardlie prompt spirit, giue thee thy due, and one that knowes what belongs to reason; and canst vse the time wel, if the time vse thee well. Good parts in thee; get you gone firrah. Draw neerer honest Flaminus. Thy Lords a boun-tiffull Gentleman, but thou art wife, and thou know'st well enough (although thou com'st to me) that this is no time to lend money, especially vpon bare friendshippe without securitie. Heere's three Solidares for thee, good Boy winke at me, and say thou saw'st mee not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible the world should so much differ,
 And we alieue that liued? Fly damned basenesse
 To him that worships thee.

Luc. Ha? Now I see thou art a Foole, and fir for thy Master.  Exit L.

Flam. May these adde to the number y may scald thee:
 Let moulten Coine be thy damnation,
 Thou diseafe of a friend, and not him selfe:
 Has friendship such a faint and milkie heart,
 It turnes in lesse then two nights? O you Gods!
 I feele my Masters passion. This Slaue vnto his Honor,
 Has my Lords meate in him:
 Why should it thrine, and turne to Nutriment,
 When he is turn'd to poyson?
 O may Diseases onely worke vpon't:
 And when he's sicke to death, let not that part of Nature
 Which my Lord payd for, be of any power
 To expell sicknesse, but prolong his hower.  Exit.

Enter Lucius with three strangers.

Luc. Who the Lord Timon? He is my very good friend and an Honourable Gentleman.

1. We know him for no lesse, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing my Lord, and which I heare from common rumours, now Lord Timons happie howres are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Lucius. Eye no, doe not beleue it: hee cannot want for money.

2. But beleue you this my Lord, that not long agoe, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus, to borrow so many Talents, nay vrg'd extremly for't, and shewed
 what

what necessity belong'd too't, and yet was deny'de.

Luci. How?

2 I tell you, deny'de my Lord.

Luci. What a strange case was that? Now before the Gods I am asham'd on't. Denied that honourable man? There was verie little Honour shew'd in't. For my owne part, I must needs confesse, I haue receyued some small kindneses from him, as Money, Plate, Jewels, and such like Trifles; nothing comparing to his: yet had hee mi- rooke him, and sent to me, I should ne're haue denied his Occasion so many Talents.

Enter Seruilius.

Seruilius. See, by good hap yonders my Lord, I haue swet to see his Honor. My Honor'd Lord.

Luci. Seruilius. You are kindly met sir. Farthewell, commend me to thy Honourable vertuous Lord, my very exquisite Friend.

Seruilius. May it please your Honour, my Lord hath sent

Luci. Ha? what ha's he sent? I am so much endeered to that Lord; hee's euer sending: how shall I thank him think'st thou? And what has he sent now?

Seruilius. Has onely sent his present Occasion now my Lord: requesting your Lordship to supply his instant vse with so many Talents.

Luci. I know his Lordship is but merry with me, He cannot want fifty five hundred Talents.

Seruilius. But in the mean time he wants lesse my Lord. If his occasion were not vertuous, I should not vrge it halfe so faithfully.

Luci. Dost thou speake seriously Seruilius?

Seruilius. Vpon my soule 'tis true Sir.

Luci. What a wicked Beast was I to disfigure my self against such a good time, when I might ha shewn my selfe Honourable? How unluckily it hapned, that I shold Purchase the day before for a little part, and vndo a great deale of Honour? Seruilius. now before the Gods I am not able to do (the more beast I say) I was sending to vse Lord Timon my selfe, these Gentlemen can witness; but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good Lordship, and I hope his Honor will conceiue the fairest of mee, because I haue no power to be kinde. And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions say, that I cannot pleasure such an Honourable Gentleman. Good Seruilius, will you befriend mee so farre, as to vse mine owne words to him?

Seruilius. Yes sir, I shall.

Exit Seruilius.

Luci. Hee looke you out a good turne Seruilius.

True as you said, Timon is shrunke indeede,

And he that's once deny'de, will hardly speede.

Exit.

1 Do you obserue this Hofilius?

2 I, to well.

1 Why this is the worlds soule,

And iust of the same peece

Is euery Flatterers sport: who can call him his Friend

That dips in the same dish? For in my knowing

Timon has bin this Lords Father,

And kept his credit with his purse:

Supported his estate, nay Timons money

Has paid his men their wages. He ne're drinckes,

But Timons Silver treads vpon his Lip,

And yet, oh see the monstrousnesse of man,

When he lookes out in an vngratefull shape;

He does deny him (in respect of his)

What charitable men afford to Beggars,
3 Religion grones at it.

1 For mine owne part, I neuer tasted Timon in my life
Nor came any of his bounties ouer me,
To marke me for his Friend. Yet I protest,
For his right Noble minde, illustrious Vertue,
And Honourable Carriage,
Had his necessity made vse of me,
I would haue put my wealth into Donation,
And the best halfe should haue return'd to him,
So much I loue his heart: But I perceiue,
Men must learne now with pittie to dispence,
For Policy sits aboue Conscience.

Exit.

Enter a third servant with Sempronius, another of Timons Friends.

Semp. Must he needs trouble me in't? Hum.
Boue all others?

He might haue tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus,
And now Ventidius is wealthy too,
Whom he redem'd from prison. All these Owes their estates vnto him.

Ser. My Lord,
They haue all bin touch'd, and found Base-Mettle,
For they haue all denied him.

Semp. How? Haue they deny'de him?
Has Ventidius and Lucullus deny'de him,
And does he send to me? Three? Hum? It shewes but litle loue, or iudgement in him.
Must I be his last Refuge? His Friends (like Physicians)
Thriue, giue him ouer: Must I take th' Cure vpon me?
Has much disgrac'd me in't, I'me angry at him,
That might haue knowne my place. I see no sense for't,
But his Occasions might haue wooed me first:
For in my conscience, I was the first man
That ere receiued gift from him.

And does he thinke so backwardly of me now,
That he requite it last? No:
So it may proue an Argument of Laughter
To th' rest, and 'mongst Lords be thought a Foole:
I'de rather then the worth of thrice the summe,
Had sent to me first, but for my mindes sake:
I'de such a courage to do him good. But now returne,
And with their faint reply, this answer ioync;
Who bates mine Honor, shall not know my Coyne. Exit.

Ser. Excellent: Your Lordships a goodly Villain: the diuell knew not what he did, when hee made man Poli-ticke; he crossed himselfe by't: and I cannot thinke, but in the end, the Villanies of man will set him cleere. How fairly this Lord strives to appeare soule? Takes Vertuous Copies to be wicked: like those, that vnder hott ear-dent zeale, would set whole Realmes on fire, of such a nature is his politike loue.

This was my Lords best hope, now all are fled
Sae onely the Gods. Now his Friends are dead,
Doores that were ne're acquainted with their Wards
Many a bounteous yeere, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their Master:
And this is all a liberall course allowes,
Who cannot keepe his wealth, must keepe his house. Exit.

Enter Varro's man, meeting others. All Timons Creditors to wait for his comming out. Then enter Lucius and Hortensius.

Var. man. Well met, goodmorrow Titus & Hortensius

Titus

Tit. The like to you kinde Varro.

Hort. Lucius, what do we meet together?

Luci. I, and I think one businesse do's command vs all.

For mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs, and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luci. And sir Philotus too.

Phil. Good day at once.

Luci. Welcome good Brother.

What do you thinke the houre?

Phil. Labouring for Nine.

Luci. So much?

Phil. Is not my Lord scene yet?

Luci. Not yet.

Phil. I wonder on't, he was wont to shine at seauen.

Luci. I, but the dayes are waxt shorter with him:

You must consider, that a Prodigall course

like the Sunnes, but not like his recoverable, I feare:

'Tis deepest Winter in Lord Timons purse, that is: One may reach deepe enough, and yet finde litle.

Phil. I am of your feare, for that.

Tit. He shew you how 'tobserue a strange euent:

Your Lord sends now for Money?

Hort. Most true, hee doe's.

They haue all bin touch'd, and found Base-Mettle,

For which I waite for money.

Hort. It is against my heart.

Luci. Marke how strange it shewes,

Timon in this, should pay more then he owes:

And e'ne as if your Lord should weare rich Jewels,

And send for money for 'em.

Hort. I'me weary of this Charge,

The Gods can witness:

I know my Lord hath spent of Timons wealth,

And now Ingratitude, makes it worse then stealth.

Varro. Yes, mine's three thousand Crownes:

What's yours?

Luci. Five thousand mine.

Varro. 'Tis much deepe, and it should seem by th' sum

Your Masters confidence was aboue mine,

Else surely his had equall'd.

Enter Flamininus.

Tit. One of Lord Timons men.

Luci. Flamininus Sir, a word: Pray is my Lord readie to come forth?

Flam. No, indeede he is not.

Tit. We attend his Lordship: pray signifie so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that, he knowes you are too

Enter Steward in a Cloake, muffled. (diligent.

Luci. Ha: is not that his Steward muffled so?

He goes away in a Clowd: Call him, call him.

Tit. Do you heare, sir?

2 Varro. By your leaue, sir.

Stew. What do ye aske of me, my Friend.

Tit. We waite for certaine Money heere, sir.

Stew. I, if Money were as certaine as your waiting,

'Twere sure enough.

Why then prefer'd you not your summes and Billes

When your false Masters eate of my Lords meat?

Then they could smile, and sawne vpon his debts,

And take downe th' Interest into their glutt'nous Mawes.

You do your selues but wrong, to stirre me vp,

Let me passe quietly.

Believe't, my Lord and I haue made an end,

I haue no more to reckon, hee to spend.

Luci. I, but this answer will not serue.

Stew. If 'twill not serue, 'tis not so base as you,
For you serue Knaues.

1 Varro. How? What does his casheer'd Worship mutter?

2 Varro. No matter what, 'hee's poore, and that's reuenge enough. Who can speake broader, then hee that has no house to put his head in? Such may rayle against great buildings.

Enter Seruilius.

Tit. Oh heere's Seruilius: now wee shall know some answers.

Seru. If I might beseech you Gentlemen, to repayre some other houre, I should deriue much from't. For tak't of my soule, my Lord leanes wondrously to discontent:
His comfortable temper has forsooke him, he's much out of health, and keeps his Chamber.

Luci. Many do keepe their Chambers, are not sicke:
And if it be so farre beyond his health,

Me thinks he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a cleere way to the Gods.

Seruilius. Good Gods.

Titus. We cannot take this for answer, sir.

Flamininus within. Seruilius helpe, my Lord, my Lord.

Enter Timon in a rage.

Tim. What, are my dores oppos'd against my passage?

Haue I bin euer free, and must my house

Be my retentive Enemy? My Gaole?

The place which I haue Feasted, does it now

(Like all Mankinde) shew me an Iron heart?

Luci. Put in now Titus.

7 Tit. My Lord, heere is my Bill.

Luci. Heere's mine.

1 Var. And mine, my Lord.

2 Var. And ours, my Lord.

Phil. All our Billes.

Tim. Knocke me downe with 'em, cleaue mee to the Girdle.

Luci. Alas, my Lord.

Tim. Cut my heart in summes.

Tit. Mine, fifty Talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luci. Five thousand Crownes, my Lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops payes that.

What yours? and yours?

1 Var. My Lord.

2 Var. My Lord.

Tim. Teare me, take me, and the Gods fall vpon you.

Exit Timon.

Hort. Faith I perceiue our Masters may throwe their caps at their money, these debts may well be call'd desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em.

Exit.

Enter Timon.

Timon. They haue e'ne put my breath from mee the slaves. Creditors? Diuels.

Stew. My deere Lord.

Tim. What if it should be so?

Stew. My Lord.

Tim. He haue it so. My Steward?

Stew. Heere my Lord.

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my Friends againe;

Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius Vitoria: All,

He once more feast the Rascals.

Stew. O my Lord, you onely speake from your distracted soule; there's not so much left to, furnish out a moderate Table.

Timon.

Tim. Be it not in thy care:
Go I charge thee, invite them all, let in the tide
Of Knaues once more: my Cooke and Ile provide, Exeunt

Enter three Senators at one doore, Alcibiades meeting them, with Attendants.

1. Sen. My Lord, you haue my voyce, too't,
The faults Bloody:
'Tis necessary he should dye:
Nothing imboldens sinne so much, as Mercy:
2. Most true; the Law shall bruite 'em.
Alc. Honor, heath, and compassion to the Senate.
1. Now Captaine.

Alc. I am an humble Sutor to your Vertues;
For pitty is the vertue of the Law,
And none but Tyrants vse it cruelly.
It pleases time and Fortune to lye heauie
Vpon a Friend of mine, who in hot blood
Hath slept into the Law: which is past depth
To those that (without heede) do plunge into't.
He is a Man (setting his Fate aside) of comely Vertues,
Nor did he foyle the fact with Cowardice,
(And Honour in him, which buyes out his fault)
But with a Noble Fury, and faire spirit,
Seeing his Reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his Foe:
And with such sober and vnnoted passion
He did bechooke his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prou'd an Argument.

1. Sen. You vndergo too strict a Paradox,
Striving to make an vgly deed looke faire:
Your words haue tooke such paines, as if they labour'd
To bring Man-slaughter into forme, and set Quarrelling
Vpon the head of Valour; which indeede
Is Valour misbegot, and came into the world,
When Sects, and Factions were newly borne.
Hee's truly Valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breath,
And make his Wrongs, his Out-side,
To weare them like his Rayment, carelessly,
And ne're preferre his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.
If Wrongs be euilles, and inforce vs kill,
What Foily 'tis, to hazard life for ill.

Alc. My Lord.

1. Sen. You cannot make grosse finnes looke cleare,
To reuenge is no Valour, but to beare.

Alc. My Lords, then vnder fauour, pardon me,
If I speake like a Captaine.

Why do fond men expose themselves to Battell,
And not endure all threats? Sleepe vpon't,
And let the Foes quietly cut their Throats
Without repugnancy? If there be Such Valour in the bearing, what make wee Abroad? Why then, Women are more valiant
That stay at home, if Bearing carry it:
And the Assle, more Captaine then the Lyon?
The fellow laden with Irons, wiser then the Iudge?
If Wisedome be in suffering, Oh my Lords,
As you are great, be pittifully Good,
Who cannot condemne rashnesse in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is finnes extreamest Guilt,
But in defence, by Mercy, 'tis most iust.

To be in Anger, is impietie:

But who is Man, that is not Angrie.

Weigh but the Crime with this.

2. Sen. You breath in vaine.

Alc. In vaine?

His seruice done at Lacedemon, and Bizantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1. What's that?

Alc. Why say my Lords ha's done faire seruice,
And slaine in fight many of your enemies:
How full of valour did he beare himselfe
In the last Conflict, and made plenteous wounds?

2. He has made too much plenty with him:
He's a sworne Rioter, he has a sinne
That often drownes him, and takes his valour prisoner.
If there were no Foes, that were enough
To ouercome him. In that Beasly furie,
He has bin knowne to commit outrages,
And cherish Factions. 'Tis infer'd to vs,
His dayes are foule, and his drinke dangerous.

1. He dyes.

Alc. Hard fate: he might haue dyed in warre.
My Lords, if not for any parts in him,
Though his right arme might purchase his owne time,
And be in debt to none: yet more to moue you,
Take my deserts to his, and ioyne 'em both.
And for I know, your reuerend Ages loue Security,
Ile pawne my Victories, all my Honour to you
Vpon his good returns.

If by this Crime, he owes the Law his life,
Why let the Warre receiue't in valiant gore,
For Law is strict, and Warre is nothing more.

1. We are for Law, he dyes, vrg it no more
On height of our displeasure: Friend, or Brother,
He forfeits his owne blood, that spillles another.

Alc. Must it be so? It must not bee:
My Lords, I do beseech you know mee.

2. How?

Alc. Call me to your remembrances.

3. What.

Alc. I cannot thinke but your Age has forgot me,
It could not else be, I should proue so base,
To sue and be deny'd such common Grace.
My wounds ake at you.

1. Do you dare our anger?

'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect:
We banish thee for euer.

Alc. Banish me?

Banish your dotage, banish vsurie,
That makes the Senate vgly.

1. If after two dayes shine, Athens containe thee,
Attend our weightier Iudgement.

And not to swell our Spirit,

He shall be executed presently. Exeunt.

Alc. Now the Gods keepe you old enough,
That you may liue

Onely in bone, that none may looke on you,
I'm worse then mad: I haue kept backe their Foes

While they haue sold their Money, and let out
Their Coine vpon large interest. I my selfe,

Rich onely in large hurts. All those, for this?

Is this the Balsome, that the vsuring Senat
Powres into Captaines wounds? Banishment.

It comes not ill: I hate not to be banish'd,

It is a cause worthy my Spicene and Furie,

That I may strike at Athens. Ile cheere vp

My discontented Troopes, and lay for hearts;

'Tis Honour with most Lands to be at odds,

Souldiers should brooke as little wrongs as Gods. Exit.

Enter diuers Friends at severall doores.

1. The good time of day to you, sir.
2. I also wish it to you: I thinke this Honorable Lord did but try vs this other day.

1. Vpon that were my thoughts trying when wee encounter'd. I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seeme in the triall of his feuerall Friends.

2. It should not be, by the perswasion of his new Fearing.

1. I should thinke so. He hath sent mee an earnest inuiting, which many my neere occasions did vrg mee to put off: but he hath conuinc'd mee beyond them, and I must needs appeare.

2. In like manner was I in debt to my importunat businesse, but he would not heare my excuse. I am forne, when he sent to borrow of mee, that my Prouision was out.

1. I am sicke of that greefe too, as I vnderstand how all things go.

2. Euery man heares so: what would hee haue borrowed of you?

1. A thousand Peeeces.

2. A thousand Peeeces?

1. What of you?

2. He sent to me sir — Heere he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart Gentlemen both; and how fare you?

1. Euer at the best, hearing well of your Lordship.

2. The Swallow followes not Summer more willing, then we your Lordship.

Tim. Nor more willingly leaues Winter, such Summer Birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompence this long stay: feast your eares with the Mu-sicke awhile: If they will fare so harshly o'th Trumpets found: we shall too't presently.

1. I hope it remains not unkindely with your Lordship, that I return'd you an empty Messenger.

Tim. O sir, let it not trouble you.

2. My Noble Lord.

Tim. Ah my good Friend, what cheere?

The Banquet brought in.

2. My most Honorable Lord, I am e'ne sick of shame, that when your Lordship this other day sent to me, I was so vnfortunate a Beggar.

Tim. Thinke not on't, sir.

2. If you had sent but two houres before.

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance.
Come bring in all together.

2. All couer'd Dishes.

1. Royall Cheare, I warrant you.

3. Doubt not that, if money and the season can yeild it.

1. How do you? What's the newes?

Alcibiades is banish'd: heare you of it?

Both. Alcibiades banish'd?

3. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1. How? How?

2. I pray you vpon what?

Tim. My worthy Friends, will you draw neere?

3. Ile tell you more anon. Heere's a Noble feast toward

2. This is the old man still.

3. Wilt hold? Wilt hold?

2. It do's: but time will, and so.

3. I do conceyue.

Tim. Each man to his stoole, with that spurre as hee would to the lip of his Mistress: your dyer shall bee in all places alike. Make not a Citie Feast of it, to let the meat coole, ere we can agree vpon the first place. Sit, sit.
The Gods require our Thankes.

You great Benefactors, sprinkle our Society with Thankfulness. For your owne guists, make your selues prais'd: But reuerne still to giue, least your Duties be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one needs not lend to another. For were your Godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the Gods. Make the Meate be beloued, more then the Man that giues it. Let no Assembly of Twenty, be without a score of Villaines. If there sit twelue Women at the Table, let a dozen of them bee as they are. The rest of your Fees, O Gods, the Senators of Athens, together with the common legges of People, what is amisse in them, you Gods, make suteable for destruction. For these my present Friends, as they are to mee nothing, so in nothing blesse them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Vncover Dogges, and lap.

Some speake. What do's his Lordship meane?

Some other. I know not.

Timon. May you a better Feast neuer behold
You knot of Mouth-Friends: Smoke, & lukewarm water
Is your perfection. This is Timons last,
Who sticke and spangled you with Flatteries,
Washes it off and sprinkles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Liue loath'd, and long
Most smiling, smooth, detested Parasites,
Curteous Destroyers, affable Wolves, meeke Beares:
You Fooles of Fortune, Trencher-friends, Times Flyes,
Cap and knee-Slaues, vapours, and Minute lackes.
Of Man and Beast, the infinite Maladie
Crust you quite o're. What do'st thou go?
Soft, take thy Physicke first; thou too, and thou:
Stay I will lend thee money, borrow none.
What? All in Motion? Henceforth be no Feast,
Whereat a Villaine's not a welcome Guest.
Burne house, sinke Athens, henceforth hated be Of Timon Man, and all Humanity. Exit.

Enter the Senators, with other Lords.

1. How now, my Lords?

2. Know you the quality of Lord Timons fury?

3. Push, did you see my Cap?

4. I haue lost my Gowne.

1. He's but a mad Lord, & nought but humors swaies him. He gaue me a Iewell th'other day, and now hee has beate it out of my hat.

Did you see my Iewell?

2. Did you see my Cap.

3. Heere 'tis.

4. Heere lyes my Gowne.

1. Let's make no stay.

2. Lord Timons mad.

3. I feel't vpon my bones.

4. One day he giues vs Diamonds, next day stones.

Exeunt the Senators.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me looke backe vpon thee. O thou Wall
That girdles in those Wolves, diue in the earth,
And fence not Athens. Matrons, turne incontinent, Obedience fayle in Children: Slaues and Fooles

h h

Plucke

Plucke the graue wrinkled Senate from the Bench;
And minister in their steeds, to generall Filches.
Conuert o'th' Instant greene Virginity,
Doo't in your Parents eyes. Bankrupt, hold fast
Rather then render backe; out with your Knives,
And cut your Trusters throates. Bound Seruants, steale, Large-handed Robbers your graue Masters are,
And pill by Law. Maide, to thy Masters bed,
Thy Mistis is o'th' Brothell. Some of sixteen,
Plucke the lyn'd Crutch from thy old limping Sire,
With it, beate out his Braines. Piety, and Feare,
Religion to the Gods, Peace, Iustice, Truth,
Domesticke awe, Night-rest, and Neighbour-hood,
Instruction, Manners, Mysteries, and Trades,
Degrees, Obseruances, Customes, and Lawes,
Decline to your confounding contraries.
And yet Confusion liue: Plagues incident to men,
Your potent and infectious Feauors, heape
On Athens ripe for stroke. Thou cold Sciatica,
Cripple our Senators, that their limbes may halt
As lamely as their Manners. Lust, and Libertie
Creepe in the Mindes and Marrowes of our youth,
That 'gainst the fireame of Vertue they may strue,
And drowne themselves in Riot. Itches, Blaines,
Sowe all th'Athenian bosomes, and their crop
Be generall Leprosie: Breath, infect breath,
That their Society (as their Friendship) may Be meere poysen. Nothing Ile beate from thee
But nakednesse, thou detestable Towne,
Take thou that too, with multiplying Bannes:
Timon will to the Woods, where he shall finde
Th'vnikindest Beast, more kinder then Mankinde.
The Gods confound (heare me you good Gods all)
Th'Athenians both within and out that Wall:
And graunt as Timon growes, his hate may grow
To the whole race of Mankinde, high and low.
Amen.

Enter Steward with two or three Seruants.

1 Heare you M. Steward, where's our Master?
Are we vndone, cast off, nothing remaining?
Stew. Alack my Fellowes, what should I say to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous Gods,
I am as poore as you.

1 Such a House broke?
So Noble a Master false, all gone, and not
One friend to take his Fortune by the arme,
And go along with him.

2 As we do turne our backs
From our Companion, throwne into his graue,
So his Familiars to his buried Fortunes
Slinke all away. leaue their false vowes with him
Like empty purses pickt; and his poore selfe
A dedicated Beggar to the Ayre,
With his diseafe, of all thunn'd pauerty,
Walkes like contempt alone. More of our Fellowes.

Enter other Seruants.

Stew. All broken Implements of a ruin'd house.
3 Yet do our hearts weare Timons Liury,
That see I by our Faces: we are Fellowes still,
Seruing alike in sorrow: Leak'd is our Barke,
And we poore Mates, stand on the dying Decke,
Hearing the Surges threat: we must all part
Into this Sea of Ayre.

Stew. Good Fellowes all,

The latest of my wealth Ile share among't you.
Where euer we shall meete, for Timons sake,
Let's yet be Fellowes. Let's shake our heads, and say
As 'twere a Knell vnto our Masters Fortunes,
We haue seene better dayes. Let each take some:
Nay put out all your hands: Not one word more,
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poore.

Embrace and part (seuerall wayes).

Oh the fierce wretchednesse that Glory brings vs!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since Riches point to Misery and Contempt?
Who would be so mock'd with Glory, or to liue
But in a Dreame of Friendship,
To haue his pompe, and all what state compounds,
But onely painted like his varnish'd Friends:
Poore honest Lord, brought lowe by his owne heart,
Vndone by Goodnesse: Strange vnusuall blood,
When mans worst sinne is, He do's too much Good.
Who then dares to be halfe so kinde agen?
For Bounty that makes Gods, do still marre Men.
My dearest Lord, blest to be most accurst,
Rich onely to be wretched; thy great Fortunes
Are made thy cheefe Afflictions. Alas (kinde Lord)
Hee's slung in Rage from this ingratefull Seate
Of monstrous Friends:
Nor ha's he with him to supply his life,
Or that which can command it:
He follow and enquire him our.
He euer serue his minde, with my best will,
Whilst I haue Gold, Ile be his Steward still.

Enter Timon in the woods.

Tim. O blessed breeding Sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy Sisters Orbe
Infect the ayre. Twin'd Brothers of one wombe,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarfe is diuidant; touch them with seuerall fortunes,
The greater scornes the lesser. Not Nature
(To whom all foresay siege) can beare great Fortune
But by contempt of Nature.
Raife me this Begger, and deny't that Lord,
The Senators shall beare contempt Hereditary,
The Begger Nature Honor.
It is the Pastour Lards, the Brothers sides,
The want that makes him leaue: who dares? who dares
In puritie of Manhood stand vp right
And say, this mans a Flatterer. If one be,
So are they all: for euerie grize of Fortune
Is smoothe'd by that below. The Learned pate Duckes to the Golden Foole. All's oblique:
There's nothing leuell in our cursed Natures
But direct villanie. Therefore be abhorr'd,
All Feasts, Societies, and Throngs of men.
His semblable, yea himselfe Timon disdaines,
Destruction phang mankind; Earth yeeld me Rootes,
Who seekes for better of thee, sawce his palate
With thy most operant Poysen. What is heere?
Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious Gold?
No Gods, I am no idle Votarist,
Roots you cleere Heauens, Thus much of this will make Blacke, white; fowle, faire; wrong, right;
Base, Noble; Old, young; Coward, valiant.
Ha you Gods! why this? what this, you Gods? why this
Will lugge your Priests and Seruants from your sides:
Plucke stout mens pillows from below their heads.

This

This yellow Slaue,
Will knit and breake Religions, blesse th'accurrst,
Make the hoare Leprosie ador'd, place Theeues,
And giue them Title, knee, and approbation
With Senators on the Bench: This is it
That makes the wappen'd Widdow wed againe;
Shee, whom the Spittle-house, and vicerous sores,
Would cast the gorge at. This Embalmes and Spices
To'th' Aprill day againe. Come damn'd Earth,
Thou common whore of Mankinde, that puttest odde
Among the rout of Nations, I will make thee
Do thy right Nature. March as farre off.
Hear A Drumme? Th'art quick,
But yet lie bury thee: Thou' go (strong Theefe)
When Gowry keepers of thee cannot stand:
Nay stay thou out for earnest.

Enter Alcibiades with Drumme and pipe in warlike manner, and Phrynia and Timandra.

Alc. What art thou there? speake.
Tim. A Beast as thou art. The Canker gnaw thy hart
For shewing me againe the eyes of Man.
Alc. What is thy name? Is man so hatefull to thee,
That art thy selfe a Man?
Tim. I am Misanthropos, and hate Mankinde.
For thy part, I do with thou wert a dogge,
That I might loue thee something.

Alc. I know thee well:
But in thy Fortunes am vlearnd, and strange.
Tim. I know thee too, and more then that I know thee
I not desire to know. Follow thy Drumme,
With mans blood paint the ground Gules, Gules:
Religious Cannons, ciuill Lawes are cruell,
Then what should warre be? This fell whore of chine,
Hath in her more destruction then thy Sword,
For all her Cherubin looke.

Phry. Thy lips rot off.
Tim. I will not kisse thee, then the rot returnes
To thine owne lippes againe.
Alc. How came the Noble Timon to this change?
Tim. As the Moone do's, by wanting light to giue:
But then renew I could not like the Moone,
There were no Sunnes to borrow of.

Alc. Noble Timon, what friendship may I do thee?
Tim. None, but to maintaine my opinion.
Alc. What is it Timon?
Tim. Promise me Friendship, but performe none.
If thou wilt not promise, the Gods plague thee, for thou art a man: if thou do'st performe, confound thee, for thou art a man.

Alc. I haue heard in some sort of thy Miseries.
Tim. Thou saw'st them when I had prosperitie.
Alc. I see them now, then was a blessed time.
Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of Harlots.
Timan. Is this th'Athenian Minion, whom the world
Voic'd to regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?
Tim. Be a whore still, they loue thee not that vse thee, giue thee diseases, leauing with thee their Lust. Make vse of thy salt houres, season the slaues for Tubbes and Bathes, bring downe Rose-cheekt youth to the Fubfast, and the Diet.

Timan. Hang thee Monster.
Alc. Pardon him sweet Timandra, for his wits
Are drown'd and lost in his Calamities.

I haue but little Gold of late, braue Timon,
The want whereof, doth dayly make reuolt
In my penurious Band. I haue heard and greeu'd
How cursed Athens, mindelesse of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when Neighbour States
But for thy Sword and Fortune trod vpon them.

Tim. I prythee beate thy Drum, and get thee gone.
Alc. I am thy Friend, and pittie thee deere Timon.
Tim. How dost thou pittie him whom y dost trouble,
I had rather be alone.

Alc. Why fare thee well:
Heere is some Gold for thee.
Tim. Keepe it, I cannot eate it.
Alc. When I haue laid proud Athens on a heape.
Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens.
Alc. I Timon, and haue cause.
Tim. The Gods confound them all in thy Conquest,
And thee after, when thou hast Conquer'd.

Alc. Why me, Timon?
Tim. That by killing of Villaines
Thou wast borne to conquer my Country.
Put vp thy Gold. Go on, heeres Gold, go on;
Be as a Planetary plague, when Ioue
Will o're some high-Vic'd City, hang his poysen
In the sickle ayre: let not thy sword skip one:
Pitty not honour'd Age for his white Beard,
He is an Vsurer. Strike me the counterfet Matron,
It is her habite onely, that is honest,
Her selfe's a Bawd. Let not the Virgins cheekes
Make soft thy trenchant Sword: for those Milke pappes
That through the window Barne bore at mens eyes,
Are not within the Lease of pittie writ,
But set them down horrible Traitors. Spare not the Babe
Whose dimpled smiles from Fooles exhaust their mercy;
Thinke it a Bastard, whom the Oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced, the throat shall cut,
And mince it fans remorie. Swear against Obiects,
Put Armour on thine eares, and on thine eyes,
Whose proole, nor yels of Mothers, Maides, nor Babes,
Nor sight of Priests in holy Vestments bleeding,
Shall pierce a iot. There's Gold to pay thy Souldiers,
Make large confusion: and thy fury spent,
Confounded be thy selfe. Speake not, be gone.
Alc. Hast thou Gold yet, Ile take the Gold thou gi-nest me, not all thy Counsell.

Tim. Dost thou or dost thou not, Heauens curse vpon
thee.
Both. Giue vs some Gold good Timon, hast y more?
Tim. Enough to make a Whore forswear her Trade,
And to make Whores, a Bawd. Hold vp you Sluts
Your Aprons mountant; you are not Othable,
Although I know you'll sweare, terribly sweare
Into strong shudders, and to heavenly Agues
Th'immortall Gods that heare you. Spare your Oathes:
Ile trust to your Conditions, be whores still.
And he whose pious breath seekes to conuert you,
Be strong in Whore, allure him, burne him vp,
Let your close fire predominate his smoke,
And be no turne-coats: yet may your paines six months
Be quite contrary. And Thatch
Your poore thin Roofes with burthens of the dead,
(Some that were hang'd) no matter:
Weare them, betray with them; Whore still,
Paint till a horse may myre vpon your face:
A pox of wrinkles.

Both. Well, more Gold, what then?

h h 2

Beleeue't

Beleuc's that we'll do any thing for Gold.

Tim. Consumptions fowle
In hollow bones of man; strike their sharpe shinnes,
And marre mens spurring. Cracke the Lavviers voyce,
That he may neuer more false Title pleade,
Nor sound his Quillers shrilly: Hoare the Flamen,
That scold' it against the quality of flesh,
And not beleue himselfe. Downe with the Nose,
Downe with it flat, take the Bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to force (bald
Smels from the generall weale. Make curld pate Russians
And let the vncurld Braggerts of the Warre Deriue some paine from you. Plague all,
That your Actiuitie may defeat and quell
The fource of all Erektion. There's more Gold.
Do you damne others, and let this damne you,
And ditches graue you all.

Both. More counsell with more Money, bounteous
Timon.

Tim. More whore, more Mischeefe first, I haue gi-uen you earnest.

Alc. Strike vp the Drum towards Athens, farewell
Timon: if I thrive well, Ile visit thee againe.

Tim. If I hope well, Ile neuer see thee more.

Alc. I neuer did thee harme.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alc. Call'st thou that harme?

Tim. Men dayly finde it. Get thee away,

And take thy Beagles with thee.

Alc. We but offend him, strike. Exeunt.

Tim. That Nature being sicke of mans vnkindnesse
Should yet be hungry: Common Mother, thou
Whose wombe vnmeasureable, and infinite breist
Teemes and feeds all: whose selfesame Mettle
Whereof thy proud Childe (arrogant man) is puffe,
Engenders the blacke Toad, and Adder blew,
The gilded Newt, and cyclopsse venom'd Worme,
With all th'abhorred Births below Crispe Heauen,
Whereon Hyperions quickning fire doth shine:
Yeeld him, who all the humane Sonnes do hate,
From forth thy plenteous bosome, one poore roote:
Enseare thy Fertile and Conception wombe,
Let it no more bring out ingratefull man.
Goe great with Tygers, Dragons, Wolves, and Beares,
Teeme with new Monsters, whom thy vpward face
Hath to the Marbled Mansion all aboute
Neuer presented. O, a Root, deare thanks:
Dry vp thy Marrowes, Vines, and Plough-rotne Leas,
Whereof ingratefull man with Licourish draughts
And Morfels Vicious, greafes his pure minde,
That from it all Consideration slippes —

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague, plague.

Alc. I was directed hither. Men report,

Thou dost affect my Manners, and dost vse them.

Tim. 'Tis then, because thou dost not keepe a dogge

Whom I would imitate. Consumption catch thee.

Alc. This is in thee a Nature but infected,
A poore vomanly Melancholly sprung
From change of fature. Why this Spade? this place?
This Slave-like Habitt, and these lookes of Care?
Thy Flatterers yet weare Silke, drinke Wine, lye soft,
Hugge their diseases'd Perfumes, and haue forgot
That euer Timon was. Shame not these Woods,
By putting on the cunning of a Carper.
Be thou a Flatterer now, and seeke to thrive

By that which ha's vndone thee; hindge thy knee,
And let his very breath whom thou'lt obserue
Blow off thy Cap: praise his most vicious straine,
And call it excellent: thou wast told thus:
Thou gau'st thine eares (like Tapsters, that bad welcom)
To Knaues, and all approachers: 'Tis most iust
That thou turne Rascall, had'st thou wealth againe, Rascals should haue't. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'de throw away my selfe.
Alc. Thou hast cast away thy selfe, being like thy selfe.
A Madman so long, now a Foole: what think'st
That the bleake ayre, thy boysterous Chamberlaine
Will put thy shirt on warme? Will these moyft Trees,
That haue out-liv'd the Eagle, paye thy heeles
And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brooke
Candied with Ice, Cawdle thy Morning tasse
To cure thy o're-nights surfer? Call the Creatures,
Whose naked Natures liue in all the spight
Of wrekefull Heauen, whose bare vnhouse'd Trunkes
To the conflicting Elements expos'd
Answer meere Nature: bid them flatter thee.
O thou shalt finde.

Tim. A Foole of thee: depart.

Alc. I loue thee better now, then ere I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Alc. Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Alc. I flatter not, but say thou art a Caytiffe.

Tim. Why do'st thou seeke me out?

Alc. To vex thee.

Tim. Alwayes a Villaines Office, or a Fooles.

Dost please thy selfe in't?

Alc. I.

Tim. What, a Knaue too?

Alc. If thou did'st put this fowre cold habit on
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Dost it enforcedly: Thou d'st Courtier be againe
Wert thou not Beggar: willing misery
Out-lives incertaine pompe, is crown'd before:
The one is filling still, neuer compleat:
The other, at high wish: best state Contentlesse,
Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse then the worst Content.

Thou should'st define to dye, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable.
Thou art a Slave, whom Fortunes tender arme
With fauour neuer clapt: but bred a Dogge.
Had'st thou like vs from our first swath proceeded,
The sweet degrees that this breese world affords,
To such as may the passive drugges of it
Freely command't: thou would'st haue plung'd thy selfe
In generall Riot, melted downe thy youth
In different beds of Lust, and neuer learn'd
The Icie precepts of respect, but followed
The Sugred game before thee. But my selfe,
Who had the world as my Confectionarie,
The mouthes, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men,
At duty more then I could frame employment;
That numberlesse vpon me sticke, as leaues
Do on the Oake, haue with one Winters blust
Fell from their boughes, and left me open, bare,
For euery storme that blowes. I to beare this,
That neuer knew but better, is some burthen:
Thy Nature, did commence in sufferance, Time
Hath made thee hard in't. Why should'st thou hate Men?
They neuer flatter'd thee. What hast thou giuen?

If thou wilt curse; thy Father (that poore ragge)
Must be thy subiect; who in spight put stuffe
To some free-Begger, and compounded thee
Poore Rogue, hereditary. Hence, be gone,
If thou had'st not bene borne the worst of men,
Thou had'st bene a Knaue and Flatterer.

Alc. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. I, that I am not thee.

Alc. I, that I was no Prodigall.

Tim. I, that I am one now.

Were all the wealth I haue shut vp in thee,

I'de giue thee leaue to hang it. Get thee gone:

That the whole life of Athens were in this,

Thus would I eate it.

Alc. Heere, I will mend thy Feast.

Tim. First mend thy company, take away thy selfe.

Alc. So I shall mend mine owne, by th'lacke of thine.

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botchy;

If not, I would it were.

Alc. What would'st thou haue to Athens?

Tim. These thicher in a whirlewind: if thou wilt,

Tell them there I haue Gold, looke, so I haue.

Alc. Heere is no vse for Gold.

Tim. The best, and truest:

For heere it sleepes, and do's no hyred harme.

Alc. Where lyes it nights Timon?

Tim. Vnder that's aboue me.

Where feed'st thou a dayes Apemantus?

Alc. Where my stomacke findes meate, or rather where I eate it.

Tim. Would poyson were obedient, & knew my mind

Alc. Where would'st thou send it?

Tim. To sawce thy dishes.

Alc. The middle of Humanity thou neuer knewest, but the extremitie of both ends. When thou wast in thy Gilt, and thy Perfume, they mockt thee for too much Curiosities: in thy Raggess thou know'st none, but art de-spis'd for the contrary. There's a medler for thee, eate it.

Tim. On what I hate, I feede not.

Alc. Do'st hate a Medler?

Tim. I, though it looke like thee.

Alc. And th'had'st hated Medlers sooner, I should'st haue loued thy selfe better now. What man did'st thou euer know vnthrif, that was beloued after his meane?

Tim. Who without those meanes thou talk'st of, did'st thou euer know belou'd?

Alc. My selfe.

Tim. I vnderstand thee: thou had'st some meanes to keepe a Dogge.

Alc. What things in the world canst thou neereft compare to thy Flatterers?

Tim. Women neereft, but men: men are the things themselves. What would'st thou do with the world A- pemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Alc. Giue it the Beasts, to be rid of the men.

Tim. Would'st thou haue thy selfe fall in the confusion of men, and remaine a Beast with the Beasts.

Alc. I Timon.

Tim. A beastly Ambition, which the Goddes graunt thee t'attaine to. If thou wert the Lyon, the Fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the Lambe, the Foxe would eate thee: if thou wert the Fox, the Lion would suspect thee, when peraduenture thou wert accus'd by the Asse:
If thou wert the Asse, thy dulnesse would torment thee:
and still thou liu'd'st but as a Breakfast to the Wolfe. If thou wert the Wolfe, thy greedinesse would afflict thee,

& oft thou should'st hazard thy life for thy dinner. Wert thou the Vnicorne, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine owne selfe the conquest of thy fury.
Wert thou a Beare, thou would'st be kill'd by the Horse:
wert thou a Horse, thou would'st be seaz'd by the Leopard: wert thou a Leopard, thou wert Germane to the Lion, and the spotted of thy Kindred, were iurons on thy life. All thy safety were remotion, and thy defence absence. What Beast could'st thou bee, that were not subiect to a Beast: and what a Beast art thou already, that seest not thy losse in transformation.

Alc. If thou could'st please me

With speaking to me, thou might'st

Haue hit vpon it heere.

The Commonwealth of Athens, is become

A Forrest of Beasts.

Tim. How ha's the Asse broke the wall, that thou art out of the Citie.

Alc. Yonder comes a Poet and a Painter:

The plague of Company light vpon thee:

I will feare to catch it, and giue way.

When I know not what else to do,

Ile see thee againe.

Tim. When there is nothing liuing but thee,

Thou shalt be welcome.

I had rather be a Beggers Dogge,

Then Apemantus.

Alc. Thou art the Cap

Of all the Fooles aliue.

Tim. Would thou wert cleane enough

To spit vpon.

Alc. A plague on thee,

Thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All Villaines

That do stand by thee, are pure.

Alc. There is no Leprosie,

But what thou speak'st.

Tim. If I name thee, Ile beate thee;

But I should infect my hands.

Alc. I would my tongue

Could rot them off.

Tim. Away thou issue of a mangie dogge,

Choller does kill me,

That thou art aliue, I swoond to see thee.

Alc. Would thou would'st burst.

Tim. Away thou tedious Rogue, I am sorry I shall lose a stone by thee.

Alc. Beast.

Tim. Slave.

Alc. Toad.

Tim. Rogue, Rogue, Rogue.

I am sicke of this false world, and will loue nought

But euen the meere necessities vpon't:

Then Timon presently prepare thy graue:

Lye where the light Fome of the Sea may beate

Thy graue stone dayly, make thine Epitaph,

That death in me, at others liues may laugh.

O thou sweete King-killer, and deare diuorce

Twixt naturall Sunne and fire: thou bright defiler of Himens purest bed, thou valiant Mars,

Thou euer, yong, fresh, loued, and delicate wooer,

Whose blush doth thawe the consecrated Snow

That lyes on Dians lap:

Thou visible God,

That souldrest close Impossibilities,

And mak'st them kisse; that speak'st with euerie Tongue

hh 3

To

To euerie purpose: O thou touch of hearts,
Thinke thy slave-man rebels, and by thy vertue
Set them into confounding oddes, that Beasts
May haue the world in Empire.

Ape. Would'twere so,
But not till I am dead. He say th'ha'st Gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd too shortly.

Tim. Throng'd too?

Ape. I.

Tim. Thy backe I prythee.

Ape. Liue, and loue thy misery.

Tim. Long liue so, and so dye. I am quit.

Ape. Mo things like men,

Eate Timon, and abhorre then.

Exit Ape-man.

Enter the Banditti.

1 Where should he haue this Gold? It is some poore Fragment, some slender Out of his remainder: the meere want of Gold, and the falling from of his Friendes, droue him into this Melancholly.

2 It is nois'd
He hath a masse of Treasure.

3 Let vs make the assay vpon him, if he care not for't, he will supply vs easily: if he couetously reserue it, how shall's get it?

2 True: for he beares it not about him:

'Tis hid.

1 Is not this hee?

All. Where?

2 'Tis his description.

3 He? I know him.

All. Saue thee Timon.

Tim. Now Theeues.

All. Soldiers, not Theeues.

Tim. Both too, and womens Sonnes.

All. We are not Theeues, but men

That much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat:
Why should you want? Behold, the Earth hath Rootes:
Within this Mile breake forth a hundred Springs:
The Oakes beare Mast, the Briars Scarlet Heps,
The bounteous Huswife Nature, on each bush,
Layes her full Messe before you. Want? why Want?

1 We cannot liue on Grasse, on Berries, Water,
As Beasts, and Birds, and Fishes.

Tim. Nor on the Beasts themselves, the Birds & Fishes,

You must eate men. Yet thanks I must you con,

That you are Theeues profest: that you worke not

In holier shapcs: For there is boundlesse Theft

In limited Professions. Rascall Theeues

Heere's Gold: Go, sucke the subtle blood o'th Grape,

Till the high Feauor seeth your blood to froth,

And so scape hanging. Trust not the Physician,

His Antidotes are poyson, and he slayes

More then you Rob: Take wealth, and liues together,

Do Villaine do, since you protest to doo't.

Like Workemen, He example you with Theeuey:

The Sunne's a Theefe, and with his great attraction

Robbes the vaste Sea. The Moones an arrant Theefe,

And her pale fire, she snatches from the Sunne.

The Seas a Theefe, whose liquid Surge, resolues

The Moone into Salt teares. The Earth's a Theefe,

That feeds and breeds by a composture Rolne

From gen'ral excrement: each thing's a Theefe.

The Lawes, your curbe and whip, in their rough power

Ha's yncheck'd Theft. Loue not your selues, away,
Rob one another, there's more Gold, cut throates,
All that you meete are Theeues: to Athens go,
Breake open shoppes, nothing can you steale
But Theeues do loose it: steale lesse, for this I giue you,
And Gold confound you howsoere: Amen.

3 Has almost charm'd me from my Profession, by perswading me to it.

1 'Tis in the malice of mankind, that he thus aduises vs not to haue vs thriue in our mystery.

2 He beleue him as an Enemy,

And giue ouer my Trade.

1 Let vs first see peace in Athens, there is no time for miserable, but a man may be true.

Exit Theeues.

Enter the Steward to Timon.

Stew. Oh you Gods!

Is yon'd despis'd and ruinous man my Lord?

Full of decay and sayling? Oh Monument

And wonder of good deeds, euilly bestow'd!

What an alteration of Honor has desp'rate want made?

What vilder thing vpon the earth, then Friends,

Who can bring Noblest mindes, to basest ends.

How rarely does it meete with this times guise,

When man was wisht to loue his Enemies:

Grant I may euer loue, and rather woo

Those that would mischeefe me, then those that doo,

Has caught me in his eye, I will present my honest griefe vnto him; and as my Lord, still serue him with my life.

My deereft Master.

Tim. Away: what art thou?

Stew. Haue you forgot me, Sir?

Tim. Why dost aske that? I haue forgot all men.

Then, if thou grun't, th'art a man.

I haue forgot thee.

Stew. An honest poore seruant of yours.

Tim. Then I know thee not:

I neuer had honest man about me, I all

I kept were Knaues, to serue in meate to Villaines.

Stew. The Gods are witnesse,

Neu't did poore Steward weare a truer greefe

For his vndone Lord, then mine eyes for you.

Tim. What, dost thou weepe?

Come neerer, then I loue thee

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st

Flinty mankind: whose eyes do neuer giue,

But thorow Lust and Laughter: pittie's sleeping:

Strange times y weepe with laughing, not with weeping.

Stew. I begge of you to know me, good my Lord,

I'accept my greefe, and whil't this poore wealth lasts,

To entertaine me as your Steward still.

Tim. Had I a Steward

So true, so iust, and now so comfortable?

It almost turnes my dangerous Nature wilde.

Let me behold thy face: Surely, this man

Was borne of woman.

Forgiue my generall, and exceptlesse rashnesse

You perpetuall sober Gods. I do proclaime

One honest man: Mistake me not, but one:

No more I pray, and hee's a Steward.

How faine would I haue hated all mankind,

And thou redeem'st thy selfe. But all saue thee,

I fell with Curfes.

Me thinkes thou art more honest now, then wise:

For, by oppressing and betraying mee,

Thou

Thou might'st haue sooner got another Seruice:
For many so arrive at second Masters,
Vpon their first Lords necke. But tell me true,
(For I must euer doubt, though ne're so sure),
Is not thy kindnesse subtle, couetous,
If not a V'suring kindnesse, and as rich men deale Guifts,
Expecting in retorne twenty for one?

Stew. No my most worthy Master, in whose brest
Doubt, and suspect (alas) are plac'd too late:

You should haue fear'd false times, when you did Feast.

Suspect still comes, where an estate is least.

That which I shew, Heauen knowes, is meere Loue,

Dutie, and Zeale, to your vnmatched minde;

Care of your Food and Liuing, and beleue it,

My most Honour'd Lord,

For any benefit that points to mee,

Either in hope, or present, I'de exchange

For this one wish, that you had power and wealth

To requite me, by making rich your selfe.

Tim. Looke thee, 'tis so: thou singly honest man,

Heere take: the Gods out of my miserie

Ha's sent thee Treasure. Go, liue rich and happy.

But thus condition'd: Thou shalt build from men:

Hate all, curse all, shew Charity to none,

But let the famisht flesh slide from the Bone,

Ere thou releue the Begger. Giue to dogges

What thou denyest to men. Let Prisons swallow 'em,

Debts wither 'em to nothing, be men like blasted woods

And may Diseases like vp their false bloods,

And so farewell, and thriue.

Stew. O let me stay, and comfort you, my Master.

Tim. If thou hat'st Curfes

Stay not: flye, whil't thou art blest and free:

Ne're see thou man, and let me ne're see thee.

Exit

Enter Poet, and Painter.

Pain. As I tooke note of the place, it cannot be farre where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him?

Does the Rumor hold for true,

That hee's so full of Gold?

Painter. Certaine.

Alcibiades reports it: Phrinica and Timandyla

Had Gold of him. He likewise enrich'd

Poore fragling Souldiers, with great quantity.

'Tis saide, he gaue vnto his Steward

A mighty summe.

Poet. Then this breaking of his,

Ha's beene but a Try for his Friends?

Painter. Nothing else:

You shall see him a Palme in Athens againe,

And flourish with the highest:

Therefore, 'tis not amisse, we tender our loues

To him, in this suppos'd distresse of his:

It will shew honestly in vs,

And is very likely, to load our purposes

With what they traualle for,

If it be iust and true report, that goes

Of his hauing.

Poet. What haue you now

To present vnto him?

Painter. Nothing at this time

But my Vistation: onely I will promise him

An excellent Peece.

Poet. I must serue him so too;

Tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Painter. Good as the best.

Promising, is the verie Ayre o'th Time;

It opens the eyes of Expectation.

Performance, is euer the duller for his acte,

And but in the plainer and simpler kinde of people,

The deede of Saying is quite out of vse.

To Promise, is most Courtly and fashionable;

Performance, is a kinde of Will or Testament

Which argues a great sicknesse in his iudgement

That makes it.

Enter Timon from his Cave.

Timon. Excellent Workeman,

Thou canst not paint a man so badde

As is thy selfe.

Poet. I am thinking

What I shall say I haue provided for him:

It must be a personating of himselfe:

A Satyre against the softnesse of Prosperity,

With a Discouerie of the infinite Flatteries

That follow youth and opulencie.

Timon. Must thou needs

Stand for a Villaine in thine owne Worke?

Wilt thou whip thine owne faults in other men?

Do so, I haue Gold for thee.

Poet. Nay let's seeke him.

Then do we sinne against our owne estate,

When we may profit meere, and come too late.

Painter. True:

When the day serues before blacke-corner'd night;

Finde what thou want'st, by free and offer'd light.

Come.

Tim. He meete you at the turne:

What a Gods Gold, that he is worshipt

In a baser Temple, then where Swine feede?

'Tis thou that rigg'st the Barke, and plow'st the Fome,

Setlest admired reuerence in a Slave,

To thee be worshipt, and thy Saints for aye:

Be crown'd with Plagues, that thee alone obay.

Fit I meet them.

Poet. Haile worthy Timon.

Pain. Our late Noble Master.

Timon. Haue I once liu'd

To see two honest men?

Poet. Sir:

Hauing often of your open Bounty tasted,

Hearing you were retyr'd, your Friends false off,

Whose thanklesse Natures (O abhorred Spirits)

Not all the Whippes of Heauen, are large enough.

What, to you,

Whose Starre-like Noblenesse gaue life and influence

To their whole being? I am rapt, and cannot couer

The monstrous bulke of this Ingratitude

With any size of words.

Timon. Let it go,

Naked men may see't the better:

You that are honest, by being what you are,

Make them best seene, and knowne.

Pain. He, and my selfe

Haue traual'd in the great showre of your guifts,

And sweetly felt it.

Timon. I, you are honest man.

Painter. We are hither come

To offer you our seruice.

Timon. Most honest men:

Why

Why how shall I requite you?

Can you cate Roots, and drinke cold water, no?

Both. What we can do,

Wee'l do to do you service.

Tim. Y'are honest men,

Y'haue heard that I haue Gold,

I am sure you haue, speake truth, y'are honest men.

Pain. So it is said my Noble Lord, but therefore Came not my Friend, nor I.

Timon. Good honest men: Thou draw'st a counterfet

Best in all Athens, th'art indeed the best,

Thou counterfet'st most liuely.

Pain. So, so, my Lord.

Tim. E'ne so fir as I say. And for thy fiction,

Why thy Verse swels with stufte so fine and smooth,

That thou art euen Naturall in thine Art.

But for all this (my honest Natur'd friends)

I must needs say you haue a little fault,

Marry 'tis not monstrous in you, neither wish I

You take much paines to mend.

Both. Befeech your Honour

To make it knowne to vs.

Tim. You'l take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my Lord.

Timon. Will you indeed?

Both. Doubt it not worthy Lord.

Tim. There's neuer a one of you but trusts a Knaue,

That mightily deceiues you.

Both. Do we, my Lord?

Tim. I, and you haue him cogge,

See him dissemble,

Know his grosse patchery, loue him, feede him,

Keepe in your bosome, yet remaine assur'd

That he's a made-up Villaine.

Pain. I know none such, my Lord.

Post. Nor I.

Timon. Looke you,

I loue you well, He giue you Gold

Rid me these Villaines from your companies;

Hang them, or stab them, drowne them in a draught,

Confound them by some course, and come to me,

He giue you Gold enough.

Both. Name them my Lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this:

But two in Company:

Each man apart, all single, and alone,

Yet an arch Villaine keeps him company:

If where thou art, two Villaines shall not be,

Come not neere him. If thou would'st not recide

But where one Villaine is, then him abandon.

Hence, packe, there's Gold, you came for Gold ye slaues:

You haue worke for me; there's payment, hence,

You are an Alcumist, make Gold of that:

Out Rascall dogges.

Exeunt

Enter Steward, and two Senators.

Stew. It is vaine that you would speake with Timon:

For he is set so onely to himselfe,

That nothing but himselfe, which looks like man,

Is friendly with him.

1. Sen. Bring vs to his Cause.

It is our part and promise to th'Athenians

To speake with Timon.

2. Sen. At all times alike

Men are not still the same: 'twas Time and Greefes

That fram'd him thus. Time with his fairer hand,
Offering the Fortunes of his former dayes,
The former man may make him: bring vs to him
And chanc'd it as it may.

Stew. Heere is his Cause:

Peace and content be heere. Lord Timon, Timon,
Looke out, and speake to Friends: Th'Athenians
By two of their most reuerend Senate greet thee:
Speake to them Noble Timon.

Enter Timon out of his Cave.

Tim. Thou Sunne that comforts burne,

Speake and be hang'd:

For each true word, a blister, and each false

Be as a Cantherizing to the root o'th'Tongue,

Consuming it with speaking.

1. Worthy Timon.

Tim. Of none but such as you,

And you of Timon.

1. The Senators of Athens, greet thee Timon.

Tim. I thanke them,

And would fend them backe the plague,

Could I but catch it for them.

1. O forget

What we are sorry for our selues in thee:

The Senators, with one consent of loue,

Intreate thee backe to Athens, who haue thought

On speciall Dignities, which vacant lye

For thy best vse and wearing.

2. They confesse

Toward thee, forgetfulnesse too generall grosse;

Which now the publike Body, which doth sildome

Play there-canter, feeling in it selfe

A lacke of Timons ayde, hath since withall

Of it owne fall, restraining ayde to Timon,

And send forth vs, to make theirorrowed render,

Together, with a recompence more fruitfull

Then their offence can weigh downe by the Dramme,

I euen such heapes and summes of Loue and Wealth,

As shall to thee blot out, what wrongs were theirs,

And write in thee the figures of their loue,

Euer to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it;

Surprize me to the very brinke of teares;

Lend me a Fooles heart, and a womans eyes,

And He beweepe these comforts, worthy Senators,

1. Therefore so please thee to returne with vs,

And of our Athens, thine and ours to take

The Captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,

Allowed with absolute power, and thy good name

Liue with Authoritie: so soone we shall drine backe

Of Alcibiades th'approaches wild,

Who like a Bore too sauage, doth root vp

His Countries peace.

2. And shakes his threatening Sword

Against the walle: of Athens.

1. Therefore Timon.

Tim. Well fir, I will: therefore I will fir thus:

If Alcibiades kill my Countrymen,

Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,

That Timon cares not. But if he sacke faire Athens,

And take our goodly aged men by th'Beards,

Giuing our holy Virgins to the staine

Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd warre:

Then let him know, and tell him Timon speaks it,

In

In pittie of our aged, and our youth,

I cannot choofe but tell him that I care not,

And let him tak't at worst: For their Knives care not,

While you haue throats to answer. For my selfe,

There's not a whistle, in th'veruly Campe,

But I do prize it at my loue, be'ore

The reuerends Throat in Athens. So I leaue you

To the protection of the prosperous Gods;

As Theeues to Keepers.

Stew. Stay not, all's in vaine.

Tim. Why I was writing of my Epitaph,

It will be seene to morrow: My long Bednesse

Of Health, and Liuing, now begins to mend,

And nothing brings me all things. Go, lye still,

Be Alcibiades your plague; you his,

And last so long enough.

1. We speake in vaine.

Tim. But yet I loue my Country, and am not

One that reioyes in the common wracke,

As common brute doth pue it.

1. That's well spoke.

Tim. Commend me to my louing Countrey men.

1. These words become your lippes as they passe thro- row them.

2. And enter in our eares, like great Triumphers

In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them,

And tell them, that to ease them of their greefes,

Their feares of Hostile strokes, their Aches losses,

Their pang of Loue, with other incident throwes

That Natures fragile Vessell doth sustaine

In lifes vncertaine voyage, I will some kindnes do them,

He teach them to prevent wilde Alcibiades wrath.

1. I like this well, he will returne againe.

Tim. I haue a Tree which growes here in my Close,

That mine owne vse inuites me to cut downe,

And shortly must I fell it. Tell my Friends,

Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,

From high to low throughout, that who so please

To stop Affliction, let him take his halte;

Come hither ere my Tree hath felt the Axe,

And hang himselfe. I pray you do my greeting.

Stew. Trouble him no further, thus you shall Finde him.

Tim. Come not to me againe, but say to Athens,

Timon hath made his euellasting Mansion

Vpon the Beached Verge of the salt Flood,

Who once a day with his embossed Froth

The turbulent Surge shall couer; thither come,

And let my graue-stone be your Oracle:

Lippes, let foure words go by, and Language end:

What is amisse, Plague and Infection mend.

Graues onely be mens workes, and Death their gaine;

Sunne, hide thy Beames, Timon hath done his Raigne.

Exit Timon.

1. His discontents are vnremoueably coupled to Na- ture.

2. Our hope in him is dead: let vs returne,

And straine what other meanes is left vnto vs

In our deere perill.

1. It requires swift foot.

Exeunt.

Enter two other Senators, with a Messenger.

1. Thou hast painfully discouer'd: are his Files

As full as thy report?

Mes. I haue spoke the least.

Besides his expedition promises present approach.

2. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mes. I met a Currier, one mine ancient Friend,

Whom though in generall part we were oppos'd,

Yet our old loue made a particular force,

And made vs speake like Friends. This man was riding

From Alcibiades to Timons Cave,

With Letters of intreaty, which imported

His Fellowship i'th'cause against your City;

In part for his sake moud.

Enter the other Senators.

1. Heere come our Brothers.

3. No talke of Timon, nothing of him expect;

The Enemies Drumme is heard, and fearefull sounding

Doth choake the ayre with dust: In, and prepare,

Ours is the fall I feare, our Foes the Snare.

Exeunt

Enter a Soldier in the Woods, seeking Timon.

Sol. By all description this should be the place,

Whose heere? Speake heere. No answer? What is this?

Timon is dead, who hath out-stretcht his span,

Some Beast reade this; There do's not lye a Man,

Dead sure, and this his Graue, what's on this Tomb,

I cannot read: the Character He take with wax,

Our Captaine hath in euery Figure skill;

An ag'd Interpreter, though young in dayes:

Before proud Athens hee's let downe by this,

Whose fall the marke of his Ambition is.

Exit.

Trumpets sound. Enter Alcibiades with his Powers

before Athens.

Alc. Sound to this Coward, and lasciuious Towne,

Our terrible approach.

Sounds a Parly.

The Senators appeare vpon the wals.

Till now you haue gone on, and fill'd the time

With all Licentious measure, making your willes

The scope of lustice. Till now, my selfe and such

As slept within the shadow of your power

Haue wander'd with our trauersf Armes, and breath'd

Our sufferance vainly: Now the time is flush,

When crouching Marrow in the bearer strong

Cries (of it selfe) no more: Now breathlesse wrong,

Shall sit and pant in your great Chaires of ease,

And pursue Insolence shall breake his winde

With feare and horrid flight.

1. Sen. Noble, and young;

When thy first greefes were but a meere conceit,

Ere thou had'st power, or we had cause of feare,

We sent to thee, to giue thy rages Balme,

To wipe out our Ingratitude, with Loues

Above their quantitie.

2. So did we wooc

Transformed Timon, to our Citties loue

By humble Message, and by promist meanes:

We were not all vnkiade, nor all deserue

The common stroke of warre.

1. These walles of ours,

Were not erected by their hands, from whom

You haue recey'd your greefe: Nor are they such,

That these great Towres, Trophies, &

Who were the motives that you first went out,
(Shame that they wanted, cunning in excess)
Hath broke their hearts. March, Noble Lord,
Into our City with thy Banners spread,
By decimation and a tythed death;
If thy Reuenges hunger for that Food
Which Nature loathes, take thou the destin'd tenth,
And by the hazard of the spotted dye,
Let dye the spotted.

1 All have not offended:
For those that were, it is not square to take
On those that are, Reuenge: Crimes, like Lands
Are not inherited, then deere Countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leaue without thy rage,
Spare thy Athenian Cradle, and those Kin
Which in the bluster of thy wrath must fall
With those that haue offended, like a Shepheard,
Approach the Fold, and cull th'infected forth,
But kill not altogether.

2 What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt inforce it with thy smile,
Then hew too't, with thy Sword.

1 Set but thy foot
Against our rampyr'd gates, and they shall ope:
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say thou'nt enter Friendly.

2 Throw thy Gloue,
Or any Token of thine Honour else,
That thou wilt vse the warres as thy redresse,
And not as our Confusion: All thy Powers
Shall make their harbour in our Towne, till wee
Haue seal'd thy full desire.

Alc. Then there's my Gloue,
Defend and open your vncharged Ports,

Those Enemies of Timon, and mine owne
Whom you your selues shall set out for reproofe,
Fall and no more; and to atone your feares,
With my more Noble meaning, not a man
Shall passe his quarter, or offend the streame
Of Regular Iustice in your Citties bounds,
But shall be remedied to your publike Lawes
At heauiest answer.

Both. 'Tis most Nobly spoken.

Alc. Descend, and keepe your words.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Noble Generall, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd vpon the very hemme o'th' Sea,
And on his Grauestone, this Insculpture which
With wax I brought away: whose soft Impression
Interprets for my poore ignorance.

Alcibiades reads the Epitaph.

Heere lies a wretched Coarse, of wretched Soule bereft,
Seek not my name: A Plague consume you, wicked Caitiffs left:
Heere lye I Timon, who alime, all liuing men did hate,
Passe by, and curse thy fill, but passe and stay not here thy gate.
These well expresse in thee thy latter spirits:
Though thou abhorrd'st in vs our humane griefes, Scornd'st our Braines flow, and those our droplets, which
From niggard Nature fall; yet Rich Conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weepe for aye
On thy low Graue, on faults forgiven. Dead
Is Noble Timon, of whose Memorie
Heereafter more. Bring me into your Citie,
And I will vse the Oliue, with my Sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace stint war, make each
Prescribe to other, as each others Leach.
Let our Drummes strike.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

THE ACTORS
IN

THE TRAGEDIE OF IVLIVS CÆSAR.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Flavius, Murellus, and certaine Commoners ouer the Stage.

Flavius.
Hence: home you idle Creatures, get you home:
Is this a Holiday? What, know you not (Being Mechanicall) you ought not walke
Vpon a labouring day, without the signe
Of your Profession? Speake, what Trade art thou?

Car. Why Sir, a Carpenter.

Mur. Where is thy Leather Apron, and thy Rule?
What dost thou with thy best Apparrell on?
You sir, what Trade are you?

Cobl. Truly Sir, in respect of a fine Workman, I am but as you would say, a Cobl.

Mur. But what Trade art thou? Answer me directly.

Cob. A Trade Sir, that I hope I may vie, with a safe Conscience, which is indeed Sir, a Mender of bad soules.

Fla. What Trade thou knaue? Thou naughty knaue, what Trade?

Cobl. Nay I beseech you Sir, be not out with me; yet if you be out Sir, I can mend you.

Mur. What meanst thou by that? Mend mee, thou lawey Fellow?

Cob. Why sir, Cobble you.

Fla. Thou art a Cobl, art thou?

Cob. Truly sir, all that I line by, is with the Aule: I meddle with no Tradesmans matters, nor womens matters; but withal I am indeed Sir, a Surgeon to old shooes:
when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as euer trod vpon Neats Leather, haue gone vp-on my handy worke.

Fla. But wherefore art not in thy Shop to day?

Why dost thou leade these men about the streets?

Cob. Truly sir, to weare out their shooes, to get my selfe into more worke. But indeede sir, we make Holy-day to see Cæsar, and to reioyce in his Triumph.

Mur. Wherefore reioyce?

What Conquest brings he home? and what Tributaries follow him to Rome,

To grace in Captiue bonds his Chariot-Wheelles?

You Blotches, you stones, you worse then senselesse things:

O you hard hearts, you cruell men of Rome,

Knew you not Pompey many a time and oft?

Haue you climb'd vp to Walles and Battlements,

To Towres and Windowes? Yea, to Chimney tops,

Your Infants in your Armes, and there haue late

The liue-long day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey passe the streets of Rome:
And when you saw his Chariot but appeare,
Haue you not made an Vniuersall shout,
That Tyber trembled vnderneath her banks
To heare the replication of your sounds,
Made in her Concaue Shores?
And do you now put on your best attyre?
And do you now cull out a Holyday?
And do you now strew Flowers in his way,
That comes in Triumph ouer Pompeys blood?
Be gone,

Runne to your houses, fall vpon your knees,
Pray to the Gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this Ingratitude.

Fla. Go, go, good Countrymen, and for this fault
Assemble all the poore men of your sort;
Draw them to Tyber banks, and weepe your teares
Into the Channell, till the lowest streame
Do kisse the most exalted Shores of all.

Exeunt all the Commoners.

See where their basest mettle be not mou'd,
They vanish tongue-tyed in their guiltinesse:
Go you downe that way towards the Capitoll,
This way will I: Disrobe the Images,
If you do finde them deckt with Ceremonies.

Mur. May we do so?

You know it is the Feast of Lupercall.

Fla. It is no matter, let no Images
Be hung with Cæsars Trophies: Lie about,
And driue away the Vulgar from the streets;
So do you too, where you perceiue them thicke.

These growing Feathers, pluckt from Cæsars wing,

Will make him flye an ordinary pitch,

Who else would soare about the view of men,

And keepe vs all in seruile fearefulnessse. Exeunt

Enter Cæsar, Antony for the Course, Calphurnia, Portia, De-cius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, Caska, a Soothsayer after them Murellus and Flavius.

Cæs. Calphurnia.

Cask. Peace ho, Cæsar speakes.

Cæs. Calphurnia.

Calp. Heere my Lord.

Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonio's way,

When he doth run his course. Antonio.

Ant. Cæsar, my Lord.

Cæs. Forget not in your speed Antonio,

To touch Calphurnia: for our Elders say, k k

The

The Barren touched in this holy chace,
Shake off their sterile curse.

Ant. I shall remember,

When Caesar sayes, Do this; it is perform'd.

Cass. Set on, and leaue no Ceremony out.

Sooth. Caesar.

Cass. Ha? Who calles?

Cass. Bid every noyse be still: peace yet againe.

Cass. Who is it in the presse, that calles on me?

I heare a Tongue thriller then all the Musicke

Cry, Caesar: Speake, Caesar is turn'd to heare.

Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.

Cass. What man is that?

Br. A Sooth-sayer bids you beware the Ides of March

Cass. Set him before me, let me see his face.

Cass. Fellow, come from the throng, look vpon Caesar.

Cass. What sayst thou to me now? Speak once againe.

Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.

Cass. He is a Dreamer, let vs leaue him: Passe.

Sennet. Exeunt. Manet Brut. & Cass.

Cass. Will you go see the order of the course?

Brut. Not I.

Cass. I pray you do.

Brut. I am not Gamesome: I do lacke some part

Of that quicke Spirit that is in Antony:

Let me not hinder Cassius your desires;

Ile leaue you.

Cass. Brutus, I do obserue you now of late:

I haue not from your eyes, that gentleness

And shew of Loue, as I was wont to haue:

You beare too stubborne, and too strange a hand

Ouer your Friend, that loues you.

Brut. Cassius,

Be not deceiu'd: If I haue veyl'd my looke,

I turne the trouble of my Countenance

Merely vpon my selfe. Vexed I am

Of late, with passions of some difference,

Conceptions onely proper to my selfe,

Which giue some foyle (perhaps) to my Behaviours:

But let not therefore my good Friends be greiu'd

(Among which number Cassius be you one)

Nor construe any further my neglect,

Then that poore Brutus with himselfe at warre,

Forgets the shewes of Loue to other men.

Cass. Then Brutus, I haue much mistook your passion,

By meanes whereof, this Brest of mine hath buried

Thoughts of great value, worthy Cogitations.

Tell me good Brutus, Can you see your face?

Brutus. No Cassius:

For the eye sees not it selfe but by reflection,

By some other things.

Cassius. 'Tis iust,

And it is very much lamented Brutus,

That you haue no such Mirrors, as will turne

Your hidden worthinesse into your eye,

That you might see your shadow:

I haue heard,

Where many of the best respect in Rome,

(Except immortall Caesar) speaking of Brutus,

And groaning vnderneath this Ages yoke,

Haue wish'd, that Noble Brutus had his eyes.

Brut. Into what dangers, would you

Leade me Cassius?

That you would haue me seeke into my selfe,

For that which is not in me?

Cass. Therefore good Brutus, be prepar'd to heare:

And since you know, you cannot see your selfe

So well as by Reflection; I your Glasse,

Will modestly discouer to your selfe

That of your selfe, which you yet know not of,

And be not iealous on me, gentle Brutus:

Were I a common Laughter, or did vse

To stale with ordinary Oathes my loue

To euery new Protester: if you know,

That I do fawne on men, and hugge them hard,

And after scandall them: Or if you know,

That I professe my selfe in Banquetting

To all the Rout, then hold me dangerous.

Flourish, and Shout.

Brut. What meanes this Showing?

I do feare, the People choose Caesar

For their King.

Cass. I, do you feare it?

Then must I thinke you would not haue it so.

Brut. I would not Cassius, yet I loue him well.

But wherefore do you hold me heere so long?

What is it, that you would impart to me?

If it be ought toward the generall good,

Set Honor in one eye, and Death in other,

And I will looke on both indifferently:

For let the Gods so speed mee, as I loue

The name of Honor, more then I feare death.

Cass. I know that vertue to be in you Brutus:

As well as I do know your outward fauour.

Well, Honor is the subiect of my Story:

I cannot tell, what you and other men

Thinke of this life: But for my single selfe,

I had as lief not be, as liue to be:

In awe of such a Thing, as I my selfe.

I was borne free as Caesar, so were you;

We both haue fed as well, and we can both

Endure the Winters cold, as well as hee.

For once, vpon a Rawe and Gustie day,

The troubled Tyber, chasing with her Shores,

Caesar saide to me, Dar'st thou Cassius now

Leape in with me into this angry Flood,

And swim to yonder Point? Vpon the word,

Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,

And bad him follow: so indeed he did.

The Torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

With lusty Sinewes, throwing it aside,

And stemming it with hearts of Controuersie.

But ere we could arriue the Point propos'd,

Caesar cride, Helpe me Cassius, or I sinke.

I (as Enneas, our great Ancestor,

Did from the Flames of Troy, vpon his shoulder

The old Anchises beare) so, from the waues of Tyber

Did I the tyred Caesar: And this Man,

Is now become a God, and Cassius is

A wretched Creature, and must bend his body,

If Caesar carelessly but nod on him.

He had a Feauer when he was in Spaine,

And when the Fit was on him, I did marke

How he did shake: 'Tis true, this God did shake,

His Coward lippes did from their colour flye,

And that same Eye, whose bend doth aue the World,

Did loose his Lustre: I did heare him grone:

I, and that Tongue of his, that bad the Romans

Marke him, and write his Speeches in their Bookes,

Alas, it crid, Giue me some drinke Titinius,

As

As a sicke Gille: Ye Gods, it doth amaze me,

A man of such a feeble temper should

So get the start of the Maiesticke world,

And beare the Palme alone.

Shout. Flourish.

Brut. Another generall shout?

I do beleue, that these applauses are

For some new Honors, that are heap'd on Caesar.

Cass. Why man, he doth bestride the narrow world

Like a Colossus, and we petty men

Walke vnder his huge legges, and peepe about

To finde our selues dishonourable Graues.

Men at sometime, are Masters of their Fates.

The fault (deere Brutus) is not in our Starres,

But in our Selues, that we are vnderlings.

Brutus and Caesar: What should be in that Caesar?

Why should that name be founded more then yours?

Write them together: Yours, is as faire a Name:

Sound them, it doth become the mouth aswell:

Weigh them, it is as heavy: Coniure with 'em,

Brutus will start a Spirit as loone as Caesar.

Now in the names of all the Gods at once,

Vpon what meate doth this our Caesar feede,

That he is growne so great? Age, thou art sham'd.

Rome, thou hast lost the breed of Noble Bloods.

When went there by an Age, since the great Flood,

But it was fam'd with more then with one man?

When could they say (till now) that talk'd of Rome,

That her wide Walkes incompart but one man?

Now is't Rome indeed, and Roome enough

When there is in it but one onely man.

O! you and I, haue heard our Fathers say,

There was a Brutus once, that would haue brook'd

The eternall Diuicil to keepe his State in Rome,

As easily as a King.

Brut. That you do loue me, I am nothing iealous:

What you would worke me too, I haue some ayme:

How I haue thought of this, and of these times

I shall recount heereafter. For this present,

I would not so (with loue I might intreat you)

Be any further mou'd: What you haue said,

I will consider: what you haue to say

I will with patience heare, and finde a time

Both meete to heare, and answer such high things.

Till then, my Noble Friend, chew vpon this:

Brutus had rather be a Villager,

Then to repute himselfe a Sonne of Rome

Vnder these hard Conditions, as this time

Is like to lay vpon vs.

Cass. I am glad that my weake words

Haue stricke but thus much shew of fire from Brutus.

Enter Caesar and his Traine.

Brut. The Games are done,

And Caesar is returning.

Cass. As they passe by,

Plucke Caesar by the Sleeue,

And he will (after his sower fashion) tell you

What hath proceeded worthy note to day.

Brut. I will do so: but looke you Cassius,

The angry spot doth glow on Caesar's brow,

And all the rest, looke like a children Traine;

Calphurnia's Cheeke is pale, and Cicero

Lookes with such Ferret, and such fiery eyes

As we haue seene him in the Capitoll

Being crost in Conference, by some Senators.

Cass. Caesar will tell vs what the matter is.

Cass. Antony.

Ant. Caesar.

Cass. Let me haue men about me, that are fat,

Sleeke-headed men, and such as sleepe a-nights:

Yond Cassius has a leane and hungry looke,

He thinkes too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Feare him not Caesar, he's not dangerous,

He is a Noble Roman, and well giuen.

Cass. Would he were fatter; But I feare him not:

Yet if my name were lyable to feare,

I do not know the man I should auoyd

So soone as that spare Cassius. He reade much,

He is a great Obseruer, and he lookes

Quite through the Deeds of men. He loues no Playes,

As thou dost Antony: he heares no Musicke;

Seldome he smiles, and smiles in such a sort

As if he mock'd himselfe, and scorn'd his spirit

That could be mou'd to smile at any thing.

Such men as he, be neuer at hearts ease,

Whiles they behold a greater then themselves,

And therefore are they very dangerous.

I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,

Then what I feare: for alwayes I am Caesar,

Come on my right hand, for this eare is deafe,

And tell me truly, what thou think'st of him.

Sennet.

Exeunt Caesar and his Traine.

Being crost in Conference, by some Senators.

Cass. Caesar will tell vs what the matter is.

Cass. Antony.

Ant. Caesar.

Cass. Let me haue men about me, that are fat,

Sleeke-headed men, and such as sleepe a-nights:

Yond Cassius has a leane and hungry looke,

He thinkes too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Feare him not Caesar, he's not dangerous,

He is a Noble Roman, and well giuen.

Cass. Would he were fatter; But I feare him not:

Yet if my name were lyable to feare,

I do not know the man I should auoyd

So soone as that spare Cassius. He reade much,

He is a great Obseruer, and he lookes

Quite through the Deeds of men. He loues no Playes,

As thou dost Antony: he heares no Musicke;

Seldome he smiles, and smiles in such a sort

As if he mock'd himselfe, and scorn'd his spirit

That could be mou'd to smile at any thing.

Such men as he, be neuer at hearts ease,

Whiles they behold a greater then themselves,

Cassi. But soft I pray you: what did Caesar swoone?
Cass. He fell downe in the Market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechlesse.

Brut. 'Tis very like he hath the Falling sicknesse.

Cassi. No, Caesar hath it not: but you, and I, And honest Cassius, we haue the Falling sicknesse.

Cass. I know not what you meane by that, but I am sure Caesar fell downe. If the rag-ragge people did not clap him, and hisse him, according as he pleas'd, and displeas'd them, as they vse to doe the Players in the Theatre, I am no true man.

Brut. What said he, when he came vnto himselfe?

Cass. Marry, before he fell downe, when he perceiu'd the common Heard was glad he refus'd the Crowne, he pluckt me ope his Doublet, and offer'd them his Throat to cut: and I had bene a man of any Occupation, if I would not haue taken him at a word, I would I might goe to Hell among the Rogues, and so hee fell. When he came to himselfe againe, hee said, If hee had done, or said any thing amisse, he desir'd their Worships to thinke it was his infirmities. Three or foure Wenches where I stood, cryed, Alasse good Soule, and forgave him with all their hearts: But there's no heed to be taken of them; if Caesar had stab'd their Mothers, they would haue done no lesse.

Brut. And after that, he came thus sad away.

Cass. I.

Cassi. Did Cicero say any thing?

Cass. I, he spoke Greeke.

Cassi. To what effect?

Cass. Nay, and I tell you that, Ile ne're looke you i'th' face againe. But those that vnderstood him, smil'd at one another, and shooke their heads: but for mine owne part, it was Greeke to me. I could tell you more newes too: Murellus and Flavius, for pulling Scarfes off Caesars Images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more Foolerie yet, if I could remember it.

Cassi. Will you suppe with me to Night, Cassius?

Cass. No, I am promis'd forth.

Cassi. Will you Dine with me to morrow?

Cass. I, if I be aliue, and your minde hold, and your Dinner worth the eating.

Cassi. Good, I will expect you.

Cass. Doe so: farewell both. Exit.

Brut. What a blunt fellow is this growne to be? He was quick Mettle, when he went to Schoole.

Cassi. So is he now, in execution Of any bold, or Noble Enterprize, How-euer he puts on this tardie forme: This Rudenesse is a Sawce to his good Wit, Which giues men stomacke to digest his words With better Appetite.

Brut. And so it is:

For this time I will leaue you:

To morrow, if you please to speake with me,

I will come home to you: or if you will,

Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cassi. I will doe so: till then, thinke of the World.

Exit Brutus.

Well Brutus, thou art Noble: yet I see, Thy Honorable Mettle may be wrought From that it is dispos'd: therefore it is meet, That Noble mindes keepe euer with their likes: For who so firme, that cannot be seduc'd? Caesar doth beare me hard, but he loues Brutus.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humor me. I will this Night, In feuerall Hands, in at his Windowes throw, As if they came from feuerall Citizens, Writings, all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his Name: wherein obscurely Caesars Ambition shall be glanced at, And after this, let Caesar see him sure, For wee will shake him, or worse dayes endure.

Exit.

Thunder, and Lightning. Enter Cassius, and Cicero.

Cic. Good euen, Cassius: brought you Caesar home? Why are you breathlesse, and why stare you so?

Cass. Are not you mou'd, when all the sway of Earth Shakes, like a thing vnfirm? O Cicero,

I haue scene Tempests, when the scolding Winds Haue riu'd the knotie Oakes, and I haue scene Th'ambitious Ocean swell, and rage, and foame, To be exalted with the threatening Clouds: But neuer till to Night, neuer till now, Did I goe through a Tempest-dropping-fire, Eyther there is a Ciuill strife in Heauen, Or else the World, too sawcie with the Gods, Incenseth them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderfull?

Cass. A common slave, you know him well by sight, Held vp his left Hand, which did flame and burne Like twentie Torches ioynd; and yet his Hand, Not sensible of fire, remain'd vnscorch'd. Besides, I ha' not since put vp my Sword, Against the Capitoll I met a Lyon, Who glaz'd vpon me, and went furly by, Without annoying me. And there were drawne Vpon a heape, a hundred gaily Women, Transformed with their feare, who swore, they saw Men, all in fire, walke vp and downe the streetes, And yesterday, the Bird of Night did sit, Euen at Noone-day, vpon the Market place, Howling, and shrieking. When these Prodigious Doe so conioynly meet, let not men say, These are their Reasons, they are Naturall: For I beleue, they are portentous things Vnto the Climate, that they point vpon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange disposed time: But men may construe things after their fashion, Cleane from the purpose of the things themselves. Comes Caesar to the Capitoll to morrow?

Cass. He doth: for he did bid Antonio Send word to you, he would be there to morrow.

Cic. Good-night then, Cassius:

This disturbed Skie is not to walke in.

Cass. Farewell Cicero. Exit Cicero.

Enter Cassius.

Cassi. Who's there?

Cass. A Roman.

Cassi. Cassius, by your Voyce.

Cass. Your Eare is good.

Cassi. What Night is this?

Cassi. A very pleasing Night to honest men.

Cass. Who euer knew the Heauens menace so?

Cassi. Those that haue knowne the Earth so full of faults.

For

For my part, I haue walk'd about the streets, Submitting me vnto the perillous Night; And thus vnbraced, Cassius, as you see, Haue bar'd my Bosome to the Thunder-stone: And when the crossie blew Lightning seem'd to open The Breest of Heauen, I did present my selfe Euen in the ayne, and very flash of it.

(uenus?)

Cass. But wherefore did you so much tempt the Hea- It is the part of men, to feare and tremble, When the most mightie Gods, by tokens send Such dreadfull Heralds, to astonish vs.

Cassi. You are dull, Cassius:

And those sparkes of Life, that should be in a Roman, You doe want, or else you vse not.

You looke pale, and gaze, and put on feare,

And cast your selfe in wonder,

To see the strange impatience of the Heauens:

But if you would consider the true cause,

Why all these Fires, why all these gliding Ghosts,

Why Birds and Beasts, from qualitie and kinde,

Why Old men, Fooles, and Children calculate,

Why all these things change from their Ordinance,

Their Natures, and pre-formed Faculties,

To monstrous qualitie; why you shall finde,

That Heauen hath infused them with these Spirits,

To make them Instruments of feare, and warning,

Vnto some monstrous State.

Now could I (Cassius) name to thee a man,

Most like this dreadful Night,

That Thunders, Lightens, opens Graues, and roares,

As doth the Lyon in the Capitoll:

A man no mightier then thy selfe, or me,

In personal action; yet prodigious growne,

And fearefull, as these strange eruptions are.

Cass. 'Tis Caesar that you meane:

Is it not, Cassius?

Cassi. Let it be who it is: for Romans now Haue Thewes, and Limbes, like to their Ancestors; But woe the while, our Fathers mindes are dead, And we are gouern'd with our Mothers spirits, Our yoake, and sufferance, shew vs Womanish.

Cass. Indeed, they say the Senators to morrow

Meane to establish Caesar as a King:

And he shall weare his Crowne by Sea, and Land,

In euery place, saue here in Italy.

Cassi. I know where I will weare this Dagger then;

Cassius from Bondage will deliuer Cassius:

Therein, yee Gods, you make the weake most strong;

Therein, yee Gods, you Tyrants doe defeat,

Nor Stonie Tower, nor Walls of beaten Brasse,

Nor ayre-lesse Dungeon, nor strong Linkes of Iron,

Can be retentive to the strength of spirit:

But Life being wearie of these worldly Barres,

Neuer lacks power to dismisse it selfe.

If I know this, know all the World besides,

That part of Tyrannie that I doe beare,

I can shake off at pleasure. Thunder still.

Cass. So can I:

So euery Bond-man in his owne hand beares

The power to cancell his Captiuitie.

Cassi. And why should Caesar be a Tyrant then?

Poore man, I know he would not be a Wolfe,

But that he sees the Romans are but Sheepe:

He were no Lyon, were not Romans Hinds.

Those that with haste will make a mightie fire,

Begin it with weake Strawes. What trash is Rome?

What Rubbish, and what Offall? when it serues For the base matter, to illuminate

So vile a thing as Caesar. But oh Griefe,

Where hast thou led me? I (perhaps) speake this

Before a willing Bond-man: then I know

My answere must be made. But I am arm'd,

And dangers are to me indifferent.

Cass. You speake to Cassius, and to such a man,

That is no fleering Tell-tale. Hold, my Hand:

Be factious for redresse of all these Griefes,

And I will set this foot of mine as farre,

As who goes farthest.

Cassi. There's a Bargaine made.

Now know you, Cassius, I haue mou'd already

Some certaine of the Noblest minded Romans

To vnder-goe, with me, an Enterprize,

Of Honorable dangerous consequence;

And I doe know by this, they stay for me

In Pompeyes Porch: for now this fearefull Night,

There is no stirre, or walking in the streetes;

And the Complexion of the Element

Is fauours, like the Worke we haue in hand,

Most bloodie, fierie, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Cass. Stand close a while, for heere comes one in haste.

Cassi. 'Tis Cinna, I doe know him by his Gate,

He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you to?

Cinna. To finde out you: Who's that, Metellus

Cymbre?

Cassi. No, it is Cassius, one incorporate

To our Attempts. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna?

Cinna. I am glad on't.

What a fearefull Night is this?

There's two or three of vs haue scene strange sights.

Cassi. Am I not stay'd for? tell me.

Cinna. Yes, you are. O Cassius,

If you could but winne the Noble Brutus

To our party—

Cassi. Be you content. Good Cinna, take this Paper,

And looke you lay it in the Pretors Chayre,

Where Brutus may but finde it: and throw this

In at his Window; set this vp with Waxe

Vpon old Brutus Statue: all this done,

Repaire to Pompeyes Porch, where you shall finde vs.

Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?

Cinna. All, but Metellus Cymbre, and hee's gone

To seeke you at your house. Well, I will hie,

And so bestow these Papers as you bid me.

Cassi. That done, repaire to Pompeyes Theater.

Exit Cinna.

Come Cassius, you and I will yet, ere day,

See Brutus at his house: three parts of him

Is ours already, and the man entire

Vpon the next encounter, yeelds him ours.

Cass. O, he fits high in all the Peoples hearts:

And that which would appeare Offence in vs,

His Countenance, like richest Alchymie,

Will change to Vertue, and to Worthinesse.

Cassi. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,

You haue right well conceited: let vs goe;

For it is after Mid-night, and ere day,

We will awake him, and be sure of him.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Brutus in his Orchard.

Brut. What Lucius, hoe?
I cannot, by the progresse of the Starres,
Giue guesse how neere to day. Lucius, I say?
I would it were my fault to sleepe so soundly.
When Lucius, when? awake, I say: what Lucius?

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call'd you, my Lord?

Brut. Get me a Taper in my Study, Lucius:

When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my Lord.

Brut. It must be by his death: and for my part,
I know no personall cause, to spurne at him,
But for the generall. He would be crown'd:
How that might change his nature, there's the question?
It is the bright day, that brings forth the Adder,
And that craves warie walking: Crowne him that,
And then I graunt we put a Sting in him,
That at his will he may doe danger with.
Th'abuse of Greatnesse, is, when it dis-ioyns
Remorse from Power: And to speake truth of Caesar,
I haue not knowne, when his Affections sway'd
More then his Reason. But 'tis a common prooffe,
That Lowlynesse is young Ambitions Ladder,
Whereto the Climber vpward turnes his Face:
But when he once attaines the vpmost Round,
He then vnto the Ladder turnes his Backe,
Lookes in the Clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: so Caesar may;
Then leaft he may, preuent. And since the Quarrell
Will beare no colour, for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would runne to these, and these extremities:
And therefore thinke him as a Serpents egge,
Which hatch'd, would as his kinde grow mischieuous;
And kill him in the shell.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. The Taper burneth in your Closet, Sir:
Searching the Window for a Flint, I found
This Paper, thus seal'd vp, and I am sure
It did not lye there when I went to Bed.

Gives him the Letter.

Brut. Get you to Bed againe, it is not day:
Is not to morrow (Boy) the first of March?

Luc. I know not, Sir.

Brut. Look in the Calender, and bring me word.

Luc. I will, Sir.

Brut. The exhalations, whizzing in the ayre,
Giue so much light, that I may reade by them.

Opens the Letter, and reades.

Brutus thou sleepest; awake, and see thy selfe:
Shall Rome, &c. speake, strike, redresse.
Brutus, thou sleepest; awake.
Such instigations haue bene often dropt,
Where I haue tooke them vp:
Shall Rome, &c. Thus must I piece it out:
Shall Rome stand vnder one mans awe? What Rome?
My Ancestors did from the freeres of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a King.
Speake, strike, redresse. Am I entreated

To speake, and strike? O Rome, I make thee promise,
If the redresse will follow, thou receiuest
Thy full Petition at the hand of Brutus.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, March is wast'd fiftene dayes.

Brut. 'Tis good. Go to the Gate, some body knocks.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar,
I haue not slept.
Betwene the acting of a dreadfull thing,
And the first motion, all the Interim is Like a Phantasma, or a hideous Dreame:
The Genius, and the mortall Instruments
Are then in councell; and the state of a man,
Like to a little Kingdome, suffers then
The nature of an Insurrection.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your Brother Cassius at the Doore,
Who doth desire to see you.

Brut. Is he alone?

Luc. No, Sir, there are moe with him;

Brut. Doe you know them?

Luc. No, Sir, their Hats are pluckt about their Eares,
And halfe their Faces buried in their Cloakes,
That by no meanes I may discouer them,
By any marke of fauour.

Brut. Let 'em enter:

They are the Faction. O Conspiracie,
Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous Brow by Night,
When euils are most free? O then, by day
Where wilt thou finde a Cauerne darke enough,
To maske thy monstrous Visage? Seek none Conspiracie,
Hide it in Smiles, and Affabilitie:
For if thou path thy native semblance on,
Not Erebus it selfe were dimme enough,
To hide thee from preuention.

Enter the Conspirators, Cassius, Caska, Decius, Cinna, Metellus, and Trebonius.

Cass. I thinke we are too bold vpon your Rest:
Good morrow Brutus, doe we trouble you?

Brut. I haue bene vp this howre, awake all Night:
Know I these men, that come along with you?

Cass. Yes, every man of them; and no man here
But honors you: and every one doth wish,
You had but that opinion of your selfe,
Which every Noble Roman beares of you.

This is Trebonius.

Brut. He is welcome hither.

Cass. This, Decius Brutus.

Brut. He is welcome too.

Cass. This, Caska; this, Cinna; and this, Metellus Cymbel.

Brut. They are all welcome.

What watchfull Cares doe interpose themselves
Betwixt your Eyes, and Night?

Cass. Shall I entreat a word?

Decius. Here lyes the East: doth not the Day breake heere?

Cask. No.

Cin. O pardon, Sir, it doth; and yon grey Lines,
That fret the Clouds, are Messengers of Day.

Cask. You shall confesse, that you are both deceiu'd:
Heere, as I point my Sword, the Sunne arises,
Which is a great way growing on the South,

Weigh-

Weighing the youthfull Season of the yeare,
Some two moneths hence, vp higher toward the North
He first presents his fire, and the high East
Stands as the Capitoll, directly heere.

Brut. Giue me your hands all ouer, one by one.

Cass. And let vs sweare our Resolution.

Brut. No, not an Oath: if not the Face of men,
The sufferance of our Soules, the times Abuse;
If these be Motiues weake, breake off betimes;
And euery man hence, to his idle bed:
So let high-fighted Tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by Lottery. But if these
(As I am sure they do) beare fire enough
To kindle Cowards, and to Steele with valour
The melting Spirits of women, Then Countrymen,
What neede we any spurre, but our owne cause,
To pricke vs to redresse? What other Bond,
Then secret Romans, that haue spoke the word,
And will not palter? And what other Oath,
Then Honestly to Honestly ingag'd,
That this shall be, or we will fall for it.
Swear Priests and Cowards, and men Cautelous
Old feeble Cartions, and such suffering Soules
That welcome wrongs: Vnto bad causes, sweare
Such Creatures as men doubt; but do not flaine
The euen vertue of our Enterprize,
Nor th'insuppressible Mettle of our Spirits,
To thinke, that our Cause, or our Performance
Did neede an Oath. When euery drop of blood
That euery Roman beares, and Nobly beares
Is guilty of a feuerall Bastardie,
If he do breake the smallest Particle
Of any promise that hath past from him.

Cass. But what of Cicero? Shall we found him?
I thinke he will stand very strong with vs.

Cask. Let vs not leave him out.

Cin. No, by no meanes.

Metel. O let vs haue him, for his Silver haire
Will purchase vs a good opinion:
And buy mens voyces, to commend our deeds:
It shall be sayd, his iudgement rul'd our hands,
Our youths, and wildenesse, shall no whit appeare,
But all be buried in his Grauity.

Brut. O name him not; let vs not breake with him,
For he will neuer follow any thing
That other men begin.

Cass. Then leaue him out.

Cask. Indeed, he is not fit.

Decius. Shall no man else be toucht, but onely Caesar?

Cass. Decius well vrg'd: I thinke it is not meet,
Marke Antony, so well belou'd of Caesar,
Should out-lie Caesar, we shall finde of him
A shrew'd Contriuer. And you know, his meanes
If he improue them, may well stretch so farre
As to annoy vs all: which to preuent,
Let Antony and Caesar fall together.

Brut. Our course will seeme too bloody, Caius Cassius,
To cut the Head off, and then hacke the Limbes:
Like Wrath in death, and Enny afterwards:
For Antony, is but a Limbe of Caesar.

Let's be Sacrificers, but not Butchers Caius:
We all stand vp against the spirit of Caesar,
And in the Spirit of men, there is no blood:
O that we then could come by Caesar's Spirit,
And not dismember Caesar! But (alas)
Caesar must bleed for it. And gentle Friends,

Let's kill him Boldly, but not Wrathfully:

Let's carue him, as a Dish fit for the Gods;

Not heu him as a Carcasse fit for Hounds:

And let our Hearts, as subtle Masters do,

Stiepe vp their Seruants to an acte of Rage,

And after seeme to chide 'em. This shall make

Our purpose Necessary, and not Enuious,

Which so appearing to the common eyes,

We shall be call'd Purgers, not Murderers.

And for Marke Antony, thinke not of him:

For he can do no more then Caesar's Arme,

When Caesar's head is off.

Cass. Yet I feare him,

For in the ingrafted loue he beares to Caesar,

Brut. Alas, good Cassius, do not thinke of him:

If he loue Caesar, all that he can do

Is to himselfe, take thought, and dye for Caesar,

And that were much he should: for he is giuen

To sports, to wildenesse, and much company.

Treb. There is no feare in him; let him not dye,

For he will liue, and laugh at this heereafter.

Closke strikes.

Brut. Peace, count the Clocke.

Cass. The Clocke hath stricken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

Cass. But it is doubtfull yet,

Whether Caesar will come forth to day, or no:

For he is Superstitious growne of late,

Quite from the maine Opinion he held once,

Of Fantasie, of Dreames, and Ceremonies:

It may be, these apparant Prodigies,

The vnaccustom'd Terror of this night,

And the perswasion of his Augurers,

May hold him from the Capitoll to day.

Decius. Neuer feare that: If he be so resolu'd,

I can ore-sway him: For he loues to heare,

That Vnicornes may be betray'd with Trees,

And Beares with Glasses, Elephants with Holes;

Lyons with Toyles, and men with Flatterers.

But, when I tell him, he hates Flatterers,

He sayes, he does; being then most flattered.

Let me worke:

For I can giue his humour the true bent;

And I will bring him to the Capitoll.

Cass. Nay, we will all of vs, be there to fetch him.

Brut. By the eight howre, is that the vttermost?

Cin. Be that the vttermost, and faile not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth beare Caesar hard,

Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey;

I wonder none of you haue thought of him.

Brut. Now good Metellus go along by him:

He loues me well, and I haue giuen him Reasons,

Send him but hither, and Ile fashion him.

Cass. The morning comes vpon's:

Wee'll leaue you Brutus,

And friends disperse your selues; but all remember

What you haue said, and shew your selues true Romans.

Brut. Good Gentlemen, looke fresh and merrily,

Let not our lookes put on our purposes,

But beare it as our Roman Actors do,

With vntyr'd Spirits, and small Constance,

And so good morrow to you euery one.

Exit.

Manet Brutus.

Boy: Lucius: Fast asleepe? It is no matter,

Enioy the hony-heavy-Dew of Slumber:

Thou hast no Figures, nor no Fantasies,

Which

Which busie care drawes, in the braines of men;
Therefore thou sleepest so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my Lord,

Brut. Portia: What means you? wherefore rise you now?
It is not for your health, thus to commit
Your weake condition, to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. I have vngently Brutus

Stole from my bed: and yesternight at Supper
You sodainly arose, and walk'd about,

Musing, and sighing, with your armes a-crosse:

And when I ask'd you what the matter was,

You star'd vpon me, with vngentle lookes.

I urg'd you further, then you scratch'd your head,

And too impatiently stamp't with your foote:

Yet I infist'd, yet you answer'd not,

But with an angry waister of your hand

Gaue signe for me to leaue you: So I did,

Fearing to strengthen that impatience

Which seem'd too much inkindled; and withall,

Hoping it was but an effect of Humor,

Which sometime hath his houre with euery man.

It will not let you eate, nor talke, nor sleepe;

And could it worke so much vpon your shape,

As it hath much preuail'd on your Condition,

I should not know you Brutus. Deare my Lord,

Make me acquainted with your cause of grieefe.

Brut. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wife, and were he not in health,

He would embrace the meanes to come by it.

Brut. Why so I do: good Portia go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sicke? And is it Physicall

To walke vnbraced, and sucke vp the humours

Of the danke Morning? What, is Brutus sicke?

And will he steale out of his wholesome bed

To dare the vile contagion of the Night?

And tempt the Rheumy, and vnpurged Ayre,

To adde vnto his sicknesse? No my Brutus,

You haue some sicke Offence within your minde,

Which by the Right and Vertue of my place

Iought to know of: And vpon my knees,

I charme you, by my once commended Beauty,

By all your vowes of Loue, and that great Vow

Which did incorporate and make vs one,

That you vnfold to me, your selfe; your halfe

Why you are heauy: and what men to night

Haue had resort to you: for heere haue beene

Some fixe or seuen, who did hide their faces

Euen from darknesse.

Brut. Kneele not gentle Portia.

Por. I should not neede, if you were gentle Brutus.

Within the Bond of Marriage, tell me Brutus,

Is it excepted, I should know no Secrets

That appertaine to you? Am I your Selfe,

But as it were in sort, or limitation?

To keepe with you at Meales, comfort your Bed,

And talke to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the Suburbs

Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,

Portia is Brutus Harlot, not his Wife.

Brut. You are my true and honourable Wife,

As deere to me, as are the ruddy dropes

That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.

I graunt I am a Woman; but withall,

A Woman that Lord Brutus tooke to Wife:

I graunt I am a Woman; but withall,

A Woman well reputed: Caio's Daughter.

Thinke you, I am no stronger then my Sex

Being so Father'd, and so Husbanded?

Tell me your Counsels, I will not disclose 'em:

I haue made strong prooue of my Constancie,

Giuing my selfe a voluntary wound

Heere, in the Thigh: Can I beare that with patience,

And not my Husbands Secrets?

Brut. O ye Gods!

Render me worthy of this Noble Wife.

Hark, hark, one knockes: Portia go in a while,

And by and by thy bosome shall partake

The secrets of my Heart.

All my engagements, I will contrue to thee,

All the Charactery of my sad browes:

Leaue me with hast.

Exit Portia.

Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius, who's that knockes.

Luc. Heere is a sicke man that would speak with you.

Brut. Caio Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.

Boy, stand aside. Caio Ligarius, how?

Caio. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.

Brut. O what a time haue you chose our braue Caio

To weare a Kerchiefe? Would you were not sicke.

Caio. I am not sicke, if Brutus haue in hand

Any exploit worthy the name of Honor.

Brut. Such an exploit haue I in hand Ligarius,

Had you a healthfull eare to heare of it.

Caio. By all the Gods that Romans bow before,

I heere discard my sicknesse. Soule of Rome,

Braue Sonne, deri'd from Honourable Loines,

Thou like an Exorcist, hast coniur'd vp

My mortified Spirit. Now bid me runne,

And I will strue with things impossible,

Yea get the better of them. What's to do?

Brut. A peece of worke,

That will make sicke men whole.

Caio. But are not some whole, that we must make sicke?

Brut. That must we also. What it is my Caio,

I shall vnfold to thee, as we are going,

To whom it must be done.

Caio. Set on your foote,

And with a heart new-fir'd, I follow you,

To do I know not what: but it sufficeth

That Brutus leads me on.

Brut. Follow me then.

Thunder.

Exit.

Thunder & Lightning.

Enter Julius Caesar in his Night-gowne.

Caesar. Nor Heauen, nor Earth,

Haue beene at peace to night:

Thrice hath Calphurnia, in her sleepe cryed out,

Helpe, ho: They murther Caesar. Who's within?

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. My Lord.

Caes. Go bid the Priests do present Sacrifice,

And bring me their opinions of Successe.

Ser. I will my Lord.

Exit.

Enter Calphurnia.

Cal. What mean you Caesar? Think you to walk forth?

You shall not stirre out of your house to day.

Caes. Caesar shall forth; the things that threaten'd me,

Ne're look'd but on my backe: When they shall see

The face of Caesar, they are vanisht.

Calp.

Calp. Caesar, I neuer stood on Ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me: There is one within,
Besides the things that we haue heard and seene,
Recounts most horrid sights seene by the Watch.
A Lionnesse hath whelped in the streets,
And Graues haue yawn'd, and yeelded vp their dead;
Pierce fiery Warriours fight vpon the Clouds
In Ranks and Squadrons, and right forme of Warre
Which drizel'd blood vpon the Capitoll:
The noise of Battell hurtled in the Ayre:
Horses do neigh, and dying men did grone,
And Ghosts did shrieke and squeale about the streets.
O Caesar, these things are beyond all vie,
And I do feare them.

Caes. What can be auoyd

Whole end is purpos'd by the mighty Gods?

Yet Caesar shall go forth: for these Predictions

Are to the world in generall, as to Caesar.

Calp. When Beggars dye, there are no Comets seene,

The Heauens themselues blaze forth the death of Princes

Caes. Cowards dye many times before their deaths,

The valiant neuer taste of death but once:

Of all the Wonders that I yet haue heard,

It seemes to me most strange that men should feare,

Seeing that death, a necessary end

Will come, when it will come.

Enter a Seruant.

What say the Augurers?

Ser. They would not haue you to stirre forth to day.

Plucking the intrayles of an Offering forth,

They could not finde a heart within the beast.

Caes. The Gods do this in shame of Cowardice:

Caesar should be a Beast without a heart

If he should stay at home to day for feare:

No Caesar shall not; Danger knowes full well

That Caesar is more dangerous then he.

We heare two Lyons luter'd in one day,

And I the elder and more terrible,

And Caesar shall go forth.

Calp. Alas my Lord,

Your wisdome is consum'd in confidence:

Donot go forth to day: Call it my feare,

That keepes you in the house, and not your owne.

We'll send Mark Antony to the Senate house,

And he shall say, you are not well to day:

Let me vpon my knee, preuaile in this.

Caes. Mark Antony shall say I am not well,

And for thy humor, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius.

Heere's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Deci. Caesar, all haile: Good morrow worthy Caesar,

I come to fetch you to the Senate house.

Caes. And you are come in very happy time,

To beare my greeting to the Senators,

And tell them that I will not come to day:

Cannot, is false: and that I dare not, falser:

I will not come to day, tell them so Decius.

Calp. Say he is sicke.

Caes. Shall Caesar send a Lye?

Haue I in Conquest stretcht mine Arme so farre,

To be afeard to tell Gray-beards the truth:

Decius, go, tell them, Caesar will not come.

Deci. Most mighty Caesar, let me know some cause,

Left I be laugh't at when I tell them so.

Caes. The cause is in my Will, I will not come,

That is enough to satisfie the Senate.

But for your priuate satisfaction,
Because I loue you, I will let you know.
Calphurnia heere my wife, stayes me at home:
She dreamt to night, she saw my Statue,
Which like a Fountaine, with an hundred spouts
Did run pure blood: and many lusty Romans
Came smiling, & did bathe their hands in it:
And these does she apply, for warnings and portents,
And euils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to day.

Deci. This Dreame is all amisse interpreted,

It was a vision, faire and fortunate:

Your Statue spouting blood in many pipes,

In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,

Signifies, that from you great Rome shall sucke

Renewing blood, and that great men shall presse

For Tinctures, Staines, Reliques, and Cogitance.

This by Calphurnia's Dreame is signified.

Caes. And this way haue you well expounded it.

Deci. I haue, when you haue heard what I can say:

And know it now, the Senate haue concluded

To giue this day, a Crowne to mighty Caesar.

If you shall send them word you will not come,

Their mindes may change. Besides, it were a mocke

Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,

Breake vp the Senate, till another time:

When Caesar's wife shall meere with better Dreames.

If Caesar hide himselfe, shall they not whisper

Loe Caesar is afraid?

Pardon me Caesar, for my deere deere loue

To your proceeding, bids me tell you this:

And reason to my loue is liable.

Caes. How foolish do your fears seeme now Calphurnia!

I am ashamed I did yeeld to them.

Giue me my Robe, for I will go.

Enter Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Caska, Trebonus, Cynna, and Publius.

And looke where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good morrow Caesar.

Caes. Welcome Publius.

What Brutus, are you stirr'd so earely too?

Good morrow Caska: Caio Ligarius,

Caesar was ne're so much your enemy,

As that same Ague which hath made you leane.

What is't a Clocke?

Brut. Caesar, 'tis stricken eight.

Caes. I thanke you for your paines and curtesie.

Enter Antony.

See, Antony that Reuels long a-nights

Is notwithstanding vp. Good morrow Antony.

Ant. So to most Noble Caesar.

Caes. Bid them prepare within:

I am too blame to be thus waited for.

Now Cynna, now Metellus: what Trebonius,

I haue an houres talke in store for you:

Remember that you call on me to day:

Be neere me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Caesar I will: and so neere will I be,

That your best Friends shall wish I had beene further.

Caes. Good Friends go in, and taste some wine with me

And we (like Friends) will straight way go together.

Brut. That euery like is not the same, O Caesar,

The heart of Brutus carnes to thinke vpon.

Exit.

Enter Artemidorus.

Caesar, beware of Brutus, take heed of Caesars, come not neere.

neere Caska, haue an eye to Cyma, trust not Trebonius, marke well Metellus Cymber, Decius Brutus loues thee not: Thou hast wrong'd Caius Ligarius. There is but one minde in all these men, and it is bent against Caesar: If thou beest not Immortall, looke about you: Security giues way to Conspiracie. The mighty Gods defend thee.

Thy Louer, Artemidorus.

Heere will I stand, till Caesar passe along,
And as a Tutor will I giue him this:
My heart laments, that Vertue cannot liue
Out of the reach of Emulation.
If thou reade this, O Caesar, thou mayest liue;
If not, the Fates with Traitors do contriue. Exit.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prythee Boy, run to the Senate-house,
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand Madam.

Por. I would haue had thee there and heere agen
Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there:
O Constancie, be strong vpon my side,
Set a huge Mountaine 'twene my Heart and Tongue:
I haue a mans minde, but a womans might:
How hard it is for women to keepe counsell.
Art thou heere yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?

Run to the Capitoll, and nothing else?
And so returne to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word Boy, if thy Lord look well,
For he went sickly forth: and take good note
What Caesar doth, what Sutors presse to him.
Hearke Boy, what noyse is that?

Luc. I heare none Madam.

Por. Prythee listen well:

I heard a bustling Rumor like a Pray,
And the winde brings it from the Capitoll.

Luc. Sooth Madam, I heare nothing.

Enter the Soothsayer.

Por. Come hither Fellow, which way hast thou bin?

Sooth. At mine owne house, good Lady.

Por. What is't a clocke?

Sooth. About the ninth houre Lady.

Por. Is Caesar yet gone to the Capitoll?

Sooth. Madam not yet, I go to take my stand,
To see him passe on to the Capitoll.

Por. Thou hast some suite to Caesar, hast thou not?

Sooth. That I haue Lady, if it will please Caesar

To be so good to Caesar, as to heare me:

I shall beseech him to befriend himselfe.

Por. Why know'st thou any harme's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be,

Much that I feare may chance:

Good morrow to you: heere the street is narrow:

The throng that followes Caesar at the heeles,

Of Senators, of Prators, common Sutors,

Will crowd a feeble man (almost) to death:

He get me to a place more voyd, and there

Speake to great Caesar as he comes along. Exit.

Por. I must go in:

Aye me! How weake a thing

The heart of woman is! O Brutus,

The Heavens speede thee in thine enterprize.

Sure the Boy heard me: Brutus hath a suite

That Caesar will not grant. O, I grow faint:

Run Lucius, and commend me to my Lord,

Say I am merry; Come to me againe,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee. Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Flourish.

Enter Caesar, Brutus, Cassius, Caska, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cyma, Antony, Lepidus, Artemidorus, Publius, and the Soothsayer.

Cas. The Ides of March are come.

Sooth. I Caesar, but not gone.

Art. Haile Caesar: Read this Scedule.

Deci. Trebonius doth desire you to ore-read

(At your best leysure) this his humble suite.

Art. O Caesar, reade mine first: for mine's a suite

That touches Caesar neerer. Read it great Caesar.

Cas. What touches vs our selfe, shall be last seru'd.

Art. Delay not Caesar, read it instantly.

Cas. What is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirra, giue place.

Cass. What, vrge you your Petitions in the street?

Come to the Capitoll.

Popil. I wish your enterprize to day may thrive.

Cass. What enterprize Popillius?

Popil. Fare you well.

Brut. What said Popillius Lena?

Cass. He wish't to day our enterprize might thrive:

I feare our purpose is discovered.

Brut. Looke how he makes to Caesar: marke him.

Cass. Caska be sodaine, for we feare preuention.

Brutus what shall be done? If this be knowne,

Cassius or Caesar neuer shall turne backe,

For I will slay my selfe.

Brut. Cassius be constant:

Popillius Lena speaks not of our purposes,

For looke he smiles, and Caesar doth not change.

Cass. Trebonius knowes his time: for look you Brutus

He drawes Mark Antony out of the way.

Deci. Where is Metellus Cymber, let him go,

And presently presse his suite to Caesar.

Brut. He is adrest: presse neere, and second him.

Cin. Caska, you are the first that reares your hand.

Cas. Are we all ready? What is now amisse,

That Caesar and his Senate must redresse?

Metel. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Caesar

Metellus Cymber throwes before thy Seate

An humble heart.

Cas. I must preuent thee Cymber:

These couchings, and these lowly courtesies

Might fire the blood of ordinary men,

And turne pre-Ordinance, and first Decree,

Into the lane of Children: Be not fond,

To thinke that Caesar beares such Rebell blood

That will be thaw'd from the true quality

With that which melteth Fooles, I meane sweet words,

Low-crooked-curtsies, and base Spaniell fawning:

Thy Brother by decree is banished:

If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawne for him,

I spurne thee like a Curre out of my way:

Know, Caesar doth not wrong, nor without cause

Will he be satisfied.

Metel. Is there no voyce more worthy then my owne,

To

To sound more sweetly in great Caesars eare,
For the repealing of my banish'd Brother?

Brut. I kisse thy hand, but not in flattery Caesar:

Desiring thee, that Publius Cymber may

Haue an immediate freedome of repeale.

Cas. What Brutus?

Cass. Pardon Caesar: Caesar pardon:

As lowe as to thy foot doth Cassius fall,

To begge enfranchisement for Publius Cymber.

Cas. I could be well mou'd, if I were as you,

If I could pray to moue, Prayers would moue me:

But I am constant as the Northern Starre,

Of whole true fixt, and resting quality;

There is no fellow in the Firmament:

The Skies are painted with vnnumberd sparkes,

They are all Fire, and euery one doth shine:

But, there's but one in all doth hold his place.

So, in the World: 'Tis furnish'd well with Men,

And Men are Flesh and Blood, and apprehensue;

Yet in the number, I do know but One

That vnassayleable holds on his Ranke,

Vnshak'd of Motion: and that I am he,

Let me a little shew it, euen in this:

That I was constant Cymber should be banish'd,

And constant do remaine to keepe him so.

Cyma. O Caesar.

Cas. Hence: Wilt thou liue vp Olympus?

Decius. Great Caesar.

Cas. Doth not Brutus bootlesse kneele?

Cas. Speake hands for me.

They stab Caesar.

Cas. Et Tu Brute?—Then fall Caesar. Dyes

Cin. Liberty, Freedome; Tyranny is dead,

Run hence, proclaime, cry it about the Streets.

Cass. Some to the common Pulpits, and cry out

Liberty, Freedome, and Enfranchisement.

Brut. People and Senators, be not affrighted:

Fly not, stand still: Ambitions debt is paid.

Cas. Go to the Pulpit Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Brut. Where's Publius?

Cin. Heere, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, least some Friend of Caesars

Should chance —

Brut. Talke not of standing. Publius good cheere,

There is no harme intended to your person,

Nor to no Roman else: so tell them Publius.

Cass. And leaue vs Publius, least that the people

Rushing on vs, should do your Age some mischief.

Brut. Do so, and let no man abide this deede,

But we the Doers.

Enter Trebonius.

Cass. Where is Antony?

Treb. Fled to his House amaz'd:

Men, Wiues, and Children, stare, cry out, and run,

As it were Doomesday.

Brut. Fates, we will know your pleasures:

That we shall dye we know, tis but the time

And drawing dayes out, that men stand vpon.

Cas. Why he that cuts off twenty yeares of life,

Cuts off so many yeares of searing death.

Brut. Grant that, and then is Death a Benefit:

So are we Caesars Friends, that haue abridg'd

His time of searing death. Stoope Romans, stoope,

And let vs bathe our hands in Caesars blood:

Vp to the Elbowes, and besmeare our Swords:

Then walke we forth, euen to the Market place,
And wauing our red Weapons o're our heads,
Let's all cry Peace, Freedome, and Liberty.

Cass. Stoop then, and wash. How many Ages hence

Shall this our lofty Scene be acted ouer,

In State vnborne, and Accents yet vknowne?

Brut. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompeyes Basis lye along,

No worthier then the dust?

Cass. So oft as that shall be,

So often shall the knot of vs be call'd,

The Men that gaue their Country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cass. I, euery man away.

Brutus shall leade, and we will grace his heeles

With the most boldest, and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Seruant.

Brut. Soft, who comes heere? A friend of Antonies.

Ser. Thus Brutus did my Master bid me kneele;

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall downe,

And being prostrate, thus he bad me say:

Brutus is Noble, Wise, Valiant, and Honest;

Caesar was Mighty, Bold, Royall, and Louing:

Say, I loue Brutus, and I honour him;

Say, I fear'd Caesar, honour'd him, and lou'd him:

If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony

May safely come to him, and be resolu'd

How Caesar hath deseru'd to lye in death,

Mark Antony, shall not loue Caesar dead

So well as Brutus liuing; but will follow

The Fortunes and Affayres of Noble Brutus,

Thorough the hazards of this vtrod State.

With all true Faith. So sayes my Master Antony.

Brut. Thy Master is a Wise and Valiant Romane,

I neuer thought him worse:

Tell him, so please him come vnto this place

He shall be satisfied: and by my Honor

Depart vntouch'd.

Ser. He fetch him presently. Exit Seruant.

Brut. I know that we shall haue him well to Friend,

Cass. I wish we may: But yet haue I a minde

That feares him much: and my misgiuing still

Falles shrewdly to the purpose.

Enter Antony.

Brut. But heere comes Antony:

Welcome Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Caesar! Dost thou lye so lowe?

Are all thy Conquests, Glories, Triumphes, Spoiles,

Shrunke to this little Measure? Fare thee well.

I know not Gentlemen what you intend,

Who else must be let blood, who else is ranke:

If I my selfe, there is no houre so fit

As Caesars deaths houre; nor no Instrument

Of halfe that worth, as those your Swords; made rich

With the most Noble blood of all this World.

I do beseech yee, if you beare me hard,

Now, whilst your purpled hands do reeke and smoake,

Fulfill your pleasure. Liue a thousand yeeres,

I shall not finde my selfe so apt to dye.

No place will please me so, no meane of death,

As heere by Caesar, and by you cut off,

The Choice and Master Spirits of this Age.

Brut. O Antony I begge not your death of vs:

Though now we must appeare bloody and cruell,

As by our hands, and this our present Acte

You see we do: Yet see you but our hands,

— And

And this, the bleeding businesse they haue done:
Our hearts you see not, they are pittifull:
And pittie to the generall wrong of Rome,
As fire driues out fire, so pittie, pittie
Hath done this deed on Cesar. For your part,
To you, our Swords haue leaden points Marke Antony:
Our Armes in strength of malice, and our Hearts
Of Brothers temper, do receiue you in,
With all kinde loue, good thoughts, and reuerence.
Cassius. Your voyce shall be as strong as any mans,
In the disposing of new Dignities.

Bru. Onely be patient, till we haue appeas'd
The Multitude, beside themselves with feare,
And then, we will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did loue Cesar when I brooke him,
Haue thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your Wisedome:
Let each man render me his bloody hand.
First Marcus Brutus will I shake with you;
Next Caius Cassius do I take your hand;
Now Decius Brutus yours; now yours Metellus;
Yours Cinna; and my valiant Caska, yours;
Though last, not least in loue, yours good Trebonius.
Gentlemen all: Alas, what shall I say,
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad wayes you must conceit me,
Either a Coward, or a Flatterer.
That I did loue thee Cesar, O 'tis true:
If then thy Spirit looke vpon vs now,
Shall it not greue thee deerer then thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy Foes?
Most Noble, in the presence of thy Coarse,
Had I as many eyes, as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they streame forth thy blood,
It would become me better, then to close
In tearmes of Friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me Iulius, heere was't thou bay'd braue Hart,
Heere did'st thou fall, and heere thy Hunters stand
Sign'd in thy Spoyle, and Crimson'd in thy Lethce.
O World! thou wast the Forrest to this Hart,
And this indeed, O World, the Hart of thee.
How like a Deere, stroken by many Princes,
Dost thou heere lye?

Cassius. Mark Antony.

Ant. Pardon me Caius Cassius:
The Enemies of Cesar, shall say this:
Then, in a Friend, it is cold Modestie.

Cassius. I blame you not for praising Cesar so,
But what compact meane you to haue with vs?
Will you be prick'd in number of our Friends,
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I tooke your hands, but was indeed
Sway'd from this point, by looking downe on Cesar.
Friends are I with you all, and loue you all,
Vpon this hope, that you shall giue me Reasons,
Why, and wherein, Cesar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a sauage Spectacle:
Our Reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you Antony, the Sonne of Cesar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seeke,
And am moreover sutor, that I may
Produce his body to the Market-place,
And in the Pulpit as becomes a Friend,
Speake in the Order of his Funerall.

Bru. You shall Marke Antony.

Cassius. Brutus, a word with you:

You know not what you do; Do not consent
That Antony speake in his Funerall:
Know you how much the people may be mou'd
By that which he will utter.

Bru. By your pardon:

I will my selfe into the Pulpit first,
And shew the reason of our Cesar's death.
What Antony shall speake, I will protest
He speakes by leaue, and by permission:
And that we are contented Cesar shall
Haue all true Rites, and lawfull Ceremonies,
It shall aduantage more, then do vs wrong.

Cassius. I know not what may fall, I like it not.

Bru. Marke Antony, heere take you Cesar's body:
You shall not in your Funerall speake blame vs,
But speake all good you can deuise of Cesar,
And say you doo't by our permission:
Else shall you not haue any hand at all
About his Funerall. And you shall speake
In the same Pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so:

I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow vs. Exeunt.

Marke Antony.

O pardon me, thou bleeding peeces of Earth:
That I am meeke and gentle with these Butchers.
Thou art the Ruines of the Noblest man
That euer liued in the Tide of Times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly Blood.
Ouer thy wounds, now do I Prophesie,
(Which like dumbe mouthes do ope their Ruby lips,
To begge the voyce and vtterance of my Tongue)
A Curse shall light vpon the limbes of men;
Domesticke Fury, and fierce Ciuill strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and destruction shall be so in vse,
And dreadfull Obiects so familiar,
That Mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their Infants quartered with the hands of Warre:
All pittie chok'd with custome of fell deeds,
And Cesar's Spirit ranging for Reuenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from Hell,
Shall in these Confinies, with a Monarkes voyce,
Cry hauocke, and let slip the Dogges of Warre,
That this foule deede, shall smell aboue the earth
With Carrion men, groaning for Buriall.

Enter Octavius's Seruant.

You serue Octavius Caesar, do you not?

Ser. I do Marke Antony.

Ant. Cesar did write for him to come to Rome.

Ser. He did receiue his Letters, and is coming;
And bid me say to you by word of mouth—
O Cesar!

Ant. Thy heart is bigge: get thee a-part and weepe:
Pasion I see is catching from mine eyes,
Seeing those Beads of sorrow stand in mine,
Began to water. Is thy Master coming?

Ser. He lies to night within seuen Leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post backe with speede,

And tell him what hath chanc'd:

Heere is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet;

Hit hence, and tell him so. Yet stay a-while,

Thou

Thou shalt not backe, till I haue borne this course
Into the Market place: There shall I try
In my Oration, how the People take
The cruell issue of these bloody men,
According to the which, thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius, of the state of things.
Lend me your hand. Exeunt

Enter Brutus and goes into the Pulpit, and Cassius, with the Plebeians.

Pl. We will be satisfied: let vs be satisfied.

Bru. Then follow me, and giue me Audience friends.

Cassius go you into the other streete,

And part the Numbers:

Those that will heare me speake, let 'em stay heere;

Those that will follow Cassius, go with him,

And publike Reasons shall be rendred

Of Cesar's death.

1. Pl. I will heare Brutus speake.

2. I will heare Cassius, and compare their Reasons,

When featurally we heare them rendred.

3. The Noble Brutus is ascended: Silence.

Bru. Be patient till the last.

Romans, Countrey-men, and Louers, heare mee for my cause, and be silent, that you may heare. Beleeue me for mine Honor, and haue respect to mine Honor, that you may beleeue. Censure me in your Wisedome, and awake your Senses, that you may the better Iudge. If there bee any in this Assembly, any deere Friend of Cesar's, to him
I say, that Brutus loue to Cesar, was no lesse then his. If then, that Friend demand, why Brutus rose against Ce- sar, this is my answer: Not that I lou'd Cesar lesse, but that I lou'd Rome more. Had you rather Cesar were liuing, and dye all Slaues; then that Cesar were dead, to liue all Free-men? As Cesar lou'd mee, I weepe for him; as he was Fortunate, I reioyce at it; as he was Valiant, I honour him: But, as he was Ambitious, I slew him. There is Teares, for his Loue: Loy, for his Fortune: Honor, for his Valour: and Death, for his Ambition. Who is heere so base, that would be a Bondman? If any, speake, for him haue I offended. Who is heere so rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, speake, for him haue I offended. Who is heere so vile, that will not loue his Countrey? If any, speake, for him haue I offended. I pause for a Reply.

All. None Brutus, none.

Brutus. Then none haue I offended. I haue done no more to Cesar, then you shall do to Brutus. The Question of his death, is inroll'd in the Capitoll: his Glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences en-fore'd, for which he suffered death.

Enter Mark Antony, with Caesar's body.

Heere comes his Body, mourn'd by Marke Antony, who though he had no hand in his death, shall receiue the benefit of his dying, a place in the Common wealth, as which of you shall not. With this I depart, that as I slewe my best Louer for the good of Rome, I haue the same Dagger for my selfe, when it shall please my Countrey to need my death.

All. Liue Brutus, liue, liue.

1. Bring him with Triumph home vnto his house.

2. Giue him a Statue with his Ancestors.

3. Let him be Cesar.

4. Cesar's better parts,

Shall be Crown'd in Brutus.

1. Wee'll bring him to his House,

With Showts and Clamors.

Bru. My Countrey-men.

2. Peace, silence, Brutus speakes;

1. Peace ho.

Bru. Good Countrey-men, let me depart alone,

And (for my sake) stay heere with Antony:

Do grace to Cesar's Corpes, and grace his Speech

Tending to Cesar's Glories, which Marke Antony

(By our permission) is allow'd to make.

I do intreat you, not a man depart,

Save I alone, till Antony haue spoke. Exit

1. Stay ho, and let vs heare Mark Antony.

3. Let him go vp into the publike Chaire,

Wee'll heare him: Noble Antony go vp.

Ant. For Brutus sake, I am beholding to you.

4. What does he say of Brutus?

3. He sayes, for Brutus sake

He findes himselfe beholding to vs all.

4. 'Twere best he speake no harme of Brutus heere?

1. This Cesar was a Tyrant.

3. Nay that's certaine:

We are blest that Rome is rid of him.

2. Peace, let vs heare what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans.

All. Peace hee, let vs heare him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, Countrey-men, lend me your eares:

I come to bury Cesar, not to praise him:

The euill that men do, liues after them;

The good is oft enterred with their bones,

So let it be with Cesar. The Noble Brutus,

Hath told you Cesar was Ambitious:

If it were so, it was a greuous Fault,

And greuously hath Cesar answer'd it.

Heere, vnder leaue of Brutus, and the rest

(For Brutus is an Honourable man,

So are they all; all Honourable men)

Come I to speake in Cesar's Funerall.

He was my Friend, faithfull, and iust to me;

But Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious,

And Brutus is an Honourable man.

He hath brought many Captiues home to Rome,

Whose Ransomes, did the generall Coffers fill:

Did this in Cesar seeme Ambitious?

When that the poore haue cry'de, Cesar hath wept:

Ambition should be made of sterner stuffe,

Yet Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious:

And Brutus is an Honourable man.

You all did see, that on the Lupercall,

I thrice presented him a Kingly Crowne,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this Ambition?

Yet Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious:

And sure he is an Honourable man.

I speake not to disproue what Brutus spoke,

But heere I am, to speake what I do know;

You all did loue him once, not without cause,

What cause with-holds you then, to mourne for him?

O Iudgement! thou art fled to brutish Beasts,

And Men haue lost their Reason. Beare with me,

My heart is in the Coffin there with Cesar,

And I must pause, till it come backe to me.

1. Me thinkes there is much reason in his sayings.

2. If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Cesar ha's had great wrong. (his place.

3. Ha's hee Masters? I feare there will a worse come in 11

4. Marke

4. Mark'd ye his words? he would not take y<sup>e</sup> Crown,
Therefore 'tis certaine, he was not Ambitious.

1. If it be found so, some will deere abide it.

2. Poore soule, his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

3. There's not a Nobler man in Rome then Antony.

4. Now marke him, he begins againe to speake.

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Cesar might Haue stood against the World: Now lies he there,
And none so poore to do him reuerence.

O Masters! If I were dispos'd to stirre

Your hearts and mindes to Mutiny and Rage,

I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong:

Who (you all know) are Honourable men.

I will not do them wrong: I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong my selfe and you,

Then I will wrong such Honourable men.

But heere's a Parchment, with the Seale of Cesar,

I found it in his Closet, 'tis his Will:

Let but the Commons heare this Testament:

(Which pardon me) I do not meane to reade,

And they would go and kisse dead Cesars wounds,

And dip their Napkins in his Sacred Blood;

Yea, begge a haire of him for Memory,

And dying, mention it within their Willes,

Bequeathing it as a rich Legacie

Vnto their issue.

4. Wee'l heare the Will, reade it Marke Antony.

All. The Will, the Will; we will heare Cesars Will.

Ant. Haue patience gentle Friends, I must not read it.

It is not meete you know how Cesar lou'd you:

You are not Wood, you are not Stones, but men:

And being men, hearing the Will of Cesar,

It will inflame you, it will make you mad;

'Tis good you know not that you are his Heires,

For if you should, O what would come of it?

4. Read the Will, wee'l heare it Antony:

You shall reade vs the Will, Cesars Will.

Ant. Will you be Patient? Will you stay a-while?

I haue o're-shot my selfe to tell you of it,

I feare I wrong the Honourable men,

Whose Daggers haue stabb'd Cesar: I do feare it,

4. They were Traitors: Honourable men?

All. The Will, the Testament.

2. They were Villaines, Murderers: the Will, read the

Will.

Ant. You will compell me then to read the Will:

Then make a Ring about the Corpes of Cesar,

And let me shew you him that made the Will:

Shall I descend? And will you giue me leaue?

All. Come downe.

2. Descend.

3. You shall haue leaue.

4. A Ring, stand round.

1. Stand from the Hearse, stand from the Body.

2. Roome for Antony, most Noble Antony.

Ant. Nay presse not to vpon me, stand farre off.

All. Stand backe: roome, beare backe.

Ant. If you haue teares, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this Mantle, I remember

The first time euer Cesar put it on,

'Twas on a Summers Euening in his Tent,

That day he ouercame the Nervii.

Looke in this place ran Cassius Dagger through:

See what a rent the enuious Caska made:

Through this, the wel-beloued Brutus stabb'd,

And as he pluck'd his cur'd Steele away:

Marke how the blood of Cesar followed it,

As rushing out of doores, to be resolu'd

If Brutus so vnkindely knock'd, or no:

For Brutus, as you know, was Cesars Angel.

Iudge, O you Gods, how deerey Cesar lou'd him:

This was the most vnkindest cut of all.

For when the Noble Cesar saw him stab,

Ingratitude, more strong then Traitors armes,

Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his Mighty heart,

And in his Mantle, muffling vp his face,

Euen at the Base of Pompeys Statue

(Which all the while ran blood) great Cesar fell.

O what a fall was there, my Countrymen?

Then I, and you, and all of vs fell downe,

Whil'st bloody Treason flourish'd ouer vs.

Now you weepe, and I pereeue you feeble

The dint of pittie: These are gracious droppes.

Kinde Soules, what weepe you, when you but behold

Our Cesars Vesture wounded? Looke you heere,

Heere is Himselfe, mar'd as you see with Traitors.

1. O pitteous spectacle!

2. O Noble Cesar!

3. O wofull day!

4. O Traitors, Villaines!

1. O most bloody fight!

2. We will be reueng'd: Reuenge

About, seeke, burne, fire, kill, slay,

Let not a Traitor liue.

Ant. Stay Country-men.

1. Peace there, heare the Noble Antony.

2. Wee'l heare him, wee'l follow him, wee'l dy with him.

Ant. Good Friends, sweet Friends, let me not stirre

To such a sodaine Flood of Mutiny:

They that haue done this Deede, are honourable,

What priuate griefes they haue, alas I know not,

That made them do it: They are Wise, and Honourable,

And will no doubt with Reasons answer you.

I come not (Friends) to steale away your hearts,

I am no Orator, as Brutus is;

But (as you know me all) a plaine blunt man

That loue my Friend, and that they know full well,

That gaue me publike leaue to speake of him:

For I haue neyther writ nor words, nor worth,

Action, nor Vtterance, nor the power of Speech,

To stirre mens Blood. I onely speake right on:

I tell you that, which you your selues do know,

Shew you sweet Cesars wounds, poor poor dum mouths

And bid them speake for me: But were I Brutus,

And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony

Would ruffle vp your Spirits, and put a Tongue

In euery Wound of Cesar, that should moue

The Stones of Rome, to rise and Mutiny.

All. Wee'l Mutiny.

1. Wee'l burne the house of Brutus.

3. Away then, come, seeke the Conspirators.

Ant. Yet heare me Countrymen, yet heare me speake

All. Peace hoe, heare Antony, most Noble Antony.

Ant. Why Friends, you go to do you know not what:

Wherein hath Cesar thus deseru'd your loues?

Alas you know not, I must tell you then:

You haue forgot the Will I told you of.

All. Most true, the Will, let's stay and heare the Will.

Ant. Heere is the Will, and vnder Cesars Seale:

To euery Roman Citizen he giues,

To euery feuerall man, seuentie fine Drachmaes.

2. Pl.

2. Pl. Most Noble Cesar, wee'l reuenge his death.

3. Pl. O Royall Cesar.

Ant. Heare me with patience.

All. Peace hoe

Ant. Moreouer, he hath left you all his Walkes,

His priuate Arbors, and new-planted Orchards,

On this side Tyber, he hath left them you,

And to your heyres for euer: common pleasures

To walke abroad, and recreate your selues.

Heere was a Cesar: when comes such another?

1. Pl. Neuer, neuer: come, away, away:

Wee'l burne his body in the holy place,

And with the Brands fire the Traitors houses.

Take vp the body.

2. Pl. Go fetch fire.

3. Pl. Plucke downe Benches.

4. Pl. Plucke downe Formes, Windowes, any thing.

Exit Plebeians.

Ant. Now let it worke: Mischeefe thou art a-foot,

Take thou what course thou wilt.

How now Fellow?

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is hee?

Ser. He and Lepidus are at Cesars house.

Ant. And thither will I straight, to visit him:

He comes vpon a wish. Fortune is merry,

And in this mood will giue vs any thing.

Ser. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius

Aerid like Madmen through the Gates of Rome.

Ant. Belike they had some notice of the people

How I had moued them. Bring me to Octavius. Exit

Enter Cinna the Poet, and after him the Plebeians.

Cinna. I dreamt to night, that I did feast with Cesar,

And things vnluckily charge my Fantasie:

I haue no will to wander forth of doores,

Yet something leads me forth.

1. What is your name?

2. Whether are you going?

3. Where do you dwell?

4. Are you a married man, or a Batchellor?

2. Answer euery man directly.

1. I, and breecely.

4. I, and wisely.

3. I, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whether am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a Batchellor? Then to answer euery man, directly and breecely, wisely and truly: wisely I say, I am a Batchellor.

2. That's as much as to say, they are fooles that marrie: you'l beare me a bang for that I feare: proceede directly.

Cinna. Directly I am going to Cesars Funerall.

1. As a Friend, or an Enemy?

Cinna. As a friend.

2. That matter is answered directly.

4. For your dwelling: breecely.

Cinna. Breecely, I dwell by the Capitoll.

3. Your name fir, truly.

Cinna. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1. Teare him to peeces, hee's a Conspirator.

Cinna. I am Cinna the Poet, I am Cinna the Poet.

4. Teare him for his bad verses, teare him for his bad

Verbes.

Cin. I am not Cinna the Conspirator.

4. It is no matter, his name's Cinna, plucke but his name out of his heart, and turne him going.

3. Teare him, teare him; Come Brands hoe, Firebrands:

to Brutus, to Cassius, burne all. Some to Decius Houle, and some to Caska's; some to Ligarius: Away, go.

Exit all the Plebeians.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus.

Ant. These many then shall die, their names are prickt

Octa. Your Brother too must dye: consent you Lepidus?

Lep. I do content.

Octa. Pricke him downe Antony.

Lep. Vpon condition Publius shall not liue,

Who is your Sisters sennet, Marke Antony.

Ant. He shall not liue; looke, with a spot I dam him,

But Lepidus, go you to Cesars houle:

Fetch the Will hither, and we shall determine

How to cut off some charge in Legacies.

Lep. What? shall I finde you heere?

Octa. Or heere, or at the Capitoll. Exit Lepidus

Ant. This is a right vnmerritable man,

Meet to be sent on Errands: is it fit

The three-fold World diuided, he should stand

One of the three to share it?

Octa. So you thought him,

And tooke his voyce who should be prickt to dye

In our blacke Sentence and Proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I haue seene more dayes then you,

And though we lay these Honours on this man,

To ease our selues of diuers stand'rous loads,

He shall but beare them, as the Ass beares Gold,

To groane and sweate vnder the Burfesse,

Either led or driuen, as we point the way:

And hauing brought our Treasure, where we will,

Then take we downe his Load, and turne him off

(Like to the empty Ass) to shake his eares,

And graze in Commons.

Octa. You may do your will:

But hee's a tried, and valiant Souldier.

Ant. So is my Horse Octavius, and for that I do appoint him store of Prouender,

It is a Creature that I teach to fight,

To winde, to stop, to run directly on:

His corporall Motion, gouern'd by my Spirit,

And in some taste, is Lepidus but so:

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth:

A barren spirited Fellow; one that feeds

On Obiects, Arts, and Imitations.

And bayed about with many Enemies,
And some that smile haue in their hearts I feare
Millions of Mischeeues.

Exeunt

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucillius, and the Army, Titinius and Pindarus meete them.

Brut. Stand ho.

Lucil. Giue the word ho, and Stand.

Brut. What now Lucillius, is Cassius nere?

Lucil. He is at hand, and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his Master.

Brut. He greets me well. Your Master Pindarus
In his owne change, or by ill Officers,
Hath giuen me some worthy cause to wish
Things done, yndone: But if he be at hand
I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt

But that my Noble Master will appeare
Such as he is, full of regard, and Honour.

Brut. He is not doubted. A word Lucillius
How he recei'd you: let me be resolu'd.

Lucil. With courtesie, and with respect enough,
But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly Conference
As he hath vs'd of old.

Brut. Thou hast describ'd
A hot Friend, cooling: Euer note Lucillius,
When Loue begins to sicken and decay
It vseth an enforced Ceremony.

There are no trickes, in plaine and simple Faith:
But hollow men, like Horses hot at hand,
Make gallant shew, and promise of their Mettle:

Low March within.

But when they should endure the bloody Spurre,
They fall their Crests, and like deceitfull Iades Sink in the Triall. Comes his Army on?

Lucil. They meane this night in Sardis to be quarter'd:
The greater part, the Horse in generall
Are come with Cassius.

Enter Cassius and his Povers.

Brut. Hearke, he is arriu'd:
March gently on to meete him.

Cass. Stand ho.

Brut. Stand ho, speake the word along.

Stand.

Stand.

Stand.

Cass. Most Noble Brother, you haue done me wrong.

Brut. Iudge me you Gods; wrong I mine Enemies?
And if not so, how should I wrong a Brother.

Cass. Brutus, this sober forme of yours, hides wrongs,
And when you do them—

Brut. Cassius, be content.

Speake your griefes softly, I do know you well.
Before the eyes of both our Armies heere
(Which should perceiue nothing but Loue from vs)
Let vs not wrangle. Bid them moue away:
Then in my Tent Cassius enlarge your Griefes,
And I will giue you Audience.

Cass. Pindarus,

Bid our Commanders leade their Charges off
A litle from this ground.

Brut. Lucillius, do you the like, and let no man
Come to our Tent, till we haue done our Conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our doore. Exeunt
Manet Brutus and Cassius.

Cass. That you haue wrong'd me, doth appear in this:
You haue condemn'd, and noted Lucius Pella
For taking Bribes heere of the Sardians;
Wherein my Letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man was slighted off.

Brut. You wrong'd your selfe to write in such a case.

Cass. In such a time as this, it is not meet

That euery nice offence should beare his Comment.

Brut. Let me tell you Cassius, you your selfe,
Are much condemn'd to haue an itching Palme,
To sell, and Mart your Offices for Gold
To Vnder seruers.

Cass. I, an itching Palme?
You know that you are Brutus that speakes this,
Or by the Gods, this speech were else your last.

Brut. The name of Cassius Honors this corruption,
And Chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cass. Chastisement?

Brut. Remember March, the Ides of March remember:
Did not great Julius bleed for Iustice sake?

What Villaine touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for Iustice? What? Shall one of Vs,
That stricke the Formost man of all this World,
But for supporting Robbers: shall we now,
Contaminate our fingers, with base Bribes?

And sell the mighty space of our large Honors
For so much trash, as may be grasped thus?
I had rather be a Dogge, and bay the Moone,
Then such a Roman.

Cass. Brutus, baite not me,
He not indure it: you forget your selfe
To hedge me in. I am a Souldier, I,
Older in practice, Abler then your selfe
To make Conditions.

Brut. Go too: you are not Cassius.

Cass. I am.

Brut. I say, you are not.

Cass. Urge me no more, I shall forget my selfe:
Haue minde vpon your health: Tempt me no farther.

Brut. Away slight man.

Cass. Is't possible?

Brut. Heare me, for I will speake.

Must I giue way, and roome to your rash Choller?
Shall I be frighted, when a Madman stares?

Cass. O ye Gods, ye Gods, Must I endure all this?
Brut. All this? I tell you: Fret till your proud harts break.

Go shew your Slaue how Chollericke you are,
And make your Bondmen tremble. Must I bouge?
Must I obserue you? Must I stand and crouch
Vnder your Testie Humour? By the Gods,
You shall digest the Venom of your Spleene
Though it do Split you. For, from this day forth,
He vse you for my Mirth, yea for my Laughter
When you are Waspish.

Cass. Is it come to this?

Brut. You say, you are a better Souldier:

Let it appeare so; make your vnting true,
And it shall please me well. For mine owne part,
I shall be glad to learne of Brutus.

Cass. You wrong me euery way.

You wrong me Brutus:
I saide, an Elder Souldier, not a Better.

Did I say Better?

Brut. If you did, I care not.

Cass. When Cesar liu'd, he durst not thus haue mou'd
Brut. Peace, peace, you durst not so haue tempted him.

(me.

Cass.

Cass. I durst not.

Brut. No.

Cass. What? durst not tempt him?

Brut. For your life you durst not.

Cass. Do not presume too much vpon my Loue,

I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Brut. You haue done that you should be sorry for.

There is no terror Cassius in your threats:

For I am Arm'd so strong in Honesty,

That they passe by me, as the idle winde,

Which I respect not. I did send to you

For certaine summes of Gold, which you deny'd me;

For I can raise no money by vile meanes:

By Heauen, I had rather Coine my Heart,

And drop my blood for Drachmaes, then to wring

From the hard hands of Peazants, their vile trash
By any indirection. I did send

To you for Gold to pay my Legions,

Which you deny'd me: was that done like Cassius?

Should I haue answer'd Caius Cassius so?

When Marcus Brutus growes so Couetous,

To locke such Rascall Counters from his Friends,

Be ready Gods with all your Thunder-bolts,
Dash him to peeces.

Cass. I deny'd you not.

Brut. You did.

Cass. I did not. He was but a Foole

That brought my answer back. Brutus hath riu'd my hart:

A Friend should beare his Friends infirmities;

But Brutus makes mine greater then they are.

Brut. I do not, till you practice them on me.

Cass. You loue me not.

Brut. I do not like your faults.

Cass. A friendly eye could neuer see such faults.

Brut. A Flatterers would not, though they do appeare

As huge as high Olympus.

Cass. Come Antony, and yong Octavius come;

Revenge your selues alone on Cassius,

For Cassius is a-weary of the World:

Hated by one he loues, brau'd by his Brother,

Check'd like a bondman, all his faults obseru'd,
Set in a Note-booke, learn'd, and con'd by rote
To cast into my Teeth. O I could weepe
My Spirit from mine eyes. There is my Dagger,
And heere my naked Breast: Within a Heart
Deerer then Pluto's Mine, Richer then Gold:
If that thou bee'st a Roman, take it forth.
I that deny'd thee Gold, will giue my Heart:
Strike as thou did'st at Cesar: For I know,
When thou did'st hate him worst, thou loued'st him better
Then euer thou loued'st Cassius.

Brut. Sheath your Dagger:

Beangry when you will, it shall haue scope:

Do what you will, Dishonor, shall be Humour.

O Cassius, you are yoked with a Lambe

That carries Anger, as the Flint beares fire,
Who much inforced, shewes a hastie Sparke,
And strait is cold agen.

Cass. Hath Cassius liu'd

To be but Mirth and Laughter to his Brutus,

When griefe and blood ill temper'd, vexeth him?

Brut. When I spoke that, I was ill temper'd too.

Cass. Do you confesse so much? Giue me your hand.

Brut. And my heart too.

Cass. O Brutus!

Brut. What's the matter?

Cass. Haue not you loue enough to beare with me,
When that rash humour which my Mother gaue me
Makes me forgetfull.

Brut. Yes Cassius, and from henceforth

When you are ouer-earnest with your Brutus,

Hee'll thinke your Mother chides, and leaue you so.

Enter a Poet.

Peet. Let me go in to see the Generals,

There is some grudge betwene 'em, 'tis not meete

They be alone.

Lucil. You shall not come to them.

Peet. Nothing but death shall stay me.

Cass. How now? What's the matter?

Peet. For shame you Generals; what do you meane?

Loue, and be Friends, as two such men should bee,

For I haue seene more yeeres I me sure then yee.

Cass. Ha, ha, how vildely doth this Cynicke rime?

Brut. Get you hence firra: Sawcy fellow, hence.

Cass. Beare with him Brutus, 'tis his fashion.

Brut. He know his humor, when he knowes his time:

What should the Warres do with these liggig Fooles?

Companion, hence.

Cass. Away, away be gone. Exit Poet

Brut. Lucillius and Titinius bid the Commanders

Prepare to lodge their Companies to night.

Cass. And come your selues, & bring Messala with you

Immediately to vs.

Brut. Lucius, a bowle of Wine.

Cass. I did not thinke you could haue bin so angry.

Brut. O Cassius, I am sicke of many griefes.

Cass. Of your Philosophy you make no vse,

If you giue place to accidentall euils.

Brut. No man beares sorrow better. Portia is dead.

Cass. Ha? Portia?

Brut. She is dead.

Cass. How seap'd I killing, when I crost you so?

O insupportable, and touching losse!

Vpon what sicknesse?

Brut. Impatient of my absence,

And griefe, that yong Octavius with Mark Antony

Haue made themselves so strong: For with her death

That tydings came. With this she fell distract,

And (her Attendants absent) swallow'd fire.

Cass. And dy'd so?

Brut. Euen so.

Cass. O ye immortall Gods!

Enter Boy with Wine, and Tapers.

Brut. Speak no more of her: Giue me a bowl of wine,

In this I bury all unkindnesse Cassius. Drinke

Cass. My heart is thirsty for that Noble pledge.

Fill Lucius, till the Wine ore-swell the Cup:

I cannot drinke too much of Brutus loue.

Enter Titinius and Messala.

Brutus. Come in Titinius:

Welcome good Messala:

Now sit we close about this Taper heere,

And call in question our necessities.

Cass. Portia, art thou gone?

Brut. No more I pray you.

Messala, I haue heere receiued Letters,

That yong Octavius, and Mark Antony

Come downe vpon vs with a mighty power,

Bending their Expedition toward Philippi.

Mess. My selfe haue Letters of the selfe-same Tenure.
Brut. With what Addition.
Mess. That by proscription, and billes of Outlawrie,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
 Haue put to death, an hundred Senators.
Brut. Therein our Letters do not well agree:
 Mine speake of seuentie Senators, that dy'de
 By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.
Cass. Cicero one?
Mess. Cicero is dead, and by that order of proscription
 Had you your Letters from your wife, my Lord?
Brut. No Messala.
Mess. Nor nothing in your Letters writ of her?
Brut. Nothing Messala.
Mess. That me thinkes is strange.
Brut. Why aske you?
 Heare you ought of her, in yours?
Mess. No my Lord.
Brut. Now as you are a Roman tell me true.
Mess. Then like a Roman, beare the truth I tell;
 For certaine she is dead, and by strange manner.
Brut. Why farewell Portia. We must die Messala:
 With meditating that she must dye once,
 I haue the patience to endure it now.
Mess. Euen so great men, great losses shold indure.
Cass. I haue as much of this in Art as you,
 But yet my Nature could not beare it so.
Brut. Well, to our worke aline. What do you thinke
 Of marching to Philippi presently.
Cass. I do not thinke it good.
Brut. Your reason?
Cass. This it is:
 'Tis better that the Enemie seeke vs,
 So shall he waste his meanes, weary his Souldiers,
 Doing himselfe offence, whil'ft we lying still,
 Are full of rest, defence, and nimblenesse.
Brut. Good reasons must of force giue place to better:
 The people 'twixt Philippi, and this ground
 Do stand but in a forc'd affection:
 For they haue grudg'd vs Contribution.
 The Enemie, marching along by them,
 By them shall make a fuller number vp,
 Come on refreshed, new added, and encourag'd:
 From which aduantage shall we cut him off.
 If at Philippi we do face him there,
 These people at our backe.
Cass. Heare me good Brother.
Brut. Vnder your pardon. You must note beside,
 That we haue tride the vtmost of our Friends:
 Our Legions are brim full, our cause is ripe,
 The Enemie encreaseth euery day,
 We at the height, are readie to decline.
 There is a Tide in the affayres of men,
 Which taken at the Flood, leades on to Fortune:
 Omitted, all the voyage of their life,
 Is bound in Shallowes, and in Miseries.
 On such a full Sea are we now a-foate,
 And we must take the current when it serues,
 Or loose our Ventures.
Cass. Then with your will go on: wee'l along
 Our selues, and meet them at Philippi.
Brut. The deepe of night is crept vpon our talke,
 And Nature must obey Necessitie,
 Which we will niggard with a little rest:
 There is no more to say.
Cass. No more, good night;

Early to morrow will we rise, and hence.

Enter Lucius.

Brut. Lucius my Gowne: farewell good Messala,
 Good night Tutius: Noble, Noble Cassius,
 Good night, and good repose.
Cass. O my deere Brother:
 This was an ill beginning of the night:
 Neuer come such diuision 'twene our foules:
 Let it not Brutus.

Enter Lucius with the Gowne.

Brut. Euery thing is well.
Cass. Good night my Lord.
Brut. Good night good Brother.
Tut. Mess. Good night Lord Brutus.
Brut. Farewell euery one.
 Giue me the Gowne. Where is thy Instrument?
Luc. Heere in the Tent.
Brut. What, thou speak'st drowzily?
 Poore knaue I blame thee not, thou art ore-watch'd,
 Call Claudius, and some other of my men,
 Ile haue them sleepe on Cushions in my Tent.
Luc. Varrus, and Claudius.

Enter Varrus and Claudius.

Varr. Cals my Lord?
Brut. I pray you sirs, lye in my Tent and sleepe,
 It may be I shall raise you by and by
 On businesse to my Brother Cassius.
Varr. So please you, we will stand,
 And watch your pleasure.
Brut. I will not haue it so: Lye downe good sirs,
 It may be I shall otherwise bethinke me.
 Looke Lucius, heere's the booke I sought for so:
 I put it in the pocket of my Gowne.
Luc. I was sure your Lordship did not giue it me.
Brut. Beare with me good Boy, I am much forgetfull, Canst thou hold vp thy heaue eyes a-while,
 And touch thy Instrument a straine or two.
Luc. I my Lord, an't please you.
Brut. It does my Boy:
 I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.
Luc. It is my duty Sir.
Brut. I should not vrge thy duty past thy might,
 I know yong bloods looke for a time of rest.
Luc. I haue slept my Lord already.
Brut. It was well done, and thou shalt sleepe againe:
 I will not hold thee long. If I do liue,
 I will be good to thee.

Musicke, and a Song.

This is a sleepey Tune: O Mord'rous slumber!
 Layest thou thy Leaden Mace vpon my Boy,
 That playes thee Musicke? Gentle knaue good night:
 I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee:
 If thou do'st nod, thou break'st thy Instrument,
 Ile take it from thee, and (good Boy) good night.
 Let me see, let me see; is not the Lease turn'd downe
 Where I left reading? Heere it is I thinke.

Enter the Ghost of Caesar.

How ill this Taper burnes. Ha! Who comes heere?
 I thinke it is the weakenesse of mine eyes
 That shapeth this monstrous Apparition.
 It comes vpon me: Art thou any thing?
 Art thou some God, some Angell, or some Diuell,
 That mak'st my blood cold, and my haire to bate?
 Speake to me, what thou art.
Ghost. Thy euill Spirit Brutus?
Brut. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee thou shalt see me at Philippi.
Brut. Well: then I shall see thee againe?
Ghost. I at Philippi.
Brut. Why I will see thee at Philippi then:
 Now I haue taken heart, thou vanishest.
 Ill Spirit, I would hold more talke with thee.
 Boy, Lucius, Varrus, Claudius, sirs: Awake:
Claudius.
Luc. The strings my Lord, are false.
Brut. He thinkes he still is at his Instrument.
Lucius, awake.
Luc. My Lord.
Brut. Did'st thou dreame Lucius, that thou so cryedst
 out?
Luc. My Lord, I do not know that I did cry.
Brut. Yes that thou did'st: Did'st thou see any thing?
Luc. Nothing my Lord.
Brut. Sleepe againe Lucius: Sirra Claudius, Fellow, Thou: Awake.
Varr. My Lord.
Claud. My Lord.
Brut. Why did you so cry out sirs, in your sleepe?
Both. Did we my Lord?
Brut. I: saw you any thing?
Varr. No my Lord, I saw nothing.
Claud. Nor I my Lord.
Brut. Go, and commend me to my Brother Cassius:
 Bid him set on his Powres betimes before,
 And we will follow.
Both. It shall be done my Lord.

Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Octa. Now Antony, our hopes are answered,
 You said the Enemie would not come downe,
 But keepe the Hilles and vpper Regions:
 It proues not so: their battailes are at hand,
 They meane to warne vs at Philippi heere:
 Answering before we do demand of them.
Ant. Tut I am in their bosomes, and I know
 Wherefore they do it: They could be content
 To visit other places, and come downe
 With fearefull brauery: thinking by this face
 To fasten in our thoughts that they haue Courage;
 But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you Generals,
 The Enemie comes on in gallant shew:
 Their bloody signe of Battell is hung out,
 And something to be done immediately.
Ant. Octavius, leade your Battaille softly on Vpon the left hand of the euen Field.
Octa. Vpon the right hand I keepe thou the left.
Ant. Why do you crosse me in this exigent.
Octa. I do not crosse you: but I will do so. March.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, & their Army.

Brut. They stand, and would haue parley.
Cass. Stand fast Tutius, we must out and talke.
Octa. Mark Antony, shall we giue signe of Battaille?
Ant. No Caesar, we will answer on their Charge.

Make forth, the Generals would haue some words.
Oct. Stirre not vntill the Signall.
Brut. Words before blowes: is it so Countrymen?
Octa. Not that we loue words better, as you do.
Brut. Good words are better then bad strokes Octavius.
Ant. In your bad strokes Brutus, you giue good words
 Witnesse the hole you made in Caesar's heart,
 Crying long liue, Haile Caesar.
Cass. Antony,
 The posture of your blowes are yet vknowne:
 But for your words, they rob the Hibla Bees,
 And leaue them Hony-lesse.
Ant. Not stinglesse too.
Brut. O yes, and foundlesse too:
 For you haue stolne their buzzing Antony,
 And very wisely threat before you sting.
Ant. Villains: you did not so, when your vile daggers
 Hackt one another in the sides of Caesar:
 You shew'd your teethes like Apes,
 And fawn'd like Hounds,
 And bow'd like Bondmen, kissing Caesar's feete;
 Whil'ft damned Caska, like a Curie, behinde
 Strooke Caesar on the necke. O you Flatterers,
Cass. Flatterers? Now Brutus thanke your selfe,
 This tongue had not offended so to day,
 If Cassius might haue rul'd.

Octa. Come, come, the cause, if arguing make vs swet,
 The prooue of it will turne to redder drops:
 Looke, I draw a Sword against Conspirators,
 When thinke you that the Sword goes vp againe?
 Neuer till Caesar three and thirtie wounds
 Be well aueng'd; or till another Caesar
 Haue added slaughter to the Sword of Traitors.
Brut. Caesar, thou canst not dye by Traitors hands,
 Vlesse thou bring'st them with thee.

Octa. So I hope:
 I was not borne to dye on Brutus Sword.

Brut. O if thou wert the Noblest of thy Straine,
 Yong-man, thou could'st not dye more honourable.
Cass. A peeuisch School-boy, worthles of such Honor
 Ioynd with a Masker, and a Reueller.

Ant. Old Cassius still.
Octa. Come Antony: away:
 Desfiance Traitors, hurle we in your teeth.
 If you dare fight to day, come to the Field;
 If not, when you haue stomackes.

Exit Octavius, Antony, and Army

Cass. Why now blow winde, swell Billow,
 And swimme Barke:
 The Storme is vp, and all is on the hazard.

Brut. Ho Lucilius, hearke, a word with you.
Lucilius and Messala stand forth.

Luc. My Lord.
Cass. Messala.
Mess. What sayes my Generall?
Cass. Messala, this is my Birth-day: as this very day
 Was Cassius borne. Giue me thy hand Messala:
 Be thou my witnesse, that against my will
 (As Pompey was) am I compell'd to set
 Vpon one Battell all our Liberties.
 You know, that I held Epicurus strong,
 And his Opinion: Now I change my minde,
 And partly credit things that do prelage.
 Comming from Sardis, on our former Ensigne
 Two mighty Eagles fell, and there they perch'd, Gorging and feeding from our Soldiers hands,

Who

Who to Philippi heere comforted vs:
This Morning are they fled away, and gone,
And in their fteeds, do Ravens, Crowes, and Kites
Fly ore our heads, and downward looke on vs
As we were sickely prey; their shadowes seeme
A Canopy most fatall, vnder which
Our Army lies, ready to giue vp the Ghost.

Messa. Beleeue not so.

Cassi. I but beleue it partly,
For I am fresh of spirit, and resolu'd
To meete all perils, very constantly.

Brut. Euen so Lucilius.

Cassi. Now most Noble Brutus,
The Gods to day stand friendly, that we may
Louers in peace, leade on our dayes to age.
But since the affayres of men rests still incertaine,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.
If we do lole this Battaille, then is this
The very last time we shall speake together:
What are you then determined to do?

Brut. Euen by the rule of that Philosophy,
By which I did blame Cato, for the death
Which he did giue himselfe, I know not how:
But I do finde it Cowardly, and vile,
For feare of what might fall, so to preuent
The time of life, arming my selfe with patience,
To stay the prouidence of some high Powers,
That gouerne vs below.

Cassi. Then, if we loose this Battaille,
You are contented to be led in Triumph
Therow the streets of Rome.

Brut. No Cassius, no:
Thinke not thou Noble Roman,
That euer Brutus will go bound to Rome,
He beares too great a minde. But this same day
Must end that worke, the Ides of March begun.
And whether we shall meete againe, I know not:
Therefore our euermlasting farewell take:
For euer, and for euer, farewell Cassius!

If we do meete againe, why we shall smile;
If not, why then this parting was well made.

Cassi. For euer, and for euer, farewell Brutus!
If we do meete againe, we'll smile indeede;
If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.

Brut. Why then leade on. O that a man might know
The end of this dayes businesse, ere it come:
But it sufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is knowne. Come ho, away. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Brutus and Messala.

Brut. Ride, ride Messala, ride and giue these Billes
Vnto the Legions, on the other side.

Loud Alarum.

Let them set on at once: for I perceiue
But cold demeanor in Octavius' wing:
And sodaine push giues them the overthrow:
Ride, ride Messala, let them all come downe. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Cassius and Titinius.

Cassi. O looke Titinius, looke, the Villaines flye:
My selfe haue to mine owne turn'd Enemy:
This Ensigne heere of mine was turning backe,
I slew the Coward, and did take it from him.

Titin. O Cassius, Brutus gaue the word too early,

Who hauing some aduantage on Octavius,
Tooke it too eagerly: his Soldiers fell to spoyle,
Whil'st we by Antony are all inclos'd.

Enter Pindarus.

Pind. Fly further off my Lord: flye further off,
Mark Antony is in your Tents my Lord:

Flye therefore Noble Cassius, flye farre off.

Cassi. This Hill is farre enough. Looke, looke Titinius!
Are those my Tents where I perceiue the fire?

Tit. They are, my Lord.

Cassi. Titinius, if thou louest me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he haue brought thee vp to yonder Troopes
And heere againe, that I may rest assur'd
Whether yond Troopes, are Friend or Enemy.

Tit. I will be heere againe, euen with a thought. Exit.

Cassi. Go Pindarus, get higher on that hill,
My fight was euer thicke: regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the Field.
This day I breathed first, Time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end,
My life is run his compasse. Sitte, what newes?

Pind. About. O my Lord.

Cassi. What newes?

Pind. Titinius is enclosed round about
With Horsemen, that make to him on the Spurre,
Yet he spurres on. Now they are almost on him:
Now Titinius. Now some light: O he lights too.
Hee's tane. Showt.

And hearke, they shout for ioy.

Cassi. Come downe, behold no more:
O Coward that I am, to liue so long,
To see my best Friend tane before my face.

Enter Pindarus.

Come hither sirrah: In Parthia did I take thee Prisoner,
And then I swore thee, sauing of thy life,
That whatsoeuer I did bid thee do,
Thou should'st attempt it. Come now, keepe thine oath,
Now be a Free-man, and with this good Sword
That ran through Casars bowels, seatch this bosome,
Stand not to answer: Heere, take thou the Hilt,
And when my face is couer'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the Sword — Casars, thou art reueng'd,
Euen with the Sword that kill'd thee.

Pind. So, I am free,
Yet would not so haue beene
Durst I haue done my will. O Cassius,
Farre from this Country Pindarus shall run,
Where neuer Roman shall take note of him.

Enter Titinius and Messala.

Messa. It is but change, Titinius: for Octavius
Is overthrowne by Noble Brutus power,
As Cassius Legions are by Antony.

Titin. These rydings will well comfort Cassius.

Messa. Where did you leaue him.

Titin. All disconsolate,
With Pindarus his Bondman, on this Hill.

Messa. Is not that he that lyes vpon the ground?

Titin. He lies not like the Liuing. O my heart!

Messa. Is not that hee?

Titin. No, this was he Messala.

But Cassius is no more. O setting Sunne:
As in thy red Rayes thou dost sinke to night;

So

So in his red blood Cassius day is set.
The Sunne of Rome is set. Our day is gone,
Clouds, Dewes, and Dangers come; our deeds are done:
Mistrust of my successe hath done this deed.

Messa. Mistrust of good successe hath done this deed.
O hatefull Error, Melancholies Childe:

Why do'st thou shew to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O Error soone concey'd,
Thou neuer com'st vnto a happy byrth,
But kil'st the Mother that engendred thee.

Tit. What Pindarus? Where art thou Pindarus?

Messa. Seeke him Titinius, whilst I go to meet

The Noble Brutus, thrusting this report

Into his eares; I may say thrusting it:

For piercing Steele, and Darts inuened,

Shall be as welcome to the eares of Brutus,

As tydings of this fight.

Tit. Hye you Messala,

And I will seeke for Pindarus the while:

Why did'st thou send me forth braue Cassius?

Did I not meet thy Friends, and did not they Put on my Browes this wreath of Victorie,

And bid me giue it thee? Did'st thou not heare their

Alas, thou hast misconstrued euery thing. (showts)

But hold thee, take this Garland on thy Brow,

Thy Brutus bid me giue it thee, and I

Will do his bidding. Brutus, come apace,

And see how I regarded Caius Cassius:

By your leaue Gods: This is a Romans part,

Come Cassius Sword, and finde Titinius hart. Dies

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Messala, yong Cato,
Strato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.

Brut. Where, where Messala, doth his body lye?

Messa. Loe yonder, and Titinius mourning it.

Brut. Titinius face is vpward.

Cato. He is slaine.

Brut. O Iulius Caesar, thou art mighty yet,

Thy Spirit walkes abroad, and turnes our Swords

In our owne proper Entrails. Loud Alarums.

Cato. Braue Titinius,

Looke where he haue not crown'd dead Cassius.

Brut. Are yet two Romans liuing such as these?

The last of all the Romans, far thee well:

It is impossible, that euer Rome

Should breed thy fellow. Friends I owe no teares

To this dead man, then you shall see me pay.

I shall finde time, Cassius: I shall finde time.

Come therefore, and to Thursus send his body,

His Funerals shall not be in our Campe,

Least it discomfort vs. Lucillius come,

And come yong Cato, let vs to the Field,

Labio and Flanio set our Battailes on:

'Tis three a clocke, and Romans yet ere night,

We shall try Fortune in a second fight. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Messala, Cato, Lucillius, and Flaninus.

Brut. Yet Country-men: O yet, hold vp your heads.

Cato. What Bastard doth not? Who will go with me?

I will proclaime my name about the Field.

I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe.

A Foe to Tyrants, and my Countries Friend.

I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe.

Enter Souldiers, and fight.

And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I,

Brutus my Countries Friend: Know me for Brutus.

Luc. O yong and Noble Cato, art thou downe?

Why now thou dyest, as brauely as Titinius,

And may'st be honour'd, being Cato's Sonne.

Sold. Yeeld, or thou dyest.

Luc. Onely I yeeld to dye:

There is so much, that thou wilt kill me straight:

Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

Sold. We must not: a Noble Prisoner.

Enter Antony.

2. Sold. Roome hoe: tell Antony, Brutus is tane.

1. Sold. He tell thee newes. Heere comes the Generall,

Brutus is tane, Brutus is tane my Lord.

Ant. Where is hee?

Luc. Safe Antony, Brutus is safe enough:

I dare assure thee, that no Enemy

Shall euer take aliue the Noble Brutus:

The Gods defend him from so great a shame,

When yon do finde him, or aliue, or dead,

He will be found like Brutus, like himselfe.

Ant. This is not Brutus friend, but I assure you,

A prize no lesse in worth; keepe this man safe,

Giue him all kindeesse. I had rather haue

Such men my Friends, then Enemies. Go on,

And see where Brutus be aliue or dead,

And bring vs word, vnto Octavius Tent:

How euery thing is chaic'd. Exeunt.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.

Brut. Come poore remaines of friends, rest on this Rocke.

Clit. Statilius shew'd the Torch-light, but my Lord

He came not backe: he is or tane, or slaine.

Brut. Sit thee downe, Clitus: slaying is the word,

It is a deed in fashion. Hearke thee, Clitus.

Clit. What I, my Lord? No, not for all the World.

Brut. Peace then, no words.

Clit. He rather kill my selfe.

Brut. Hearke thee, Dardanius.

Dard. Shall I doe such a deed?

Clit. O Dardanius.

Dard. O Clitus.

Clit. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Dard. To kill him, Clitus: looke he meditates.

Clit. Now is that Noble Vessell full of griefe,

That it runnes ouer euen at his eyes.

Brut. Come hither, good Volumnius, list a word.

Volum. What sayes my Lord?

Brut. Why this, Volumnius:

The Ghost of Casars hath appear'd to me

Two seuerall times by Night: at Sardis, once;

And this last Night, here in Philippi fields:

I know my houre is come.

Volum. Not so, my Lord.

Brut. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou seest the World, Volumnius, how it goes,

Our Enemies haue beat vs to the Pir: Loud Alarums.

It is more worthy, to leape in our selues,

Then tarry till they push vs. Good Volumnius,

Thou know'st, that we two went to Schoole together:

Euen for that our loue of old, I prethee

Hold thou my Sword Hilt, whilst I runne on it.

Volum. That's not an Office for a friend, my Lord,

Alarum Still.

Clit. Fly,

Cly. Fly, flye my Lord, there is no tarrying heere.
Brut. Farewell to you, and you, and you Polarianus.
Strato, thou hast bin all this while asleepe:
 Farewell to thee, to Strato, Countrymen:
 My heart doth ioy, that yet in all my life,
 I found no man, but he was true to me.
 I shall haue glory by this loosing day
 More then Othanius, and Marke Antony,
 By this vile Conquest shall attaine vnto.
 So fare you well at once, for Brutus tongue
 Hath almost ended his liues History:
 Night hangs vpon mine eyes, my Bones would rest,
 That haue but labour'd, to attaine this houre.

Alarum. Cry within, Flye, flye, flye.

Cly. Fly my Lord, flye.

Brut. Hence: I will follow:

I prythee Strato, stay thou by thy Lord,
 Thou art a Fellow of a good respect:
 Thy life hath had some smatch of Honor in it,
 Hold then my Sword, and turne away thy face,
 While I do run vpon it. Wilt thou Strato?

Strat. Giue me your hand first, Fare you wel my Lord.

Brut. Farewell good Strato. — Cesar, now be still,
 I kill'd not thee with halfe so good a will. Dyes.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Antony, Othanius, Messala,
Lucillius, and the Army.

Oth. What man is that?

Messal. My Masters man. Strato, where is thy Master?
Strat. Free from the Bondage you are in Messala,
 The Conquerors can but make a fire of him:
 For Brutus onely ouercame himselfe,
 And no man else hath Honor by his death.

Lucil. So Brutus should be found. I thank thee Brutus,
 That thou hast prou'd Lucillius saying true.

Oth. All that seru'd Brutus, I will entertaine them,
 Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Strat. I, if Messala will preferre me to you.

Oth. Do so, good Messala.

Messal. How dyed my Master Strato?

Strat. I held the Sword, and he did run on it.

Messal. Othanius, then take him to follow thee,
 That did the latest seruice to my Master.

Ant. This was the Noblest Roman of them all:

All the Conspirators saue onely hee,
 Did that they did, in enuy of great Cesar:

He, onely in a generall honest thought,
 And common good to all, made one of them.

His life was gentle, and the Elements

So mixt in him, that Nature might stand vp,

And say to all the world, This was a man.

Oth. According to his Vertue, let vs vse him

Withall Respect, and Rites of Buriall.

Within my Tent his bones to night shall ly,

Most like a Souldier ordered Honourably:

So call the Field to rest, and let's away,

To part the glories of this happy day. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF MACBETH.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter three Witches.

1. When shall we three meet again?
 In Thunder, Lightning, or in Raine?
 2. When the Hurley-burley's done,
 When the Battaille's lost, and wonne.
 3. That will be ere the set of Sunne.
 1. Where the place?
 2. Vpon the Heath.
 3. There to meet with Macbeth.
 1. I come, Gray-Malkin.
Al. Padock calls anon: faire is foule, and foule is faire, Houer through the fogge and filthie ayre. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Alarum within. Enter King Malcome, Donalbaine, Lenox, with attendants, meeting a bleeding Captaine.

King. What bloody men is that? he can report,
 As seemeth by his plight, of the Revolt
 The newest state.

Mal. This is the Sericant,
 Who like a good and hardie Souldier fought
 'Gainst my Captiuitie: Haile braue friend;
 Say to the King, the knowledge of the Broyle,
 As thou didst leaue it.

Cap. Doubtfull it stood,
 As two spent Swimmers, that doe cling together,
 And choake their Art: The mercilesse Macdonwald (Worthie to be a Rebelle, for to that
 The multiplying Villanies of Nature
 Doe warme vpon him) from the Westerne Isles
 Of Kernes and Gallowgroses is supply'd,
 And Fortune on his damned Quarry smiling,
 Shew'd like a Rebells Whore: but all's too weake:
 For braue Macbeth (well hee deserues that Name)
 Disdayning Fortune, with his brandisht Steele,
 Which smok'd with bloody execution
 (Like Valours Minion) car'd out his passage,
 Till hee fac'd the Slaue:
 Which neuer shooke hands, nor bad farwell to him,
 Till he vnseam'd him from the Naue toth' Chops,
 And fix'd his Head vpon our Battlements.

King. O valiant Cousin, worthy Gentleman.

Cap. As whence the Sunne 'gins his reflection,
 Shipwracking Stormes, and direfull Thunders:
 So from that Spring, whence comfort seem'd to come,
 Discomfort swells: Marke King of Scotland, marke,
 No sooner Iustice had, with Valour arm'd,
 Compell'd these skipping Kernes to trust their heeles,
 But the Norweyan Lord, surueying vantage,
 With furboist Armes, and new supplies of men,
 Began a fresh assault.

King. Dismay'd not this our Captaines, Macbeth and Bangor?

Cap. Yes, as Sparrowes, Eagles;

Or the Hare, the Lyon:

If I say sooth, I must report they were
 As Cannons ouer-charg'd with double Cracks,
 So they doubly redoubled stroakes vpon the Foe:
 Except they meant to bathe in reeking Wounds,
 Or memorize another Golgotha,
 I cannot tell: but I am faint,
 My Gallies cry for helpe.

King. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds,
 They smack of Honor both: Goe get him Surgeons.

Enter Rosse and Angus.

Who comes here?

Mal. The worthy Thane of Rosse.

Lenox. What a haste lookes through his eyes?
 So should he looke, that seemes to speake things strange.

Rosse. God saue the King.

King. Whence cam'st thou, worthy Thane?

Rosse. From Fife, great King.

Where the Norweyan Banners flow'd the Skie,
 And fann'd our people cold.

Norway himselfe, with terrible numbers,
 Assisted by that most disloyall Traytor,
 The Thane of Cawdor, began a dismall Conflict;
 Till that Bellona's Bridegroome, lapt in prooffe,
 Confronted him with selfe-comparisons,
 Point against Point, rebellious Arme 'gainst Arme,
 Curbing his laviish spirit: and to conclude,
 The Victorie fell on vs.

King. Great happinesse.

Rosse. That now, Sweno, the Norweyes King,
 Craues composition:
 Nor would we deigne him buriall of his men,
 Till he disburfed, at Saint Colmes ynch,
 Ten thousand Dollars, to our generall vse.

King. No

King. No more that Thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our Bolome interest: Goe pronounce his present death,
And with his former Title greet Macbeth.

Rosse. He see it done.

King. What he hath lost, Noble Macbeth hath wonne.
Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1. Where hast thou beene, Sister?
2. Killing Swiue.
3. Sister, where thou?
1. A Saylor's Wife had Chestnuts in her Lappe,
And mouncht, & mouncht, and mouncht:
Giue me, quoth I.

Aroynt thee, Witch, the rumpe-fed Ronyon cries.
Her Husband's to Aleppo gone, Master o'th' Tiger:
But in a Syue Ile thither sayle,
And like a Rat without a tayle,
Ile doe, Ile doe, and Ile doe.

2. Ile giue thee a Winde.
1. Th'art kinde.
3. And I another.

1. I my selfe haue all the other,
And the very Ports they blow,
All the Quarters that they know,
I'th' Ship-mans Card.

Ile dreyne him drie as Hay:
Sleepe shall neyther Night nor Day
Hang vpon his Pent-house Lid:
He shall liue a man forbid:
Wearie Seu'nights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peake, and pine:
Though his Barke cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be Tempest-tost.

Looke what I haue.

2. Shew me, shew me.
1. Here I haue a Pilots Thumbe,
Wrackt, as homeward he did come.

3. A Drumme, a Drumme:
Macbeth doth come.

All. The weyward Sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the Sea and Land,
Thus doe goe, about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice againe, to make vp nine,
Peace, the Charme's wound vp.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foule and faire a day I haue not seene.

Banquo. How farre is't call'd to Soris? What are these,
So wither'd, and so wilde in their attyre,
That looke not like th'Inhabitants o'th' Earth,
And yet are on't? Liue you, or are you aught
That man may question? you seeme to vnderstand me,
By each at once her choppie finger laying
Vpon her skinnie Lips: you should be Women,
And yet your Beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

Mac. Speake if you can: what are you?

1. All haile Macbeth, haile to thee Thane of Glamis.
2. All haile Macbeth, haile to thee Thane of Cawdor.
3. All haile Macbeth, that shalt be King hereafter.

Banq. Good Sir, why doe you start, and seeme to feare
Things that doe sound so faire? i'th' name of truth
Are ye fantasticall, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew? My Noble Partner
You greet with present Grace, and great prediction
Of Noble hauing, and of Royall hope,
That he seemes wrapt withall: to me you speake not,
If you can looke into the Seedes of Time,
And say, which Graine will grow, and which will not,
Speake then to me, who neyther begge, nor feare
Your fauors, nor your hate.

1. Hayle.

2. Hayle.

3. Hayle.

1. Lesser then Macbeth, and greater.

2. Not so happy, yet much happier.

3. Thou shalt get Kings, though thou be none:
So all haile Macbeth, and Banquo.

1. Banquo, and Macbeth, all haile.

Macb. Stay you imperfect Speakers, tell me more:
By Sinells death, I know I am Thane of Glamis,
But how, of Cawdor? the Thane of Cawdor liues:
A prosperous Gentleman: And to be King,
Stands not within the prospect of beleefe,
No more then to be Cawdor. Say from whence
You owe this strange Intelligence, or why
Vpon this blasted Heath you stop our way
With such Prophetique greeting?

Speake, I charge you.

Witches vanish.

Banq. The Earth hath bubbles, as the Water ha's,
And these are of them: whither are they vanish?

Macb. Into the Ayre: and what seem'd corporall,
Melted, as breath into the Winde.
Would they had stay'd.

Banq. Were such things here, as we doe speake about?
Or haue we eaten on the insane Roor,
That takes the Reason Prisoner?

Macb. Your Children shall be Kings.

Banq. You shall be King.

Macb. And Thane of Cawdor too: went it not so?

Banq. Toth' selfe-same tune, and words: who's here?

Enter Rosse and Angus.

Rosse. The King hath happily receiu'd, Macbeth,
The newes of thy successe: and when he reads
Thy personall Venture in the Rebels fight,
His Wonders and his Prayfes doe contend,
Which should be thine, or his: silenc'd with that,
In viewing o're the rest o'th' selfe-same day,
He findes thee in the stout Norweyan Rankes,
Nothing afeard of what thy selfe didst make
Strange Images of death, as thick as Tale
Can post with post, and euery one did beare
Thy prayfes in his Kingdomes great defence,
And powr'd them downe before him.

Ang. Wee are sent,

To giue thee from our Royall Master thanks,
Onely to harrold thee into his fight,
Not pay thee.

Rosse. And for an earnest of a greater Honor,
He bad me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawdor:

Scena Quarta.

Flourish. Enter King, Lenox, Malcolme,
Donalbaine, and Attendants.

King. Is execution done on Cawdor?
Or not those in Commission yet return'd?

Mal. My Liege, they are not yet come back,
But I haue spoke with one that saw him die:
Who did report, that very frankly hee
Confess'd his Treasons, implor'd your Highnesse Pardon,
And set forth a deepe Repentance:
Nothing in his Life became him,
Like the leauing in. Hee dy'de,
As one that had bene studied in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd,
As 'twere a carelesse Trifle.

King. There's no Art,
To finde the Mindes construction in the Face:
He was a Gentleman, on whom I built
An absolute Trust.

Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Rosse, and Angus.

O worthyest Cousin,
The finne of my Ingratitude euen now
Was heauie on me. Thou art so farre before,
That swiftest Wing of Recompence is slow,
To ouertake thee. Would thou hadst lesse deseru'd,
That the proportion both of thanks, and payment,
Might haue beene mine: onely I haue left to say,
More is thy due, then more then all can pay.

Macb. The seruice, and the loyaltie I owe,
In doing it, payes it selfe.
Your Highnesse part, is to receiue our Duties:
And our Duties are to your Throne, and State,
Children, and Seruants; which doe but what they should,
By doing euery thing safe toward your Loue
And Honor.

King. Welcome hither:
I haue begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing. Noble Banquo,
That hast no lesse deseru'd, nor must be knowne
No lesse to haue done so: Let me enfold thee,
And hold thee to my Heart.

Banq. There if I grow,
The Haruest is your owne.

King. My plenteous Ioyes,
Wanton in fulnesse, seeke to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow. Sonnes, Kinsmen, Thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our Estate vpon
Our eldest, Malcolme, whom we name hereafter,
The Prince of Cumberland: which Honor must
Not vnaccompanied, inuest him onely,
But signes of Noblenesse, like Starres, shall shine
On all deseruers. From hence to Envernes,
And binde vs further to you.

Macb. The Rest is Labor, which is not vs'd for you:
Ile be my selfe the Herbeneger, and make ioyfull
The hearing of my Wife, with your approach:
So humbly take my leaue.

King. My worthy Cawdor.

Macb. The Prince of Cumberland: that is a step,
On which I must fall downe, or else o're-leape,

m m

For

For in my way it lyes. Starres hide your fires,
Let not Light see my black and deepe desires:
The Eye winke at the Hand; yet let that bee,
Which the Eye feares, when it is done to see.

King. True, worthy Banquo: he is full so valiant,
And in his commendations, I am fed:
It is a Banquet to me. Let's after him,
Whose care is gone before, to bid vs welcome:
It is a peerelesse Kinsman. Flourish. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Macbeths Wife alone with a Letter.

Lady. They met me in the day of successe: and I have learn'd by the perfect'st report, they haue more in them, then mortall knowledge. When I burnt in desire to question them further, they made themselves Ayre, into which they vanisht.
Whiles I stood vapt in the wonder of it, came Missiues from the King, who all hail'd me Thane of Cawdor, by which Title before, these wayward Sisters saluted me, and referr'd me to the coming on of time, with haile King that shall be. This haue I thought good to deliuer thee (my dearest Partner of Greatnesse) that thou might'st not loose the dues of reioycing by being ignorant of what Greatnesse is promis'd thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamys thou art, and Cawdor, and shalt be
What thou art promis'd: yet doe I feare thy Nature,
It is too full o' th' Milke of humane kindnesse,
To catch the neere way. Thou would'st be great,
Art not without Ambition, but without
The illnesse should attend it. What thou would'st highly,
That would'st thou holily: would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly winne.
Thou'd'st haue, great Glamys, that which cries,
Thus thou must doe, if thou haue it;
And that which rather thou do'st feare to doe,
Then wishest should be vndone. High thee hither,
That I may powre my Spirits in thine Eare,
And chastise with the valour of my Tongue
All that impedes thee from the Golden Round,
Which Fate and Metaphysicall ayde doth seeme
To haue thee crown'd withall. Enter Messenger.

What is your tidings?
Mess. The King comes here to Night.

Lady. Thou'rt mad to say it.
Is not thy Master with him? who, we're so,
Would haue inform'd for preparation.

Mess. So please you, it is true: our Thane is coming:
One of my fellowes had the speed of him;
Who almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Then would make vp his Message.

Lady. Giue him tending,
He brings great newes. Exit Messenger.
The Raven himselfe is hoarse,
That croakes the fatal entrance of Duncan
Vnder my Battlements. Come you Spirits,
That tend on mortall thoughts, vnsex me here,
And fill me from the Crowne to the Toe, top-full
Of direst Crueltie: make thick my blood,
Stop vp th' access, and passage to Remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of Nature

Shake my fell purpose, nor keepe peace betweene
Th' effect, and hit. Come to my Womans Breasts,
And take my Milke for Gall, you murthering Ministers,
Where-euer, in your sightlesse substances,
You wait on Natures Mischiefe. Come thick Night,
And pall thee in the dunneft smoake of Hell,
That my keene Knife see not the Wound it makes,
Nor Heauen peepe through the Blanket of the darke,
To cry, hold, hold. Enter Macbeth.

Great Glamys, worthy Cawdor,
Greater then both, by the all-haile hereafter,
Thy Letters haue transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feele now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest Loue,
Duncan comes here to Night.

Lady. And when goes hence?

Macb. To morrow, as he purposes.

Lady. O neuer,

Shall Sunne that Morrow see.

Your Face, my Thane, is as a Booke, where men
May reade strange matters, to beguile the time.
Looke like the time, beare welcome in your Eye,
Your Hand, your Tongue: looke like th' innocent flower,
But be the Serpent vnder't. He that's comming,
Must be provided for: and you shall put
This Nights great Businesse into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our Nights, and Dayes to come,
Giue solely foueraigne sway, and Masterdome.

Macb. We will speake further.

Lady. Onely looke vp cleare:

To alter fauor, euer is to feare:

Leaue all the rest to me. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Hoboyes, and Torches. Enter King, Malcolm, Donalbaine, Banquo, Lenox, Macduff, Rosse, Angus, and Attendants.

King. This Castle hath a pleasant seat,
The ayre nimble and sweetly recommends it selfe
Vnto our gentle senses.

Banq. This Guest of Summer,
The Temple-haunting Barlet does approue,
By his loued Mansoury, that the Heauens breath
Smells wooingly here: no luty frieze,
Buttrice, nor Coigne of Vantage, but this Bird
Hath made his pendant Bed, and procreant Cradle,
Where they must breed, and haunt: I haue obseru'd
The ayre is delicate. Enter Lady.

King. See, see, our honor'd Hostesse:
The Loue that followes vs, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thanke as Loue. Herein I teach you,
How you shall bid God-eyld vs for your paines,
And thanke vs for your trouble.

Lady. All our seruice,
In euery point twice done, and then done double,
Were poore, and single Businesse, to contend
Against those Honors deepe, and broad,
Wherewith your Maiestie loades our House:
For those of old, and the late Dignities,
Heap'd vp to them, we rest your Ermites.

King. Where's

King. Where's the Thane of Cawdor?
We court him at the heeles, and had a purpose
To bestow Purbeck on him: But he rides well,
And his great Loue (sharpe as his Spurre) hath holp him
To his home before vs: Faire and Noble Hostesse
We are your guest to night.

La. Your Seruants euer,
Haue theirs, themselves, and what is theirs in compt,
To make their Audit at your Highnesse pleasure,
Still to returne your owne.

King. Giue me your hand: I haue receiued Conduct to mine Host: we loue him highly,
And shall continue, our Graces towards him.
By your leave, Hostesse. Exeunt.

Scena Septima.

Hoboyes. Torches.

Enter a Sewer, and diners Seruants with Dishes and Service Enter the Stage. Then enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well,
It were done quickly: If th' Assassination
Could tranimell vp the Consequence, and catch
With his surcease, Successer: that but this blow
Might be the be all, and the end all. Heere,
But heere, vpon this Banke and Schoole of time,
Wee'd iunpe the life to come. But in these Cafes,
We still haue iudgement heere, that we but reach
Bloody Instructions, which being taught, returne
To plague th' Inuenter. This euen-handed Iustice
Commends th' Ingredience of our poyson'd Chalice
To our owne lips. Hee's heere in double trust;
First, as I am his Kinsman, and his Subiect,
Strong both against the Deed: Then, as his Host,
Who should against his Murtherer shut the doore,
Not beare the knife my selfe. Besides, this Duncan
Hath borne his Faculties so mecke; hath bin
So cleere in his great Office, that his Vertues
Will pleade like Angels, Trumphet-tongu'd against
The deepe damnation of his taking off:
And Pitty, like a naked New-borne Babe,
Striding the blast, or Heauens Cherubin, hors'd
Vpon the sightlesse Curriers of the Ayre,
Shall blow the horrid deed in euery eye,
That teares shall drowne the winde. I haue no Spurre
To prick the sides of my intent, but onely
Vaulting Ambition, which ore-leapes it selfe,
And falls on th' other. Enter Lady.

How now? What Newes?

La. He has almost sup: why haue you left the chamber?

Mac. Hath he ask'd for me?

La. Know you not, he has?

Mac. We will proceed no further in this Businesse:
He hath Honour'd me of late, and I haue bought
Golden Opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worne now in their newest glosse,
Not cast aside so soone.

La. Was the hope drunke, Wherin you dress'd your selfe? Hath it slept since?
And wakes it now to looke so greene, and pale,
At what it did so freely? From this time
Such I account thy loue. Art thou affect'd
To the same in thine owne Act, and Valour,
As thou art in desire? Would'st thou haue that

Which thou esteem'st the Ornament of Life,
And liue a Coward in thine owne Esteeme?
Letting I dare not, wait vpon I would,
Like the poore Cat fish Adage.

Macb. Prythee peace:

I dare do all that may become a man,
Who dares no more, is none.

La. What Beast was't then

That made you breake this enterprize to me?

When you durst do it, then you were a man:

And to be more then what you were, you would

Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place

Did then adhere, and yet you would make both:

They haue made themselves; and that their finest now

Do's vnmake you. I haue giuen Sucke, and know

How tender 'tis to loue the Babe that milkes me,

I would, while it was smyling in my Face,

Haue pluckt my Nipple from his Bonelesse Gummies,

And dash't the Braines out, had I so sworne

As you haue done to this.

Macb. If we should faile?

Lady. We faile?

But screw your courage to the sticking place,

And wee'll not fayle: when Duncan is asleepe,

(Whereto the rather shall his dayes hard Iourney Soundly inuite him) his two Chamberlaines

Will I with Wine, and Waffell, so conuince,

That Memorie, the Warder of the Braine,

Shall be a Fume, and the Receipt of Reason

A Lymbeck onely: when in Swinish sleepe,

Their drenched Natures lyes as in a Death,

What cannot you and I performe vpon

Th' vnguarded Duncan? What not put vpon

His spungie Officers? who shall beare the guilt

Of our great quell.

Macb. Bring forth Men-Children onely:

For thy vndaunted Mettle should compose

Nothing but Males. Will it not be receiu'd,

When we haue mark'd with blood those sleepe two

Of his owne Chamber, and vs'd their very Daggers,

That they haue don't?

Lady. Who dares receiue it other,

As we shall make our Griefes and Clamor rore,

Vpon his Death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend vp

Each corporall Agent to this terrible Feat:

Away, and mock the time with fairest show,

False Face must hide what the false Heart doth know. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance, with a Torch before him.

Banq. How goes the Night, Boy?

Fleance. The Moone is downe: I haue not heard the Clock.

Banq. And she goes downe at Twelue.

Fleance. I take't, 'tis later, Sir.

Banq. Hold, take my Sword:

There's Husbandry in Heauen,

Their Candles are all out: take thee that too.

mac

A

A heauie Summons lyes like Lead vpon me,
And yet I would not sleepe:
Mercifull Powers, reſtraine in me the curſed thoughts
That Nature giues way to in repoſe.

Enter Macbeth, and a Seruant with a Torch.

Giue me my Sword: who's there?

Macb. A Friend.

Banq. What Sir, not yet at reſt? the King's a bed.
He hath bene in vnusuall Pleaſure,
And ſent forth great Largeſſe to your Offices.
This Diamond he greetes your Wife withall,
By the name of moſt kind Hoſteſſe,
And ſhut vp in meaſureleſſe content.

Mac. Being vnprepar'd,
Our will became the ſeruant to defect,
Which elſe ſhould free haue wrought.

Banq. All's well.

I dreamt laſt Night of the three veyward Siſters:
To you they haue ſhew'd ſome truth.

Macb. I thinke not of them:

Yet when we can entreat an houre to ſerue,
We would ſpend it in ſome words vpon that Buſineſſe,
If you would graunt the time.

Banq. At your kind'ſt leysure.

Macb. If you ſhall cleaue to my conſent,
When 'tis, it ſhall make Honor for you.

Banq. So I loſe none,

In ſeeking to augment it, but ſtill keepe
My Boſome franchis'd, and Allegiance cleare,
I ſhall be counſail'd.

Macb. Good repoſe the while.

Banq. Thanks Sir: the like to you. Exit Banquo.

Macb. Goe bid thy Miſtreſſe, when my drinke is ready,
She ſtrike vpon the Bell. Get thee to bed. Exit.

Is this a Dagger, which I ſee before me,
The Handle toward my Hand? Come, let me clutch thee:
I haue thee not, and yet I ſee thee ſtill.

Art thou not fatall Viſion, ſenſible

To feeling, as to ſight? or art thou but

A Dagger of the Minde, a falſe Creation,

Proceeding from the heat-oppreſſed Braine?

I ſee thee yet, in forme as palpable,

As this which now I draw.

Thou maſt haſt'nt me the way that I was going,

And ſuch an Inſtrument I was to vſe.

Mine Eyes are made the fool's o'th' other Senſes,

Or elſe worth all the reſt: I ſee thee ſtill;

And on thy Blade, and Dudgeon, Gouts of Blood,

Which was not ſo before. There's no ſuch thing:

It is the bloody Buſineſſe, which informes

Thus to mine Eyes. Now o're the one halfe World

Nature ſeemes dead, and wicked Dreames abuſe

The Curtain'd ſleepe: Witchcraft celebrates

Pale Heccats Offrings: and wither'd Murther,

Alarum'd by his Centinell, the Wolfe,

Whoſe howle's his Watch, thus with his ſtealthy pace,

With Tarquins rauifhing fides, towards his deſigne

Moues like a Ghoſt. Thou ſowre and firme-ſet Earth

Heare not my ſteps, which they may walke, for feare

Thy very ſtones prate of my where-about,

And take the preſent horror from the time,

Which now lutes with it. Whiles I threat, he liues:

Words to the heart of deedes too cold breath giues.

A Bell rings.

I goe, and it is done: the Bell inuites me.
Heare it not, Duncan, for it is a Knell,
That ſummons thee to Heauen, or to Hell. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lady.

La. That which hath made the drunk, hath made me bold:
What hath quench'd them, hath giuen me fire.
Heare, peace: it was the Owle that ſhriek'd,
The fatall Bell-man, which giues the ſtern'ſt good-night,
He is about it, the Doores are open:
And the ſurfet'd Groomes doe mock their charge
With Snores. I haue drugg'd their Poſſets,
That Death and Nature doe contend about them,
Whether they liue, or dye.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. Who's there? what hoa?

Lady. Alack, I am afraid they haue awak'd,
And 'tis not done: th' attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds vs: hearken: I lay'd their Daggers ready,
He could not miſſe 'em. Had he not reſembled
My Father as he ſlept, I had don't.

Macb. I haue done the deed:

Didſt thou not heare a noiſe?

Lady. I heard the Owle ſchreame, and the Crickets cry.

Did not you ſpeake?

Macb. When?

Lady. Now.

Macb. As I deſcended?

Lady. I.

Macb. Hearke, who lyes i'th' ſecond Chamber?

Lady. Donalbaine.

Macb. This is a ſorry ſight.

Lady. A fooliſh thought, to ſay a ſorry ſight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in's ſleepe,

And one cry'd Murther, that they did wake each other:

I ſtood, and heard them: But they did ſay their Prayers,

And addreſſt them againe to ſleepe.

Lady. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cry'd God bleſſe vs, and Amen the other,

As they had ſcene me with theſe Hangmans hands:

Liſtning their feare, I could not ſay Amen,

When they did ſay God bleſſe vs.

Lady. Conſider it not ſo deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce Amen?

I had moſt need of Bleſſing, and Amen ſtuck in my throat.

Lady. Theſe deeds muſt not be thought

After theſe wayes: ſo, it will make vs mad.

Macb. Me thought I heard a voyce cry, Sleep no more:

Macbeth does murder Sleepe, the innocent Sleepe,

Sleepe that knits vp the rauel'd Sleeue of Care,

The death of each dayes Life, ſore Labors Bath,

Balme of hurt Mindeſ, great Nature's ſecond Courſe, Chiefe nourisher in Life's Feaſt.

Lady. What doe you meane?

Macb. Still i'th' cry'd, Sleepe no more to all the Houſe:

Glamis hath murder'd Sleepe, and therefore Cawder

Shall ſleepe no more: Macbeth ſhall ſleepe no more.

Lady. Who was it, that thus cry'd? why worſthy Thane,

You doe vnband your Noble ſtrength, to thinke

So braine-fickly of things: Goe get ſome Water, And Enter Macduff, and Lenox.

Macd. Was it ſo late, friend, ere you went to Bed,
That you doe lye ſo late?

Port. Faith Sir, we were carowing till the ſecond Cock:
And Drinke, Sir, is a great prouoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does Drinke eſpecially prouoke?

Port. Marry, Sir, Noſe-painting, Sleepe, and Vrine.
Lecherie, Sir, it prouokes, and vnprouokes: it prouokes the deſire, but it takes away the performance. Therefore much Drinke may be ſaid to be an Equiuocator with Lecherie: it makes him, and it marres him; it ſets him on,
and it takes him off; it perwades him, and diſ-heartens him; makes him ſtand too, and not ſtand too: in concluſion, equiuocates him in a ſleepe, and giuing him the Lye, leaves him.

Macd. I beleeue, Drinke gaue thee the Lye laſt Night.

Port. That it did, Sir, i'th' very Throat on me: but I requited him for his Lye, and (I thinke) being too ſtrong for him, though he tooke vp my Legges ſometime, yet I made a Shift to caſt him.

Enter Macbeth.

Macd. Is thy Maſter ſtiring?

Our knocking ha's awak'd him: here he comes.

Lenox. Good morrow, Noble Sir.

Macb. Good morrow both.

Macd. Is the King ſtiring, worthy Thane?

Macb. Not yet.

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him,

I haue almoſt ſlpt the houre.

Macb. Ile bring you to him.

Macd. I know this is a ioyfull trouble to you:

But yet 'tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in, Phyſicks paine:

This is the Doore.

Macd. Ile make ſo bold to call, for 'tis my limited ſeruiſe. Exit Macduff.

Lenox. Goes the King hence to day?

Macb. He does: he did appoint ſo.

Lenox. The Night ha's been vnruſy:

Where we lay, our Chimneys were blowne downe,

And (as they ſay) lamentings heard i'th' Ayre;

Strange ſchreemes of Death,

And Prophecyng, with Accents terrible,

Of dyre Combution, and confus'd Enemys,

New hatch'd toth' wofull time.

The obſcure Bird clamor'd the lue-long Night.

Some ſay, the Earth was ſeuerous,

And did ſhake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough Night.

Lenox. My young remembrance cannot paralell

A fellow to it.

Enter Macduff.

Macd. O horror, horror, horror,

Tongue nor Heart cannot conceiue, nor name thee.

Macb. and Lenox. What's the matter?

Macd. Confuſion now hath made his Maſter-peece:

Moſt ſacrilegious Murther hath broke ope

The Lords anoynted Temple, and ſole thence

The Life o'th' Building.

Macb. What iſt you ſay, the Life?

Lenox. Meane you his Maieſtie?

Macd. Approch the Chamber, and deſtroy your ſight

With a new Gorgon. Doe not bid me ſpeake:

mm 3

See,

See, and then speake your selues: awake, awake,

Exeunt Macbeth and Lenox.

Ring the Alarum Bell: Murther, and Treason,
Banquo and Donalbaine: Malcolme awake,
 Shake off this Downey sleepe, Deaths counterfeit,
 And looke on Death it selfe: vp, vp, and see
 The great Doomes Image; Malcolme, Banquo,
 As from your Graues rise vp, and walke like Sprights,
 To countenance this horror. Ring the Bell.

Bell rings. Enter Lady.

Lady. What's the Buſſneſſe?
 That ſuch a hideous Trumpet calls to parley
 The ſleepers of the Houſe? ſpeake, ſpeake.

Macd. O gentle Lady,
 'Tis not for you to heare what I can ſpeake:
 The repetition in a Womans eare,
 Would murther as it fell.

Enter Banquo.

O Banquo, Banquo, Our Royall Maſter's murther'd.

Lady. Woe, alas:
 What, in our Houſe?

Ban. Too cruell, any where.
 Deare Duff, I prythee contradict thy ſelfe,
 And ſay, it is not ſo.

Enter Macbeth, Lenox, and Roſſe.

Macb. Had I but dy'd an houre before this chance,
 I had liu'd a bleſſed time: for from this inſtant,
 There's nothing ſerious in Mortalitie:
 All is but Toyes: Renowne and Grace is dead,
 The Wine of Life is drawne, and the meere Lees
 Is left this Vault, to brag of.

Enter Malcolme and Donalbaine.

Donal. What is amiſſe?
Macb. You are, and doe not know't:
 The Spring, the Head, the Fountaine of your Blood
 Is ſtop't, the very Source of it is ſtop't.

Macd. Your Royall Father's murther'd.
Mal. Oh, by whom?

Lenox. Thoſe of his Chamber, as it ſeem'd, had don't:
 Their Hands and Faces were all badg'd with blood,
 So were their Daggers, which ynwip'd, we found
 Vpon their Pillowes: they ſtar'd, and were diſtracted,
 No mans Life was to be truſted with them.

Macb. O, yet I doe repent me of my furie,
 That I did kill them.

Macd. Wherefore did you ſo?
Macb. Who can be wiſe, amaz'd, temp'r'd, & furious, Loyall, and Neutrall, in a moment? No man:
 Th'expedition of my violent Loue
 Out-run the pawſer, Reaſon. Here lay Duncan,
 His Siluer ſkinne, lac'd with his Golden Blood,
 And his gaſt'd Stabs, look'd like a Breach in Nature,
 For Ruines waſtfull entrance: there the Murtherers,
 Steep'd in the Colours of their Trade; their Daggers
 Vnmannerly breech'd with gore: who could reſtaine,
 That had a heart to loue; and in that heart,
 Courage, to make's loue knowne?

Lady. Helpe me hence, ho.

Macd. Looke to the Lady.

Mal. Why doe we hold our tongues,
 That moſt may clayme this argument for ours?

Donal. What ſhould be ſpoken here,

Where our Fate hid in an augure hole,
 May ruſh, and ſeize vs? Let's away,
 Our Teares are not yet brew'd.

Mal. Nor our ſtrong Sorrow
 Vpon the foot of Motion.

Banq. Looke to the Lady:
 And when we haue our naked Fraillies hid,
 That ſuffer in expoſure; let vs meet,
 And queſtion this moſt bloody piece of worke,
 To know it further. Feares and ſcruples ſhake vs:
 In the great Hand of God I ſtand, and thence,
 Againſt the vndiuidg'd pretence, I fight
 Of Treasonous Mallice.

Macd. And ſo doe I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readineſſe,
 And meet 'tch' Hall together.

All. Well contented. Exeunt.

Malc. What will you doe?
 Let's not comfort with them:
 To ſhew an vnſelt Sorrow, is an Office
 Which the falſe man do's caſie.

Don. To Ireland; I:
 Our ſeperated fortune ſhall kcepe vs both the ſafer:
 Where we are, there's Daggers in mens Smiles;
 The neere in blood, the neerer bloody.

Malc. This murtherous Shaft that's ſhot,
 Hath not yet lighted: and our ſafeſt way,
 Is to auoid the ayme. Therefore to Horſe,
 And let vs not be daintie of leaue-taking,
 But ſhift away: there's warrant in that Theft,
 Which ſteales it ſelfe, when there's no mercie left.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Roſſe, with an Old man.

Old man. Threſcore and ten I can remember well,
 Within the Volume of which Time, I haue ſeene
 Houres dreadfull, and things ſtrange: but this ſore Night
 Hath triſted former knowings.

Roſſe. Ha, good Father,
 Thou ſeeſt the Heauens, as troubled with mans Ad,
 Threatens his bloody Stage: byth' Clock 'tis Day,
 And yet darke Night ſtrangles the trauailing Lampe:
 Is't Nights predominance, or the Dayes ſhame,
 That Darkneſſe does the face of Earth intombe,
 When liuing Light ſhould kiſſe it?

Old man. 'Tis vnnaturall,
 Even like the deed that's done: On Tuesday laſt,
 A Faulcon towring in her pride of place,
 Was by a Mowſing Owle hawk't at, and kill'd.

Roſſe. And Duncan's Horſes,
 (A thing moſt ſtrange, and certaine)
 Beauteous, and ſwift, the Minions of their Race,
 Turn'd wilde in nature, broke their ſtalls, ſlong out,
 Contending 'gainſt Obedience, as they would Make Warre with Mankinde.

Old man. 'Tis ſaid, they eate each other.

Roſſe. They did ſo:

To

To th'amazement of mine eyes that look'd vpon't.

Enter Macduffe.

Heere comes the good Macduffe.
 How goes the world Sir, now?

Macd. Why ſee you not?

Roſſe. Is't known who did this more then bloody deed?

Macd. Thoſe that Macbeth hath ſlaine.

Roſſe. Alas the day,

What good could they pretend?

Macd. They were ſubborned,

Malcolme, and Donalbaine the Kings two Sonnes

Are ſtolne away and fled, which puts vpon them

Suſpition of the deed.

Roſſe. 'Gainſt Nature ſtill,

Thriftleſſe Ambition, that will rauen vp

Thine owne liues meanes: Then 'tis moſt like,

The Soueraignty will fall vpon Macbeth.

Macd. He is already nam'd, and gone to Scone

To be inueſted.

Roſſe. Where is Duncan's body?

Macd. Carried to Colmekill,

The Sacred Store-houſe of his Predeceſſors,

And Guardian of their Bones.

Roſſe. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No Coſin, Ile to Fiſe.

Roſſe. Well, I will thither.

Macd. Well may you ſee things wel done there: Adieu

Leaſt our old Robes ſit eaſier then our new.

Roſſe. Farewell, Father.

Old M. Gods benyſon go with you, and with thoſe

That would make good of bad, and Friends of Foes.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Banquo.

Banq. Thou haſt it now, King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
 As the weyard Women promis'd, and I feare
 Thou play'd'ſt moſt fowly for't: yet it was ſaide
 It ſhould not ſtand in thy Poſterity,
 But that my ſelfe ſhould be the Roote, and Father
 Of many Kings. If there come truth from them,
 As vpon thee Macbeth, their Speeches ſhine,
 Why by the verities on thee made good,
 May they not be my Oracles as well,
 And ſet me vp in hope. But hush, no more.

Senit ſounded. Enter Macbeth as King, Lady Lenox, Roſſe, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. Heere's our chiefe Gueſt.

La. If he had bene forgotten,

It had bene as a gap in our great Feaſt,

And all thing vnbecomming.

Macb. To night we hold a ſolemne Supper fir,

And Ile requeſt your preſence.

Banq. Let your Highneſſe

Command vpon me, to the which my duties

Are with a moſt indiſoluble tye

For euer knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoone?

Ban. I, my good Lord.

Macb. We ſhould haue elſe deſir'd your good aduice

(Which ſtill hath been both graue, and prosperous)
 In this dayes Councell: but wee'le take to morrow.
 Is't farre you ride?

Ban. As farre, my Lord, as will fill vp the time
 'Twixt this, and Supper. Goe not my Horſe the better,
 I muſt become a borrower of the Night,
 For a darke houre, or twaine.

Macb. Faile not our Feaſt.

Ban. My Lord, I will not.

Macb. We heare our bloody Cozens are beſtow'd

In England, and in Ireland, not confeſſing

Their cruell Parricide, filling their hearers

With ſtrange inuention. But of that to morrow,
 When therewithall, we ſhall haue cauſe of State,

Crauing vs ioyntly. Hye you to Horſe:

Adieu, till you returne at Night.

Goes Fleance with you?

Ban. I, my good Lord: our time does call vpon's.

Macb. I with your Horſes (wiſt, and ſure of foot:

And ſo I doe commend you to their backs.

Farewell. Exit Banquo.

Let euery man be maſter of his time,

Till ſeu'en at Night, to make ſocietie

The ſweeter welcome:

We will keepe our ſelfe till Supper time alone:

While then, God be with you, Exeunt Lords.

Sirha, a word with you: Attend thoſe men

Our pleaſure?

Servant. They are, my Lord, without the Pallace

Gate.

Macb. Bring them before vs. Exit Servant.

To be thus, is nothing, but to be faſely thus:

Our feares in Banquo ſicke deepe,

And in his Royaltie of Nature reignes that

Which would be fear'd. 'Tis much he dares,

And to that dauntleſſe temper of his Minde,

He hath a Wiſdome, that doth guide his Valour,

To act in ſafetie. There is none but he,

Whoſe being I doe feare: and vnder him,

My Genius is rebuk'd, as it is ſaid

Mark Antonie was by Cesar. He chid the Siſters,

When firſt they put the Name of King vpon me,

And bad them ſpeake to him. Then Prophet-like,

They hayl'd him Father to a Line of Kings.

Vpon my Head they plac'd a fruitleſſe Crowne,

And put a barren Scepter in my Gripe,

Thence to be wrencht with an vnlineall Hand,

No Sonne of mine ſucceeding: if't be ſo,

For Banquo's Iſſue haue I fil'd my Minde,

For them, the gracious Duncan haue I murther'd,

Put Rancours in the Veſſell of my Peace

Onely for them, and mine eternall Iewell

Giuen to the common Enemy of Man,

To make them Kings, the Seedes of Banquo Kings.

Rather then ſo, come Fate into the Lyft,

And champion me to th' vtterance.

Who's there?

Enter Servant, and two Murtherers.

Now goe to the Doore, and ſtay there till we call.

Exit Servant.

Was it not yeſterday we ſpoke together?

Murth. It was, ſo pleaſe your Highneſſe.

Macb. Well then,

Now haue you conſider'd of my ſpeeches:

Know,

Know, that it was he, in the times past,
Which held you so under fortune,
Which you thought had been our innocent selfe,
This I made good to you, in our last conference,
Past in probation with you:
How you were borne in hand, how cross:
The Instruments: who wrought with them:
And all things else, that might
To halfe a Soule, and to a Notion craz'd, Say, Thus did Banquo.

1. Murth. You made it knowne to vs.

Macb. I did so:
And went further, which is now
Our point of second meeting.
Doe you finde your patience so predominant,
In your nature, that you can let this goe?
Are you so Gospell'd, to pray for this good man,
And for his Issue, whose heauie hand
Hath bow'd you to the Graue, and begger'd
Yours for euer?

1. Murth. We are men, my Liege.

Macb. I, in the Catalogue ye goe for men,
As Hounds, and Greyhounds, Mungrels, Spaniels, Cutres,
Showghes, Water-Rugs, and Demy-Wolues are clipt
All by the Name of Dogges: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The House-keeper, the Hunter, euery one
According to the gift, which bounteous Nature
Hath in him clos'd: whereby he does receiue
Particular addition, from the Bill,
That writes them all alike: and so of men.
Now, if you haue a station in the file,
Nor i'th' worst ranke of Manhood, say't,
And I will put that Businesse in your Bosomes,
Whose execution takes your Enemie off,
Grapples you to the heart, and loue of vs,
Who weare our Health but sickly in his Life,
Which in his Death were perfect.

2. Murth. I am one, my Liege,
Whom the vile Blowes and Buffets of the World
Hath so incens'd, that I am recklesse what I doe,
To fight the World.

1. Murth. And I another,
So wearie with Disasters, rugg'd with Fortune,
That I would set my Life on any Chance,
To mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you know Banquo was your Enemie:

Murth. True, my Lord.

Macb. So is he mine: and in such bloody distance,
That euery minute of his being, thrusts
Against my neer'st of Life: and though I could
With bare-fac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will anouch it; yet I must not,
For certaine friends that are both his, and mine,
Whose loues I may not drop, but wayle his fall,
Who I my selfe struck downe: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance doe make loue,
Masking the Businesse from the common Eye,
For sundry weightie Reasons.

2. Murth. We shall, my Lord,
Performe what you command vs.

1. Murth. Though our Liues--

Macb. Your Spirits shine through you,
Within this houre, at most,
I will aduise you where to plant your selues,
Acquaint you with the perfect Spy o'th' time,

The moment on't, for't must be done to Night,
And something from the Pallace: alwayes thought,
That I require a clearenesse; and with him,
To leaue no Rubs nor Botches in the Worke:
Fleane, his Sonne, that keepe him companie,
Whose absence is no lesse materiall to me,
Then is his Fathers, must embrace the fate
Of that darke houre: resolute your selues apart,
He come to you anon.

Murth. We are resolu'd, my Lord.

Macb. He call vpon you straight: abide within,
It is concluded: Banquo, thy Soules flight,
If it finde Heauen, must finde it out to Night. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Macbeth's Lady, and a Seruant.

Lady. Is Banquo gone from Court?

Seruant. I, Madame, but returns againe to Night.

Lady. Say to the King, I would attend his leylure,
For a few words.

Seruant. Madame, I will. Exit.

Lady. Nought's had, all's spent,

Where our desire is got without content:

'Tis safer, to be that which we destroy,

Then by destruction dwell in doubtful ioy.

Enter Macbeth.

How now, my Lord, why doe you keepe alone?
Of sorryest Fancies your Companions making,
Vsing those Thoughts, which should indeed haue dy'd
With them they thinke on: things without all remedie
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.

Macb. We haue scorch'd the Snake, not kill'd it:
Shee'le close, and be her selfe, whilest our poore Mallice
Remaines in danger of her former Tooth.

But let the frame of things dis-ioynt,

Both the Worlds suffer,

Ere we will eate our Meale in feare, and sleepe

In the affliction of these terrible Dreames,

That shake vs Nightly: Better be with the dead,

Whom we, to gayne our peace, haue sent to peace,

Then on the torture of the Minde to lye

In restless extasie.

Duncane is in his Graue:

After Lives full Feuer, he sleepe well,

Treason ha's done his worst: nor Steele, nor Poyson,

Mallice domestique, forraigne Leuie, nothing,

Can touch him further.

Lady. Come on:

Gentle my Lord, sleeke o're your rugged Lookes,

Be bright and Iouiall among your Guests to Night.

Macb. So shall I Loue, and so I pray be you:

Let your remembrance apply to Banquo,

Present him Eminence, both with Eye and Tongue:

Vnfaile the while, that wee must laue

Our Honors in these flattering streames,

And make our Faces Vizards to our Hearts,

Disguising what they are.

Lady. You must leaue this.

Macb. O, full of Scorpions is my Minde, deare Wife:
Thou know'st, that Banquo and his Fleane liues.

Lady. But

Scena Quarta.

Banquet prepar'd. Enter Macbeth, Lady, Rosse, Lenox,
Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your owne degrees, sit downe:
At first and last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your Maiesty.

Macb. Our selfe will mingle with Society,
And play the humble Host:

Our Hostesse keepe her State, but in best time

We will require her welcome.

Len. Pronounce it for me Sir, to all our Friends,

For my heart speaks, they are welcome.

Enter first Murderer.

Macb. See they encounter thee with their hearts thanks
Both sides are euen: heere He sit i'th' mid'st.

Be large in mirth, anon wee'l drinke a Measurie

The Table round. There's blood vpon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without, then he within.

Is he dispatch'd?

Mur. My Lord his throat is cut, that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o'th' Cut-throats,

Yet hee's good that did the like for Fleane:

If thou did'st it, thou art the Non-pareilli

Mur. Most Royall Sir

Fleane is scap'd.

Macb. Then comes my Fit againe:

I had else bene perfect;

Whole as the Marble, founded as the Roocke,

As broad, and generall, as the casing Ayre:

But now I am cabin'd, crib'd, confin'd, bound in

To sawcy doubts, and feares. But Banquo's safe?

Mur. I, my good Lord: safe in a ditch he bides,

With twenty trenched gaffes on his head;

The least a Death to Nature.

Macb. Thanks for that:

There the growne Serpent lyes, the worme that's fled

Hath Nature that in time will Venom breed,

No teeth for th' present. Get thee gone, to morrow

Wee'l heare our selues againe. Exit Murderer.

Lady. My Royall Lord,

You do not giue the Cheere, the Feast is fold

That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis a making:

'Tis giuen, with welcome: to feede were best at home:

From thence, the sawce to meate is Ceremony,

Meeting were bare without it.

Enter the Ghost of Banquo, and sits in Macbeth's place.

Macb. Sweet Remembrancer:

Now good digestion waite on Appetite,

And health on both.

Lenox. May't please your Highnesse Sir.

Macb. Here had we now our Countries Honor, roof'd,

Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present:

Who, may I rather challenge for unkindnesse,

Then pity for Mischance.

Rosse. His absence (Sir)

Layes blame vpon his promise. Pleas't your Highnesse

To grace vs with your Royall Company?

Macb.

Macb. The Table's full.

Lenox. Heere is a place reserv'd Sir,

Macb. Where?

Lenox. Heere my good Lord.

What is't that moves your Highnesse?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good Lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say I did it: neuer shake
Thy goary lockes at me.

Rosse. Gentlemen life, his Highnesse is not well.

Lady. Sit worthy Friends: my Lord is often thus,

And hath bene from his youth. Pray you keepe Seat,

The fit is momentary, upon a thought

He will againe be well. If much you note him

You shall offend him, and extend his Passion.

Feed, and regard him not. Are you a man?

Macb. I, and a bold one, that dare looke on that

Which might appall the Diuell.

La. O proper stuffe:

This is the very painting of your feare:

This is the Ayre-drawn Daggor which you said

Led you to Duncan. O, these flawes and starts

(Impostors to the feare) would well become

A womans story, at a Winters fire

Authoriz'd by her Grandam: shame it selfe,

Why do you make such faces? When all's done

You looke but on a stooler.

Macb. Prythee see there:

Behold, looke, loe, how say you:

Why what care I, if thou canst nod, speake too?

If Charnell houses, and our Graues must send

Those that we bury, backe; our Monuments

Shall be the Mawes of Kytles.

La. What? quite vnmann'd in folly.

Macb. If I stand heere, I saw him.

La. Fie for shame.

Macb. Blood hath bene shed ere now, i' th'olden time

Ere humane Statute purg'd the gentle Weale:

I, and since too, Murthers haue bene perform'd

Too terrible for the eare. The tunces has bene,

That when the Braines were out, the man would dye,

And there an end: But now they rise againe!

With twenty mortall murthers on their crownes,

And push vs from our stooles. This is more strange

Then such a murder is.

La. My worthy Lord

Your Noble Friends do lacke you.

Macb. I do forget:

Do not muse at me, my most worthy Friends,

I haue a strange infirmity, which is nothing

To those that know me. Come, loue and health to all,

Then Ile sit downe: Giue me some Wine, fill full:

Enter Ghost.

I drinke to th'generall ioy, o' th' whole Table;

And to our deere Friend Banquo, whom we misse:

Would he were heere: to all, and him we thirst,

And all to all.

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Mac. Auant, & quit my sight, let the earth hide thee:

Thy bones are marrowlesse, thy blood is cold:

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes

Which thou dost glare with.

La. Think of this good Peeres

But as a thing of Custome: 'Tis no other,

Onely it spoyles the pleasure of the time,

Macb. What map dare I dare

Approach thou like the rugged Russian Beare;

The arm'd Rhinoceros, or th'Hircan Tiger,

Take any shape but that, and my firme Nerves

Shall neuer tremble. Or be aliue againe;

And dare me to the Desert with thy Sword:

If trembling I inhabit thee, protest mee

The Baby of a Gille. Hence horrible shadow,

Vnrecall mock'ry hence. Why so, being gone

I am a man againe: pray you sit still.

La. You haue displac'd the mirth,

Broke the good meeting, with most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,

And overcome vs like a Summers Cloud,

Without our speciall wonder? You make me strange

Euen to the disposition that I owe,

When now I thinke you can behold such sights,

And keepe the naturall Rubie of your Cheekes,

When mine is blanch'd with feare.

Rosse. What sights, my Lord?

La. I pray you speake not: he growes worse & worse

Question enrages him: at once, goodnight.

Stand not vpon the order of your going,

But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health

Attend his Maiesty.

La. A kinde goodnight to all.

Macb. It will haue blood they say:

Blood will haue Blood:

Stones haue bene knowne to moue, & Trees to speake:

Augures, and vnderstood Relations, haue

By Maggot Pyes, & Choughes, & Rookes brought forth

The secret'st man of Blood. What is the night?

La. Almost at oddes with morning, which is which:

Macb. How say'st thou that Macduff denies his person

At our great bidding.

La. Did you send to him Sir?

Macb. I heare it by the way: But I will send:

There's not a one of them but in his house

I keepe a Seruant Feed. I will to morrow

(And betimes I will) to the weyard Sisters,

More shall they speake: for now I am bent to know

By the worst meanes, the worst, for mine owne good,

All causes shall giue way. I am in blood

Stepp in so farre, that should I wade no more,

Returning were as tedious as go ore:

Strange things I haue in head, that will to hand,

Which must be acted, ere they may be scand.

La. You lacke the season of all Natures, sleepe.

Macb. Come, wee'l to sleepe: My strange & self-abuse

Is the initiate feare, that wants hard vse:

We are yet but yong indeed.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting
Hecat.

1. Why how now Hecat, you looke angerly?

Hec. Haue I not reason (Beldams) as you are?

Sawey, and ouer-bold, how did you dare

To Trade, and Trafficke with Macbeth,

In Riddles, and Affaires of death;

And

And I the Mistis of your Charmes,

The close contriuer of all harmes,

Was neuer call'd to beare my part,

Or shew the glory of our Art?

And which is worse, all you haue done

Hath bene but for a wayward Sonne,

Spightfull, and wrathfull, who (as others do)

Loues for his owne ends, not for you.

But make amends now: Get you gon,

And at the pit of Acheron

Meete me i' th' Morning: thither he

Will come, to know his Destinie.

Your Vessels, and your Spels provide:

Your Charmes, and euery thing beside;

I am for th' Ayre: This night Ile spend

Vnto a dismall, and a Fatall end.

Great businesse must be wrought ere Noone.

Vpon the Corner of the Moone

There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound,

Ile catch it ere it come to ground;

And that distill'd by Magicke slights,

Shall raise such Artificiall Sprights,

As by the strength of their illusion,

Shall draw him on to his Confusion:

He shall spurne Fate, scorne Death, and beare

His hopes' boue Wisedome, Grace, and Feare:

And you all know, Security

Is Mortals cheefest Enemye.

Musicke, and a Song.

Heareke, I am call'd: my little Spirit see

Sits in a Foggy cloud, and stayes for me.

1. Come, let's make hast, thec'l soone be

Backe againe.

Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Lenox, and another Lord.

Lenox. My former Speeches,

Haue but hit your Thoughts

Which can interpret farther: Onely I say

Things haue bin strangely borne. The gracious Duncan

Was pittied of Macbeth: marry he was dead:

And the right valiant Banquo walk'd too late,

Whom you may say (if it please you) Fleance kill'd,

For Fleance fled: Men must not walke too late.

Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous

It was for Malcolme, and for Donalbane

To kill their gracious Father? Damned Fact,

How it did greue Macbeth? Did he not straight

In pious rage, the two delinquents teare,

That were the Slaues of drinke, and thralls of sleepe?

Was not that Nobly done? I, and wisely too:

For 'twould haue anger'd any heart aliue

To heare the men deny't. So that I say,

He ha's borne all things well, and I do thinke,

That had he Duncans Sonnes vnder his Key,

(As, and't please Heaven he shall not) they should finde

What 'twere to kill a Father: So should Fleance.

But peace; for from broad words, and cause he say'd

His presence at the Tyrants Feast, I heare

Macduffe liues in disgrace. Sir, can you tell

Where he bestowes himselfe?

Lord. The Sonnes of Duncane

(From whom this Tyrant holds the due of Birth)

Liues in the English Court, and is recey'd

Of the most Pious Edward, with such grace,

That the maleuolence of Fortune, nothing

Takes from his high respect. Thither Macduffe

Is gone, to pray the Holy King, vpon his ayd

To wake Northumberland, and warlike Seyward,

That by the helpe of these (with him about)

To ratifie the Worke) we may againe

Giue to our Tables meate, sleepe to our Nights:

Free from our Feasts, and Banquers bloody kniues;

Do faithfull Homage, and receiue free Honors,

All which we pine for now. And this report

Hath so exasperate their King, that hee

Prepares for some attempt of Warre.

Len. Sent he to Macduffe?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute Sir, not I

The cloudy Messenger turnes me his backe,

And hums; as who should say, you'l rue the time

That clogges me with this Answer.

Lenox. And that well might

Aduise him to a Caution, to hold what distance

His wisedome can provide. Some holy Angell

Flye to the Court of England, and vnfold

His Message ere he come, that a swift blessing

May soone returne to this our suffering Country,

Vnder a hand accus'd.

Lord. Ile send my Prayers with him.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1. Thrice the brinded Cat hath mew'd.

2. Thrice, and once the Hedge-Pigge whin'd.

3. Harpier cries, 'tis time, 'tis time.

1. Round about the Caldron go:

In the poyson'd Entrails throw

Toad, that vnder cold stone,

Dayes and Nights, ha's thirty one:

Sweltred Venom sleeping got,

Boyle thou first i' th' charmed pot.

All. Double, double, toyle and trouble;

Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.

2. Filler of a Fenny Snake,

In the Cauldron boyle and bake:

Eye of Newt, and Toe of Frogge,

Wooll of Bat, and Tongue of Dogge:

Adders Forke, and Blinde-wormes Sting,

Lizards legge, and Howlers wing:

For a Charme of powrefull trouble,

Like a Hell-broth, boyle and bubble.

All. Double, double, toyle and trouble,

Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.

3. Scale of Dragon, Tooth of Wolfe,

Witches Mummey, Maw, and Gulfe

Of the rauin'd salt Sea sharke:

Roote of Hemlocke, digg'd i' th' darke:

Liver of Blaspheming Iew,

Gall of Goate, and Slippes of Yew,

Sluer'd in the Moones Eclipse:

Noſc.

Nose of Turke, and Tartars lips:
Finger of Birth-strangled Babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a Drab,
Make the Grewell thicke, and slab.
Adde thereto a Tigers Chawdron,
For th' Ingredience of our Cawdron.
All. Double, double, royle and trouble,
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.
2 Coole it with a Baboones blood,
Then the Charme is firme and good.

Enter Hecate, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O well done: I commend your paines,
And euery one shall share i'th gaines:
And now about the Cauldron sing
Like Elues and Fairies in a Ring,
Inchanting all that you put in.

Musike and a Song. Blacke Spirits, &c.
2 By the pricking of my Thumbes,
Something wicked this way comes:
Open Lockes, who euer knockes.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now you secret, black, & midnight Hags?
What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I coniure you, by that which you Professe,
(How ere you come to know it) answer me:
Though you vntye the Windes, and let them fight Against the Churches: Though the yelty Waues
Confound and swallow Nauigation vp:
Though bladed Corne be lodg'd, & Trees blown downe,
Though Castles topple on their Warders heads:
Though Pallaces, and Pyramids do slope
Their heads to their Foundations: Though the treasure
Of Natures Germaine, tumble altogether,
Euen till destruction sicken: Answer me
To what I aske you.

1 Speake.
2 Demand.
3 Wee'l answer.
1 Say, if th' hadst rather heare it from our mouthes,
Or from our Masters.

Macb. Call 'em: let me see 'em.
1 Powe in Sower blood, that hath caten
Her nine Farrow: Greaze that's sweaten
From the Murderers Gibbet, throw
Into the Flame.

All. Come high or low:
Thy Selfe and Office deaftly shew. Thunder.

1 Apparition, an Armed Head.

Macb. Tell me, thou vnknowne power.
1 He knowes thy thought:
Heare his speech, but say thou nought.

1 Appar. Macbeth, Macbeth, Macbeth:
Beware Macduffe,

Beware the Thane of Fife: dismisse me. Enough.

He Descends.

Macb. What ere thou art, for thy good caution, thanks
Thou hast harp'd my feare aright. But one word more.

1 He will not be commanded: heere's another
More potent then the first. Thunder.

2 Apparition, a Bloody Child.

Macb. Had I three eares, I'd heare thee.

2 Appar. Be bloody, bold, & resolute:

Laugh to scorne
The powe of man: For none of woman borne Shall harme Macbeth.

Macb. Then lue Macduffe: what need I feare of thee?
But yes Ile make assurance: double sure,
And take a Bond of Fate: thou shalt not lue,
That I may tell pale-hearted Feare, it lies;
And sleepe in spight of Thunder.

3 Apparition, a Child crowned, with a Tree in his hand.
What is this, that rises like the issue of a King,
And weares vpon his Baby-brow, the round
And top of Soueraignty?

All. Listen, but speake not too't.

3 Appar. Be Lyon metled, proud, and taken care:
Who chafes, who frets, or where Conspirers are:
Macbeth shall neuer vanquish'd be, vntill
Great Byrnam Wood, to high Dunsmane Hill
Shall come against him.

Macb. That will neuer bee:
Who can impress the Forrest, bid the Tree
Vnfixe his earth-bound Root? Sweet boadments, good:
Rebellious dead, rise neuer till the Wood
Of Byrnan rise, and our high plac'd Macbeth
Shall lue the Lease of Nature, pay his breath
To time, and mortall Custome. Yet my Hart
Throbs to know one thing: Tell me, if your Art
Can tell so much: Shall Banquo's issue euer Reigne in this Kingdome?

All. Seeke to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied. Deny me this,
And an eternall Curse fall on you: Let me know!
Why sinkes that Caldron? & what noise is this? Hoboyes

1 Shew.
2 Shew.
3 Shew.

All. Shew his Eyes, and greene his Hart,
Come like shadows, so depart.

*A shew of eight Kings, and Banquo last, with a glasse
in his hand.*

Macb. Thou art too like the Spirit of Banquo: Down:
Thy Crowne do's feare mine Eye-balls. And thy haire
Thou other Gold-bound brow, is like the first:
A third, is like the former. Filthy Haggas,
Why do you shew me this? A fourth? Start eyes!
What will the Line stretch out to'th' cracke of Doome?
Another yet? A seauenth? Ile see no more:
And yet the eight appeares, who beares a glasse,
Which shewes me many more: and some I see,
That two-fold Balles, and trebble Scepters carry.
Horrible sight: Now I see 'tis true,
For the Blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles vpon me,
And points at them for his. What? is this so?

1 I Sir, all this is so. But why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?
Come Sisters, cheere we vp his sprights,
And shew the best of our delights.
Ile Charme the Ayre to giue a sound,
While you performe your Antique round:
That this great King may kindly say,
Our duties, did his welcome pay. Musike.

The Witches Dance, and vanish.

Macb. Where are they? Gone?

Let this pernicious houre,

Stand aye accursed in the Kalender.

Come in, without there. Enter Lenox.

Lenox. What's your Graces will. Macb.

Macb. Saw you the Weyard Sisters?
Lenox. No my Lord.
Macb. Came they not by you?
Lenox. No indeed my Lord.
Macb. Infested be the Ayre whereon they ride,
And darnd all those that trust them. I did heare
The galloping of Horle. Who was't came by?
Len. 'Tis two or three my Lord, that bring you word:
Macduffe is fled to England.
Macb. Fled to England?
Len. I, my good Lord.
Macb. Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose neuer is o're-tooke
Vlesse the deed go with it. From this moment,
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. And euen now
To Crown my thoughts with Acts: be it thoght & done:
The Cagle of Macduffe, I will surprize,
Seize vpon Fife; giue to th' edge o'th' sword
His Wife, his Babes, and all vnfortunate Soules
That trace him in his Line. No boasting like a Foole,
But no more fights. Where are these Gentlemen?
Come bring me where they are. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Macduffes Wife, her Son, and Rosse.

Wife. What had he done, to make him fly the Land?
Rosse. You must haue patience Madam.

Wife. He had none:
His flight was madnesse: when our Actions do not,
Our feares do make vs Traitors.

Rosse. You know not
Whether it was his wifedome, or his feare.

Wife. Wifedome? to leaue his wife, to leaue his Babes,
His Mansion, and his Tules, in a place
From whence himselfe do's flye? He loues vs not,
He wants the naturall touch. For the poore Wren
(The most diminutive of Birds) will fight,
Her yong ones in her Nest, against the Owle:
All is the Feare, and nothing is the Loue;
As little is the Wifedome, where the flight
So runnes against all reason.

Rosse. My dearest Cooz,
I pray you schoole your selfe. But for your Husband,
He is Noble, Wise, Iudicious, and best knowes
The fits o'th' Season. I dare not speake much further,
But cruell are the times, when we are Traitors
And do not know our selues: when we hold Rumor
From what we feare, yet know not what we feare,
But flounce vpon a wilde and violent Sea
Each way, and moue. I take my leaue of you:
Shall not be long but Ile be heere againe:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climbe vpward,
To what they were before. My pretty Cousin, I bid Blessing vpon you. Exit Rosse.

Wife. Father'd he is,
And yet hee's Father lesse.
Rosse. I am so much a Foole, should I stay longer?
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort:
I take my leaue at once. Exit Rosse.

Wife. Sirra, your Fathers dead,
And what will you do now? How will you lue?

Son. As Birds do Mother.

Wife. What with Wormes, and Flyes?

Son. With what I get I meane, and so do they.

Wife. Poore Bird,

Thou'dst neuer Feare the Net, nor Lime,

The Pitfall, nor the Gin.

Son. Why should I Mother?

Poore Birds they are not set for:

My Father is not dead for all your saying.

Wife. Yes, he is dead:

How wilt thou do for a Father?

Son. Nay how will you do for a Husband?

Wife. Why I can buy me twenty at any Market.

Son. Then you'l by 'em to sell againe.

Wife. Thou speak'st with all thy wit,

And yet I'faith with wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my Father a Traitor, Mother?

Wife. I, that he was.

Son. What is a Traitor?

Wife. Why one that sweares, and lyes.

Son. And be all Traitors, that do so.

Wife. Euery one that do's so, is a Traitor,

And must be hang'd.

Son. And must they all be hang'd, that swear and lye?

Wife. Euery one.

Son. Who must hang them?

Wife. Why, the honest men.

Son. Then the Liars and Swearers are Fools: for there are Lyars and Swearers enow, to beate the honest men, and hang vp them.

Wife. Now God helpe thee, poore Monkie:

But how wilt thou do for a Father?

Son. If he were dead, you'd weepe for him: if you would not, it were a good signe, that I should quickly

haue a new Father.

Wife. Poore playter, how thou talk'st?

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Blesse you faire Dame: I am not to you known,

Though in your state of Honor I am perfect;

I doubt some danger do's approach you neerely.

If you will take a homely mans aduice,

Be not found heere: Hence with your little ones

To fright you thus. Me thinkes I am too sauage:

To do worse to you, were fell Cruelty,

Which is too nie your person. Heauen preserue you,

I dare abide no longer. Exit Messenger

Wife. Whether should I flye?

I haue done no harme. But I remember now

I am in this earthly world: where to do harme

Is often laudable, to do good sometime

Accounted dangerous folly. Why then (alas)

Do I put vp that womanly defence,

To say I haue done no harme?

What are these faces?

Enter Murderers.

Mur. Where is your Husband?

Wife. I hope in no place so vnsanctified,

Where such as thou may'st finde him.

Mur. He's a Traitor.

Son. Thou ly'st thou shagge-eard Villaine.

Mur. What you Egge?

Yong fry of Treachery?

Son. He ha's kill'd me Mother,

Run away I pray you. Exit crying Murderer.

N n

Scena

Scena Tertia.

Enter Malcolm and Macduffe.

Mal. Let vs seeke out some desolate shade, & there Weepe our sad bosomes empty.

Macd. Let vs rather Hold fast the mortall Sword: and like good men, Befride our downfall Birthdome: each new Morne, New Widdowes howle, new Orphans cry, new sorowes Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like Syllable of Dolour.

Mal. What I beleue, Ile waile; What know, beleue; and what I can redresse, As I shall finde the time to friend: I wil. What you haue spoke, it may be so perchance. This Tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues, Was once thought honest: you haue lou'd him well, He hath not touch'd you yet. I am yong, but something You may discern of him through me, and wisdom To offer vp a weake, poore innocent Lambe T'appease an angry God.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

Mal. But Macbeth is.

A good and vertuous Nature may recoyle In an Imperiall charge. But I shall craue your pardon: That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpoe; Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell. Though all things foule, would wear the brows of grace Yet Grace must still looke so.

Macd. I haue lost my Hopes.

Mal. Perchance euen there Where I did finde my doubts. Why in that rawnesse left you Wife, and Childe? Those precious Motiues, those strong knots of Loue, Without leaue-taking. I prau you, Let not my Iealousies, be your Dishonors, But mine owne Safeties: you may be rightly iust, What euer I shall thinke.

Macd. Bleed, bleed poore Country, Great Tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure, For goodnesse dare not check thee: wear thy wrongs, The Title, is asseard. Far thee well Lord, I would not be the Villaine that thou thinkest, For the whole Space that's in the Tyrants Graspe, And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Benot offended: I speake not as in absolute feare of you: I thinke our Country shakes beneath the yoke, It weepes, it bleeds, and each new day a gash Is added to her wounds. I thinke withall, There would be hands vplifted in my right: And heere from gracious England haue I offer Of goodly thousands. But for all this, When I shall tread vpon the Tyrants head, Or yreare it on my Sword, yet my poore Country Shall haue more vices then it had before, More suffer, and more sundry wayes then euer, By him that shall succede.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is my selfe I meane: in whom I know All the particulars of Vice so grafted,

That when they shall be open'd, blacke Macbeth Will seeme as pure as Snow, and the poore State Esteeme him as a Lambe, being compar'd With my confinclesse harmes.

Macd. Not in the Legions Of horrid Hell, can come a Diuell more damn'd In euils, to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him Bloody, Luxurious, Avaricious, False, Deceitfull, Sodaine, Malicious, smacking of euery sinne That ha's a name. But there's no bottome, none In my Voluptuousnesse: Your Wiues, your Daughters, Your Matrons, and your Maides, could not fill vp The Cisterne of my Lust, and my Desire All continent Impediments would ore-bear. That did oppose my will. Better Macbeth, Then such an one to reigne.

Macd. Boundlesse intemperance In Nature is a Tyranny: It hath benee Th'vntimely emptying of the happy Throne, And fall of many Kings. But feare not yet To take vpon you what is yours: you may Conuey your pleasures in a spacious plenty, And yet seeme cold. The time you may so hoodwinke: We haue willing Dames enough: there cannot be That Vulture in you, to deuoure so many As will to Greatnesse dedicate themselves, Finding it so inclinde.

Mal. With this, there growes

In my most ill-compos'd Affection, such A stanchlesse Auarice, that were I King, I should cut off the Nobles for their Lands, Desire his Jewels, and this others House, And my more-hauing, would be as a Sawce To make me hunger more, that I should forge Quarrels vniust against the Good and Loyall, Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This Auarice

Sticks deeper: growes with more pernicious roote Then Summer-seeming Lust: and it hath bin The Sword of our slaine Kings: yet do not feare, Scotland hath Foyfons, to fill vp your will Of your meere Owne. All these are portable, With other Graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I haue none. The King-becoming Graces, As Iustice, Verity, Temp'rance, Stablenesse, Bounty, Perseuerance, Mercy, Lowlinesse, Deuotion, Patience, Courage, Fortitude, I haue no relish of them, but abound In the diuision of each seuerall Crime, Acting it many wayes. Nay, had I powre, I should Poure the sweet Milke of Concord, into Hell, Vpore the vniuersall peace, confound All vniuity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland, Scotland.

Mal. If such a one be fit to gouerne, speake: I am as I haue spoken.

Mac. Fit to gouerne? No not to liue. O Nation miserable! With an vntitled Tyrant, bloody Sceptr'd, When shalt thou see thy whollome dayes againe? Since that the truest Issue of thy Throne By his owne Interdiction stands accus'd, And do's blaspheme his breed? Thy Royall Father Was a most Sainted King: the Queene that bore thee, Ofiner vpon her knees, then on her feet, Dy'de euery day the liu'd. Fare thee well,

These

These Euils thou repeat'st vpon thy selfe, Hast banish'd me from Scotland. O my Brest, Thy hope ends heere.

Mal. Macduffe, this Noble passion Childe of integrity, hath from my soule Wip'd the blacke Scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts To thy good Truth, and Honor. Diuellish Macbeth, By many of these traines, hath fought to win me Into his power: and modest Wisdom pluckes me From ouer-credulous hast: but God above Deale betweene thee and me; For euen now I put my selfe to thy Direction, and Vnspeake mine owne detraction. Heere abiure The taints, and blames I laide vpon my selfe, For strangers to my Nature. I am yet Vnknowne to Woman, neuer was forsworne, Scarcely haue coueted what was mine owne: At no time broke my Faith, would not betray The Deuill to his Fellow, and delight No lesse in truth then life. My first false speaking Was this vpon my selfe. What I am truly Is thine, and my poore Countries to command: Whicher indeed, before they heere approach Old Seyward with ten thousand warlike men Already at a point, was setting forth: Now we'll together, and the chance of goodnesse Be like our warranted Quarrell. Why are you silent?

Macd. Such welcome, and vnwelcom things at once 'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well, more anon. Comes the King forth I pray you?

Doct. I Sir: there are a crew of wretched Soules That stay his Cure: their malady conuinces The great assay of Art. But at his touch, Such sanctity hath Heauen giuen his hand, They presently amend.

Exit.

Mal. I thanke you Doctor.

Macd. What's the Disease he meanes?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the Euill.

A most myraculous worke in this good King, Which often since my heere remaine in England, I haue seene him do: How he solicites heauen Himselfe best knowes: but strangely visited people All swolne and Vicerous, pittifull to the eye, The meere dispaire of Surgery, he cures, Hanging a golden stampe about their neckes, Paton with holy Prayers, and 'tis spoken To the succeeding Royalty he leaues The healing Benediction. With this strange vertue, He hath a heavenly giuft of Prophecie, And sundry Blessings hang about his Throne, That speake him full of Grace.

Enter Rosse.

Macd. See who comes heere.

Mal. My Countryman: but yet I know him nor.

Macd. My euer gentle Cozen, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now, Good God betimes remoue The meanes that makes vs Strangers.

Rosse. Sir, Amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas poore Country,

Almost afraid to know it selfe. It cannot Recall'd our Mother, but our Graue; where nothing But who knowes nothing, is once seene to smile: Where sighes, and groanes, and shrieks that rent the ayre

Are made, not mark'd: Where violent sorrow seemes A Moderne extasie: The Deadmans knell, Is there scarce ask'd for who, and good mens liues Expire before the Flowers in their Caps, Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macd. Oh Relation; too nice, and yet too true.

Mal. What's the newest griefe?

Rosse. That of an houres age, doth hisse the speaker, Each minute teemes a new one.

Macd. How do's my Wife?

Rosse. Why well.

Macd. And all my Children?

Rosse. Well too.

Macd. The Tyrant ha's not batter'd at their peace?

Rosse. No, they were wel at peace, when I did leaue 'em

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech: How goes't?

Rosse. When I came hither to transport the Tydings Which I haue heauily borne, there ran a Rumour Of many worthy Fellowes, that were our, Which was to my beleefe witness the rather, For that I saw the Tyrants Power a-foot. Now is the time of helpe: your eye in Scotland Would create Soldiours, make our women fight, To doffe their dire distresses.

Mal. Bee't their comfort

We are comming thither: Gracious England hath Lent vs good Seyward, and ten thousand men, An older, and a better Souldier, none That Christendome giues out.

Rosse. Would I could answer This comfort with the like. But I haue words That would be howl'd out in the desert ayre, Where hearing should not latch them.

Macd. What concerne they, The generall cause, or is it a Fee-griefe Due to some single brest?

Rosse. No minde that's honest But in it shares some woe, though the maine part Pertaines to you alone.

Macd. 'Tis be mine

Keepe it not from me, quickly let me haue it.

Rosse. Let not your eares dispise my tongue for euer, Which shall possesse them with the heauiest sound That euer yet they heard.

Macd. Humh: I guesse at it.

Rosse. Your Castle is surpriz'd: your Wife, and Babes Sauagely slaughter'd: To relate the manner Were on the Quarry of these murder'd Deere To adde the death of you.

Mal. Mercifull Heauen:

What man, ne're pull your hat vpon your browes: Giue sorrow words; the griefe that do's not speake, Whispers the o're-fraught heart, and bids it breake.

Macd. My Children too?

Rosse. Wife, Children, Seruants, all that could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence? My wife kil'd too?

Rosse. I haue said.

Mal. Be comforted.

Let's make vs Med'cines of our great Reuenge, To cure this deadly greefe.

Macd. He ha's no Children. All my pretty ones? Did you say All? Oh Hell-Kite! All?

What, All my pretty Chickens, and their Damme At one fell swoope?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so:

Nn 2

But

But I must also feele it as a man;
I cannot but remember such things were
That were most precious to me: Did heauen looke on,
And would not take their part? Sinfull Macduff,
They were all strooke for thee: Naught that I am,
Not for their owne demerits, but for mine
Fell slaughter on their soules: Heauen rest them now.
Mal. Be this the Whetstone of your sword, let griefe
Conuert to anger: blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O I could play the woman with mine eyes,
And Braggart with my tongue. But gentle Heavens,
Cut short all intermission: Front to Front,
Bring thou this Fiend of Scotland, and my selfe
Within my Swords length fet him, if he scape
Heauen forgive him too.

Mal. This time goes manly:
Come go we to the King, our Power is ready,
Our lacke is nothing but our leaue. Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the Powres about
Put on their Instruments: Receiue what cheere you may,
The Night is long, that neuer findes the Day. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Doctor of Physicke, and a waiting Gentlewoman.

Doct. I haue too Nights watch'd with you, but can perceiue no truth in your report. When was it shee last walk'd?

Gent. Since his Maiesty went into the Field, I haue seene her rise from her bed, throw her Night-Gown vpon her, vnlocke her Closet, take fourth paper, folde it, write vpon't, read it, afterwards Seale it, and againe returne to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleepe.

Doct. A great perturbation in Nature, to receiue at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.
In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what (at any time) haue you heard her say?

Gent. That Sir, which I will not report after her.
Doct. You may to me, and 'tis most meet you should.
Gent. Neither to you, nor any one, hauing no witness to confirme my speech. Enter Lady, with a Taper.
Lo you, heere she comes: This is her very guise, and vpon my life fast asleepe: obserue her, stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light?
Gent. Why it stood by her: she ha's light by her continually, 'tis her command.

Doct. You see her eyes are open.
Gent. I but their sence are shut.
Doct. What is it she do's now?

Look how she rubbes her hands.
Gent. It is an accustom'd action with her, to seeme thus washing her hands: I haue knowne her continue in this a quarter of an houre.

Lad. Yet heere's a spot.
Doct. Heark, she speaks, I will set downe what comes from her, to satisfie my remembrance the more strongly.

Lad. Out damned spot: out I say. One: Two: Why then 'tis time to doo't: Hell is murky. Fye, my Lord, fie, a Souldier, and affear'd? what need we feare? who knowes it, when none can call our powre to accompt: yet who would haue thought the olde man to haue had so much blood in him.

Doct. Do you marke that?
Lad. The Thane of Fife, had a wife: where is she now?
What will these hands ne're be cleane? No more o'that my Lord, no more o'that: you marre all with this flutting.

Doct. Go too, go too:
You haue knowne what you should not.
Gent. She ha's spoke what shee should not, I am sure of that: Heauen knowes what she ha's knowne.

Lad. Heere's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
Oh, oh, oh.

Doct. What a sigh is there? The hart is sorely charg'd.
Gent. I would not haue such a heart in my bosome, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well.
Gent. Pray God it be sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practise: yet I haue knowne those which haue walkt in their sleep, who haue dyed holily in their beds.

Lad. Wash your hands, put on your Night-Gowne, looke not so pale: I tell you yet againe Banquo's buried;
he cannot come out on's graue.

Doct. Euen so?
Lady. To bed, to bed: there's knocking at the gate:
Come, come, come, come, giue me your hand: What's done, cannot be vndone. To bed, to bed, to bed. Exit Lady.

Doct. Will she go now to bed?
Gent. Directly.
Doct. Foule whisprings are abroad: vnaturall deede
Do breed vnaturall troubles: infected mindes
To their deafe pillowes will discharge their Secrets:
More needs she the Diuine, then the Physitian:
God, God forgive vs all. Look after her,
Remoue from her the meanes of all annoyance,
And still keepe eyes vpon her: So goodnight,
My minde she ha's mated, and amaz'd my sight,
I thinke, but dare not speake.

Gent. Good night good Doctor. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Drum and Colours. Enter Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, Lenox, Soldiers.

Ment. The English powre is neere, led on by Malcolm,
His Vnkle Seyward, and the good Macduff.
Reuenges burne in them: for their deere causes
Would to the bleeding, and the grim Alarme
Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Neere Byrnan wood
Shall we well meet them, that way are they coming.

Cath. Who knowes if Donalbaine be with his brother?

Len. For certaine Sir, he is not: I haue a File
Of all the Gentry; there is Seyward's Sonne,
And many vnruffe youths, that euen now
Protest their first of Manhood.

Ment. What do's the Tyrant.

Cath. Great Dunfinane he strongly Fortifies:
Some say hee's mad: Others, that lesse hate him,
Do call it valiant Fury, but for certaine

He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of Rule.

Ang. Now do's he feele
His secret Murthers sticking on his hands,
Now minutely Reuolts vpbraid his Faith-breach:
Those he commands, moue onely in command,
Nothing in loue: Now do's he feele his Title
Hang loose about him, like a Giants Robe
Vpon a dwarfish Theefe.

Ment. Who then shall blame
His pester'd Senses to recoyle, and start,
When all that is within him, do's condemne
It selfe, for being there.

Cath. Well, march we on,
To giue Obedience, where 'tis truly ow'd:
Meet we the Med'cine of the sickly Weale,
And with him poure we in our Countries purge,
Each drop of vs.

Lenox. Or so much as it needes,
To dew the Soueraigne Flower, and drowne the Weeds:
Make we our March towards Birnan. Exeunt marching.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more Reports, let them flye all:
Till Byrnan wood remoue to Dunfinane,
I cannot taint with Feare. What's the Boy Malcolm?
Was he not borne of woman? The Spirits that know
All mortall Consequences, haue pronounc'd me thus:
Feare not Macbeth, no man that's borne of woman
Shall ere haue power vpon thee. Then flye false Thanes,
And mingle with the English Epicures,
The minde I sway by, and the heart I beare,
Shall neuer sagge with doubt, nor shake with feare.

Enter Seruant.
The diuell damne thee blacke, thou cream-fac'd Loone:
Where got'st thou that Goose-lookie.

Ser. There is ten thousand.

Macb. Geese Villaine?

Ser. Souldiers Sir.

Macb. Go pricke thy face, and over-red thy feare
Thou Lilly-liuer'd Boy. What Soldiers, Patch?
Death of thy Soule, those Linnen cheekes of thine
Are Counsaillers to feare. What Soldiers Whay-face?

Ser. The English Force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. Seyton, I am sick at hart,
When I behold: Seyton, I say, this push
Will cheere me euer, or discate me now.
I haue liu'd long enough, my way of life
Is false into the Seare, the yellow Leafe,
And that which should accompany Old-Age,
As Honor, Loue, Obedience, Troopes of Friends,
I must not looke to haue: but in their stead,
Curses, not lowd but deepe, Mouth-honor, breath
Which the poore heart would faine deny, and dare not.
Seyton?

Enter Seyton.

Ser. What's your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What Newes more?

Ser. All is confirm'd my Lord, which was reported.

Macb. He fight, till from my bones, my flesh be backe.

Giue me my Armor.

Seyt. 'Tis not needed yet.

Macb. Ile put it on:
Send out inoe Horses, skirre the Country round,
Hang those that talke of Feare. Giue me mine Armor:
How do's your Patient, Doctor?

Doct. Not so sicke my Lord,
As she is troubled with thicke-comming Fancies
That keepe her from her rest.

Macb. Cure of that:
Can't thou not Minister to a minde diseas'd,
Plucke from the Memory a rooted Sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the Braine,
And with some sweet Oblitious Antidote
Cleanse the stuffe bosome, of that perillous stuffe
Which weighe vs vpon the heart?

Doct. Therein the Patient
Must minister to himselfe.

Macb. Throw Physicke to the Dogs, Ile none of it.

Come, put mine Armour on: giue me my Staffe:

Seyton, send out: Doctor, the Thanes flye from me:

Come sir, dispatch. If thou could'st Doctor, cast

The Water of my Land, finde her Disease,

And purge it to a sound and pristine Health;

I would applaud thee to the very Echo,

That should applaud againe. Pull't off I say,

What Rubarb, Cyme, or what Purgative druggie

Would scowre these English hence: hear't of them?

Doct. I my good Lord: your Royall Preparation

Makes vs heare something.

Macb. Bring it after me:

I will not be affraid of Death and Bane,

Till Birnan Forrest come to Dunfinane.

Doct. Were I from Dunfinane away, and cleere,

Profit againe should hardly draw me heere. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Drum and Colours. Enter Malcolm, Seyward, Macduffe, Seywards Sonne, Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, and Soldiers Marching.

Malc. Cofins, I hope the dayes are neere at hand
That Chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Syew. What wood is this before vs?

Ment. The wood of Birnan.

Malc. Let euery Souldier hew him downe a Bough,
And beare before him, thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our Host, and make discouery
Erre in report of vs.

Sold. It shall be done.

Syew. We learne no other, but the confident Tyrant Keepes still in Dunfinane, and will indure
Our setting downe before't.

Malc. 'Tis his maine hope:

For where there is aduantage to be giuen,

Both more and lesse haue giuen him the Reuolt;

And none serue with him, but constrained things,

Whose hearts are absent too.

Macb. Let our iust Censures

Attend the true euent, and put we on Industrious Souldierſhip.

Sey. The time approaches,
That will with due decision make vs know
What we ſhall ſay we haue, and what we owe:
Thoughts ſpeculatiue, their vnſure hopes relate,
But certaine iſſue, ſtroakes muſt arbitrate,
Towards which, aduance the warre. Exeunt marching

Scena Quinta.

Enter Macbeth, Seyton, & Souldiers, with Drum and Colours.

Macb. Hang out our Banners on the outward walls,
The Cry is ſtill, they come: our Caſtles ſtrength
Will laugh a Siege to ſcorne: Heere let them lye,
Till Famine and the Ague eate them vp:
Were they not forc'd with thoſe that ſhould be ours,
We might haue met them darefull, beard to beard,
And beate them backward home. What is that noyle?

A Cry within of Women.

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good Lord.
Macb. I haue almoſt forgot the taſte of Feares:
The time ha's bene, my ſences would haue cool'd
To heare a Night-ſhriek, and my Fell of haire
Would at a diſmall Treatiſe rowze, and ſtirre
As life were in't. I haue ſup't full with horrors, Direneſſe familiar to my ſlaughterous thoughts
Cannot once ſtart me. Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The Queene (my Lord) is dead.
Macb. She ſhould haue dy'd heereafter;
There would haue bene a time for ſuch a word:
To morrow, and to morrow, and to morrow,
Creepes in this petty pace from day to day,
To the laſt Syllable of Recorded time:
And all our yeſterdayes, haue lighted Fooles
The way to duſty death. Out, out, breefe Candle,
Life's but a walking Shadow, a poore Player,
That ſtruts and frets his houre vpon the Stage,
And then is heard no more. It is a Tale
Told by an Ideot, full of ſound and fury Signifying nothing. Enter a Meſſenger.

Macb. Gracious my Lord,
I ſhould report that which I ſay I ſaw,
But know not how to doo't.

Macb. Well, ſay ſir.
Meſ. As I did ſtand my watch vpon the Hill
I look'd toward Byrname, and anon me thought
The Wood began to moue.

Macb. Liar, and Slaue.
Meſ. Let me endure your wrath, it's be not ſo:
Within this three Mile may you ſee it coming.
I ſay, a moving Groue.

Macb. If thou ſpeak'ſt truth,
Vpon the next Tree ſhall thou hang aliue
Till Famine cling thee: If thy ſpeech be ſooth,
I care not if thou doſt for me as much.
I pull in Reſolution, and begin
To doubt th' Equiuocation of the Fiend,
That lies like truth. Feare not, till Byrname Wood
Do come to Dunſinane, and now a Wood

Comes toward Dunſinane. Arme, Arme, and out,
If this which he auouches, do's appeare,
There is nor flying hence, nor tarrying here,
I'ginne to be a-weary of the Sun,
And wiſh th'eſtate o'th' world were now yndon.
Ring the Alarum Bell, blow Winde, come wracke,
At leaſt wee'l dye with Harneſt on our backe. Exeunt

Scena Sexta.

*Drumme and Colours.
Enter Malcolm, Seyward, Macduffe, and their Army, with Boughes.*

Mal. Now neere enough:
Your leany Skreenes throw downe,
And ſhew like thoſe you are: You (worthy Vnkle)
Shall with my Coſin your right Noble Sonne
Leade our firſt Battell. Worthy Macduffe, and wee Shall take vpon's what elſe remains to do,
According to our order.

Sey. Fare you well:
Do we but finde the Tyrants power to night,
Let vs be beaten, if we cannot fight.
Macd. Make all our Trumpets ſpeak, giue th' all breath
Thoſe clamorous Harbingers of Blood, & Death. Exeunt Alarums continued.

Scena Septima.

Enter Macbeth.
Macb. They haue tied me to a ſtake, I cannot flye,
But Beare-like I muſt fight the courſe. What's he
That was not borne of Woman? Such a one
Am I to feare, or none.

Enter young Seyward.
T. Sey. What is thy name?
Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to heare it.
T. Sey. No: though thou call'ſt thy ſelfe a hotter name
Then any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.
T. Sey. The diuell himſelfe could not pronounce a Title
More hatefull to mine eare.

Macb. No: nor more fearefull.
T. Sey. Thou ly'eſt abhorred Tyrant, with my Sword
Ile proue the lye thou ſpeak'ſt.

Fight, and young Seyward ſlaine.
Macb. Thou waſt borne of woman;
But Swords I ſmile at, Weapons laugh to ſcorne, Brandiſh'd by man that's of a Woman borne. Exit.

Alarums. Enter Macduffe.
Macd. That way the noiſe is: Tyrant ſhew thy face,
If thou be'eſt ſlaine, and with no ſtroake of mine,
My Wife and Childrens Ghoſts will haunt me ſtill:
I cannot ſtrike at wretched Kernes, whoſe armes
Are hy'd to beare their Staues; either thou Macbeth,
Or elſe my Sword with an vn battered edge
I ſheath againe vndeeded. There thou ſhould'ſt be,
By this great clatter, one of greateſt note

Seemes

Seemes bruited. Let me finde him Fortune,
And more I begge not. Exit. Alarums.

Enter Malcolm and Seyward.

Sey. This way my Lord, the Caſtles gently rendred:
The Tyrants people, on both ſides do fight,
The Noble Thanes do brauely in the Warre,
The day almoſt it ſelfe profeſſes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We haue met with Foes
That ſtrike beſide vs.

Sey. Enter Sir, the Caſtle. *Exeunt. Alarums.
Enter Macbeth.*

Macb. Why ſhould I play the Roman Foole, and dye
On mine owne ſword? whiles I ſee liues, the gaſhes
Do better vpon them.

Enter Macduffe.
Macd. Turne Hell-hound, turne.
Macb. Of all men elſe I haue auoyded thee:
But get thee backe, my ſoule is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I haue no words,
My voice is in my Sword, thou bloodier Villaine
Then teares can giue thee out. Fight: Alarums.

Macb. Thou looſeſt labour,
As caſie may'ſt thou the intrenchant Ayre
With thy keene Sword impreſſe, as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable Creſts,
I beare a charmed Life, which muſt not yeeld
To one of woman borne.

Macd. Diſpaire thy Charme,
And let the Angell whom thou ſtill haſt ſeru'd
Tell thee, Macduffe was from his Mothers womb Vntimely ript.

Macb. Accurſed be that tongue that tells mee ſo;
For it hath Cow'd my better part of man:
And be theſe ſugling Fiends no more beleeu'd,
That palter with vs in a double ſence,
That keepe the word of promiſe to our eare,
And breake it to our hope. Ile not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yeeld thee Coward,
And liue to be the ſhew, and gaze o'th' time.
Wee'l haue thee, as our rarer Monſters are Painted vpon a pole, and vnder-writ,
Heere may you ſee the Tyrant.

Macb. I will not yeeld
To kiſſe the ground before young Malcolmes feet,
And to be baited with the Rabbles curſe.
Though Byrname wood be come to Dunſinane,
And thou oppoſ'd, being of no woman borne,
Yet I will try the laſt. Before my body,
I throw my watlike Shield: Lay on Macduffe,
And damnd be him, that firſt cries hold, enough.

Exeunt fighting. Alarums.

Enter Fighting, and Macbeth ſlaine.

Retreat, and Flourish. Enter with Drumme and Colours, Malcolm, Seyward, Roſſe, Thane, & Soldiers.

Mal. I would the Friends we miſſe, were ſafe arriu'd:
Sey. Some muſt go off: and yet by theſe I ſee,
So great a day as this is cheapely bought.

Mal. Macduffe is miſſing, and your Noble Sonne.
Roſſe. Your ſon my Lord, ha's paid a ſouldiers debt,
He onely liu'd but till he was a man,
The which no ſooner had his Proweſſe confirm'd
In the vnſhinking ſtation where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd.

Sey. Then he is dead?
Roſſe. I, and brought off the field: your cauſe of ſorrow
Muſt not be meaſur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Sey. Had he his hurts before?

Roſſe. I, on the Front.

Sey. Why then, Gods Soldier be he:

Had I as many Sonnes, as I haue haire,

I would not wiſh them to a fairer death:

And ſo his Knell is knoll'd.

Mal. Hee's worth more ſorrow,

And that Ile ſpend for him.

Sey. He's worth no more,

They ſay he parted well, and paid his ſcore,

And ſo God be with him. Here comes new comfort.

Enter Macduffe, with Macbeths head.

Macd. Haile King, for ſo thou art.

Behold where ſtands

Th' Vſurpers curſed head: the time is free:

I ſee thee compaſt with thy Kingdomes Pearle,

That ſpeake my ſalutation in their minds:

Whoſe voyces I deſire alowd with mine.

Haile King of Scotland.

All. Haile King of Scotland. Flouriſh.

Mal. We ſhall not ſpend a large expence of time,

Before we reckon with your ſeuerrall Ioues,

And make vs euen with you. My Thanes and Kinſmen

Henceforth be Earles, the firſt that euer Scotland

In ſuch an Honor nam'd: What's more to do,

Which would be planted newly with the time,

As calling home our exil'd Friends abroad,

That ſled the Snares of watchfull Tyranny,

Producing forth the cruell Miniſters

Of this dead Butcher, and his Fiend-like Queene;

Who(as 'tis thought) by ſelfe and violent hands,

Tooke off her life. This and what needfull elſe

That call's vpon vs, by the Grace of Grace,

We will performe in meaſure, time, and place:

So thanks to all at once, and to each one,

Whom we inuite, to ſee vs Crown'd at Scone.

Flouriſh. Exeunt Omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF HAMLET, Prince of Denmarke.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Barnardo and Francisco two Centinels.

Barnardo.
Ho's there?
Fran. Nay answer me: Stand & unfold
your selfe.
Bar. Long live the King.
Fran. Barnardo?
Bar. He.
Fran. You come most carefully vpon your houre.
Bar. 'Tis now strook twelue, get thee to bed Francisco.
Fran. For this releefe much thanks: 'Tis bitter cold,
And I am sicke at heart.
Barn. Haue you had quiet Guard?
Fran. Not a Mouse stirring.
Barn. Well, goodnight. If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus, the Riuals of my Watch, bid them make hast.
Enter Horatio and Marcellus.
Fran. I thinke I heare them. Stand: who's there?
Hor. Friends to this ground.
Mar. And Leige-men to the Dane.
Fran. Giue you good night.
Mar. O farwel honest Soldier, who hath relieu'd you?
Fra. Barnardo ha's my place: giue you goodnight.
Exit Fran.
Mar. Holla Barnardo.
Bar. Say, what is Horatio there?
Hor. A peece of him.
Bar. Welcome Horatio, welcome good Marcellus.
Mar. What, ha's this thing appear'd againe to night.
Bar. I haue scene nothing.
Mar. Horatio saies, 'tis but our Fantasie,
And will not let beleefe take hold of him
Touching this dreaded fight, twice scene of vs,
Therefore I haue intreated him along
With vs, to watch the minutes of this Night,
That if againe this Apparition come,
He may approue our eyes, and speake to it.
Hor. Tush, tush, 'twill not appeare.
Bar. Sit downe a while,
And let vs once againe assaile your eares,
That are so fortified against our Story,
What we two Nightes haue scene.
Hor. Well, sit we downe,
And let vs heare Barnardo speake of this.
Barn. Last night of all,
When yond same Starre that's Westward from the Pole
Had made his course t'illumine that part of Heauen

Where now it burnes, Marcellus and my selfe,
The Bell then beating one.
Enter the Ghost.
Mar. Peace, breake thee of:
Looke where it comes againe.
Barn. In the same figure, like the King that's dead.
Mar. Thou art a Scholler; speake to it Horatio.
Barn. Lookes it not like the King? Marke it Horatio.
Hor. Most like: It harrowes me with fear & wonder.
Barn. It would be spoke too.
Mar. Question it Horatio.
Hor. What art thou that vsurp'st this time of night,
Together with that Faire and Warlike forme
In which the Maiesty of buried Denmarke
Did sometimes march: By Heauen I charge thee speake.
Mar. It is offended.
Barn. See, it stalkes away.
Hor. Stay: speake; speake: I Charge thee, speake.
Exit the Ghost.
Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.
Barn. How now Horatio? You tremble & look pale:
Is not this something more then Fantasie?
What thinke you on't?
Hor. Before my God, I might not this beleene
Without the sensible and true enouch
Of mine owne eyes.
Mar. Is it not like the King?
Hor. As thou art to thy selfe,
Such was the very Armour he had on,
When th' Ambitious Norway combatted:
So frownd'd he once, when in an angry parle
He smot the fledged Pollax on the Ice.
'Tis strange.
Mar. Thus twice before, and iust at this dead houre,
With Martiall stalke, hath he gone by our Watch.
Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know not:
But in the grosse and scope of my Opinion,
This boades some strange eruption to our State.
Mar. Good now sit downe, & tell me he that knowes
Why this same strict and most obseruant Watch,
So nightly toyles the subiect of the Land,
And why such dayly Cast of Brazon Cannon
And Forraigne Mart for Implements of warre:
Why such impresse of Ship-wrights, whose sore Taske
Do's not diuide the Sunday from the weeke,
What might be toward, that this sweety hant
Doth make the Night ioynt-Labourer with the day:
Who is't that can informe me?
Hor. That can I,

The Tragedie of Hamlet.

At least the whisper goes so: Our last King,
Whose Image euen but now appear'd to vs,
Was (as you know) by Fortinbras of Norway,
(Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate Pride)
Dar'd to the Combate. In which, our Valiant Hamlet,
(For so this side of our knowne world esteem'd him)
Did slay this Fortinbras: who by a Seal'd Compact,
Well ratified by Law, and Heraldrie,
Did forfeite (with his life) all those his Lands
Which he stood seiz'd on, to the Conqueror:
Against the which, a Moity competent
Was gaged by our King: which had return'd
To the Inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he bin Vanquisher, as by the same Cou'nant
And carriage of the Article designe.
His fell to Hamlet. Now fir, young Fortinbras,
Of vnimproued Mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, heere and there,
Sharck'd vp a List of Landleste Resolutes,
For Foode and Diet, to some Enterprize
That hath a stomacke in't: which is no other
(And it doth well appeare vnto our State)
But to recouer of vs by strong hand
Add termes Compulsatiue, those foresaid Lands
Soby his Father lost: and this (I take it)
Is the maine Motiue of our Preparations,
The Sourse of this our Watch, and the cheefe head
Of this post-hast, and Romage in the Land.

Enter Ghost againe.
But soft, behold: Loe, where it comes againe:
He crosse it, though it blast me. Stay illusion:
If thou hast any sound, or vse of Voyce,
Speake to me. If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me; speake to me.
If thou art priuy to thy Countries Fate
(Which happily foreknowing may auoyd) Oh speake.
Or, if thou hast vp-hoorded in thy life
Extorted Treasure in the wombe of Earth,
(For which, they say, you Spirits oft walke in death)
Speake of it. Stay, and speake. Stop it Marcellus.
Mar. Shall I strike at it with my Partizan?
Hor. Do, if it will not stand.
Barn. 'Tis heere.
Hor. 'Tis heere.
Mar. 'Tis gone. Exit Ghost.
We do it wrong, being so Maiesticall
To offer it the shew of Violence,
For it is as the Ayre, invulnerable,
And our vaine blowes, malicious Mockery.
Barn. It was about to speake, when the Cocke crew.
Hor. And then it started, like a guilty thing
Vpon a fearfull Summons. I haue heard,
The Cocke that is the Trumper to the day,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding Throate
Awake the God of Day: and at his warning,
Whether in Sea, or Fire, in Earth, or Ayre,
Th'extranagant, and erring Spirit, hies
To his Confinde. And of the truth heerein,
This present Obiect made probation.
Mar. It faded on the crowing of the Cocke.
Some sayes, that euer gainst that Season comes Wherein our Sauious Birth is celebrated,
The Bird of Dawning singeth all night long:
And then (they say) no Spirit can walke abroad,
The nights are wholsome, then no Planets strike,
No Faery talkes, nor Witch hath power to Charme:

So hallow'd, and so gracious is the time.
Hor. So haue I heard, and do in part beleene it:
But looke, the Morne in Russet mantle clad,
Walkes o're the dew of yon high Easterne Hill,
Breake we our Watch vp, and by my aduice
Let vs impart what we haue scene to night
Vnto yong Hamlet. For vpon my life,
This Spirit dumbe to vs, will speake to him:
Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needfull in our Loues, fitting our Duty?
Mar. Let do't I pray, and I this morning know Where we shall finde him most conueniently. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Claudius King of Denmarke, Gertrude the Queene,
Hamlet, Polonius, Laertes, and his Sister O- phelia, Lords & Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our deere Brothers death
The memory be Greene: and that it vs befitted
To beare our hearts in Greefe, and our whole Kingdome
To be contracted in one brow of woe:
Yet so farre hath Discretion fought with Nature,
That we with wisest sorrow thinke on him,
Together with remembrance of our selues.
Therefore our sometimes Sister, now our Queen,
Th'Imperiall Ioyntresse of this warlike State,
Haue we, as 'twere, with a defeated ioy,
With one Auspicious, and one Dropping eye,
With mirth in Funerall, and with Dirge in Marriage,
In equall Scale weighing Delight and Dole
Taken to Wife; nor haue we heerein barr'd
Your better Wisedomes, which haue freely gone
With this affaire along, for all our Thankses.
Now followes, that you know young Fortinbras,
Holding a weake supposall of our worth;
Or thinking by our late deere Brothers death,
Our State to be disioynt, and out of Frame,
Collegued with the dreame of his Aduantages;
He hath not say'd to pester vs with Message,
Importing the surrender of those Lands
Lost by his Father: with all Bonds of Law
To our most valiant Brother. So much for him.
Enter Voltemand and Cornelius.
Now for our selfe, and for this time of meeting
Thus much the businesse is. We haue heere writ
To Norway, Vncle of young Fortinbras,
Who Impotent and Bedrid, scarcely heares
Of this his Nephewes purpose, to suppress
His further gate heerein. In that the Leuiues,
The Lifts, and full proportions are all made
Out of his subiect: and we heere dispatch
You good Cornelius, and you Voltemand,
For bearing of this greeting to old Norway,
Giuing to you no further personall power
To businesse with the King, more then the scope
Of these dilated Articles allow:
Farewell and let your hast commend your duty.
Volt. In that, and all things, will we shew our duty.
King. We doubt it nothing, heartily farewell.
Exit Voltemand and Cornelius.
And now Laertes, what's the newes with you?

You

You told vs of some suite. What is't Laertes?
You cannot speake of Reason to the Dane,
And loose your voyce. What would'st thou beg Laertes?
That shall not be my Offer, nor thy Asking?
The Head is not more Native to the Heart,
The Hand more Instrumentall to the Mouth,
Then is the Throne of Denmarke to thy Father.
What would'st thou haue Laertes?

Laer. Dread my Lord,
Your leaue and fauour to returne to France,
From whence, though willingly I came to Denmarke
To shew my duty in your Coronation,
Yet now I must confesse, that duty done,
My thoughts and wishes bend againe towards France,
And bow them to your gracious leaue and pardon.

King. Haue you your Fathers leaue?
What sayes Polonius?

Pol. He hath my Lord;

I do beseech you giue him leaue to go.

King. Take thy faire houre Laertes, time be thine,
And thy best graces spend it at thy will:

But now my Cofin Hamlet, and my Sonne?

Ham. A little more then kin, and lesse then kinde.

King. How is it that the Clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so my Lord, I am too much i'th Sun.

Queen. Good Hamlet cast thy nightly colour off,
And let thine eye looke like a Friend on Denmarke.

Do not for euer with thy veyled lids

Seeke for thy Noble Father in the dust;

Thou know'st 'tis common, all that liues must dye,
Passing through Nature, to Eternity.

Ham. I Madam, it is common.

Queen. If it be;

Why seemes it so particular with thee.

Ham. Seemes Madam? Nay, it is: I know not Seemes:

'Tis not alone my Inky Cloake (good Mother)
Nor Customary suites of solemne Blacke,
Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
No, nor the fruitfull Riuer in the Eye,
Nor the delected hauiour of the Visage,
Together with all Formes, Moods, shewes of Griefe,
That can denote me truly. These indeed Seeme,
For they are actions that a man might play;
But I haue that Within, which passeth show;
These, but the Trappings, and the Suites of woe.

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable

In your Nature Hamlet,

To giue these mourning duties to your Father:

But you must know, your Father lost a Father,

That Father lost, lost his, and the Surruiner bound

In filiall Obligation, for some terme

To do obsequious Sorrow. But to perseuer

In obdurate Condolement, is a course

Of impious stubbornnesse. 'Tis vmanly grieffe,

It shewes a will most incorrect to Heauen,

A Heart vnfortified, a Minde impatient,

An Vnderstanding simple, and vnchool'd:

For, what we know must be, and is as common

As any the most vulgar thing to sence,

Why should we in our peeuish Opposition

Take it to heart? 'Tis a fault to Heauen,

A fault against the Dead, a fault to Nature,

To Reason most absurd, whose common Theame

Is death of Fathers, and who still hath cried,

From the first Coarie, till he that dyed to day,

This must be so. We pray you throw to earth

This vnpreuayling woe, and thinke of vs
As of a Father; For let the world take note,
You are the most immediate to our Throne,
And with no lesse Nobility of Loue,
Then that which deere'st Father beares his Sonne,
Do I impart towards you. For your intent
In going backe to Schoole in Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire:

And we beseech you, bend you to remaine
Heere in the cheere and comfort of our eye,
Our cheefest Courtier Cofin, and our Sonne.

La. Let not thy Mother lose her Prayers Hamlet;
I prythee stay with vs, go not to Wittenberg.

Ham. I shall in all my best

Obeey you Madam.

King. Why 'tis a louing, and a faire Reply,
Be as our selfe in Denmarke. Madam come,

This gentle and vnforc'd accord of Hamlet

Sits smiling to my heart; in grace whereof,

No iocund health that Denmarke drinks to day,

But the great Cannon to the Clouds shall tell,

And the Kings Rounce, the Heauens shall bruite againe,

Respeaking earthly Thunder. Come away. Exeunt

Manet Hamlet.

Ham. Oh that this too too solid Flesh, would melt,
Thaw, and resolue it selfe into a Dew:

Or that the Euerlasting had not fixt

His Cannon 'gainst Selfe-flaughter. O God, O God!

How weary, stale, flat, and vnprofitable

Seemes to me all the vses of this world?

Fie on't! Oh fie, fie, 'tis an vnweeded Garden

That growes to Seed: Things rank, and grosse in Nature

Possesse it meereely. That it should come to this:

But two months dead: Nay, not so much; not two,

So excellent a King, that was to this

Hyperion to a Satyre: so louing to my Mother,

That he might not beteene the windes of heauen

Visit her face too roughly. Heauen and Earth

Must I remember: why she would hang on him,

As if increase of Appetite had growne

By what it fed on; and yet within a month?

Let me not thinke on't: Frailty, thy name is woman.

A little Month, or ere those shooes were old,

With which she followed my poore Fathers body

Like Niobe, all teares. Why she, even she,

(O Heauen! A beast that wants discourse of Reason

Would haue mourn'd longer) married with mine Vnkle,

My Fathers Brother: but no more like my Father,

Then I to Hercules. Within a Moneth?

Ere yet the salt of most vnrighteous Teares

Had left the flushing of her gauled eyes,

She married. O most wicked speed, to post

With such dexterity to incestuous sheets:

It is not, nor it cannot come to good.

But breake my heart, for I must hold my tongue.

Enter Horatio, Barnard, and Marcellus.

Hor. Haile to your Lordship.

Ham. I am glad to see you well:

Horatio, or I do forget my selfe.

Hor. The same my Lord,

And your poore Seruant euer.

Ham. Sir my good friend,

Ile change that name with you;

And what make you from Wittenberg Horatio?

Marcellus.

Mar. My good Lord.

Ham. I am very glad to see you: good euen Sir.

But what in faith make you from Wittenberge?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my Lord.

Ham. I would not haue your Enemy say so;

Nor shall you doe mine care that violence,

To make it truster of your owne report

Against your selfe. I know you are no Truant:

But what is your affaire in Essenour?

Wee'l teach you to drinke deepe, ere you depart.

Hor. My Lord, I came to see your Fathers Funerall.

Ham. I pray thee doe not mock me (fellow Student)

I thinke it was to see my Mothers Wedding.

Ham. Indeed my Lord, it followed hard vpon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift Horatio: the Funerall Bakt-meats

Did coldly furnish forth the Marriage Tables;

Would I had met my dearest foe in heauen,

Ere I had euer seene that day Horatio.

My father, methinks I see my father.

Hor. Oh where my Lord?

Ham. In my minds eye (Horatio)

Hor. I saw him once; he was a goodly King.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all:

I shall not look vpon him like againe.

Hor. My Lord, I thinke I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw? Who?

Hor. My Lord, the King your Father,

Ham. The King my Father?

Hor. Season your admiration for a while

With an attent eare; till I may deliuer

Vpon the witness of these Gentlemen,

This maruell to you.

Ham. For Heauens loue let me heare.

Hor. Two nights together, had these Gentlemen

(Marcellus and Barnardo) on their Watch

In the dead wast and middle of the night

Beene thus encountered. A figure like your Father,

Ar'd at all points exactly, Cap a Pe,

Appeares before them, and with solemne march

Goes slow and stately: By them thrice he walkt,

By their opprest and feare-surprized eyes,

Within his Truncheons lengths whilst they bestid

Almost to Ielly with the Act of feare,

Stand dumbe and speake not to him. This to me

In dreadfull secrecie impart they did,

And I with them the third Night kept the Watch,

Whereas they had deliuer'd both in time,

Forme of the thing; each word made true and good,

The Apparition comes. I knew your Father:

These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My Lord, vpon the platforme where we watcht.

Ham. Did you not speake to it?

Hor. My Lord, I did;

But answer made it none: yet once me thought

It lifted vp it head, and did addresse

It selfe to motion, like as it would speake:

But euen then, the Morning Cocke crew lowd;

And at the found it shrunk in hast away,

And vanish from our sight.

Ham. Tis very strange.

Hor. As I doe liue my honour'd Lord 'tis true;

And we did thinke it writ downe in our duty

To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed Sirs; but this troubles me.

Hold you the watch to Night?

Both. We doe my Lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

Both. Arm'd, my Lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

Both. My Lord, from head to foote.

Ham. Then saw you not his face?

Hor. O yes, my Lord, he wore his Beauer vp.

Ham. What, lookt he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more in sorrow then in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay very pale.

Ham. And fixt his eyes vpon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had bene there.

Hor. It would haue much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like, very like: staid it long?

Hor. While one with moderate hast might tell a hun-der longer, longer.

Ham. Not when I saw't.

Ham. His Beard was grisly? no.

Hor. It was, as I haue seene it in his life,

A Sable Silver'd. (gaine)

Ham. Ile watch to Night; perchance 'twill wake a

Hor. I warrant you it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble Fathers person,

Ile speake to it, though Hell it selfe should gape

And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,

If you haue hitherto conceald this fight,

Let it bee treble in your silence still:

And whatsoeuer els shall hap to night,

Giue it an vnderstanding but no tongue;

I will requite your loues; so, fare ye well:

Vpon the Platforme twixt eleuen and twelue,

Ile visit you. Exeunt.

All. Our duty to your Honour.

Ham. Your loue, as mine to you: farewell.

My Fathers Spirit in Armes? All is not well:

I doubt some foule play: would the Night were come;

Till then sit still my foule; foule deeds will rise,

Though all the earth orewhelm them to mens eies. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessities are imbarke't; Farewell:

And Sister, as the Winds giue Benefit,

And Conuoy is assistant; doe not sleepe,

But let me heare from you.

Ophel. Doe you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his fauours,

Hold it a fashion and a toy in Bloud;

A Violet in the youth of Primy Nature;

Froward, not permanent; sweet not lasting

The suppliance of a minute? No more.

Ophel. No more but so.

Laer. Thinke it no more:

For nature cresant does not grow alone,

In thewes and Bulke: but as his Temple waxes,

The inward seruice of the Minde and Soule

Growes wide withall. Perhaps he loues you now,

And now no foyle nor cautell doth besmerch

The vertue of his feare: but you must feare

His

His greatnesse weigh'd, his will is not his owne;
For hee himselfe is subiect to his Birth:
Hee may not, as vnallued persons doe,
Carue for himselfe; for, on his choyce depends
The sanctity and health of the weole State.
And therefore must his choyce be circumscrib'd
Vnto the voyce and yeelding of that Body,
Whereof he is the Head. Then if he sayes he loues you,
It fits your wisdome so farre to beleue it;
As he in his peculiar Sect and force
May giue his saying deed: which is no further,
Then the maine voyce of Denmarke goes withall.
Then weigh what losse your Honour may sustaine,
If with too credent eare you list his Songs;
Or lose your Heart; or your chaste Treasure open
To his vnmaistred importunity.
Feare it Ophelia, feare it my deare Sister,
And keepe within the reare of your Affection;
Out of the shot and danger of Desire.
The charest Maid is Prodigall enough,
If she vnmaske her beauty to the Moone:
Vertue it selfe escapes not calumnious stroakes,
The Canker Galls, the Infants of the Spring
Too oft before the buttons be disclos'd,
And in the Morne and liquid dew of Youth,
Contagious blastments are most imminent.
Be wary then, best safety lies in feare;
Youth to it selfe rebels, though none else neere.
Oph. I shall th' effect of this good Lesson keepe,
As watchmen to my heart: but good my Brother
Doe not as some vngracious Pastors doe,
Shew me the steepe and thorny way to Heauen;
Whilst like a puffed and recklesse Libertine
Himselfe, the Primrose path of dalliance treads,
And reaks not his owne reade.

Laer. Oh, feare me not.

Enter Polonius.

I stay too long; but here my Father comes:
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles vpon a second leaue.
Polon. Yet heere Laertes? Aboord, aboard for shame,
The winde sits in the shoulder of your saile,
And you are staid for there: my blessing with you;
And these few Precepts in thy memory,
See thou Character. Giue thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any vnproportion'd thought his Act:
Be thou familiar; but by no means vulgar:
The friends thou hast, and their adoption trade,
Grapple them to thy Soule, with hookes of Steele:
But doe not dull thy palme, with entertainment
Of each vncharitable vnstedg'd Comrade. Beware
Of entrance to a quarrell: but being in Bear't that th' opposed may beware of thee.
Giue euery man thine eare; but few thy voyce:
Take each mans censure; but reserve thy iudgement:
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy;
But not exprest in fancie; rich, not gawdie:
For the Apparell oft proclaimes the man.
And they in France of the best rank and station,
Are of a most select and generous cheff in that.
Neither a borrower, nor a lender be;
For lone oft loses both it selfe and friend;
And borrowing dulls the edge of Husbandry.
This about all, to thine owne selfe be true:
And it must follow, as the Night the Day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Farewell: my Blessing season this in thee.

Laer. Most humbly doe I take my leaue, my Lord.

Polon. The time inuites you, goe, your seruants tend.

Laer. Farewell Ophelia, and remember well
What I haue said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lockt,
And you your selfe shall keepe the key of it.

Laer. Farewell.

Polon. What ist Ophelia he hath said to you? Exit Laer.

Oph. So please you, something touching the L. Hamlet.
Polon. Marry, well bethought:

'Tis told me he hath very oft of late
Giuen priuate time to you; and you your selfe
Haue of your audience beene most free and bounteous.
If it be so, as to tis put on me;
And that in way of caution: I must tell you,
You doe not vnderstand your selfe so cleerely,
As it behoues my Daughter, and your Honour.
What is betweene you, giue me vp the truth?
Oph. He hath my Lord of late, made many tenders
Of his affection to me.

Polon. Affection, puh. You speake like a Greene Girl,
Vnsifted in such perillous Circumstance.

Doe you beleue his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my Lord, what I should thinke.

Polon. Marry Ile teach you; thinke your selfe a Baby,
That you haue tane his tenders for true pay,

Which are not farling. Tender your selfe more dearly;
Or not to crack the winde of the poore Phrase,

Roaming it thus, you'll tender me a foole.

Oph. My Lord, he hath importun'd me with loue,
In honourable fashion.

Polon. I, fashion you may call it, go too, go too.

Oph. And hath giuen countenance to his speech,
My Lord, with all the vowes of Heauen.

Polon. I, Springes to catch Woodcocks. I doe know
When the Bloud burnes, how Prodigall the Soule

Giues the tongue vowes: these blazes, Daughter,
Giuing more light then heat; extind in both,

Euen in their promise, as it is a making;
You must not take for fire. For this time Daughter,

Be somewhat feaster of your Maiden presence;
Set your entreatments at a higher rate,

Then a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet,
Beleue so much in him, that he is young,

And with a larger tether may he walke,
Then may be giuen you. In few, Ophelia,

Do not beleue his vowes; for they are Broakers,
Not of the eye, which their Inuestments show:

But meere implorators of vnholly Sutes,
Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,

The better to beguile. This is for all:
I would not, in plaine tearmes, from this time forth,

Haue you so slander any moment leisure,
As to giue words or talke with the Lord Hamlet:

Looke too't, I charge you; come your wayes.

Oph. I shall obey my Lord. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, Marcellus.

Ham. The Ayre bites shrewdly: is it very cold?

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager ayre.

Ham. What hower now?

Hor. I thinke it lacks of twelue.

Mar. No, it is strooke.

Hor. Indeed I heard it not: then it drawes neere the Wherein the Spirit held his wont to walke.

What

What does this meane my Lord?

Ham. The King doth wake to night, and takes his Keepes wassels and the swaggering vpspring reeles,

And as he dreines his draughts of Rensh downe,
The kettle Drum and Trumpet thus Bray out

The triumph of his Pledge.

Horat. Is it a custome?

Ham. I marry ist;
And to my mind, though I am native heere,

And to the manner borne: It is a Custome
More honour'd in the breach, then the obseruance.

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Looke my Lord, it comes.

Ham. Angels and Ministers of Grace defend vs:
Be thou a Spirit of health or Goblin damn'd,

Bring with thee ayres from Heauen, or blasts from Hell,
Be thy euents wicked or charitable,

Thou com'st in such a questionable shape
That I will speake to thee, Ile call thee Hamlet,

King, Father, Royall Dane: Oh, oh, answer me,
Let me not burst in Ignorance; but tell

Why thy Canoniz'd bones Heatf'd in death,
Haue burst their cerments, why the Sepulcher

Wherein we saw thee quietly enurn'd,
Hath op'd his ponderous and Marble iawes,

To cast thee vp againe? What may this meane?
That thou dead Coarse againe in compleat Steele,

Reuistest thus the glimpse of the Moone,
Making Night hideous? And we fooles of Nature,

So horribly to shake our disposition,
With thoughts beyond thee; reaches of our Soules,

Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we doe?
Ghost beckens Hamlet.

Hor. It beckons you to goe away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire

To you alone.

Mar. Looke with what courteous action
It waits you to a more remoued ground:

But doe not goe with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speake; then will I follow it.

Hor. Doe not my Lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the feare?
I doe not set my life at a pins fee;

And for my Soule, what can it doe to that?
Being a thing immortall as it selfe:

It waues me forth againe; Ile follow it.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the Flood my Lord?
Or to the dreadfull Sonnet of the Cliffe,

That beetles o're his base into the Sea,
And there assumes some other horrible forme,

Which might deprive your Soueraignty of Reason,
And draw you into madnesse thinke of it?

Ham. It waits me still: goe on, Ile follow thee.

Mar. You shall not goe my Lord.

Ham. Hold off your hand.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not goe.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty Artire in this body,

As hardy as the Nemean Lions nerue:
Still am I call'd? Vnhand me Gentlemen:

By Heau'n, Ile make a Ghost of him that lets me:
I say away, goe on, Ile follow thee.

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow; 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Haue after, to what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the State of Denmarke.

Hor. Heauen will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let's follow him. Exeunt.

Enter Ghost and Hamlet. (then)

Ham. Where wilt thou lead me? speake; Ile go no fur.

Gho. Marke me.

Ham. I will.

Gho. My hower is almost come,

When I to sulphurous and tormenting Flames
Must render vp my selfe.

Ham. Alas poore Ghost.

Gho. Ritty me not, but lend thy serious hearing
To what I shall vnfold.

Ham. Speake, I am bound to heare.

Gho. So art thou to reuenge, when thou shalt heare.

Ham. What?

Gho. I am thy Fathers Spirit,

Doom'd for a certaine terme to walke the night;

And for the day confin'd to fast in Fiers,

Till the foule crimes done in my dayes of Nature
Are burnt and purg'd away? But that I am forbid

To tell the secrets of my Prison-House;

I could a Tale vnfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow vp thy soule, freeze thy young blood;

Make thy two eyes like Starres, start from their Spheres;

Thy knotty and combined locks to part;

And each particular haire to stand an end;

Like Quilles vpon the fretfull Porpentine:

But this eternall blason must not be

To eares of flesh and blood; list Hamlet, oh list, forsooth

If thou didst euer thy deare Father loue,

Ham. Oh Heauen!

Gho. Reuenge his soule and most vnnaturall Murther.

Ham. Murther?

Gho. Murther most foule, as in the best it is;

But this most foule, strange, and vnnaturall,

Ham. Hah, ha! me to know it,

That with wings as swift

As meditation, or the thoughts of Loue;

May sweepe to my Reuenge.

Gho. I finde thee apt,

And duller should'st thou be then the fat weeds

That rot'st it selfe in case, on Lettie Wharfe;

Would'st thou not stire in this. Now Hamlet heare:
It's giuen out, that sleeping in mine Orchard,

A Serpent stung me: so the whole care of Denmarke,
Is by a forged proceesse of my death

Rankly abus'd: But know thou Noble youth,
The Serpent that did sting thy Fathers life,
Now weares his Crowne.

Ham. O my Propheticke soule: mine Vncle?

Gho. I that incestuous, that adulterate Beast
With witchcraft of his wits, bath Traitorous guits,
Oh wicked Wit, and Gifts, that haue the power
So to seduce? Won to to this shamefull Lust
The will of my most seeming vertuous Queene:
Oh Hamlet, what a falling off was there,
From me, whose lone was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand, euen with the Vow
I made to her in Marriage; and to decline
Vpon a wretch, whose Naturall gifts were poore
To those of mine. But Vertue, as it neuer wil be moued,
Though Lewdnesse court it in a shape of Heauen:
So Lust, though to a radiant Angell link'd,
Will fare it selfe in a Celestiall bed, & prey on Garbage.

O o

But

But soft, me thinks I sent the Mornings Ayre;
Briefe let me be: Sleeping within mine Orchard,
My custome alwayes in the afternoone;
Vpon my secure hower thy Vncle stole
With iuyce of curfed Hebenon in a Violl,
And in the Porches of mine eares did poure
The leaperous Distilment; whose effect
Holds such an enmity with bloud of Man,
That swift as Quick-siluer, it courses through
The naturall Gates and Allies of the Body;
And with a sodaine vigour it doth possesse
And curd, like Aygre droppings into Milke,
The thin and wholsome blood: so did it mine;
And a most instant Tetter bak'd about,
Most Lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth Body.
Thus was I, sleeping, by a Brothers hand,
Of Life, of Crowne, and Queene at once dispatcht;
Cut off even in the Blossomes of my Sinne,
Vnhouzzled, disappointed, vnnaneld,
No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head;
Oh horrible, Oh horrible, most horrible:
If thou hast nature in thee beare it not;
Let not the Royall Bed of Denmarke be
A Couch for Luxury and damned Incest.
But howeouer thou pursuest this Act,
Taint not thy mind; nor let thy Soule contriue
Against thy Mother ought; leaue her to heauen,
And to those Thornes that in her bosome lodge,
To pricke and sting her. Fare thee well at once;
The Glow-worme shewes the Martine to be neere,
And gins to pale his vneffectuall Fire:
Adue, adue, Hamlet: remember me. Exit.

Ham. Oh all you host of Heauen! Oh Earth; what els?
And shall I couple Hell? Oh fie: hold my heart;
And you my sinewes, grow not instant Old;
But beare me stiffely vp: Remember thee?
I, thou poore Ghost, while memory holds a seate
In this distracted Globe: Remember thee?
Yea, from the Table of my Memory,
Ile wipe away all triuall fond Records,
All sawes of Bookes, all formes, all presures past,
That youth and obseruation coppied there;
And thy Commandment all alone shall liue
Within the Booke and Volume of my Braine,
Vnmixt with baser matter; yes, yes, by Heauen:
Oh most pernicious woman!
Oh Villaine, Villaine, smiling damned Villaine!
My Tables, my Tables; meet it is I set it downe,
That one may smile, and smile and be a Villaine;
At least I'm sure it may be so in Denmarke;
So Vncle there you are: now to my word;
It is; Adue, Adue, Remember me: I haue sworn't.

Hor. & Mar. within. My Lord, my Lord,

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Mar. Lord Hamlet.

Hor. Heauen secure him.

Mar. So be it.

Hor. Illo, ho, ho, my Lord.

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy; come bird, come.

Mar. How is't my Noble Lord?

Hor. What newes, my Lord?

Ham. Oh wonderfull!

Hor. Good my Lord tell it.

Ham. No you're eale it.

Hor. Not I, my Lord, by Heauen.

Mar. Nor I, my Lord.

Ham. How say you then, would heart of man once (think it)
But you'll be secret?

Both. I, by Heau'n, my Lord.

Ham. There's nere a villaine dwelling in all Denmarke
But hee's an arrant knaue.

Hor. There needs no Ghost my Lord, come from the Graue, to tell vs this.

Ham. Why right, you are i'th' right;
And so, without more circumstance at all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands, and part:
You, as your busines and desires shall point you:
For euery man ha's businesse and desire,
Such as it is: and for mine owne poore part,
Looke you, Ile goe pray.

Hor. These are but wild and hurling words, my Lord,
Ham. I'm sorry they offend you heartily:
Yes faith heartily.

Hor. There's no offence my Lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is my Lord,
And much offence too, touching this Vision heere:
It is an honest Ghost, that let me tell you:
For your desire to know what is betweene vs,
O'remaster't as you may. And now good friends,
As you are Friends, Schollers and Soldiers,
Giue me one poore request.

Hor. What is't my Lord? we will.

Ham. Neuer make known what you haue seen to night.

Both. My Lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but swear't.

Hor. In faith my Lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I my Lord: in faith.

Ham. Vpon my sword.

Marcell. We haue sworn my Lord already.

Ham. Indeed, vpon my sword, indeed.

Gho. Swear. Ghost cries vnder the Stage.

Ham. Ah ha boy, sayest thou so. Art thou there true-penny? Come one you here this fellow in the felleredged Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the Oath my Lord.

Ham. Neuer to speake of this that you haue scene,
Swear by my sword.

Gho. Swear.

Ham. Hic & vbique? Then wee'l shift for grownd,
Come hither Gentlemen,
And lay your hands againe vpon my sword,
Neuer to speake of this that you haue heard:
Swear by my sword.

Gho. Swear. (fast)

Ham. Well said old Mole, can't worke i'th' ground so
A worthy Pioneer, once more remoue good friends.

Hor. Oh day and night, but this is wondrous strange.

Ham. And therefore as a stranger giue it welcome.
There are more things in Heauen and Earth, Horatio,
Then are dream't of in our Philosophy. But come,
Here as before, neuer so helpe you mercy,
How strange or odde so ere I beare my selfe;
(As I perchance heereafter shall thinke meet
To put an Anticke disposition on:)
That you at such time seeing me, neuer shall
With Armes encombred thus, or thus, head shake;
Or by pronouncing of some doubtful Phrase;
As 'twere a thing a little soild i'th' working; (sound,
Or if we list to speake; or there be and if there might,
Or such ambiguous giuing out to note,

That

That you know ought of me; this not to doe:
So grace and mercy at your most neede helpe you:
Swear.

Ghost. Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest perturbed Spirit: So Gentlemen,
With all my loue I doe commend me to you;
And what so poore a man as Hamlet is,
May doe't expresse his loue and friending to you,
God willing shall not lacke: let vs goe in together,
And fill your fingers on your lippes I pray,
The time is out of ioynt: Oh curfed spight,
That euer I was borne to set it right.
Nay, come let's goe together. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Polonius and Reynoldo.

Polon. Giue him his money, and these notes Reynoldo.

Reynol. I will my Lord.

Polon. You shall doe maruels wisely: good Reynoldo,
Before you visite him you make inquiry
Of his behaviour.

Reynol. My Lord, I did intend it.

Polon. Marty, well said;

Very well said. Looke you Sir,

Enquire me first what Danskers are in Paris;
And how, and who; what means; and where they keepe;
What company, at what expence: and finding
By this encompassement and drift of question,
That they doe know my sonne: Come you more neerer
Then your particular demands will touch it,
Take you as 'twere some distant knowledge of him,
And thus I know his father and his friends,
And in part him. Doe you marke this Reynoldo?

Reynol. I, very well my Lord.

Polon. And in part him, but you may say not well;
But it's be hee I meane, hees very wilde;
Addicted so and so; and there put on him
What forgeries you please: marry, none so ranke,
As may dishonour him; take heed of that;
But Sir, such wanton, wild, and vsuall slips,
As are Companions noted and most knowne
To youth and liberty.

Reynol. As gaming my Lord.

Polon. I, or drinking, fencing, swearing,
Quarrelling, drabbing. You may goe so farre.

Reynol. My Lord that would dishonour him.

Polon. Faith no, as you may season it in the charge;

You must not put another scandall on him,
That hee is open to Incontinencie;
That's not my meaning; but breath his faults so quaintly,
That they may seeme the chaires of liberty;
The flash and out-broke of a fiery minde;
A saugenes in vneclaim'd bloud of generall assault;

Reynol. But my good Lord.

Polon. Wherefore should you doe this?

Reynol. I my Lord, I would know that.

Polon. Marty Sir, heere's my drift,
And I believe it is a fetch of warrant:
You laying these slight flatteryes on my Sonne,
As 'twere a thing a little soild i'th' working; (sound,
Marke you your party in conuulse; him you would Hauing euer scene. In the prenominate crimes,

The youth you breath of guilty, be assur'd
He closes with you in this consequence:
Good sir, or so, or friend, or Gentleman,
According to the Phrase and the Addition,
Of man and Country.

Reynol. Very good my Lord.

Polon. And then Sir does he this?

He does: what was I about to say?

I was about to say something: where did I leaue?

Reynol. At clothes in the consequence:

At friend, or so, and Gentleman.

Polon. At clothes in the consequence, I marry,
He closes with you thus. I know the Gentleman,
I saw him yesterday, or tocher day;
Or then or then, with such and such; and as you say,
There was he gaming, there o'reooke in's Rouse;
There falling out at Tennis; or perchance,
I saw him enter such a house of sale;
Videlicet, a Brothell, or so forth. See you now;
Your bait of falshood, takes this Cape of truth;
And thus doe we of wisdom and of reach,
With windleses, and with assaies of Bias,
By indirections finde directions out:
So by my former Lecture and aduice
Shall you my Sonne; you haue me, haue you not?

Reynol. My Lord I haue.

Polon. God buy you; fare you well.

Reynol. Good my Lord.

Polon. Obserue his inclination in your selfe.

Reynol. I shall my Lord.

Polon. And let him ply his Musicke.

Reynol. Well, my Lord. Exit.

Enter Ophelia.

Polon. Farewell:

How now Ophelia, what's the matter?

Ophe. Alas my Lord, I haue beene so affrighted.

Polon. With what, in the name of Heauen?

Ophe. My Lord, as I was sowing in my Chamber,
Lord Hamlet with his doublet all vnbrae'd,
No hat vpon his head, his stockings foul'd,
Vngartered, and downe giued to his Anckle,
Pale as his shirt, his knees knocking each other,
And with a looke so pious in purport,
As if he had been look'd out of hell,
To speake of horrors: he comes before me.

Polon. Mad for thy Loue?

Ophe. My Lord, I doe not know: but truly I do feare it.

Polon. What said he?

Ophe. He tooke me by the wrist, and held me hard;

Then goes he to the length of all his arme;

And with his other hand thus o're his brow,

He falls to such perusall of my face,

As he would draw it. Long staid he so,

At last, a little shaking of mine Arme:

And thrice his head thus wauing vp and downe;

He rais'd a sigh, so pious and profound,

That it did seeme to shatter all his bulke,

And end his being. That done, he lets me goe,

And with his head ouer his shoulders turn'd,

He seem'd to finde his way without his eyes,

For out aderes he went without their helpe;

And to the last, bended their light on me.

Polon. Goe with me, I will goe seeke the King,

This is the very extasie of Loue,

Whose violent property foredoes it selfe,

And

And leads the will to desperate Vndertakings,
As oft as any passion vnder Heauen,
That does afflict our Natures. I am forrie,
What haue you giuen him any hard words of late?
Ophe. No my good Lord: but as you did command,
I did repell his Letters, and deny'de
His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.
I am forrie that with better speed and iudgement
I had not quored him. I feare he did but trifle,
And meant to wracke thee: but he shewd my ielousie:
It seemes it is as proper to our Age,
To cast beyond our selues in our Opinions,
As it is common for the yonger sort
To lacke discretion. Come, go we to the King,
This must be knowne, & being kept close might moue
More greefe to hide, then hate to vtter loue. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Queene, Rosineraue, and Guilden-sterne Cum alijs.

King. Welcome deere Rosineraue and Guildensterne.
Moreover, that we much did long to see you,
The neede we haue to vse you, did prouoke
Our hasty sending. Something haue you heard
Of Hamlets transformation: so I call it,
Since not th'exterior, nor the inward man
Resembles that it was. What it should bee
More then his Fathers death, that thus hath put him
So much from th'vnderstanding of himselfe,
I cannot deeme of. I intreat you both,
That being of so young dayes brought vp with him:
And since so Neighbour'd to his youth, and humour,
That you vouchsafe your rest here in our Court
Some little time: so by your Companies
To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather
So much as from Occasions you may glean,
That open'd lies within our remedie.

Qu. Good Gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you,
And sure I am, two men there are not liuing,
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To shew vs so much Gentrie, and good will,
As to expend your time with vs a while,
For the supply and profit of our Hope,
Your Visitation shall receiue such thanks
As fits a Kings remembrance.

Rosin. Both your Maiesties.
Might by the Soueraigne power you haue of vs,
Put your dread pleasures, more into Command
Then to Entreatie.

Gul. We both obey,
And here giue vp our selues, in the full bent,
To lay our Seruices freely at your feete,
To be commanded.

King. I thankes Rosineraue, and gentle Guildensterne.

Qu. I thankes Guildensterne and gentle Rosineraue.
And I beseech you instantly to visit
My too much changed Sonne.

Go some of ye,

And bring the Gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Gul. Heauen make our presence and our practises
Pleasant and helpfull to him. Exeunt.

Queene. Amen.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Th' Ambassadors from Norway, my good Lord,
Are ioyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast bin the Father of good Newes.

Pol. Haue I, my Lord? Assure you, my good Liege,
I hold my dutie, as I hold my Soule,

Both to my God, one to my gracious King:
And I do thinke, or else this braine of mine

Hunts not the traile of Policie, so sure
As I haue vs'd to do: that I haue found

The very cause of Hamlets Lunacie.

King. Oh speake of that, that I do long to heare.

Pol. Giue first admittance to th' Ambassadors,
My Newes shall be the Newes to that great Feast.

King. Thy selfe do grace to them, and bring them in.
He tells me my sweet Queene, that he hath found

The head and fource of all your Sonnes distemper.

Qu. I doubt it is no other, but the maine,
His Fathers death, and our o're-hasty Marriage.

Enter Polonius, Voltumand, and Cornelius.
King. Well, we shall sift him. Welcome good Friends:
Say Voltumand, what from our Brother Norway?

Pol. Most faire returne of Greetings, and Desires,
Vpon our first, he sent out to suppress

His Nephewes Lewies, which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Poleak:

But better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your Highnesse, whereat greened,

That to his Sicknesse, Age, and Impotence
Was fallie borne in hand, sends out Arrests

On Fortinbras, which he (in breefe) obeyes,
Receiues rebuke from Norway: and in fine,

Makes Vow before his Vnkle, neuer more
To giue th'assay of Armes against your Maiestie.

Whereon old Norway, overcome with ioy,
Giues him three thousand Crownes in Annuall Fee,

And his Commission to imploy those Soldiers
So leui'd as before, against the Poleak:

With an intreaty herein further shewne,
That it might please you to giue quiet passe

Through your Dominions, for his Enterprize,
On such regards of safety and allowance,

As therein are set downe.

King. It likes vs well:
And at our more consider'd time we'll read,

Answer, and thinke vpon this Businesse.
Meane time we thanke you, for your well-tooke Labour.

Go to your rest, at night we'll feast together.
Most welcome home. Exit Ambass.

Pol. This businesse is very well ended.
My Liege, and Madam, to expostulate

What Maiestie should be, what Dutie is,
Why day is day; night, night; and time is time,

Were nothing but to waste Night, Day, and Time.
Therefore, since Breuitie is the Soule of Wit,

And tediousnesse, the limbes and outward flourish,
I will be breefe. Your Noble Sonne is mad:

Mad call I it; for to define true Madnesse,
What is't, but to be nothing else but mad.

But let that go.

Qu. More matter, with lesse Art.

Pol. Madam, I sweare I vse no Art at all:
That he is mad, 'tis true: 'Tis true 'tis pittie,

And pittie it is true: A foolish figure,
But farewell it: for I will vse no Art. Mad

Mad let vs grant him then: and now remains
That we finde out the cause of this effect,

Or rather say, the cause of this defect:
For this effect defective, comes by cause.

Thus it remains, and the remainder thus. Perpend,
I haue a daughter: haue, whilst she is mine,

Who in her Dutie and Obedience, marke,
Hath giuen me this: now gather, and surmise.

The Letter.
To the Celestiall, and my Soules Idoll, the most beautified O-

phelia.
That's an ill Phrase; a wilde Phrase, beautified is a wilde

Phrase: but you shall heare these in her excellent white bosome, these.

Qu. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good Madam stay awhile, I will be faithfull.
Doubt thou, the Starres are fire,

Doubt, that the Sunne doth moue: Doubt, Truth to be a Lier,

But neuer Doubt, I loue.
Odere Ophelia, I am ill at these Numbers: I haue not Art to reche my grones; but that I loue thee best, oh most Best be- lieue it. Adieu.

Thine euer more most deere Lady, whilst this

Machine is to him, Hamlet.
This in Obedience hath my daughter shew'd me:

And more about hath his solliciting,
As they fell out by Time, by Meanes, and Place,

All giuen to mine care.

King. But how hath she receiv'd his Loue?

Pol. What do you thinke of me?

King. As of a man, faithfull and Honourable.

Pol. I wold faine proue so. But what might you thinke?

When I had seene this hot loue on the wing,
As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that

Before my Daughter told me, what might you
Or my deere Maiestie your Queene heere, thinke,

If I had play'd the Deske or Table-booke,
Or giuen my heart a winking, mute and dumbe,

Or look'd vpon this Loue, with idle sight,
What might you thinke? No, I went round to worke,

And (my yong Mistress) thus I did bespeake
Lord Hamlet is a Prince out of thy Starre,

This must not be: and then, I Precepts gaue her,
That she should locke her selfe from his Resort,

Admit no Messengers, receiue no Tokens:
Which done, sheooke the Fruits of my Advice,

And he repul'd. A short Tale to make,
Fell into a Sadnesse, then into a Fast,

Thence to a Watch, thence into a Weaknesse,
Thence to a Lightnesse, and by this declension

Into the Madnesse whereon now he raues,
And all we waile for.

King. Do you thinke 'tis this?

Qu. It may be very likely.

Pol. Hath there bene such a time, I'de faine know that,
That I haue possiblenly said, 'tis so,

When it prou'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this; if this be otherwise,
If Circumstances leade me, I will finde

Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeede
Within the Center.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know sometimes
He walkes foure houres together, heere

In the Lobby.

Qu. So he ha's indeed.

Pol. At such a time Ile loose my Daughter to him,
Be you and I behinde an Aras then,

Marke the encounter: If he loue her not,
And be not from his reason false thereon;

Let me be no Assistant for a State,
And keepe a Farme and Carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter Hamlet reading on a Booke.

Qu. But looke where sadly the poore wretch
Comes reading.

Pol. Away I do beseech you, both away,
He boord him presently. Exit King & Queen.

Oh giue me leaue. How does my good Lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, God-a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me, my Lord?

Ham. Excellent, excellent well: y'are a Fishmonger.

Pol. Not I my Lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my Lord?

Ham. I sir, to be honest as this world goes, is to bee one man pick'd out of two thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my Lord.

Ham. For if the Sun breed Magots in a dead dogge, being a good kissing Carrion—

Haue you a daughter?

Pol. I haue my Lord.

Ham. Let her not walke i'th' Sunne: Conception is a blesing, but not as your daughter may conceiue. Friend looke too't.

Pol. How say you by that? Still harping on my daughter: yet he knew me not at first; he said I was a Fishmonger: he is farre gone, farre gone: and truly in my youth,

I suffred much extremitie for loue: very neere this. He speake to him againe. What do you read my Lord?

Ham. Words, words, words.

Pol. What is the matter, my Lord?

Ham. Betweene who?

Pol. I meane the matter you meane, my Lord.

Ham. Slanders Sir: for the Satyricall slave saies here, that old men haue gray Beards; that their faces are wrinkled; their eyes purging thicke Amber, or Plum-Tree Gumme: and that they haue a plentiful locke of Wit, together with weake Hammes. All which Sir, though I most powerfully, and potently beleue; yet I holde it not Honestie to haue it thus set downe: For you your selfe Sir, should be old as I am; if like a Crab you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madnesse,
Yet there is Method in't: will you walke

Out of the ayre my Lord?

Ham. Into my Graue?

Pol. Indeed that is out o'th' Ayre:
How pregnant (sometimes) his Replies are?

A happinesse,
That often Madnesse hits on,
Which Reason and Sanitie could not
So prosperously be deliuer'd of.

I will leaue him,
And sodainely contriue the meanes of meeting
Betweene him, and my daughter.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know sometimes
Take my leaue of you. Ham

Ham. You cannot Sir take from me any thing, that I will more willingly part withall, except my life; my life.

Polon. Fare you well my Lord.

Ham. These tedious old fooles.

Polon. You goe to seeke my Lord Hamlet; there hee is.

Enter Rosincran and Guildenstern.

Rosin. God saue you Sir.

Guild. Mine honour'd Lord?

Rosin. My most deare Lord?

Ham. My excellent good friends? How do'st thou Guildenstern? Oh, Rosincran; good Lads: How doe ye both?

Rosin. As the indifferent Children of the earth.

Guild. Happy, in that we are not ouer-happy: on Fortunes Cap, we are not the very Button.

Ham. Nor the Soales of her Shoo?

Rosin. Neither my Lord.

Ham. Then you liue about her waste, or in the middle of her fauour?

Guild. Faith, her priuates, we.

Ham. In the secret parts of Fortune? Oh, most true: she is a Strumpet. What's the newes?

Rosin. None my Lord; but that the World's growne honest.

Ham. Then is Doomesday neere: But your newes is not true. Let me question more in particular: what haue you my good friends, deserued at the hands of Fortune, that she sends you to Prison hither?

Guild. Prison, my Lord?

Ham. Denmark's a Prison.

Rosin. Then is the World one.

Ham. A goodly one, in which there are many Confines, Wards, and Dungeons; Denmark being one o'th' worst.

Rosin. We thinke not so my Lord.

Ham. Why then 'tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Rosin. Why then your Ambition makes it one: 'tis too narrow for your minde.

Ham. O God, I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count my selfe a King of infinite space; were it not that I haue bad dreames.

Guild. Which dreames indeed are Ambition: for the very substance of the Ambitious, is merely the shadow of a Dreame.

Ham. A dreame it selfe is but a shadow.

Rosin. Truly, and I hold Ambition of so ayry and light a quality, that it is but a shadowes shadow.

Ham. Then are our Beggers bodies; and our Monarchs and out-stretch Heroes the Beggars Shadowes: shall wee to th' Court: for, by my fey I cannot reason?

Both. Wee'll wait vpon you.

Ham. No such matter. I will not fortify you with the rest of my seruants: for to speake to you like an honest man: I am most dreadfully attended; but in the beaten way of friendship, What make you at Elsonower?

Rosin. To visit you my Lord, no other occasion.

Ham. Begger that I am, I am even poore in thanks; but I thanke you: and sure deare friends my thanks are too deare a halfe peny; were you not sent for? Is it your owne inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, deale iustly with me: come, come; nay speake.

Guild. What should we say my Lord?

Ham. Why any thing. But to the purpose; you were sent for; and there is a kinde confession in your lookes; which your modesties haue not craft enough to color, I know the good King & Queene haue sent for you.

Rosin. To what end my Lord?

Ham. That you must teach me: but let mee coniure you by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the Obligation of our euer-preferued loue, and by what more deare, a better proposer could charge you withall; be euen and direct with me, whether you were sent for or no.

Rosin. What say you?

Ham. Nay then I haue an eye of you; if you loue me hold not off.

Guild. My Lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discouery of your secretie to the King and Queene: moult no feather, I haue of late, but wherefore I know not, lost all my mirth, forgone all custome of exercise; and indeed, it goes so heavenly with my disposition, that this goodly frame the Earth, seemes to me a sterill Promontory; this most excellent Canopy the Ayre, look you, this braue ore-hanging, this Maiesticall Roofe, fretted with golden fire: why, it appears no other thing to mee, then a foule and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of worke is a man! how Noble in Reason? how infinite in faculty? in forme and moving how expresse and admirable? in Action, how like an Angel? in apprehension, how like a God? the beauty of the world, the Parragon of Animals; and yet to me, what is this Quintessence of Dust? Man delights not me; no, nor Woman neither; though by your smiling you seeme to say so.

Rosin. My Lord, there was no such stuffe in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh, when I said, Man delights not me?

Rosin. To thinke, my Lord, if you delight not in Man, what Lenton entertainment the Players shall receiue from you: wee coated them on the way, and hither are they comming to offer you Seruice.

Ham. He that plays the King shall be welcome; his Maiesty shall haue Tribute of mee: the aduenturous Knight shal vse his Foyle and Target: the Louer shall not sigh gratis, the humorous man shall end his part in peace: the Clowne shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickled a'th' sere: and the Lady shall say her minde freely; or the blanke Verse shall halt for't: what Players are they?

Rosin. Euen those you were wont to take delight in the Tragedians of the City.

Ham. How chanceth it they trauaile? their residence both in reputation and profit was better both wayes.

Rosin. I thinke their Inhibition comes by the meanes of the late Innouation?

Ham. Doe they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the City? Are they so follow'd?

Rosin. No indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? doe they grow rusty?

Rosin. Nay, their indeauour keeps in the wonted pace; But there is Sir an ayrie of Children, little Yases, that crye out on the top of question; and are most tyrannically clap't for't: these are now the fashion, and to be-ratled the common Stages (so they call them) that many wearing Rapiers, are affraide of Goose-quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What are they Children? Who maintains 'em? How are they escoted? Will they pursue the Quality no longer then they can sing? Will they not say afterwards if they should grow themselves to common Players (as it is like most if their meanes are not better) their Writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their owne Succession.

Rosin. Faith there ha's bene much to do on both sides: and the Nation holds it no sinne, to tarre them to Controuerisie. There was for a while, no money bid for argument, vnlesse the Poet and the Player went to Cuffes in the Question.

Ham. Is't possible?

Guild. Oh there ha's bene much throwing about of Braines.

Ham. Do the Boyes carry it away?

Rosin. I that they do my Lord, Hercules & his load too. Ham. It is not strange: for mine Vnckle is King of Denmarke, and those that would make mowes at him while my Father liued; giue twenty, forty, an hundred Ducates a peece, for his picture in Little. There is something in this more then Naturall, if Philosophie could finde it out.

Flourish for the Players.

Guild. There are the Players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcom to Elsonower: your hands, come: The appurtenance of Welcome, is Fashion and Ceremony. Let me comply with you in the Garbe, lest my extent to the Players (which I tell you must shew fairly outward) should more appeare like entertainment then yours. You are welcome: but my Vnckle Father, and Aunt Mother are deceiu'd.

Guild. In what my deere Lord?

Ham. I am but mad North, North-West: when the Winde is Southerly, I know a Hawke from a Handsaw.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be with you Gentlemen.

Ham. Hearle you Guildenstern, and you too: at each eare a hearer: that great Baby you see there, is not yet out of his swathing clouts.

Rosin. Happily he's the second time come to them: for they say, an old man is twice a childe.

Ham. I will prophesie, Hee comes to tell me of the Players. Mark it, you say right Sir: for a Monday morning 'twas so indeed.

Pol. My Lord, I haue Newes to tell you.

Ham. My Lord, I haue Newes to tell you.

When Rosin an Actor in Rome—

Pol. The Actors are come hither my Lord.

Ham. Buzz, buzz.

Pol. Vpon mine Honor.

Ham. Then can each Actor on his Asse—

Polon. The best Actors in the world, either for Tragedie, Comedie, Historie, Pastoral: Pastoricall-Comickall-Historicall-Pastorall: Tragicall-Historicall: Tragicall-Comickall-Historicall-Pastorall: Scene indiuible, or Poem vnlimited. Seneca cannot be too heauy, nor Plautus too light, for the law of Wit, and the Liberty. These are the onely men.

Ham. O Iephtha Iudge of Israel, what a Treasure had'st thou?

Pol. What a Treasure had he, my Lord?

Ham. Why one faire Daughter, and no more,

The which he loued passing well.

Pol. Still on my Daughter.

Ham. Am I not i'th' right old Iephtha?

Polon. If you call me Iephtha my Lord, I haue a daughter that I loue passing well.

Ham. Nay that followes not.

Polon. What followes then, my Lord?

Ha. Why, As by lot, God wot: and then you know, it came to passe, as most like it was: The first rowe of the Pons Chausen will shew you more. For looke where my Abridgements come.

Enter foure or fise Players.

Y'are welcome Masters, welcome all. I am glad to see thee well: Welcome good Friends. O my olde Friend? Thy face is valiant since I saw thee last: Com'st thou to beard me in Denmarke? What, my yong Lady and Mistress? Byrlady your Ladiship is neerer Heauen then when I saw you last, by the altitude of a Choppine. Pray God your voice like a peece of vncut Gold be not crack'd within the ring. Masters, you are all welcome: wee'l e'ne to't like French Fauconers, flie at any thing we see: wee'l haue a Speech straight. Come giue vs a tast of your quality: come, a passionate speech.

1. Play. What speech, my Lord?

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once, but it was neuer Acted: or if it was, not about once, for the Play I remember pleas'd not the Million, 'twas Caniarie to the Generall: but it was (as I recei'd it, and others, whose iudgement in such matters, cried in the top of mine) an excellent Play; well digested in the Scenes, set downe with as much modestie, as cunning. I remember one said, there was no Sallers in the lines, to make the matter sauoury; nor no matter in the phrase, that might indite the Author of affectation, but cal'd it an honest method. One cheefe Speech in it, I cheefely lou'd, 'twas Antas Tale to Dido, and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priams slaughter. If it liue in your memory, begin at this Line, let me see, let me see: The rugged Pyrrhus like th' Hyrcanian Beast. It is not so: it begins with Pyrrhus The rugged Pyrrhus, he whose Sable Armes Blacke as his purpose, did the night resemble When he lay couched in the Ominous Horse, Hath now this dread and blacke Complexion smear'd With Heraldry more dismal: Head to foote Now is he to take Geulles, horribly Trick'd With blood of Fathers, Mothers, Daughters, Sonnes, Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets, That lend a tyrannous, and damned light To their vilde Murthers, roasted in wrath and fire, And thus o're-siz'd with coagulate gore, With eyes like Carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus Old Grandfire Priam seekes.

Pol. Fore God, my Lord, well spoken, with good accent, and good discretion.

1. Player. Anon he findes him, Striking too short at Greekes. His anticke Sword, Rebellious to his Arme, lyes where it fall'es Repugnant to command: vnequall match, Pyrrhus at Priam driues, in Rage strikes wide: But with the whiffe and winde of his fell Sword, Th'vnnerved Father falls. Then senselesse Illium, Seeming to feele his blow, with flaming top Stoopt to his Bace, and with a hideous crash Takes Prisoner Pyrrhus care. For loe, his Sword Which was declining on the Milkie head Of Reuerend Priam, seem'd i'th' Ayre to sticke:

So

So as a painted Tyrant Pyrrhus stood,
And like a Newtrall to his will and matter, did nothing.
But as we often see, against some forme,
A silence in the Heavens, the Racke stand still,
The bold windes speechlesse, and the Orbe below
As hush as death: Anon the dreadfull Thunder
Doth rend the Region. So after Pyrrhus pause,
A ro wfed Vengeance sets him new a-work,
And neuer did the Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his Armour, forg'd for prooffe Eterne,
With lesse remorse then Pyrrhus bleeding sword
Now falles on Priam.

Out, out, thou Strumpet-Fortune, all you Gods,
In generall Synod take away her power:
Breake all the Spokes and Fallies from her wheele,
And boule the round Naue downe the hill of Heauen,
As low as to the Fiends.

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It shall to'th Barbar, with your beard. Pry-thee say on: He's for a Tigge, or a tale of Baudry, or hee sleepes. Say on; come to Hecuba.

1. Play. But who, O who, had seen the inobled Queen,
Ham. The inobled Queene?

Pol. That's good: Inobled Queene is good.

1. Play. Run bare-foot vp and downe,
Threatning the flame
With Biffon Rheume: A clout about that head,
Where late the Diadem stood, and for a Robe
About her lanke and all ore-teamed Lones,
A blanket in th' Alarm of feare caught vp.
Who this had seene, with tongue in Venome steep'd, Gainst Fortunes State, would Treason haue pronounc'd?
But if the Gods themselves did see her then,
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his Sword her Husbands limbes,
The instant Burst of Clamour that she made (Vnlesse things mortall moue them not at all)
Would haue made milche the Burning eyes of Heauen,
And passion in the Gods.

Pol. Looke where he has not turn'd his colour, and has'teares in's eyes. Pray you no more.

Ham. 'Tis well. Ile haue thee speake out the rest, soone. Good my Lord, will you see the Players wel be-row'd. Doye heare, let them be well vs'd: for they are the Abstracts and breefe Chronicles of the time. After your death, you were better haue a bad Epitaph, then their ill report while you liued.

Pol. My Lord, I will vse them according to their de-fart.

Ham. Gods bodykins man, better. Vse euerie man after his defart, and who should scape whipping: vse them after your own Honor and Dignity. The lesse they deserue, the more merit is in your bountie. Take them in.

Pol. Come fir, Exit Polon.
Ham. Follow him Friends: wee'l heare a play to morrow. Dost thou heare me old Friend, can you play the murder of Gonzago?

Play. I my Lord.
Ham. Wee'l ha't to morrow night. You could for a need study a speech of some dozen or sixtene lines, which I would set downe, and insert in't? Could ye not?

Play. I my Lord.
Ham. Very well. Follow that Lord, and looke you mock him not. My good Friends, Ile leaue you til night you are welcome to Elfonower?

Rosin. Good my Lord.

Maner Hamlet. Exit.

Ham. I so, God buy ye: Now I am alone.
Oh what a Rogue and Pefant state am I?
Is it not monstrous that this Player heere,
But in a Fixion, in a dreame of Passion,
Could force his soule so to his whole conceit,
That from her working, all his visage warm'd;
Teares in his eyes, distraction in's Aspe&,
A broken voyce, and his whole Function suiting
With Formes, to his Conceit? And all for nothing?
For Hecuba?

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weepe for her? What would he doe,
Had he the Motiue and the Cue for passion
That I haue? He would drowne the Stage with teares,
And cleaue the generall eare with horrid speech:
Make mad the guilty, and apale the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed,
The very faculty of Eyes and Eares. Yet I,
A dull and muddy-metled Rascall, peeke

Like Iohn a-dreames, vnpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing: No, not for a King,
Vpon whose property, and most decreed life,
A dam'd defeat was made. Am I a Coward?

Who calles me Villaine? breakes my pate a-crosse?
Pluckes off my Beard, and blowes it in my face?
Tweakes me by'th Nose? giues me the Lye i'th Throate,
As deepe as to the Lungs? Who does me this?
Ha? Why I should take it: for it cannot be,
But I am Pigeon-Liuer'd, and lacke Gall
To make Oppression bitter, or ere this,
I should haue fatted all the Region Kites
With this Slaues Offall, bloody: a bawdy villaine, Remorselesse, Treacherous, Letcherous, kindles villaine!

Oh Vengeance!
Who? What an Ass am I? I sure, this is most braue,
That I, the Sonne of the Deere murdered,

Prompted to my Reuenge by Heauen, and Hell,
Must (like a Whore) vnpacke my heart with words,
And fall a Curfing like a very Drab,
A Scullion? Eye vpon't: Foh. About my Braine,
I haue heard, that guilty Creatures sitting at a Play,
Haue by the very cunning of the Scene,
Bene strooke so to the soule, that presently
They haue proclaim'd their Malefactions.
For Murder, though it haue no tongue, will speake
With most myraculous Organ. Ile haue these Players,
Play something like the murder of my Father,
Before mine Vnkle. Ile obserue his lookes,
Ile tent him to the quicke: If he but blench
I know my course. The Spirit that I haue seene
May be the Diuell, and the Diuell hath power
T'assume apleasing shape, yea and perhaps
Out of my Weaknesse, and my Melancholly,
As he is very potent with such Spirits,
Abuses me to damne me. Ile haue grounds
More Relatiue then this: The Play's the thing,
Wherein Ile catch the Conscience of the King. Exit

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Ro-sincerance, Guildenstern, and Lords.

King. And can you by no drift of circumstance
Get from him why he puts on this Confusion:
Grating so harshly all his dayes of quiet

With turbulent and dangerous Lunacy.

Rosin. He does confesse he feelles himselfe distracted,
But from what cause he will by no meanes speake.

Guild. Nor do we finde him forward to be founde,
But with a crafty Madnesse keeps aloofe:
When we would bring him on to some Confession
Of his true state.

Qu. Did he receiue you well?
Rosin. Most like a Gentleman.

Guild. But with much forcing of his disposition.
Rosin. Niggard of question, but of our demands
Most free in his reply.

Qu. Did you assay him to any pastime?
Rosin. Madam, it so fell out, that certaine Players
We ore-wrought on the way: of these we told him,
And there did seeme in him a kinde of ioy
To heare of it: They are about the Court,
And (as I thinke) they haue already order
This night to play before him.

Pol. 'Tis most true:
And he beseech'd me to intreate your Maiesties
To heare, and see the matter.

King. With all my heart, and it doth much content me
To heare him so inclin'd. Good Gentlemen, Giue him a further edge, and driue his purpose on
To these delights.

Rosin. We shall my Lord. Exit.
King. Sweet Gertrude leaue vs too,
For we haue closely sent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may there
Assaunt Ophelia. Her Father, and my selfe (lawful espials)
Will so bestow our selues, that seeing vnscene
We may of their encounter frankly iudge,
And gather by him, as he is behaued,
If he be th'affliction of his loue, or no.
That thus he suffers for.

Qu. I shall obey you,
And for your part Ophelia, I do wish
That your good Beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlets wildenesse: so shall I hope your Vertues
Will bring him to his wonted way againe,
To both your Honors.

Oph. Madam, I wish it may.
Pol. Ophelia, walke you heere. Gracions so please ye
We will bestow our selues: Reade on this booke,
That shew of such an exercise may colour
Your loneliness. We are oft too blame in this,
'Tis too much prou'd, that with Deuotions visage,
And pious Action, we do surge o're
The diuell himselfe.

King. Oh 'tis true:
How smart a lash that speech doth giue my Conscience?
The Harlots Cheeke beautied with plaist'ring Art
Is not more vgly to the thing that helpes it,
Then is my deede, to my most painted word.
Oh heauie burthen!

Pol. I heare him conning, let's withdraw my Lord. Exit.
Enter Hamlet.
Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the Question:
Whether 'tis Nobler in the minde to suffer
The Slings and Arrowes of outrageous Fortune,
Or to take Armes against a Sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them: to dye, to sleepe,
No more; and by a sleepe, to say we end
The Heart-ake, and the thousand Naturall shocks

That Flesh is heyre too? 'Tis a consummation
Deuoutly to be wish'd. To dye to sleepe,
To sleepe, perchance to Dreame; I, there's the rub,
For in that sleepe of death, what dreames may come,
When we haue shuffel'd off this mortall cōde,
Must giue vs pawse. There's the respect
That makes Calamity of so long life:

For who would beate the Whips and Scornes of time,
The Oppressors wrong, the poore mans Contumely,
The pangs of dispriz'd Loue, the Lawes delay,
The insolence of Office, and the Spurnes
That patient merit of the vnworthy takes,

When he himselfe might his Quintus make
With a bare Bodkin? Who would these Fardies beare
To grunt and sweat vnder a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The vndiscover'd Countrey, from whose Borne
No Traueller returnes, Puzzels the will,
And makes vs rather beare those ills we haue,
Then flye to others that we know not of.

Thus Conscience does make Cowards of vs all,
And thus the Native hew of Resolution
Is sicklied o're, with the pale cast of Thought,
And enterprizes of great pith and moment,
With this regard their Currants turne away,
And loose the name of Action. Soft you now,
The faire Ophelia? Nimph, in thy Orizons
Be all my finnes remembred.

Oph. Good my Lord,
How does your Honor for this many a day?

Ham. I humbly thanke you: well, well, well.
Oph. My Lord, I haue Remembrances of yours,
That I haue longed long to re-deluer.

I pray you now, receiue them.
Ham. No, no, I neuer gaue you ought.

Oph. My honor'd Lord, I know right well you did,
And with them words of so sweet breath compos'd,
As made the things more rich, then perfume lett:
Take these againe, for to the Noble minde
Rich gifts wax poore, when giuers proue vnkinde.
There my Lord.

Ham. Ha, ha: Are you honest?
Oph. My Lord,

Ham. Are you faire?
Oph. What meanes your Lordship?

Ham. That if you be honest and faire, your Honesty ould admit no discourse to your Beautie.

Oph. Could Beautie my Lord, haue better Commerce then your Honesty?

Ham. I trulie: for the power of Beautie, will sooner transforme Honesty from what it is, to a Bawd, then the force of Honesty can translat Beautie into his likeness.
This was sometime a Paradox, but now the time giues it prooffe: I did loue you once.

Oph. Indeed my Lord, you made me beleeue so.
Ham. You should not haue beleeued me. For vertue cannot so innoculate our old stocke, but we shall relish of it. I loued you not.

Oph. I was the more deceiued.
Ham. Get thee to a Nunnerie. Why would'st thou be a breeder of Sinners? I am my selfe indifferent honest, but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better my Mother had not borne me. I am very prou'd, reuengefull, Ambitious, with more offences at my becke, then I haue thoughts to put them in imagination, to giue them shape, or time to acte them in. What should such fel-

Fellowes as I do, crawling betwene Heauen and Earth. We are arrant Knaues all, beleue none of vs. Goe thy wayes to a Nunnery. Where's your Father?

Ophe. At home, my Lord.

Ham. Let the doores be shut vpon him, that he may play the Foole no way, but in's owne house. Farewell.

Ophe. O helpe him, you sweet Heauens.

Ham. If thou dost Marry, Ile giue thee this Plague for thy Dower. Be thou as chaste as Ice, as pure as Snow, thou shalt not escape Calumny. Get thee to a Nunnery. Go, Farewell. Or if thou wilt needs Marry, marry a fool: for Wife men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a Nunnery go, and quickly too. Farewell.

Ophe. O heauenly Powers, restore him.

Ham. I haue heard of your pratings too wel enough. God has giuen you one pace, and you make your selfe another: you gidge, you amble, and you lippe, and nickname Gods creatures, and make your Wantonnesse, your Ignorance. Go too, Ile no more on't, it hath made me mad. I say, we will haue no more Marriages. Those that are married already, all but one shall keepe as they are. To a Nunnery, go. Exit Hamlet.

Ophe. O what a Noble minde is heere o're-throwne? The Courtiers, Soldiers, Schollers: Eye, tongue, sword, Th'expectancie and Rose of the faire State, The glasse of Fashion, and the mould of Forme, Th'obseru'd of all Obseruers, quite, quite downe. Haue I of Ladies most delect and wretched, That suck'd the Honie of his Musicke Vowes: Now see that Noble, and most Soueraigne Reason, Like sweet Bels tangled out of tune, and harsh, That vnwatch'd Forme and Feature of blowne youth, Blasted with extasie. Oh woe is me, Th'haue scene what I haue scene: see what I see.

Enter King, and Polonius.

King. Loue? His affections do not that way tend, Nor what he spake, though it lack'd Forme a little, Was not like Madnesse. There's something in his soule? O're which his Melancholly sits on brood, And I do doubt the hatch, and the disclosure Will be some danger, which to prevent I haue in quicke determination Thus set it downe. He shall with speed to England For the demand of our neglected Tribute: Haply the Seas and Countreies different With variable Obiects, shall expell This something ferled matter in his heart: Whereon his Braines still bearing, puts him thus From fashion of himselfe. What thinke you on't?

Pol. It shall do well. But yet do I beleue The Origin and Commencement of this greefe Sprung from neglected loue. How now Ophelia? You are denot tell vs, what Lord Hamlet saide, We heard it all. My Lord, do as you please, But if you hold it fit after the Play, Let his Queene Mother all alone intreat him To shew his Greefes: let her be round with him, And Ile be plac'd so, please you in the care Of all their Conference. If she finde him not, To England send him: Or confine him where Your wisdome best shall thinke.

King. It shall be so: Madnesse in great Ones, must not vnwatch'd go.

Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet, and two or three of the Players.

Ham. Speake the Speech I pray you, as I pronounce it to you trippingly on the Tongue: But if you mouth it, as many of your Players do, I had as liue the Town-Cryer, had spoke my Lines: Nor do not saw the Ayre too much your hand thus, but vse all gently; for in the verie Torrent, Tempest, and (as I may say) the Whirl-winde of Passion, you must acquire and beget a Temperance that may giue it Smoothnesse. O it offends mee to the Soule, to see a robustious Pery-wig-pated Fellow, teare a Passion on to tatters, to verie ragges, to split the eares of the Groundlings: who (for the most part) are capable of nothing, but inexplicable dumbe shewes, & noise: I could haue such a Fellow whipt for o're-doing Termagant: it out-Herod's Herod. Pray you auoid it.

Player. I warrant your Honor.

Ham. Be not too tame neyther: but let your owne Discretion be your Tutor. Sute the Action to the Word, the Word to the Action, with this speciall obseruance: That you ore-stop not the modestie of Nature; for any thing so ouer-done, is fro the purpose of Playing, whole end both at the first and now, was and is, to hold as'twer the Mirrour vp to Nature; to shew Vertue her owne Feature, Scorne her owne Image, and the verie Age and Bodie of the Time, his forme and preasure. Now, this ouer-done, or come tardie off, though it make the vnskillfull laugh, cannot but make the Iudicious Greene; The censure of the which One, must in your allowance o're-way a whole Theater of Others. Oh, there bee Players that I haue scene Play, and heard others praise, and that highly (not to speake it prophanely) that neyther haue the accent of Christians, nor the gate of Christian, Pagan, or Norman, haue so strutted and bellowed, that I haue thought some of Natures Iouerney-men had made men, and not made them well, they imitated Humanity so abominably.

Play. I hope we haue reform'd that indifferently with vs, Sir.

Ham. O reforme it altogether. And let those that play your Clownes, speake no more then is set downe for them. For there be of them, that will themselves laugh to set on some quantitie of barren Spectators to laugh too, though in the meane time, some necessary Question of the Play be then to be considered: that's Villanous, & shewes a most pittifull Ambition in the Foole that vses it. Go make you readie. Exit Players.

Enter Polonius, Rosinrance, and Guildensteme.

How now my Lord,

Will the King heare this peece of Worke?

Pol. And the Queene too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the Players make hast. Exit Polonius.

Will you two helpe to hasten them?

Boib. We will my Lord. Exeunt.

Enter Horatio.

Ham. What hoa, Horatio?

Hor. Heere sweet Lord, at your Seruice.

Ham. Horatio, thou art eene as iust a man

As ere my Conuersation coap'd withall.

Hor. O my deere Lord.

Ham. Nay, do not thinke I flatter:

For what aduancement may I hope from thee,

That no Reuennue hast, but thy good spirits

To

To feed & cloath thee. Why shold the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the Candied tongue, like absurd pompe,

And crooke the pregnant Hindges of the knee,

Where thrift may follow faining? Dost thou heare,

Since my deere Soule was Mistris of my choise,

And could of men distinguish, her election

Hath seal'd thee for her selfe. For thou hast bene

As one in suffering all, that suffers nothing.

A man that Fortunes buffers, and Rewards

Hath tane with equall Thankes. And blest are those,

Whose Blood and Iudgement are so well co-mingled,

That they are not a Pipe for Fortunes finger,

To sound what stop she please. Giue me that man,

That is not Passions Slave, and I will weare him

In my hearts Core: I in my Heart of heart,

As I do thee. Something too much of this.

There is a Play to night before the King,

One Scene of it comes nere the Circumstance

Which I haue told thee, of my Fathers death.

I prythee, when thou see'st that Acte a-foot,

Even with the verie Comment of my Soule

Obserue mine Vnkle: If his doctored guilt,

Do not it selfe vnkenneled in one speech,

It is a damned Ghost that we haue scene:

And my Imaginations are as foule

As Vulcans Stythe. Giue him needfull note,

For I mine eyes will riuert to his Face:

And after we will both our iudgements ioine,

To censure of his seeming.

Hor. Well my Lord.

If he scale ought the whilst this Play is Playing,

And scape detecting, I will pay the Theft.

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosinrance, Guildensteme, and other Lords attendant with his Guard carrying Torches. Danish March. Sound a Flourish.

Ham. They are coming to the Play: I must be idle. Get you a place.

King. How fares our Cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent! Faith, of the Camelions dish: I eate the Ayre promise-cramm'd, you cannot feed Capons so.

King. I haue nothing with this answer Hamlet, these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine. Now my Lord, you plaid once with Vniuersity, you say?

Pol. That I did my Lord, and was accounted a good Actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Iulius Cesar, I was kill'd i' th' Capitol: Brutus kill'd me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so Capitall a Calf there. Be the Players ready?

Rosin. My Lord, they stay vpon your patience.

Pol. Come hither my good Hamlet, sit by me.

Ha. No good Mother, here's Mettle more attractive.

Pol. Oh ho, do you marke that?

Ham. Ladie, shall I lye in your Lap?

Ophe. No my Lord.

Ham. I meane, my Head vpon your Lap?

Ophe. I my Lord.

Ham. Do you thinke I meant Country matters?

Ophe. I thinke nothing, my Lord.

Ham. That's a faire thought to ly between Maids legs

Ophe. What is my Lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Ophe. You are merrie, my Lord?

Ham. Who I?

Ophe. I my Lord.

Ham. Oh God, your onely Tigge-maker: what should a man do, but be merrie. For looke you how cheerefully my Mother lookes, and my Father dyed within two Howes.

Ophe. Nay, 'tis twice two moneths, my Lord.

Ham. So long? Nay then let the Diuel weare blacke, for Ile haue a suite of Sables. Oh Heauens! dye two mo-neths ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope, a great mans Memorie, may out-liue his life halfe a yeare:

But byrlady, he must build Churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the Hobby-horse, whole

Epitaph is, For o, For o, the Hobby-horse is forgot.

Enter King and Queene, very lowly; the Queene embracing him. She kneeles, and makes shew of Protestation vnto him. He takes her up, and declines his head vpon her neck. Lays him downe vpon a Bank of Flowers. She seeing him a-sleepe, leane vnto him. Anon comes in a Fellow, takes off his Crowne, kisses it, and powres poison in the Kings eares, and Exits. The Queene returns, findes the King dead, and makes passionate Action. The Poisoner, with some two or three Mutes comes in againe, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away: The Poisoner Wooes the Queene with Gifts: she seemes loath and unwilling awhile, but in the end, accepts his loue. Exeunt.

Hoboyes play. The dumbe shew enters.

*Enter a King and Queene, very lowly; the Queene embracing him. She kneeles, and makes shew of Protestation vnto him. He takes her up, and declines his head vpon her neck. Ophe. What meanes this, my Lord?

Ham. Marry this is Mithing Matheo, that meanes

Mischeefe.

Ophe. Belike this shew imports the Argument of the Play?

Ham. We shall know by these Fellowes: the Players cannot keepe counsell, they'll tell all.

Ophe. Will they tell vs what this shew meant?

Ham. I, or any shew that you'll shew him. Bee not you asham'd to shew, hee'll not shame to tell you what it meanes.

Ophe. You are naught, you are naught, Ile marke the Play.

Enter Prologue.

For vs, and for our Tragedie,

Heere stooping to your Clemencie:

We begge your hearing Patientlie.

Ham. Is this a Prologue, or the Poefie of a Ring?

Ophe. 'Tis briefe my Lord.

Ham. As Womans loue.

Enter King and his Queene.

King. Full thirtie times hath Phcebus Cart gon round,

Neptunes salt Wash, and Tellus Orbed ground;

And thirtie dozen Moones with borrowed sheene,

About the World haue times twelue thirties beene,

Since loue our hearts, and Hymen did our hands

Vnite comutually, in most sacred Bands.

Boib. So many iournies may the Sunne and Moone

Make vs againe count o're, ere loue be done.

But woe is me, you are so sicke of late,

So farre from cheere, and from your forme state,

That I distrust you: yet though I distrust,

Discomfort you (my Lord) it nothing must:

For womens Feare and Loue, holds quantitie,

In

In neither ought, or in extremity:

Now what my loue is, proofe hath made you know,
And as my Loue is siz'd, my Feare is so.

King. Faith I must leaue thee Loue, and shortly too:
My operant Powers my Functions leaue to do:
And thou shalt liue in this faire world behinde,
Honour'd, belou'd, and haply, one as kinde.
For Husband shalt thou—

Bap. Oh confound the rest:

Such Loue, must needs be Treason in my brest:
In second Husband, let me be accus'd,
None wed the second, but who kill'd the first!

Ham. Wormwood, Wormwood.

Bapt. The instances that second Marriage moue,
Are base respects of Thrift, but none of Loue.
A second time, I kill my Husband dead,
When second Husband kisses me in Bed.

King. I do beleue you. Think what now you speak:
But what we do determine, oft we breake:

Purpose is but the slave to Memorie,
Of violent Birth, but poore validitie;
Which now like Fruite vniue sticks on the Tree,
But fall vnsheken, when they mellow bee.
Most necessary 'tis, that we forget
To pay our selues, what to our selues is due:
What to our selues in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.
The violence of other Greefe or Ioy,
Their owne ennaftors with themselves destroy:
Where Ioy most Reuels, Greefe doth most lament;
Greefe ioyes, Ioy grieues on slender accident.
This world is not for aye, nor 'tis not strange
That euen our Loues should with our Fortunes change.
For 'tis a question left vs yet to prone,
Whether Loue lead Fortune, or else Fortune Loue,
The great man downe, you marke his fauourites flies,
The poore aduanc'd, makes Friends of Enemies:
And hitherto doth Loue on Fortune tend,
For who not needs, shall neuer lacke a Friend:
And who in want a hollow Friend doth try,
Direly seasons him his Enemie.

But orderly to end, where I begun,
Our Willes and Fates do so contrary run,
That our Deuices still are ouerthrowne,
Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our owne.
So thinke thou wilt no second Husband wed.
But die thy thoughts, when thy first Lord is dead.

Bap. Nor Earth to giue me food, nor Heauen light,
Sport and repose locke from me day and night:
Each opposite that blankes the face of Ioy,
Meet what I would haue well, and it destroy:
Both heere, and hence, pursue me lasting strife,
If once a Widdow, euer I be Wife.

Ham. If she should breake it now.

King. 'Tis deeply sworne:
Sweet, leaue me heere a while,
My spirits grow dull, and faine I would beguile
The tedious day with sleepe.

Qu. Sleepe rocke thy Braine, Sleepes
And neuer come mischance betwene vs twaine. Exit

Ham. Madam, how like you this Play?

Qu. The Lady protests to much me thinkes.
Ham. Oh but shee'l keepe her word.

King. Haue you heard the Argument, is there no Offence in't?

Ham. No, no, they do but iest, poyson in iest, no Offence in't world.

King. What do you call the Play?

Ham. The Mouse-trap: Marry how? Tropically:
This Play is the Image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzago is the Dukes name, his wife Baptista: you shall see anon: 'tis a knauish peece of worke: But what o'ther?
Your Maiestie, and wee that haue free soules, it touches vs not: let the gail d jade winch: our withers are vnring.

Enter Lucianus.

This is one Lucianus nephew to the King.

Ophe. You are a good Chorus, my Lord.

Ham. I could interpret betwene you and your loue:

if I could see the Puppets dallying.

Ophe. You are keene my Lord, you are keene.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge.

Ophe. Still better and worse.

Ham. So you mistake Husbands.

Begin Murderer. Pox, leaue thy damnable Faces, and begin. Come, the croaking Rauens doth bellow for Reuenge.

Lucian. Thoughts blacke, hands apt,
Drugges fit, and Time agreeing:

Confederate season, else, no Creature seeing:
Thou mixture ranke, of Midnight Weeds collected,
With Hecats Ban, thrice blasted, thrice infected,
Thy naturall Magicke, and dire propertie,
On wholsome life, vsurpe immediately.

Ham. He poysons him in'th Garden for's estate: His name's Gonzago: the Story is extant and writ in choyce

Italian. You shall see anon how the Murderer gets the loue of Gonzago's wife.

Ophe. The King rises.

Ham. What, frighted with false fire,

Qu. How fares my Lord?

Pol. Giue o'the Play.

King. Giue me some Light. Away.

All. Lights, Lights, Lights. Exit

Manet Hamlet & Horatio.

Ham. Why let the stricken Deere go weepe,

The Hart vngalled play:
For some must watch, while some must sleepe;
So runnes the world away.

Would not this Sir, and a Forrest of Feathers, if the rest of my Fortunes turne Turke with me; with two Provinciall Roses on my rac'd Shooes, get me a Fellowship in aerie of Players fit.

Hor. Halfe a share.

Ham. A whole one I,

For thou dost know: Oh Damon deere,
This Realme dismantled was of Ioue himselfe,
And now reignes heere.

A verie verie Paoecke.

Hor. You might haue Rim'd.

Ham. Oh good Horatio, Ile take the Ghosts word for a thousand pound. Didst perceiue?

Hor. Verie well my Lord.

Ham. Vpon the talke of the poysoning?

Hor. I did verie well note him.

Enter Rosinrance and Guildenstern.

Ham. Oh, ha? Come some Musick. Come y Recorder!

For if the King like not the Comedie,

Why then belike he likes it not perdie.

Come some Musicke.

Guild. Good my Lord, vouchsafe me a word with you.

Ham.

Ham. Sir, a whole History.

Guild. The King, sir.

Ham. I sir, what of him?

Guild. Is in his retyrement, maruellous distemper'd.

Ham. With drinke Sir?

Guild. No my Lord, rather with choller.

Ham. Your wisdom should shew it selfe more richer, to signifie this to his Doctor: for for me to put him to his Purgation, would perhaps plundge him into farre more Choller.

Guild. Good my Lord put your discourse into some frame, and shut not so wildly from my affayre.

Ham. I am tacit Sir, pronounce.

Guild. The Queene your Mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guild. Nay, good my Lord, this courtesie is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a whol-some answer, I will doe your Mothers commandment:

if not, your pardon, and my returne shall bee the end of my Businesse.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guild. What, my Lord?

Ham. Make you a wholsome answer: my wits disceas'd. But sir, such answers as I can make, you shall command: or rather you say, my Mother: therefore no more but to the matter. My Mother you say.

Rosin. Then thus she sayes: your behavior hath stroke her into amazement, and admiration.

Ham. Oh wonderfull Sonne, that can so astonish a Mother. But is there no sequell at the heeles of this Mothers admiration?

Rosin. She desires to speake with you in her Closet, ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our Mother.
Haue you any further Trade with vs?

Rosin. My Lord, you once did loue me.

Ham. So I do still, by these pickers and stealers.

Rosin. Good my Lord, what is your cause of distemper? You do freely barre the doore of your owne Liber-tie, if you deny your griefes to your Friend.

Ham. Sir I lacke Aduancement.

Rosin. How can that be, when you haue the voyce of the King himselfe, for your Succession in Denmarke?

Ham. I, but while the grassie growes, the Prouerbe is something musty.

Enter one with a Recorder.

O the Recorder. Let me see, to withdraw with you, why do you go about to recover the winde of mee, as if you would drine me into a toyle?

Guild. O my Lord, if my Dutie be too bold, my loue is too vnmanly.

Ham. I do not well vnderstand that. Will you play vpon this Pipe?

Guild. My Lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guild. Beleeue me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you.

Guild. I know no touch of it, my Lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easie as lying: gouerne these Ventiges with your finger and thumbe, giue it breath with your mouth, and it will discoure most excellent Musicke.

Looke you, these are the stoppes.

Guild. But these cannot I command to any vitterance of othermony, I haue not the skill.

Ham. Why looke you now, how vnworthy a thing you make of me: you would play vpon mee; you would seeme to know my stops: you would pluck out the heart of my Mysterie; you would sound mee from my lowest Note, to the top of my Compass: and there is much Mu-sicke, excellent Voice, in this little Organe, yet cannot you make it. Why do you thinke, that I am easier to bee plaid on, then a Pipe? Call me what Instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play vpon me. God blesse you Sir.

Enter Polonius.

Polon. My Lord; the Queene would speake with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see that Clowd? that's almost in shape like a Camell.

Polon. By'th Misse, and it's like a Camell indeed.

Ham. Me thinkes it is like a Weazell.

Polon. It is back'd like a Weazell.

Ham. Or like a Whale?

Polon. Verie like a Whale.

Ham. Then will I come to my Mother, by and by:
They foole me to the top of my bent.

I will come by and by.

Polon. I will say so.

Ham. By and by, is easly said. Leau me Friends:

'Tis now the verie witching time of night,
When Churchyards yawne, and Hell it selfe breaths out
Congration to this world. Now could I drinke hot blood,

And do such bitter businesse as the day
Would quake to looke on. Soft now, to my Mother:
Oh Heart, loose not thy Nature; let not euer

The Soule of Nero, enter this frame bofome:
Let me be cruell, not vnnaturall,

I will speake Daggers to her, but vse none:
My Tongue and Soule in this be Hypocrites.

How in my words somer time shee be silent,
To giue them Seales, neuer my Soule consent.

Enter King, Rosinrance, and Guildenstern.

King. I like him not, nor stands it safe with vs,
To let his madnesse range. Therefore prepare you,
I your Commission will forthwith dispatch,
And he to England shall along with you:

The termes of our estate, may not endure
Hazard so dangerous as doth hourly grow
Out of his Lunacies.

Guild. We will our selues prouide:
Most holie and Religious feare it is
To keepe those many many bodies safe
That liue and feede vpon your Maiestie.

Rosin. The single
And peculiar life is bound
With all the strength and Armour of the minde,
To keepe it selfe from noyance: but much more,
That Spirit, vpon whose spirit depends and rests
The liues of many, the case of Maiestie
Dies not alone; but like a Gulfe doth draw
What's neere it, with it. It is a massie wheele
Fixt on the Sommet of the highest Mount,
To whose huge Spokes, ten thousand lesser things
Are mortiz'd and adioyn'd: which when it fallies,
Each small annexment, pettie consequence
Attends the boystrous Ruine. Neuer alone
Did the King fighe, but with a generall grone.

King. Arme you, I pray you to this speedie Voyage;
For we will fetters put vpon this feare,

pp Which

Which now goes too free-footed.

Both. We will haste vs.

Exeunt Gent.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My Lord, he's going to his Mothers Closet:
Behinde the Arras Ile conuey my selfe
To heare the Proceffe. Ile warrant shew tax him home,
And as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meete that some more audience then a Mother,
Since Nature makes them partiall, should o're-heare
The speech of vantage. Fare you well my Liege,
Ile call vpon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King. Thanks deere my Lord,
Oh my offence is ranke, it smels to heauen,
It hath the primall eldest curse vpon't,
A Brothers murther: Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharpe as will:
My stronger guilt, defeats my strong intent,
And like a man to double businesse bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect; what if this curfed hand
Were thicker then it selfe with Brothers blood,
Is there not Raine enough in the sweet Heauens
To wash it white as Snow? Whereto serues mercy,
But to confront the visage of Offence?
And what's in Prayer, but this two-fold force,
To be fore-stalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being downe? Then Ile looke vp,
My fault is past. But oh, what forme of Prayer
Can serue my turne? Forgiue me my foule Murther:
That cannot be, since I am still possesst
Of those effects for which I did the Murther.
My Crowne, mine owne Ambition, and my Queene:
May one be pardon'd, and retaine th'offence?
In the corrupted currantes of this world,
Offences gilded hand may shoue by Iustice,
And oft 'tis seene, the wicked prize it selfe
Buyes out the Law; but 'tis not so aboue,
There is no shuffling, there the Action lies
In his true Nature, and we our selues compell'd
Euen to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To glue in euidence. What then? What rests?
Try what Repentance can. What can it not?
Yet what can it, when one cannot repent?
Oh wretched state! Oh boosome, blacke as death!
Oh limed soule, that struggling to be free,
Art more ingag'd: Helpe Angels, make assay:
Bow stubborn knees, and heart with strings of Steele,
Be soft as sinewes of the new-borne Babe,
All may be well.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I do it pat, now he is praying,
And now Ile doo't, and so he goes to Heauen,
And so am I reueng'd: that would be scann'd,
A Villaine kills my Father, and for that
This foule Sonne, do this same Villaine send
To heauen. Oh this is hyre and Sallery, not Reuenge.
He tookes my Father grossely, full of bread,
With all his Crimes broad blowne, as fresh as May,
And how his Audit stands, who knowes, false Heauen:
But in our circumstance and course of thought
'Tis heauie with him: and am I then reueng'd,
To take him in the purging of his Soule,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage? No,
Vp Sword, and know thou a more horrid hent

When he is drunke asleepe: or in his Rage,
Or in th'incestuous pleasure of his bed,
At gaming, swearing, or about some acte
That ha's no rellish of Saluation in't,
Then trip him, that his heeles may kicke at Heauen,
And that his Soule may be as damn'd and blacke
As Hell, whereto it goes. My Mother staves,
This Physicke but prolongs thy sickly dayes.
King. My words flye vp, my thoughts remain below,
Words without thoughts, neuer to Heauen go.

Enter Queene and Polonius.

Pol. He will come straight:
Looke you lay home to him,
Tell him his pranks haue been too broad to beare with,
And that your Grace hath scree'd, and stood betweene
Much heate, and him. Ile silence me e'ne heere:
Pray you be round with him.

Ham. within. Mother, mother, mother.

Qu. Ile warrant you, feare me not.

Withdraw, Ile heare him coming.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now Mother, what's the matter?
Qu. Hamlet, thou hast thy Father much offended.
Ham. Mother, you haue my Father much offended.
Qu. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.
Ham. Go, go, you question with an idle tongue.
Qu. Why how now Hamlet?
Ham. Whats the matter now?
Qu. Haue you forgot me?
Ham. No by the Rood, not so:
You are the Queene, your Husbonds Brothers wife,
But would you were not so. You are my Mother.
Qu. Nay, then Ile set those to you that can speake.
Ham. Come, come, and sit you downe, you shall not budge:
You go not till I set you vp a glasse,
Where you may see the inmost part of you?
Qu. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murther me?
Helpe, helpe, ho.

Pol. What ho, helpe, helpe, helpe.

Ham. How now, a Rat? dead for a Ducate, dead.

Pol. Oh I am slaine.

Killes Polonius.

Qu. Oh me, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay I know not, is it the King?

Qu. Oh what a rash, and bloody deed is this?

Ham. A bloody deed, almost as bad good Mother,

As kill a King, and marrie with his Brother.

Qu. As kill a King?

Ham. I Lady, 'twas my word.

Thou wretched, rash, intruding foole farewell,
Iooke thee for thy Betters, take thy Fortune,
Thou find'st to be too busie, is some danger.
Leane wringing of your hands, peace, sit you downe,
And let me wring your heart, for so I shall
If it be made of penetrable stuffe;
If damned Custome haue not braz'd it so,
That it is proofe and bulwarke against Sense.

Qu. What haue I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tong,
In noife so rude against me?

Ham. Such an Act

That blurs the grace and blissh of Modestie,
Calls Vertue Hypocrite, takes off the Rose
From the faire forehead of an innocent loue,
And makes a blister there. Makes marriage vowes
As false as Dicers Oathes. Oh such a deed,

As from the body of Contraction pluckes
The very soule, and sweate Religion makes Arapsidie of words. Heauens face doth glow,
Yea this solidiry and compound masse,
With trustfull visage as against the doome;
Is thought-sicke at the acte.

Qu. Aye me; what act, that roares so lowd, & thunders in the index.

Ham. Looke heere vpon this Picture, and on this,
The counterfet presentment of two Brothers:
See what a grace was seated on his Brow.
Hyperions curls, the front of Ioue himselfe,
An eye like Mars, to threaten or command
A Station, like the Herald Mercurie
New lighted on a heauen-kissing hill:
A Combination, and a forme indeed,
Where every God did seeme to set his Seale;
To giue the world assurance of a man.
This was your Husband, Looke you now what followes.
Heere is your Husband, like a Mildew'd eare
Blasting his wholsom breath. Haue you eyes?
Could you on this faire Mountaine leaue to feed,
And batten on this Moore? Ha? Haue you eyes?
You cannot call it Loue: For at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waites vpon the Iudgement: and what Iudgement
Would step from this, to this? What diuell was't,
That thus hath coufend you at hoodman-blinde?
O Shame! where is thy Blush? Rebellious Hell,
If thou canst mutine in a Marrons bones,
To flaming youth, let Vertue be as waxe,
And melt in her owne fire. Proclaime no shame,
When the compulsiue Ardure giues the charge,
Since Frost it selfe, as a deliely doth burne,
As Reason panders Will.

Qu. O Hamlet, speake no more.

Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soule,
And there I see such blacke and grained spots,
As will not leaue their Tinct.

Ham. Nay, but to liue

In the ranke sweat of an enseamed bed,
Stew'd in Corruption; honying and making loue
Ouer the nasty Syce.

Qu. Oh speake to me, no more,

Thee words like Daggers enter in mine eares.
No more sweet Hamlet.

Ham. A Murderer, and a Villaine:

A Slave, that is not twentieth part the tythe
Of your precedent Lord. A vice of Kings,
A Curpuse of the Empire and the Rule.
That from a shelle, the precious Diadem stole,
And put it in his Pocket.

Qu. No more.

Enter Ghost.

Ham. A King of freds and patches.
Sane me; and houer o're me with your wings
You heauenly Guards. What would you gracious figure?

Qu. Alas he's mad.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy Sonne to chide,
That laps't in Time and Passion, lets go by Th'important actings of your dread command? Oh say.

Ghost. Do not forget this Visitation
Is but to what thy almost blunted purpose.
But looke. Amazement on thy Mother sits;
O step betweene her, and her fighting Soule,
Conceit in weakest bodies, strongest workes.

Speake to her Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you Lady?

Qu. Alas, how is't with you?

That you bend your eye on vacancie,
And with their corporall ayre do hold discourse.
Forth at your eyes, your spirits wildly peepe;
And as the sleeping Soldiours in th'Alarmer,
Your bedded haire, like life in excrements,
Stare vp, and stand an end. Oh gentle Sonne,
Vpon the heate and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle coole patience. Whereon do you looke?
Ham. On him, on him; look you how pale he glares,
His forme and cause conioyn'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capeable. Do not looke vpon me,
Least with this pittieous action you conuert;
My sterne effects: then what I haue to do,
Will want true colour; teares per chance for blood.

Qu. To who do you speake this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Qu. Nothing at all, yet all that is I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing heare?

Qu. No, nothing but our selues.

Ham. Why look you there: looke how it steals away:
My Father in his habite, as he liued,
Looke where he goes euen now out at the Portall. Exit.

Qu. This is the very coynage of your Braine,
This bodilesse Creation extraxt is very cunning in.

Ham. Extraxt?

My Pulse as yours doth temperately keepe time,
And makes as healthfull Musicke. It is not madnesse
That I haue utter'd; bring me to the Test
And I the matter will re-word: which madnesse
Would gamboll from. Mother, for loue of Grace,
Lay not a flattering Vnction to your soule,
That not your trespasses, but my madnesse speaks:
It will but skin and filme the Vlcereous place,
Whil'st ranke Corruption minning all within,
Infects vsene. Confesse your selfe to Heauen,
Repent what's past, auoyd what is to come,
And do not spred the Compost or the Weedes,
To make them ranke. Forgiue me this my Vertue,
For in the farnesse of this purfite times,
Vertue it selfe, of Vice most pardon begges,
Yea court, and woe, for leaue to do him good.

Qu. Oh Hamlet,

Thou hast cleft my heart in twaine.

Ham. O throw away the worser part of it,
And liue the purer with the other halfe.
Good night, but go not to mine Vnkles bed,
Assume a Vertue, if you haue it not, refraine to night,
And that shall lend a kinde of easinesse
To the next abstinence. Once more goodnight,
And when you are desirous to be blest,
Ile blessing begge of you. For this same Lord,
I do repent: but heauen hath pleas'd it so,
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their Scourge and Minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gaue him: so againe good night:
I must be cruell, onely to be kinde;
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behinde.

Qu. What shall I do?

Ham. Not this by no meanes: that I bid you do:
Let the blunt King tempt you againe to bed,
Pinch Wanton on your cheekes, call you his Mousse,
And let him for a paire of reechie killes,

Or padding in your necke with his damn'd Fingers,
Make you to rauce all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madnesse,
But made in craft. 'Twere good you let him know,
For who that's but a Queene, faire, sober, wife,
Would from a Paddocke, from a Bat, a Gibbe,
Such deere concernings hide. Who would do so,
No in despite of Sense and Secrecie,
Vnpegge the Basket on the houses top:
Let the Birds flye, and like the famous Ape
To try Conclusions in the Basket, creepe
And breake your owne necke downe.

Qu. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,
And breath of life: I haue no life to breath
What thou hast saide to me.

Ham. I must to England, you know that?

Qu. Alacke I had forgot: 'Tis so concluded on.

Ham. This man shall let me packing:

Ile luge the Guts into the Neighbor roome,
Mother goodnight. Indeede this Counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most graue,
Who was in life, a foolish prating Knaue.
Come fir, to draw toward an end with you.
Good night Mother.

Exit Hamlet tugging in Polonius.

Enter King.

King. There's matters in these sighes.
These profound heaues
You must translate: 'Tis fit we vnderstand them.
Where is your Sonne?

Qu. Ah my good Lord, what haue I scene to night?

King. What Gertrude? How do's Hamlet?

Qu. Mad as the Seas, and winde, when both contend
Which is the Mightier, in his lawlesse fit
Behinde the Arras, hearing something stirre,
He whips his Rapier out, and cries a Rat, a Rat,
And in his brainish apprehension kills
The vnscene good old man.

King. On heauy deed:
It had bin so with vs had we bene there:
His Liberty is full of threats to all,
To you your selfe, to vs, to euery one.
Alas, how shall this bloody deede be answered?
It will be laide to vs, whose prouidence
Should haue kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt,
This mad yong man. But so much was our loue,
We would not vnderstand what was most fit,
But like the Owner of a foule disease,
To keepe it from divulging, let's it feede
Euen on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Qu. To draw apart the body he hath kild,
Ore whom his very madnesse like some Oare
Among a Minerall of Mettels base
Shewes it selfe pure. He weepes for what is done.

King. Oh Gertrude, come away:

The Sun no sooner shall the Mountaines touch,
But we will ship him hence, and this vilde deed,
We must with all our Maiesty and Skill
Both counteruance, and execute.

Enter Ros. & Guild.

Ho Guildenstern:

Friends both go Ioyne you with some further ayde:

Hamlet in madnesse hath Polonius slaine,

And from his Mother Cloisters hath he drag'd him.

Go seeke him out, speake faire, and bring the body

Into the Chappell. I pray you hast in this. Exit Gent.

Come Gertrude, we'll call vp our wisest friends,

To let them know both what we meane to do,
And what's vntimely done. Oh come away,
My soule is full of discord and dismay.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Safely stowed.

Gentlemen within. Hamlet, Lord Hamlet.

Ham. What noyse? Who calls on Hamlet?

Oh heere they come.

Enter Ros. and Guildenstern.

Ro. What haue you done my Lord with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kinne.

Rosin. Tell vs where 'tis, that we may take it thence,
And beare it to the Chappell.

Ham. Do not beleue it.

Rosin. Beleue what?

Ham. That I can keepe your counsell, and not mine owne. Besides, to be demanded of a Spundge, what replication should be made by the Sonne of a King.

Rosin. Take you me for a Spundge, my Lord?

Ham. I sir, that sokes vp the Kings Countenance, his Rewards, his Authorities (but such Officers do the King best seruice in the end. He keepe them like an Ape in the corner of his iaw, first mow'd to be last swallowed,

when he needs what you haue glean'd, it is but squeezing you, and Spundge you shall be dry againe.

Rosin. I vnderstand you not my Lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: a knauish speech sleeps in a foolish eare.

Rosin. My Lord, you must tell vs where the body is,
and go with vs to the King.

Ham. The body is with the King, but the King is not with the body. The King is a thing —

Guild. A thing my Lord?

Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him, hide Fox, and all after. Exit.

Enter King.

King. I haue sent to seeke him, and to find the bodie:

How dangerous is it that this man goes loose:

Yet must not we put the strong Law on him:

Hee's loued of the distracted multitude,
Who like not in their iudgement, but their eyes:

And where 'tis so, th'Offenders scourge is weigh'd
But neuer the offence: to beare all smooth, and euen,

This todaine sending him away, must seeme
Deliberate pause, diseases desperate growne,

By desperate appliance are releu'd,
Or not at all.

Enter Rosin. & Guild.

How now? What hath befallne?

Rosin. Where the dead body is bestow'd my Lord,
We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he?

Rosin. Without my Lord, guarded to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before vs.

Rosin. Hoa, Guildenstern? Bring in my Lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

King. Now Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At Supper.

King. At Supper? Where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten, a certaine conuocation of wormes are e'ne at him. Your worm is your onely Emperour for diet. We fat all creatures else to fat vs, and we fat our selfe for Magors. Your fat King, and your leane Begger is but variable seruice to dishes,

but to one Table that's the end.

King. What dost thou meane by this?

Ham.

Ham. Nothing but to shew you how a King may go a Progresse through the guts of a Begger.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heauen, send thither to see. If your Messenger finde him not there, seeke him i'th other place your selfe: but indeed, if you finde him not this moneth, you shall nose him as you go vp the staires into the Lobby.

King. Go seeke him there.

Ham. He will stay till ye come.

K. Hamlet, this deed of thine, for thine especial safety

Which we do tender, as we deereely greeue

For that which thou hast done, must send thee hence

With stierie Quicknesse. Therefore prepare thy selfe,

The Barke is readie, and the winde at helpe,

Th' Associates tend, and euery thing at bent

For England.

Ham. For England?

King. I Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a Cherube that see's him: but come, for England. Farewell deere Mother.

King. Thy louing Father Hamlet.

Hamlet. My Mother: Father and Mother is man and wife: man & wife is one flesh, and so my mother. Come, for England. Exit.

King. Follow him at foote,

Tempt him with speed aboard:

Delay it not, Ile haue him hence to night.

Away, for euery thing is Seal'd and done

That else leanes on th'Affaire, pray you make hast.

And England, if my loue thou hold'st at ought,

As my great power thereof may giue thee sense,

Since yet thy Cicatrice looks raw and red

After the Danish Sword, and thy free awe

Payes homage to vs: thou mai'st not coldly set

Our Soueraigne Proccesse, which imports at full

By Letters coniuring to that effect

The present death of Hamlet. Do it England,

For like the Heddicke in my blood he rages,

And thou must cure me: Till I know 'tis done,

How ere my happes, my ioyes were ne're begun. Exit.

Enter Fortinbras with an Armie.

For. Go Captaine, from me greet the Danish King,

Tell him that by his license, Fortinbras

Claimes the conueyance of a promis'd March

Over his Kingdome. You know the Renduous:

If that his Maiesty would ought with vs,

We shall expresse our dutie in his eye,

And let him know so.

Cap. I will doo't, my Lord.

For. Go safely on. Exit.

Enter Queene and Horatio.

Qu. I will not speake with her.

Hor. She is importunate, indeed distracted, her moode will needs be pittied.

Qu. What would she haue?

Hor. She speakes much of her Father; saies she heares

There's trickes i'th'world, and hems, and beats her heart,

Spurnes enuiously at Strawes, speakes things in doubt,

That carry but halfe sense: Her speech is nothing,

Yet the vnshaped vse of it doth moue

The hearers to Collection; they ayme at it,

And botch the words vp fit to their owne thoughts, i

Which as her winks, and nods, and gestures yeeld them,

Indeed would make one thinke there would be thought,
Though nothing sure, yet much vnhappy.

Qu. 'Twere good she were spoken with,

For she may strew dangerous coniectures

In ill breeding minds. Let her come in.

To my sicke soule (as sinnes true Nature is)

Each toy seemes Prologue, to some great amisse,

So full of Artlesse ieaiousie is guilt,

It spill's it selfe, in fearing to be spilt.

Enter Ophelia distracted.

Ophe. Where is the beauteous Maiesty of Denmark.

Qu. How now Ophelia?

Ophe. How should I your true loue know from another one?

By his Cockle hat and staffe, and his Sandal shoone.

Qu. Alas sweet Lady: what imports this Song?

Ophe. Say you? Nay pray you marke.

He is dead and gone Lady, he is dead and gone,

At his head a grasse-greene Turfe, at his heeles a stone.

Enter King.

Qu. Nay but Ophelia.

Ophe. Pray you marke.

White his Shrow'd as the Mountaine Snow.

Qu. Alas, looke heere my Lord.

Ophe. Larded with sweet flowers:

Which bewept to the graue did not go,

With true-loue showres.

King. How do ye, pretty Lady?

Ophe. Well, God dil'd you. They say the Owle was a Bakers daughter. Lord, wee know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your Table.

King. Conceit vpon her Father.

Ophe. Pray you let's haue no words of this: but when they aske you what it meanes, say you this:

To morrow is S. Valentines day, all in the morning betime,

And I a Maid at your Window, to be your Valentine.

Then up he rose, & don'd his clothes, & dapt the chamber dore,

Let in the Maid, that out a Maid, neuer departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia.

Ophe. Indeed la? without an oath Ile make an end on't.

Bygis, and by S. Charity,

Alacke, and fie for shame:

Young men wil doo't, if they come too't,

By Cocke they are too blame.

Quoth she before you tumbled me,

You promis'd me to Wed:

So would I ha done by yonder Swanne,

And thou had'st not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she bin thus?

Ophe. I hope all will be well. We must bee patient, but I cannot choos'e but weepe, to thinke they should lay him i'th' cold ground: My brother shall knowe of it, and so I thanke you for your good counsell. Come, my

Coach: Goodnight Ladies: Goodnight sweet Ladies:

Goodnight, goodnight. Exit.

King. Follow her close,

Giue her good watch I pray you:

Oh this is the poysen of deepe greefe, it springs

All from her Fathers death. Oh Gertrude, Gertrude,

When sorrowes comes, they come not single spies,

But in Battalies. First, her Father slaine,

Next your Sonne gone, and he most violent Author

Of his owne iust remoue: the people muddied,

Thicke and vnwholsome in their thoughts, and whispers

For good Polonius death; and we haue done but greenly

In hugger mugger to interre him. Poore Ophelia

Diuided from her selfe, and her faire Iudgement, pp 3

Without

Without the which we are Pictures, or meere Beasts.
Last, and as much containing as all these,
Her Brother is in secret come from France,
Keepes on his wonder, keepes himselfe in clouds,
And wants not Buzzers to infect his care
With pestilent Speeches of his Fathers death,
Where in necessitie of matter Beggard,
Will nothing sticke our persons to Arraigne
In care and care. O my deere Gertrude, this,
Like to a murdering Peece in many places,
Giues me superfluous death. A Noise within.

Enter a Messenger.

Qu. Alacke, what noyse is this?

King. Where are my Switzers?
Let them guard the doore. What is the matter?

Mes. Saue your selfe, my Lord.

The Ocean (ouer-peering of his List)
Eates not the Flats with more impittious haste
Then young Laertes, in a Riotous head,
Ore-bears your Officers, the rabble call him Lord,
And as the world were now but to begin,
Antiquity forgot, Custome not knowne,
The Ratifiers and props of euery word,
They cry choofe we? Laertes shall be King,
Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes shall be King, Laertes King.

Qu. How cheerefully on the false Traile they cry,
Oh this is Counter you false Danish Dogges,

Noise within. Enter Laertes.

King. The doores are broke.

Laer. Where is the King, sirs? Stand you all without.

All. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you giue me leaue.

All. We will, we will.

Laer. I thanke you: Keepe the doore.

Oh thou vilde King, giue me my Father.

Qu. Calmely good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood, that calmes
Proclaimes me Bassard:

Cries Cuckold to my Father, brands the Harlot
Euen heere betweene the chaste vnsmirched brow
Of my true Mother.

King. What is the cause Laertes,
That thy Rebellion lookes so Gyant-like?
Let him go Gertrude: Do not feare our person:
There's such Diuinity doth hedge a King,
That Treason can but peepe to what it would,
Acts little of his will. Tell me Laertes,
Why thou art thus Incens'd? Let him go Gertrude.
Speake man.

Laer. Where's my Father?

King. Dead.

Qu. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? Ile not be Iuggel'd with.
To hell Allegiance: Vowes to the blackest diuell.
Conscience and Grace, to the profoundest Pit,
I dare Damnation: to this point I stand,
That both the worlds I giue to negligence,
Let come what comes: onely Ile be reueng'd
Most thoroughly for my Father.

King. Who shall say you?

Laer. My Will, not all the world,
And for my meanes, Ile husband them so well,
They shall go farre with little.

King. Good Laertes:

If you desire to know the certaintie
Of your deere Fathers death, if writ in your reuenge,
That Soop-stake you will draw both Friend and Foe,
Winner and Looter.

Laer. None but his Enemies.

King. Will you know them then,

La. To his good Friends, thus wide Ile open my Armes:
And like the kinde Life-rend'ring Politician,
Repast them with my blood.

King. Why now you speake

Like a good Childe, and a true Gentleman,
That I am guiltlesse of your Fathers death;
And am most sensible in griefe for it,
It shall as leuell to your Iudgement pierce
As day do's to your eye.

*A noise within. Let her come in.
Enter Ophelia.*

Laer. How now? what noyse is that?

Oh heate drie vp my Braines, teares seuen times salt,
Burne out the Sence and Vertue of mine eye,
By Heauen, thy madnesse shall be payed by waight,
Till our Scale turnes the beame. Oh Roie of May,
Deere Maid, kinde Sister, sweet Ophelia:
Oh Heauens, is't possible, a yong Maids wits,
Should be as mortall as an old mans life?
Nature is fine in Loue, and where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance of it selfe
After the thing it loues.

Oph. They bore him bare fuc'd on the Beer,

Hey non nony, nony, hey nony:

And on his graue raines many a teare,

Fare you well my Dove.

Laer. Had'st thou thy wits, and did'st perswade Reuenge, it could not moue thus.

Oph. You must sing downe a-downe, and you call him a-downe-a. Oh, how the wheele becomes it? It is the false Steward that stole his masters daughter.

Laer. This nothing more then matter.

Oph. There's Rosemary, that's for Remembrance.
Pray loue remember: and there is Paeonies, that's for Thoughts.

Laer. A document in madnesse, thoughts & remembrance fitted.

Oph. There's Fennell for you, and Columbines: ther's
Rew for you, and heere's some for me. Wee may call it Herbe-Grace a Sundaries: Oh you must weare your Rew with a difference. There's a Daylie, I would giue you some Violets, but they wither'd all when my Father dyed: They say, he made a good end;

For bonny sweet Robin is all my ioy.

Laer. Thought, and Affliction, Passion, Hell it selfe:
She turnes to Fauour, and to prettinesse.

Oph. And will he not come againe,

And will he not come againe:

No, no, he is dead, go to thy Death-bed,

He neuer wil come againe.

His Beard as white as Snow,

All Flaxen was his Pole:

He is gone, he is gone, and we cast away mone,

Gramercy on his Soule.

And of all Christian Soules, I pray God.

God buy ye. Exeunt Ophelia

Laer. Do you see this, you Gods?

King. Laertes, I must common with your griefe,
Or you deny me right: go but apart,

Make

Make choice of whom your wisest Friends you will,
And they shall heare and iudge 'twixt you and me;
If by direct or by Colaterall hand
They finde vs touch'd, we will our Kingdome giue,
Our Crowne, our Life, and all that we call Ours
To you in satisfaction. But if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to vs,
And we shall ioyntly labour with your soule
To giue it due content.

Laer. Let this be so:

His meanes of death, his obscure buriall;
No Trophée, Sword, nor Hatchment o're his bones,
No Noble rite, nor formall ostentation,
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from Heauen to Earth,
That I must call in question.

King. So you shall:

And where th'offence is, let the great Axe fall.
I pray you go with me. Exeunt

Enter Horatio, with an Attendant.

Hor. What are they that would speake with me?

Ser. Saylor's sir, they say they haue Letters for you.

Hor. Let them come in,

I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted; if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Saylor.

Say. God blesse you Sir.

Hor. Let him blesse thee too.

Say. Hee shall Sir, and 'e please him. There's a Letter for you Sir: It comes from th'Ambassadours that was bound for England, if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Reads the Letter.

*H*Oratio, When thou shalt haue ouerlook'd this, giue these Fellows some meanes to the King: They haue Letters for him. Ere we were two dayes old at Sea, a Pyrate of very warlike appointment gaue vs Chase. Finding our selues too slow of Saile, we put on a compelled Valour. In the Grapple, I boarded them: On the instant they got cleare of our Skippe, so I alone became their Prisoner. They haue dealt with mee, like Theemes of Mercy, but they knew what they did. I am to doe a good turne for them. Let the King haue the Letters I haue sent, and repaire thou to me with as much hast as thou wouldst flee death. I haue words to speake in your eare, will make thee dumbe, yet are they much too light for the bore of the Matter.
These good Fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosinbrance and Guildenstern, hold their course for England. Of them
I haue much to tell thee, Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine,

Hamlet.

Come, I will giue you way for these your Letters,
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me.

To him from whom you brought them. Exit.

Enter King and Laertes.

King. Now must your conscience my acquittance seal,
And you must put me in your heart for Friend,
Sith you haue heard, and with a knowing eare,
That he which hath your Noble Father slaine,
Pursued my life.

Laer. It well appeares. But tell me,

Why you proceeded not against these feates,

So crimefull, and so Capital in Nature,

As by your Safety, Wisedome, all things else,

You mainly were stirr'd vp?

King. O for two speciall Reasons,
Which may to you (perhaps) seeme much vnseasonow'd,
And yet to me they are strong. The Queen his Mother,
Liues almost by his lookes: and for my selfe,
My Vertue or my Plague, be it either which,
She's so coniunctiue to my life and soule;
That as the Starre moues not but in his Sphere,
I could not but by her. The other Motiue,
Why to a publike count I might not go,
Is the great loue the generall gender beare him,
Who dipping all his Faults in their affection,
Would like the Spring that turneth Wood to Stone,
Conuert his Gyues to Graces. So that my Arrowes
Too slightly timbr'd for so loud a Winde,
Would haue reuerted to my Bow againe,
And not where I had arm'd them.

Laer. And so haue I a Noble Father lost,

A Sister driuen into desperate tearmes,

Who was (if praises may go backe againe)

Stood Challenger on mount of all the Age

For her perfections. But my reuenge will come.

King. Breake not your sleepes for that,

You must not thinke

That we are made of stufte, so flat, and dull,

That we can let our Beard be shooke with danger,

And thinke it pastime. You shortly shall heare more,

I lou'd your Father, and we loue our Selfe,

And that I hope will teach you to imagine.

Enter a Messenger.

How now? What Newes?

Mes. Letters my Lord from Hamlet. This to your Majesty: this to the Queene.

King. From Hamlet? Who brought them?

Mes. Saylor's my Lord they say, I saw them not:

They were giuen me by Claudio, he receiu'd them.

King. Laertes you shall heare them:

Leaue vs. Exit Messenger

High and Mighty, you shall know I am set naked on your

Kingdome. To morrow shall I begge leaue to see your Kingly

Eyes. When I shall (first asking your Pardon thereunto) re- count th'Occasions of my sodaine, and more strange returne.

Hamlet.

What should this meane? Are all the rest come backe?

Or is it some abuse? Or no such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlets Character, naked and in a Postscript here he sayes alone: Can you aduise me?

Laer. I'm lost in it my Lord; but let him come,

It warms the very sicknesse in my heart,

That I shall liue and tell him to his teeth;

Thus diddest thou.

King. If it be so Laertes, as how should it be so:

How otherwise will you be rul'd by me?

Laer. If so you'l not o'rerule me to a peace.

King. To thine owne peace: if he be now return'd,

As checking at his Voyage, and that he meanes

No more to vndertake it; I will worke him

To an exployt now ripe in my Deuice,

Vnder the which he shall not choofe but fall;

And for his death no winde of blame shall breath,

But euen his Mother shall vncharge the practice,

And call it accident: Some two Monthes hence

Here was a Gentleman of Normandy,

I'ue scene my selfe, and seru'd against the French,

And they ran well on Horsebacke; but this Gallant

Had

Had witchcraft in't; he grew into his Seat,
And to such wondrous doing brought his Horse,
As had he beene encorps't and demy-Natur'd
With the braue Beast, so farre he past my thought,
That I in forgery of shapes and trickes,
Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman was't?

Kim. A Norman.

Laer. Vpon my life Lamound.

Kim. The very same.

Laer. I know him well, he is the Brooch indeed,
And Iemee of all our Nation.

Kim. Hee mad confession of you,
And gaue you such a Masterly report,
For Art and exercise in your defence;
And for your Rapier most especially,
That he cryed out, 't would be a sight indeed,
If one could match you Sir, This report of his
Did Hamlet so enuie with his Enuy,
That he could nothing doe but wish and begge,
Your sodaine coming ore to play with him;
Now out of this.

Laer. Why out of this, my Lord?

Kim. Laertes was your Father deare to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

Laer. Why aske you this?

Kim. Nor that I thinke you did not loue your Father,
But that I know Loue is begun by Time:
And that I see in passages of prooffe,
Time qualifys the sparke and fire of it:
Hamlet comes backe: what would you vndertake,
To show your selfe your Fathers sonne indeed,
More then in words?

Laer. To cut his throat i'th' Church.

Kim. No place indeed should murder Sancturize;
Reuenge should haue no bounds: but good Laertes
Will you doe this, keepe close within your Chamber,
Hamlet return'd, shall know you are come home:
Wee'l put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the fame
The Frenchman gaue you, bring you in fine together,
And wager on your heads, he being remisse,
Most generous, and free from all contriuing,
Will not peruse the Foiles? So that with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choofe
A Sword vnbaired, and in a passe of practice,
Requite him for your Father.

Laer. I will doo't.

And for that purpose Ile annoint my Sword:
I bought an Vnction of a Mountebanke
So mortall, I but dipt a knife in it,
Where it drawes blood, no Cataplasme so rare,
Collected from all Simples that haue Vertue
Vnder the Moone, can saue the thing from death,
That is but scratcht withall: Ile touch my point,
With this contagion, that if I gall him slightly,
It may be death.

Kim. Let's further thinke of this,
Weigh what conuenience both of time and meanes
May fit vs to our shape, if this should faile;
And that our drift looke through our bad performance,
'T were better not affaid; therefore this Project
Should haue a backe or second, that might hold,
If this should blaft in prooffe: Soft, let me see
Wee'l make a solemne wager on your commings;

I hat: when in your motion you are hot and dry,
As make your bowts more violent to the end,
And that he calls for drinke; Ile haue prepar'd him
A Chalice for the nonce; whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,
Our purpose may hold there; how sweet Queene,

Enter Queene.

Queen. One woe doth tread vpon anothers heele,
So fast they'll follow: your Sister's drown'd Laertes.

Laer. Drown'd! O where?

Queen. There is a Willow growes aslant a Brooke,
That shewes his hore leaues in the glassie streame:
There with fantastick Garlands did she come,
Of Crow-flowers, Nettles, Dayfies, and long Purples,
That liberrall Shepheards giue a grosser name;
But our cold Maids doe Dead Mens Fingers call them:
There on the pendant boughes, her Coronet weeds
Clambring to hang; an eniuious flouer broke,
When downe the weedy Trophies, and her selfe,
Fell in the weeping Brooke, her clothes spred wide,
And Mermaid-like, a while they bore her vp,
Which time she chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her owne distresse,
Or like a creature Natieue, and indued
Vnto that Element: but long it could not te,
Till that her garments, heavy with her drinke,
Pul'd the poore wretch from her melodious buy,
To muddy death.

Laer. Alas then, is she drown'd?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou poore Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my teares; but yet
It is our trick, Nature her custome holds,
Let shame say what it will; when these are gone
The woman will be out: Adue my Lord,
I haue a speech of fire, that faine would blaze,
But that this folly doubts it. Exit.

Kim. Let's follow, Gertrude:
How much I had to doe to calme his rage?
Now feare I this will giue it start againe;
Therefore let's follow. Exeunt.

Enter two Clownes.

Clown. Is she to bee buried in Christian buriall, that wilfully seekes her owne saluation?

Other. I tell thee she is, and therefore make her Graue straight, the Crouner hath fate on her, and finds it Christian buriall.

Clow. How can that be, vlesse she drowned her selfe in her owne defence?

Other. Why 'tis found so.

Clow. It must be Se offendendo, it cannot bee else: for heere lies the point; If I drown my selfe wittingly, it argues an Act: and an Act hath three branches. It is an Act to doe and to performe; argall she drown'd her selfe wittingly.

Other. Nay but heare you Goodman Deluer.

Clown. Giue me leaue; heere lies the water; good:
heere stands the man; good: If the man goe to this water and drowne himselfe; it is will he nill he, he goes;
marke you that? But if the water come to him & drowne him; hee drownes not himselfe. Argall, hee that is not guilty of his owne death, shortens not his owne life.

Other. But is this law?

Clow. I marry is't, Crouners Quest Law.

Other.

Other. Will you ha the truth on't: if this had not been a Gentlewoman, shee should haue beene buried out of Christian Buriall.

Clow. Why there thou say'st. And the more pittie that great folke should haue countenance in this world to drowne or hang themselues, more then their euen Christian.
Come, my Spade; there is no ancient Gentlemen, but Gardiners, Ditchers and Graue-makers; they hold vp Adams Profession.

Other. Was he a Gentleman?

Clow. He was the first that euer bore Armes.

Other. Why he had none.

Clow. What, art't a Heathen? how dost thou vnder-stand the Scripture? the Scripture sayes Adam dig'd; could hee digge without Armes? He put another question to thee, and thou answerest me not to the purpose, con-fesse thy selfe.

Other. Go too.

Clow. What is he that builds stronger then either the Mason, the Shipwright, or the Carpenter?

Other. The Gallowes maker; for that Frame outliues a thousand Tenants.

Clow. I like thy wit well in good faith, the Gallowes does well; but how does it well? it does well to those that doe ill: now, thou dost ill to say the Gallowes is built stronger then the Church: Argall, the Gallowes may doe well to thee. Toot againe, Come.

Other. Who builds stronger then a Mason, a Ship-wright, or a Carpenter?

Clow. I, tell me that, and vnyoake.

Other. Marry, now I can tell.

Clow. Toot.

Other. Maffe, I cannot tell.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio a fawre off.

Clow. Cudgell thy braines no more about it; for your dull Ass will not mend his pace with beating; and when you are ask't this question next, say a Graue-maker: the houles that he makes, lasts till Doomesday: go, get thee to Yaughan, fetch me a stoupe of Liquor.

Sings.

In youth when I did lone, did lone,

me thought it was very sweete:

To contract O the time for a my behout,

O me thought there was nothing meete.

Ham. Ha's this fellow no feeling of his businesse, that he sings at Graue-making?

Hor. Custome hath made it in him a property of casinesse.

Ham. 'Tis e'en so; the hand of little Imployment hath the daintier sense.

Clowne sings.

But Age with his stealing steps

hath caught me in his clutch:

And hath shipped me intill the Land,

as if I had neuer bene such.

Ham. That Scull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: how the knaue iowles it to th' grownd, as if it were Caines law-bone, that did the first murder: It might be the Part of a Politician which this Ass o're Offences: one that could circumuent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my Lord.

Ham. Or of a Courtier, which could say, Good Morrow sweet Lord: how dost thou, good Lord? this might be my Lord such a one, that prais'd my Lord such a ones Horse, when he meant to begge it; might it not?

Hor. I, my Lord.

Ham. Why e'en so: and now my Lady Wormes,
Chaplesse, and knockt about the Mazard with a Sexcons Spade; heere's fine Reuolution, if wee had the tricke to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at Loggets with 'em? mine ake to thinke on't.

Clowne sings.

A Pickaxe and a Spade, a Spade,

for and a shrowding-Sheete:

O a Pit of Clay for to be made,

for such a Guest is meete.

Ham. There's another: why might not that bee the Scull of of a Lawyer? where be his Quiddits now? his Quillits? his Cases? his Tenures, and his Tricks? why doe's he suffer this rude knaue now to knocke him about the Sconce with a dirty Shouell, and will not tell him of his Action of Battery? hum. This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of Land, with his Statutes, his Recog-nizances, his Fines, his double Vouchers, his Recoueries:
Is this the fine of his Fines, and the recovery of his Recoueries, to haue his fine Pate full of fine Dirt? will his Vouchers vouch him no more of his Purchases, and double ones too, then the length and breadth of a paire of Indentures? the very Conueyances of his Lands will hardly lye in this Boxe; and must the inheritor himselfe haue no more? ha?

Hor. Not a iot more, my Lord.

Ham. Is not Parchment made of Sheep-skinnes?

Hor. I my Lord, and of Calue-skinnes too.

Ham. They are Sheepe and Calues that seek out assurance in that. I will speake to this fellow: whose Graue's this Sir?

Clow. Mine Sir:

O a Pit of Clay for to be made,

for such a Guest is meete.

Ham. I thinke it be thine indeed: for thou liest in't.

Clow. You lye out on't Sir, and therefore it is not yours:
for my part, I doe not lye in't; and yee it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lye in't, to be in't and say 'tis thine:
'tis for the dead, not for the quicke, therefore thou lyest.

Clow. 'Tis a quicke lye Sir, 'twill away againe from me
to you.

Ham. What man dost thou digge it for?

Clow. For no man Sir.

Ham. What woman then?

Clow. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

Clow. One that was a woman Sir; but rest her Soule, shee's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knaue is? wee must speake by the Carde, or equiuocation will vndoe vs: by the Lord Horatio, these three yeares I haue taken note of it, the Age is growne so pick'd; that the toe of the Peasant comes so neere the heeles of our Courtier, hee galls his Kibe. How long hast thou been a Graue-maker?

Clow. Of all the dayes i'th' yeare, I came too't that day that our last King Hamlet o'recame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long is that since?

Clow. Cannot you tell that? euery foole can tell that:
It was the very day, that young Hamlet was borne, hee that was mad, and sent into England.

Ham. I marry, why was he sent into England?

Clow. Why, because he was mad; hee shall recouer his wits there; or if he do not, it's no great matter there.

Ham.

Ham. Why?
Clo. 'Twill not be seene in him, there the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?

Clo. Very strangely they say.

Ham. How strangely?

Clo. Faith e'ne with loosing his wits.

Ham. Vpon what ground?

Clo. Why heere in Denmarke: I haue bin fixeteene heere, man and Boy thirty yeares.

Ham. How long will a man lie 'tith' earth ere he rot?

Clo. I faith, if he be not rotten before he die (as we haue many pocky Coarles now adaies, that will scarce hold the laying in) he will last you some eight yeare, or nine yeare, A Tanner will last you nine yeare.

Ham. Why he, more then another?

Clo. Why sir, his hide is so tan'd with his Trade, that he will keepe out water a great while. And your water, is a fore Decayer of your horse dead body. Heres a Scull now: this Scull has laine in the earth three & twenty yeares.

Ham. Whose was it?

Clo. A whoreson mad Fellowes it was;

Whose doe you thinke it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

Clo. A pcellence on him for a mad Rogue, a pou'd a Flaggon of Rensh on my head once. This same Scull Sir, this same Scull sir, was Yoricks Scull, the Kings Iester.

Ham. This?

Clo. E'ne that.

Ham. Let me see. Alas poore Yorick, I knew him Horatio, a fellow of infinite jest; of most excellent fancy, he hath borne me on his backe a thousand times. And how abhorred my Imagination is, my gorge rises at it. Heere hung those lipps, that I haue kiss'd I know not how oft. VVhere be your liues now? Your Gambals? Your Songs? Your flashes of Merriment that were wont to set the Table on a Rore? No one now to mock your own Ieering? Quite chopfaine? Now get you to my Ladies Chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thicke, to this fauour she must come. Make her laugh at that: prythee Horatio tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that my Lord?

Ham. Dost thou thinke Alexander lookt o'this fashion 'tith' earth?

Hor. E'ne so.

Ham. And smelt so? Puh.

Hor. E'ne so, my Lord.

Ham. To what base vses we may returne Horatio. Why may not Imagination trace the Noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole.

Hor. 'Twere to consider: to curiously to consider so.

Ham. No faith, not aior. But to follow him thither with modestie enough, & likelihood to lead it; as thus. Alexander died: Alexander was buried: Alexander returneth into dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make Lome, and why of that Lome (where to he was conuerted) might they not stopp a Beere-barrell?

Imperiall Caesar, dead and turn'd to clay,

Might stop a hole to keepe the winde away.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a Wall, & expell the winters flaw.

But soft, but soft, asides; heere comes the King.

Enter King, Queens, Laertes, and a Coffin, with Lords attendant.

The Queene, the Courtiers. Who is that they follow,

And with such maimed rites? This doth betoken,
The Coarse they follow, did with desperate hand,
Fore do it owne life; 'twas some Estate,
Couch we a while, and mark.

Laer. What Cerimony else?

Ham. That is Laertes, a very Noble youth: Marke.

Laer. What Cerimony else?

Priest. Her Obsequies haue bin as farre enlarg'd,
As we haue warrantis, her death was doubtfull,
And but that great Command, o're-ruaies the order,
She should in ground vnfanctified haue lodg'd,
Till the last Trumpet. For charitable praier,
Shardes, Flints, and Peebles, should be thro wne on her,
Yet heere she is allowed her Virgin Rites,
Her Maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of Bell and Buriall.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

Priest. No more be done:

We should prophane the seruice of the dead,
To sing sage Requiem, and such rest to her
As to peace-parted Soules.

Laer. Lay her 'tith' earth,
And from her faire and vnpolluted flesh,
May Violets spring. I tell thee (churlish Priest)
A Ministring Angell shall my Sister be,
When thou liest howling?

Ham. What, the faire Ophelia?

Queene. Sweets, to the sweet farewell.

I hop'd thou should'st haue bin my Hamlets wife;
I thought thy Bride, bed to haue deckt (sweet Maid)
And not 't haue strew'd thy Graue.

Laer. Oh terrible woer,
Fall ten times trebble, on that curst head
Whose wicked deed, thy most Ingenious sence Deprid thee of. Hold off the earth a while,
Till I haue caught her once more in mine armes:

Leaps in the graue.

Now pile your dust vpon the quicke, and dead,
Till of this flat a Mountaine you haue made,
To o'retop old Pelson, or the skyish head
Of blew Olympus.

Ham. What is he, whose griefes
Beares such an Emphasis? whose phrase of Sorrow
Coniure the wandring Starres, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

Laer. The deuill take thy soule.

Ham. Thou prais't not well,

I prythee take thy fingers from my throat;
Sir though I am not Spicenatiue, and rash,
Yet haue I something in me dangerous,
Which let thy wisenesse feare. Away thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Qu. Hamlet, Hamlet.

Gen. Good my Lord be quiet.

Ham. Why I will fight with him vpon this Theme,
Vntill my eiels will no longer wag.

Qu. Oh my Sonne, what Theme?

Ham. I haue 't Ophelia; fortie thousand Brothers
Could not (with all their quantitie of Loue)
Make vp my summe. What wilt thou do for her?

King. Oh he is mad Laertes,

Qu. For loue of God forbear him.

Ham. Come show me what thou'lt doe.
Woo't weepe? Woo't fight? Woo't reare thy selfe?
Woo't drinke vp Esile, eate a Crocodile?

Hee doo't. Dost thou come heere to whine;
To outface me with leaping in her Graue?
Be buried quicke with her, and so will I.
And if thou prate of Mountaines; let them throw
Millions of Akeis on vs; till our ground
Sindging his pate against the burning Zone,
Make Ossa like a wart. Nay, and thou'lt mouth,
Ile rant as well as thou.

King. This is meer Madnesse:
And thus awhile the fit will worke on him:
As patient as the female Doue,
When that her golden Cuplet are disclos'd;
His silence will fit drooping.

Ham. Heare you Sir:
What is the reason that you vse me thus?
I haue you euer; but it is no matter:
Let Hercules himselfe doe what he may,
The Cat will Mew, and Dogge will haue his day. Exit.

King. I pray you good Horatio wait vpon him,
Strengthen you patience in our last nights speech,
We'll put the matter to the present puth:
Good Gertrude set some watch ouer your Sonne,
This Graue shall haue a liuing Monument:
An houre of quiet shortly shall we see;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this Sir; now let me see the other,
You doe remember all the Circumstance.

Hor. Remember it my Lord?

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kinde of fighting,
That would not let me sleepe; me thought I lay
Worse then the mutines in the Bilboes, rashly,
(And praise be rashnesse for it) let vs know,
Our indiscretion sometimes serues vs well,
When our deare plots do paule, and that should teach vs,
There's a Diuinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is most certaine.

Ham. Vp from my Cabin

My sea-gowne scarft about me in the darke,
Grop'd I to finde out them; had my desire,
Finger'd their Packer, and in fine, withdrew
To mine owne roome againe, making so bold,
(My feares forgetting manners) to vnseale
Their grand Commission, where I found Horatio,
Oh royall knaury: An exact command,
Larded with many severall sorts of reason;
Importing Denmarks health, and Englands too,
With hoo, such Bugges and Goblins in my life,
That on the superuize no leasure bated,
No not to stay the grinding of the Axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the Commission, read it at more leysure:
But wilt thou heare me how I did proceed?

Hor. I beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with Villaines,
Ere I could make a Prologue to my braines,
They had begun the Play. I fate me downe,
Deuid a new Commission, wrote it faire,
I once did hold it as our Statists doe,
A basenesse to write faire; and laboured much
How to forget that learning: but Sir now,
It did me Yeomans seruice: wilt thou know
The effects of what I wrote?

Hor. I, good my Lord.

Ham. An earnest Coniuration from the King,
As England was his faithfull Tributary,
As loue betweene them, as the Palme should flourish,
As Peace should still her wheaten Garland weare,
And stand a Comma 'twene their amities,
And many such like Affis of great charge,
That on the view and know of these Contents,
Without debatement further, more or lesse,
He should the bearers put to sodaine death,
Not shruing time allowed.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, euen in that was Heauen ordinate;
I had my fathers Signet in my Purse,
Which was the Modell of that Danish Seale:
Folded the Writ vp in forme of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gau'th' impression, plac'd it safely.
The chaneling neuer knowne: Now, the next day
Was our Sea Fight, and what to this was sement,
Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstjerne and Rosincrance, go too't.

Ham. Why man, they did make loue to this imployment
They are not neere my Conscience; their debate
Doth by their owne insinuation grow:
'Tis dangerous, when the baser nature comes Betwene the passe, and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a King is this?

Ham. Does it not, thinkest thee, stand me now vpon
He that hath kil'd my King, and whor'd my Mother,
Popt in betwene th' election and my hopes,
Throwne out his Angle for my proper life,
And with such coozenage; is't not perfect conscience,
To quit him with this arme? And is't not to be damnd
To let this Canker of our nature come
In further euill.

Hor. It must be shortly knowne to him from England
What is the issue of the businesse there.

Ham. It will be short,

The interim's mine, and a mans life's no more
Then to say one: but I am very sorry good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot my selfe;
For by the image of my Cause, I see
The Portraiture of his; He count his fauours:
But sure the brauery of his griefe did put me
Into a Towing passion.

Hor. Peace, who comes heere?

Enter young Osricke.

(marke.

Osricke. Your Lordship is right welcome back to Den-
Ham, I humbly thank you Sir, dost know this waterflie?

Hor. No my good Lord,

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious; for 'tis a vice to know him: he hath much Land, and fertile; let a Beast be Lord of Beasts, and his Crib shall stand at the Kings Messe; 'tis a Chowgh; but as I saw spacious in the possession of dirt.

Osricke. Sweet Lord, if your friendship were at leysure,
I should impart a thing to you from his Maiesty.

Ham. I will receiue it with all diligence of spirit; put your Bonet to his right vse, 'tis for the head.

Osricke. I thanke your Lordship, 'tis very hot.

Ham. No, beleeue mee 'tis very cold, the winde is Northerly.

Osricke. It is indifferent cold my Lord indeed.

Ham. Mee thinkes it is very foultry, and hot for my Complexion.

Osricke.

Ofr. Exceedingly, my Lord, it is very foultry, as 'twere I cannot tell how: but my Lord, his Maiefty bad me signifie to you, that he ha's laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter.

Ham. I beseech you remember.

Ofr. Nay, in good faith, for mine ease in good faith: Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Ofr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but well.

Ofr. The fir King ha's wag'd with him six Barbary Horses, against the which he impon'd as I take it, six French Rapiers and Poniards, with their assignes, as Girdle, Hangers or so: three of the Carriages in faith are very deare to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberrall conceit.

Ham. What call you the Carriages?

Ofr. The Carriages Sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would bee more Germaine to the matter: If we could carry Cannon by our sides; I would it might be Hangers till then; but on six Barbary Horses against six French Swords: their Assignes, and three liberrall conceited Carriages, that's the French but against the Danish; why is this impon'd as you call it?

Ofr. The King Sir, hath laid that in a dozen passes betwene you and him, hee shall not exceed you three hits; He hath one twelue for mine, and that would come to immediate tryall, if your Lordship would vouchsafe the Answer.

Ham. How if I answer no?

Ofr. I mean my Lord, the opposition of your person in tryall.

Ham. Sir, I will walke heere in the Hall; if it please his Maieesty, 'tis the breathing time of day with me; let the Foyles bee brought, the Gentleman willing, and the King hold his purpose; I will win for him if I can: if not, he gaine nothing but my shame, and the oddes hits.

Ofr. Shall I redeliuer you e'en so?

Ham. To this effect Sir, after what flourish your nature will.

Ofr. I commend my duty to your Lordship.

Ham. Yours, yours; hee does well to commend it himselfe, there are no tongues else for's tongue.

Hor. This Lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did Complie with his Dugge before hee suck't it: thus had he and mine more of the same Beauty that I know the drossie age dotes on; only got the tune of the time, and outward habite of encounter, a kinde of yesty collection, which carries them through & through the most fond and winnewed opinions; and doe but blow them to their tryalls: the Bubbles are out.

Hor. You will lose this wager, my Lord.

Ham. I doe not thinke so, since he went into France, I haue bene in continuall practice; I shall winne at the oddes: but thou wouldst not thinke how all heere about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my Lord.

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kinde of gain-guine as would perhaps trouble a woman.

Hor. If your minde dislike any thing, obey. I will forestall their repaire hither, and say you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we desire Augury; there's a speciall Providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come: if it be not to come, it will bee now: if it be not now, yet it will come; the readinesse is all, since no man ha's ought of what he leaues. What is't to leaue betimes?

Enter King, Queene, Laertes and Lords, with other Attendants with Foyles, and Gauntlets, a Table and Flagons of Wine on it.

King. Come Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

Ham. Give me your pardon Sir, I've done you wrong, But pardon't as you are a Gentleman.

This presence knowes,

And you must needs haue heard how I am punisht

With fore distraction? What I haue done

That might your nature honour, and exception

Roughly awake, I heere proclaime was madnesse:

Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Neuer Hamlet.

If Hamlet from him selfe be tane away:

And when he's not himselfe, do's wrong Laertes,

Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it:

Who does it then? His Madnesse? If't be so,

Hamlet is of the Faction that is wrong'd,

His madnesse is poore Hamlet's Enemy.

Sir, in this Audience,

Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd euill,

Free me so farre in your most generous thoughts,

That I haue shot mine Arrow o're the house,

And hurt my Mother.

Laer. I am satisfied in Nature,

Whose motive in this case should stirre me most

To my Reuenge. But in my termes of Honor

I stand aloofe, and will no reconciliation,

Till by some elder Masters of knowne Honor,

I haue a voyce, and president of peace

To keepe my name vnorg'd. But till that time,

I do receiue your offer'd loue like loue,

And will not wrong it.

Ham. I do embrace it freely,

And will this Brothers wager frankly play.

Give vs the Foyles: Come on.

Laer. Come one for me.

Ham. Ile be your foile Laertes, in mine ignorance,

Your Skill shall like a Starre it's darkest night,

Sticke fiery offindeede.

Laer. You mocke me Sir.

Ham. No by this hand.

King. Give them the Foyles yong Ofricke,

Cousen Hamlet, you know the wager.

Ham. Verie well my Lord,

Your Grace hath laide the oddes a'th'weaker side.

King. I do not feare it,

I haue seene you both:

But since he is better'd, we haue therefore oddes.

Laer. This is too heauy,

Let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well,

These Foyles haue all a length. Prepare to play.

Ofricke. I my good Lord.

King. Set me the Stopes of wine ypon that Table:

If Hamlet giue the first, or second hit,

Or quit in answer of the third exchange,

Let all the Battlements their Ordinance fire,

The King shal drinke to Hamlet's better breath,

And in the Cup an vnion shal he throw:

Richer then that which foure successive Kings

In Denmarke's Crowne haue worne.

Give

Give me the Cups,

And let the Kettle to the Trumpets speake,

The Trumpet to the Cannoneer without,

The Cannons to the Heauens, the Heauen to Earth,

Now the King drinke to Hamlet. Come, begin,

And you the Iudges beare a wary eye.

Ham. Come on fir.

Laer. Come on fir.

Ham. One.

Laer. No.

Ham. Iudgement.

Ofr. A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer. Well: againe.

King. Stay, giue me drinke.

Hamlet, this Pearle is thine,

Here's to thy health. Giue him the cup,

Trumpets sound, and foot goes off.

Ham. Ile play this bout first, set by a-while.

Come: Another hit; what say you?

Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confesse.

King. Our Sonne shall win.

Laer. He's fat, and scant of breath.

Here's a Napkin, rub thy browes,

The Queene Carowes to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good Madam.

King. Gertrude, do not drinke.

Laer. I will my Lord;

I pray you pardon me.

King. It is the poyson'd Cup, it is too late.

Ham. I dare not drinke yet Madam,

By and by.

Laer. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My Lord, Ile hit him now.

King. I do not thinke't.

Laer. And yet 'tis almost 'gainst my conscience.

Ham. Come for the third.

Laertes, you but dally,

I pray you passe with your best violence,

I am assear'd you make a wanton of me.

Laer. Say you so? Come on.

Ofr. Nothing neither way.

Laer. Haue at you now.

In scuffling they change Rapiers.

King. Part them, they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay come, againe.

Ofr. Look to the Queene there hoa.

Hor. They bleed on both sides. How is't my Lord?

Ofr. How is't Laertes?

Laer. Why as a Woodcocke

Tomine Spridge, Ofricke,

I am iustly kill'd with mine owne Treacherie.

Ham. How does the Queene?

King. She sounds to see them bleede.

Laer. No, no, the drinke, the drinke.

Oh my deere Hamlet, the drinke, the drinke,

I am poyson'd.

Ham. Oh Villany! How? Let the doore be lock'd.

Treacherie, seeke it out.

Laer. It is heere Hamlet.

Hamlet, thou art slaine,

No Medicine in the world can do thee good.

In thee, there is not halfe an houre of life;

The Treacherous Instrument is in thy hand,

Vnbatred and envenom'd: the foule practise

Hath turn'd it selfe on me. Lo, heere I lye,

Neuer to rise againe: Thy Mothers poyson'd:

I can no more, the King, the King's too blame.

Ham. The point envenom'd too,

Then venome to thy worke.

Harts the King.

All. Treason, Treason.

King. O yet defend me Friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Heere thou incestuous, murderous,

Damned Dane,

Drinke off this Potion: Is thy Vnion heere?

Follow my Mother. King Dyes.

Laer. He is iustly seru'd.

It is a poyson temp'ed by himselfe:

Exchange forgienesse with me, Noble Hamlet;

Mine and my Fathers death come not vpon thee,

Nor thine on me. Dyes.

Ham. Heauen make thee free of it, I follow thee.

I am dead Horatio, wretched Queene adieu,

You that looke pale, and tremble at this chance,

That are but Mutes or audience to this acte:

Had I but time (as this fell Sergeant death

Is strick'd in his Arrest) oh I could tell you.

But let it be: Horatio, I am dead,

Thou liu'st, report me and my causes right

To the vnaffected.

Hor. Neuer beleuee it.

I am more an Antike Roman then a Dane:

Ham. As th'art a man, giue me the Cup.

Let go, by Heauen Ile haue't.

Oh good Horatio, what a wounded name,

(Things standing thus vnknowne) shall liue behind me.

If thou did'st euer hold me in thy heart,

Absent thee from felicitie awhile,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in paine,

To tell my Storie.

March afarre off, and shout within.

What warlike noyse is this?

Enter Ofricke.

Ofr. Yong Fortinbras, with conquest come fro Poland

To th'Ambassadors of England giues this warlike volly.

Ham. O I dye Horatio:

The potent poyson quite ore-crowes my spirit,

I cannot liue to heare the Newes from England;

But I do prophesie th'election lights

On Fortinbras, he ha's my dying voyce,

So tell him with the occurrents more and lesse,

Which haue solicited. The rest is silence. O, o, o, o. Dyes

Hor. Now cracke a Noble heart:

Goodnight sweet Prince,

And flights of Angels sing thee to thy rest,

Why do's the Drumme come hither?

Enter Fortinbras and English Ambassador with Drumme,

Colours, and Attendants.

Fortin. Where is this fight?

Hor. What is it ye would see?

If ought of woe, or wonder, cease your search.

For. His quarry cries on hauocke. Oh proud death,

What feast is toward in thine eternall Cell,

That thou so many Princes, at a shoote,

So bloodily hast strooke.

Amb. The fight is dismall,

And our affaires from England come too late,

The cares are senselesse that should giue vs hearing,

To tell him his comma nd'ment is fulfill'd,

That

q q

That Rosinbrance and Guildenstern are dead:
Where should we haue our thanks?

Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it th'abilitie of life to thank you:
He neuer gaue commandment for their death.
But since so I must ypon this bloodie question,
You from the Polake warres, and you from England
Are heere arriued. Giue order that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view,
And let me speake to th' yet vnknowing world,
How these things came about. So shall you heare
Of carnall, bloudie, and vnnaturall acts,
Of accidentall iudgements, casuall slaughters
Of death's put on by cunning, and forc'd cause,
And in this vpshot, purposes mistooke,
Falne on the Inuentors heads. All this can I Truly deliuer.

For. Let vs haue to heare it,
And call the Nobles to the Audience.
For me, with sorrow, I embrace my Fortune,
I haue some Rites of memory in this Kingdome,

Which are so claime, my vantage doth
Inuite me,

Hor. Of that I shall haue alwayes cause to speake,
And from his mouth
Whose voyce will draw on more:
But let this same be presently perform'd,
Euen whiles mens mindes are wilde,
Lest more mischance
On plots, and errors happen.

For. Let foure Captaines
Beare Hamlet like a Soldier to the Stage,
For he was likely, had he beene put on
To haue prou'd most royally:
And for his passage,
The Souldiours Musicke, and the rites of Warre
Speake lowdly for him.
Take vp the body; Such a sight as this Becomes the Field, but heere shewes much amis.
Go, bid the Souldiers shoote.

Exeunt Marching: after the which, a Peale of Ordnance are shot off.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF KING LEAR.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Kent, Gloucester, and Edmond.

Kent.

Thought the King had more affected the Duke of Albany, then Cornwall.
Glow. It did alwayes seeme so to vs: But now in the diuision of the Kingdome, it appeares not which of the Dukes hee valewes most, for qualities are so weigh'd, that curiosity in neither, can make choise of either moiry.

Kent. Is not this your Son, my Lord?

Glow. His breeding Sir, hath bin at my charge. I haue so often bluth'd to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd too't.

Kent. I cannot conceiue you.

Glow. Sir, this yong Fellowes mother could; whereupon she grew round womb'd, and had indeede (Sir) a Sonne for her Cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed.
Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot with the fault yndone, the issue of it, being so proper.

Glow. But I haue a Sonne, Sir, by order of Law, some yeere elder then this; who, yet is no deerer in my account, though this Knaue came somthing sawcily to the world before he was sent for: yet was his Mother sayre, there was good sport at his making, and the horse must be acknowledged. Doe you know this Noble Gentleman, Edmond?

Edm. No, my Lord.

Glow. My Lord of Kent:

Remember him heereafter, as my Honourable Friend.

Edm. My seruices to your Lordship.

Kent. I must loue you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deseruing.

Glow. He hath bin out nine yeeres, and away he shall again. The King is coming.

Sennet. Enter King Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Gonerill, Regan, Cordelia, and attendants.

Lear. Attend the Lords of France & Burgundy, Gloster.

Glow. I shall, my Lord. Exit.

Lear. Meane time we shal expresse our darker purpose.

Giue me the Map there. Know, that we haue diuided

In three our Kingdome: and 'tis our fast intent,

To shake all Cares and Businesse from our Age,

Conferring them on younger strengths, while we Vnburthen'd crawl toward death. Our son of Cornwall,

And you our no lesse louing Sonne of Albany,

We haue this houre a constant will to publish
Our daughters seuerall Dowers, that intire strife
May be prevented now. The Princes, France & Burgundy, Great Riuals in our yongest daughters loue,
Long in our Court, haue made their amorous sojourn,
And heere are to be answer'd. Tell me my daughters (Since now we will diuelt vs both of Rule, Interest of Territory, Cares of State)
Which of you shall we say doth loue vs most,
That we, our largest bountie may extend
Where Nature doth with merit challenge. Gonerill,
Our eldest borne, speake first.

Gow. Sir, I loue you more then word can weild & matter,
Deerer then eye-sight, space, and libertie,
Beyond what can be valewed, rich or rare,
No lesse then life, with grace, health, beauty, honor:
As much as Child ere lou'd, or Father found.
A loue that makes breath poore, and speech vnable,
Beyond all manner of so much I loue you.

Cor. What shall Cordelia speake? Loue, and be silent.

Lear. Of all these bounds euen from this Line, to this,
With shadowie Forreits, and with Champains rich'd
With plenteous Riuers, and wide-skirted Meades
We make thee Lady. To thine and Albanies issues
Be this perpetuall. What sayes our second Daughter?
Our dearest Regan, wife of Cornwall?

Reg. I am made of that selfe-mettle as my Sister,
And prize me at her worth. In my true heart,
I finde she names my very deede of loue:

Onely she comes too short, that I professe
My selfe an enemy to all other ioyes,

Which the most precious square of sense professes,

And finde I am alone felicitate

In your deere Highnesse loue.

Cor. Then poore Cordelia,

And yet not so, since I am sure my loue's

More ponderous then my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine hereditarie euer,

Remaine this ample third of our faire Kingdome,

No lesse in space, validitie, and pleasure

Then that confer'd on Gonerill. Now our Ioy,

Although our last and least; to whose yong loue

The Vines of France, and Milke of Burgundie,

Striue to be interest. What can you say, to draw

A third, more opulent then your Sisters? speake.

Cor. Nothing my Lord.

Lear. Nothing?

Cor. Nothing.
 Lear. Nothing will come of nothing, speake againe.
 Cor. Vnhappie that I am, I cannot heare
 My heart into my mouth. I loue your Maiesty
 According to my bond, no more nor lesse.
 Lear. How, how Cordelia? Mend your speech a little,
 Least you may marre your Fortunes.
 Cor. Good my Lord,
 You haue begot me, bred me, lou'd me.
 I returne those duties backe as are right fit,
 Obey you, Loue you, and most Honour you.
 Why haue my Sisters Husbands, if they say
 They loue you all? Happily when I shall wed,
 That Lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
 Halfe my loue with him, halfe my Care, and Dutie,
 Sure I shall neuer marry like my Sisters.
 Lear. But goes thy heart with this?
 Cor. I my good Lord.
 Lear. So young, and so vtender?
 Cor. So young my Lord, and true.
 Lear. Let it be so, thy truth then be thy dowre:
 For by the sacred radiance of the Sonne,
 The miseries of Heccat and the night:
 By all the operation of the O. bes,
 From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
 Heere I disclaime all my Paternall care,
 Propinquity and property of blood,
 And as a stranger to my heart and me,
 Hold thee from this for euer. The barbarous Scythian,
 Or he that makes his generation messes
 To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosome
 Be as well neighbour'd, pittied, and releu'd,
 As thou my sometime Daughter.
 Kent. Good my Liege.
 Lear. Peace Kent,
 Come not betwene the Dragon and his wrath,
 I lou'd her most, and thought to let my rest
 On her kind nursery. Hence and avoid my sight:
 So be my graue my peace, as here I giue
 Her Fathers heart from her; call France, who stirs?
 Call Burgundy, Cornwall, and Albania,
 With my two Daughters Dowres, digest the third,
 Let pride, which the eais plainnesse, marry her:
 I doe inuest you ioyntly with my power,
 Preheminance, and all the large effects
 That troope with Maiesty. Our selve by Monthly course,
 With reservation of an hundred Knights,
 By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
 Make with you by due turne, onely we shall retaine
 The name, and all th' addition to a King: the Sway,
 Reuennew Execution of the rest,
 Beloued Sonnes be yours, which to confirme,
 This Coronet part betwene you.
 Kent. Royall Lear,
 Whom I haue quer honor'd as my King,
 Lou'd as my Father, as my Master follow'd,
 As my great Patron thought on in my prayers.
 Le. The bow is bent & drawne, make from the shaft.
 Kent. Let it fall rather, though the forke invade
 The region of my heart, be Kent vnmanly,
 When Lear is mad, what wouldst thou do old man?
 Think'st thou that dutie shall haue dread to speake,
 When power to flattery bowes?
 To plaining the honour's bound,
 When Maiesty falls to folly, reuerue thy state,
 And in thy best consideration checke

This hideous rashnesse, answere my life, my iudgement:
 Thy yongest Daughter do's not loue thee least,
 Nor are those empty hearted, whose low sounds
 Reuerbe no hollownesse.
 Lear. Kent, on thy life no more.
 Kent. My life I neuer held but as pawne
 To wage against thine enemies, nere feare to loose it,
 Thy safety being motiue.
 Lear. Out of my sight.
 Kent. See better Lear, and let me still remaine
 The true blanke of thine eie.
 Lear. Now by Apollo,
 Now by Apollo, King
 Thou swear'st thy Gods in vaine.
 Lear. O Vassall! Miscreant.
 Alb. Cor. Deare Sir forbear.
 Kent. Kill thy Phisition, and thy fee bestow
 Vpon the soule disease, reuoke thy giust,
 Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
 Ile tell thee thou dost euill.
 Lear. Heare me recreate, on thine allegiance heare me:
 That thou hast sought to make vs breake our vowes,
 Which we durst neuer yet; and with strain'd pride,
 To come betwixt our sentences, and our power,
 Which, nor our nature, nor our place can beare;
 Our potencie made good, take thy reward.
 Fiue dayes we do allot thee for provision,
 To shield thee from disasters of the world,
 And on the sixth to turne thy hated backe
 Vpon our kingdom: if on the tenth day following,
 Thy banisht trunk be found in our Dominions,
 The moment is thy death, away. By Jupiter,
 This shall not be reuok'd.
 Kent. Fare thee well King, such thus thou wilt appeare, Freedome lues hence, and banishment is here;
 The Gods to their decre shelter take thee Maid,
 That iustly think't, and hast most rightly said:
 And your large speeches, may your deeds approve,
 That good effects may spring from words of loue:
 Thus Kent, O Princes, bids you all adew,
 Hee'l shape his old course, in a Country new. Exit.

Flourish. Enter Gloster with France, and Burgundy, Attendants.

Cor. Heere's France and Burgundy, my Noble Lord.
 Lear. My Lord of Burgundy,
 We first addresse toward you, who with this King
 Hath riuald for our Daughter; what in the least
 Will you require in present Dower with her,
 Or cease your quest of Loue?
 Bur. Most Royall Maiesty,
 I craue no more then hath your Highnesse offer'd,
 Nor will you tender lesse?
 Lear. Right Noble Burgundy,
 When she was deare to vs, we did hold her so,
 But now her price is fallen: Sir, there she stands,
 If ought within that little seeming substance,
 Or all of it with our displeasure piec'd,
 And nothing more may fully like your Grace,
 Shee's there, and she is yours.
 Bur. I know no answer.
 Lear. Will you with those infirmities the owes,
 Vnfriended, new adopted to our hate,
 Dow'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
 Take her or leave her.

Bur. Pardon me Royall Sir,
 Election makes not vp in such conditions.
 Le. Then leaue her fir, for by the powre that made me,
 I tell you all her wealth. For you great King,
 I would not from your loue make such a fray,
 To match you where I hate, therefore beseech you
 Tauer your liking a more worthier way,
 Then on a wretch whom Nature is asham'd
 Almost to acknowledge hers.
 Fra. This is most strange,
 That she whom euen but now, was your obiect,
 The argument of your praise, balme of your age,
 The best, the deereft, should in this trice of time
 Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
 So many folds of fauour: sure her offence
 Must be of such vnaturall degree,
 That monsters it: Or your fore-youcht affection
 Fall into taint, which to beleuee of her
 Must be a faith that reason without miracle
 Should neuer plant in me.
 Cor. I yet beseech your Maiesty,
 If for I want that glib and oylie Art,
 To speake and purpose not, since what I will intend,
 Ile do't before I speake, that you make knowne
 It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulnessse,
 No vchaste action or dishonoured step
 That hath depriv'd me of your Grace and fauour,
 But euen for want of that, for which I am richer,
 A still solliciting eye, and such a tongue,
 That I am glad I haue not, though not to haue it,
 Hath lost me in your liking.
 Lear. Better thou had'st
 Not bene borne, then not to haue pleas'd me better.
 Fra. Is it but this? A tardinesse in nature,
 Which often leaues the history vnspoke
 That it intends to do: my Lord of Burgundy,
 What say you to the Lady? Loue's not loue
 When it is mingled with regards, that stands
 Aloofe from th'intire point, will you haue her?
 She is herselfe a Dowrie.
 Bur. Royall King,
 Giue but that portion which your selfe propos'd,
 And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
 Dutchesse of Burgundy.
 Lear. Nothing, I haue sworne, I am firme.
 Bur. I am sorry then you haue so lost a Father,
 That you must loose a husband.
 Cor. Peace be with Burgundy,
 Since that respect and Fortunes are his loue,
 I shall not be his wife.
 Fra. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich being poore,
 Most choise forsaken, and most lou'd despis'd,
 Thee and thy vertues here I seize vpon,
 Be it lawfull I take vp what's cast away.
 Gods, Gods! 'Tis strange, that from their cold't neglect
 My Loue should kindle to enflam'd respect.
 Thy dowrelesse Daughter King, throwne to my chance,
 Is Queene of vs, of ours, and our faire France:
 Not all the Dukes of watrish Burgundy,
 Can buy this vnpriz'd precious Maid of me.
 Bid them farewell Cordelia, though vnkinde,
 Thou loofest here a better where to finde.
 Lear. Thou hast her France, let her be thine, for we Haue no such Daughter, nor shall euer see
 That face of hers againe, therefore be gone,
 Without our Grace, our Loue, our Benizon:

Come Noble Burgundie. Flourish. Exit. France, Burgundy, Attendants.
 Fra. Bid farewell to your Sisters.
 Cor. The Iewels of our Father, with wash'd eies
Cordelia leaues you, I know you what you are,
 And like a Sister am most loth to call
 Your faults as they are named. Loue well our Father:
 To your professed bosomes I commit him,
 But yet alas, stood I within his Grace,
 I would prefer him to a better place,
 So farewell to you both.
 Regn. Prescribe not vs our dutie.
 Gon. Let your study
 Be to content your Lord, who hath receiv'd you
 At Fortunes aimes, you haue obedience scanted,
 And well are worth the want that you haue wanted.
 Cor. Time shall vnfold what plighted cunning hides,
 Who couers faults, at last with shame derides:
 Well may you prosper.
 Fra. Come my faire Cordelia. Exit France and Cor.
 Gon. Sister, it is not little I haue to say,
 Of what most neereely appertaines to vs both,
 I thinke our Father will hence to night. (with vs.
 Reg. That's most certaine, and with you: next moneth
 Gon. You see how full of changes his age is, the obseruation we haue made of it hath beene little: he alwaies lou'd our Sister most, and with what poore iudgement he hath now cast her off, appeares too grossely.
 Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age, yet he hath euer but slenderly knowne himselfe.
 Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath bin but rash, then must we looke from his age, to receive not alone the imperfections of long ingressed condition, but therewithall the vnuly way-wardnesse, that infirme and cholericke yeares bring with them.
 Reg. Such vnconstant starts are we like to haue from him, as this of Kent's banishment.
 Gon. There is further complement of leave-taking be-twene France and him, pray you let vs sit together, if our Father carry authority with such disposition as he beares, this last surrender of his will but offend vs.
 Reg. We shall further thinke of it.
 Gon. We must do something, and i'th' heate. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. Thou Nature art my Goddesse, to thy Law
 My seruices are bound, wherefore should I
 Stand in the plague of custome, and permit
 The curiolity of Nations, to deprive me?
 For that I am some twelue, or fourteene Moonshines
 Lag of a Brother? Why Bastard? Wherefore base?
 When my Dimensions are as well compact,
 My minde as generous, and my shape as true
 As honest Madams issue? Why brand they vs
 With Base? With basenes Bastardie? Base, Base?
 Who in the lustie stealth of Nature, take
 More composition, and fiercer qualitie,
 Then doth within a dull stale tyred bed
 Goe to th'creating a whole tribe of Fops Got'tweene a sleepe, and wake? Well then,
 Legitimate Edgar, I must haue your land,
 Our Fathers loue, is to the Bastard Edmond,
 As to th'legitimate: fine word: Legitimate.

Well, my Legitimate, if this Letter speed,
And my inuention thriue, Edmond the base
Shall co'th' Legitimate: I grow, I prosper:
Now Gods, stand vp for Bastards.

Enter Gloucester.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus? and France in choller parted?
And the King gone to night? Prescrib'd his powre, Confin'd to exhibition? All this done
Vpon the gad? Edmond, how now? What newes?

Bast. So please your Lordship, none.

Glo. Why so earnestly seeke you to put vp y<sup>e</sup> Letter?

Bast. I know no newes, my Lord.

Glo. What Paper were you reading?

Bast. Nothing my Lord.

Glo. No? what needed then that terrible dispatch of it into your Pocket? The quality of nothing, hath not such neede to hide it selfe. Let's see: come, if it bee nothing, I shall not neede Spectacles.

Bast. I beseech you Sir, pardon mee; it is a Letter from my Brother, that I haue not all ore-read; and for so much as I haue perus'd, I finde it not fit for your ore-looking.

Glo. Giue me the Letter, Sir.

Bast. I shall offend, either to detain, or giue it:
The Contents, as in part I vnderstand them,
Are too blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Bast. I hope for my Brothers iustification, hee wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my Vertue.

Glo. reads. This policie, and reuerence of Age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times: keeps our Fortunes from vs, till our oldnesse cannot relish them. I begin to finde an idle and fond bondage, in the oppression of aged tyranny, who swaies not as it hath power, but as it is suffer'd. Come to me, that of this I may speake more. If our Father would sleepe till I wak'd him, you should enioy halfe his Reuennue for euer, and line the beloued of your Brother. Edgar.

Hum? Conspiracy? Sleepe till I wake him, you should enioy halfe his Reuennue: my Sonne Edgar, had hee a hand to write this? A heart and braine to breede it in?
When came you to this? Who brought it?

Bast. It was not brought mee, my Lord: there's the cunning of it. I found it throwne in at the Casement of my Closser.

Glo. You know the character to be your Brothers?

Bast. If the matter were good my Lord, I durst swear it were his: but in respect of that, I would faine thinke it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Bast. It is his hand, my Lord: but I hope his heart is not in the Contents.

Glo. Has he neuer before founded you in this busines?

Bast. Neuer my Lord, but I haue heard him oft maintaine it to be fit, that Sonnes at perfect age, and Fathers declin'd, the Father should bee as Ward to the Son, and the Sonne manage his Reuennue.

Glo. O Villain, villain: his very opinion in the Letter. Abhorred Villaine, vnaturall, detested, brutish Villaine; worse then brutish: Go sirrah, seeke him: He apprehend him. Abhorinable Villaine, where is he?

Bast. I do not well know my L. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my Brother, till you can deriue from him better testimony of his intent, you should run a certaine course: where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your owne Honor, and shake in peeces, the heart of his obedience. I dare pawne downe my life for him, that he hath writ this to feele my affection to your Honor, & to no other pietece of danger.

Glo. Thinke you so?

Bast. If your Honor iudge it meene, I will place you where you shall heare vs conferre of this, and by an Auditular assurance haue your satisfaction, and that without any further delay, then this very Euening.

Glo. He cannot bee such a Monster. Edmond seeke him out: winde me into him, I pray you: frame the Businesse after your owne wisdome. I would vntate my selfe, to be in a due resolution.

Bast. I will seeke him Sir, presently: conuey the businesse as I shall finde means, and acquaint you withall.

Glo. These late Eclipses in the Sun and Moone portend no good to vs: though the wisdome of Nature can reason it thus, and thus, yet Nature finds it selfe scourg'd by the sequent effects. Loue cooles, friendship falls off, Brothers diuide. In Cities, mutinies; in Countries, discord; in Pallaces, Treason; and the Bond crack'd, twixt Sonne and Father. This villaine of mine comes vnder the prediction; there's Son against Father, the King falls from byas of Nature, there's Father against Child. We haue seene the best of our time. Machinations, hollownesse, treacherie, and all ruinous disorders follow vs disquietly to our Graues. Find out this Villain Edmond, it shall lose thee nothing, do it carefully: and the Noble & true-harted Kent banish'd; his offence, honesty. 'Tis strange. Exit.

Bast. This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sicke in fortune, often the sufferers of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the Sun, the Moone, and Starres, as if we were villaines on necessity, Fooles by heauenly compulsion, Knaues, Theeues, and Traachers by Spherickall predominance, Drunkards, Ly-ars, and Adulterers by an inforc'd obedience of Planetary influence; and all that we are euill in, by a diuine thrusting on. An admirable euasion of Whore-master-man, to lay his Goatish disposition on the charge of a Starre.
My father compounded with my mother vnder the Dragons taile, and my Natiuitie was vnder Vrsa Maior, so that it followes, I am rough and Leacherous. I should haue bin that I am, had the maidenliest Starre in the Fir-mament twinkled on my bastardizing.

Enter Edgar.

Pat: he comes like the Catastrophe of the old Comedie:
my Cue is villanous Melancholly, with a sigh like Tom o'Bedlam. — O these Eclipses do portend these diuisions. Fa, Sol, La, Me.

Edg. How now Brother Edmond, what serious contemplation are you in?

Bast. I am thinking Brother of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these Eclipses.

Edg. Do you busie your selfe with that?

Bast. I promise you, the effects he writes of, succcede vnhappily.

When saw you my Father last?

Edg. The night gone by.

Bast. Spake you with him?

Edg. I, two houres together.

Bast. Parted you in good termes? Found you no displeasure in him, by word, nor countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Bast. Berinke your selfe wherein you may haue offended him: and at my entreaty forbear his presence, vntill some little time hath qualifed the heat of his displeasure, which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief

chief of your person, it would scarcely alay.

Edg. Some Villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my feare, I pray you haue a continent forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower: and as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will silly bring you to heare my Lord speake: pray ye goe, there's my key: if you do stirre abroad, goe arm'd.

Edg. Arm'd, Brother?

Edm. Brother, I aduise you to the best, I am no honest man, if ther be any good meaning toward you: I haue told you what I haue seene, and heard: But faintly. Nothing like the image, and horror of it, pray you away.

Edg. Shall I heare from you anon?

Exit.

Edm. I do serue you in this businesse:

A Credulous Father, and a Brother Noble,
Whose nature is so farre from doing harmes,
That he suspects none: on whose foolish honesty
My practises ride easie: I see the businesse.
Let me, if not by birth, haue lands by wit,
All with me's meete, that I can fashion fit,

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Gonerill, and Steward.

Con. Did my Father strike my Gentleman for chiding of his Foole?

Ste. I Madam.

Con. By day and night, he wrongs me, euery howre
He flashes into one grosse crime, or other,
That sets vs all at odds: He endures it;
His Knights grow riotous, and himselfe vpbraides vs
On euery trifle. When he returns from hunting,
I will not speake with him, say I am sicke,
If you come slacke of former seruices,
You shall do well, the fault of it Ile answer.

Ste. He's comming Madam, I heare him.

Con. Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your Fellowes: I'de haue it come to question;
If he distaste it, let him to my Sister,
Whose mind and mine I know in that are one,
Remember what I haue said.

Ste. Well Madam.

Con. And let his Knights haue colder looks among you: what growes of it no matter, aduise your fellowes so, Ile write straight to my Sister to hold my course: prepare for dinner. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Kent.

Kent. If but as will I other accents borrow,
That can my speech defuse, my good intent
May carry through it selfe to that full issue
For which I traiz'd my likenesse. Now banish't Kent,
If thou canst serue where thou dost stand condemn'd,
So may it come, thy Master whom thou loust,
Shall finde thee full of labours.

Hornes within. Enter Lear and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a iot for dinner, go get it redy: how now, what art thou?

Kent. A man Sir.

Lear. What dost thou professe? What wouldst thou with vs?

Kent. I do professe to be no lesse then I seeme; to serue him truly that will put me in trust, to loue him that is honest, to conuerse with him that is wise and faies little, to feare iudgement, to fight when I cannot chioice, and to eate no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest hearted Fellow, and as poore as the King.

Lear. If thou be'st as poore for a subiect, as hee's for a King, thou art poore enough. What wouldst thou?

Kent. Seruice.

Lear. Who wouldst thou serue?

Kent. You.

Lear. Dost thou know me fellow?

Kent. No Sir, but you haue that in your countenance, which I would faine call Master.

Lear. What's that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What seruices canst thou do?

Kent. I can keepe honest counsaile, ride, run, marre a curious tale in telling it, and deliuer a plaine message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in, and the best of me, is Dilligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young Sir to loue a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for any thing. I haue yeares on my backe forty eight.

Lear. Follow me, thou shalt serue me, if I like thee no worle after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner ho, dinner, where's my knaue? my Foole? Go you and call my Foole hither. You you Sirrah, where's my Daughter?

Enter Steward.

Ste. So please you — Exit.

Lear. What saies the Fellow there? Call the Clopole backe: where's my Foole? Ho, I thinke the world's asleepe, how now? Where's that Mungrell?

Knigh. He saies my Lord, your Daughters is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slaue backe to me when I call'd him?

Knigh. Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not?

Knigh. My Lord, I know not what the matter is, but to my iudgement your Highnesse is not entertain'd with that Ceremonious affection as you were wont, theres a great abatement of kindnesse appeares as well in the generall dependants, as in the Duke himselfe also, and your Daughter.

Lear. Ha? Saist thou so?

Knigh. I beseech you pardon me my Lord, if I bee mistaken, for my duty cannot be silent, when I thinke your Highnesse wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remembrest me of mine owne Conception, I haue perceiued a most faint neglect of late, which I haue rather blamed as mine owne iealous curiosity, then as a very pretence and purpose of vnkindnesse;
I will looke further into't: but where's my Foole? I haue not seene him this two daies.

Knigh. Since my young Ladies going into France
Sir,

Sir, the Foole hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that, I have noted it well, goe you and tell my Daughter, I would speake with her. Goe you call hither my Foole; Oh you Sir, you, come you hither Sir, who am I Sir?

Enter Steward.

Sto. My Ladies Father.

Lear. My Ladies Father? my Lords knaue, you whorson dog, you flauie, you curie.

Sto. I am none of these my Lord, I beseech your pardon.

Lear. Do you bandy looks with me, you Rascall?

Sto. Ile not be stricken my Lord.

Kent. Nor tript neither, you base Foot-ball plaier.

Lear. I thanke thee fellow.

Thou seru't me, and Ile loue thee.

Kent. Come sir, arise, away, Ile teach you differences: away, away, if you will measure your lubbers length againe, tarry, but away, goe too, haue you wisdom, so.

Lear. Now my friendly knaue I thanke thee, there's earnest of thy seruice.

Enter Foole.

Foole. Let me hire him too, here's my Coxcombe.

Lear. How now my pretty knaue, how dost thou?

Foole. Sirrah, you were best take my Coxcombe.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Foole. Why? for taking ones part that's out of fauour, nay, & thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch colde shortly, there take my Coxcombe; why this fellow ha's banish'd two on's Daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will, if thou follow him, thou must needs weare my Coxcombe. How now Nuncle? would I had two Coxcombes and two Daughters.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Foole. If I gaue them all my liuing, I'd keepe my Coxcombes my selfe, there's mine, beg another of thy Daughters.

Lear. Take heed Sirrah, the whip.

Foole. Truth's a dog must to kennell, hee must bee whipt out, when the Lady Brach may stand by th' fire and sinke.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me.

Foole. Sirrah, Ile teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Foole. Marke it Nuncle;

Haue more then thou showest,

Speake lesse then thou knowest,

Lend lesse then thou owest,

Ride more then thou goest,

Leaue more then thou trowest,

Set lesse then thou throwest;

Leaue thy drinke and thy whore,

And keepe in a dore,

And thou shalt haue more,

Then two tens to a score.

Kent. This is nothing Foole.

Foole. Then 'tis like the breach of an vnfeed Lawyer, you gaue me nothing for't, can you make no vse of nothing Nuncle?

Lear. Why no Boy,

Nothing can be made out of nothing.

Foole. Prythee tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to, he will not beleue a Foole.

Lear. A bitter Foole.

Foole. Do'st thou know the difference my Boy, betwene a bitter Foole, and a sweet one.

Lear. No Lad, teach me.

Foole. Nuncle, giue me an egge, and Ile giue thee two Crownes.

Lear. What two Crownes shall they be?

Foole. Why after I haue cut the egge i'th' middle and eate vp the meate, the two Crownes of the egge: when thou clouest thy Crownes i'th' middle, and gau'st away both parts, thou boar'st thine Assle on thy backe o'the durt, thou had'st little wit in thy bald crowne, when thou gau'st thy golden one away; if I speake like my selfe in this, let him be whipt that first findes it so.

Foole. Had nere lesse grace in a yeere,

For wisemen are growne foppish,

And know not how their wits to weare,

Their manners are so apish.

Lear. When were you wont to be so full of Songs sirrah?

Foole. I haue vsed it Nuncle, ere since thou mad'st thy Daughters thy Mothers, for when thou gau'st them the rod, and put'st downe thine owne breeches, then they For sodaine ioy did weepe,

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a King should play bo-peep,

And goe the Foole among.

Pry thy Nuncle keepe a Schoolemaster that can teach thy Foole to lie, I would faine learne to lie.

Lear. And you lie sirrah, wee'l haue you whipt.

Foole. I maruell what kin thou and thy daughters are, they'l haue me whipt for speaking true: thou'lt haue me whipt for lying, and sometimes I am whipt for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o'thing then a foole, and yet I would not be thee Nuncle, thou hast pared thy wit o'both sides, and left nothing i'th' middle; here comes one o'the parings.

Enter Gonerill.

Lear. How now Daughter? what makes that Frontlet on? You are too much of late i'th' frowne.

Foole. Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou had'st no need to care for her frowning, now thou art an O without a figure, I am better then thou art now, I am a Foole, thou art nothing. Yes forsooth I will hold my tongue, so your face bids me, though you say nothing.

Mum, mum, he that keeps nor crust nor crum,

Weary of all, shall want some. That's a sheal'd Pefcod.

Gon. Not only Sir this, your all-lycenc'd Foole,

But other of your insolent retinue

Do hourly Carpe and Quarrell, breaking forth

In ranke, and (not to be endur'd) riots Sir.

I had thought by making this well knowne vnto you,

To haue found a safe redresse, but now grow fearefull

By what your selfe too late haue spoke and done,

That you protect this course, and put it on

By your allowance, which if you should, the fault

Would not scape censure, nor the redresses sleepe,

Which in the tender of a wholesome weale,

Might in their working do you that offence,

Which else were shame, that then necessitie

Will call discrete proceeding.

Foole. For you know Nuncle, the Hedge-Sparrow fed the Cuckoo so long, that it's had it head bit off by it young, so our went the Candle, and we were left darkling.

Lear. Are you our Daughter?

Gon. I would you would make vse of your good wife.

(Whereof I know you are fraught) and put away

These dispositions, which of late transport you

From what you rightly are.

(dome

Foole. May

Foole. May not an Assle know, when the Cart drawes the Horse?

Whoop Iugge I loue thee.

Lear. Do's any heere know me?

This is not Lear:

Do's Lear walke thus? Speake thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his Notion weakens, his Discernings

Are Lethargied. Ha! Waking? 'Tis not so?

Who is it that can tell me who I am?

Foole. Lear's shadow.

Lear. Your name, faire Gentlewoman?

Gon. This admiration Sir, is much o'th' fauour

O'ther your new pranks. I do beseech you

To vnderstand my purposes aright:

As you are Old, and Reuerend, should be Wise.

Heere do you keepe a hundred Knights and Squires,

Men so disorder'd, so debosh'd, and bold,

That this our Court infected with their manners,

Shewes like a riotous Inn; Epicurisme and Lust

Makes it more like a Tauerne, or a Brothell,

Then a grac'd Pallace. The shame it selfe doth speake

For instant remedy. Be then desir'd

By her, that else will take the thing she begges,

A little to disquantity your Train,

And the remainders that shall still depend,

To be such men as may befort your Age,

Which know themselves, and you.

Lear. Darknesse, and Diuels.

Saddle my horses: call my Train together.

Degenerate Bastard, Ile not trouble thee;

Yet haue I left a daughter.

Gon. You strike my people, and your disorder'd rable, make Seruants of their Betters.

Enter Albany.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents:

Is it your will, speake Sir? Prepare my Horses.

Ingratitude! thou Marble-hearted Fiend,

More hideous when thou shew'st thee in a Child,

Then the Sea-monster.

Alb. Pray Sir be patient.

Lear. Detested Kite, thou lyest.

My Train are men of choice, and rarest parts,

That all particulars of dutie know,

And in the most exact regard, support

The worship of their name. O most small fault,

How vgly did'st thou in Cordelia shew?

Which like an Engine, wrencht my frame of Nature

From the fixt place: drew from my heart all loue,

And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!

Beate at this gate that let thy Folly in,

And thy deere Iudgement out. Go, go, my people.

Alb. My Lord, I am guiltlesse, as I am ignorant

Of what hath moued you.

Lear. It may be so, my Lord.

Heare Nature, heare deere Goddess, heare:

Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend

To make this Creature fruitfull:

Into her Wombe conuey sterility,

Drie vp in her the Organs of increase,

And from her derogate body, neuer spring

A Babe to honor her. If she must teeme,

Create her child of Spleene, that it may liue

And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.

Let it stampe wrinkles in her brow of youth,

With cadent Teares fret Channels in her cheekes,

Turne all her Mother's paines, and benefits

To laughter, and contempt: That she may feele,

How sharper then a Serpents tooth it is,

To haue a thanklesse Childe. Away, away.

Exit.

Alb. Now Gods that weadore,

Whereof comes this?

Gon. Neuer afflict your selfe to know more of it:

But let his disposition haue that scope

As dotage giues it.

Enter Lear.

Lear. What fittie of my Followers at a clap?

Within a fortnight?

Alb. What's the matter, Sir?

Lear. Ile tell thee:

Life and death, I am agham'd

That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus,

That these hot teares, which breake from me perforce

Should make thee worth them.

Blastes and Fogges vpon thee:

Th' vtented woundings of a Fathers curse

Pierce euerie sense about thee. Old fond eyes,

Beweepe this cause againe, Ile plucke ye out,

And cast you with the waters that you loose

To temper Clay. Ha? Let it be so.

I haue another daughter,

Who I am sure is kinde and comfortable:

When she shall heare this of thee, with her nailes

Shee'l flea thy Woluish visage. Thou shalt finde,

That Ile resume the shape which thou dost thinke

I haue cast off for euer.

Exit.

Gon. Do you marke that?

Alb. I cannot be so partiall Gonerill,

To the great loue I beare you.

Gon. Pray you content. What Oswald, hoa?

You Sir, more Knaue then Foole, after your Master.

Foole. Nuncle Lear, Nuncle Lear,

Tarry, take the Foole with thee:

A Fox, when one has caught her,

And such a Daughter,

Should sure to the Slaughter,

If my Cap would buy a Halter,

So the Foole followes after.

Exit.

Gon. This man hath had good Counsell,

A hundred Knights?

'Tis politike, and safe to let him keepe

At point a hundred Knights: yes, that on euerie dreame,

Each buz, each fancie, each complaint, dislike,

He may enguard his dotage with their powres,

And hold our liues in mercy. Oswald, I say.

Alb. Well, you may feare too farre.

Gon. Safer then trust too farre;

Let me still take away the harmes I feare,

Not feare still to be taken. I know his heart,

What he hath vtter'd I haue writ my Sister:

If she sustaine him, and his hundred Knights

When I haue shew'd th' vnstinesse.

Enter Steward.

How now Oswald?

What haue you writ that Letter to my Sister?

Stew. I Madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse,

Informe her full of my particular feare,

And thereto adde such reasons of your owne;

As may compact it more. Get you gone,

And

And hasten your returne; no, no, my Lord,
This milky gentleness, and course of yours
Though I condemne not, yet vnder pardon
Your are much more at task for want of wisedome,
Then prais'd for harmefull mildnesse.

Alb. How farre your eyes may pierce I cannot tell;
Striving to better, oft we marre what's well.

Cor. Nay then

Alb. Well, well, the vult.

Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Lear, Kent, Gentleman, and Foole.

Lear. Go you before to Gloster with these Letters; acquaint my Daughter no further with any thing you know, then comes from her demand out of the Letter, if your Dilligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore
you.

Kent. I will not sleepe my Lord, till I haue deliuered your Letter. Exit.

Foole. If a mans braines were in's heeles, wert not in danger of kybes?

Lear. I Boy.

Foole. Then I prythee be merry, thy wit shall not go flip-shod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha.

Foole. Shalt see thy other Daughter will vse thee kindly, for though she's as like this, as a Crabbe's like an Apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. What can't tell Boy?

Foole. She will taste as like this as, a Crabbe do's to a Crab: thou canst tell why ones nose stands i'th' middle on's face?

Lear. No.

Foole. Why to keepe ones eyes of either side's nose, that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong.

Foole. Can't tell how an Oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Foole. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a Snail ha's a house.

Lear. Why?

Foole. Why to put's head in, not to giue it away to his daughters, and leaue his homes without a case.

Lear. I will forget my Nature, so kind a Father? Be my Horses ready?

Foole. Thy Asles are gone about 'em; the reason why the seven Statres are no mo then seven, is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight.

Foole. Yes indeed, thou would'st make a good Foole.

Lear. To tak't againe perforce; Monster Ingratitude!

Foole. If thou wert my Foole Nunckle, I'd haue thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Foole. Thou shouldst not haue bin old, till thou hadst bin wise.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad sweet Heauen; keepe me in temper; I would not be mad. How now are the Horses ready?

Gent. Ready my Lord.

Lear. Come Boy.

Fool. She that's a Maid now, & laughs at my departure,
Shall not be a Maid long, vnlesse things be cut shorter.
Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Bastard, and Curan, generally.

Bast. Saue thee Curan.

Cur. And your Sir, I haue bin
With your Father, and giuen him notice
That the Duke of Cornwall, and Regan his Duchesse
Will be here with him this night.

Bast. How comes that?

Cur. Nay I know not, you haue heard of the newes abroad, I meane the whisper'd ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments.

Bast. Not! pray you what are they?

Cur. Haue you heard of no likely Warres toward,
'Twixt the Dukes of Cornwall, and Albany?

Bast. Not a word.

Cur. You may do then in time,
Fare you well Sir.

Bast. The Duke be here to night? The better best,
This weaues it selfe perforce into my businesse,
My Father hath set guard to take my Brother,
And I haue one thing of a queazie question
Which I must ask, Briefenesse, and Fortune worke,
Enter Edgar.

Brother, a word, discend; Brother I say,
My Father watches: O Sir, fly this place,
Intelligence is giuen where you are hid;
You haue now the good aduantage of the night,
Haue you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall?
Hee's coming hither, now i'th' night, i'th' haste,
And Regan with him, haue you nothing said
Vpon his partie 'gainst the Duke of Albany?
Aduise your selfe.

Edg. I am sure on't, not a word.

Bast. I heare my Father coming, pardon me;
In cunning, I must draw my Sword vpon you:
Draw, see me to defend your selfe,
Now quit you well.

Yeeld, come before my Father, light hoo, here,
Fly Brother, Torches; Torches, so farewell.

Exit Edgar.

Some blood drawne on me, would beget opinion
Of my more fierce endeaour. I haue scene drunkards
Do more then this in sport; Father, Father,
Stop, stop, no helpe?

Enter Gloster, and Seruants with Torches.

Glo. Now Edmund, where's the villaine?

Bast. Here stood he in the dark, his sharpe Sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charmes, coniuring the Moone

To stand auspicious Mistis.

Glo. But where is he?

Bast. Looke Sir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villaine, Edmund?

Bast. Fled this way Sir, when by no meanes he could.

Glo. Pursue him, ho: go after. By no meanes, what?

Bast. Perswade me to the murder of your Lordship,
But

But that I told him the reuenging Gods,
'Gainst Paricides did all the thunder bend,
Spoke with how manifold, and strong a Bond
The Child was bound to th' Father; Sir in fine,
Seeing how lothly opposite I stood
To his vnaturall purpose, in fell motion
With his prepared Sword, he charges home
My vnprouided body, latch'd mine armes;
And when he saw my best alarm'd spirits
Bold in the quarrels right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether gaffted by the noyse I made,
Full sodainely he fled.

Glo. Let him fly farre:
Not in this Land shall he remaine vncaught
And found; dispatch, the Noble Duke my Master,
My worthy Arch and Patron comes to night,
By his authoritie I will proclaime it,
That he which finds him shall deserue our thankses,
Bringing the murderous Coward to the stake:
He that conceales him death.

Bast. When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to doe it, with curst speech
I threaten'd to discouer him; he replied,
Thou vnpossessing Bastard, dost thou thinke,
If I would stand against thee, would the repofall
Of any trust, vertue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faith'd? No, what should I denie,
(As this I would, though thou didst produce
My very Character) I'd turne it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practise:
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potentiall spirites
To make thee seeke it. Tucket within.

Glo. O strange and fastned Villaine,
Would he deny his Letter, said he?
Harke, the Dukes Trumpets, I know not wher he comes;
All Ports Ile barre, the villaine shall not scape,
The Duke must grant me that: besides, his picture
I will send farre and neere, that all the kingdome
May haue due note of him, and of my land,
(Loyall and naturall Boy) Ile worke the meanes
To make thee capable.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, and Attendants.

Corn. How now my Noble friend, since I came hither (Which I can call but now,) I haue heard strangenesse.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short

Which can pursue th' offender; how dost my Lord?

Glo. O Madam, my old heart is crack'd, it's crack'd.

Reg. What, did my Fathers Godsonne seeke your life?

He whom my Father nam'd, your Edgar?

Glo. O Lady, Lady, shame would haue it hid.

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous Knights

That tended vpon my Father?

Glo. I know not Madam, 'tis too bad, too bad.

Bast. Yes Madam, he was of that consort.

Reg. No maruaile then, though he were ill affected,

'Tis they haue put him on the old mans death,

To haue th' expence and wast of his Reuenues:

I haue this present euening from my Sister

Beene well inform'd of them, and wish such cautions,

That if they come to sojourne at my house,

Ile not be there.

Cor. Nor I assure thee Regan;

Edmund, I heare that you haue shewne your Father
A Child-like Office.

Bast. It was my duty Sir.

Glo. He did bewray his practise, and receiu'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Cor. Is he pursued?

Glo. I my good Lord.

Cor. If he be taken, he shall neuer more

Be fear'd of doing harme, make your owne purpose,
How in my strength you please: for you Edmund,
Whose vertue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend it selfe, you shall be ours,
Nature's of such deepe trust, we shall much need:
You we first seize on.

Bast. I shall serue you Sir truly, how euer else.

Glo. For him I thanke your Grace.

Cor. You know not why we came to visit you?

Reg. Thus out of season, thredding darke ey'd night,
Occasions Noble Gloster of some prize,
Wherein we must haue vse of your aduise.
Our Father he hath writ, so hath our Sister,
Of differences, which I best though it fit
To answere from our home: the feuerall Messengers
From hence attend dispatch, our good old Friend,
Lay comforts to your bosome, and bestow
Your needfull counsaile to our businesse,
Which craves the instant vse.

Glo. I serue you Madam,

Your Graces are right welcome.

Exeunt. Flourish.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Kent, and Steward generally.

Stew. Good dawning to thee Friend, art of this house?

Kent. I.

Stew. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I'th' myre.

Stew. Prythee, if thou lou'st me, tell me,

Kent. I lone thee not.

Stew. Why then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury Pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Stew. Why do'st thou vse me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow I know thee.

Stew. What do'st thou know me for?

Kent. A Knaue, a Rascall, an eater of broken meates, a base, proud, shallow, beggerly, three-suited-hundred pound, filthy woofted-stocking knaue, a Lilly-liuered, action-taking, whoreson glasse-gazing super-seruiceable finicall Rogue, one Trunke-inheriting flauie, one that would't be a Baud in way of good seruice, and art nothing but the composition of a Knaue, Begger, Coward, Pandar, and the Sonne and Heire of a Mungrell Bitch, one whom I will beate into clamours whining, if thou deny'st the least fillable of thy addition.

Stew. Why, what a monstrous Fellow art thou, thus to raile on one, that is neither knowne of thee, nor knowes thee?

Kent. What a brazen-fac'd Varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me? Is it two dayes since I tript vp thy heelles, and beate thee before the King? Draw you rogue,
for

for though it be night, yet the Moone shines, He make a fop oth' Moonshine of you, you whorson Cullyenly
Barber-monger, draw.

Stew. Away, I haue nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw you Rascall, you come with Letters against the King, and take Vanitie the puppets part, against the Royaltie of her Father: draw you Rogue, or He so carbonado your shanks, draw you Rascall, come your waies.

Stew. Helpe, ho, murder, helpe.

Kent. Strike you slaue: stand rogue, stand you neat slaue, strike.

Stew. Helpe ho, murder, murder.

Enter Bassard, Cornewall, Regan, Gloster, Seruants.

Bass. How now, what's the matter? Part.

Kent. With you Goodman Boy, if you please, come,
He flesh ye, come on yong Master.

Glo. Weapons? Armes? what's the matter here?

Cor. Keepe peace vpon your liues, he dies that strikes again, what is the matter?

Reg. The Messengers from our Sister, and the King?

Cor. What is your difference, speake?

Stew. I am scarce in breath my Lord.

Kent. No Maruell, you haue so bestir'd your valour, you cowardly Rascall, nature disclaimes in thee: a Taylor made thee.

Cor. Thou art a strange fellow, a Taylor make a man?

Kent. A Taylor Sir, a Stone-cutter, or a Painter, could not haue made him so ill, though they had bin but two yeares oth' trade.

Cor. Speake yet, how grew your quarrell?

Stew. This ancient Ruffian Sir, whose life I haue spar'd at fure of his gray-beard.

Kent. Thou whorson Zed, thou vnecessary letter:
my Lord, if you will giue me leaue, I will tread this vnboulded villaine into mortar, and daube the wall of a Iakes with him. Spare my gray-beard, you wagtaile?

Cor. Peace sirrah,

You beaflly knaue, know you no reuerence?

Kent. Yes Sir, but anger hath a priuiledge.

Cor. Why art thou angrie?

Kent. That such a slaue as this should weare a Sword,
Who weares no honesty: such smiling rogues as these,
Like Rats oft bite the holy cords: a twaine,
Which are t' intrince, t' vnloose: smooth euery passion
That in the natures of their Lords rebell,
Being oile to fire, snow to the colder moodes,
Reuenge, affirme, and turne their Halcion beakes
With euery gail, and vary of their Masters,
Knowing naught (like dogges) but following:
A plague vpon your Epilepticke visage,
Smooile you my speeches, as I were a Foole?
Goose, if I had you vpon Sarum Plaine,
I'd driue ye cackling home to Camelot.

Cor. What art thou mad old Fellow?

Glo. How fell you out, say that?

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
Then I, and such a knaue.

Cor. Why do'st thou call him Knaue?
What is his fault?

Kent. His countenance likes me not.

Cor. No more perchance do's mine, nor his, nor hers:

Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plaine,
I haue seene better faces in my time,

Then stands on any shoulder that I see
Before me, at this instant.

Cor. This is some Fellow,
Who hauing beene prais'd for bluntnesse, doth affect
A saucy roughnes, and constraines the garb
Quite from his Nature. He cannot flatter he,
An honest mind and plaine, he must speake truth,
And they will take it so, if not, hee's plaine.
These kind of Knaues I know, which in this plaineesse
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends.
Then twenty filly-ducking obseruants,
That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good faith, in sincere verity,
Vnder th' allowance of your great aspect,
Whose influence like the wreath of radiant fire
On flicking Phaebus front.

Cor. What mean'st by this?

Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you discom-mend so much; I know Sir, I am no flatterer, he that be-guild you in a plaine accent, was a plaine Knaue, which for my part I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me too't.

Cor. What was th' offence you gaue him?

Stew. I neuer gaue him any:

Kent. I pleas'd the King his Master very late
To strike at me vpon his misconstruction,
When he compact, and flattering his displeasure
Tript me behind: being downe, insulted, rail'd,
And put vpon him such a deale of Man,
That worthied him, got praises of the King,
For him attempting, who was selfe-subdued,
And in the fleshment of this dead exploit,
Drew on me here againe.

Kent. None of these Rogues, and Cowards
But Ajax is there Foole.

Cor. Fetch forth the Stocks?

You stubborn ancient Knaue, you reuerent Bragart,
Wee'l teach you.

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learne:

Call not your Stocks for me, I serue the King.

On whose employment I was sent to you,
You shall doe small respects, show too bold malice
Against the Grace, and Person of my Master, Stocking his Messenger.

Cor. Fetch forth the Stocks:

As I haue life and Honour, there shall he sit till Noone.

Reg. Till noone? till night my Lord, and all night too.

Kent. Why Madam, if I were your Fathers dog,
You should not vse me so.

Reg. Sir, being his Knaue, I will.

Cor. This is a Fellow of the selfe same colour,
Our Sister speaks of. Come, bring away the Stocks.

Glo. Let me beseech your Grace, not to do so,
The King his Master, needs must take it ill

That he so slightly valued in his Messenger,
Should haue him thus restrained.

Cor. He and were that.

Reg. My Sister may reueue it much more worffe,
To haue her Gentleman abus'd, assaulted.

Cor. Come my Lord, away.

Glo. I am sorry for thee friend, 'tis the Duke pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knowes

Will not be rub'd nor stop't, He entreat for thee.

Kent. Pray do not Sir, I haue watch'd and trauail'd hard,
Some time I shall sleepe out, the rest Ile whistle:

A good mans fortune may grow out at heels:

Give

Give you good morrow.

Glo. The Duke's too blame in this,

'Twill be ill taken.

Kent. Good King, that must approue the common saw,
Thou out of Heauens benediction com'st
To the warme Sun.

Approach thou Beacon to this vnder Globe,
That by thy comfortable Beames I may peruse this Letter. Nothing almost sees miracles
But miserie. I know 'tis from Cordelia,
Who hath most fortunately bene inform'd
Of my obscur'd course. And shall finde time
From this enormous State, seeking to giue
Losses their remedies. All weary and o're-watch'd,
Take vantage heauie eyes, not to behold
This shamefull lodging. Fortune goodnight,
Smile once more, turne thy wheele.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard my selfe proclaim'd,
And by the happy hollow of a Tree,
Escap'd the hunt. No Port is free, no place
That guard, and most vnusall vigilance
Do's not attend my taking. Whiles I may scape
I will preferue my selfe: and am bethought
To take the basest, and most poorest shape
That euer penury in contempt of man,
Brought neere to beast; my face Ile grime with filth,
Blanket my loines, else all my haire in knots,
And with presented nakednesse out-face
The Windes, and persecutions of the skie;
The Country giues me proofe, and president
Of Bedlam beggers, who with roaring voices,
Strike in their num'd and mortified Armes,
Pins, Wodden-prickes, Nayles, Sprigs of Rosemarie:
And with this horrible obiekt, from low Farmes,
Poore pelting Villages, Sheeps-Coates, and Milles,
Sometimes with Lunaticke bans, sometime with Prayers
Inforce their charitie: poore Turlygod, poore Tom,
That's something yet: Edgar I nothing am.

Enter Lear, Foole, and Gentleman.

Lear. 'Tis strange that they should so depart from home,
And not send backe my Messengers.

Gent. As I learn'd,

The night before, there was no purpose in them
Of this remoue.

Kent. Haile to thee Noble Master.

Lear. Ha? Mak'st thou this shame ahy pastime?

Kent. No my Lord,

Foole. Hah, ha, he weares Cruell Garters Horfes are tied by the heads, Dogges and Beares, by th' necke, Monkies by th' loynes, and Men by th' legs: when a man ouerluffie at legs, then he weares wodden nether-stocks.

Lear. What's he,
That hath so much thy place mistooke
To let thee heere?

Kent. It is both he and she,
Your Son, and Daughter.

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No I say.

Kent. I say yea.

Lear. By Impier I sweare no.

Kent. By Iuno, I sweare I,

Lear. They durst not do't:

They could not, would not do't: 'tis worse then murder,
To do vpon respect such violent outrage:
Resolue me with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserue, or they impose this vage,
Comming from vs.

Kent. My Lord, when at their home
I did commend your Highnesse Letters to them,
Ere I was risen from the place, that shewed
My dutie kneeling, came there a reeking Poste,
Stew'd in his haste, halfe breathlesse, painting forth
From Gonerill his Mistis, salutations;
Deliu'd Letters spight of intermission,
Which presently they read; on those contents
They summon'd vp their meiny, straight tooke Horse,
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer, gaue me cold lookes,
And meeting heere the other Messenger,
Whose welcome I percei'd had poison'd mine,
Being the very fellow which of late
Dispiad so sawcily against your Highnesse, Haueing more man then wit about me, drew;
He rais'd the house, with loud and coward cries,
Your Sonne and Daughter found this trespassed worth
The shame which heere it suffers.

Foole. Winters not gon yet, if the wil'd Geese fly that Fathers that weare rags, do make their Children blind,
But Fathers that beare bags, shall see their children kind.
Fortune that arrant whore, nere turns the key to th' poore.
But for all this thou shalt haue as many Dolours for thy Daughters, as thou canst tell in a yeare.

Lear. Oh how this Mother swels vp toward my heart!
Historica passio, downe thou climbing sorrow,
Thy Elements below where is this Daughter?

Kent. With the Earle Sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not, stay here.

Gent. Made you no more offence,

But what you speake of?

Kent. None:

How chance the the King comes with so small a number?
Foole. And thou hadst bene set i'th' Stocks for that question, thou'd'st well deseru'd it.

Kent. Why Foole?

Foole. Wee'l set thee to schoole to an Ant, to teach thee ther's no labouring i'th' winter. All that follow their noses, are led by their eyes, but blinde men, and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's stinking; let go thy hold, when a great wheele runs downe a hill, least it breake thy necke with following. But the great one that goes vward, let him draw thee after:
when a wiseman giues thee better counsell giue me mine againe, I would haue none but knaues follow it, since a Foole giues it.

That Sir, which serues and seekes for gaine,
And follo wes but for forme;
Will packe, when it begins to raine,
And leaue thee in the storme.

But I will tarry, the Foole will stay,
And let the wiseman fle:

The knaue turnes Foole that runnes away,
The Foole no knaue perdie.

Enter Lear, and Gloster:

Kent. Where learn'd you this Foole?

Foole. Not i'th' Stocks Foole.

rr

Lear.

Lear. Deny to speake with me?
They are sicke, they are weary,
They haue traual'd all the night? meere fetches,
The images of reuolt and flying off.
Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My deere Lord,
You know the fiery quality of the Duke,
How vnremouable and fixt he is
In his owne course.

Lear. Vengeance, Plague, Death, Confusion:
Fiery? What quality? Why Gloster, Gloster,
I'd speake with the Duke of Cornwall, and his wife.

Glo. Well my good Lord, I haue inform'd them so.

Lear. Inform'd them? Do't thou vnderstand me man.

Glo. I my good Lord.

Lear. The King would speake with Cornwall,
The deere Father
Would with his Daughter speake, commands, tends, ser-
Are they inform'd of this? My breath and blood: (uice, Fiery? The fiery Duke, tell the hot Duke that
No, but not yet, may be he is not well,
Infirmity doth still neglect all office,
Whereto our health is bound, we are not our selues,
When Nature being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body; He forbears,
And am fallen out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit,
For the sound man. Death on my state: wherefore
Should he sit heere? This act perfwades me,
That this remotion of the Duke and her
Is practise only. Giue me my Seruant forth;
Go tell the Duke, and his wife, I'd speake with them:
Now, presently: bid them come forth and heare me,
Or at their Chamber doore He beate the Drum,
Till it erie sleepe to death.

Glo. I would haue all well berixt you. Exit.

Lear. Oh me my heart! My rising heart! But downe.

Foole. Cry to it Nunckle, as the Cockney did to the Eeles, when she put 'em i'th' Piske aliue, she knapt 'em o'th' coxcombs with a sticke, and cryed downe wantons, downe; 'twas her Brother, that in pure kindnesse to his Horse buttered his Hay.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, Seruants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Haile to your Grace. Kent here set at liberty.

Reg. I am glad to see your Highnesse.

Lear. Regan, I thinke you are. I know what reason
I haue to thinke so, if thou should'st not be glad,
I would diuorce me from thy Mother Tombe,
Sepulchring an Adulteresse. O are you free?
Some other time for that. Beloued Regan,
Thy Sisters naught: oh Regan, she hath tied
Sharpe-tooth'd vnkindnesse, like a vulture heere,
I can scarce speake to thee, thou'rt not belecue
With how depraud a quality. Oh Regan.

Reg. I pray you Sir, take patience, I haue hope
You lesse know how to value her desert,
Then she to scant her dutie.

Lear. Say? How is that?

Reg. I cannot thinke my Sister in the least
Would faile her Obligation. If Sir perchance
She haue restrained the Riots of your Followres,
'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As cleeres her from all blame.

Lear. My curles on her.

Reg. O Sir, you are old,
Nature in you stands on the very Verge
Of his confine: you should be rul'd, and led
By some discretion, that discernes your state
Better then you your selfe: therefore I pray you,
That to our Sister, you do make returne,
Say you haue wrong'd her.

Lear. Aske her forgiveness?

Do you but marke how this becomes the house:
Deere daughter, I confesse that I am old;
Age is vnneccessary: on my knees I begge,
That you'll vouchsafe me Rayment, Bed, and Food.

Reg. Good Sir, no more: these are vnfighly trickes: Returne you to my Sister.

Lear. Neuer Regan:

She hath abated me of halfe my Traines;
Look'd blacke vpon me, strooke me with her Tongue
Most Serpent-like, vpon the very Heart,
All the stor'd Vengeances of Heauen, fall
On her ingratull top: strike her yong bones
You taking Ayres, with Lamenesse.

Corn. Fye Sir, fye.

Le. You nimble Lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornfull eyes: Infect her Beauty,
You Fen-suck'd Foggies, drawne by the powfull Sunne,
To fall, and blister.

Reg. O the blest Gods!

So will you wish on me, when the rath moode is on.

Lear. No Regan, thou shalt neuer haue my curse:
Thy tender-hefted Nature shall not giue

Thee o're to harshnesse: Her eyes are fierce, but thine

Do comfort, and not burne. 'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my Traines,

To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,

And in conclusion, to oppose the bolt

Against my coming in. Thou better know'st

The Offices of Nature, bond of Childhood,

Effects of Curtesie, dues of Gratitude:

Thy halfe o'th' Kingdome hast thou not forgot,

Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good Sir, to'th' purpose. Tucket within.

Lear. Who put my man i'th' Stockes?

Enter Steward.

Corn. What Trumpet's that?

Reg. I know't, my Sisters: this approues her Letter,

That she would soone be heere. Is your Lady come?

Lear. This is a Slave, whose easie borrowed pride

Dwells in the flicky grace of her he followes.

Out Varler, from my sight.

Corn. What meanes your Grace?

Enter Conerill.

Lear. Who stockt my Seruant? Regan, I haue good hope

Thou did'st not know on't.

Who comes here? O Heauens!

If you do loue old men; if your sweet sway

Allow Obedience; if you your selues are old,

Make it your cause: Send downe, and take my part.

Art not asham'd to looke vpon this Beard?

O Regan, will you take her by the hand?

Con. Why not by'th' hand Sir? How haue I offended?

All's not offence that indiscretion findes,

And dotage termes so.

Lear. O sides, you are too tough!

Will you yet hold?

How came my man i'th' Stockes?

Corn. I set him there, Sir: but his owne Disorders

Deser'd

Deser'd much lesse aduancement.

Lear. You? Did you?

Reg. I pray you Father being weake, seeme so:

It will the expiration of your Moneth

You will returne and sojourn with my Sister,

Dismissing halfe your traines, come then to me,

I am now from home, and out of that prouision

Which shall be needfull for your entertainment.

Lear. Returne to her? and fifty men dismiss'd?

No, rather I abjure all roofes, and chuse

To wage against the enmity o'th' ayre,

To be a Comrade with the Wolfe, and Owle,

Necessities sharpe pinch. Returne with her?

Why the hot-blooded France, that dowerlesse tooke

Our yongest borne, I could as well be brought To knee his Throne, and Squire-like pension beg,

To keepe base life a foote; returne with her?

Perfwade me rather to be slaue and snapper

To this detested groom.

Con. At your choice Sir.

Lear. I prythee Daughter do not make me mad,

I will not trouble thee my Child; farewell:

Wee'l no more meete, no more see one another.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my Daughter,

Or rather a disease that's in my flesh,

Which I must needs call mine. Thou art a Byle,

A plague sore, or imbossed Carbuncle

In my corrupted blood. But He not chide thee,

Let shame come when it will, I do not call it,

I do not bid the Thunder-bearer shooe,

Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Ioue.

Mend when thou can'st, be better at thy leisure,

I can be patient, I can stay with Regan,

And my hundred Knights.

Reg. Not altogether so,

I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided

For your fit welcome, giue care Sir to my Sister,

For those that mingle reason with your passion,

Must be content to thinke you old, and so,

But she knowes what she doe's.

Lear. Is this well spoken?

Reg. I dare auouch it Sir, what fifty Followers?

Is it not well? What should you need of more?

Yea, or so many? Sith that both charge and danger,

Speake 'gainst so great a number? How in one house

Should many people, vnder two commands

Hold amity? 'Tis hard, almost impossible.

Con. Why might not you my Lord, receiue attendance

From those that she calls Seruants, or from mine?

Reg. Why not my Lord?

If then they chanc'd to slacke ye,

We could controll them; if you will come to me,

(For now I spie a danger) I entreate you

To bring but fife and twentie, to no more

Will I giue place or notice.

Lear. I giue you all.

Reg. And in good time you giue it.

Lear. Made you my Guardians, my Depositarie,

But kept a reservation to be followed

With such a number? What, must I come to you

With fife and twentie? Regan, said you so?

Reg. And speak't againe my Lord, no more with me.

Lea. Those wicked Creatures yet do look wel fauor'd

When others are more wicked, not being the worst

Stands in some ranke of praise, He go with thee,

Thy fiftie yet doth double fife and twentie.

And thou art twice her Loue.

Con. Heare me my Lord;

What need you fife and twentie? Ten? Or fife?

To follow in a house, where twice so many

Haue a command to tend you?

Reg. What need one?

Lear. O reason not the need: our basest Beggers

Are in the poorest thing superfluous,

Allow not Nature, more then Nature needs:

Mans life is cheape as Beastes. Thou art a Lady;

If onely go warme were gorgeous,

Why Nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,

Which scarcely keeps thee warme, but for true need:

You Heauens, giue me that patience, patience I need,

You see me heere (you Gods) a poore old man,

As full of griefe as age, wretched in both,

If it be you that stirres these Daughters hearts

Against their Father, foole me not so much,

To beare it tamely: touch me with Noble anger,

And let not womens weapons, water drops,

Staine my mans cheekes. No you vnnatural Hags,

I will haue such reuenges on you both,

That all the world shall — I will do such things,

What they are yet, I know not, but they shalbe

The terrors of the earth? you thinke He weepe,

No, He not weepe, I haue full cause of weeping.

Storme and Tempest.

But this heart shal break into a hundred thousand flawes

Or ere He weepe: O Foole, I shall go mad. Exit.

Corn. Let vs withdraw, 'twill be a Storme.

Reg. This house is little, the old man an' ds people,

Cannot be well bestow'd.

Con. 'Tis his owne blame hath put himselfe fr om rest,

And must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, He receiue him gladly,

But not one follower.

Con. So am I purpos'd.

Where is my Lord of Gloster?

Enter Gloster.

Corn. Followed the old man forth, he is return'd.

Glo. The King is in high rage.

Corn. Whether is he going?

Glo. He calls to Horse, but will I know not whether.

Corn. 'Tis best to giue him way, he leads himselfe.

Con. My Lord, entreate him by no meanes to stay.

Glo. Alacke the night comes on, and the high windes

Do sorely ruffle, for many Miles about

There's scarce a Bush.

Reg. O Sir, to wilfull men,

The iniuries that they themselves procure,

Must be their Schoole-Masters: shut vp your doores,

He is attended with a desperate traine,

And what they may incense him too, being apt,

To haue his eare abus'd, wisdome bids feare.

Con. Shut vp your doores my Lord, 'tis a wil'd night,

My Regan counsels well: come out o'th' Storme. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Storme still. Enter Kent, and a Gentleman, severally.

Kent. Who's there besides foule weather?

Gen. One minded like the weather, most vnquietly.

112

Kent.

Kent. I know you: Where's the King?
Gent. Contending with the fretfull Elements;
 Bids the winde blow the Earth into the Sea,
 Or swell the curled Waters 'bout the Maine,
 That things might change, or cease.
Kent. But who is with him?
Gent. None but the Foole, who labours to out-iest
 His heart-strooke injuries.
Kent. Sir, I do know you,
 And dare vpon the warrant of my note
 Commend a deere thing to you. There is diuision (Although as yet the face of it is couer'd
 With mutuall cunning) 'twixt Albany, and Cornwall:
 Who haue, as who haue not, that their great Starres
 Thron'd and let high; Seruants, who seeme no lesse,
 Which are to France the Spies and Speculations
 Intelligent of our State. What hath bin seene,
 Either in snuffes, and packings of the Dukes,
 Or the hard Reine which both of them hath borne
 Against the old kinde King; or something deeper,
 Whereof (perchance) there are but furnishings.
Gent. I will talke further with you.
Kent. No, do not:
 For confirmation that I am much more
 Then my out-wall; open this Purse, and take
 What it contains. If you shall see Cordelia,
 (As feare not but you shall) shew her this Ring,
 And she will tell you who that Fellow is
 That yet you do not know. Fye on this Storme,
 I will go seeke the King.
Gent. Give me your hand,
 Haue you no more to say?
Kent. Few words, but to effect more then all yet;
 That when we haue found the King, in which your pain
 That way, Ile this: He that first lights on him, Holla the other. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Storme still. Enter Lear, and Foole.
Lear. Blow windes, & crack your cheeks; Rage, blow
 You Cataracts, and Hyrricano's spout,
 Till you haue drench'd our Steeples, drown the Cackes.
 You Sulph'rous and Thought-executing Fires,
 Vaunt-curriers of Oake-cleauing Thunder-bolts,
 Sindre my white head. And thou all-shaking Thunder,
 Strike flat the thicke Rotundity o'th' world,
 Cracke Natures moulds, all germanes spill at once
 That makes ingratefull Man.
Foole. O Nunkle, Court holy-water in a dry house, is better then this Rain-water out o'doore. Good Nunkle, in, aske thy Daughters blessing, heere's a night pitties neither Wifemen, nor Fooles.
Lear. Rumble thy belly full: spit Fire, spowt Raine:
 Nor Raine, Winde, Thunder, Fire are my Daughters;
 I taxe not you, you Elements with vnkindnesse.
 I neuer gave you Kingdome, call'd you Children;
 You owe me no subscription. Then let fall
 Your horrible pleasure. Heere I stand your Slaue,
 A poore, infirme, weak, and dispis'd old man:
 But yet I call you Seiuile Ministers,
 That will with two pernicious Daughters ioyne
 Your high-engender'd Battails, gainst a head

So old, and white as this. O ho! 'tis foule.
Foole. He that has a house to put's head in, has a good
 Head-peece:
 The Codpiece that will house, before the head has any;
 The Head, and he shall Lowse: so Beggers marry many.
 The man y makes his Toe, what he his Hart shold make,
 Shall of a Corne cry woe, and turne his sleepe to wake,
 For there was neuer yet faire woman, but shee made mouthes in a glasse.

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the patterne of all patience,
 I will say nothing.
Kent. Who's there?
Foole. Marry here's Grace, and a Codpiece, that's a Wifeman, and a Foole.
Kent. Alas Sir are you here? Things that loue night,
 Loue not such nights as these: The wrathfull Skies
 Gallow the very wanderers of the darke
 And make them keepe their Caues: Since I was man,
 Such sheets of Fire, such bursts of horrid Thunder,
 Such groanes of roaring Winde, and Raine, I neuer
 Remember to haue heard. Mans Nature cannot carry Th'affliction, nor the feare.
Lear. Let the great Goddes
 That keepe this dreadfull pudder o're our heads,
 Finde out their enemies now. Tremble thou Wretch,
 That hast within thee vdiuulged Crimes
 Vnwipt of Iustice. Hide thee, thou Bloudy hand;
 Thou Perur'd, and thou Simular of Vertue
 That art Incestuous, Caytiffe, to peeces shake
 That vnder couert, and conuenient seeming
 Ha's practis'd on mans life. Close pent-vp guilts,
 Rine your concealing Continentes, and cry
 These dreadfull Summoners grace. I am a man,
 More sinn'd against, then sinning.

Kent. Alacke, bare-headed?
 Gracious my Lord, hard by heere is a Houell,
 Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the Tempest:
 Repose you there, while I to this hard house,
 (More harder then the stones whereof 'tis rais'd,
 Which euen but now, demanding after you,
 Deny'd me to come in) returne, and force
 Their scantied curtisie.

Lear. My wits begin to turne.
 Come on my boy. How dost my boy? Art cold?
 I am cold my selfe. Where is this straw, my Fellow?
 The Art of our Necessities is strange,
 And can make vilde things precious. Come, your Houell;
 Poore Foole, and Knaue, I haue one part in my heart
 That's sorry yet for thee.

Foole. He that has and a little-tyne wit,
 With heigh-ho, the Winde and the Raine,
 Must make content with his Fortunes sit,
 Though the Raine it raineth euery day.

Le. True Boy: Come bring vs to this Houell. Exit.

Foole. This is a braue night to coole a Curtizan:
 Ile speake a Prophecie ere I go:
 When Priests are more in word, then matter;
 When Brewers marre their Malt with water;
 When Nobles are their Taylors Tutors,
 No Heretiques burn'd, but wenches Sutors;
 When euery Cate in Law, is right;
 No Squire in debt, nor no poore Knight;
 When Slanders do not liue in Tongues;
 Nor Cut-purses come not to throngs;
 When Vurers tell their Gold i'th' Field,

And Baudes, and whores, do Churches build,
 Then shal the Realme of Albion, come to great confusion:
 Then comes the time, who liues to see't,
 That going shalbe vs'd with feet: (time.
 This prophecie Merlin shall make, for I liue before his
Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Gloster, and Edmund.
Glo. Alacke, alacke Edmund, I like not this vnnatural dealing, when I desired their leaue that I might pity him, they tooke from me the vse of mine owne house, charg'd me on paine of perpetuall displeasure, neither to speake of him, entreat for him, or any way sustaine him.
Edm. Most sauage and vnnaturall.

Glo. Go too; say you nothing! There is diuision betweene the Dukes, and a worse matter then that: I haue receiued a Letter this night, 'tis dangerous to be spoken,
 I haue lock'd the Letter in my Closet, these injuries the King now beares, will be reuenged home; ther is part of a Power already footed; we must incline to the King, I will looke him, and priuily relieue him; goe you and maintaine talke with the Duke, that my charity be not of him perceiued; If he aske for me, I am ill, and gone to bed, if I die for it, (as no lesse is threatned me) the King my old Master must be relieued. There is strange things toward Edmund, pray you be carefull. Exit.

Edm. This Curtisie forbid thee, shall the Duke
 Instantly know, and of that Letter too:
 This seemes a faire deseruing, and most draw me
 That which my Father looses no lesse then all,
 The yonger rises, when the old doth fall. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Foole.

Kent. Here is the place my Lord, good my Lord enter,
 The tyranny of the open night's too rough
 For Nature to endure. Storme still

Lear. Let me alone.
Kent. Good my Lord enter heere.
Lear. Wilt breake my heart?
Kent. I had rather breake mine owne.
 Good my Lord enter.

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much that this contentious Inuades vs to the skinfo: 'tis to thee, (Storme
 But where the greater malady is fixt,
 The lesler is scarce felt. Thou'lt shun a Beare,
 But if they fight say toward the roaring Sea,
 Thou'lt meete the Beare i'th' mouth, when the mind's
 The bodies delicate: the tempest in my mind,
 Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
 Saue what beates there, Filliall ingratitude,
 Is it not as this mouth should teate this hand?
 For lifting food too't? But I will punish home;
 No, I will weepe no more; in such a night,

To shut me out? Pour on, I will endure:
 In such a night as this? O Rogan, Gonerill,
 Your old kind Father, whose franke heart gaue all,
 O that way madnesse lies, let me shun that:
 No more of that.

Kent. Good my Lord enter heere.
Lear. Prythee go in thy selfe, seeke thine owne ease,
 This tempest will not giue me leaue to ponder
 On things would hurt me more, but Ile goe in,
 In Boy, goe first: You houselesse pouertie, Exit.
 Nay get thee in; Ile pray, and then Ile sleepe.
 Poore naked wretches, where so ere you are,
 That bide the pelting of this pitiless storme,
 How shall your Houselesse heads, and vned sides,
 Your lop'd, and window'd raggednesse defend you
 From seasons such as these? O I haue tunc
 Too little care of this: Take Physicke, Pompey,
 Expose thy selfe to feelle what wretches feele:
 That thou maist shake the superflux to them,
 And shew the Heauens more iust.

Enter Edgar, and Foole.

Edg. Fathom, and halfe, Fathom, and halfe, poore Tom.
Foole. Come not in heere Nunkle, heere's a spirit, helpe me, helpe me.

Kent. Give me thy hand, who's there?
Foole. A spirit, a spirit, he sayes his name's poore
Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost geumble there i'th' straw? Come forth.

Edg. Away, the foule Fiend followes me, through the sharpe Hawthorne blow the windes. Humh, goe to thy bed and warme thee.

Lear. Did'st thou giue all to thy Daughters? And art thou come to this?

Edgar. Who giues any thing to poore Tom? Whom the foule fiend hath led through Fire, and through Flame, through Sword, and Whirle. Poole, o're Bog, and Quagmire, that hath laid Knives vnder his Pillow, and Haliers in his Pue, set Rats-bane by his Porredge; made him Proud of heart, to ride on a Bay trotting Horse, ouer foure meht Bridges, to course his owne shadow for a Traitor, Blisse thy fye Wits, Tom a cold, O do, do, do, do, do, do, blisse thee from Whirle-Windes, Starre-blasting, and taking, do poore Tom some charite, whom the foule Fiend vexes. There could I haue him now, and there, and there ag as ne, and there. Storme still.

Lear. Ha's his Daughters brought him to this passe?
 Could'st thou saue nothing? Would'st thou giue 'em all?
Foole. Nay, he referu'd a Blanket, else we had bin all sham'd.

Lear. Now all the plagues that in the pendulous ayre
 Hang fatid o're mens faults, light on thy Daughters.

Kent. He hath no Daughters Sir.
Lear. Deare Traitor, nothing could haue subdu'd
 To such a lownesse, but his vnkind Daughters. (Nature
 Is it the fashion, that discarded Fathers,
 Should haue thus little mercy on their flesh:
 Indicious punishment, 'twas this flesh begot
 Those Pelicane Daughters.

Edg. Pillicock sat on Pillicock hill, alow alow, loo, loo.
Foole. This cold night will turne vs all to Fooles, and Madmen.

Edgar. Take heed o'th' foule Fiend, obey thy Parents, keepe thy words Iustice, sweare not, commit not, 113 with

with mans sworne Spouse, set not thy Sweet-heart on proud array. Tom's a cold.

Lear. What hast thou bin?

Edg. A Servingman? Proud in heart, and minde; that cur'd my haire, wore Gloues in my cap; seru'd the Lust of my Mistis heart, and did the acte of darkenesse with her. Swore as many Oathes, as I spake words, & broke them in the sweet face of Heauen. One, that slept in the contriuing of Lust, and wak'd to doe it. Wine lou'd I deere, Dice deere; and in Woman, out-Paramour'd the Turke. False of heart, light of eare, bloody of hand; Hog in flesh, Foxe in stealth, Wolfe in greedinesse, Dog in madnes, Lyon in prey, Let not the creaking of shooes, Nor the rustling of Silkes, betray thy poore heart to woman. Keepe thy foot out of Brothels, thy hand out of Plackets, thy pen from Lenders Bookes, and desye the foule Fiend. Still through the Hawthorne blowes the cold winde: Sayes sum, mun, nonny, Dolphin my Boy, Boy Sefey: let him tread by. Storme still.

Lear. Thou wert better in a Graue, then to answer with thy vncover'd body, this extremitie of the Skies. Is man no more then this? Consider him well. Thou ow'st the Worme no Silke; the Beast, no Hide; the Sheepe, no Wool; the Cat, no perfume. Ha? Here's three on's are sophisticated. Thou art the thing it selfe; vnaccommodated man, is no more but such a poore, bare, forked Animal as thou art. Off, off you Lendings: Come, vnbutton heere.

Enter Gloucester, with a Torch.

Foole. Prythee Nunkle be contented, 'tis a naughtie night to swimme in. Now a little fire in a wilde Field, were like an old Letchers heart, a small spark, all the rest on's body cold: Looke, heere comes a walking fire.

Edg. This is the foule flibbertigibbet; hee begins at Curfew, and walkes at first Cocke: Hee giues the Web and the Pin, squints the eye, and makes the Hare-lippe; Mildewes the white Wheate, and hurts the poore Creature of earth.

Switthold footed thrice the old,
He met the Night-Mare, and her nine-fold;
Bid her a-light, and her troth-plight,
And aroynt thee Witch, aroynt thee.

Kent. How fares your Grace?

Lear. What's he?

Kent. Who's there? What is't you seeke?

Glou. What are you there? Your Names?

Edg. Poore Tom, that eates the swimming Frog, the Toad, the Tod-pole, the wall-Neut, and the water: that in the furie of his heart, when the foule Fiend rages, eates Cow-dung for Sallets; swallows the old Rat, and the ditch-Dogge; drinks the green Mantle of the standing Poole: who is whipt from Tything to Tything, and flocked, punish'd, and imprison'd: who hath three Suites to his backe, sixe shirts to his body:

Horse to ride, and weapon to weare:
Bus Mice, and Rats, and such small Deare,
Haue bin Toms food, for seuen long yeare:

Beware my Follower. Peace Smulkin, peace thou Fiend.

Glou. What hast your Grace no better company?

Edg. The Prince of Darkenesse is a Gentleman. Modo he's call'd, and Mabu.

Glou. Our flesh and blood, my Lord, is growne so wilde, that it doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poore Tom's a cold.

Glou. Go in with me; my duty cannot suffer

To be in all your daughters hard commands: Though their Iniunction be to barre my doores, And let this Tyrannous night take hold vpon you, Yet haue I ventured to come seeke you out, And bring you where both fire, and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talke with this Philosopher, What is the cause of Thunder?

Kent. Good my Lord take his offer, Go into th'house.

Lear. Ile talke a word with this same lerned Theban: What is your study?

Edg. How to preuent the Fiend, and to kill Vermin.

Lear. Let me aske you one word in priuate.

Kent. Importune him once more to go my Lord, His wits begin t'vnstie.

Glou. Canst thou blame him?

Storme still. His Daughters seeke his death: Ah, that good Kent, He said it would be thus: poore banish'd man:

Thou sayest the King growes mad, He tell thee Friends, I am almost mad my selfe. I had a Sonne,

Now out-law'd from my blood: he sought my life, But lately: very late: I lou'd him (Friend)

No Father his Sonne deerer: true to tell thee, The greefe hath craz'd my wits. What a night's this?

I do beseech your grace.

Lear. O cry you mercy, Sir:

Edg. Tom's a cold.

Glou. In fellow there, into th' Houel; keep thee warm.

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my Lord.

Lear. With him;

I will keepe still with my Philosopher.

Kent. Good my Lord, sooth him:

Let him take the Fellow.

Glou. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirra, come on: go along with vs.

Lear. Come, good Athenian,

Glou. No words, no words, hush.

Edg. Childe Rowland to the darke Tower came,

His word was still, fie, feh, and fumme,

I smell the blood of a Brittain man. Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cornwall, and Edmund.

Corn. I will haue my reuenge, ere I depart his house.

Bast. How my Lord, I may be censured, that Nature thus giues way to Loyaltie, something feares mee to thinke of.

Cornw. I now perceiue, it was not altogether your Brothers euill disposition made him seeke his death: but a prouoking merit set a worke by a reprobable badnesse in himselfe.

Bast. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be iust? This is the Letter which hee spake of; which approues him an intelligent partie to the aduances of France. O Heauens! that this Treason were not; or not I the detector.

Corn. Go with me to the Dutchesse.

Bast. If the matter of this Paper be certain, you haue migary businesse in hand. Corn.

Corn. True or false, it hath made thee Earle of Gloucester: seeke out where thy Father is, that hee may bee ready for our apprehension.

Bast. If I finde him comforting the King, it will stiffe his suspicion more fully. I will perseuer in my course of Loyalty, though the conflict be fore betweene that, and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust vpon thee: and thou shalt finde a deere Father in my loue. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Kent, and Gloucester.

Glou. Heere is better then the open ayre, take it thankfully: I will pece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the powre of his wits, haue giuen way to his impatience: the Gods reward your kindnesse.

Enter Lear, Edgar, and Foole.

Edg. Fraterretto calms me, and tells me Nero is an Angler in the Lake of Darknesse: pray Innocent, and beware the foule Fiend.

Foole. Prythee Nunkle tell me, whether a madman be a Gentleman, or a Yeoman.

Lear. A King, a King.

Foole. No, he's a Yeoman, that he's a Gentleman to his Sonne: for hee's a mad Yeoman that sees his Sonne a Gentleman before him.

Lear. To haue a thousand with red burning spits Come hizzing in vpon 'em.

Edg. Blesse thy fine wits.

Kent. O pittie: Sir, where is the patience now That you so oft haue boasted to retaine?

Edg. My teares begin to take his part so much, They marre my counterfeiting.

Lear. The little dogges, and all;

Trey, Blanch, and Sweet-heart: see, they barke at me.

Edg. Tom, will throw his head at them: Auauncy you Curses, be thy mouth or blacke or white:

Tooth that poysons if it bite:

Mastiffe, Grey-hound, Mongtill, Grim,

Hound or Spaniell, Brache, or Hym:

Or Bobtaile tight, or Troude taile,

Tom will make him weepe and waile,

For with throwing thus my head;

Dogs leapt the hatch, and all are fled.

Do, de, de, de: sefe: Come, march to Wakes and Fayres,

And Market Townes: poore Tom thy horne is dry.

Lear. Then let them Anatomize Regan: See what breeds about her heart. Is there any cause in Nature that make these hard-hearts. You sir, I entertaine for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. You will say they are Persian; but let them bee chang'd.

Enter Gloster.

Kent. Now good my Lord, lye heere, and rest awhile.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise, draw the Curtaines: so, so, wee'l go to Supper i'th' morning.

Foole. And Ile go to bed at noone.

Glou. Come hither Friend:

Where is the King my Master?

Kent. Here Sir, but trouble him not, his wits are gon.

Scena Septima.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gonerill, Bastard, and Seruants.

Corn. Poste speedily to my Lord your husband; shew him this Letter, the Army of France is landed: seeke out the Traitor Gloucester.

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gon. Plucke out his eyes.

Corn. Leane him to my displeasure. Edmond, keepe you our Sister company: the reuenges wee are bound to take vpon your Traitorous Father, are not fit for your beholding. Aduece the Duke where you are going, to a most festiuare preparation: we are bound to the like. Our Postes shall be swift, and intelligent betwixt vs. Farewell deere Sister, farewell my Lord of Gloucester.

Enter Steward.

How now? Where's the King?

Stew. My Lord of Gloucester hath conuey'd him hence Some siue or fix and thirty of his Knights

Hot Questists after him, met him at gate,

Who, with some other of the Lords, dependants,

Are gone with him toward Douer; where they boast To haue well armed Friends.

Corn. Get horses for your Mistis.

Gon. Farewell Sweet Lord, and Sister.

Corn. Edmund farewell: go seek the Traitor Gloucester, Pinnion him like a Theefe, bring him before vs.

Though well we may not passe vpon his life Without the forme of Iustice: yet our power Shall do a cur'sie to our wrath, which men May blame, but not comptroll.

Enter Gloucester, and Seruants.

Who's there? the Traitor?

Reg. Ingratefull Fox, 'tis he.

Corn. Binde fast his corky armes.

Glou. What meanes your Graces?

Good my Friends consider you are my Guests: Do me no foule play, Friends.

Corn. Binde him I say.

Reg. Hard, hard: O filthy Traitor.

Glou. Vnmerefull Lady, as you are, I'me none.

Corn. To this Chaire binde him, Villaine, thou shalt finde.

Glou. By the kinde Gods, 'tis most ignobly done To plucke me by the Beard.

Reg. So white, and such a Traitor?

Glou. Naughtie Ladie, These haire which thou dost rauish from my chin Will quicken and accuse thee. I am your Host, With Robbers hands, my hospitable fauours

You

You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come Sir.

What Letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple answer'd; for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacie have you with the Traitors, late footed in the Kingdome?

Reg. To whose hands

You have sent the Lunaticke King: Speake.

Glon. I have a Letter guessingly set downe

Which came from one that's of a newtrall heart,

And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Canning;

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the King?

Glon. To Douer.

Reg. Wherefore to Douer?

Was't thou not charg'd at perill.

Corn. Wherefore to Douer? Let him answer that.

Glon. I am tyed to his Snake,

And I must stand the Course.

Reg. Wherefore to Douer?

Glon. Because I would not see thy cruell Nails

Plucke out his poore old eyes: nor thy fierce Sister,

In his Anointed flesh, sticke boarish phangs.

The Sea, with such a storme as his bare head,

In Hell-blacke night indur'd; would haue buoy'd vp

And quench'd the Stelled fires:

Yet poore old heart, he holpe the Heauens to raine.

If Wolues had at thy Gate howl'd that sterne time,

Thou should'st haue said, good Porter turne the Key:

All Cruels else subscribe: but I shall see

The winged Vengeance ouertake such Children.

Corn. See't shalt thou neuer. Fellowes hold y<sup>e</sup> Chaire, Vpon these eyes of thine, lie fermy foote.

Glon. He that will thinke to liue, till he be old,

Giue me some helpe. — O cruell! O you Gods.

Reg. One side will mocke another: Th'other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance.

Ser. Hold your hand, my Lord:

I haue seru'd you eu<sup>r</sup> since I was a Childe:

But better seruice haue I neuer done you,

Then now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dogge?

Ser. If you did weare a beard vpon your chin,

I'd shake it on this quarrell. What do you meane?

Corn. My Villaine?

Ser. Nay then come on, and take the chance of anger.

Reg. Giue me thy Sword. A pezant stand vp thus?

Killes him.

Ser. Oh I am slaine: my Lord, you haue one eye left

To see some mischefe on him. Oh!

Corn. Let it see more, preuent it: Out vilde gelly:

Where is thy lustre now?

Glon. All darke and comfortlesse?

Where's my Sonne Edmund?

Edmund. enkindle all the sparkes of Nature

To quench this horrid acte.

Reg. Out treacherous Villaine,

Thou call'st on him, that hares thee. It was he

That made the conquest of thy Treasons to vs:

Who is too good to pittie thee.

Glon. O my Fellies! then Edgar was abus'd,

Kinde Gods, forgive me that, and prosper him.

Reg. Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell

His way to Douer. Exit with Gloucester.

How is't my Lord? How looke you?

Corn. I haue receiv'd a hurt: Follow me Lady;
Turne out that eyelesse Villaine: throw this Slaue
Vpon the Dughill: Regan, I bleed apace, Vntimely comes this hurt. Giue me your arme. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yet better thus, and knowne to be concern'd,
Then still contain'd and flatter'd, to be worst:
The lowest, and most dejected thing of Fortune,
Stands still in esperance, liues not in feare:
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome then,
Thou vnsubstantiall ayre that I embrace:
The Wretch that thou hast blowne vnto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts.

Enter Gloucester, and an Oldman.

But who comes heere? My Father poorely led?

World, World, O world!

But that thy strange mutations make vs hate thee,

Life would not yeelde to age.

Oldm. O my good Lord, I haue bene your Tenant,

And your Fathers Tenant, these fourescore yeares.

Glon. Away, get thee away: good Friend be gone,

Thy comforts can do me no good at all,

Thee, they may hurt.

Oldm. You cannot see your way.

Glon. I haue no way, and therefore want no eyes:

I stumbled when I saw. Full oft 'tis seene,

Our meanes secure vs, and our nicere defects

Proue our Commodities. Oh deere Sonne Edgar,

The food of thy abused Fathers wrath:

Might I but liue to see thee in my touch,

I'd say I had eyes againe.

Oldm. How now? who's there?

Edg. O Gods! Who is't can say I am at the worst?

I am worse then ere I was.

Old. 'Tis poore mad Tom.

Edg. And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,

So long as we can say this is the worst.

Oldm. Fellow, where goest?

Glon. Is it a Beggar-man?

Oldm. Madman, and beggar too.

Glon. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

I th'last nights storme, I such a fellow saw;

Which made me thinke a Man, a Worme. My Sonne

Came then into my minde, and yet my minde

Was then scarce Friends with him.

I haue heard more since:

As Flies to wanton Boyes, are we to th'Gods,

They kill vs for their sport.

Edg. How should this be?

Bad is the Trade that must play Foole to sorrow,

Ang'ring it selfe, and others. Blesse thee Master.

Glon. Is that the naked Fellow?

Oldm. I my Lord.

Glon. Get thee away: If for my sake

Thou wilt ore-take vs hence a mile or twaine:

I th'way toward Douer, do it for ancient loue,

And bring some couering for this naked Soule,

Which Ile intreat to leade me.

Old. Alacke sir, he is mad.

Glon.

Glon. 'Tis the times plague,
When Madmen leade the blinde:
Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure:
About the rest, be gone.

Oldm. Ile bring him the best Parrell that I haue

Come on't, what will.

Exit

Glon. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poore Tom's a cold. I cannot daub it further.

Glon. Come hither fellow.

Edg. And yet I must:

Blesse thy sweete eyes, they bleed.

Glon. Know'st thou the way to Douer?

Edg. Both stile, and gate; Horseway, and foot-path:

poore Tom hath bin scarr'd out of his good wits. Blesse thee good mans sonne, from the foule Fiend.

Glon. Here take this purse, y<sup>e</sup> whom the heau'ns plagues

Haue humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched

Makes thee the happier: Heauens deale so still:

Let the superfluous, and Lust-dicted man,

That slaues your ordinance, that will not see

Because he do's not feelee, feelee your powre quickly:

So distribution should vndoo excesse,

And each man haue enough. Dost thou know Douer?

Edg. I Master.

Glon. There is a Cliffe, whose high and bending head

Lookes fearfully in the confined Deepe:

Bring me but to the very brimme of it,

And Ile repaire the misery thou do'st beare

With something rich about me: from that place,

I shall no leading neede.

Edg. Giue me thy arme;

Poore Tom shall leade thee.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Gonerill, Bastard, and Steward.

Gon. Welcome my Lord. I meruell our mild husband

Not met vs on the way. Now, where's your Master?

Stew. Madam within, but neuer man so chang'd:

I told him of the Army that was Landed:

He smil'd at it. I told him you were coming,

His answer was, the worse. Of Glosters Treachery,

And of the loyall Seruice of his Sonne

When I inform'd him, then he call'd me Sor,

And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out:

What most he should dislike, seemes pleasant to him;

What like, offensive.

Gon. Then shall you go no further.

It is the Cowish terror of his spirit

That dares not vnderake: Hee'l not feelee wrongs

Which tye him to an answer: our wishes on the way

May proue effects. Backe Edmond to my Brother,

Hasten his Musters, and conduct his powres.

I must change names at home, and giue the Distaffe

Into my Husbands hands. This trustie Seruant

Shall passe betwene vs: ere long you are like to heare

(If you dare venture in your owne behalfe)

A Mistresses command. Weare this; spare speech,

Decline your head. This kisse, if it durst speake

Would stretch thy Spirits vp into the ayre:

Conceiue, and fare thee well.

Bast. Yours in the rankes of death.

Gon. My most deere Gloster.

Exit.

Oh, the difference of man, and man,
To thee a Womans seruices are due,
My Foole vsurpes my body.

Stew. Madam, here come's my Lord.

Enter Albany.

Gon. I haue bene worth the whistle.

Alb. Oh Gonerill,

You are not worth the dust which the rude winde

Blowes in your face.

Gon. Milke-Liuer'd man,

That bear'st a cheek for blowes, a head for wrongs,

Who hast not in thy browes an eye-discerning

Thine Honor, from thy suffering.

Alb. See thy selfe diuelli:

Proper deformitie seemes not in the Fiend

So horrid as in woman.

Gon. Oh vaine Foole.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Oh my good Lord, the Duke of Cornwall dead,

Slaine by his Seruant, going to put out

The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucesters eyes.

Mes. A Seruant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,

Oppos'd against the act: bending his Sword

To his great Master, who, threat-enrag'd

Flew on him, and among'st them fell'd him dead,

But not without that harmefull stroke, which since

Hath pluckt him after.

Alb. This shewes you are about

You Iustices, that these our neather crimes

So speedily can venge. But (O poore Gloucester)

Lost he his other eye?

Mes. Both, both, my Lord.

This Leter Madam, craues a speedy answer:

'Tis from your Sister.

Gon. One way I like this well,

But being widdow, and my Gloucester with her,]

May all the building in my fancie plucke

Vpon my hatefull life. Another way

The Newes is not so tart. Ile read, and answer.

Alb. Where was his Sonne,

When they did take his eyes?

Mes. Come with my Lady hither.

Alb. He is not heere.

Mes. No my good Lord, I met him backe againe.

Alb. Knowes he the wickednesse?

Mes. I my good Lord: 'twas he inform'd against him

And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment

Might haue the freer course.

Alb. Gloucester, I liue

To thanke thee for the loue thou shew'dst the King,

And to reuenge thine eyes. Come hither Friend,

Tell me what more thou know'st.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Cordelia, Gentlemen, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alacke, 'tis he: why he was met euen now

As mad as the vext Sea, singing alowd.

Crown'd with ranke Fenitar, and furrow weeds,

Wish Hardokes, Hemlocke, Nettles, Cuckoo flowers,

Darnell

Darnell, and all the idle weedes that grow
In our sustaining Corne. A Centery send forth;
Search every Acre in the high-growne field,
And bring him to our eye. What can mans wisdom
In the restoring his bereaued Sense; he that helps him,
Take all my outward worth.

Gent. There is meanes Madam:
Our foster Nurse of Nature, is repose,
The which he lacks: that to prouoke in him
Are many Simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of Anguish.

Cord. All blest Secrets,
All you vnpublick'd Vertues of the earth
Spring with my teares; be aydant, and remediate
In the Goodmans desires: seeke, seeke for him,
Least his vngouern'd rage, dissolve the life
That wants the meanes to leade it.

Enter Messenger.

Mes. Newes Madam,
The Brittish Powres are marching hitherward.

Cor. 'Tis knowne before. Our preparation stands
In expectation of them. O deere Father,
It is thy businesse that I go about: Therefore great France
My mourning, and importun'd teares hath pittied:
No blowne Ambition doth our Armes incite,
But loue, deere loue, and our ag'd Fathers Rite:
Soone may I heare, and see him. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Regan, and Steward.

Reg. But are my Brothers Powres set forth?

Stew. I Madam,

Reg. Himselfe in person there?

Stew. Madam with much ado:

Your Sister is the better Souldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your Lord at home?

Stew. No Madam.

Reg. What night import my Sisters Letter to him?

Stew. I know not, Lady.

Reg. Faith he is posted hence on serious matter:

It was great ignorance, Gloucesters eyes being out

To let him liue. Where he arrives, he moues

All hearts against vs: Edmund, I thinke is gone

In pittie of his misery, to dispatch

His nighted life: Morcouer to desery

The strength o'ch' Enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, Madam, with my Letter.

Reg. Our troopes set forth to morrow, stay with vs:

The wayes are dangerous.

Stew. I may not Madam:

My Lady charg'd my dutie in this busines.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund?

Might not you transport her purposes by word? Belike,

Some things, I know not what. He loue thee much

Let me vnscale the Letter.

Stew. Madam, I had rather

Reg. I know your Lady do's not loue her Husband,

I am sure of that: and at her late being heere,

She gaue strange Eliads, and most speaking looks

To Noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosome.

Stew. I, Madam?

Reg. I speake in vnderstanding: Yare: I know't,
Therefore I do aduise you take this note:
My Lord is dead: Edmund, and I haue talk'd,
And more conuenient is he for my hand
Then for your Ladies: You may gather more:
If you do finde him, pray you giue him this;
And when your Mistis heares thus much from you,
I pray desire her call her wisdom to her.

So fare you well:

If you do chance to heare of that Blinde Traitor,
Preferment fals on him, that curs him off.

Stew. Would I could meet Madam, I should shew
What party I do follow.

Reg. Fare thee well. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Gloucester, and Edgar.

Glow. When shall I come to th'top of that same hill?

Edg. You do climbe vp it now. Look how we labor.

Glow. Me thinks the ground is euery

Edg. Horrible steepe.

Hearke, do you heare the Sea?

Glow. No truly.

Edg. Why then your other Senses grow imperfect
By your eyes anguish.

Glow. So may it be indeed.

Me thinks thy voyce is alter'd, and thou speak'st

In better phrase, and matter then thou did'st.

Edg. Yare much deceiu'd: In nothing am I chang'd
But in my Garments.

Glow. Me thinks yare better spoken.

Edg. Come on Sir,

Heere's the place: stand still: how fearefull

And dizie 'tis, to cast ones eyes so low,

The Crowes and Choughes, that wing the midway ayre

Shew scarce so grosse as Beetles. Halfe way downe

Hangs one that gathers Sampire: dreadfull Trade:

Me thinks he seemes no bigger then his head.

The Fishermen, that walk'd vpon the beach

Appeare like Mice: and yond tall Anchoring Barke,

Diminish'd to her Cocke: her Cocke, a Buoy

Almost too small for sight. The murmuring Surge,

That on th'vnumbred idle Pebble chafes

Cannot be heard so high. He looke no more,

Least my braine turne, and the deficient fight

Topple downe headlong.

Glow. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Giue me your hand:

You are now within a foote of th'extreme Verge:

For all beneath the Moone would I not leape vp right.

Glow. Let go my hand:

Heere Friend's another purse: in it, a Jewell

Well worth a poore mans taking. Fayries, and Gods

Prosper it with thee. Go thou further off,

Bid me farewell, and let me heare thee going.

Edg. Now fare ye well, good Sir.

Glow. With all my heart.

Edg. Why I do trifle thus with his dispaire,

Is done to cure it.

Glow. O you mighty Gods

This world I do renounce, and in your fights

Shake

Shake patiently my great affliction off:

If I could beare it longer, and not fall

To quarrell with your great opposese wiles,

My snuffe, and loathed part of Nature should

Burne it selfe out. If Edgar liue, O blese him:

Now Fellow, fare thee well.

Edg. Gone Sir, farewell:

And yet I know not how conceit may rob

The Treasury of life, when life it selfe

Yields to the Theft. Had he bin where he thought,

By this had thought bin past. Alieue, or dead?

Hoe, you Sir: Friend, heare you Sir, speake:

Thus might he passe indeed: yet he reuiues.

What are you Sir?

Glow. Away, and let me dye.

Edg. Had'st thou beene ought

But Gozemore, Feathers, Ayre,

(So many sathome downe precipitating)

Thou'dst shuer'd like an Egge: but thou do'st breath:

Hast heavy substance, bleed'st not, speak'st, art sound,

Ten Maltis at each, make not the altitude

Which thou hast perpendicularly fell,

Thy life's a Myracle. Speake yet againe.

Glow. But haue I false, or no?

Edg. From the dread Sommer of this Chalkie Bourne

Looke vp a height, the shrill-gorg'd Larke so farre

Cannot be seene, or heard: Do but looke vp.

Glow. Alacke, I haue no eyes:

Is wretchednesse depriu'd that benefit

To end it selfe by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,

When misery could beguile the Tyrans rage,

And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Giue me your arme.

Vp, so: How is't? Feele you your Legges? You stand.

Glow. Too well, too well.

Edg. This is above all strangenesse,

Vpon the crowne o' th' Cliffe. What thing was that

Which parted from you?

Glow. A poore vnfortunate Beggar.

Edg. As I stood heere below, me thought his eyes

Were two full Moones: he had a thousand Noses,

Hornes weak'd, and waued like the enraged Sea:

It was some Fiend: Therefore thou happy Father,

Thinke that the cleere Gods, who make them Honors

Of mens Impossibilities, haue preferred thee.

Glow. I do remember now: henceforth Ile beare

Affliction, till it do cry out it selfe

Enough, enough, and dye. That thing you speake of,

I tooke it for a man: often 'twould say

The Fiend, the Fiend, he led me to that place.

Edg. Beare free and patient thoughts.

Enter Lear.

But who comes heere?

The safer sense will ne're accomodate

His Master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for crying. I am the King himselfe.

Edg. O thou side-piercing light!

Lear. Nature's aboute Art, in that respect. Ther's your Presse-money. That fellow handles his bow, like a Crow-keeper: draw mee a Cloathiers yard. Looke, looke, a

Moule: peace, peace, this peece of toasted Cheefe will doe't. There's my Gaunter, Ile proue it on a Gyant.

Bring vp the browne Billes. O well flowne Bird: it's clout, it's clout: Hewgh. Giue the word.

Edg. Sweet Mariorum.

Lear. Paffe.

Glow. I know that voyce.

Lear. Ha! Conerill with a white beard? They flatter'd me like a Dogge, and told mee I had the white hayres in my Beard, ere the blacke ones were there. To say I, and no, to euery thing that I said: I, and no too, was no good Diuinity. When the raine came to wet me once, and the winde to make me chatter: when the Thunder would not peace at my bidding, there I found 'em, there I finelt 'em out. Go too, they are not men o' their words; they told me, I was euery thing: 'Tis a Lye, I am not Agu-proofe.

Glow. The trick of that voyce, I do well remember:

Is't not the King?

Lear. I, euery inch a King.

When I do stare, see how the Subiect quakes.

I pardon that mans life. What was thy cause?

Adultery? thou shalt not dye: dye for Adultery?

No, the Wren goes too't, and the small gilded Fly

Do's letcher in my sight. Let Copulation thrine:

For Gloucesters bastard Son was kinder to his Father,

Then my Daughters got 'twene the lawfull sheets.

Too't Luxury pell-mell, for I lacke Souldiers.

Behold yond simpring Dame, whose face betweene her

Forkes prefages Snows; that minces Vertue, & do's shake the head to heare of pleasures name. The Fitchew, nor the soyld Horse goes too't with a more riotous appe-rite: Downe from the waste they are Centaures, though

Women all about: but to the Girdle do the Gods inherit, beneath is all the Fiends. There's hell, there's darkenes, there is the sulphurous pit; burning, scalding, stench, consumption: Fye, fie, fie; pah, pah: Giue me an Ounce of Ciuer; good Apothecary sweeten my imagination:

There's money for thee.

Glow. O let me kisse that hand.

Lear. Let me wipe it first,

It smells of Mortality.

Glow. O ruin'd peece of Nature, this great world;

Shall so weare out to naught.

Do'st thou know me?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough: dost thou squny at me? No, doe thy worst blinde Cupid, Ile not loue. Reade thou this challenge, marke but the penning

of it.

Glow. Were all thy Letters Sunnes, I could not see.

Edg. I would not take this from report,

It is, and my heart breakes at it.

Lear. Read.

Glow. What with the Case of eyes?

Lear. Oh ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no mony in your purse? Your eyes are in a heauy case, your purse in a light, yet you see how this world goes.

Glow. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Looke with thine eares: See how yond Iustice railes vpon yond simple theefe. Hearke in thine eare: Change places, and handy-dandy, which is the Iustice, which is the theefe: Thou hast seene a Farmers dogge barke at a Beggar?

Glow. I Sir.

Lear. And the Creature run from the Cur; there thou migh't behold the great image of Authoritie, a Dogg's obey'd in Office. Thou, Rascall Beadie, hold thy bloody hand: why dost thou lash that Whore? Strip thy owne backe, thou hotly lusts to vse her in that kind, for which thou whip'st her. The Vicer hangs the Cozener. Thorough

rough tatter'd clothes great Vices do appeare: Robes, and Fur'd gownes hide all. Place sinnes with Gold, and the strong Lance of Iustice, hurtlesse breakes: Arme it in ragges, a Pigmies straw do's pierce it. None do's offend, none, I say none, He able 'em; take that of me my Friend, who haue the power to seale th'accusers lips: Get thee glasse-eyes, and like a scurvy Politician, seeme to see the things thou dost not. Now, now, now, now. Pull off my Bootes: harder, harder, so.

Edg. O matter, and impertinency mixt, Reason in Madnesse.

Lear. If thou wilt weepe my Fortunes, take my eyes. I know thee well enough, thy name is Gloucester: Thou must be patient; we came crying hither: Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the Ayre We wawle, and cry. I will preach to thee: Marke.

Glon. Alacke, alacke the day.

Lear. When we are borne, we cry that we are come To this great stage of Fooles. This a good blocke: It were a delicate stratagem, to shoo A Troope of Horse with Felt: Ile put't in prooffe, And when I haue stolne vpon these Son in Lawes, Then kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. Oh heere he is: lay hand vpon him, Sir, Your most deere Daughter.

Lear. No rescue? What, a Prisoner? I am euen The Naturall Foole of Fortune. Vse me well, You shall haue ransom. Let me haue Surgeons, I am cut to th' Braines.

Gent. You shall haue any thing.

Lear. No Seconds? All my selfe?

Why, this would make a man, a man of Sale To vse his eyes for Garden water-pots. I wil die brauely, Like a smugge Bridegroom. What? I will be Iouiall: Come, come, I am a King, Masters, know you that?

Gent. You are a Royall one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then there's life in't. Come, and you get it, You shall get it by running: Sa, fa, fa, fa.

Gent. A sight most pittifull in the meanest wretch, Past speaking of in a King. Thou hast a Daughter Who redeemes Nature from the generall curse Which twaine haue brought her to.

Edg. Haile gentle Sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: what's your will?

Edg. Do you heare ought (Sir) of a Bartell toward.

Gent. Most sure, and vulgar:

Every one heares that, which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But by your fauour:

How neere's the other Army?

Gent. Neere, and on speedy foot: the maine descry Stands on the houely thought.

Edg. I thanke you Sir, that's all.

Gent. Though that the Queen on special cause is here Her Army is mou'd on.

Edg. I thanke you Sir.

Gent. You euer gentle Gods, take my breath from me, Let not my worser Spirit tempt me againe To dye before you please.

Edg. Well pray you Father.

Gent. Now good fir, what are you?

Edg. A most poore man, made tame to Fortunes blows Who, by the Art of knowne, and feeling sorrowes, Am pregnant to good pittie. Giue me your hand, Ile leade you to some biding.

Gent. Heartie thanks:

The bountie, and the benizon of Heauen To boot, and boot.

Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclaim'd prize: most happie That eyeclesse head of thine, was first fram'd flesh To raise my fortunes. Thou old, vnhappy Traitor, Breefely thy selfe remember: the Sword is out That must destroy thee.

Glon. Now let thy friendly hand Put strength enough too't.

Stew. Wherefore, bold Pezant, Dar'st thou support a publish'd Traitor? Hence, Least that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Let go his arme.

Edg. Chill not let go Zir, Without further cation.

Stew. Let go Slaue, or thou dy'st.

Edg. Good Gentleman goe your gate, and let poore volke passe: and 'chud ha' bin zwaggerd out of my life, 'twould not ha' bin so long as 'tis, by a vortnight. Nay, come not neere th' old man: keepe out che vor'ys, or ice try whither your Costard, or my Ballow be the harder; chill be plaine with you.

Stew. Out Dungehill.

Edg. Chill picke your teeth Zir: come, no matter vor your soynes.

Stew. Slaue thou hast slaine me: Villain, take my purse; Ifeuer thou wilt thrue, bury my bodie,

And giue the Letters which thou find'st about me,

To Edmund Earle of Gloucester: seeke him out

Vpon the English party. Oh vntimely death, death.

Edg. I know thee well. A seruiceable Villaine,

As dutious to the vices of thy Mistis,

As badnesse would desire.

Glon. What, is he dead?

Edg. Sit you downe Father: rest you.

Let's see these Pockets; the Letters that he speakes of

May be my Friends: hee's dead; I am onely sorry

He had no other Deathman. Let vs see:

Leaue gentle waxe, and manners: blame vs not

To know our enemies mindes, we rip their hearts,

Their Papers is more lawfull.

Reads the Letter.

Let our reciprocal vowes be remembered. You haue manie opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offer'd. There is nothing done. If hee returne the Conqueror, then am I the Prisoner, and his bed my Gaole, from the loathed warmth whereof, deliuer me, and supply the place for your Labour.

Your Wife, so I would say, affectionate Seruant. Gonerill.

Oh indistinguish'd space of Womans will, A plot vpon her vertuous Husbands life, And the exchange my Brother: heere, in the sands Thee Ile rake vp, the poste vnfanctified Of murderous Letchers: and in the mature time, With this vngracious paper strike the sight Of the death-practis'd Duke: for him 'tis well, That of thy death, and businesse, I can tell.

Glon. The King is mad:

How stiffe is my wilde sense

That I stand vp, and haue ingenious feeling

Of my huge Sorrowes? Better I were distract,

So should my thoughts be seuer'd from my greefes,

Drum afarre off.

And woes, by wrong imaginations loole

The

The knowledge of themselves.

Edg. Giue me your hand:

Farre off methinkes I heare the beaten Drumme.

Come Father, lie bestow you with a Friend. Exeunt.

Scena Septima.

Enter Cordelia, Kent, and a Gentleman.

Cor. O thou good Kent,

How shall I liue and worke

To match thy goodnesse?

My life will be too short,

And euery measure faile me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd Madam is ore-paid,

All my reports go with the modest truch,

Not more, nor clipt, but so.

Cor. Be better suited,

These weedes are memories of those worser houres:

I prythee put them off.

Kent. Pardon deere Madam,

Yet to be knowne shortens my made intent,

My boone I make it, that you know me not,

Till time, and I, thinke meet.

Cor. Then be't so my good Lord:

How do's the King?

Gent. Madam sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind Gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused Nature,

Th'vntun'd and iarring senses. O winde vp,

Of this childe, changed Father.

Gent. So please your Maiesty,

That we may wake the King, he hath slept long?

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceede

I th' way of your owne will: is he array'd?

Enter Lear in a chaire carried by Seruants

Gent. I Madam: in the heauinesse of sleepe,

We put fresh garments on him.

Be by good Madam when we do awake him,

I doubt of his Temperance.

Cor. O my deere Father, restauration hang

Thy medicine on my lippes, and let this kisse

Repaire those violent harmes, that my two Sisters

Haue in thy Reuerence made.

Kent. Kind and deere Princeesse,

Cor. Had you not bin their Father, these white flakes

Did challenge pittie of them. Was this a face

To be oppos'd against the iarring windes?

Mine Enemies dogge, though he had bit me,

Should haue stood that night against my fire.

And was't thou faire (poore Father)

To houell thee with Swine and Rogues forlorne,

In short, and musty straw? Alacke, alacke,

Tis wonder that thy life and wits, at once

Had not concluded all. He wakes, speake to him.

Gent. Madam do you, 'tis fittest.

Cor. How does my Royall Lord?

How fares your Maiesty?

Lear. You do me wrong to take me out o'th' graue,

Thou art a Soule in blisse, but I am bound

Vpon a wheele of fire, that mine owne teares

Do scald, like molten Lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit I know, where did you dye?

Cor. Still, still, farre wide.

Gent. He's scarce awake,

Let him alone a while.

Lear. Where haue I bin?

Where am I? Faice day light?

I am mightily abus'd; I should eu'n dye with pittie

To see another thus. I know not what to say:

I will not sweare these are my hands: let's see,

I feele this pin pricke, would I were assur'd

Of my condition.

Cor. O looke vpon me Sir,

And hold your hand in benediction o're me,

You must not kneele.

Lear. Pray do not mocke me:

I am a very foolish fond old man,

Fourescore and vpward,

Not an houre more, nor lesse:

And to deale plainly,

I feare I am not in my perfect mind.

Me thinkes I should know you, and know this man,

Yet I am doubtfull: For I am mainly ignorant

What place this is, and all the skill I haue

Remembers not these garments: nor I know not

Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me,

For (as I am a man) I thinke this Lady

To be my childe Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am: I am.

Lear. Be your teares wet?

Yes faith: I pray weepenot,

If you haue poyson for me, I will drinke it:

I know you do not loue me, for your Sisters

Haue (as I do remember) done me wrong.

You haue some cause, they haue not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your owne kingdome Sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Gent. Be comforted good Madam, the great rage

You see is kill'd in him: desire him to go in,

Trouble him no more till further feeling.

Cor. Wilt please your Highnesse walke?

Lear. You must beare with me:

Pray you now forget, and forgiue,

I am old and foolish.

Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter, with Drumme and Colours, Edmund, Regan, Gentlemen, and Souldiers.

Bast. Know of the Duke if his last purpose hold,

Or whether since he is aduis'd by ought

To change the course, he's full of alteration,

And selfe reproouing, bring his constant pleasure.

Reg. Our Sisters man is certainly miscarried.

Bast. 'Tis to be doubted Madam.

Reg. Now sweet Lord,

I f

You

You know the goodnesse I intend vpon you:
Tell me but truly, but then speake the truth,
Do you not loue my Sister?

Bast. In honour'd Loue.

Reg. But haue you neuer found my Brothers way,
To the fore-fended place?

Bast. No by mine honour, Madam.

Reg. I neuer shall endure her, deere my Lord
Be not familiar with her.

Bast. Feare not, she and the Duke her husband.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Albany, Gonerill, Soldiers.

Alb. Our very louing Sister, well be-met:
Sir, this I heard, the King is come to his Daughter
With others, whom the rigour of our State
Forc'd to cry out.

Regan. Why is this reasond?

Gone. Combine together 'gainst the Enemie:
For these domesticke and particular broiles,
Are not the question heere.

Alb. Let's then determine with th'ancient of warre
On our proceeding.

Reg. Sister you'll go with vs?

Gone. No.

Reg. 'Tis most conuenient, pray go with vs.

Gone. On ho, I know the Riddle, I will goe.

Exeunt both the Armies.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. If ere your Grace had speech with man so poore,
Hear me one word.

Alb. He ouertake you, speake.

Edg. Before you fight the Battaille, ope this Letter:
If you haue victory, let the Trumpet sound
For him that brought it: wretched though I seeme,
I can produce a Champion, that will proue
What is auouched there. If you miscarry,
Your businesse of the world hath to an end,
And machination ceases. Fortune loues you.

Alb. Stay till I haue read the Letter.

Edg. I was forbid it:

When time shall serue, let but the Herald cry,
And he appeare againe.

Alb. Why fare thee well, I will o're-looke thy paper.

Enter Edmund.

Bast. The Enemy's in view, draw vp your powers,
Heere is the guesse of their true strength and Forces,
By diligent discouerie, but your haile
Is now vrg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time.

Bast. To both these Sisters haue I sworne my loue:
Each iealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the Adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both? One? Or neither? Neither can be enioy'd
If both remaine aliu: To take the Widdow,
Exasperates, makes mad her Sister Gonerill,
And hardly shall I carry out my side,
Her husband being aliu. Now then, wee'll vse
His countenance for the Battaille, which being done,
Let her who would be rid of him, deuise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercie
Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia,
The Battaille done, and they within our power,

Shall neuer see his pardon: for my state,
Stands on me to defend, not to debate.

Scena Secunda.

Alarm with bin. Enter with Drumme and Colours, Lear, Cordelia, and Souldiers, ouer the Stage, and Exeunt.

Enter Edgar, and Gloucester.

Edg. Heere Father, take the shadow of this Tree
For your good hoast: pray that the right may thrive:
If euer I returne to you againe,
He bring you comfort.

Glo. Grace go with you Sir.

*Alarm and Retreat within.
Enter Edgar.*

Edgar. Away old man, giue me thy hand, away:
King Lear hath lost, he and his Daughter tane, Giue me thy hand: Come on.

Glo. No further Sir, a man may rot euen heere.

Edg. What in ill thoughts againe?

Men must endure

Their going hence, euen as their coming hither, Ripenesse is all come on.

Glo. And that's true too.

Scena Tertia.

Enter in conquest with Drum and Colours, Edmund, Lear, and Cordelia, as prisoners, Souldiers, Captaine.

Bast. Some Officers take them away: good guard,
Vnill their greater pleasures first be knowne
That are to censure them.

Cor. We are not the first,

Who with best meaning haue incur'd the worst:
For thee oppressed King I am cast downe,
My selfe could else out-frowne false Fortunes frowne.

Shall we not see these Daughters, and these Sisters?

Lear. No, no, no, no: come let's away to prison,
We two alone will sing like Birds in th' Cage:

When thou dost aske me blessing, hee kneele downe
And aske of thee forgiveness: So wee'll liue,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded Butterflies: and heere (poore Rogues)
Talk of Court newes, and wee'll talke with them too,

Who looses, and who wins; who's in, who's out;
And take vpon the mystery of things,
As if we were Gods spies: And wee'll weare out
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
That ebbe and flow by th' Moone.

Bast. Take them away.

Lear. Vpon such sacrifices my Cordelia,
The Gods themselves throw Incense.

Haue I caught thee?
He that parts vs, shall bring a Brand from Heauen,
And fire vs hence, like Foxes: wipe thine eyes,
The good yeares shall deuoure them, flesh and fell,

Ere they shall make vs weepe?

Weele see e'm flur'd first: come.

Bast. Come hither Capitaine, hearke.

Take thou this note, go follow them to prison,
One step I haue aduanc'd thee, if thou do'st
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To Noble Fortunes: know thou this, that men
Are as the time is; to be tender minded
Do's not become a Sword, thy great employment
Will not beare question: neither say thou'st do't,
Or thrive by other means.

Capr. He do't my Lord.

Bast. About it, and write happy, when th'ha'st done,
Marke I say instantly, and carry it so
As I haue set it downe.

Flourish. Enter Albany, Gonerill, Regan, Soldiers.

Alb. Sir, you haue shew'd to day your valiant straine
And Fortune led you well: you haue the Captiues
Who were the opposites of this dayes strife:
I do require them of you so to vse them,
As we shall find their merites, and our safety
May equally determine.

Bast. Sir, I thought it fit,
To send the old and miserable King to some retention,
Whose age had Charms in it, whose Title more,
To plucke the common bosome on his side,
And turne our imprest Launces in our eies
Which do command them. With him I sent the Queen:
My reason all the same, and they are ready
To morrow, or at further space, to appeare
Where you shall hold your Session.

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subiect of this Warre,
Not as a Brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him.
Methinkes our pleasure might haue bin demanded
Ere you had spoke so farre. He led our Powers,
Bore the Commission of my place and person,
The which immediacie may well stand vp,
And call it selfe your Brother.

Gone. Not so hot:

In his owne grace he doth exalt himselfe,
More then in your addition.

Reg. In my rights,

By me inacted, he compeeres the best.

Alb. That were the most, if he should husband you.

Reg. Iesters do oft proue Prophets.

Gone. Hols, hols,

That eye that told you so, look'd but a squint.

Rega. Lady I am not well, else I should answere
From a full flowing stomach. Generally,

Take thou my Souldiers, prisoners, patrimony,
Dispose of them, of me, the walls is thine:

Winnesse the world, that I create thee heere
My Lord, and Master.

Gone. Meane you to enioy him?

Alb. The let alone lies not in your good will.

Bast. Nor in thine Lord.

Alb. Halfe-blooded fellow, yes.

Reg. Let the Drum strike, and proue my title thine.

Alb. Stay yet, heare reason: Edmund, I arrest thee
On capitall Treason: and in thy arrest,

This gilded Serpent: for your claime faire Sisters,
I bare it in the interest of my wife,

Exit.

'Tis she is sub-contracted to this Lord,
And I her husband, contradict your Banes.
If you will marry, make your loues to me,
My Lady is bespoken.

Gone. An enterlude.

Alb. Thou art armed Gloucester,

Let the Trumpet sound:

If none appeare to proue vpon thy person,

Thy heynous, manifest, and many Treasons,

There is my pledge: He make it on thy heart

Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing lesse

Then I haue heere proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sicke, O sicke.

Gone. If not, He nere trust medicine.

Bast. There's my exchange, what in the world hee

That names me Traitor, villain-like hee lies,

Call by the Trumpet: he that dares approach

On him, on you, who not, I will maintaine

My truth and honor firmly.

Enter a Herald.

Alb. A Herald, ho.

Trust to thy single vertue, for thy Souldiers

All leui'd in my name, haue in my name

Tooke their discharge.

Regan. My sicknesse growes vpon me.

Alb. She is not well, conuey her to my Tent.

Come hither Herald, let the Trumpet sound,

And read out this.

Herald reads.

If any man of qualitie or degree, within the list of the Army, will maintaine vpon Edmund, supposed Earle of Gloucester, that he is a manifold Traitor, let him appeare by the third sound of the Trumpet: he is bold in his defence.

Her. Againe.

Her. Againe.

Trumpet answers within.

Enter Edgar armed.

Alb. Aske him his purposes, why he appeares
Vpon this Call o'th' Trumpet.

Her. What are you?

Your name, your quality, and why you answer

This present Summons?

Edg. Know my name is lost

By Treasons tooth: bare-gnawne, and Canker-bit,

Yet am I Noble as the Adversary

I come to cope.

Alb. Which is that Adversary?

Edg. What's he that speakes for Edmund Earle of Glo-

Bast. Himselfe, what saist thou to him?

Edg. Draw thy Sword.

That if my speech offend a Noble heart,

Thy arme may do thee Iustice, heere is mine:

Behold it is my priuiledge,

The priuiledge of mine Honours,

My oath, and my profession. I protest,

Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence,

Despise thy victor Sword, and fire new Fortune,

Thy valor, and thy heart, thou art a Traitor:

Faile to thy Gods, thy Brother, and thy Father,

Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious Prince,

And from th'extremest vpward of thy head,

To the discent and dust below thy foote, ff

A most Toad-spotted Traitor. Say thou no,
This Sword, this arme, and my best spirits are bent
To proue vpon thy heart, whereto I speake,
Thou lyest.

Bast. In wisdom I should aske thy name,
But since thy out-side lookes so faire and Warlike,
And that thy tongue (some say) of breeding breathes,
What safe, and nicely I might well delay,
By rule of Knight-hood, I disdain and spurne:
Backe do I tesse these Treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated Lye, ore-whelme thy heart,
Which for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,
This Sword of mine shall giue them instant way,
Where they shall rest for euer. Trumpets speake.

Alb. Saue him, saue him. Alarums. Fights.

Gon. This is practise Closter,
By th'law of Warre, thou wast not bound to answer
An yknowne oppositer: thou art not vanquish'd,
But cozen'd, and beguild,

Alb. Shut your mouth Dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it: hold Sir,
Thou worste then any name, reade thine owne euill:
No tearing Lady, I perceiue you know it.

Gon. Say if I do, the Lawes are mine not thine,
Who can araigne me for't?

Alb. Most monstrous! O, know'st thou this paper?

Bast. Aske me not what I know.

Alb. Go after her, she's desperate, gouerne her.

Bast. What you haue charg'd me with,
That haue I done,

And more, much more, the time will bring it out.

'Tis past, and so am I: But what art thou

That hast this Fortune on me? If thou'rt Noble,

I do forgiue thee.

Edg. Let's exchange charity:

I am no lesse in blood then thou art Edmond,

If more, the more th'hast wrong'd me.

My name is Edgar, and thy Fathers Sonne,

The Gods are iust, and of our pleasant vices

Make instruments to plague vs:

The darke and virgious place where thee he got,

Cost him his eyes.

Bast. Th'hast spoken right, 'tis true,

The Wheele is come full circle, I am heere.

Alb. Me thought thy very gate did prophesie

A Royall Noblenesse: I must embrace thee,

Let sorrow split my heart, if euer I

Did hate thee, or thy Father.

Edg. Worthy Prince I know't.

Alb. Where haue you hid your selfe?

How haue you knowne the miseries of your Father?

Edg. By nursing them my Lord. List a breefe tale,

And when 'tis told, O that my heart would burst.

The bloody proclamation to escape

That follow'd me so neere, (O our liues sweetnesse,

That we the paine of death would hourly dye,

Rather then die at once) taught me to shife

Into a mad-mans rags, I assume a semblance

That very Dogges disdain'd: and in this habit

Met I my Father with his bleeding Rings,

Their precious Stones new lost: became his guide,

Led him, begg'd for him, sau'd him from dispaire:

Neuer (O fault) reuenc'd my selfe vnto him,

Vntill some halfe houre past when I was arm'd,

Not sure, though hoping of this good successe,

I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last

Told him our pilgrimage. But his flaw'd heart
(Alacke too weake the conflict to support)
Twixt two extremes of passion, ioy and greefe,
Burst smilingly.

Bast. This speech of yours hath mou'd me,
And shall perchance do good, but speake you on,
You looke as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more wofull, hold it in,
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gon. Helpe, helpe: O helpe.

Edg. What kinde of helpe?

Alb. Speake man.

Edg. What means this bloody Knife?

Gon. 'Tis hot, it smoakes, it came euen from the heart of — O she's dead.

Alb. Who dead? Speake man.

Gon. Your Lady Sir, your Lady; and her Sister

By her is poyson'd: she confesses it.

Bast. I was contracted to them both, all three

Now marry in an instant.

Edg. Here comes Kent.

Enter Kent.

Alb. Produce the bodies, be they aliue or dead;

Conerill and Regans bodies brought on.

This iudgement of the Heauens that makes vs tremble,

Touches vs not with pitty: O, is this he?

The time will not allow the complement

Which very manners vrge.

Kent. I am come

To bid my King and Master aye good night.

Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of vs forgot,

Speake Edmond, where's the King? and where's Cordelia?

See'st thou this obiekt Kent?

Kent. Alacke, why thus?

Bast. Yet Edmond was below'd:

The one the other poyson'd for my sake,

And after slew hertelke.

Alb. Euen so: couer their faces.

Bast. I part for life: some good I meane to do

Despight of mine owne Nature. Quickly send,

(Be briefe in it) to th' Castle, for my Writ

Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:

Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O run.

Edg. To who my Lord? Who ha's the Office?

Send thy token of repreue.

Bast. Well thought on, take my Sword,

Giue it the Capitaine.

Edg. Haft thee for thy life.

Bast. He hath Commission from thy Wife and me,

To hang Cordelia in the prison, and

To lay the blame vpon her owne dispaire,

That she for-did her selfe.

Alb. The Gods defend her, beare him hence awhile.

Enter Lear with Cordelia in his armes.

Lear. Howle, howle, howle: O you are men of stones,

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd vse them so,

That Heauens vault should crack: she's gone for euer.

I know when one is dead, and when one liues,

She's dead as earth: Lend me a Looking-glasse,

If that her breath will mist or staine the stone,
Why then she liues.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror.

Alb. Fall and cease.

Lear. This feather stirs, she liues: if it be so,

It is a chance which do's redeeme all sorrowes

That euer I haue felt.

Kent. O my good Master.

Lear. Prythee away.

Edg. 'Tis Noble Kent your Friend.

Lear. A plague vpon you Murderers, Traitors, all,

I might haue sau'd her, now she's gone for euer:

Cordelia. Cordelia, stay a little. Ha:

What is't thou saist? Her voice was euer soft,

Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.

I kill'd the Slaue that was a hanging thee.

Gon. 'Tis true (my Lords) he did.

Lear. Did I not follow?

I haue seene the day, with my good biting Faulchion

I would haue made him skip: I am old now,

And these same crosses spoile me. Who are you?

Minde eyes are not o'th' best, Ile tell you straight.

Kent. If Fortune brag of two, she lou'd and hated,

One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull sight, are you not Kent?

Kent. The same: your Seruant Kent,

Where is your Seruant Caius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that,

He'll strike and quickly too, he's dead and rotten.

Kent. No my good Lord, I am the very man.

Lear. Ile see that straight.

Kent. That from your first of difference and decay,

Haue follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. Your are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else:

All's cheerelesse, darke, and deadly,

Your eldest Daughters haue fore-done themselves,

And desperately are dead

Lear. I so I thinke.

Alb. He knowes not what he saies, and vaine is it

That we present vs to him.

Enter a Messenger.

Edg. Very bootlesse.

Mess. Edmund is dead my Lord.

Alb. That's but a trifle heere:

You Lords and Noble Friends, know our intent,

What comfort to this great decay may come,

Shall be appl'd. For vs we will resigne,

During the life of this old Maicsty

To him our absolute power, you to your rights,

With boote, and such addition as your Honours

Haue more then merited. All Friends shall

Taste the wages of their vertue, and all Foes

The cup of their desertings: O see, see.

Lear. And my poore Foole is hang'd: no, no, no life?

Why should a Dog, a Horfe, a Rat haue life,

And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no more,

Neuer, neuer, neuer, neuer, neuer.

Pray you vndo this Button. Thanke you Sir,

Do you see this? Looke on her? Looke her lips,

Looke there, looke there.

He dies.

Edg. He faints, my Lord, my Lord.

Kent. Breake heart, I prythee breake.

Edg. Looke vp my Lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost, O let him passe, he hates him,

That would vpon the wracke of this rough world

Stretch him out longer.

Edg. He is gon indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long,

He but vsurpt his life.

Alb. Beare them from hence, our present businesse

Is generall woe: Friends of my soule, you twaine,

Rule in this Realme, and the gor'd state sustaine.

Kent. I haue a iourney Sir, shortly to go,

My Master calls me, I must not say no.

Edg. The waight of this sad time we must obey,

Speake what we feele, not what we ought to say:

The oldest hath borne most, we that are yong,

Shall neuer see so much, nor liue so long.

Exeunt with a dead March.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF Othello, the Moore of Venice.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Rodorigo, and Iago.

Rodorigo.
Never tell me, I take it much unkindly
 That thou (Iago) who hast had my purse,
 As if thy strings were thine, shouldst know of this.
Ia. But you'll not heare me. If ever I did dream
 Of such a matter, abhorre me.

Rodo. Thou told'st me,
 Thou didst hold him in thy hate.

Iago. Despise me
 If I do not. Three Great-ones of the Cittie,
 (In personall suite to make me his Lieutenant)
 Off-capt to him: and by the faith of man
 I know my price, I am worth no worse a place,
 But he (as louing his owne pride, and purposes)
 Euades them, with a bumbast Circumstance,
 Horribly stufft with epithites of warre,
 Non-suites my Mediators. For certes, saies he,
 I haue already chose my Officer. And what was he?
 For-sooth, a great Arithmatician,
 One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
 (A Fellow almost damnd in a faire Wife)
 That neuer set a Squadron in the Field,
 Nor the deuision of a Battaille knows
 More then a Spinster. Vnlesse the Bookish Theoricke:
 Wherein the Tongued Consuls can propose
 As Masterly as he. Meere prattle (without practise)
 Is all his Souldiership. But he (Sir) had th' elections
 And I (of whom his eies had seene the prooffe
 At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on others grounds
 Christen'd, and Heathen) must be be-leed, and calm'd
 By Debitor, and Creditor. This Counter-caster,
 He (in good time) must his Lieutenant be,
 And I (blesse the marke) his Mooreships Auntient.

Rodo. By heauen, I rather would haue bin his hangman.

Iago. Why, there's no remedie.

'Tis the curse of Seruice;
 Preferment goes by Letter, and affection,
 And not by old gradation, where each second
 Stood Heire to th' first. Now Sir, be iudge your selfe, Whether I in any iust terme am Affin'd
 To loue the Moore?

Rodo. I would not follow him then.

Iago. O Sir content you.

I follow him, to serue my turne vpon him.
 We cannot all be Masters, nor all Masters

Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall marke
 Many a dutious and knee-crooking knaue;
 That (doting on his owne obsequious bondage)
 Weares out his time, much like his Masters Aile,
 For naught but Prouender, & when he's old Cashee'd, Whip me such honest knaues. Others there are
 Who trym'd in Formes, and visages of Dutie,
 Keepe yet their hearts attending on themselves,
 And throwing but shewes of Seruice on their Lords,
 Doe well thrive by them.

And when they haue lin'd their Coates
 Doe themselves Homage.
 These Fellowes haue some soule,
 And such a one do I professe my selfe. For (Sir)
 It is as sure as you are Rodorigo,
 Were I the Moore, I would not be Iago:
 In following him, I follow but my selfe.
 Heauen is my Iudge, not I for loue and dutie,
 But seeming so, for my peculiar end:
 For when my outward Action doth demonstrate
 The native act, and figure of my heart
 In Complement exterie, 'tis not long after
 But I will weare my heart vpon my sleeue
 For Dawes to pecke at; I am not what I am.

Rodo. What a fall Fortune do's the Thicks-lips owe
 If he can carry't thus?

Iago. Call vp her Father:

Rowle him, make after him, poyson his delight,
 Proclaime him in the Streets. Incense her kinsmen,
 And though he in a fertile Clymate dwell,
 Plague him with Flies: though that his Ioy be Ioy,
 Yet throw such chances of vexation on't,
 As it may loose some colour.

Rodo. Heere is her Fathers house, Ile call aloud.

Iago. Doe, with like timorous accent, and dire yell,
 As when (by Night and Negligence) the Fire
 Is spied in populous Citties.

Rodo. What hoa: Brabantio, Signior Brabantio, hoa.
Iago. Awake: what hoa, Brabantio: Theeues, Theeues.
 Looke to your house, your daughter, and your Bags,
 Theeues, Theeues.

Bra. Above. What is the reason of this terrible Summons? What is the matter there?

Rodo. Signior is all your Familie within?

Iago. Are your Doores lock'd?

Bra. Why? Wherefore ask you this?

Iago. Sir, y'are rob'd, for shame put on your Gowne,
 Your

Your heart is burst, you haue lost halfe your soule
 Euen now, now, very now, an old blacke Ram
 Is tupping your white Ewe. Arise, arise,
 Awake the snoring Cittizens with the Bell,
 Or else the deuill will make a Grand-fire of you.
 Arise I say.

Bra. What haue you lost your wits?

Rodo. Most reuerend Signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not I: what are you?

Rodo. My name is Rodorigo.

Bra. The worse welcome:

I haue charg'd thee not to haunt about my doores:
 In honest plainenesse thou hast heard me say,
 My Daughter is not for thee. And now in madnesse
 (Being full of Supper, and d'stemp'ring draughtes)
 Vpon malicious knauerie, dost thou come
 To start my quiet.

Rodo. Sir, Sir, Sir.

Bra. But thou must needs be sure,
 My spirits and my place haue in their power
 To make this bitter to thee.

Rodo. Patience good Sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of Robbing?

This is Venice: my house is not a Grange.

Rodo. Most graue Brabantio,

In simple and pure soule, I come to you.

Ia. Sir: you are one of those that will not serue God, if the deuill bid you. Because we come to do you seruice, and you thinke we are Ruffians, you'll haue your Daughter couer'd with a Barbary horse, you'll haue your Nephewes neigh to you, you'll haue Courters for Cozens:
 and Genners for Germanes.

Bra. What prophane wretch art thou?

Ia. I am one Sir, that comes to tell you, your Daughter and the Moore, are making the Beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a Villaine.

Iago. You are a Senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answere. I know thee Rodorigo.

Rodo. Sir, I will answere any thing. But I beseech you
 If it be your pleasure, and most wise content,
 (As partly I find it is) that your faire Daughter,
 At this odde Euen and dull watch o'th' night
 Transported with no worse nor better guard,
 But with a knaue of common hire, a Gundelier,
 To the grosse claspes of a Lasciuious Moore:
 If this be knowne to you, and your Allowance,
 We then haue done you bold, and fauie wrongs.
 But if you know not this, my Manners tell me,
 We haue your wrong rebuke. Do not beseege
 That from the fence of all Ciuillitie,
 I thus would play and trifle with your Reuerence.
 Your Daughter (if you haue not giuen her leaue)
 I say againe, hath made a grosse reuolt,
 Tying her Dutie, Beautie, Wit, and Fortunes
 In an extrauagant, and wheeling Stranger,
 Of here, and euery where: straight satisfie your selfe.
 If she be in her Chamber, or your house,
 Let loose on me the iustice of the State
 For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the Tinder, hoa:

Giue me a Taper: call vp all my people,
 This Accident is not vnlike my dreame,
 Beleeue of it oppresses me already.

Light, I say, light.

Iag. Farewell: for I must leaue you.

It seemes not meete, nor wholesome to my place

To be produced, (as if I stay, I shall.)

Against the Moore. For I do know the State,
 (How euer this may gall him with some checke)
 Cannot with safetic cast him. For he's embark'd
 With such loud reason to the Cyprus Warres,
 (Which euen now stands in Act) that for their soules
 Another of his Padome, they haue none,
 To lead their Businesse. In which regard,
 Though I do hate him as I do bell apines,
 Yet, for necessitie of present life,
 I must show out a Flag, and signe of Love,
 (Which is indeed but signe) that you shal surely find him
 Lead to the Sagitary the raised Search:
 And there will I be with him. So farewell. Exit.

Enter Brabantio, with Seruants and Torches.

Bra. It is too true an euill. Gone she is,
 And what's to come of my despised time,
 Is naught but bitterness. Now Rodorigo,
 Where didst thou see her? (Oh vnhappie Girl)
 With the Moore saist thou? (Who would be a Father?)
 How didst thou know 'twas she? (Oh she deceaues me Past thought:) what said she to you? Get moe Tapers:
 Raile all my Kindred. Are they married thinke you?

Rodo. Truly I thinke they are.

Bra. Oh Heauen: how got she out?

Oh treason of the blood.

Fathers, from hence trust not your Daughters minds
 By what you see them act. Is there not Charmes,
 By which the propertie of Youth, and Maidhood
 May be abus'd? Haue you not read Rodorigo,
 Of some such thing?

Rodo. Yes Sir: I haue indeed.

Bra. Call vp my Brother: oh would you had had her.
 Some one way, some another. Doe you know
 Where we may apprehend her, and the Moore?

Rodo. I thinke I can discouer him, if you please
 To get good Guard, and go along with me.

Bra. Pray you lead on. At euery house Ile call,
 (I may command at most) get Weapons (hoa)
 And raise some speciall Officers of might:
 On good Rodorigo, I will deserue your paines. Exeunt.

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, Attendants, with Torches.

Ia. Though in the trade of Warre I haue slaine men,
 Yet do I hold it very stiffe o'th' conscience
 To do no contrin'd Murder: I lacke Iniquitie
 Sometime to do me seruice. Nine, or ten times
 I had thought t'haue yer'd him here vnder the Ribbes.

Othello. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay but he prated,
 And spoke such scurvy, and prouoking termes
 Against your Honor, that with the little godlinesse I haue
 I did full hard forbear him. But I pray you Sir,
 Are you fast married? Be assur'd of this,
 That the Magnifico is much belou'd,
 And hath in his effect a voice potentiall
 As double as the Dukes: He will diuorce you,
 Or put vpon you, what restraint or greeuance,

The

The Law (with all his might, to enforce it on)
Will giue him Cable.

Othel. Let him do his spight;
My Seruices, which I haue done the Signorie
Shall out-tongue his Complaints. 'Tis yet to know,
Which when I know, that boasting is an Honour,
I shall promulgate. I fetch my life and being,
From Men of Royall Seige. And my demerites
May speake (vnbonnetted) to as proud a Fortune
As this that I haue reach'd. For know Iago,
But that I loue the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my vnhouse'd free condition
Put into Circumscription, and Confine,
For the Seas worth. But looke, what Lights come yond?

Enter Cassio, with Torches.

Iago. Those are the raised Father, and his Friends:
You were best go in.

Othel. Not I: I must be found.
My Parts, my Title, and my perfect Soule
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

Iago. By Iannus, I thinke no.

Othel. The Seruants of the Dukes?
And my Lieutenant?
The goodnesse of the Night vpon you (Friends)
What is the Newes?

Cassio. The Duke do's greet you (Generall)
And he requires your haste, Post-haste appearance,
Enen on the instant.

Othello. What is the matter, thinke you?

Cassio. Something from Cyprus, as I may diuine:
It is a businesse of some heate. The Gallies
Haue sent a dozen sequent Messengers
This very night, at one anothers heeles:
And many of the Consuls, rais'd and met,
Are at the Dukes already. You haue bin hotly call'd for,
When being not at your Lodging to be found,
The Senate hath sent about three severall Quests,
To search you out.

Othel. 'Tis well I am found by you:
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And goe with you.

Cassio. Aunciant, what makes he heere?

Iago. Faith, he to night hath boarded a Land Carraet,
If it proue lawfull prize, he's made for euer.

Cassio. I do not vnderstand.

Iago. He's married.

Cassio. To who?

Iago. Marry to — Come Captaine, will you go?

Othel. Haue with you.

Cassio. Here comes another Troope to seeke for you.

Enter Brabantio, Rodorigo, with Officers, and Torches.

Iago. It is Brabantio: Generall be aduis'd,
He comes to bad intent.

Othello. Holla, stand there.

Rodo. Signior, it is the Moore.

Bra. Downe with him, Theefe.

Iago. You, Rodorigo? Come Sir, I am for you.

Othel. Keepe vp your bright Swords, for the dew will rust them. Good Signior, you shall more command with yeares, then with your Weapons.

Bra. Oh thou foule Theefe,
Where hast thou stow'd my Daughter?
Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her

For Ile referre me to all things of sense,
(If she in Chaines of Magick were not bound)
Whether a Maid, so tender, Faire, and Happie,
So opposite to Marriage, that she shun'd
The wealthy curled Deareling of our Nation,
Would euer haue (encurre a generall mocke)
Run from her Guardage to the footie bosome,
Of such a thing as thou: to feare, not to delight?
Iudge me the world, if 'tis not grosse in sense,
That thou hast practis'd on her with foule Charms,
Abus'd her delicate Youth, with Drugs or Minerals,
That weakens Motion. Ile haue't disputed on,
'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking;
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee,
For an abuser of the World, a practiser
Of Arts inhibited, and out of warrant;
Lay hold vpon him, if he do resist
Subdue him, at his perill.

Othel. Hold your hands

Both you of my inclining, and the rest.
Were it my Cue to fight, I should haue knowne it Without a Prompter. Whether will you that I goe
To answer this your charge?

Bra. To Prison, till fit time
Of Law, and course of direct Session
Call thee to answer.

Othel. What if do obey?

How may the Duke be therewith satisfi'd,
Whose Messengers are heere about my side,
Vpon some present businesse of the State,
To bring me to him.

Officer. 'Tis true most worthy Signior,
The Dukes in Counsell, and your Noble selfe,
I am sure is sent for.

Bra. How? The Duke in Counsell?

In this time of the night? Bring him away;
Mine's not an idle Cause. The Duke himselfe,
Or any of my Brothers of the State,
Cannot but feele this wrong, as 'twere their owne:
For if such Actions may haue passage free,
Bond-slaves, and Pagans shall our Statesmen be, Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Duke, Senators, and Officers.

Duke. There's no composition in this Newes,
That giues them Credite.

1. Sen. Indeed, they are disproportioned;
My Letters say, a Hundred and seven Gallies.
Duke. And mine a Hundred fortie.

2. Sena. And mine two Hundred:
But though they iumpe not on a iust accompt,
(As in these Cases where the ayme reports,
'Tis oft with difference) yet do they all confirme
A Turkish Fleete, and bearing vp to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to iudgement:
I do not so secure me in the Error,
But the maine Article I do approue
In fearefull sense.

Saylor within. What ho, what ho, what ho.

Enter Saylor.

Officer. A

Officer. A Messenger from the Gallies.

Duke. Now? What's the businesse?

Sailor. The Turkish Preparation makes for Rhodes,
So was I bid report here to the State,
By Signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1. Sen. This cannot be

By no assay of reason. 'Tis a Pageant
To keepe vs in false gaze, when we consider Th'importance of Cyprus to the Turke;
And let our selues againe but vnderstand,
That as it more concerns the Turke then Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question beare it,
For that it stands not in such Warrelike brace,
But altogether lacketh abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. If we make thought of this,
We must not thinke the Turke is so vnskillfull,
To leaue that lastest, which concerns him first,
Neglecting an attempt of ease, and gaine
To wake, and wage a danger profitlesse.

Duke. Nay, in all confidence he's not for Rhodes.

Officer. Here is more Newes.

Enter a Messenger.

Messen. The Ottomites, Reueren'd, and Gracious,
Steering with due course toward the Ile of Rhodes,
Haue there inioyned them with an after Fleete.

1. Sen. I, so I thought: how many, as you guesse?

Mess. Of thirtie Saile: and now they do re-stem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance
Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
Your trustie and most Valiant Seruitour,
With his free dutie, recommends you thus,
And prayses you to beleaue him.

Duke. 'Tis certaine then for Cyprus:

Marcus Luccicos is not he in Towne?

1. Sen. He's now in Florence.

Duke. Write from vs,

To him, Post, Post-haste, dispatch.

1. Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the Valiant Moore.

Enter Brabantio, Othello, Cassio, Iago, Rodorigo, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you,
Against the generall Enemy Ottoman.

I did not see you: welcome gentle Signior,
We lack't your Counsaile, and your helpe to night.

Bra. So did I yours: Good your Grace pardon me.

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of businesse
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the generall care
Take hold on me. For my peticular griefe
Is of so flood-gate, and ore-bearing Nature,
That it engults, and swallows other sorrowes,
And it is still it selfe.

Duke. Why? What's the matter?

Bra. My Daughter: oh my Daughter!

Sen. Dead?

Bra. I, to me.

She is abus'd, stolne from me, and corrupted
By Spels, and Medicines, bough of Mountebanks;
For Nature, so preposterously to erre,
(Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense),
Sans witch-craft could not.

Duke. Who ere he be, that in this foule proceeding
Hath thus beguil'd your Daughter of her selfe,

And you of her; the bloodie Booke of Law,
You shall your selfe read, in the bitter letter,
After your owne sense: yea, though our proper Sen
Stood in your Action.

Bra. Humbly I thanke your Grace,
Here is the man; this Moore, whom now it seemes
Your speciall Mandate, for the State affaires
Hath hither brought.

All. We are verie sorry for't.

Duke. What in your owne part, can you say to this?

Bra. Nothing, but this is so.

Othel. Most Potent, Graue, and Reueren'd Signiors,
My very Noble, and approu'd good Masters;
That I haue tane away this old mans Daughter,
It is most true: true I haue married her;
The verie head, and front of my offending,
Hath this extent; no more. Rude am I, in my speech,
And little blest'd with the soft phrase of Peace;
For since these Armes of mine, had seuen yeares pith,
Till now, some nine Moones wasted, they haue vs'd
Their deereft action, in the Tented Field:
And little of this great world can I speake,
More then pertaines to Feats of Broiles, and Battaile,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for my selfe. Yet, (by your gracious patience)
I will a round vn-varnish'd Tale deliuer,
Of my whole course of Loue;
What Drugges, what Charms,
What Coniuration, and what mighty Magicke,
(For such proceeding I am charg'd withall)
I won his Daughter.

Bra. A Maiden, neuer bold:
Of Spirit so still, and quiet, that her Motion
Blush'd at her selfe, and she, in spight of Nature,
Of Yeares, of Country, Credite, euery thing
To fall in Loue, with what she fear'd to looke on;
It is a iudgement main'd, and most imperfect,
That will confesse Perfection so could erre
Against all rules of Nature, and must be driuen
To find out practises of cunning hell
Why this should be. I therefore vouch againe,
That with some Mixtures, powrefull o're the blood,
Or with some Dram, (coniu'd to this effect)
He wrought vp on her.

To vouch this, is no prooffe,
Without more wider, and more ouer Test
Then these thin habits, and poore likely-hoods
Of moderne seeming, do prefer against him.

Sen. But Othello, speake,
Did you, by indirect, and forced courses
Subdue, and poyson this yong Maides affections?
Or came it by request, and such faire question
As soule, to soule affordeth?

Othel. I do beseech you,
Send for the Lady to the Sagitary,
And let her speake of me before her Father;
If you do finde me foule, in her report,
The Trust, the Office, I do hold of you,
Not onely take away, but let your Sentence
Euen fall vpon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither.

Othel. Aunciant, conduct them:
You best know the place.
And tell she come, as truly as to heauen,
I do confesse the vices of my blood,
So iustly to your Graue eares, Ile present

How

How I did thrive in this faire Ladies loue,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it Othello.

Othe. Her Father lou'd me, oft intired me:
Still question'd me the storie of my life,
From yeare to yeare: the Battaille, Sieges, Fortune,
That I haue past.
I ran it through, euen from my boyish daies,
Toth'very moment that he bad me tell it.
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chancēs:
Of mouing Accidents by Flood and Field,
Of haire-breadth escapes i'th' imminent deadly breach;
Of being taken by the Insolent Foe,
And sold to slavery. Of my redemption thence,
And portance in my Trauellours historie.
Wherein of Antars vast, and Defarts idle,
Rough Quarries, Rocks, Hills, whose head touch heauen,
It was my hint to speake. Such was my Proesse,
And of the Canibals that each others eate,
The Antropophagie, and men whose heads
Grew beneath their shoulders. These things to heare,
Would Desdemona seriously incline:
But still the house Affaires would draw her hence:
Which euer as she could with haste dispatch,
She'd come againe, and with a greedie eare
Deuoure vp my discourse. Which I obseruing,
Tooke once a pliant houre, and found good meanes
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my Pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not instinctiue: I did consent,
And often did beguile her of her teares,
When I did speake of some distressfull stroke
That my youth suffer'd: My storie being done,
She gaue me for my paines a world of kisses:
She swore in faith 'twas strange: 'twas passing strange,
'Twas pittifull: 'twas wondrous pittifull.
She wist she had not heard it, yet she wist
That Heauen had made her such a man. She thank'd me,
And bad me, if I had a Friend that lou'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would wooe her. Vpon this hint I spake,
She lou'd me for the dangers I had past,
And I lou'd her, that she did pittie them.
This onely is the witch-craft I haue vs'd.
Here comes the Ladie: Let her witnesse it.

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Attendants.

Duke. I thinke this tale would win my Daughter too:
Good Brabantio, take vp this mangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken Weapons rather vse,
Then their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you heare her speake?
If she confesse that she was halfe the wooer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man. Come hither gentle Mistris,
Do you perceiue in all this Noble Companie,
Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My Noble Father,
I do perceiue heere a diuided dutie.
To you I am bound for life, and education:
My life and education both do learne me,
How to respect you. You are the Lord of duty,
I am hitherto your Daughter. But heere's my Husband;
And so much dutie, as my Mother shew'd

To you, preferring you before her Father:
So much I challenge, that I may profess
Due to the Moore my Lord.

Bra. God be with you: I haue done.
Please it your Grace, on to the State Affaires;
I had rather to adopt a Child, then get it.
Come hither Moore;
I here do giue thee that with all my heart,
Which but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keepe from thee. For your sake (Iewell)
I am glad at soule, I haue no other Child;
For thy escape would teach me Tirranie
To hang clogges on them. I haue done my Lord.
Duke. Let me speake like your selfe:

And lay a Sentence,
Which as a grise, or step may helpe these Louers,
When remedies are past, the griefes are ended
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended,
To mourne a Mischeefe that is past and gon,
Is the next way to draw new mischeefe on.
What cannot be prefer'd, when Fortune takes:
Patience, her Injury a mock'ry makes.
The rob'd that smiles, steales something from the Thiefe,
He robs himselfe, that spends a bootlesse griefe.

Bra. So let the Turke of Cyprus vs beguile,
We loose it not so long as we can smile:
He beares the Sentence well, that nothing beares,
But the free comfort which from thence he heares.
But he beares both the Sentence, and the sorrow,
That to pay griefe, must of poore Patience borrow.
These Sentences, to Sugar, or to Gall,
Being strong on both sides, are Equiuocall.
But words are words, I neuer yet did heare:
That the bruiz'd heart was pierc'd through the eares.
I humbly beseech you proceed to th' Affaires of State.

Duke. The Turke with a most mighty Preparation makes for Cyprus: Othello, the Fortitude of the place is best knowne to you. And though we haue there a Substitute of most allowed sufficiencie; yet opinion, a more soueraigne Mistris of Effects, throwes a more safer voice on you: you must therefore be content to slubber the gloss of your new Fortunes, with this more stub-borne, and boystrous expedition.

Othe. The Tirant Custome, most Graue Senators,
Hath made the flinty and Steele Coach of Warre
My thrice-driuen bed of Downe. I do agnize
A Naturall and prompt Alacartie,
I finde in hardnesse: and do vndertake
This present Warres against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your State,
I craue fit disposition for my Wife,
Due reference of Place, and Exhibition,
With such Accomodation and besort
As leuels with her breeding.

Duke. Why at her Fathers?

Bra. I will not haue it so.

Othe. Nor I.

Des. Nor would I there recide,
To put my Father in impatient thoughts
By being in his eye. Most Graious Duke,
To my vnfolding, lend your prosperous care,
And let me finde a Charter in your voice
To assist my simplicitie.

Duke. What would you Desdemona?

Des. That I loue the Moore, to liue with him,
My downe-right violence, and storme of Fortunes,

May trumpet to the world. My heart's subdu'd
Euen to the very quality of my Lord;
I saw Othello's viage in his mind,
And to his Honours and his valiant parts,
Did I my soule and Fortunes consecrate.
So that (deere Lords) if I be left behind
A Moth of Peace, and he go to the Warre,
The Rites for why I loue him, are bereft me:
And I a heauie interian shall support
By his deere absence. Let me go with him.

Othe. Let her haue your voice.
Vouch with me Heauen, I therefore beg it not
To please the palate of my Appetite:
Nor to comply with heat the yong affects
In my defunct, and proper satisfaction.
But to be free, and bounteous to her minde:
And Heauen defend your good soules, that you thinke
I will your serious and great businesse scant
When she is with me. No, when light wing'd Toys
Of feather'd Cupid, seele with wanton dulnesse
My speculative, and offe'd Instrument:
That my Disports corrupt, and taint my businesse:
Let Houle-wiues make a Skillet of my Helme,
And all indigne, and base aduersities,
Make head against my Estimation.

Duke. Be it as you shall priuately determine,
Either for her stay, or going: th' Affaire cries hast:
And speed must answer it.

Sen. You must away to night.

Othe. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i'th morning, here wee'l meete againe.
Othello, leaue some Officer behind
And he shall our Commission bring to you:
And such things else of qualitie and respect
As doth import you.

Othe. So please your Grace, my Ancient,
Aman he is of honesty and trust:
To his conueyance I assigne my wife.
With what else needfull, your good Grace shall thinke
To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so:
Good night to every one. And Noble Signior,
If Vertue no delighted Beautie lacke,
Your Son-in-law is faire more faire then Blacke.

Sen. Adieu braue Moore, vse Desdemona well.

Bra. Look to her (Moore) if thou hast ries to see:
She ha's deceiu'd her Father, and may thee. Exit.

Othe. My life vpon her faith. Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leaue to thee:
I prythee let thy wife attend on her,
And bring them after in the best advantage.
Come Desdemona, I haue but an houre
Of Loue, of wordly matter, and direction
To spend with thee. We must obey the time. Exit.

Rod. Iago. I will incontinently drowne my selfe.

Iago. What saidst thou Noble heere?

Rod. What will I do, thinkest thou?

Iago. Why go to bed and sleepe.

Rod. I will incontinently drowne my selfe.

Iago. If thou dost, I shall neuer loue thee after. Why thou silly Gentleman?

Rod. It is sillynesse to liue, when to liue is torment:
and then haue we a prescription to dye, when death is our Physition.

Iago. Oh villanous: I haue look'd vpon the world for foure times seuen yeares, and since I could distinguish betwixt a Benefic, and an Iniurie: I neuer found man that knew how to loue himselfe. Ere I would say, I would drowne my selfe for the loue of a Gynney Hen, I would change my Humanity with a Baboone.

Rod. What should I do? I confesse it is my shame to be so fond, but it is not in my vertue to amend it.

Iago. Vertue? A figge, 'tis in our selues that we are thus, or thus. Our Bodies are our Gardens, to the which, our Wills are Gardiners. So that if we will plant Net-tels, or sowe Lettice: Set Hisope, and weede vp Time:
Supplie it with one gender of Hearbes, or distract it with many: either to haue it sterill with idlenesse, or manured with Industry, why the power, and Corrigeable authortie of this lies in our Wills. If the brame of our liues had not one Scale of Reason, to poize another of Sensualitie, the blood, and basenesse of our Natures would conduct vs to most prepostrous Conclusions. But we haue Reason to coole our raging Motions, our carnall Strings, or vnbitted Lusts: whereof I take this, that you call Loue, to be a Sect, or Seyen.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a Lust of the blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a mat: drowne thy selfe? Drown Cats, and blind Puppies. I haue profess'd me thy Friend, and I confesse me knit to thy deseruing, with Cables of perdurable toughnesse. I could neuer better steed thee then now. Put Money in thy purse: follow thou the Warres, defeate thy fauour, with an vsurp'd Beard. I say put Money in thy purse. It cannot be long that Desdemona should continue her loue to the Moore. Put Money in thy purse: nor be his to her. It was a violent Commencement in her, and thou shalt see an answerable Sequestration, put but Money in thy purse. These Moores are changeable in their wils: fill thy purse with Money.
The Food that to him now is as luscious as Locusts, shalbe to him shortly, as bitter as Coloquintida. She must change for youth: when she is sated with his body she will find the errors of her choice. Therefore, put Money in thy purse: If thou wilt needs damne thy selfe, do it a more delicate way then drowning. Make all the Money thou canst: If Sanctimonie, and a fraile vow, betwixt an erring Barbarian, and super-subtle Venerian be not too hard for my wits, and all the Tribe of hell, thou shalt enioy her: therefore make Money: a pox of drowning thy selfe, it is cleane out of the way. Seeke thou rather to be hang'd in Compassing thy ioy, then to be drown'd, and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago. Thou art sure of me: Go make Money: I haue told thee often, and I re-tell thee againe, and againe, I hate the Moore. My cause is hearted; thine hath no lesse reason. Let vs be coniunctiue in our reuenge, against him. If thou canst Cuckold him, thou dost thy selfe a pleasure, me a sport. There are many Euent in the Wombe of Time, which wilbe deliuered. Trauerse, go, prouide thy Money. We will haue more of this to morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meete i'th morning?

Iago. At my Lodging.

Rod. He be with thee betimes.

Iago. Go too, farewell. Do you heare Roderigo?

Rod. He sell all my Land. Exit.

Iago. Thus do I euer make my Foole, my purse:
For I mine owne gain'd knowledge should prophane
If I would time expend with such Snipe,

But

But for my Sport, and Profit: I hate the Moore,
And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets
She ha's done my Office. I know not if 't be true,
But I, for meere Suspicion in that kinde,
Will do, as if for Surety. He holds me well,
The better shall my purpose worke on him:
Cassio's a proper man: Let me see now,
To get his Place, and to plume vp my will
In double Knauery. How? How? Let's see.
After some time, to abuse Othello's eares,
That he is too familiar with his wife:
He hath a person, and a smooth dispose
To be suspected: fram'd to make women false.
The Moore is of a free, and open Nature,
That thinks men honest, that but seeme to be so,
And will as tenderly be lead by th' Nose
As Asse are:
I haue't: it is engendred: Hell, and Night,
Must bring this monstrous Birth, to the worlds light.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Montano, and two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the Cape, can you discern at Sea?
1. Gent. Nothing at all, it is a high wrought Flood:
I cannot 'twixt the Heauen, and the Maine,
Descry a Saile.

Mon. Me thinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at Land,
A fuller blast ne're shooke our Battlements:
If it hath rustied so vpon the Sea,
What ribbes of Oake, when Mountaines melt on them,
Can hold the Mortiers. What shall we heare of this?
2. A Segregation of the Turkish Fleet:
For do but stand vpon the Foaming Shore,
The chidden Billow seemes to pelt the Clouds,
The winde-shak'd Surge, with high & monstrous Maine
Seemes to cast water on the burning Beare,
And quench the Guards of th' euer-fixed Pole:
I neuer did like mollestation view
On the enchaufed Flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish Fleete
Be not enshelter'd, and embay'd, they are drown'd,
It is impossible to beare it out.

Enter a Gentleman.

3. Newes Laddes: our warres are done:
The desperate Tempest hath so bang'd the Turkes,
That their designement halts. A Noble ship of Venice,
Hath scene a greuous wracke and sufferance
On most part of their Fleet.

Mon. How? Is this true?

3. The Ship is heere put in: A Venessia, Michael Cassio
Lieutenant to the warlike Moore, Othello,
Is come on Shore: the Moore himselfe at Sea,
And is in full Commission heere for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't:
'Tis a worthy Governour.

3. But this same Cassio, though he speake of comfort,
Touching the Turkish losse, yet he lookes sadly,
And prayes the Moore be safe; for they were parted
With foule and violent Tempest.

Mon. Pray Heauens he be:

For I haue seru'd him, and the man commands
Like a full Soldier. Let's to the Sea-side (ho)
As well to see the Vessell that's come in,
As to throw-out our eyes for braue Othello,
Euen till we make the Maine, and th' Eriall blew,
An indistinct regard.

Gent. Come, let's do so;
For euery Minute is expectancie
Of more Arriuancie.

Enter Cassio.

Cassio. Thanks you, the valiant of the warlike Isle,
That to approoue the Moore: Oh let the Heauens
Giue him defence against the Elements,
For I haue lost him on a dangerous Sea.

Mon. Is he well ship'd?
Cassio. His Barke is stoutly Timber'd, and his Pylor
Of verie expert, and approu'd Allowance;
Therefore my hope's (not surferred to death)
Stand in bold Cure.

Within. A Saile, a Saile, a Saile.

Cassio. What noise?

Gent. The Towne is empty; on the brow o'th' Sea
Stand rankes of People, and they cry, a Saile.

Cassio. My hopes do shape him for the Gouvernor.

Gent. They do discharge their Shot of Courtesie,
Our Friends, at least.

Cassio. I pray you Sir, go forth,
And giue vs truth who 'tis that is arriu'd.

Gent. I shall.

Mon. But good Lieutenant, is your Generall wi'd?

Cassio. Most fortunately: he hath archieu'd a Maid
That paragons description, and wilde Fame:
One that excels the quirkes of Blazoning pens,
And in the essentiall Vesture of Creation,
Do's tyre the Ingeniuer.

Enter Gentleman.

How now? Who ha's put in?

Gent. 'Tis one Iago, Auncient to the Generall.

Cassio. Ha's had most fauourable, and happie speed:
Tempests themselves, high Seas, and howling windes,
The gutter'd Rockes, and Congregated Sands,
Traitors ensteep'd, to enclodge the guiltlesse Keele,
As hauing sence of Beautie, do omit
Their mortall Natures, letting go safely by The Diuine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?

Cassio. She that I spake of:
Our great Captains Captaine,

Left in the conduct of the bold Iago,
Whose footing heere anticipates our thoughts,
A Senights speed. Great loue, Othello guard,
And swell his Saile with thine owne powrefull breath,
That he may blesse this Bay with his tall Ship,
Make loues quicke pants in Desdemona's Armes,
Giue renew'd fire to our extincted Spirits.

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Rodorigo, and Emilia.

Oh behold,
The Riches of the Ship is come on shore:
You men of Cyprus, let her haue your knees,
Haile to thee Ladie: and the grace of Heauen,
Before, behinde thee, and on euery hand
Enwheele thee round.

Des. I thanke you, Valiant Cassio,
What tydings can you tell of my Lord?

Cassio.

Cas. He is not yet arriu'd, nor know I ought
But that he's well, and will be shortly heere.

Des. Oh, but I feare:
How lost you company?

Cassio. The great Contention of Sea, and Skies
Parted our fellowship. But hearken, a Saile.

Within. A Saile, a Saile.

Gent. They giue this greeting to the Cittadell:
This likewise is a Friend.

Cassio. See for the Newes:
Good Ancient, you are welcome. Welcome Mistris:
Let it not gaul your patience (good Iago)
That I extend my Manners. 'Tis my breeding,
That giues me this bold shew of Curtesie.

Iago. Sir, would she giue you somuch of her lippes,
As of her tongue she oft bestowes on me,
You would haue enough.

Des. Alas: she ha's no speech.

Iago. Infait too much:

I finde it still, when I haue leaue to sleepe.

Marry before your Ladyship, I grant,

She puts her tongue a little in her heart,

And chides with thinking.

Emil. You haue little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on: you are Pictures out of doore: Bells in your Parlours: Wilde-Cats in your Kitchens: Saints in your Injuries: Duels being offended:
Players in your Huswiferie, and Huswifes in your Beds.

Des. Oh, fie vpon thee, Slanderer.

Iago. Nay, it is true: or else I am a Turke,

You rise to play, and go to bed to worke.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What would 't write of me, if thou should'st praise me?

Iago. Oh, gentle Lady, do not put me too, t,

For I am nothing, if not Criticall.

Des. Come on, as I say.

There's one gone to the Harbour?

Iago. I Madam.

Des. I am not merry: but I do beguile

The thing I am, by seeming other wise.

Come, how would'st thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it, but indeed my inuention comes from my pate, as Birdlyme do's from Freeze, it pluckes out Braines and all. But my Muse labours, and thus she is deliuer'd.

If she be faire, and wise: fairenesse, and wit,

The ones for use, the other for shew.

Des. Well prais'd:

How if she be Blacke and Witty?

Iago. If she be blacke, and thereto haue a wit,

She's find a white, that shall her blacknesse sit.

Des. Worse, and worse.

Emil. How if Faire, and Foolish?

Iago. She neuer yet was foolish that was faire,

For euen her folly helps her to an heire,

Des. These are old fond Paradoxes, to make Fooles laugh i'th' Alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's Foule, and Foolish?

Iago. There's none so foule and foolish thereunto,

But do's foule pranks, which faire, and wise-ones do.

Des. Oh heauy ignorance: thou praisest the worst best. But what praise could'st thou bestow on a deseruing woman indeed? One, that in the authority of her merit, did iustly put on the vouch of very malice it selfe.

Iago. She that was euer faire, and neuer proud,
Had Tongue as will, and yet was neuer loud:
Neuer lackt Gold, and yet went neuer gay,
Fled from her wife, and yet said now I may,
She that being angred, her reuenge being nie,
Ead her wrong stay, and her displeasure flie:
She that in wisdom neuer was so fraile,
To change the Cods-head for the Salmon's taile:
She that could thinke, and neuer disclose her mind,
See Suitors following, and not looke behind:
She was a wight, (if euer such wights were)

Des. To do what?

Iago. To suckle Fooles, and chronicle small Beere.

Des. Oh most lame and impotent conclusion, Do not learne of him Emilia, though he be thy husband.
How say you (Cassio) is he not a most prophane, and liberall Counsaile?

Cassio. He speakes home (Madam) you may tellish him more in the Souldier, then in the Scholler.

Iago. He takes her by the palme: I, well said, whif-per. With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a Fly as Cassio. I smile vpon her, do: I will giue thee in thine owne Courtship. You say true, 'tis so indeed.
If such tricks as these strip you out of your Lieutenanttrie, it had beene better you had not kil'd your three fingers so oft, which now againe you are most apt to play the Sir, in. Very good: well kil'd, and excellent Cur-sie: 'tis so indeed. Yet againe, your fingers to your lippes? Would they were Cluster-pipes for your fate.

The Moore I know his Trumper.

Cassio. 'Tis truly so.

Des. Let's meete him, and recieue him.

Cassio. Loe, where he comes.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. O, my faire Warriour.

Des. My deere Othello.

Oth. It giues me wonder great, as my content

To see you heere before me.

Oh my Soules Ioy:

If after eueri Tempest, come such Calmes,

May the windes blow, till they haue waken'd death:

And let the labouring Barke climbe hills of Seas

Olympus high: and duck againe as low,

As hell's from Heauen. If it were now to dye,

'Twere now to be most happy. For I feare,

My Soule hath her content so absolute,

That not another comfort like to this,

Succeedes in vnknowne Fate.

Des. The Heauens forbid

But that our Loues

And Comforts should encrease

Euen as our dayes do grow.

Oth. Amen to that (sweet Powers)

I cannot speake enough of this content,

It stoppes me heere: it is too much of ioy.

And this, and this the greatest discords be

That ere our hearts shall make.

Iago. Oh you are well tun'd now: But Ile set downe the peggs that make this Musick, as honest as I am.

Oth.

Oth. Come: let vs to the Castle.
Newes (Friends) our Warres are done:
 The Turkes are drown'd.
 How do's my old Acquaintance of this Isle?
 (Hony) you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus,
 I haue found great loue among't them. Oh my Sweet,
 I prattle out of fashion, and I doate
 In mine owne comforts. I prythee, good Iago,
 Go to the Bay, and disimbarke my Coffers:
 Bring thou the Master to the Cittadell,
 He is a good one, and his worthynesse
 Do's challenge much respect. Come Desdemona,
 Once more well met at Cyprus.

Exit Othello and Desdemona.

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the Harbour.
 Come thither, if thou be'st Valiant, (as they say base men being in Loue, haue then a Nobilitie in their Natures, more then is native to them) list-me; the Lieutenant to night watches on the Court of Guard. First, I must tell thee this: Desdemona, is directly in loue with him.

Rod. With him? Why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus: and let thy soule be instructed. Marke me with what violence she first lou'd the Moore, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies. To loue him still for prating, let not thy discreet heart thinke it. Her eye must be fed. And what delight shall she haue to looke on the diuell? When the Blood is made dull with the Act of Sport, there should be a game to enflame it, and to giue Satiety a fresh appetite.
 Louelinesse in fauour, sympathy in yeares, Manners, and Beauties: all which the Moore is defectiue in. Now for want of these requir'd Conueniences, her delicate tenderesse wil finde it selfe abus'd, begin to heaue the gorge, disrellish and abhorre the Moore, very Nature wil instruct her in it, and compell her to some second choice.
 Now Sir, this granted (as it is a most pregnant and vnforc'd position) who stands so eminent in the degree of this Fortune, as Cassio do's: a knaue very voluble: no further conscionable, then in putting on the meere forme of Ciuill, and Humaine seeming, for the better compasse of his salt, and most hidden loose Affection? Why none, why none: A slipper, and subtle knaue, a finder of occasion: that he's an eye can stampe, and counterfeit Aduantages, though true Advantage neuer present it selfe.
 A diuclish knaue: besides, the knaue is handsome, young:
 and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and greene mindes looke after. A pestilent compleat knaue, and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot beleue that in her, she's full of most blefs'd condition.

Iago. Blefs'd figges-end. The Wine she drinkes is made of grapes. If shee had bene blefs'd, shee would neuer haue lou'd the Moore: Blefs'd pudding. Didst thou not see her paddle with the palme of his hand? Didst not marke that?

Rod. Yes, that I did: but that was but curtesie.

Iago. Lecherie by this hand: an Index, and obscure prologue to the History of Lust and foule Thoughts.
 They met so neere with their lippes, that their breathes embrac'd together. Villanous thoughts Roderigo, when these mutabilities so marshall the way, hard at hand comes the Master, and maine exercise, th'incorporate conclusion: Pish. But Sir, be you rul'd by me. I haue brought you from Venice. Watch you to night: for the Command, he lay't vpon you. Cassio knows you not: He not be farre from you. Do you finde some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline, or from what other course you please, which the time shall more fauorably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he's rash, and very sodaine in Choller: and happily may strike at you, prouoke him that he may: for euen out of that will I cause these of Cyprus to Mutiny.
 Whose qualification shall come into no true taste againe, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you haue a shorter journey to your desires, by the meanes I shall then haue to preferre them. And the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperitie.

Rod. I will do this, if you can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meete me by and by at the Cittadell. I must fetch his Necessaries a Shore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

Iago. That Cassio loues her, I do well beleue't:
 That she loues him, 'tis apt, and of great Credite.
 The Moore (howbeit that I endure him not)
 Is of a constant, louing, Noble Nature,
 And I dare thinke, he's proue to Desdemona
 A most deere husband. Now I do loue her too,
 Not out of absolute Lust, (though peradventure
 I stand accomprant for as great a sin)
 But partly led to dyet my Reuenge,
 For that I do suspect the lustie Moore
 Hath leap'd into my Seate. The thought whereof,
 Doth (like a poysonous Minerall) gnaw my Inwardnes:
 And nothing can, or shall content my Soule
 Till I am euen'd with him, wife, for wift.
 Or sayling so, yet that I put the Moore,
 Atleast into a Ielouzie so strong
 That iudgement cannot cure. Which thing to do,
 If this poore Trash of Venice, whom I trace
 For his quicke hunting, stand the putting on,
 He haue our Michael Cassio on the hip,
 Abuse him to the Moore, in the right garbe
 (For I feare Cassio with my Night-Cape too)
 Make the Moore thanke me, loue me, and reward me,
 For making him egregiously an Asse,
 And practising vpon his peace, and quier,
 Euen to madnesse. 'Tis heere: but yet confus'd,
 Knaueries plaine face, is neuer seene, till vs'd. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello's Herald with a Proclamation.

Herald. It is Othello's pleasure, our Noble and Valiant Generall. That vpon certaine tydings now arriv'd, importing the meere perdicion of the Turkish Fleet:
 euery man put himselfe into Triumph. Some to dance, some to make Bonfires, each man, to what Sport and Reuels his addition leads him. For besides these beneficiall Newes, it is the Celebration of his Nuptiall. So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices are open, & there is full libertie of Feasting from this pre-

present houre of siue, till the Bell haue told eleven.
 Bleste the Isle of Cyprus, and our Noble Generall Othel- lo. Exit.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, looke you to the guard to night.
 Let's reach our selues that Honourable stop,
 Not to out-sport discretion.

Cas. Iago, hath direction what to do.
 But notwithstanding with my personall eye
 Will I looke to't.

Oth. Iago, is most honest:
Michael, goodnight. To morrow with your earliest,
 Let me haue speech with you. Come my deere Loue,
 The purchase made, the fruites are to eniue,
 That profit's yet to come 'twene me, and you. Exit.

Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome Iago: we must to the Watch.

Iago. Not this houre Lieutenant: 'tis not yet ten o'clocke. Our Generall cast vs thus early for the loue of his Desdemona: Who, let vs not therefore blame;
 he hath not yet made wanton the night with her: and she is sport for Ioue.

Cas. She's a most exquisite Lady.

Iago. And he warrant her full of Game.

Cas. Indeed she's a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she ha's?

Merthinks it founds a parley to prouocation.

Cas. An inuiting eye:

And yet me thinks right modest.

Iago. And when she speaks,

Is it not an Alarum to Loue?

Cas. She is indeed perfection.

Iago. Well: happinesse to their Sheeres. Come Lieutenant, I haue a Rope of Wine, and heere without are a brace of Cyprus Gallants, that would faine haue a measure to the health of blacke Othello.

Cas. Not to night, good Iago, I haue very poore, and vnhappie Braines for drinking. I could well wish Curtesie would inuent some other Custome of entertainment.

Iago. Oh, they are our Friends: but one Cup, I le drinke for you.

Cassio. I haue drunke but one Cup to night, and that was craftily qualified too: and behold what inouation it makes heere. I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not taske my weakenesse with any more.

Iago. What man? 'Tis a night of Reuels, the Gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Heere, at the doore: I pray you call them in.

Cas. He do's, but it dislikes me. Exit.

Iago. If I can fasten but one Cup vpon him.

With that which he hath drunke to night already, he He'll be as full of Quarrell, and offences
 As my yong Mistis dogge.

Now my sicke Foole Roderigo, is to follow me.

Whom Loue hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,

To Desdemona hath to night Carrows'd.

Potations, pottle-deepe; and he's to watch.

Three else of Cyprus, Noble swelling Spirites,

(That hold their Honours in a wary distance,

The very Elements of this Warrelike Isle)

Haue I to night fluster'd with flowing Cups,

And they Watch too. Exit.

Now 'mongst this Flocke of drunkards
 Am I put to our Cassio in some Action
 That may offend the Isle. But here they come.

Enter Cassio, Montano, and Gentlemen.

If Consequence do but approue my dreame,
 My Boate sailes freely, both with winde and Stream.

Cas. Fore heauen, they haue giuen me a rowle already.

Mont. Good-faith a little one: not past a pint, as I am a Souldier.

Iago. Some Wine hoa.

And let me the Cannakin clinke, clinke:

And let me the Cannakin clinke.

A Souldiers a man: Oh, man's life's but a span,

Why then let a Souldier drinke.

Some Wine Boyes.

Cas. Fore Heauen: an excellent Song.

Iago. I learn'd it in England: where indeed they are most potent in Potting. Your Dane, your Germaine, and your swag-belly'd Hollander, (drinke hoa) are nothing to your English.

Cassio. Is your Englishmen so exquisite in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinkes you with facilitie, your Dane dead drunke. He sweates not to ouerthrow your Al-maine. He giues your Hollander a vomit, ere the next Pottle can be fill'd.

Cas. To the health of our Generall.

Mont. I am for it Lieutenant: and he de you Iustice.

Iago. Oh sweet England.

King Stephen was and a worthy Peere,

His Breeches cost him but a Crowne,

He held them Six pence all to deere,

With that he cal'd the Tailor Lowne:

He was a might of high Renowne,

And thou art but of low degree:

'Tis Pride that pulls the Country downe,

And take thy awl'd Cloake about thee.

Some Wine hoa.

Cassio. Why this is a more exquisite Song then the other.

Iago. Will you heare't againe?

Cas. No: for I hold him to be vnworthy of his Place; that do's those things. Well: heau'ns above all: and there be foules must be saued, and there be foules must not be saued.

Iago. It's true, good Lieutenant.

Cas. For mine owne part, no offence to the Generall, nor any man of qualitie: I hope to be saued.

Iago. And so do I too Lieutenant.

Cassio. I: (but by your leave) not before me. The Lieutenant is to be saued before the Ancient. Let's haue no more of this: let's to our Affaires. Forgiue vs our finnes: Gentlemen let's looke to our businesse. Do not thinke Gentlemen, I am drunke: this is my Ancient, this is my right hand, and this is my left. I am not drunke now: I can stand well enough, and I speake well enough.

Gen. Excellent well.

Cas. Why very well then: you must not thinke then,
 that I am drunke. Exit.

Mont. To th' Platforme (Masters) come, let's set the Watch.

Iago. You see this Fellow, that is gone before,

He's a Souldier, fit to stand by Cas,

And giue direction. And do but see his vice,

'Tis to his vertue, a iust Equinox,

cc 3 The

The one as long as th' other. 'Tis pittie of him:
I feare the trust Othello puts him in,
On some odde time of his infirmities
Will shake this Island.

Mont. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis euermore his prologue to his sleepe,
He'll watch the Horologe a double Set,
If Drinke rocke not his Cradle.

Mont. It were well

The Generall were put in mind of it:
Perhaps he sees it not, or his good nature
Prizes the vertue that appears in Cassio,
And lookes not on his euills: is not this true?

Enter Rodorigo.

Iago. How now Rodorigo?

I pray you after the Lieutenant, go.

Mon. And 'tis great pittie, that the Noble Moore
Should hazard such a Place, as his owne Second
With one of an ingraft Infirmitie,
It were an honest Action, to say so
To the Moore.

Iago. Not for this faire Island,
I do loue Cassio well: and would do much
To cure him of this euill, But hearken what noife?

Enter Cassio pursuing Rodorigo.

Cas. You Rogue: you Rascall.

Mon. What's the matter Lieutenant?

Cas. A Knaue teach me my dutie? He beate the Knaue in to a Twiggen-Bottle.

Rod. Beat me?

Cas. Dost thou prate, Rogue?

Mon. Nay, good Lieutenant:

I pray you Sir, hold your hand.

Cassio. Let me go (Sir)

Or He knocke you o're the Mazard.

Mon. Come, come: you're drunke.

Cassio. Drunke?

Iago. Away I say: go out and cry a Mutinie.

Nay good Lieutenant. Alas Gentlemen:

Helpe ho. Lieutenant. Sir Montano, Gentlemen:

Helpe Masters. Heere's a goodly Watch indeed.

Who's that which rings the Bell: Diablo, ho:

The Towne will rise. Fie, fie Lieutenant,

You'll be asham'd for euer.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter heere?

Mon. I bleed full, I am hurt to th' death. He dies.

Oth. Hold for your liues.

Iag. Hold ho: Lieutenant, Sir Montano, Gentlemen:

Haue you forgot all place of sense and dutie?

Hold. The Generall speaks to you: hold for shame.

Oth. Why how now ho? From whence ariseth this?

Are we turn'd Turkes? and to our selues do that

Which Heauen hath forbid the Ottomites.

For Christian shame, put by this barbarous Brawle:

He that stirs next, to carue for his owne rage,

Holds his soule light: He dies vpon his Motion.

Silence that dreadfull Bell, it frights the Isle,

From her propriety. What is the matter, Masters?

Honest Iago, that looks dead with greening,

Speake: who began this? On thy loue I charge thee?

Iago. I do not know: Friends all, but now, euen now.

In Quarter, and in termes like Bride, and Groome

Deuening them for Bed: and then, but now:

(As if some Planet had vnwitted men)

Swords out, and tilting one at others breaſter,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speake
Any beginning to this peeuiſh oddes.

And would, in Action glorious, I had loſt
Those legges, that brought me to a part of it.

Oth. How comes it (Michael) you are thus forgot?

Cas. I pray you pardon me, I cannot speake.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be ciuill:

The grauitie, and fillneſſe of your youth

The world hath noted. And your name is great

In mouthes of wiſeſt Censure. What's the matter

That you vnace your reputation thus,

And ſpend your rich opinion, for the name

Of a night-brawler? Giue me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger,

Your Officer Iago, can informe you,

While I ſpare ſpeech which ſomething now offends me.

Of all that I do know, nor know I ought

By me, that's ſaid, or done amiſſe this night,

Vnleſſe ſelfe-charitie be ſometimes a vice,

And to defend our ſelues, it be a ſinne

When violence affailes vs.

Oth. Now by Heauen,

My blood begins my faſer Guides to rule,

And paſſion (hauing my beſt iudgement collid)

Aſſaies to leade the way. If I once ſtir,

Or do but liſt this Arme, the beſt of you

Shall ſinke in my rebuke. Giue me to know

How this foule Rout began: Who ſet it on,

And he that is approu'd in this offence,

Though he had twin'd with me, both at a birth,

Shall looſe me. What in a Towne of warre,

Yet wilde, the peoples hearts brim-full of feare,

To Manage priuate, and domeſtick Quarrell?

In night, and on the Court and Guard of ſaſetie?

'Tis monſtrous: Iago, who began't?

Mon. If partially Affin'd, or league in office,

Thou doſt deliuer more, or leſſe then Truth,

Thou art no Soldier.

Iago. Touch me not ſo neere,

I had rather haue this tongue cut from my mouth,

Then it ſhould do offence to Michael Cassio.

Yet I perſwade my ſelfe, to ſpeake the truth

Shall nothing wrong him. This it is Generall:

Montano and my ſelfe being in ſpeech,

There comes a Fellow, crying out for helpe,

And Cassio following him with determin'd Sword

To execute vpon him. Sir, this Gentleman,

Steppes in to Cassio, and entreats his pauſe:

My ſelfe, the crying Fellow did purſue,

Leaſt by his clamour (as it ſo fell out)

The Towne might fall in fright. He, (wiſt of ſoote)

Out-ran my purpoſe: and I return'd then rather

For that I heard the clinke, and fall of Swords,

And Cassio high in oath: Which till to night

I nere might ſay before. When I came backe

(For this was briefe) I found them cloſe together

At blow, and thruſt, euen as againe they were

When you your ſelfe did part them,

More of this matter cannot I report,

But Men are Men: The beſt ſometimes forget,

Though Cassio did ſome little wrong to him,

As men in rage ſtrike thoſe that with them beſt,

Yet ſurely Cassio I beleeue receiu'd

From him that fled, ſome ſtrange Indignitie,

Which patience could not paſſe.

Oth.

Oth. I know Iago

Thy honeſtie, and loue doth mince this matter,

Making it light to Cassio: Cassio, I loue thee,

But neuer more be Officer of mine.

Enter Deſdemona attended.

Looke if my gentle Loue be not rais'd vp:

He make thee an example.

Deſ. What is the matter (Dece?)

Oth. All's well, Sweeting:

Come away to bed. Sir for your hurts,

My ſelfe will be your Surgeon. Lead him off:

Iago, looke with care about the Towne,

And ſilence thoſe whom this wil'd brawle diſtracted.

Come Deſdemona, 'tis the Soldiers life,

To haue their Balmie ſlumbers wak'd with ſtriſe. Exit.

Iago. What are you hurt Lieutenant?

Cas. I paſt all Surgery.

Iago. Marry Heauen forbid.

Cas. Reputation, Reputation, Reputation: Oh I haue loſt my Reputation. I haue loſt the immortall part of my ſelfe, and what remains is beſtiall. My Reputation,

Iago, my Reputation.

Iago. As I am an honeſt man I had thought you had receiu'd ſome bodily wound; there is more ſence in that then in Reputation. Reputation is an idle, and moſt falſe impoſition; oft got without merit, and loſt without deſeruing. You haue loſt no Reputation at all, vnleſſe you repute your ſelfe ſuch a looſer. What man, there are more wayes to recouer the Generall againe. You are but now caſt in his moode, (a puniſhment more in policie, then in malice) euen ſo as one would beate his of-fenceleſſe dogge, to affright an Imperious Lyon. Sue to him againe, and he's yours.

Cas. I will rather ſue to be deſpis'd, then to deceiue ſo good a Commander, with ſo ſlight, ſo drunken, and ſo in diſcreet an Officer. Drunke? And ſpeake Parat? And ſquabble? Swagger? Swear? And diſcouſe Fuſtian with ſones owne ſhadow? Oh thou inuiſible ſpirit of Wine, if thou haſt no name to be knowne by, let vs call thee Diuell.

Iago. What was he that you follow'd with your Sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.

Iago. Is't poſſible?

Cas. I remember a maſſe of things, but nothing diſtinctly: a Quarrell, but nothing wherefore. Oh, that men ſhould put an Enemy in their mouthes, to ſteale away their Braines? that we ſhould with joy, pleaſance, reuell and applauſe, transforme our ſelues into Beaſts.

Iago. Why? But you are now well enough: how came you thus recouered?

Cas. It hath pleas'd the diuell drunkenneſſe, to giue place to the diuell wrath, one vnperfectneſſe, ſhewes me another to make me frankly deſpiſe my ſelfe.

Iago. Come, you are too ſeuer a Moraller. As the Time, the Place, & the Condition of this Country ſtands

I could hartily wiſh this had not beſalne: but ſince it is, as it is, mend it for your owne good.

Cas. I will aſke him for my Place againe, he ſhall tell me, I am a drunkard: had I as many mouthes as Hydra, ſuch an answer would ſtop them all. To be now a ſenſible man, by and by a Foole, and preſently a Beaſt. Oh ſtrange! Euen inordinate cup is vnleſſ'd, and the Ingre-diend is a diuell.

Iago. Come, come: good wine, is a good familiar Creature, if it be well vs'd: exclaime no more againſt it.
And good Lieutenant, I thinke, you thinke I loue
you.

Cassio. I haue well approou'd it, Sir. I drunke?

Iago. You, or any man liuing, may be drunke at a time man. I tell you what you ſhall do: Our Generall's Wife, is now the Generall. I may ſay ſo, in this reſpect, for that he hath deuoted, and giuen vp himſelfe to the Contemplation; marke: and deuotement of her parts and Graces. Confeſſe your ſelfe freely to her: Importune her helpe to put you in your place againe. She is of to free, ſo kinde, ſo apt, ſo bleſſed a diſpoſition, ſhe holds it a vice in her goodneſſe, not to do more then ſhe is requett'd. This broken ioynt betweene you, and her husband, entreat her to ſplinter. And my Fortunes againſt any lay worth naming, this cracke of your Loue, ſhall grow ſtronger, then it was before.

Cassio. You aduſe me well.

Iago. I proteſt in the ſinceritie of Loue, and honeſt kindneſſe.

Cassio. I thinke it freely: and betimes in the morning, I will beſeech the vertuous Deſdemona to vnder-take for me: I am deſperate of my Fortunes if they check me.

Iago. You are in the right: good night Lieutenant, I muſt to the Watch.

Cassio. Good night, honeſt Iago.

Exit Cassio.

Iago. And what's he then,

That ſaies I play the Villaine?

When this aduſe is free I giue, and honeſt,

Proball to thinking, and indeed the courſe

To win the Moore againe.

For 'tis moſt eaſie

Th'inclining Deſdemona to ſubdue

In any honeſt Suite. She's fram'd as fruitfull

As the free Elements. And then for her

To win the Moore, were to renounce his Baptiſme,

All Scales, and Simbols of redeemed ſin:

His Soule is ſo enſetter'd to her Loue,

That ſhe may make, vnmake, do what ſhe liſt,

Euen as her Appetite ſhall play the God,

With his weake Function. How am I then a Villaine,

To Counſell Cassio to this paralell courſe,

Directly to his good? Diuinitie of hell,

When diuels will the blackeſt ſinnes put on,

They do ſuggeſt at firſt with heauenly ſhewes,

As I do now. For whiles this honeſt Foole

Plies Deſdemona, to repaire his Fortune,

And ſhe for him, pleades ſtrongly to the Moore,

He powre this peſtilence into his eare:

That ſhe repeales him, for her bodies Luſt

And by how much ſhe ſtrives to do him good,

She ſhall vndo her Credite with the Moore.

So will I turne her vertue into pitch,

And out of her owne goodneſſe make the Net,

That ſhall en-maſh them all.

How now Rodorigo?

Enter Rodorigo.

Rodorigo. I do follow heere in the Chace, not like a Hound that hunts, but one that files vp the Crie. My Money is almoſt ſpent; I haue bin to night exceedingly well Cudgell'd: And I thinke the iſſue

113

will

will bee, I shall haue so much experience for my paines;
And so, with no money at all, and a little more Wit, returne againe to Venice.

Iago. How poore are they that haue not Patience?
What wound did euer heale but by degrees?
Thou know'st we worke by Wit, and not by Witchcraft
And Wiedepends on dilatory time:
Dost not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that small hurt hath casheer'd Cassio:
Though other things grow faire against the Sun;
Yet Fruites that blossome first, will first be ripe:
Content thy selfe, a while: Introth 'tis Morning;
Pleasure, and Action, make the houres seeme short:
Retire thee, go where thou art Billied:
Away, I say, thou shalt know more heereafter:
Nay get thee gone.

Two things are to be done:
My Wife must moue for Cassio to her Mistis:
He set her on my selfe, a while, to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him iumpe, when he may Cassio finde
Soliciting his wife: I, that's the way:
Dull not Deuice, by coldnesse, and delay. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Cassio, Musicians, and Clowne.

Cassio. Masters, play heere, I will content your paines,
Something that's briefer: and bid, goodmorrow General.
Clo. Why Masters, haue your Instruments bin in Naples, that they speake it h' Nose thus?

Mus. How Sir? how?

Clo. Are these I pray you, winde Instruments?

Mus. I marry are they Sir.

Clo. Oh, thereby hangs a tale.

Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, Sir?

Clo. Marry Sir, by many a winde Instrument that I know. But Masters, heere's money for you: and the Generall so likes your Musick, that he desires you for loues ake to make no more noise with it.

Mus. Well Sir, we will not.

Clo. If you haue any Musicke that may not be heard, too't againe: But (as they say) to heare Musicke, the Generall do's not greatly care.

Mus. We haue none such, Sir.

Clo. Then put vp your Pipes in your bagge, for Ie away. Go, vanish into ayre, away. Exit Mus.

Cassio. Dost thou heare me, mine honest Friend?

Clo. No, I heare not your honest Friend:

I heare you.

Cassio. Prythee keepe vp thy Quillies, ther's a poore peece of Gold for thee: if the Gentlewoman that attends the Generall be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio en-treats her a little fauour of Speech. Wilt thou do this?

Clo. She is stirring Sir: if she will stirre hither, I shall seeme to notific vnto her. Exit Clo.

Enter Iago.

In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You haue not bin a-bed then?

Cassio. Why no: the day had broke before we parted.

I haue made bold (Iago) to send in to your wife:

My suite to her is, that she will to vertuous Desdemona

Procure me some access.

Iago. He send her to you presently:
And he deuise a meane to draw the Moore
Out of the way, that your conuerse and businesse
May be more free.

Cassio. I humbly thanke you for't: I neuer knew
A Florentine more kinde, and honest. Exit.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Goodmorrow (good Lieutenant) I am sorry
For your displeasure: but all will sure be well.

The Generall and his wife are talking of it,
And she speaks for you stoutly. The Moore replies,
That he you hurt is of great Fame in Cyprus,

And great Affinitie: and that in wholesome Wisedome
He might not but refuse you. But he protests he loues you
And needs no other Sutor, but his likings
To bring you in againe.

Cassio. Yet I beseech you,

If you thinke fit, or that it may be done,
Giue me aduantage of some breefe Discourse
With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray you come in:

I will bestow you where you shall haue time,
To speake your bosome freely.

Cassio. I am much bound to you.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen.

Oth. These Letters giue (Iago) to the Pylot,
And by him do my duties to the Senate:

That done, I will be walking on the Workes,
Repaire there to mee.

Iago. Well, my good Lord, He doo't.

Oth. This Fortification (Gentlemen) shall we see?

Gent. Well waite vpon your Lordship. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia.

Des. Be thou assur'd (good Cassio) I will do
All my abilities in thy behalfe.

Emil. Good Madam do:

I warrant it grieues my Husband,

As if the cause were his.

Des. Oh that's an honest Fellow, Do not doubt Cassio
But I will haue my Lord, and you againe

As friendly as you were.

Cassio. Bounteous Madam,

What euer shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's neuer any thing but your true Seruant.

Des. I know't: I thanke you: you do loue my Lord:
You haue knowne him long, and be you well assur'd

He shall in strangenesse stand no farther off,
Then in a politique distance.

Cassio. I, but Lady,

That policie may either last so long,

Or feede vpon such nice and waterish diet,

Or breede it selfe so out of Circumstances,

That I being absent, and my place supply'd,

My Generall will forget my Loue, and Seruice.

Des. Do not doubt that: before Emilia here,

I giue thee warrant of thy place. Assure thee,

If I do vow a friendship, I performe it.

To the last Article. My Lord shall neuer rest,

He watch him tame, and talke him out of patience:

His Bed shall seeme a Schoole, his Boord a Shrift, and I

He intermingle euerie thing he do's

With Cassio's suite: Therefore be merry, Cassio, blow I

For thy Solicitor shall rather dye,

Then giue thy cause away.

Emil. Madam, heere comes my Lord.

Cassio. Madam, he take my leave.

Des. Why stay, and heare me speake?

Cassio. Madam, not now: I am very ill at ease,

Vnto for mine owne purposes.

Des. Well, do your discretion.

Iago. Hah? I like not that.

Oth. What dost thou say?

Iago. Nothing my Lord; out of—I know not what?

Oth. Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?

Iago. Cassio my Lord? No sure, I cannot thinke it.

That he would steale away so guilty like,

Seeing your comming.

Oth. I do beleue 'twas he.

Des. How now my Lord?

I haue bin talking with a Sutor heere,

A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is't you meane?

Des. Why your Lieutenant Cassio: Good my Lord,

If I haue any grace, or power to moue you,

His present reconciliation take.

For if he be not one, that truly loues you,

That erres in Ignorance, and not in Cunning,

I haue no iudgement in an honest face.

I prythee call him backe.

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. I sooth; so humbled;

That he hath left part of his griefe with mee

To suffer with him. Good Loue, call him backe.

Oth. Not now (Sweet Desdemona) some other time.

Des. But shall't be shortly?

Oth. The sooner (Sweet) for you.

Des. Shall't be to night, at Supper?

Oth. No, not to night.

Des. To morrow Dinner then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home:

I meete the Capitaines at the Cittadell.

Des. Why then to morrow night, on Tuesday morne,

On Tuesday noone, or night; on Wednesday Morne.

I prythee name the time, but let it not Exceed three dayes. In faith hee's penitent:

And yet his Treaspasse, in our common reason

(Sae that they say the watres must make example)

Out of her best, is not almost a fault

Tencurre a priuate checke. When shall he come?

Tell me Othello. I wonder in my Soule

What you would aske me, that I should deny.

Or stand so marning on? What? Michael Cassio,

That came a wooing with you? and so many a time

(When I haue spoke of you dispraisingly)

Hath tane your part, to haue so much to do

To bring him in? Trust me, I could do much.

Oth. Prythee no more: Let him come when he will:

I will deny thee nothing.

Des. Why, this is not a Boone:

'Tis as I should entreate you weare your Gloues,

Or feede on nourishing dishes, or keepe you warme,

Or sue to you, to do a peculiar profic

To your owne person. Nay, when I haue a suite

Wherein I meane to touch your Loue indeed,

It shall be full of poize, and difficult waight,

And fearefull to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing.

Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,

To leaue me but a little to my selfe.

Des. Shall I deny you? No: farewell my Lord.

Oth. Farewell my Desdemona, He come to thee straight.

Des. Emilia come; be as your Fancies teach you:

What ere you be, I am obedient.

Oth. Excellent wretch: Perdition catch my Soule,

But I do loue thee: and when I loue thee not,

Chaois come againe.

Iago. My Noble Lord.

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio

When he woo'd my Lady, know of your loue?

Oth. He did, from first to last:

Why dost thou aske?

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my Thought,

No further harme.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?

Iago. I did not thinke he had bin acquainted with hir.

Oth. O yes, and went betweene v's very oft.

Iago. Indeed?

Oth. Indeed? I indeed. Discern'st thou ought in that?

Is he not honest?

Iago. Honest, my Lord?

Oth. Honest? I, Honest.

Iago. My Lord, for ought I know.

Oth. What dost thou thinke?

Iago. Thinke, my Lord?

Oth. Thinke, my Lord? Alas, thou eccho'st me;

As if there were some Monster in thy thought:

Too hideous to be shewne. Thou dost mean something:

I heard thee say, euen now, thou lik'st not that,

When Cassio left my wife. What did'st not like?

And when I told thee, he was of my Counsaile,

Of my whole course of wooing; thou criest, 'st, Indeede?

And did'st contract, and purle thy brow together,

As if thou then had'st shut vp in thy Braine

Some horrible Conceits. If thou do'st loue me,

Shew me thy thought.

Iago. My Lord, you know I loue you.

Oth. I thinke thou do'st:

And for I know thou'rt full of Loue, and Honestie,

And weigh'st thy words before thou giu'st them breath,

Therefore these stops of thine, fright me the more:

For such things in a false disloyall Knaue

Are trickes of Custome: but in a man that's iust,

They're close dilations, working from the heart,

That Passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,

I dare be sworne, I thinke that he is honest.

Oth. I thinke so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seeme,

Or those that be not, would they might seeme none.

Oth. Certaine, men should be what they seeme.

Iago. Why then I thinke Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this?

I prythee speake to me, as to thy thinkings.

As thou dost ruminare, and giue thy worst of thoughts

The

The worst of words.

Iago. Good my Lord pardon me,
Though I am bound to every Act of dutie,
I am not bound to that: All Sinaes are free:
Vtter my Thoughts? Why say, they are vild, and false?
As where's that Palace, whereinto foule things
Sometimes intrude not? Who ha's that breast so pure,
Wherein vnclenly Apprehensions
Keepe Leetes, and Law-dayes, and in Sessions sit
With meditations lawfull?

Oth. Thou do'st conspire against thy Friend (Iago)
If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his care
A stranger to thy Thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you,
Though I perchance am vicious in my guesse
(As I confesse it is my Natures plague
To spy into Abuses, and of my ieaousie
Shapes faults that are not) that your wisdom
From one, that so imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice, nor build your selfe a trouble
Out of this scattering, and vnfore obseruance:
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my Manhood, Honesty, and Wisedome,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou meane?

Iago. Good name in Man, & woman (deere my Lord)
Is the immediate Iewell of their Soules;
Who steales my purse, steales trash:
'Tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has bin slaue to thousands:
But he that filches from me my good Name,
Robs me of that, which not enriches him,
And makes me poore indeed.

Oth. He know thy Thoughts.
Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand,
Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custodie.

Oth. Ha?

Iago. Oh, beware my Lord, of ieaousie,
It is the Greene-ey'd Monster, which doth mocke
The meate it feeds on. That Cuckold liues in blisse,
Who certaine of his Fate, loues not his wronger:
But oh, what damned minutes tels he ore,
Who dotes, yet doubts: Suspects, yet soundly loues?

Oth. O miserie.
Iago. Poore, and Content, is rich, and rich enough,
But Riches finelesse, is as poore as Winter;
To him that euer feares he shall be poore:
Good Heauen, the Soules of all my Tribe defend From Ieaousie.

Oth. Why? why is this?
Think'st thou, I'd make a Life of Ieaousie;
To follow still the changes of the Moone
With fresh suspitions? No: to be once in doubt,
Is to be resolu'd: Exchange me for a Goat,
When I shall turne the businesse of my Soule
To such exultate, and blow'd Surmises,
Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me Ieaious,
To say my wife is faire, feeds well, loues company,
Is free of Speech, Sings, Playes, and Dances:
Where Vertue is, these are more vertuous.
Nor from mine owne weake merites, will I draw
The smallest feare, or doubt of her reuolt,
For she had eyes, and chose me. No Iago,
Hee see before I doubt; when I doubt, proue;
And on the prooue, there is no more but this,
Away at once with Loue, or Ieaousie.

Ia. I am glad of this: For now I shall haue reason
To shew the Loue and Duty that I beare you
With franker spirit. Therefore (as I am bound)
Receiue it from me: I speake not yet of prooue:
Looke to your wife, obserue her well with Cassio, Weare your eyes, thus: not Ieaious, nor Secure:
I would not haue your free, and Noble Nature,
Out of selfe-Bounty, be abus'd: Looke too't:
I know our Country disposition well:
In Venice, they do let Heauen see the pranks
They dare not shew their Husbands.
Their best Conscience,
Is not to leaue't vndone, but kept vnknowne.

Oth. Dost thou say so?
Iago. She did deceiue her Father, marrying you,
And when she seem'd to shake, and feare your lookes,
She lou'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.
Iago. Why go too then:
Shee that so young could giue out such a Seeming
To feele her Fathers eyes vp, close as Oake,
He thought 'twas Witchcraft,
But I am much too blame:
I humbly do beseech you of your pardon
For too much louing you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for euer.
Iago. I see this hath a little dash'd your Spirits:

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.
Iago. Trust me, I feare it has:
I hope you will consider what is spoke
Comes from your Loue.
But I do see y'are mou'd:
I am to pray you, not to straine my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Then to Suspicion.

Oth. I will not.
Iago. Should you do so (my Lord)
My speech should fall into such vild successe,
Which my Thoughts ay'm'd not.
Cassio's my worthy Friend:
My Lord, I see y'are mou'd.

Oth. No, not much mou'd:
I do not thinke but Desdemona's honest.
Iago. Long liue she so;
And long liue you to thinke so.

Oth. And yet how Nature erring from it selfe,
Iago. I, there's the point:
As (to be bold with you)
Not to affect many proposed Matches
Of her owne Clime, Complexion, and Degree,
Where to we see in all things, Nature tends:
Foh, one may smel in such, a will most ranke,
Foule disproportions, Thoughts vnaturall.
But (pardon me) I do not in position
Distinctly speake of her, though I may feare
Her will, recoyling to her better iudgement,
May fall to match you with her Country formes,
And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:
If more thou dost perceiue, let me know more:
Set on thy wife to obserue.

Iago. Leave me Iago.
Iago. My Lord, I take my leaue.
Othel. Why did I marry?
This honest Creature (doubtlesse)
Sees, and knowes more, much more then he vnfoldes.

Iago

Iago. My Lord, I would I might inreat your Honor
To scan this thing no farther: Leauet it to time,
Although 'tis fit that Cassio haue his Place;
For sure he fills it vp with great Ability;
Yet if you please, to him off a-while:
You shall by that perceiue him, and his meanes:
Note if your Lady straine his Entertainment
With any strong, or vehement importunitie,
Much will be seene in that: In the meane time,
Let me be thought too busie in my feares,
(As worthy cause I haue to feare I am)
And hold her free, I do beseech your Honor.

Oth. Feare not my government.
Iago. I once more take my leaue. Exit.

Oth. This Fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knowes all Quantities with a learn'd Spirit
Of humane dealings. If I do proue her Haggard,
Though that her Iesses were my deere heart-strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her downe the winde
To prey at Fortune. Haply, for I am blacke,
And haue not those soft parts of Conneration
That Chamberers haue: Or for I am declin'd
Into the vale of yeares (yet that's not much)
Shee's gone. I am abus'd, and my releefe
Must be to loath her. Oh Curse of Marriage!
That we can call these delicate Creatures ours,
And not their Appetites? I had rather be a Toad,
And liue vpon the vapour of a Dungeon,
Then keepe a corner in the thing I loue
For others vses. Yet 'tis the plague to Great-ones, Prerogatiu'd are they lesse then the Base,
'Tis destiny vnfhunnable, like death:
Euen then, this forked plague is fated to vs,
When we do quicken. Looke where she comes:

Enter Desdemona and Amilia.

If she be false, Heauen mock'd it selfe:
He not beleue't.

Des. How now, my deere Othello?
Your dinner, and the generous Islanders
By you inuited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am too blame.

Des. Why do you speake so faintly?
Are you not well?

Oth. I haue a paine vpon my Forehead, heere.

Des. Why that's with watching, 'twill away againe.

Let me but binde it hard, within this houre
It will be well.

Oth. Your Napkin is too little:
Let it alone: Come, lie go in with you. Exit.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

Amil. I am glad I haue found this Napkin:
This was her first remembrance from the Moore;

My wayward Husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to steale it. But she so loues the Token,
(For he conu'd her, she should euer keepe it)

That she reserves it euermore about her,
To kisse, and talke too. He haue the worke tane out,
And giu't Iago: what he will do with it
Heauen knowes, not I:

Nothing, but to please his Fantasie.

Enter Iago.

Iago. How now? What do you heere alone?
Amil. Do not you chide: I haue a thing for you.

Iago. You haue a thing for me?
It is a common thing

Amil. Ha?

Iago. To haue a foolish wife.

Amil. Oh, is that all? What will you giue me now
For that same Handkerchiefe?

Iago. What Handkerchiefe?

Amil. What Handkerchiefe?

Why that the Moore first gaue to Desdemona,
That which so often you did bid me steale.

Iago. Ha! stolne it from her?

Amil. No; but she let it drop by negligence,
And to th' aduantage, I being heere, took't vp:

Looke, heere 'tis.

Iago. A good wenche, giue it me.

Amil. What will you do with't, that you haue bene so earnest to haue me filch it?

Iago. Why, what is that to you?

Amil. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Giue't me againe. Poore Lady, shee'l run mad.

When she shall lacke it.

Iago. Be not acknowne on't:

I haue vsd for it. Go, leaue me. Exit Amil.
I will in Cassio's Lodging loose this Napkin,

And let him finde it. Trifles light as ayre,
Are to the ieaious, confirmations strong,

As proofes of holy Writ. This may do something.
The Moore already changes with my poyson:

Dangerous conceits, are in their Natures poysons,
Which at the first are scarce found to distaste;

But with a little acte vpon the blood,
Burne like the Mines of Sulphure. I did say so.

Enter Othello.

Looke where he comes: Not Poppy, nor Mandragora,
Nor all the drowfie Syrrups of the world
Shall euer medicine thee to that sweete sleepe
Which thou ow'd'st yesterday:

Oth. Ha, ha, false to mee?

Iago. Why how now General? No more of that.
Oth. Auant, be gone: Thou hast set me on the Racke:

I sweare 'tis better to be much abus'd, than to Then but to know't a little.

Iago. How now, my Lord?

Oth. What sence had I, in her stolne houres of Lust?
I saw't not, thought it not: it harm'd not me.

I slept the next night well, fed well, was free, and merrie.
I found not Cassio's kisses on her Lippes:

He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolne,
Let him not know't, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to heare this:
Oth. I had bene happy, if the generall Campe,

Pyoners and all, had tasted her sweet Body,
So I had nothing knowne. Oh now, for euery sin

Farewell the Tranquill minde; farewell Content;
Farewell the plumed Troopes, and the bigge Warres,

That makes Ambition, Vertue! Oh farewell;
Farewell the neighing Steed, and the shrill Trumpe,

The Spirit-stirring Drum, th' Ear-piercing Fife,
The Royall Banner, and all Qualitie,

Pride, Pompe, and Circumstance of glorious Warre:
And O you mortall Engines, whose rude throates

Th' immortal Ioues dread Clamours, counterfet,
Farewell: Othello's Occupation's gone.

Iago. Is't possible, my Lord?

Oth. Villaine, be sure thou proue my Loue a Whore;
Be sure of it: Giue me the Occular prooue,

Or

Or by the worth of mine eternall Soule, I will Thou hadst bin better haue bin borne a Dog
Then answer my wak'd wrath.

Iago. Is't come to this? Oth. Make me to see't: or (at the least) so proue it,
That the probation beare no Hindge, nor Loope,
To hang a doubt on: Or woe vpon thy life.

Iago. My Noble Lord, Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me, Neuer pray mote: Abandon all remorse
On Horrors head, Horrors accumulate:
Do deeds to make Heauen weepe, all Earth amaz'd;
For nothing canst thou to damnation adde,
Greater then that.

Iago. O Grace! O Heauen forgie me!
Are you a Man? Haue you a Soule? or Sense?
God buy you: take mine Office. Oh wretched Foole,
That lou'st to make thine Honesty a Vice!
Oh monstrous world! Take note, take note (O World)
To be direct and honest, is not safe.

I thanke you for this profit, and from hence
He loue no Friend, fith Loue breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay stay: thou shouldst be honest.

Iago. I should be wise; for Honesty's a Foole,
And looses that it workes for.

Oth. By the World,

I thinke my Wife be honest, and thinke she is not:
I thinke that thou art iust, and thinke thou art not:
He haue some prooffe. My name that was as fresh
As Dians Valsage, is now begrim'd and blacke
As mine owne face. If there be Cords, or Knives, Poyson, or Fire, or suffocating steames,
He not indure it. Would I were satis fied.

Iago. I see you are eaten vp with Passion:

I do repent me, that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would? Nay, and I will.

Iago. And may: but how? How satisfied, my Lord?
Would you the super-vision grossely gaze on?
Behold her top'd?

Oth. Death, and damnation. Oh!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I thinke,
To bring them to that Prospect: Damm them then,
If euer mortall eyes do see them bouldster
More then their owne. What then? How then?

What shall I say? Where's Satisfaction?

It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime as Goates, as hot as Monkeyes,
As salt as Volues in pride, and Fooles as grosse
As Ignorance, made drunke. But yet, I say,
If imputation, and strong circumstances,
Which lead directly to the doore of Truth,
Will giue you satisfaction, you might haue't.

Oth. Giue me a liuing reason she's disloyall.

Iago. I do not like the Office.
But fith I am entred in this cause so farre,
(Prick'd red by foolish Honesty, and Loue)
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately,
And being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleepe: There are a kinde of men,
So loose of Soules, that in their sleepes will mutter
Their Affayres: one of this kinde is Cassio:
In sleepe I heard him say, sweet Desdemona,
Let vs be wary, let vs hide our Loues,
And then (Sir) would he gripe, and wring my hand;
Cry, oh sweet Creature: then kisse me hard,

As if he pluckt vp kisses by the rootes,
That grew vpon my lippes, laid his Leg ore my Thigh,
And sigh, and kisse, and then cry curst Fate,
That gaue thee to the Moore.

Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his Dreame.

Oth. But this denoted a fore-gone conclusion,
'Tis a shrew'd doubt, though it be but a Dreame.

Iago. And this may helpe to thicken other proofes,
That do demonstrate thinly.

Oth. He teare her all to peeces.

Iago. Nay yet be wise; yet we see nothing done,
She may be honest yet: Tell me but this,
Haue you not sometimes seene a Handkerchiefe
Spotted with Strawberies, in your wifes hand?

Oth. I gaue her such a one: 'twas my first gift.
Iago. I know not that: but such a Handkerchiefe
(I am sure it was your wifes) did I to day
See Cassio wipe his Beard with.

Oth. If it be that.

Iago. If it be that, or any, it was hers.

It speaks against her with the other proofes.
Oth. O that the Slaue had forty thousand liues:
One is too poore, too weak for my reuenge.

Now do I see 'tis true. Looke here Iago,
All my fond loue thus do I blow to Heauen. 'Tis gone,
Arise blacke vengeance, from the hollow hell,
Yeeld vp (O Loue) thy Crowne, and heared Throne
To tyrannous Hate. Swell bosome with thy fraught,
For 'tis of Aspickes tongues.

Iago. Yet be content.
Oth. Oh blood, blood, blood.

Iago. Patience I say: your minde may change.

Oth. Neuer Iago. Like to the Ponticke Sea,
Whose Icie Current, and compulsiue course,
Neu'r keepe retyring ebbe, but keepe due on
To the Proponticke, and the Hellespont:
Euen so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace
Shall neu'r looke backe, neu'r ebbe to humble Loue;
Till that a capeable, and wide Reuenge
Swallow them vp. Now by yond Marble Heauen,
In the due reuerence of a Sacred vow,
I heere engage my words.

Iago. Do not rise yet:
Witness you euer-burning Lights above,
You Elements, that clip vs round about,
Witness that heere Iago doth giue vp
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,
To wrong'd Othello's Service. Let him command,
And to obey shall be in me remorse,
What bloody business euer.

Oth. I greet thy loue,
Not with vaine thanks, but with acceptance bounteous,
And will vpon the instant put thee too't.

Within these three dayes let me heere thee say,
That Cassio's not aliue.

Iago. My Friend is dead:
'Tis done at your Request.

But let her liue.

Oth. Damm her lewde Minx:
O damne her, damne her.

Come go with me a-part, I will withdraw
To furnish me with some swift meanes of death
For the faire Diuell.

Now art thou my Lieutenant.

Iago. I am your owne for euer.

Exit.

Scene.

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clown.

Def. Do you know Sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lies?

Clow. I dare not say he lies any where.

Def. Why man?

Clow. He's a Soldier, and for me to say a Souldier lies,
'tis stabbing.

Def. Go too: where lodges he?

Clow. To tell you where he lodges, is to tel you where I lie.

Def. Can any thing be made of this?

Clow. I know not where he lodges, and for mee to demure a lodging, and say he lies heere, or he lies there, were to lye in mine owne throat.

Def. Can you enquire him out? and be edified by report?

Clow. I will Catechize the world for him, that is, make Questions, and by them answer.

Def. Seeke him, bidde him come hither: tell him, I haue moou'd my Lord on his behalfe, and hope all will be well.

Clow. To do this, is within the compasse of mans Wit, and therefore I will attempt the doing it. Exit Clow.

Def. Where should I loofe the Handkerchiefe, Emilia?

Emil. I know not Madam.

Def. Beleue me, I had rather haue lost my purse
Full of Cruzadoes. And but my Noble Moore
Is true of minde, and made of no such basenesse,
As iecalous Creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking.

Emil. Is he not iecalous?

Def. Who, he? I thinke the Sun where he was borne,
Drew all such humors from him.

Emil. Looke where he comes.

Enter Othello.

Def. I will not leaue him now, till Cassio be Call'd to him. How is't with you, my Lord?

Oth. Well my good Lady. Oh hardnes to dissemble!
How do you, Desdemona?

Def. Well, my good Lord.

Oth. Giue me your hand.

This hand is moist my Lady.

Def. It hath felt no age, nor knowne no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulnessse, and liberall heart:
Hot, hot, and moist. This hand of yours requites
A sequester from Liberty: Fasting, and Prayer,
Much Castigation, Exercise deuout,
For heere's a yong, and sweating Diuell heere
That commonly rebels: 'Tis a good hand,
A franke one.

Def. You may (indeed) say so:
For 'twas that hand that gaue away my heart.

Oth. A liberall hand. The hearts of old, gaue hands:
But our new Heraldry is hands, not hearts.

Def. I cannot speake of this:
Come, now your promise.

Oth. What promise, Chuckle?

Def. I haue sent to bid Cassio come speake with you.

Oth. I haue a salt and sorry Rhewme offends me:
Lend me thy Handkerchiefe.

Exit.

Oth. I haue a salt and sorry Rhewme offends me:
Lend me thy Handkerchiefe.

Exit.

Des. How now (good Cassio) what's the newes with you?

Cassio. Madam, my former suite. I do beseech you, That by your vertuous meanes, I may againe Exist, and be a member of his loue, Whom I, with all the Office of my heart Intirely honour, I would not be delayd. If my offence, be of such mortall kinde, That nor my Seruice past, nor present Sorrowes, Nor purpos'd merit in sinuicity, Can ransom me into his loue againe, But to know so, must be my benefit: So shall I cloath me in a forc'd content, And shut my selfe vp in some other course To Fortunes Almes.

Des. Alas (thrice-gentle Cassio) My Aduocation is not now in Tune; My Lord, is not my Lord; nor should I know him, Were he in Favour, as in Humour alter'd. So helpe me every spirit sanctified, As I haue spoken for you all my best, And stood within the blanke of his displeasure For my free speech. You must awhile be patient: What I can do, I will; and more I will Then for my selfe, I dare. Let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my Lord angry?

Emil. He went hence but now: And certainly in strange vnquietnesse.

Iago. Can he be angry? I haue seene the Cannon When it hath blowne his Rankes into the Ayre, And like the Diuell from his very Arme Pufft his owne Brother: And is he angry? Something of moment then: I will go meet him, There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry.

Des. I prythee do so. Something sure of State, Either from Venice, or some vnbatch'd practise Made demonstrable heere in Cyprus, to him, Hath pudled his cleare Spirit: and in such cases, Mens Natures wrangle with inferiour things, Though great ones are their object. 'Tis euen so. For let our finger ake, and it endues Our other healthfull members, euen to a sense Of paine. Nay, we must thinke men are not Gods, Nor of them looke for such obseruancie As fits the Bridall. Beshrew me much, Emilia, I was (vnhandsome Warriour, as I am) Arraigning his vnkindnesse with my soule: But now I finde, I had suborn'd the Witness, And he's Indited falsely.

Emil. Pray heauen it bee State matters, as you thinke, and no Conception, Nor no lealous Toy, concerning you.

Des. Alas the day, I neuer gaue him cause.

Emil. But lealous soules will not be answer'd so; They are not euer lealous for the cause, But lealous; for they're lealous. It is a Monster Begot vpon it selfe, borne on it selfe.

Des. Heauen keepe the Monster from Othello's mind.

Emil. Lady, Amen.

Des. I will go seeke him. Cassio, walke heere about: If I doe finde him sit, Ile moue your suite, And seeke to effect it to my vttermost.

Cas. I humbly thanke your Ladyship.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. 'Saue you (Friend Cassio.)

Cassio. What make you from home?

How is't with you, my most faire Bianca?

Indeed (sweet Loue) I was comming to your house. Bian. And I was going to your Lodging, Cassio. What? keepe a weeke away? Seven dayes, and Nights? Eight score eight houres? And Louers absent howres More tedious then the Diall, eight score times? Oh weary reck'ning.

Cassio. Pardon me, Bianca:

I haue this while with leaden thoughts bene prest, But I shall in a more continuat time Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca Take me this worke out.

Bianca. Oh Cassio, whence came this? This is some Token from a newer Friend, To the felt-Absence: now I feele a Cause: It's come to this? Well, well.

Cassio. Go too, woman:

Throw your vild gesses in the Diuels teeth, From whence you haue them. You are iealous now, That this is from some Mistis, some remembrance; No, in good troth Bianca.

Bian. Why, who's it is?

Cassio. I know not neither:

I found it in my Chamber, I like the worke well; Ere it be demanded (As like enough it will) I would haue it coppied: Take it, and doe't, and leaue me for this time.

Bian. Leaue you? Wherefore?

Cassio. I do attend heere on the Generall, And thinke it no addition nor my wish To haue him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cassio. Not that I loue you not.

Bian. But that you do not loue me.

I pray you bring me on the way a little,

And say, if I shall see you soone at night?

Cassio. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you, For I attend heere: But Ile see you soone.

Bian. 'Tis very good: I must be circumspect, Exit

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Iago. Will you thinke so?

Oth. Thinke so, Iago?

Iago. What, to kisse in priuate?

Oth. An vnauthoriz'd kisse?

Iago. Or to be naked with her Friend in bed, An houre, or more, nor meaning any harme? Oth. Naked in bed (Iago) and not meane harme? It is hypocrisie against the Diuell:

They that meane vertuously, and yet do so, The Diuell their vertue tempts, and they tempt Heauen.

Iago. If they do nothing, 'tis a Veniall slip:

But if I giue my wife a Handkerchiefe.

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why then 'tis hers (my Lord) and being hers, She may (I thinke) bestow't on any man.

Oth. She is Procreatrice of her honor too:

May she giue that?

Iago.

Iago. Her honor is an Essence that's not seene, They haue it very oft, that haue it not. But for the Handkerchiefe:

Oth. By heauen, I would most gladly haue forgot it:

Thou saidst (oh, it comes ore my memorie,

As doth the Raven ore the infectious house:

Boarding to all) he had my Handkerchiefe.

Iago. I: what of that?

Oth. That's not so good now.

Iago. What if I had said, I had seene him do you wrong?

Or heard him say (as Knaues be such abroad,

Who haue by their owne importunate suit,

Or voluntary dotage of some Mistis,

Conuinc'd or supply'd them, cannot chuse

But they must blab.)

Oth. Hath he said any thing?

Iago. He hath (my Lord) but be you well assur'd,

No more then he'll vn-swear.

Oth. What hath he said?

Iago. Why, that he did: I know not what he did.

Oth. What? What?

Iago. Lye.

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her? On her: what you will.

Oth. Lye with her? Lye on her? We say lye on her,

when they be lye-her. Lye with her: that's fullsome:

Handkerchiefe: Confessions: Handkerchiefe. To con-fesse, and be hang'd for his labour. First, to be hang'd, and then to confesse: I tremble at it. Nature would not inuest her selfe in such shadowing passion, without some Instruction. It is not words that shakes me thus, (pish)

Noses, Eares, and Lipps: is't possible. Confesse? Hand-kerchiefe? O diuell. Falls in a Trance.

Iago. Worke on,

My Medicine workes. Thus credulous Fooles are caught,

And many worthy, and chaste Dames euen thus,

(All guiltlesse) meete reproach: what hoa? My Lord?

My Lord, I say: Othello.

Enter Cassio.

How now Cassio?

Cas. What's the matter?

Iago. My Lord is faine into an Epilepsie,

This is his second Fit: he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the Temples.

Iago. The Lerhargie must haue his quyet course:

If not, he foames at mouth: and by and by

Breakes out to sauage madnesse. Looke, he stirres:

Do you withdraw your selfe a little while,

He will recouer straight: when he is gone,

I would on great occasion, speake with you.

How is it Generall? Haue you not hurt your head?

Oth. Dost thou mocke me?

Iago. I mocke you not, by Heauen:

Would you would beare your Fortune like a Man.

Oth. A Horred man's a Monster, and a Beast.

Iago. Ther's many a Beast then in a populous City,

And many a ciuill Monster.

Oth. Did he confesse it?

Iago. Good Sir, be a man:

Thinke euet' bearded fellow that's but yolk'd

May draw with you. Ther's Millions now aliue,

That nightly lye in those vnproper beds,

Which they dare sweare peculiar. Your case is better.

Oh, 'tis the spight of hell, the Fiends Arch-mock;

To lip a wanton in a secure Cowch;

And to suppose her chaste. No, let me know,

And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. Oh, thou art wise: 'tis certaine.

Iago. Stand you a while apart,

Confine your selfe but in a patient List,

Whil'ft you were heere, ore-whelmed with your griefe

(A passion most resulting such a man)

Cassio came hither. I shifted him away,

And layd good scufes vpon your Extasie,

Bad him anon returne: and heere speake with me,

The which he promis'd. Do but encaue your selfe,

And marke the Fleeces, the Gybes, and notable Scornes

That dwell in euerie Region of his face,

For I will make him tell the Tale anew.

Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when

He hath, and is againe to cope your wife.

I say, but marke his gesture: marry Patience;

Or I shall say y'are all in all in Spicene,

And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou heare, Iago,

I will be found most cunning in my Patience:

But (dost thou heare) most bloody.

Iago. That's not amisse,

But yet keepe time in all: will you withdraw?

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,

A Huswife that by selling her desires

Buyes her selfe Bread, and Cloath. It is a Creature

That dores on Cassio, (as 'tis the Strumpets plague

To be-guile many, and be be-guil'd by one)

He, when he heares of her, cannot restraîne

From the excess of Laughter. Heere he comes.

Enter Cassio.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad:

And his vnbookish Ielousie must conferue

Poore Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behauiours

Quite in the wrong. How do you Lieutenant?

Cas. The worse, that you giue me the addition,

Whole want euen killies me.

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on't:

Now, if this Suit lay in Bianca's dowre,

How quickly should you speed?

Cas. Alas poore Caitiffe.

Oth. Looke how he laughs already.

Iago. T'neuer knew woman loue man so.

Cas. Alas poore Rogue, I thinke indeed she loues me.

Oth. Now he denies it faintly: and laughs it out.

Iago. Do you heare Cassio?

Oth. Now he importunes him

To tell it o're: go too, well said, well said.

Iago. She giues it out, that you shall marry her.

Do you intend it?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. Dost thou triumph, Romaine? do you triumph?

Cas. I marry. What? A customer prythee beare

Some Charitie to my wit, do not thinke it

So vnwholesome. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. So, so, so, so: they laugh, that winnes.

Iago. Why the cry goes, that you marry her.

Cas. Prythee say true.

Iago. I am a very Villaine else.

Oth. Haue you scoar'd me? Well.

Cas. This is the Monkey's owne giuing out:

She is perswaded I will marry her

Out of her owne loue & flattery, not out of my promise.

v v

Othello.

Oth. Iago becomes me: now he begins the story.

Cassio. She was here even now: she haunts me in every place. I was the other day talking on the Seabanke with certaine Venetians, and thither comes the Bauble, and falls me thus about my neck.

Oth. Crying oh deere Cassio, as it were: his iesture imports it.

Cassio. So hangs, and lolls, and weepes vpon me: So shakes, and pulls me. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. Now he tells how she pluckt him to my Chamber: oh, I see that nose of yours, but not that dogge, I shall throw it to.

Cassio. Well, I must leaue her companie.

Iago. Before me: looke where she comes.

Enter Bianca.

Cas. 'Tis such another Fitchew: marry a perfum'd one? What do you meane by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the diuell, and his dam haunt you: what did you meane by that same Handkerchiefe, you gaue me euen now? I was a fine Foole to take it: I must take out the worke? A likely piece of worke, that you should finde it in your Chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some Minxes token, & I must take out the worke? There, giue it your Hobby-horse, wherefoeuer you had it, Ile take out no worke on't.

Cassio. How now, my sweete Bianca?

How now? How now?

Oth. By Heauen, that should be my Handkerchiefe.

Bian. If you'll come to supper to night you may, if you will not, come when you are next prepar'd for. Exit

Iago. After her: after her.

Cas. I must, she'll rayle in the streets else.

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cassio. Yes, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you: for I would verie faine speake with you.

Cas. Prythee come: will you?

Iago. Go too: say no more.

Oth. How shall I murther him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceiue how he laugh'd at his vice?

Oth. Oh, Iago.

Iago. And did you see the Handkerchiefe?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours by this hand: and to see how he prizes the foolish woman your wife: she gaue it him, and he hath giu'n it his whore.

Oth. I would haue him nine yeeres a killing:

A fine woman, a faire woman, a sweete woman?

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Othello. I let her rot and perish, and be damn'd to night, for she shall not liue. No, my heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Oh, the world hath not a sweeter Creature: she might lye by an Emperours side, and command him Taskes.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her, I do but say what she is: so delicate with her Needle: an admirable Musitian. Oh she will sing the Sauvagenesse out of a Beare: of so high and plentiful wit, and invention?

Iago. She's the worke for all this.

Oth. Oh, a thousand, a thousand times:

And then of so gentle a condition?

Iago. Too gentle.

Oth. Nay that's certaine:

But yet the pittie of it, Iago: oh Iago, the pittie of it

Iago.

If you are so fond ouer her iniquitie: giue her patent to offend, for if it touch not you, it comes neere nobody.

Oth. I will chop her into Messes: Cuckold me?

Iago. Oh, 'tis foule in her.

Oth. With mine Officer?

Iago. That's fouler.

Oth. Get me some poyson, Iago, this night. Ile not expostulate with her: least her body and beautie vnprouide my mind againe: this night Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poyson, strangle her in her bed, Euen the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good:

The iustice of it pleases: very good.

Iago. And for Cassio, let me be his vnder-taker:

You shall heare more by midnight.

Enter Lodonico, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Oth. Excellent good: What Trumpet is that same?

Iago. I warrant something from Venice,

'Tis Lodonico, this, comes from the Duke.

See, your wife's with him.

Lodo. Saue you worthy Generall.

Oth. With all my heart Sir.

Lod. The Duke, and the Senators of Venice greet you.

Oth. I kisse the Instrument of their pleasures.

Des. And what's the newes, good cozen Lodonico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you Signior:

Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thanke you: how do's Lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Liues Sir,

Des. Cozen, there's false betweene him, & my Lord, An vkind breach: but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My Lord?

Oth. This faile you not to do, as you will

Lod. He did not call: he's busie in the paper,

Is there deuision twixt my Lord, and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one: I would do much T'attonethem, for the loue I beare to Cassio.

Oth. Fire, and brimstone.

Des. My Lord,

Oth. Are you wife?

Des. What is he angrie?

Lod. May be th' Letter mou'd him.

For as I thinke, they do command him home,

Deputing Cassio in his Government.

Des. Trust me, I am glad on't.

Oth. Indeed?

Des. My Lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. Why, sweete Othello?

Oth. Diuell.

Des. I haue not deseru'd this.

Lod. My Lord, this would not be beleeu'd in Venice, Though I should sweare I saw't, 'Tis very much,

Make her amends: she weepes.

Oth. Oh diuell, diuell:

If that the Earth could teeme with womans teares, Each drop she falls, would proue a Crocodile:

Out of my sight.

Des. I will not stay to offend you.

Lod. Truly obedient Lady:

I do beseech your Lordship call her backe.

Oth.

Oth. Mistris.

Des. My Lord.

Oth. What would you with her, Sir?

Lod. Who I, my Lord?

Oth. I, you did wish, that I would make her turne:

Sir, she can turne, and turne: and yet go on

And turne againe. And she can weepe, Sir, weepe.

And she's obedient: as you say obedient.

Very obedient: proceed you in your teares.

Concerning this Sir, (oh well-painted passion)

I am commanded home: get you away:

Ile send for you anon. Sir I obey the Mandate,

And will returne to Venice. Hence, auant:

Cassio shall haue my Place. And Sir, to night

I do entreat, that we may sup together.

You are welcome Sir to Cyprus.

Goates, and Monkeys.

Exit.

Lod. Is this the Noble Moore, whom our full Senate

Call all in all sufficient? Is this the Nature

Whom Passion could not shake? Whose solid vertue

The shot of Accident, nor dart of Chance

Could neither graze, nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.

Lod. Are his wits safe? Is he not light of Braine?

Iago. He's that he is: I may not breath my censure.

What he might be if what he might, he is not,

I would to heauen he were.

Lod. What? Strike his wife?

Iago. 'Faith that was not so well: yet would I knew

That stroke would proue the worst.

Lod. Is it his wife?

Or did the Letters, worke vpon his blood,

And new create his fault?

Iago. Alas, alas:

It is not honestie in me to speake

What I haue scene, and knowne. You shall obserue him,

And his owne courses will deonte him so,

That I may fane my speech: do but go after

And marke how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry that I am deceiu'd in him. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Emilia.

Oth. You haue scene nothing then?

Emil. Nor euer heard: nor euer did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you haue scene Cassio, and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harme: and then I heard,

Each syllable that breath made vp betweene them.

Oth. What? Did they neuer whisper?

Emil. Neuer my Lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o'th way?

Emil. Neuer.

Oth. To fetch her Fan, her Gloues, her Mask, nor no-

Emil. Neuer my Lord. (thing?)

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst (my Lord) to wager, she is honest:

Lay downe my Soule at stake: If you thinke other,

Remoue your thought. It doth abuse your bosome:

If any wretch haue put this in your head,

Let Heauen requit it with the Serpents curse,

For if she be not honest, chaste, and true, There's no man happy. The purest of their Wiues Is foule as Slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither: go. Exit Emilia.

She saies enough: yet she's a simple Baud

That cannot say as much: This is a subtile Whore:

A Closset Locke and Key of Villanous Secrets,

And yet she'll kneele, and pray: I haue scene her do't.

Enter Desdemona, and Emilia.

Des. My Lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray you Chucke come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes: looke in my face.

Des. What horrible Fancie's this?

Oth. Some of your Function Mistris:

Leave Procreants alone, and shut the doore:

Cough, or cry hem; if any body come:

Your Mystery, your Mystery: May dispatch. Exit Emilia.

Des. Vpon my knee, what doth your speech import?

I vnderstand a Fury in your words.

Oth. Why? What art thou?

Des. Your wisemy Lord: your true and loyall wife.

Othello. Come sweare it: damne thy selfe, least being like one of Heauen, the diuels themselues should fear to ceaze thee. Therefore be double damn'd: sweare thou art honest.

Des. Heauen doth truly know it.

Oth. Heauen truly knowes, that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom my Lord?

With whom? How am I false?

Oth. Ah Desdemona, away, away, away!

Des. Alas the heavy day: why do you weepe?

Am I the motiue of these teares my Lord?

If happily you my Father do suspect,

An Instrument of this your calling backe,

Lay not your blame on me: if you haue lost him,

I haue lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleas'd Heauen,

To try me with Affliction, had they rain'd

All kind of Sores, and Shames on my bare-head:

Steep'd me in pouertie to the very lippes,

Giuen to Captiuitie, me, and my utmost hopes,

I should haue found in some place of my Soule

A drop of patience. But alas, to make me

The fixed Figure for the time of Scorne,

To point his flow, and mouing finger at,

Yet could I beare that too, well, very well:

But there where I haue garner'd vp my heart,

Where either I must liue, or beare no life,

The Fountaine from the which my currant runnes,

Or else dries vp: to be discarded thence,

Or keepe it as a Cestne, for foule Toades

To knot and gender in. Turne thy complexion there:

Patience, thou young and Rose-lip'd Cherubin,

I heere looke grim as hell.

Des. I hope my Noble Lord esteemes me honest.

Oth. Oh I, as Sommer Flyes are in the Shambles,

That quicken euen with blowing. Oh thou weed:

Who art so louely faire, and smell'st so sweete,

That the Sense akes at thee,

Would thou had'st neuer bin borne.

Des. Alas, what ignorant sin haue I committed?

Oth. Was this faire Paper? This most goodly Booke

Made to write Whore vpon? What committed,

v v 2

Com.

Committed? Oh, thou publicke Commoner,
I should make very Forges of my cheekes,
That would to Cynders burne vp Modestie.
Did I but speake thy deedes. What committed?
Heauen stoppes the Nose at it, and the Moone winks:
The bawdy winde that kisses all it meeteres,
Is hush'd within the hollow Myne of Earth
And will not hear't. What committed?
Des. By Heauen you do me wrong.
Oth. Are not you a Strumpet?
Des. No, as I am a Christian.
If to preferue this vessell for my Lord,
From any other foule vnlawfull touch
Be not to be a Strumpet, I am none.
Oth. What, not a Whore?
Des. No, as I shall be sau'd.
Oth. Is't possible?
Des. Oh Heauen forgive vs.
Oth. I cry you mercy then.

I tooke you for that cunning Whore of Venice,
That married with Othello. You Mistis,
Enter Emilia.

That haue the office opposite to Saint Peter,
And keepes the gate of hell. You, you: I you.
We haue done our course: there's money for your paines:
I pray you turne the key, and keepe our counsaile. Exit.
Emil. Alas, what do's this Gentleman conceiue?
How do you Madam? how do you my good Lady?

Des. Faith, halfe a sleepe.
Emil. Good Madam,
What's the matter with my Lord?
Des. With who?
Emil. Why, with my Lord, Madam?
Des. Who is thy Lord?
Emil. He that is yours, sweet Lady.
Des. I haue none: do not talke to me, Emilia,
I cannot weepe: nor answeres haue I none,
But what should go by water. Prythee to night,
Lay on my bed my wedding sheetes, remember,
And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Heere's a change indeed. Exit.
Des. 'Tis meete I should be vs'd so: very meete.
How haue I bin behau'd, that he might sticke
The small'st opinion in my least mis'de?

Enter Iago, and Emilia.

Iago. What is your pleasure Madam?
How is't with you?
Des. I cannot tell: those that do teach yong Babes
Do it with gentle meanes, and easie taskes.
He might haue chid me so: for in good faith
I am a Child to chiding.

Iago. What is the matter Lady?
Emil. Alas (Iago) my Lord hath so bewhor'd her,
Throwne such dispight, and heavy termes vpon her
That true hearts cannot beare it.

Des. Am I that name, Iago?
Iago. What name, (faire Lady?)
Des. Such as she said my Lord did say I was.
Emil. He call'd her whore: a Begger in his drinke:
Could not haue laid such termes vpon his Caller.
Iago. Why did he so?
Des. I do not know: I am sure I am none such.
Iago. Do not weepe, do not weepe: alas the day.
Emil. Hath she forlooke so many Noble Matches?
Her Father? And her Country? And her Friends?

To be call'd Whore? Would it not make one weepe?
Des. It is my wretched Fortune.

Iago. Bewhore him for't:
How comes this Tricke vpon him?
Des. Nay, Heauen doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternall Villaine,
Some busie and insinuating Rogue,
Some cogging, cozening Slaue, to get some Office,
Haue not deuiz'd this Slander: I will be hang'd else.
Iago. Fie, there is no such man: it is impossible.
Des. If any such there be, Heauen pardon him.
Emil. A halter pardon him:

And hell gnaw his bones.
Why should he call her Whore?
Who keeps her companie?
What Place? What Time?
What Forme? What liklyhood?
The Moore's abus'd by some most villanous Knaue,
Some base notorious Knaue, some scurvy Fellow.
Oh Heauens, that such companions shou'd vnfold,
And put in euery honest hand a whip
To lash the Rascalls naked through the world,
Euen from the East to th' West.

Iago. Speake within doore.
Emil. Oh sie vpon them: some such Squire he was
That turn'd your wit, the feamy-side withour,
And made you to suspect me with the Moore.
Iago. You are a Poole: go too.

Des. Alas Iago,
What shall I do to win my Lord againe?
Good Friend, go to him: for by this light of Heauen,
I know not how I lost him. Heere I kneele:
If ere my will did trespass 'gainst his Loue,
Either in discourse of thought, or a ctuall deed,
Or that mine Eyes, mine Eares, or any Sence
Delighted them: or any other Forme.
Or that I do not yet, and euer did,
And euer will, (though he do shake me off
To beggerly diuorcement) Loue him deately,
Comfort forweare me. Vnkindnesse may do much,
And his vnkindnesse may defeat my life,
But neuer raynt my Loue. I cannot say Whore,
It do's abhorre me now I speake the word,
To do the Act, that might the addition earne,
Not the worlds Masse of vanitie could make me.

Iago. I pray you be content: 'tis but his humour:
The businesse of the State do's him offence.
Des. If 'twere no other.

Iago. It is but so, I warrant,
Hearke how these Instruments summon to supper:
The Messengers of Venice staies the meare,
Go in, and weepe not: all things shall be well.

Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.

Enter Rodorigo.

How now Rodorigo?
Rod. I do not finde
That thou deal'st iustly with me.
Iago. What in the contrarie?
Rodori. Euery day thou darts me with some deuise Iago, and rather, as it seemes to me now, keep'st from me all conueniencie, then suppliest me with the least aduantage of hope: I will indeed no longer endure it. Nor am I yet perswaded to put vp in peace, what already I haue foolishly suffred.

Iago. Will you heare me Rodorigo?

Rodori. I

Scena Tertia.

Enter Othello, Lodouico, Desdemona, Emilia,
and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you Sir, trouble your selfe no further.
Oth. Oh pardon me: 'twill do me good to walke.
Lodoni. Madam, good night: I humbly thanke your Ladyship.

Des. Your Honour is most welcome.
Oth. Will you walke Sir? Oh Desdemona.
Des. My Lord.
Othello. Get you to bed on th' instant, I will be re-turn'd forthwith: dismiss your Attendant there: look't be done. Exit.

Des. I will my Lord.
Em. How goes it now? He lookes gentler then he did.
Des. He saies he will returne incontinent,
And hath commanded me to go to bed,
And bid me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me?
Des. It was his bidding: therefore good Emilia,
Giue me my nightgowne, and adieu.
We must not now displease him.

Emil. I, would you had neuer scene him.
Des. So would not I: my loue doth so approue him,
That euen his stubbornesse, his checks, his frownes,
(Prythee vn-pin me) haue grace and fauour.

Emil. I haue laid those Sheetes you bad me on the bed.
Des. All's one: good Father, how foolish are our minds:
If I do die before, prythee throw'd me
In one of these same Sheetes.

Emil. Come, come: you talke.
Des. My Mother had a Maid call'd Barbarie,
She was in loue: and he she lou'd prou'd mad,
And did forsake her. She had a Song of Willough,
An old thing 'twas: but it express'd her Fortune,
And she dy'd fingring it. That Song to night,
Will not go from my mind: I haue much to do,
But to go hang my head all at one side
And sing it like poore Barbarie: prythee dispatch.

Emil. Shall I go fetch your Night-gowne?
Des. No, vn-pin me here,
This Lodouico is a proper man.
Emil. A very handsome man.
Des. He speakes well.

Emil. I know a Lady in Venice would haue walk'd barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip.
Des. The poore Soule sat singing by a Sicamour tree,
Sing all a greene Willough:

Her hand on her bosome her head on her knee,
Sing Willough, Willough, Willough.
The fresh Streames ran by her, and murmur'd her moanes
Sing Willough, &c.
Her salt teares fell from her, and sofin'd the stones,
Sing Willough, &c. (Lay by these)
Willough, Willough. (Prythee high thee: he'll come anon)
Sing all a greene Willough must be my Garland.
Let no body blame him, his scorne I approue.
(Nay that's not next. Harke, who is't that knocks?)

Emil. It's the wind.
Des. I call'd my Loue false Lone: but what said he then?
Sing Willough, &c.
If I court mo women you'lle couch with mo men.

v v 3

So

So get thee gone, good night: mine eyes do itch:
Doth that boade weeping?

Emil. 'Tis neyther heere, nor there.

Des. I haue heard it said so. O these Men, these men!
Do'st thou in conscience thinke (tell me Emilia)
That there be women do abuse their husbands
In such grosse kinde?

Emil. There be some such, no question.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. Why, would not you?

Des. No, by this Heauenly light.

Emil. Nor I neither, by this Heauenly light:
I might doo't as well i'th darke.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. The world's a huge thing:

It is a great price, for a small vice.

Des. Introth, I thinke thou would'st not.

Emil. Introth I thinke I should, and vndoo't when I had done: Marry, I would not doe such a thing for a ioynt Ring, nor for measures of Lawne, nor for Gownes, Petticoats, nor Caps, nor any petty exhibition. But for all the whole world: why, who would not make her husband a Cuckold, to make him a Monarch? I should venture Purgatory for't.

Des. Beshrew me, if I would do such a wrong
For the whole world.

Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong i'th world;
and hauing the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in your owne world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not thinke there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen: and as many to'th vantage, as would store the world they plaid for.
But I do thinke it is their Husbands faultes
If Wiues do fall: (Say, that they slacke their duties,
And powre our Treasures into forraigne laps;
Or else breake out in peeuish Icalouies,
Throwing restraint vpon vs: Or say they strike vs,
Or scant our former hauing in despight)
Why we haue galles: and though we haue some Grace,
Yet haue we some Reuenge. Let Husbands know,
Their wiues haue sence like them: They see, and smell,
And haue their Palats both for sweet, and sowre,
As Husbands haue. What is it that they do,
When they change vs for others? Is it Sport?
I thinke it is: and doth Affection breed it?
I thinke it doth. Is't Frailty that thus erres?
It is so too. And haue not we Affections?
Desires for Sport? and Frailty, as men haue?
Then let them vse vs well: else let them know,
The illes we do, their illes instruct vs so.

Des. Good night, good night:
Heauen me such vices send,
Not to picke bad, from bad; but by bad, mend. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Iago, and Rodorigo.

Iago. Heere, stand behinde this Barke,
Straight will he come:
Weare thy good Rapier bare, and put it home:
Quicke, quicke, feare nothing; Ile be at thy Elbow,
It makes vs, or it marres vs, thinke on that,
And fixe most firme thy Resolution.

Rod. Be neere at hand, I may miscarry in't:
Iago. Heere, at thy hand: Be bold, & take thy stand.
Rod. I haue no great deuotion to the deed,
And yet he hath giuen me satisfying Reasons:
'Tis but a man gone. Forth my Sword: he dies.

Iago. I haue rub'd this yong Quat almost to the sence,
And he growes angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,
Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Euery way makes my gaine. Liue Rodorigo,
He calles me to a restitution large
Of Gold, and Jewels, that I bob'd from him,
As Guists to Desdemona.
It must not be: if Cassio do renaine,
He hath a dayly beauty in his life,
That makes me vgly: and besides, the Moore
May vnfold me to him: there stand I in much perill:
No, he must dye. But so, I heard him coming.

Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gate, 'tis he: Villaine thou dyest.
Cas. That thrust had bene mine enemy indeed,
But that my Coate is better then thou know'st:
I will make proofe of thine.

Rod. Oh, I am slaine.

Cassio. I am maym'd for euer:

Helpe hoa: Murder, murder.

Enter Othello.

Oth. The voyce of Cassio, Iago keepes his word.

Rod. O Villaine that I am.

Oth. It is euen so.

Cas. Oh helpe hoa: Light, a Surgeon.

Oth. 'Tis he: O braue Iago, honest, and iust,
That hast such Noble sence of thy Friends wrong,
Thou teachest me. Minion, your deere lyes dead,
And your vnblest Fate highes: Strumpet I come:
For of my heart, those Charmes thine Eyes, are blotted.
Thy Bed lust-stain'd, shall with Luffs blood be spotted.

Exit Othello.

Enter Lodouico and Gratiano.

Cas. What hoa? no Watch? No passage?

Murder, Murder.

Gra. 'Tis some mischance, the voyce is very direfull.

Cas. Oh helpe.

Lodo. Hearke.

Rod. Oh wretched Villaine.

Lod. Two or three groane. 'Tis heavy night;

These may be counterfeits: Let's thinke't vn safe

To come into the cry, without more helpe.

Rod. Nobody come: then shall I bleed to death.

Enter Iago.

Lod. Hearke.

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with Light, and Weapons.

Iago. Who's there?

Who's noyse is this that cries on murder?

Lodo. We do not know.

Iago. Do not you heare a cry?

Cas. Heere, heere: for heauen sake helpe me.

Iago. What's the matter?

Gra. This is Othello's Ancient, as I take it.

Lodo. The same indeede, a very valiant Fellow.

Iago. What are you heere, that cry so greuously?

Cas. Iago? Oh I am spoyl'd, vndone by Villaines:

Giue me some helpe.

Iago. O mee, Lieutenant!

What Villaines haue done thus?

Cas. I thinke that one of them is heereabout,

And

And cannot make away.

Iago. Oh treacherous Villaines:

What are you there? Come in, and giue some helpe.

Rod. O helpe me there.

Cassio. That's one of them.

Iago. Oh murd'rous Slaue! O Villaine!

Rod. O dam'd Iago! O inhumane Dogge!

Iago. Kill men i'th darke?

Where be these bloody Theeues?

How silent is this Towne? Hoa, murder, murder.

What may you be? Are you of good, or euill?

Lod. As you shall proue vs, praise vs.

Iago. Signior Lodouico?

Lod. He Sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy: here's Cassio hurt by Villaines.

Gra. Cassio?

Iago. How is't Brother?

Cas. My Legge is cut in two.

Iago. Marry heauen forbid:

Light Gentlemen, Ile binde it with my shirt.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. What is the matter hoa? Who is't that cry'd?

Iago. Who is't that cry'd?

Bian. Oh my deere Cassio,

My sweet Cassio: Oh Cassio, Cassio, Cassio.

Iago. O notable Strumpet. Cassio, may you suspect

Who they should be, that haue thus mangled you?

Cas. No.

Gra. I am sorry to finde you thus;

I haue bene to seeke you.

Iago. Lend me a Garter. So:— Oh for a Chaire

To beare him easily hence.

Bian. Alas the faints. Oh Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this Trass

To be a party in this Iouirie.

Patience awhile, good Cassio. Come, come;

Lend me a Light: know we this face, or no?

Alas my Friend, and my deere Countryman

Rodorigo? No: Yes sure: Yes, 'tis Rodorigo.

Gra. What, of Venice?

Iago. Euen he Sir: Did you know him?

Gra. Know him? I.

Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry your gentle pardon:

These bloody accidents must excuse my Manners,

That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you Cassio? Oh, a Chaire, a Chaire.

Gra. Rodorigo?

Iago. He, he, 'tis he:

Oh that's well said, the Chaire.

Some good man beare him carefully from hence,

Ile fetch the Generall's Surgeon. For you Mistris,

Saue you your labour. He that lies slaine heere (Cassio)

Was my deere friend. What malice was between you?

Cas. None in the world: nor do I know the man?

Iago. What? looke you pale? Oh beare him o'th' Ayre.

Stay you good Gentlemen. Looke you pale, Mistris?

Do you perceiue the gassnesse of her eye?

Nay, if you stare, we shall heare more anon.

Behold her well: I pray you looke vpon her:

Do you see Gentlemen? Nay, guiltinesse will speake

Though tongues were out of vse.

Emil. Alas, what is the matter?

What is the matter, Husband?

Iago. Cassio hath heere bin set on in the darke

By Rodorigo, and Fellowes that are scap'd:

He's almost slaine, and Rodorigo quite dead.

Emil. Alas good Gentleman: alas good Cassio!

Iago. This is the fruits of whoring. Prythe Emilia,

Go know of Cassio where he slept to night;

What, do you shake at that?

Bian. He slept at my house, but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O did he so? I charge you go with me.

Emil. Oh fie vpon thee Strumpet.

Bian. I am no Strumpet, but of life as honest,

As you that thus abuse me.

Emil. As? Fie vpon thee.

Iago. Kinde Gentlemen:

Let's go see poore Cassio drest.

Come Mistris, you must tel's another Tale.

Emilia, run you to the Cittadell,

And tell my Lord and Lady, what hath happ'd:

Will you go on afore? This is the night

That either makes me, or foredoes me quight. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Desdemona in her bed.

Oth. It is the Cause, it is the Cause (my Soule)

Let me not name it to you, you chaste Starres,

'Tis the Cause. Yet Ile not shed her blood,

Nor scarre that whiter skin of hers, then Snow,

And smooth as Monumentall Alabaster:

Yet she must dye, else shee'l betray more men:

Put out the Light, and then put out the Light;

If I quench thee, thou flaming Minister,

I can againe thy former light restore,

Should I repent me. But once put out thy Light,

Thou canst not Pattern of excelling Nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heate

That can thy Light re-Lume.

When I have pluck'd thy Rose,

I cannot giue it vitall growth againe,

It needs must wither. Ile smell thee on the Tree.

Oh Balmy breath, that dost almost perswade

Iustice to breake her Sword. One more, one more:

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,

And loue thee after. One more, and that's the last.

So sweet, was ne're so fatall. I must weepe,

But they are cruell Teares: This sorrow's heauenly,

It strikes, where it doth loue. She wakes.

Des. Who's there? Othello?

Oth. I Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my Lord?

Oth. Haue you pray'd to night, Desdemona?

Des. I my Lord.

Oth. If you bebinke your selfe of any Crime

Vnreconcil'd as yet to Heauen, and Grace,

Solicite for it straight.

Des. Alacke, my Lord,

What may you meane by that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be breefe, I will walke by:

I would not kill thy vnprepared Spirit,

No, Heavens fore-fend: I would not kill thy Soule.

Des. Talker you of killing?

Oth. I, I do.

Des. Then Heauen haue mercy on mee.

Oth.

Oth. Amen, with all my heart.
 Des. If you say, I hope you will not kill me.
 Oth. Humb.
 Des. And yet I feare you: for you're farall then
 When your eyes rowle fo.
 Why I should feare, I know not,
 Since guiltinesse I know not: But yet I feele I feare.
 Oth. Thinke on thy finnes.
 Des. They are Loues I beare to you.
 Oth. I, and for that thou dy'st.
 Des. That death's vnnaturall, that kills for louing.
 Alas, why gnaw you so your nether-lip?
 Some bloody passion shakes your very Frame:
 These are portents: but yet I hope, I hope,
 They do not point on me.
 Oth. Peace, and be still.
 Des. I will so: What's the matter?
 Oth. That Handkerchiefe
 Which I so lou'd, and gaue thee, thou gau'st to Cassio.
 Des. No by my Life, and Soule: send for the man,
 And aske him.
 Oth. Sweet Soule, take heed, take heed of Periury,
 Thou art on thy death-bed.
 Des. I, but not yet to dye.
 Oth. Presently.
 Therefore confesse thee freely of thy sinne:
 For to deny each Article with Oath,
 Cannot remoue, nor choake the strong Conception
 That I do grone withall. Thou art to dye.
 Des. O Heauen haue mercy on me.
 Oth. I say, Amen.
 Des. And haue you merrey too. I neuer did
 Offend you in my life: neuer lou'd Cassio,
 But with such generall warrant of Heauen,
 As I might loue. I neuer gaue him Token.
 Oth. By Heauen I saw my Handkerchiefe in's hand.
 O periur'd woman, thou do'st stone my heart,
 And makes me call, what I intend to do,
 A Murther, which I thought a Sacrifice.
 I saw the Handkerchiefe.
 Des. He found it then:
 I neuer gaue it him: Send, for him hither:
 Let him confesse a truth.
 Oth. He hath confest.
 Des. What, my Lord?
 Oth. That he hath vs'd thee.
 Des. How? vnlawfully?
 Oth. I.
 Des. He will not say so.
 Oth. No: his mouth is stopp'd:
 Honest Iago hath'ane order for't.
 Des. Oh, my feare interprets. What is he dead?
 Oth. Had all his haire bin liues, my great Reuenge
 Had stomacke for them all.
 Des. Alas, he is betray'd, and I vndone.
 Oth. Out Strumpet: weep'st thou for him to my face?
 Des. O banish me, my Lord, but kill me not.
 Oth. Downe Strumpet.
 Des. Kill me to morrow, let me liue to night.
 Oth. Nay, if you striue.
 Des. But halfe an houre.
 Oth. Bring done, there is no pawse.
 Des. But while I say one prayer.
 Oth. It is too late. Smotheres her.
Emilia at the doore.
 Emil. My Lord, my Lord? What hoa?

My Lord, my Lord.
 Oth. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?
 I that am cruell, am yet mercifull,
 I would not haue thee linger in thy paine?
 So, so.
 Emil. within. What hoa? my Lord, my Lord?
 Oth. Who's there?
 Emil. Oh good my Lord, I would speake a word with you.
 Oth. Yes: 'Tis Emilia: by and by. Shee's dead.
 'Tis like she comes to speake of Cassio's death:
 The noise was high. Hah, no more moouing?
 Still as the Graue. Shall she come in? Wert good?
 I thinke she stirres againe. No, what's best to do?
 If she come in, shee'l sure speake to my wife:
 My wife, my wife: what wife? I haue no wife.
 Oh insupportable! Oh heauy houre!
 Me thinks, it should be now a huge Eclipse!
 Of Sunne, and Moone; and that th'affrighted Globe
 Did yawne at Alteration.
 Emil. I do beseech you
 That I may speake with you. Oh good my Lord,
 Oth. I had forgot thee: oh come in Emilia.
 Soft, by and by, let me the Curtaines draw.
 Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now?
Enter Emilia.
 Emil. Oh my good Lord, yonders soule Murthers done.
 Oth. What? now?
 Emil. But now, my Lord.
 Oth. It is the very error of the Moone,
 She comes more neerer Earth then she was wont,
 And makes men mad.
 Emil. Cassio, my Lord, hath kill'd
 A young Venetian, call'd Rodorigo.
 Oth. Rodorigo kill'd? and Cassio kill'd?
 Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.
 Oth. Not Cassio kill'd? Then Murther's out of tune,
 And sweet Reuenge growes harsh.
 Des. O falsely, falsely murder'd.
 Emil. Alas! what cry is that?
 Oth. That? What?
 Emil. Out and alas, that was my Ladies voice,
 Helpe, helpe hoa, helpe. Oh Ladie speake againe,
 Sweet Desdemona, oh sweet Mistis, speake.
 Des. A guiltlesse death, I dye.
 Emil. Oh who hath done this deed?
 Des. No body: I my selfe, farewell:
 Commend me to my kinde Lord: oh farewell.
 Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd?
 Emil. Alas: who knowes?
 Oth. You heare her say her selfe, it was not I.
 Emil. She said so: I must needs report the truth.
 Oth. She's like a Liar gone to burning hell,
 'Twas I that kill'd her.
 Emil. Oh the more Angell she, and you the blacker Diuell.
 Oth. She turn'd to folly: and she was a whore.
 Emil. Thou do'st bely her, and thou art a diuell.
 Oth. She was false as water.
 Emil. Thou art rash as fire, to say
 That she was false. Oh she was heauenly true.
 Oth. Cassio did top her: Ask thy husband else.
 O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell!
 But that I did proceed vpon iust grounds
 To this extremity. Thy Husband knew it all.

Emil. My Husband? within. Emilia, Emilia!
 Oth. Thy Husband? within. Emilia, Emilia!
 Emil. That she was false to Wedlocke.
 Oth. I, with Cassio: had she bin true,
 If Heauen would make me such another world,
 Of one entyre and perfecte Chrysolite,
 I'd not haue sold her for it.
 Emil. My Husband?
 Oth. I, 'twas he that told me on her first,
 An honest man he is, and hates the flime
 That sticke on filthy deeds.
 Emil. My Husband?
 Oth. What needs this itterance, Woman?
 I say, thy Husband.
 Emil. Oh Mistis,
 Villany hath made mockes with Ioue:
 My Husband say she was false?
 Oth. He, Woman;
 I say thy Husband: Do'st vnderstand the word?
 My Friend, thy Husband; honest, honest Iago.
 Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious Soule
 Rot halfe a graine a day: he lyes to th'heart,
 She was too fond of her most filthy Bargaine.
 Oth. Hah?
 Emil. Do thy worst:
 This deece of thine is no more worthy Heauen,
 Then thou wast worthy her.
 Oth. Peace, you were best.
 Emil. Thou hast not halfe that powre to do me harm,
 As I haue to be hurt. Oh Gull, oh dolt,
 As ignorant as durt: thou hast done a deed
 (I care not for thy Sword) Ile make thee know,
 Though I lost twenty liues. Helpe, helpe, hoa, helpe:
 The Moore hath kill'd my Mistis. Murther, murther.
Enter Montano, Gratiano, and Iago.
 Mon. What is the matter? How now Generall?
 Emil. Oh, are you come, Iago: you haue done well,
 That men must lay their Murthers on your necke.
 Gra. What is the matter?
 Emil. Disproue this Villaine, if thou bee'st a man:
 He sayes, thou told'st him that his wife was false:
 I know thou did'st not: thou'rt not such a Villain.
 Speake, for my heart is full.
 Iago. I told him what I thought,
 And told no more
 Then what he found himselfe was apt, and true.
 Emil. But did you euer tell him,
 She was false?
 Iago. I did.
 Emil. You told a Lye an odious damned Lye:
 Vpon my Soule, a Lye; a wicked Lye.
 Shee false with Cassio?
 Did you say with Cassio?
 Iago. With Cassio, Mistis?
 Go too, charme your tongue.
 Emil. I will not charme my Tongue;
 I am bound to speake,
 My Mistis heere lyes murder'd in her bed.
 All. Oh Heauens, forefend.
 Emil. And your reports haue set the Murder on.
 Othello. Nay stare not Masters,
 It is true indeede.
 Gra. 'Tis a strange Truth.
 Mon. O monstrous Acte.

Emil. Villany, villany, villany:
 I thinke vpon't, I thinke: I smelt: O Villany!
 I thought so then: Ile kill my selfe for greefe.
 O villany! villany!
 Iago. What, are you mad?
 I charge you get you home.
 Emil. Good Gentlemen, let me haue leave to speake:
 'Tis proper I obey him; but not now:
 Perchance Iago, I will ne're go home.
 Oth. Oh, oh, oh.
 Emil. Nay, lay thee downe, and reare:
 For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
 That ere did lift vp eye.
 Oth. Oh she was fowle!
 I scarce did know you Vnkle, there lies your Neece,
 Whose breath (indeed) these hands haue newly stopp'd:
 I know this acte shewes horrible and grim.
 Gra. Poore Desdemona:
 I am glad thy Father's dead,
 Thy Match was mortall to him: and pure greefe
 Shore his old thred in twaine. Did he liue now,
 This sight would make him do a desperate turne:
 Yea, curse his better Angell from his side,
 And fall to Reprobance.
 Oth. 'Tis pittifull: but yet Iago knowes
 That she with Cassio, hath the Act of shame,
 A thousand times committed. Cassio confest it,
 And she did gratifie his amorous workes
 With that Recognizance and pledge of Loue
 Which I first gaue her: I saw it in his hand:
 It was a Handkerchiefe, an Antique Token
 My Father gaue my Mother.
 Emil. Oh Heauen! oh heauenly Powres!
 Iago. Come, hold your peace.
 Emil. 'Twill out, 'twill out, I peace?
 No, I will speake as liberall as the North;
 Let Heauen, and Men, and Diuels, let them all,
 All, all, crie shame against me, yet Ile speake.
 Iago. Be wise, and get you home.
 Emil. I will not.
 Gra. Fye, your Sword vpon a Woman.
 Emil. Oh thou dull Moore,
 That Handkerchiefe thou speak'st of
 I found by Fortune, and did giue my Husband:
 For often, with a solemne earnestnesse,
 (More then indeed belong'd to such a Trifle)
 He begg'd of me, to steale't.
 Iago. Villanous Whore.
 Emil. She giue it Cassio? No, alas I found it,
 And I did giue it my Husband.
 Iago. Fiith, thou lye'st.
 Emil. By Heauen I do not, I do not Gentlemen:
 Oh murd'rous Coxcombe, what should such a Foole
 Do with so good a wife?
 Oth. Are there no stones in Heauen,
 But what serues for the Thunder?
 Precious Villaine.
 Gra. The woman fallies:
 Sure he hath kill'd his Wife.
 Emil. I, I: oh lay me by my Mistis side.
 Gra. Hee's gone, but his wife's kill'd.
 Mon. 'Tis a notorious Villain take you this weapon
 Which I haue receou'd from the Moore:
 Come guard the doore without, let him not passe,
 But kill him rather. Ile after that same villaine,
 For 'tis a damned Slaue.

Exit.
 Oth.

Oth. I am not valiant neither:
But every Punie whipster gets my Sword,
But why should Honor out-lue Honesty?
Let it go all.

Emil. What did thy Song boad Lady?
Hearke, canst thou heare me? I will play the Swan,
And dye in Musicke: Willough, Willough, Willough,
Moore, she was chaste: She lou'd thee, cruell Moore,
So come my Soule to blisse, as I speake true:
So speaking as I thinke, alas, I dye.

Oth. I haue another weapon in this Chamber,
It was a Sword of Spaine, the Ice brookes temper:
Oh heere it is: Vnkle I must come forth.

Gra. If thou attempt it, it will cost thee deere;
Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

Oth. Look in vpon me then, and speake with me,
Or naked as I am I will assault thee.

Gra. What is the matter?

Othel. Behold, I haue a weapon:
A better neuer did it selfe sustaine
Vpon a Soldiers Thigh. I haue scene the day,
That with this little Arme, and this good Sword,
I haue made my way through more impediments
Then twenty times your stop. But (oh vaine boast)
Who can controll his Fate? 'Tis not so now.
Be not affraid, though you do see me weapon'd:
Heere is my Iournies end, heere is my butt
And verie Sea-marke of my vtmost Saile.
Do you go backe dismayd? 'Tis a lost feare:
Man but a Rush against Othello's brest,
And he retires. Where should Othello go?
Now: how dost thou looke now? Oh ill-Starr'd wench,
Pale as thy Smocke: when we shall meete at comp,
This looke of thine will hurle my Soule from Heauen,
And Fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my Girl?
Euen like thy Chastity. O cursed, cursed Slaue!
Whip me ye Diuels,
From the possession of this Heauenly sight:
Blow me about in winde, roast me in Sulphure,
Wash me in steepe-downe gulfes of Liquid fire.
Oh Desdemona! dead Desdemona: dead. Oh, oh!

Enter Lodouico, Cassio, Montano, and Iago, with Officers.

Lod. Where is this rash, and most vnfortunate man?

Oth. That's he that was Othello: heere I am.

Lod. Where is that Viper?

Bring the Villaine forth.

Oth. I look down towards his feet: but that's a Fable,
If that thou bee'st a Diuell, I cannot kill thee.

Lod. Wrench his Sword from him.

Iago. I bleed Sir, but not kill'd.

Othel. I am not sorry neither, I'd haue thee liue:
For in my sense, 'tis happinesse to die.

Lod. Oh thou Othello, that was once so good,
False in the practise of a cursed Slaue,
What shall be saide to thee.

Oth. Why any thing:

An honourable Murderer, if you will:

For nought I did in hate, but all in Honour.

Lod. This wretch hath part confest his Villany:
Did you and he consent in Cassio's death.

Oth. I.

Cas. Deere Generall, I neuer gaue you cause.

Oth. I do beleuee it, and I aske your pardon:

Will you, I pray, demand that demy-Diuell,

Why he hath thus ensnar'd my Soule and Body.
Iag. Demand me nothing: what you know, you know.

From this time forth, I neuer will speake words.

Lod. What's not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir,

You shall vnderstand what hath befallne;

(Which, as I thinke, you know not) heere is a Letter

Found in the pocket of the slaine Rodorigo,

And heere another, the one of them imports

The death of Cassio, to be vnderooke

By Rodorigo.

Oth. O Villaine!

Cassio. Most Heathenish, and most grosse.

Lod. Now, heere's another discontented paper

Found in his pocket too: and this it seemes

Rodorigo meant 'haue sent this damned villaine:

But that (belike) Iago in the interim

Came in, and satisfi'd him.

Oth. Oh thou pernicious Caitiffe;

How came you (Cassio) by that Handkerchiefe

That was my wiues?

Cassio. I found it in my Chamber:

And he himselfe confest it but euen now,

That there he dropt it for a speciall purpose,

Which wrought to his desire.

Othel. O Foole, foole, foole!

Cassio. There is besides, in Rodorigo's Letter,

How he vpbraides Iago, that he made him

Braue vpon the Watch: whereon it came

That I was cast: and euen but now he spake

(After long seeming dead) Iago hurt him,

Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this roome, and go with vs:

Your Power, and your Command is taken off,

And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this Slaue,

If there be any cunning Crueltie,

That can torment him much, and hold him long,

It shall be his. You shall close Prisoner rest,

Till that the Nature of your fault be knowne

To the Venetian State. Come, bring away.

Oth. Soft you; a word on two before you goe:

I haue done the State some seruice, and they know't:

No more of that. I pray you in your Letters,

When you shall these vnluckie deede relate,

Speake of me, as I am. Nothing extenuate,

Nor set downe ought in malice.

Then must you speake,

Of one that lou'd not wisely, but too well:

Of one, not easily Icalious, but being wrought,

Perplexed in the extreame: Of one, whose hand

(Like the base Iudean) threw a Pearle away

Richer then all his Tribe: Of one, whose subdu'd Eyes,

Albeit vn-vfed to the melting moode,

Drops teares as fast as the Arabian Trees

Their Medicinable gumme. Set you downe this:

And say besides, that in Aleppo once,

Where a malignant, and a Turbond-Turke

Beate a Venetian, and traduc'd the State,

I tooke by th' throat the circumcised Dogge,

And smote him, thus.

Lod. Oh bloody period.

Gra. All that is spoke, is marr'd.

Oth. I kist thee, ere I kill'd thee: No way but this,

Killing my selfe, to dye vpon a kisse.

Dies
Cassio.

Cas. This did I feare, but thought he had no weapon:
For he was great of heart.

Lod. Oh Sparton Dogge:

More fell then Anguish, Hunger, or the Sea:

Looke on the Tragick Loading of this bed:

This is thy worke:

The Obiect poysons Sight,

Let it be hid. Gratiano, keepe the house,
And seize vpon the Fortunes of the Moore,
For they succede on you. To you, Lord Governour, Remaines the Censure of this hellish villaine:
The Time, the Place, the Torture, oh inforce it:
My selfe will straight aboard, and to the State,
This heauie Act, with heauie heart relate.

Exeunt.

THE TRAGEDIE OF Anthonie, and Cleopatra.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Demetrius and Philo.

Philo.

Alas, but this dotage of our Generals
Ore-flows the measure: those his goodly eyes
That ore the Files and Musters of the Warre,
Have glow'd like plated Mars:
Now bend, now turne
The Office and Devotion of their view
Vpon a Tawny Front. His Captaines heart,
Which in the scuffles of great Fights hath burst
The Buckles on his brest, reneages all temper,
And is become the Bellows and the Fan
To coole a Gyppies Lust.

Flourish. Enter Anthonie, Cleopatra, her Ladies, the Train, with Eunuchs fanning her.

Looke where they come:

Take but good note, and you shall see in him
(The triple Pillar of the world) transform'd
Into a Strumpets Foole. Behold and see.

Cleo. If it be Loue indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There's beggary in the loue that can be reckon'd

Cleo. He set a bourn how farr to be belov'd.

Ant. Then must thou needs finde out new Heauen, new Earth.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Newes (my good Lord) from Rome.

Ant. Grates me, the summe.

Cleo. Nay heare them Anthonie.

Fulvia perchance is angry: Or who knows,
If the scarce-bearded Caesar haue not sent
His powrefull Mandate to you. Do this, or this;
Take in that Kingdome, and Infranchise that:
Perform't, or else we damne thee.

Ant. How, my Lous?

Cleo. Perchance? Nay, and most like:

You must not stay heere longer, your dismission
Is come from Caesar, therefore heare it Anthonie.
Where's Fulvia's Procelle? (Caesars I would say) both?
Call in the Messengers: As I am Egypts Queene,
Thou blushest Anthonie, and that blood of thine
Is Caesars homager: else so thy cheekes payes shame,
When thrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds. The Messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt, and the wide Arch
Of the raign'd Empire fall: Heere is my space,
Kingdomes are clay: Our dungie earth alike

Feeds Beast as Man; the Noblenesse of life
Is to do thus: when such a mutuall paire,
And such a twaine can doo, in which I binde
One paine of punishment, the world to weere
We stand vp Peerelesse.

Cleo. Excellent fallshood:

Why did he marry Fulvia, and not loue her?

Hee seeme the Foole I am not. Anthonie will be himselfe.

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.

Now for the loue of Loue, and her soft houres,
Let's not confound the time with Conference harsh;
There's not a minute of our liues should stretch
Without some pleasure now. What sport to night?

Cleo. Heare the Ambassadors.

Ant. Ewe wrangling Queene:

Whom euery thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weepe: who euery passion fully tries
To make it selfe (in Thee) faire, and admir'd.
No Messenger but thine, and all alone, to night
Wee'l wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Come my Queene,
Last night you did desire it. Speake not to vs.

Exeunt with the Train.

Dems. Is Caesar with Anthonie priz'd so slight?

Philo. Sir sometimes when he is not Anthonie,

He comes too short of that great Property

Which still should go with Anthonie.

Dems. I am full sorry, that hee approues the common Liar, who thus speakes of him at Rome; but I will hope of better deeds to morrow. Rest you happy. Exeunt

Enter Enobarbus, Lamprius, a Southsayer, Rannius, Lucilius, Charman, Iras, Mardian the Eunuch, and Alexas.

Char. L. Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the Southsayer that you prais'd so to the Queene? Oh that I knewe this Husband, which you say, must change his Hornes with Garlands.

Alex. Southsayer.

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the Man? Is't you sir that know things?

Sooth. In Natures infinite booke of Seecreie, a little I can read.

Alex. Shew him your hand.

Enob. Bring in the Banket quickly: Wine enough,

Cleopa

Anthony and Cleopatra.

Cleopatra's health to drinke.

Char. Good sir, giue me good Fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet farre fairer then you are.

Char. He meanes in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid.

Alex. Vex not his prescience, be attentue.

Char. Hush.

Sooth. You shall be more belouing, then beloued.

Char. I had rather heate my Liuer with drinking.

Alex. Nay, heare him.

Char. Good now some excellent Fortune: Let mee be married to three Kings in a forenoone, and Widdow them all: Let me haue a Childe at fifty, to whom Herode of Iewry may do Homage. Finde me to marrie me with Octavius Caesar, and companion me with my Mistris.

Sooth. You shall out-lie the Lady whom you serue.

Char. Oh excellent, I loue long life better then Figs.

Sooth. You haue seene and proued a fairer former fortune, then that which is to approach.

Char. Then belike my Children shall haue no names:
Prythee how many Boyes and Wenches must I haue.

Sooth. If euery of your wishes had a wombe, & foretell euery wish, a Million.

Char. Out Foole, I forgieue thee for a Witch.

Alex. You thinke none but your sheets are priue to your wishes.

Char. Nay come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. Wee'l know all our Fortunes.

Enob. Mine, and most of our Fortunes to night, shall be drunke to bed.

Iras. There's a Palme presages Chastity, if nothing els.

Char. Ene as the o're-flowing Nylus presageth Famine.

Iras. Go you wilde Bedfellow, you cannot Soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oyle Palme bee not a fruitfull Prognostication, I cannot scratch mine care. Prythee tel her but a worky day Fortune.

Sooth. Your Fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how, but how, giue me particulars.

Sooth. I haue said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of Fortune better then she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better then I: where would you choose it.

Iras. Not in my Husbonds nose.

Char. Our worser thoughts Heauens mend.

Alexas. Come, his Fortune, his Fortune. Oh let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee, and let her dye too, and giue him a worse, and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his graue, fifty-fold a Cuckold. Good Isis heare me this Prayer, though thou denie me a matter of more waight:
good Isis I beseech thee.

Iras. Amen, deere Goddesse, heare that prayer of the people. For, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose, Wiu'd, so it is a deadly sorrow, to beholde a foule Knaue vncuckolded: Therefore deere Isis keep decorum, and Fortune him accordingly.

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo now, if it lay in their hands to make mee a Cuckold, they would make themselves Whores, but they'd doo't.

Enter Cleopatra.

Enob. Hush, heere comes Anthonie.

Char. Not he, the Queene.

Cleo. Saue you, my Lord.

Enob. No Lady.

Cleo. Was he not heere?

Char. No Madam.

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth, but on the sodaine
A Romane thought hath strooke him.

Enobarbus?

Enob. Madam.

Cleo. Seeke him, and bring him hither: wher's Alexas?

Alex. Heere at your seruice.

My Lord approaches.

Enter Anthonie, with a Messenger.

Cleo. We will not looke vpon him:

Go with vs.

Exeunt.

Messen. Fulvia thy Wife,

First came into the Field.

Ant. Against my Brother Lucius?

Messen. I: but soone that Warre had end,

And the times state

Made friends of them, toynting their force 'gainst Caesar,

Whose better issue in the warre from Italy,

Vpon the first encounter draue them.

Ant. Well, what worst.

Messen. The Nature of bad newes infects the Teller.

Ant. When it concerns the Foole or Coward: On Things that are past, are done, with me. 'Tis thus,

Who tels me true, though in his Tale dye death,

I heare him as he flatter'd.

Messen. Labienus (this is flisse-newes)

Hath with his Parthian Force

Extended Asia: from Euphrates his conquering

Banner shooke, from Syria to Lydia,

And to Ionia, whil'st

Ant. Anthonie thou would'st say.

Messen. Oh my Lord.

Ant. Speake to me home,

Mince not the generall tongue, name

Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome:

Raile thou in Fulvia's phrase, and taunt my faults

With such full License, as both Truth and Malice

Haue power to vter. Oh then we bring forth weeds,

When our quicke windes lye still, and our illes told vs

Is as our earing: fare thee well awhile.

Messen. At your Noble pleasure.

Exit Messenger.

Enter another Messenger.

Ant. From Scicion how the newes? Speake there.

1. Mes. The man from Scicion,

Is there such an one?

2. Mes. He staves vpon your will.

Ant. Let him appeare:

These strong Egyptian Fetters I must breake,

Or loose my selfe in dotage.

Enter another Messenger with a Letter.

What are you?

3. Mes. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where dyed she.

Messen. In Scicion, her length of sicknesse,

With what else more serious,

Importeth thee to know, this beares.

Ant. Forbear me

There's a great Spirit gone, thus did I desire it:

What our contempts doth often hurle from vs,

x

We

We wish it ours againe. The present pleasure,
By resolution lowring, does become
The opposite of it selfe: she's good being gon,
The hand could plucke her backe, that shoud her on.
I must from this enchanting Queene breake off,
Ten thousand harmes, more then the illes I know
My idlenesse doth hatch.

Enter Enocharbus.

How now Enocharbus.

Eno. What's your pleasure, Sir?

Anth. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why then we kill all our Women. We see how mortall an vnkindnesse is to them, if they suffer our departure death's the word.

Anth. I must be gone.

Eno. Vnder a compelling an occasion, let women die.
It were pity to cast them away for nothing, though betweene them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra catching but the least noyse of this, dies instantly: I haue seene her dye twenty times vpon farre poorer moment: I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some louing acte vpon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Anth. She is cunning past mans thought.

Eno. Alacke Sir no, her passions are made of nothing, but the finest part of pure Loue. We cannot cal her winds and waters, sighes and teares: They are greater stormes and Tempests then Almanackes can report. This cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shewre of Raine
as well as loue.

Anth. Would I had neuer seene her.

Eno. Oh sir, you had then left vscene a wonderfull peece of worke, which not to haue bene blest withall, would haue discredited your Trauaile.

Anth. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir.

Anth. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Anth. Dead.

Eno. Why sir, giue the Gods a thankfull Sacrifice:
when it pleaseth their Deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shewes to man the Tailors of the earth: comforting therein, that when olde Robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more Women but Fulvia, then had you indeede a cut, and the case to be lamented: This grieffe is crown'd with Consolation, your old Smocke brings forth a new Petticoate, and indeed the teares line in an Onion, that should water his sorrow.

Anth. The businesse she hath broached in the State,
Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the businesse you haue broach'd heere cannot be without you, especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Anth. No more light Answers:

Let our Officers

Haue notice what we purpose. I shall breake
The cause of our Expedience to the Queene,
And get her loue to part. For not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more vrgent touches
Do strongly speake to vs: but the Letters too
Of many our contriuing Friends in Rome,
Petition vs at home. Sextus Pompeius
Haue giuen the dare to Cesar, and commands
The Empire of the Sea. Our slippery people,
Whose Loue is neuer link'd to the deseruer,

Till his deserts are past, begin to throw
Pompey the great, and all his Dignities
Vpon his Sonne, who high in Name and Power,
Higher then both in Blood and Life, stands vp
For the maine Souldier. Whose quality going on,
The sides o' th' world may danger. Much is breeding,
Which like the Courfers heire, hath yet but life,
And not a Serpents poyson. Say our pleasure,
To such whose places vnder vs, require
Our quicke remoue from hence.

Enob. I shall doo't.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Alexas, and Iras.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is,

Whose with him, what he does:

I did not send you. If you finde him sad,

Say I am dauncing: if in Myrth, report

That I am sodaine sicke, Quicke, and returne.

Char. Madam, me thinks if you did loue him dearly,

You do not hold the method, to enforce

The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not?

Ch. In each thing giue him way, crosse him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a foole: the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so too farre. I will forbear,

In time we hate that which we often feare.

Enter Anthony.

But heere comes Anthony.

Cleo. I am sicke, and sullen.

Anth. I am sorry to giue breathing to my purpose.

Cleo. Helpe me away deere Charmian, I shall fall,
It cannot be thus long, the sides of Nature
Will not sustaine it.

Anth. Now my deere Queene.

Cleo. Pray you stand farther from mee.

Anth. What's the matter?

Cleo. I know by that same eye ther's some good news.

What sayes the married woman you may goe?

Would she had neuer giuen you leaue to come.

Let her not say 'tis I that keepe you heere,

I haue no power vpon you: Hers you are.

Anth. The Gods best know.

Cleo. Oh neuer was there Queene

So mightily betrayed: yet at the first

I saw the Treasons planted.

Anth. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Why should I thinke you can be mine, & true,

(Though you in swearing shake the Throned Gods)

Who haue bene false to Fulvia?

Riotous madnesse,

To be entangled with those mouth-made vowes,

Which breake themselves in swearing.

Anth. Most sweet Queene.

Cleo. Nay pray you seeke no colour for your going,

But bid farewell, and goe:

When you sued staying,

Then was the time for words: No going then,

Eternity was in our Lippes, and Eyes,

Blisse in our browes bent: none our parts so poore,

But was a race of Heauen. They are so still,

Or thou the greatest Souldier of the world,

Art turn'd the greatest Liar.

Anth. How now Lady?

Cleo. I would I had thy inches, thou should'st know
There were a heart in Egypt.

Anth. Heare me Queene:

The strong necessity of Time, commands
Our Seruites a-while: but my full heart
Remaines in vse with you. Our Italy,
Shines o're with ciuill Swords; Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approaches to the Port of Rome,
Equality of two Domestike powers,
Breed scrupulous faction: The hated growne to strength
Are newly growne to Loue: The condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his Fathers Honor, creepes apace
Into the hearts of such, as haue not thriued
Vpon the present state, whose Numbers threaten,
And quietnesse growne sicke of rest, would purge
By any desperate change: My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my going,
Is Fulvia's death.

Cleo. Though age from folly could not giue me freedom

It does from childishnesse. Can Fulvia dye?

Anth. She's dead my Queene.

Looke heere, and at thy Soueraigne leysure read

The Garboyles she awak'd: at the last, best,

See when, and where shee died.

Cleo. O most fallie Loue!

Where be the Sacred Viollies thou should'st fill

With sorrowfull water? Now I see, I see,

In Fulvia's death, how mine recei'd shall be.

Anth. Quarrell no more, but bee prepar'd to know

The purposes I beare: which are, or cease,

As you shall giue th' aduice. By the fire

Thou quickens Nylus slime, I go from hence

Thy Souldier, Seruant, making Peace or Warre,

As thou affects.

Cleo. Cut my Lace, Charmian come,

But let it be, I am quickly ill, and well,

So Anthony loues.

Anth. My precious Queene forbear,

And giue true euidence to his Loue, which stands

An honourable Triall.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.

I prythee turne aside, and weepe for her,

Then bid adiew to me, and say the teares

Belong to Egypt. Good now, play one Scene

Of excellent dissembling, and let it looke

Like perfect Honor.

Anth. You'll heat my blood no more?

Cleo. You can do better yet: but this is meetly.

Anth. Now by Sword.

Cleo. And Targer. Still he meads.

But this is not the best. Looke prythee Charmian,

How this Herculean Roman do's become

The carriage of his chafe.

Anth. Ile leaue you Lady.

Cleo. Courteous Lord, one word:

Sir, you and I must part, but that's not it:

Sir, you and I haue lou'd, but there's not it:

That you know well, something it is I would:

Oh, my Obluion is a very Anthony,

And I am all forgotten.

Anth. But that your Royalty

Holds Idlenesse your subiect, I should take you

For Idlenesse it selfe.

Cleo. 'Tis sweating Labour,

To beare such Idlenesse so neere the heart

As Cleopatra this. But Sir, forgive me,

Since my becommings kill me, when they do not Eye well to you. Your Honor calles you hence,
Therefore be deafe to my vnpietied Polly,
And all the Gods go with you. Vpon your Sword
Sit Lawrell victory, and smoothe successe
Be strew'd before your feete.

Anth. Let vs go.

Come: Our separation so abides and flies,

That thou reciding heere, goes yet with mee;

And I hence fleeting, heere remaine with thee.

Away.

Exeunt.

Enter Octavius reading a Letter, Lepidus, and their Traine.

Cas. You may see Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It is not Casars Naturall vice, to hate
One great Competitor. From Alexandria
This is the newes: He fishes, drinckes, and wastes
The Lampes of night in reuell: Is not more manlike
Then Cleopatra: nor the Queene of Ptolemy
More Womanly then he. Hardly gaue audience
Or vouchsafeto thinke he had Partners. You Shall finde there a man, who is th'abstracts of all faults,
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not thinke
There are, euils enow to darken all his goodnesse:
His faults in him, seeme as the Spots of Heauen,
More fierie by night Blacknesse; Hereditarie,
Rather then purchase: what he cannot change,
Then what he chooseth.

Cas. You are too indulgent. Let's graunt it is not Amisse to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy,
To giue a Kingdome for a Mirth, to sit
And keepe the turne of Tipling with a Slave,
To reele the streets at noone, and stand the Buffer
With knaues that smels of sweate: Say this becoms him
(As his compofure must be rare indeed, Whom these things cannot blemish) yet must Anthony
No way excuse his foyles, when we do beare
So great waight in his lightnesse. If he fill'd
His vacancie with his Voluptuousnesse,
Full surfeits, and the drinnesse of his bones,
Call on him for't. But to confound such time,
That drummes him from his sport, and speaks as lowd
As his owne State, and ours, 'tis to be chid:
As we rate Boyes, who being mature in knowledge,
Pawne their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebell to iudgement.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Heere's more newes.

Mes. Thy biddings haue bene done, & euerie houre
Most Noble Cesar, shalt thou haue report
How 'tis abroad. Pompey is strong at Sea,
And it appeares, he is belou'd of those
That only haue feard Cesar: to the Ports
The discontents repaire, and mens reports
Giue him much wrong'd.

Cas. I should haue knowne no lesse,
It hath bin taught vs from the primall state
That he which is was wisht, vntill he were:
And the ebb'd man,
Ne're lou'd, till ne're worth loue,
Comes fear'd, by being lack'd. This common bodie,
Like to a Vagabond Flagge vpon the Streame,
Goes too, and backe, lacking the varrying tyde

To

To rot it selfe with motion.

Mes. Caesar I bring thee word,
Menecrates and Menas famous Pyrates
 Makes the Sea ferue them, which they care and wound
 With keeles of euery kinde. Many hot inrodes
 They make in Italy, the Borders Maritime
 Lacke blood to thinke on't, and flish youth reuols,
 No Vessell can peepe forth: but 'tis as soone
 Taken as scene: for Pompeys name strikes more
 Then could his Warre rechristed.

Cesar. Anthony,
 Leane thy lasciuious Vassalles. When thou once
 Was beaten from Medena, where thou flew'st
Hirius, and Pausa Consuls, at thy heele
 Did Famine follow, whom thou fought'st against,
 (Though daintily brought vp) with patience more
 Then Sauges could suffer. Thou did'st drinke
 The stale of Horses, and the gilded Puddle
 Which Beasts would cough at. Thy pallat the did daine
 The roughest Berry, on the rudest Hedge.
 Yea, like the Stagge, when Snow the Pasture sheets,
 The barkes of Trees thou brows'd. On the Alpes,
 It is reported thou did'st eate strange flesh,
 Which some did dye to looke on: And all this
 (It wounds thine Honor that I speake it now)
 Was borne so like a Souldiour, that thy cheek
 So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'Tis pittie of him.

Ces. Let his shames quickly
 Drive him to Rome, 'tis time we twaine
 Did shew our selues i'th Field, and to that end Assemble me immediate counsell, Pompey
 Thrives in our Idlenesse.

Lep. To morrow Cesar,

I shall be furnisht to informe you rightly
 Both what by Sea and Land I can be able
 To front this present time.

Ces. Til which encounter, it is my busines too. Farwell.

Lep. Farwell my Lord, what you shal know mean time
 Offittes abroad, I shall beseech you Sir
 To let me be partaker.

Cesar. Doubt not sir, I knew it for my Bond. Exit
Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, & Mardian.

Cleo. Charmian.

Char. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha, giue me to drinke Mandragora.

Char. Why Madam?

Cleo. That I might sleepe out this great gap of time:
My Anthony is away.

Char. You thinke of him too much.

Cleo. O 'tis Treason.

Char. Madam, I trust not so.

Cleo. Thou, Eunuch Mardian?

Mar. What's your Highnesse pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to heare thee sing. I take no pleasure

In ought an Eunuch ha's: 'Tis well for thee,

That being vsseminar'd, thy freer thoughts

May not flye forth of Egypt. Hast thou Affections?

Mar. Yes gracious Madam.

Cleo. Indeed?

Mar. Not in deed Madam, for I can do nothing

But what in deed is honest to be done:

Yet haue I fierce Affections, and thinke

What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. Oh Charmian:

Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?

Or does he walke? Or is he on his Horse?

Oh happy horse to beare the weight of Anthony!
 Do brauely Horse, for wot'st thou whom thou mou'st?
 The demy Atlas of this Earth, the Arme
 And Burganet of men. Hee's speaking now,
 Or murmuring, where's my Serpent of old Nile,
 (For so he calls me:) Now I feede my selfe
 With most delicious poyson. Thinke on me
 That am with Phoebeus amorous pinches blacke,
 And wrinkled deepe in time. Broad-fronted Cesar,
 When thou wast heere about the ground, I was
 A morsell for a Monarke: and great Pompey
 Would stand and make his eyes grow in my brow,
 There would he anchor his Aspects, and dye
 With looking on his life.

Enter Alexas from Cesar.

Alex. Soueraigne of Egypt, haile.

Cleo. How much vnlike art thou Marke Anthony?
 Yet coming from him, that great Med'cine hath
 With his Tinct gilded thee.

How goes it with my braue Marke Anthony?

Alex. Last thing he did (deere Quene)

He kiss the last of many doubled kisses
 This Orient Pearle. His speech sticke in my heart.

Cleo. Mine eare must plucke it thence.

Alex. Good Friend, quoth he:

Say the firme Roman to great Egypt sends
 This treasure of an Oyfter: at whose foote
 To mend the petty present, I will peece
 Her opulent Throne, with Kingdomes. All the East, (Say thou) shall call her Mistresse. So he nodded,
 And soberly did mount an Arme-gaunt Steede,
 Who neigh'd so hye, that what I would haue spoke,
 Was beastly dumbe by him.

Cleo. What was he sad, or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o'th yere, between extremes
 Of hot and cold, he was nor sad nor merrie.

Cleo. Oh well diuided disposition: Note him,
 Note him good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note him.
 He was not sad, for he would shine on those
 That make their looks by his. He was not merrie,
 Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay
 In Egypt with his ioy, but betwene both.
 Oh heavenly mingle! Bee't thou sad, or merrie,
 The violence of either thee becomes,
 So do's it no mans else. Mer'st thou my Poits?

Alex. I Madam, twenty seuerall Messengers.

Why do you send so thicke?

Cleo. Who's borne that day, when I forget to send to Anthony, shall dye a Begger. Inke and paper Char- mian. Welcome my good Alexas. Did I Charmian, e-uer loue Cesar so?

Char. Oh that braue Cesar!

Cleo. Be choak'd with such another Emphasis,

Say the braue Anthony.

Char. The valiant Cesar.

Cleo. By Ihs, I will giue thee bloody teeth,

If thou with Cesar Parago nagaine:

My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,

I sing but after you.

Cleo. My Salad dayes,

When I was greene in iudgement, cold in blood,

To say, as I saide then. But come away,

Get me Inke and Paper.

he shall haue euery day a seuerall greeting, or Ile vnpeople Egypt.

Enter Pompey, Menecrates, and Menas, in warlike manner.

Pom. If the great Gods be iust, they shall assist
 The deeds of iustest men.

Mene. Know worthy Pompey, that what they do de- lay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are sutors to their Throne, decayes
 the thing we sue for.

Mene. We ignorant of our selues,
 Begge often our owne harmes, which the wise Powres
 Deny vs for our good: so finde we profit
 By loosing of our Prayers.

Pom. I shall do well:

The people loue me, and the Sea is mine;

My powers are Crescent, and my Auguring hope

Sayes it will come to'th full. Marke Anthony

In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make

No warres without doores. Cesar gees money where

He looses hearts: Lepidus flatters both,

Of both is flatter'd: but he neither loues,

Nor either cares for him.

Mene. Cesar and Lepidus are in the field,

Amighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where haue you this? 'Tis false.

Mene. From Siluius, Sir.

Pom. He dreames: I know they are in Rome together

Looking for Anthony: but all the charmes of Loue,

Salt Cleopatra soften thy wand lip,

Let Witchcraft ioyne with Beauty, Lust with both,

Tye vp the Libertine in a field of Feasts,

Keepe his Braine fuming. Epicurean Cookes,

Sharpen with cloylesse sawce his Appetite,

That sleepe and feeding may prorogue his Honour,

Euen till a Lethied dulnesse

Enter Varrinus.

How now Varrinus?

Var. This is most certaine, that I shall deliuer:

Marke Anthony is euery houre in Rome

Expected. Since he went from Egypt, 'tis

A space for farther Trauaile.

Pom. I could haue giuen lesse matter

A better care. Menas, I did not thinke

This amorous Surferter would haue don'd his Helme

For such a petty Warre: His Souldiership

Is twice the other twaine: But let vs reare

The higher our Opinion, that our stirring

Can from the lap of Egypt's Widdow, plucke

The neere Lust-wearied Anthony.

Mene. I cannot hope,

Cesar and Anthony shall well greet together;

His Wife that's dead, did treppasses to Cesar,

His Brother wand' vpon him, although I thinke

Not mou'd by Anthony.

*Pom. I know not Menas,*

How lesser Enmities may giue way to greater,

Were't not that we stand vp against them all:

'Twer pregnant they should square between themselves,

For they haue entertained cause enough

To draw their swords: but how the feare of vs

May Ciment their diuisions, and binde vp

The petty difference, we yet not know:

Bee't as our Gods will haue't; it onely stands

Our liues vpon, to vse our strongest hands

Come Menas.

Exit.

Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
 And shall become you well, to intreat your Captaine
 To soft and gentle speech.

Enob. I shall intreat him

To answer like himselfe: if Cesar moue him,

Let Anthony looke ouer Cesar's head,

And speake as lowd as Mars. By Iupiter,

Were I the wearer of Anthony's Beard,

I would not shauet to day.

Lep. 'Tis not a time for priuate stomacking.

Eno. Euery time serues for the matter that is then borne in't.

Lep. But small to greater matters must giue way.

Eno. Nor if the small come first.

Lep. Your speech is passion: but pray you stirre

No Embers vp. Heere comes the Noble Anthony.

Enter Anthony and Ventidius.

Eno. And yonder Cesar.

Enter Cesar, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Ant. If we compose well heere, to Parthia:

Heare Ventidius.

*Cesar. I do not know Mecenas, aske Agrippa.*

Lep. Noble Friends:

That which combin'd vs was most great, and let not

A leaner action rend vs. What's amiss,

May it be gently heard. When we debate

Our triuall difference loud, we do commit

Murther in healing wounds. Then Noble Partners,

The rather for I earnestly beseech,

Touch you the sowrest points with sweetest tearmes,

Nor curtnesse grow to'th matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well:

Were we before our Armies, and to fight,

I should do thus.

Ces. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thanke you.

Ces. Sit.

Ant. Sit sir.

Ces. Nay then.

Ant. I learne, you take things ill, which are not so:

Or being, concerne you not.

Ces. I must be laught at, if or for nothing, or a little, I Should say my selfe offended, and with you

Chiefely i'th world. More laught at, that I should

Once name you derogarely: when to sound your name

It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt Cesar, what was't to you?

Ces. No more then my reciding heere at Rome

Might be to you in Egypt: yet if you there

Did practise on my State, your being in Egypt

Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practis'd?

Ces. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent,

By what did heere befall me. Your Wife and Brother

Made warres vpon me, and their contestation

Was Theame for you, you were the word of warre.

Ant. You do mistake your busines, my Brother neuer

Did vrge me in his Act: I did inquire it,

And haue my Learning from some true reports

That drew their swords with you, did he not rather

Difcredit my authority with yours,

And make the warres alike against my stomacke,

Hauing alike your cause. Of this, my Letters

Before did satisfie you. If you'l patch a quarrell,

As matter whole you haue to make it with,

It must not be with this.

Cas. You praise your selfe, by laying defects of iudgement to me: but you patch vp your excuses.

Anth. Not so, not so:

I know you could not lacke, I am certaine on't, Very necessity of this thought, that I Your Partner in the cause gainst which he fought, Could not with gracefull eyes attend those Warres Which fronted mine owne peace. As for my wife, I would you had her spirit, in such another, The third oth' world is yours, which with a Snaffle, You may pace easie, but not such a wife.

Enobar. Would we had all such wiues, that the men might go to Warres with the women.

Anth. So much vncurable, her Garboiles (Cas.) Made out of her impatience: which not wanted Shredence of policie: I greewing grant, Did you too much disquiet, for that you must, But say I could not helpe it.

Cas. I wrote to you, when rioting in Alexandria you Did pocker vp my Letters: and with taunts Did gibe my Misue out of audience.

Ant. Sir, he fell vpon me, ere admitted, then: Three Kings I had newly feasted, and did want Of what I was i'th'morning: but next day I told him of my selfe, which was as much As to haue askt him pardon. Let this Fellow Be nothing of our strife: if we contend Out of our question wipe him.

Cas. You haue broken the Article of your oath, which you shall neuer haue tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft Cas.

Ant. No Lepidus, let him speake, The Honour is Sacred which he talks on now, Supposing that I lackt it: but on Cas., The Article of my oath.

Cas. To lend me Armes, and aide when I requir'd them, the which you both denied.

Anth. Neglected rather:

And then when poysoned houres had bound me vp From mine owne knowledge, as neerely as I may, He play the penitent to you. But mine honesty, Shall not make poore my greatnesse, nor my power Worke without it. Truth is, that Fulvia, To haue me out of Egypt, made Warres heere, For which my selfe, the ignorant motiue, do So farre aske pardon, as befits mine Honour To stoope in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis Noble spoken.

Mec. If it might please you, to enforce no further The griefes betwene ye: to forget them quite, Were to remember: that the present neede, Speakes to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoken Mecenas.

Enobar. Or if you borrow one anothers Loue for the instant, you may when you heare no more words of Pompey returne it againe: you shall haue time to wrangle in, when you haue nothing else to do.

Anth. Thou art a Souldier, onely speake no more.

Enob. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Anth. You wrong this presence, therefore speake no more.

Enob. Go too then: your Considerate Stone.

Cas. I do not much dislike the matter, but The manner of his speech: for't cannot be,

We shall remaine in friendship, our conditions So differing in their acts. Yet if I knew, What Hoop should hold vs staunch from edge to edge Arth' world: I would peruse it.

Agri. Giue me leaue Cas.

Cas. Speake Agrippa.

Agri. Thou hast a Sister by the Mothers side, admir'd Ostania: Great Mark Anthony is now a widdower. Cas. Say not, say Agrippa: if Cleopatra heard you, your prooffe were well deferred of rashnesse.

Anth. I am not marryed Cas.: let me heere Agrippa further speake.

Agri. To hold you in perpetuall amities, To make you Brothers, and to knit your hearts With an vn-slipping knot, take Anthony, Ostania to his wife: whose beauty claimes No worse a husband than the best of men: whose Vertue, and whose generall graces, speake That which none else can viter. By this marriage, All little Ielousies which now seeme great, And all great feares, which now import their dangers, Would then be nothing. Truth's would be tales, Where now halfe tales be truth's: her loue to both, Would each to other, and all loues to both Draw after her. Pardon what I haue spoke, For 'tis a studied not a present thought, By duty ruminated.

Anth. Will Cas. speake?

Cas. Not till he heares how Anthony is toucht, With what is spoke already.

Anth. What power is in Agrippa,

If I would say Agrippa, be it so,

To make this good?

Cas. The power of Cas.,

And his power, vnto Ostania.

Anth. May I neuer

(To this good purpose, that so fairely shewes) Dreame of impediment: let me haue thy hand Further this act of Grace: and from this houre, The heart of Brothers gouerne in our Loues, And sway our great Designes.

Cas. There's my hand:

A Sister I bequeath you, whom no Brother Did euer loue so deere. Let her liue To ioyne our kingdomes, and our hearts, and neuer Flie off our Loues againe.

Lep. Happily, Amen.

Ant. I did not think to draw my Sword gainst Pompey, For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great Of late vpon me. I must thanke him onely, Least my remembrance, suffer ill report: At heele of that, desie him.

Lep. Time calls vpon's, Of vs most Pompey presently be sought, Or else he seekes out vs.

Anth. Where lies he?

Cas. About the Mount Messana.

Anth. What is his strength by land?

Cas. Great, and encreasing: But by Sea he is an absolute Master.

Anth. So is the Fame,

Would we had spoke together. Hast we for it, Yet ere we put our selues in Armes, dispatch we The businesse we haue talkt of.

Cas. With most gladnesse,

And do inuite you to my Sisters view,

Whe-

Whether straight Ile lead you.

Anth. Let vs Lepidus not lacke your companie.

Lep. Noble Anthony, not sicknesse should detain me.

Flourish. Exit omnes.

Manet Enobarbus, Agrippa, Mecenas.

Mec. Welcome from Egypt Sir.

Eno. Halfe the heart of Cas., worthy Mecenas. My honourable Friend Agrippa.

Agri. Good Enobarbus.

Mec. We haue cause to be glad, that matters are so well disgisted: you staid well by't in Egypt.

Enob. I Sir, we did sleepe day out of countenance: and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight Wilde Boares roasted whole at a breakfast: and but twelue persons there. Is this true?

Eno. This was but as a Flye by an Eagle: we had much more monstrous matter of Feast, which worthily deserued noting.

Mecenas. She's a most triumphant Lady, if report be square to her.

Enob. When she first met Mark Anthony, she purst vp his heart vpon the Riuer of Sidon.

Agri. There she appear'd indeed: or my reporter deuic'd well for her.

Eno. I will tell you, The Barge she sat in, like a burnisht Throne Burnt on the water: the Poop was beaten Gold, Purple the Sables: and so perfum'd that The Windes were Loue-sicke.

With them the Owers were Siluer, Which to the tune of Flutes kept stroke, and made The water which they beate, to follow faster; As amorous of their strokes. For her owne person, It beggerd all discription, she did lye

In her Pauillion, cloth of Gold, of Tissue, O're-picturing that Venus, where we see The fancie out-worke Nature. On each side her, Stood pretty Dimpled Boyes, like smiling Cupids, With diuers colour'd Fannes whose winde did seeme, To gloue the delicate cheekes which they did coole, And what they vpdid did.

Agri. Oh rare for Anthony.

Eno. Her Gentlewoman, like the Nereides, So many Mer-maides tended her i'th'eyes, And made their bends adornings. At the Helme. A seeming Mer-maide steeres: The Silken Tackle, Swell with the touches of those Flower-soft hands, That yarely frame the office. From the Barge A strange inuisible perfume hits the sense Of the adiacent Wharfes. The City cast Her people out vpon her: and Anthony Enthron'd i'th' Market-place, did sit alone, Whistling to'th'ayre: which but for vacancie, Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too, And made a gap in Nature.

Agri. Rare Egyptian.

Eno. Vpon her landing, Anthony sent to her, Inuitd her to Supper: she replied, It should be better, he became her guest: Which she entreated, our Courteous Anthony, Whom nere the word of no woman hard speake, Being barber'd ten times o're, goes to the Feast; And for his ordinary, paises his heart, For what his eyes eate onely.

Agri. Royall Wench:

She made great Cas. lay his Sword to bed, He ploughed her, and she cropt.

Eno. I saw her once

Hop forty Paces through the publicke streete, And hauing lost her breath, she spoke, and panted, That she did make defect, perfection, And breathlesse powre breath forth.

Mec. Now Anthony, must leaue her vicerly.

Eno. Neuer he will not:

Age cannot wither her, nor custome stale Her infinite variety: other women cloy The appetites they feede, but she makes hungry, Where most she satisfies. For vildest things Become themselves in her, that the holy Priests Blesse her, when she is Riggith.

Mec. If Beauty, Wisedome, Modesty, can sett le The heart of Anthony: Ostania is A blessed Lottery to him.

Agri. Let vs go. Good Enobarbus, make your selfe my guest, whilst you abide heere.

Eno. Humbly Sir I thanke you.

Exeunt

Enter Anthony, Casar, Ostania betwene them.

Anth. The world, and my great office, will Sometimes deuide me from your bosome.

Ost. All which time, before the Gods my knee shall bowe my prayers to them for you.

Anth. Goodnight Sir. My Ostania

Read not my blemishes in the worlds report: I haue not kept my square, but that to come Shall all be done by'th'Rule: good night deesse Lady: Good night Sir.

Cas. Goodnight.

Exit.

Enter Soothsayer.

Anth. Now Sirrah: you do wish your selfe in Egypt? Sooth. Would I had neuer come from thence, nor you thither.

Ant. If you can, your reason?

Sooth. I see it in my motion: haue it not in my tongue, But yet hee you to Egypt againe.

Anth. Say to me, whole Fortunes shall rise higher Casars or mine?

Sooth. Casars. Therefore (oh Anthony) stay not by his side Thy Demon that thy spirit which keepees thee, is Noble, Couragious, high vnmarchable; Where Casars is not. But neere him, thy Angell Becomes a feare: as being o're-pow'd, therefore Make space enough betwene you.

Anth. Speake this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee no more but: when to thee, If thou dost play with him at any game, Thou art sure to loose: And of that Naturall lucke, He beates thee gainst the oddes. Thy Lustre thickens, When he shines by: I say againe, thy spirit Is all affraid to gouerne thee neere him: But he alway's Noble.

Anth. Get thee gone:

Say to Ventigius I would speake with him.

Exit.

He shall to Parthia, be it Art or hap, He hath spoken true. The very Dice obey him, And in our sports my better cunning faints, Vnder his chance, if we draw lots he speede, His Cocks do winne the Battaille, still of mine, When it is all to naught: and his Quailles euer Beate mine (in hoope) at odd's. I will to Egypte:

And

And though I make this marriage for my peace,
I'll East my pleasure lies. Oh come Ventigius.

Enter Ventigius.

You must to Parthia, your Commissions ready:
Follow me, and recieve't.

Exeunt.

Enter Lepidus, Meneas and Agrippa.

Lepidus. Trouble your selues no further: pray you hasten your Generals after.

Agg. Sir, Marke Anthony, will e'ne but kisse Octavia, and wee'll follow.

Lepi. Till I shall see you in your Souldiers dresse,
Which will become you both: Farewell.

Meneas. We shall: as I conceive the journey, be at Mount before you Lepidus.

Lepi. Your way is shorter, my purposes do draw me much about, you'll win two dayes vpon me.

Both. Sir good successe.

Lepi. Farewell.

Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me some Musicke: Musicke, moody foode of vs that trade in Loue.

Omnes. The Musicke, ho.

Enter Mardian the Eunuch.

Cleo. Let it alone, let's to Billiards: come Charmian.

Char. My arme is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an Eunuch plaide, as with a woman. Come you'll play with me Sir?

Mardi. As well as I can Madam.

Cleo. And when good will is shewed,
Thought't come to short

The Actor may pleade pardon. He none now,

Giue me mine Angle, wee'll to'th Riuer there

My Musicke playing farre off. I will betray

Tawny fine fishes, my bended hooke shall pierce

Their slimy iawes: and as I draw them vp,

He thinks them euery one an Anthony,

And say, ah ha: y'are caught.

Char. 'Twas merry when you wager'd on your Angling, when your diuer did hang a salt fish on his hooke which he with seruencie drew vp.

Cleo. That time? Oh times:

I laugh't him out of patience: and that night

I laugh't him into patience, and next morne,

Ere the ninth houre, I drunke him to his bed:

Then put my Tires and Mantles on him, whilst

I wore his Sword Phillippan. Oh from Italie,

Enter a Messenger.

Ramme thou thy fruitfull tidings in mine eares,
That long time haue bin barren.

Mes. Madam, Madam.

Cleo. Anthony's dead,

If thou say so Villaine, thou kil'st thy Mistis:

But well and free, if thou so yeild him.

There is Gold, and heere

My blewest vaines to kisse: a hand that Kings

Haue lipst, and trembled kissing.

Mes. First Madam, he is well.

Cleo. Why there's more Gold.

But firrah marke, we vse

To say, the dead are well: bring it to that,

The Gold I giue thee, will I melt and powr

Downe thy ill vntiring throat.

Mes. Good Madam heere me.

Cleo. Well, go too I will:

But there's no goodnesse in thy face if Anthony

Be free and healthfull; so tart a fauour

To trumpet such good tidings. I f'not well,

Thou shouldst come like a Furie crown'd with Snakes,
Not like a formall man.

Mes. Will please you heere me?

Cleo. I haue a mind to strike thee ere thou speak'st:

Yet if thou say Anthony liues, 'tis well,

Or friends with Cesar, or not Captiue to him,

He set thee in a shower of Gold, and haile:

Rich Pearles vpon thee.

Mes. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mes. And Friends with Cesar.

Cleo. Th'art an honest man.

Mes. Cesar, and he, are greater Friends then euer,

Cleo. Make thee a Fortune from me.

Mes. But yet Madam.

Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does alay

The good precedence, sic vpon but yet,

But yet is as a laylor to bring forth

Some monstrous Malefactor. Prythee Friend,

Powre out the packe of matter to mine eare,

The good and bad together: he's friends with Cesar,

In state of health thou saist, and thou saist, free.

Mes. Free Madam, no: I made no such report,

He's bound vnto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turne?

Mes. For the best turne i'th'bed.

Cleo. I am pale Charmian.

Mes. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infectious Pestilence vpon thee.

Strikes him downe.

Mes. Good Madam patience.

Cleo. What say you?

Hence horrible Villaine, or Ile spurne thine eyes

Like balls before me: Ile vnhaire thy head,

She hailes him vp and downe.

Thou shalt be whipt with Wyer, and strew'd in brine,

Smarting in lingring pickle.

Mes. Gracious Madam,

I that do bring the newes, made not the match.

Cleo. Say 'tis not so, a Prouince I will giue thee,

And make thy Fortunes proud: the blow thou had'st

Shall make thy peace, for mouing me to rage,

And I will boot thee with what guist beside Thy modestie can begge.

Mes. He's married Madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liu'd too long. Draw a knife.

Mes. Nay then Ile runne.

What meane you Madam, I haue made no fault. Exit.

Char. Good Madam keepe your selfe within your selfe,

The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some Innocents scape not the thunderbolt:

Melt Egypt into Nile: and kindly creatures

Turne all to Serpents. Call the slaue againe,

Though I am mad, I will not byte him: Call?

Char. He is afraid to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him,

These hands do lacke Nobility, that they strike

A meaner then my selfe: since I my selfe

Haue giuen my selfe the cause. Come hither Sir.

Enter the Messenger againe.

Though it be honest, it is neuer good

To bring bad newes: giue to a gracious Messager

An

An host of tongues, but let ill tydings tell
Themselves, when they be felt.

Mes. I haue done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?

I cannot hate thee worser then I do.

If thou againe say yes.

Mes. He's married Madam.

Cleo. The Gods confound thee,

Dost thou hold there still?

Mes. Should I lye Madam?

Cleo. Oh, I would thou didst:

So halfe my Egypt were submerg'd and made

A Cesterne for scald Snakes. Go get thee hence,

Had'st thou Narcissus in thy face to me,

Thou would'st appeare most vgly: He is married?

Mes. I craue your Highnesse pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mes. Take no offence, that I would not offend you,

To punish me for what you make me do

Seemes much vnqual, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. Oh that his fault should make a knaue of thee,

That art not what th'art sure of. Get thee hence,

The Marchandise which thou hast brought from Rome

Are all too deere for me:

Lye they vpon thy hand, and be ydone by em.

Char. Good your Highnesse patience.

Cleo. In praying Anthony, I haue disprais'd Cesar.

Char. Many times Madam.

Cleo. I am paid for't now: lead me from hence,

I faint, oh Irás, Charmian: 'tis no matter.

Go to the Fellow, good Alexas bid him

Report the feature of Octavia: her yeares,

Her inclination, let him not leaue out

The colour of her haire. Bring me word quickly,

Let him for euer go, let him not Charmian,

Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,

The other wayes a Mars. Bid you Alexas

Bring me word, how tall she is: pittie me Charmian,

But do not speake to me. Lead me to my Chamber.

Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter Pompey at one doore with Drum and Trumpet: at another Cesar, Lepidus, Anthony, Enobarbus, Meceneas, Agrippa, Alexas with Souldiers Marching.

Pom. Your Hostages I haue, so haue you mine:

And we shall talke before we fight.

Cesar. Most meete that first we come to words,

And therefore haue we

Our written purposes before vs sent,

Which if thou hast considered, let vs know,

If'twill tye vp thy discontented Sword,

And carry backe to Cicilie much tall youth,

That else must perish heere.

Pom. To you all three,

The Senators alone of this great world,

Chiefe Factors for the Gods. I do not know,

Wherefore my Father should reuengers want,

Hauiug a Sonne and Friends, since Iulius Cesar,

Who at Phillippi the good Brutus ghosted,

There saw you labouring for him. What was't

That mou'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what

Made all-honord, honest, Romaine Brutus,

With the arm'd rest, Courtiers of beaution's freedome,

To drench the Capitoll, but that they would

Haue one man but a man, and that his ie

Hath made me rigge my Nauie. At whose burthen,

The anger'd Ocean fomes, with which I meant

To scourge th'ingratitude, that despightfull Rome:

Cast on my Noble Father.

Cesar. Take your time.

Ant. Thou can'st not feare vs Pompey with thy sailes.

Wee'll speake with thee at Sea. At land thou know'st

How much we do o're-count thee.

Pom. At Land indeed

Thou dost o're-count me of my Father's house:

But since the Cuckoo buildes not for himselfe,

Remaine in't as thou maist.

Lepi. Be pleas'd to tell vs,

(For this is from the present how you take)

The offers we haue sent you.

Cesar. There's the point.

Ant. Which do not be entreated too,

But waigh what it is worth imbrac'd

Cesar. And what may follow to try a larger Fortune.

Pom. You haue made me offer

Of Cicilie, Sardinia: and I must

Rid all the Sea of Pirats. Then to send

Measures of Wheate to Rome: this greed vpon

To part with vnbackt edges, and beare backe

Our Targes vndinted.

Omnes. That's our offer.

Pom. Know then I came before you heere,

A man prepar'd

To take this offer. But Marke Anthony,

Put me to some impatience: though I loose

The praise of it by telling. You must know

When Cesar and your Brother were at blowes,

Your Mother came to Cicilie, and did finde

Her welcome Friendly.

Ant. I haue heard it Pompey,

And am well studied for a libell thank,

Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me haue your hand:

I did not thinke Sir, to haue met you heere,

Ant. The beds i'th East are soft, and thanks to you,

That call'd me timelier then my purpose hither:

For I haue gained by't.

Cesar. Since I saw you last, ther's a change vpon you.

Pom. Well, I know not,

What counts harsh Fortune cast's vpon my face,

But in my bosome shall she neuer come,

To make my heart her vassalle.

Lepi. Well met heere.

Pom. I hope so Lepidus, thus we are agreed:

I craue our composition may be written

And seal'd betweene vs,

Cesar. That's the next to do.

Pom. Wee'll feast each other ere we part, and lett's

Draw lots who shall begin.

Ant. That will I Pompey.

Pompey. No Anthony take the lot: but first or last,

your fine Egyptian cookerie shall haue the same, I haue heard that Iulius Cesar, grew fat with feasting there.

Anth. You haue heard much.

Pom. I haue faire meaning Sir.

Ant. And faire words to them.

Pom. Then so much haue I heard,

And I haue heard Appolodorus carried

Ene. No more that: he did so.

Four Feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand,
I neuer hated thee: I haue seene thee fight,
When I haue enuied thy behauiour.

Enob. Sir, I neuer lou'd you much, but I ha' prais'd ye,
When you haue well deseru'd ten times as much,
As I haue said you did.

Pom. Inioy thy plainnesse,
It nothing ill becomes thee:
Aboord my Gally, I inuite you all.
Will you leade Lords?

All. Shew's the way, sir.

Pom. Come. Exeunt. Marcellus, Enob. & Menas.

Men. Thy Father Pompey would ne're haue made this Treaty. You, and I haue knowne sir.

Enob. At Sea, I thinke.

Men. We haue Sir.

Enob. You haue done well by water.

Men. And you by Land.

Enob. I will praise any man that will praise me, though it cannot be denied what I haue done by Land.

Men. Nor what I haue done by water.

Enob. Yes some-thing you can deny for your owne safety: you haue bin a great Theefe by Sea,

Men. And you by Land.

Enob. There I deny my Land seruice: but giue mee your hand Menas, if our eyes had authority, heere they might take two Theeues killing.

Men. All mens faces are true, whatsomere their hands are.

Enob. But there is neuer a fayre Woman, ha's a true
Face.

Men. No slander, they steale hearts.

Enob. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turn'd to a Drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his Fortune.

Enob. If he do, sure he cannot weep't backe againe.

Men. Y'haue said Sir, we look'd not for Marke Anthony heere, pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Enob. Cesar's Sister is call'd Othania.

Men. True Sir, she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Enob. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray' ye sir.

Enob. 'Tis true.

Men. Then is Cesar and he, for euer knit together.

Enob. If I were bound to Diuine of this vniy, I wold not Prophecie so.

Men. I thinke the policy of that purpose, made more in the Marriage, then the loue of the parties.

Enob. I thinke so too. But you shall finde the band that seemes to tie their friendship together, will bee the very strangler of their Amity: Othania is of a holy, cold, and still conuersation.

Men. Who would not haue his wife so?

Enob. Not he that himselfe is not so: which is Marke Anthony: he will to his Egyptian dish againe: then shall the sighes of Othania blow the fire vp in Cesar, and (as I said before) that which is the strength of their Amity, shall proue the immediate Author of their variance. Anthony will vse his affection where it is. Hee married but his occasion heere.

Men. And thus it may be. Come Sir, will you aboard?
I haue a health for you.

Enob. I shall take it sir: we haue vs'd our Throats in Egypt: now we will vse them in Rome.

Men. Come, let's away. Exeunt.

Musicke plays.

Enter two or three Seruants with a Banquet.

1 Heere they'l be man: some o'th' their Plants are ill rooted already, the least winde i'th' world wil blow them downe.

2 Lepidus is high Conlord.

1 They haue made him drinke Almes drinke.

2 As they pinch one another by the disposition, hee cries out, no more; reconciles them to his entreatie, and himselfe to th'drinke.

1 But it raises the greater warre betweene him & his discretion.

2 Why this it is to haue a name in great mens Fellowship: I had as liue haue a Reede that will doe me no seruice, as a Partizan I could not heaue.

1 To be call'd into a huge Sphere, and not to be seene to moue i't, are the holes where eyes should bee, which pittifully disfigure the cheekes.

A Sennet sounded.

Enter Cesar, Anthony, Pompey, Lepidus, Agrippa, Decimus, Enobarbus, Menas, with other Captaines.

Ant. Thus do they Sir: they take the flow o'th' Nile
By certaine scales i'th' Pyramid: they know
By th' height, the lownesse, or the meane: If dearth
Or Foizon follow. The higher Nilus swells,
The more it promises: as it ebbes, the Seedman
Vpon the slime and Ooze scatters his graine,
And shortly comes to Haruest.

Lep. Y'haue strange Serpents there?

Ant. I Lepidus.

Lep. Your Serpent of Egypt, is bred now of your mud by the operation of your Sun: so is your Crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit, and some Wine: A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be:

But I'll nere out.

Enob. Not till you haue slept: I feare me you'll bee in till then.

Lep. Nay certainly, I haue heard the Ptolemies Pyramids are very goodly things: without contradiction I haue heard that.

Menas. Pompey, a word.

Pom. Say in mine eare, what it is.

Men. Forake thy seate I do beseech thee Captaine,
And heare me speake a word.

Pom. Forbeare me till anon. Whispers in's Eare.
This Wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o'thing is your Crocodile?

Ant. It is shap'd fir like it selfe, and it is as broad as it hath bredth: It is iust so high as it is, and mooues with it owne organs. It liues by that which nourisheth it, and the Elements once out of it, it Transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of it owne colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange Serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so, and the teares of it are wet.

Cas. Will this description satisfie him?

Ant. With the Health that Pompey giues him, else he is a very Epicure.

Pom. Go hang sir, hang: tell me of that? Away:
Do as I bid you. Where's this Cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the sake of Merit thou wilt heare mee,

Rise

Rise from thy stoole.

Pom. I thinke th'art mad: the matter?

Men. I haue euer held my cap off to thy Fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast seru'd me with much faith: what's else to say? Be iolly Lords.

Ant. These Quicke-sands Lepidus,

Keepe off, them for you sinke.

Men. Wilt thou be Lord of all the world?

Pom. What saist thou?

Men. Wilt thou be Lord of the whole world?
That's twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertaine it, and though thou thinke me
poore, I am the man will giue thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drinke well.

Men. No Pompey, I haue kept me from the cup,

Thou art if thou dar'st be, the earthly Ioue:

What ere the Ocean pales, or skie inclippes,

Is thine, if thou wilt ha't.

Pom. Shew me which way?

Men. These three World-sharers, these Competitors
Are in thy vessell. Let me cut the Cable,

And when we are put off, fall to their throates:

All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou shouldst haue done,
And not haue spoke on't. In me 'tis villanie,

In thee, 't had bin good seruice: thou must know,

'Tis not my profit that does lead mine Honour:

Mine Honour it, Repent that ere thy tongue,

Hath so betray'd thine acte. Being done vnkowne,

I should haue found it afterwards well done,

But must condemne it now: desist, and drinke.

Men. For this, I'll neuer follow

Thy paul'd Fortunes more,

Who seeks and will not take, when once 'tis offer'd,

Shall neuer finde it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus.

Ant. Beare him ashore,

I'll pledge it for him Pompey.

Enob. Heere's to thee Menas.

Men. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Enob. There's a strong Fellow Menas.

Men. Why?

Enob. A beares the third part of the world man: seest not?

Men. The third part, then he is drunk: would it were all, that it might go on wheelles.

Enob. Drinke thou: encrease the Reeles.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian Feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it: strike the Vessells ho.

Heere's to Cesar.

Cesar. I could well forbear't, it's monstrous labour when I wash my braine, and it grow fouler.

Ant. Be a Child o'th' time.

Cesar. Possesse it, I'll make answer: but I had rather fast from all, foure dayes, then drinke to much in one.

Enob. Ha my braue Emperour, shall we daunce now the Egyptian Backenals, and celebrate our drinke?

Pom. Let's ha't good Souldier.

Ant. Come, let's all take hands,
Till that the conquering Wine hath steep't our sense,

In soft and delicate Lethe.

Enob. All take hands:

Make battery to our eares with the loud Musicke,

The while, I'll place you, then the Boy shall sing.
The holding every man shall beate as loud,
As his strong sides can volly.

Musicke Plays. Enobarbus places them hand in hand,
The Song.

Come thou Monarch of the Vine,

Plumpie Bacchus, with pinke eyne:

In thy Fattes our Cares be drown'd,

With thy Grapes our haire be Crown'd.

Cup vs till the world go round,

Cup vs till the world go round.

Cesar. What would you more?

Pompey goodnight. Good Brother
Let me request you of our grauer businesse
Frowne at this leuitie. Gentle Lords let's part,
You see we haue burnt our cheekes. Strong Enobarbus
Is weaker then the Wine, and mine owne tongue
Spleet's what it speakes: the wilde disguise hath almost Antickt vs all. What needs more words? goodnight.
Good Anthony your hand.

Pom. I'll try you on the shore.

Ant. And shall Sir, giues your hand.

Pom. Oh Anthony, you haue my Father house.

But what, we are Friends?

Come downe into the Boate.

Enob. Take heed you fall not Menas: He not on those,

No to my Cabin: these Drummes,

These Trumpets, Flutes: what

Let Neptune heare, we bid aloud farewell

To these great Fellowes. Sound and be hang'd, found out.

Sound a Flourish with Drummes.

Enob. Hoo saies a there's my Cap.

Men. Hoa, Noble Captaine, come. Exeunt.

Enter Ventidius as it were in triumph, the dead body of Paco-rus borne before him.

Ven. Now darding Parthya art thou stroke, and now
Pleas'd Fortune does of Marcus Crassus death
Make me reuenger. Beare the Kings Sonnes body,
Before our Army thy Pacorus Orades,
Paies this for Marcus Crassus.

Romaine. Noble Ventidius,

Whil't yet with Parthian blood thy Sword is warme,
The Fugitiue Parthians follow. Spurre through Media,
Mesopotamia, and the shelters, whether
The routed flie. So thy grand Captaine Anthony Shall set thee on triumphant Chariots, and Put Garlands on thy head.

Ven. Oh Sillius, Sillius,

I haue done enough. A lower place note well

May make too great an act. For leaue this Sillius,

Better to leaue ydone, then by our deed

Acquire too high a Fame, when him we serues away.

Cesar and Anthony, haue euer wonne

More in their officer, then person. Soffius

One of my place in Syria, his Lieutenant,

For quicke accumulation of renowne,

Which he atchiu'd by th'minute, lost his fauour.

Who does i'th' Warres more then his Captaine can,

Becomes his Captaines Captaine: and Ambition

(The Souldiers vertue) rather makes choise of losse

Then gaine, which darkens him.

I could do more to do Anthony's good,

But 'twould offend him. And in his offence,

Should

Should my performance perish.

Rom. Thou hast Ventidius that, without the which a Souldier and his Sword graunts scarce distinction: thou wilt write to Anthony.

Ven. He humbly signifie what in his name, That magicall word of Warre we haue effected, How with his Banners, and his well paid ranks, The nere-yet beaten Horse of Parthia, We haue iaded out o'th Field.

Rom. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposeth to Athens, whither with what hast The waight we must conuay with's, will permit: We shall appeare before him. On there, passe along.

Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa at one doore, Enobarbus at another.

Agri. What are the Brothers parted?

Eno. They haue dispatcht with Pompey, he is gone, The other three are Sealing. Ostania weepes To part from Rome: Cesar is sad, and Lepidus Since Pompey's feast, as Menas saies, is troubled With the Greene-Sicknesse.

Agri. 'Tis a Noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: oh, how he loues Cesar.

Agri. Nay but how deere he adores Mark Anthony.

Eno. Cesar? why he's the Iupiter of men.

Ant. What's Anthony, the God of Iupiter?

Eno. Spake you of Cesar? How, the non-pareill?

Agri. Oh Anthony, oh thou Arabian Bird!

Eno. Would you praise Cesar, say Cesar go no further.

Agri. Indeed he plied them both with excellent praises.

Eno. But he loues Cesar best, yet he loues Anthony:

Hoo, Hearts, Tongues, Figure,

Scribes, Bards, Poets, cannot

Thinke speake, cast, write, sing, number: hoo,

His loue to Anthony. But as for Cesar,

Kneele downe, kneele downe, and wonder.

Agri. Both he loues.

Eno. They are his Shards, and he their Beetle, so:

This is to horse: Adieu, Noble Agrippa.

Agri. Good Fortune worthy Souldier, and farewell.

Enter Cesar, Anthony, Lepidus, and Ostania.

Antho. No further Sir.

Cesar. You take from me a great part of my selfe:

Vse me well in't. Sister, proue such a wife

As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest Band

Shall passe on thy approue: most Noble Anthony,

Let not the peece of Vertue which is set

Retwixt vs, as the Cyment of our loue

To keepe it builded, be the Ramme to batter

The Fortresse of it: for better might we

Haue lou'd without this meane, if on both parts

This be not cherisht.

Ant. Make me not offended, in your distrust.

Cesar. I haue said.

Ant. You shall not finde,

Though you be therein curious, the left cause

For what you seeme to feare, so the Gods keepe you,

And make the hearts of Romaines serue your ends:

We will heere part.

Cesar. Farewell my deere Sister, fare thee well,

The Elements be kind to thee, and make

Thy spirits all of comfort: fare thee well.

Ostia. My Noble Brother.

Anth. The Aprill's in her eyes, it is Loues spring,

And these the showers to bring it on: be cheerefull.

Ostia. Sir, looke well to my Husbands house: and—
Cesar. What Ostania?

Ostia. He tell you in your eare.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can Her heart informe her tougue.

The Swannes downe feather

That stands vpon the Swell at the full of Tide;

And neither way inclines.

Eno. Will Cesar weep?

Agri. He ha's a cloud in's face.

Eno. He were the worse for that were he a Horse, so is he being a man.

Agri. Why Enobarbus:

When Anthony found Julius Cesar dead,

He cried almost to roaring: And he wept,

When at Philippi he found Brutus slaine.

Eno. That year indeed, he was troubled with a rheume,

What willingly he did confound, he wail'd,

Beleeu't till I weep too.

Cesar. No sweet Ostania,

You shall heare from me still: the time shall not

Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come Sir, come,

He wrastle with you in my strength of loue,

Looke heere I haue you, thus I let you go,

And giue you to the Gods.

Cesar. Adieu, be happy.

Lep. Let all the number of the Starres giue light

To thy faire way.

Cesar. Farewell, farewell.

Ant. Farewell. Trumpets sound. Kisses Ostania. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is the Fellow?

Alex. Halfe afeard to come.

Cleo. Go too, go too: Come hither Sir.

Enter the Messenger as before.

Alex. Good Maiestie: Herod of Iury dare not look upon you, but when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head, Ile haue: but how? When

Anthony is gone, through whom I might commaund it;

Come thou neere.

Mes. Most gracious Maiestie.

Cleo. Did'st thou behold Ostania?

Mes. I dread Queene.

Cleo. Where?

Mes. Madam in Rome, I lookt her in the face: and saw her led betwene her Brother, and Mark Anthony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?

Mes. She is not Madam.

Cleo. Didst heere her speake?

Is the shrill tongu'd or low?

Mes. Madam, I heard her speake, she is low voic'd.

Cleo. That's not so good: he cannot like her long.

Char. Like her? Oh Iris: 'tis impossible.

Cleo. I thinke so Charmian: dull of tongue, & dwarfish

What Maiestie is in her gate, remember

If ere thou look'st on Maiestie.

Mes. She creepes: her motion, & her station are as one:

She shewes a body, rather then a life,

A Statue, then a Breather.

Cleo. Is this certaine?

Mes. Or I haue no obseruance.

Cha. Three in Egypt cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing, I do perceiue't,

There's nothing in her yet.

The

The Fellow ha's good iudgement.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guesse at her yeares, I prythee.

Mes. Madam, she was a widdow.

Cleo. Widdow? Charmian, hearken.

Mes. And I do thinke she's thirtie.

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is't long or round?

Mes. Round, euen to faultinesse.

Cleo. For the most part too, they are foolish that are so.

Her haire what colour?

Mes. Browne Madam: and her forehead

As low as she would wish it.

Cleo. There's Gold for thee,

Thou must not take my former sharpnesse ill,

I will employ thee backe againe: I finde thee

Most fit for businesse. Go, make thee ready,

Our Letters are prepar'd.

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed he is so: I repent me much

That so I harried him. Why me think's by him,

This Creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing Madam.

Cleo. The man hath scene some Maiestie, and should know.

Char. Hath he scene Maiestie? Iris else defend: and seruing you so long.

Cleo. I haue one thing more to aske him yet good

Charmian: but 'tis no matter, thou shalt bring him to me where I will write; all may be well enough.

Char. I warrant you Madam. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Ostania.

Ant. Nay, nay Ostania, not onely that,

That were excusable, that and thousands more

Of semblable import, but he hath wag'd

New Warres 'gainst Pompey. Made his will, and read it,

To publike eare, spoke scantily of me,

When perforce he could not

But pay me tearmes of Honour: cold and sickly

He vented then most narrow measure; lent me,

When the best hint was giuen him: he not look't,

Or did it from his teeth.

Ostia. Oh my good Lord,

Beleeue not all, or if you must beleeue,

Stomacke not all. A more vnhappy Lady,

If this deuision chance, ne're stood betwene

Praying for both parts:

The good Gods wil mocke me presently,

When I shall pray: Oh blesse my Lord, and Husband,

Vndo that prayer, by crying out as loud,

Oh blesse my Brother. Husband winne, winne Brother,

Prayes, and distroyes the prayer, he midway

'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Ostania,

Let your best loue draw to that point which seeks

Best to preferre it: if I lose mine Honour,

I lose my selfe: better I were not yours

Then your so branchlesse. But as you requested,

Your selfe shall go between's, the meane time Lady,

Ile raise the preparation of a Warre

Shall staine your Brother, make your soonest hast,

So your desires are yours.

Ostia. Thanks to my Lord,

The loue of power make me most weake, most weake,

You reconciler: Warres 'twixt you twaine would be,

As if the world should cleaue, and that slaine men

Should soader vpon the Rift.

Anth. When it appeeres to you where this begins,

Turne your displeasure that way, for our fautes

Can neuer be so equall, that your loue

Can equally moue with them. Prouide your going,

Chooose your owne company, and command what cost

Your heart he's mind too. Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus, and Eros.

Eno. How now Friend Eros?

Eros. Ther's strange Newes come Sir.

Eno. What man?

Eros. Cesar & Lepidus haue made warres vpon Pompey.

Eno. This is old, what is the successe?

Eros. Cesar hauing made vse of him in the warres

'gainst Pompey, presently denied him riuallry, would not let him partake in the glory of the action, and not resting here, accuses him of Letters he had formerly wrote to

Pompey. Vpon his owne appeale seizes him, so the poore chird is vp, till death enlarge his Confinde.

Eno. Then would thou hadst a paire of chapsn's more, and throw betwene them all the food thou hast, they'd geinde the other. Where's Anthony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden thus, and spurnes

The ruff that lies before him. Cries Foole Lepidus,

And threatens the throte of that his Officer,

That murdered Pompey.

Eno. Our great Nauies rig'd.

Eros. For Italy and Cesar, more Domitius,

My Lord desires you presently: my Newes

I might haue told heereafter.

Eno. 'Twill be naught, but let it be: bring me to Anthony.

Eros. Come Sir. Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa, Mecenas, and Cesar.

Ces. Contemning Rome he ha's done all this, & more

In Alexandria: heere's the manner of't:

I'th Market-place on a Tribunal siluer'd,

Cleopatra and himselfe in Chaires of Gold

Were publiquely enthron'd: at the feet, sat

Cesarion whom they call my Fathers Sonne,

And all the vnlawfull issue, that their Lust

Since then hath made betwene them. Vnto her,

He gaue the stablishment of Egypt, made her

Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia, absolute Queene.

Mec. This in the publike eye?

Cesar. I'th common shew place, where they exercise,

His Sonnes hither proclaimed the King of Kings,

Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia

He gaue to Alexander. To Ptolemy he assign'd,

Syria, Silicia, and Phoenetia: she

In th'abiliments of the Goddesse Iris

That day appear'd, and oft before gaue audience,

As 'tis reported so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus inform'd.

Agri. Who queazie with his insolence already,

Will their good thoughts call from him.

Cesar. The people knowes it,

And haue now receiu'd his accusations.

That he his high Authority abus'd,
And did deserue his change: for what I haue conquer'd,
I grant him part: but then in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd Kingdoms, I demand the like

Mec. Hee'l neuer yeeld to that.

Ces. Nor must not then be yeelded to in this.

Enter Octavia with her Traine.

Octa. Haile Caesar, and my L. haile most deere Caesar.

Cesar. That euer I should call thee Cast-away.

Octa. You haue not call'd me so, nor haue you cause.

Ces. Why haue you stoln vpon vs thus? you come not Like Cesar's Sister, The wife of Anthony
Should haue an Army for an Vther, and
The neighes of Horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appeare. The trees by th' way
Should haue borne men, and expectation fainted,
Longing for what it had not. Nay, the dust
Should haue ascended to the Roofe of Heauen,
Rais'd by your populous Troopes: But you are come
A Market-maid to Rome, and haue prevented
The ostentation of our loue; which left vnshewne,
Is often left vnlo'd: we should haue met you
By Sea, and Land, supplying euery Stage
With an augmented greeting.

Octa. Good my Lord,
To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My Lord Marke Anthony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for Warre, acquainted
My greued care withall: whereon I begg'd
His pardon for returne.

Ces. Which soone he granted,
Being an abstract' twene his Lust, and him.

Octa. Do not say so, my Lord.

Ces. I haue eyes vpon him,
And his affaires come to me on the wind: wher is he now?

Octa. My Lord, in Athens.

Cesar. No my most wronged Sister, Cleopatra
Hath nodded him to her. He hath giuen his Empire
Vp to a Whore, who now are leuying
The Kings o'th' earth for Warre. He hath assembled,
Bochus the King of Lybia, Archilanus
Of Cappadocia, Philadelphus King
Of Paphlagonia: the Thracian King Adullas,
King Mauchus of Arabia, King of Pont,
Herod of Iewry, Mithridates King
Of Comagear, Polemon and Aminius,
The Kings of Mede, and Licoania,
With a more larger List of Scepters.

Octa. Aye me most wretched,
That haue my heart parted betwixt two Friends,
That does afflict each other.

Ces. Welcome hither: your Letters did with-holde our Till we percei'd both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger: cheere your heart,
Be you not troubled with the time, which driues
O're your content, these strong necessities,
But let determin'd things to destinie
Hold vnbeuayl'd their way. Welcome to Rome,
Nothing more deere to me: You are abus'd
Beyond the marke of thought: and the high Gods
To do you Iustice, makes his Ministers
Of vs, and thate that loue you. Best of comfort,
And euer welcom to vs.

Mec. Welcome deere Madam,
Each heart in Rome does loue and pittie you,
Onely th' adulterous Anthony, most large

In his abominations, turnes you off,
And giues his potent Regiment to a Trull
That noyses it against vs.

Octa. Is it so fit?
Ces. Most certaine: Sister welcome: pray you
Be euer knowne to patience. My deere Sister.

Enter Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.

Cleo. I will be euen with thee, doubt it not.

Eno. But why, why, why?

Cleo. Thou hast forespoke my being in these warres,
And say'st it is not fit.

Eno. Well: is it, is it.

Cleo. If not, denounc'd against vs, why should not we be there in person.

Eno. Well, I could reply: if wee should serue with Horse and Mares together, the Horse were meeterly lost:
the Mares would beare a Souldiour and his Horse.

Cleo. What is't you say?

Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Anthony,
Take from his heart, take from his Braine, from's time,
What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for Leuitie, and 'tis said in Rome,
That Photinus an Eunuch, and your Majdes
Mannage this warre.

Cleo. Sinke Rome, and their tongues rot
That speake against vs. A Charge we beare i'th' Warre,
And as the president of my Kingdome will Appeare there for a man. Speake not against it,
I will not stay behinde.

Enter Anthony and Camidius.

Eno. Nay I haue done, here comes the Emperor.

Ant. Is it not strange Camidius,

That from Tarrentum, and Brandusium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian Sea,
And take in Troine. You haue heard on't (Sweet?)

Cleo. Celerity is neuer more admir'd,

Then by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,

Which might haue well becom'd the best of men
To taunt at slacknesse. Camidius, wee
Will fight with him by Sea.

Cleo. By Sea, what else?

Ant. Why will my Lord, do so?

Ant. For that he dares vs too't.

Eno. So hath my Lord, dar'd him to single fight,
Cam. I, and to wage this Battell at Pharosia.

Where Cesar fought with Pompey. But these offers
Which serue not for his vantage, he shakes off,
And so should you.

Eno. Your Shippes are not well mann'd,
Your Marriners are Milites, Reapers, people
Ingroft by swift Impresse. In Cesar's Fleete,
Are those, that often haue gainst Pompey fought,
Their shippes are yare, yours heavy: no disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at Sea,
Being prepar'd for Land.

Ant. By Sea, by Sea.

Eno. Most worthy Sir, you therein throw away
The absolute Soldiership you haue by Land,
Distract your Armie, which doth most consist
Of Warre-markt-footmen, leaue vnexecuted
Your owne renowned knowledge, quite forgoe
The way which promises assurance, and Giue vp your selfe meeterly to chance and hazard,
From firme Securitie.

Ant. He fight at Sea.

Cleo. I haue sixty Sailes, Cesar none better.

Ant. Our ouer-plus of shipping will we burne,
And with the rest full mann'd, from th' head of Aetion
Beate th' approaching Cesar. But if we faile,
We then can doo't at Land.

Enter a Messenger.
Mes. The Newes is true, my Lord, he is descried,
Cesar ha's taken Toryne.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'Tis impossible
Strange, that his power should be. Camidius,
Our nineteene Legions thou shalt hold by Land,
And our twelue thousand Horse. Wee'l to our Ship,
Away my Tibetis.

Enter a Souldiour.

How now worthy Souldier?

Soul. Oh Noble Emperor, do not fight by Sea,
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you misdoubt
This Sword, and these my Wounds; let th' Egyptians
And the Phenicians go a ducking: wee
Haue vs'd to conquer standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away. exit Ant, Cleo, & Eno.

Soul. By Hercules I thinke I am i'th' right.

Cam. Souldier thou art: but his whole action growes
Not in the power on't: so our Leaders leade,
And we are Womens men.

Soul. You keepe by Land the Legions and the Horse whole, do you not?

Gen. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Iustus,
Publicola, and Celsus, are for Sea:

But wee keepe whole by Land. This speede of Cesar's
Carries beyond beleefe.

Soul. While he was yet in Rome.

His power went out in such distractions,
As beguilde all Spies.

Cam. Who's his Lieutenant, heare you?

Soul. They say, one Towrus.

Cam. Well, I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The Emperor calls Camidius.

Cam. With Newes the times with Labour,
And throwes forth each minute, some.

Enter Cesar with his Army, marching.

Ces. Towrus?

Tow. My Lord.

Ces. Strike not by Land,

Keepe whole, prouoke not Battaille

Till we haue done at Sea. Do not excede

The Prescript of this Scroule: Our fortune lyes

Vpon this iumpe. exit.

Enter Anthony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Set we our Squadrons on yond side o'th' Hill,
In eye of Cesar's battaille, from which place

We may the number of the Ships behold,

And so proceed accordingly. exit.

Camidius Marcheth with his Land Army one way ouer the stage, and Towrus the Lieutenant of Cesar the other way:
After their going in, is heard the noise of a Sea fight.

Alarm. Enter Enobarbus and Scarrus.

Eno. Naught, naught, al naught, I can behold no longer:
Thantonias, the Egyptian Admirall,

With all their sixty flye, and turne the Rudder:

To see't, mine eyes are blasted.

Enter Scarrus.

Scar. Gods, & Goddesses, all the whol synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion.

Scar. The greater Cattle of the world, is lost
With very ignorance, we haue kist away
Kingdomes, and Prouinces.

Eno. How appears the Fight?

Scar. On our side, like the Token'd Pestilence,
Where death is sure. Yon ribaudred Nagge of Egypt,
(Whom Leprosie o're-take) i'th' midst o'th' fight,
When vantage like a payre of Twinnes appear'd
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder;
(The Breeze vpon her) like a Cow in Inne,
Hoists Sailes, and flies.

Eno. That I beheld:

Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Indure a further view.

Scar. She once being looft,

The Noble ruine of her Magicke, Anthony,
Claps on his Sea-wing, and (like a doting Mallard)
Leauing the Fight in height, flies after her:
I neuer saw an Action of such shame;
Experience, Man-hood, Honor, ne're before,
Did violate so it selfe.

Eno. Alacke, alacke.

Enter Camidius.

Cam. Our Fortune on the Sea is out of breath,
And sinke most lamentably. Had our Generall
Bin what he knew himselfe, it had gone well:
Oh his ha's giuen example for our flight,
Most grossely by his owne.

Eno. I, are you thereabouts? Why then goodnight indeede.

Cam. Toward Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. 'Tis easie too't,

And there I will attend what further comes.

Camid. To Cesar will I render

My Legions and my Horse, fixe Kings aheadie

Shew me the way of yeelding.

Eno. He yet follow

The wounded chance of Anthony, though my reason
Sits in the winde against me.

Enter Anthony with Attendants.

Ant. Hearke the Land bids me tread no more vpon't,
It is asham'd to beare me. Friends, come hither,
I am so lated in the world, that I
Haue lost my way for euer. I haue a shippe,
Laden with Gold, take that, diuide it: flye,
And make your peace with Cesar.

Omnes. Fly? Nor wee.

Ant. I haue fled my selfe, and haue instructed cowards
To runne, and shew their shoulders. Friends be gone,
I haue my selfe resolu'd vpon a counse,
Which has no neede of you. Be gone,
My Treasure's in the Harbour. Take it: Oh,
I follow'd that I blush to looke vpon,
My very haire do mutiny: for the white
Reproue the browne for rashnesse, and they them
For feare, and doting. Friends be gone, you shall Haue Letters from me to some Friends, that will Sweepe your way for you. Pray you looke not sad,
Nor make replies of loathnesse, take the hint
Which my dispaire proclaimes. Let them be left
Which leaues it selfe, to the Sea-side straight way:
I will possesse you of that ship and Treasure.

Leave me, I pray a little: pray you now,
Nay do so: for indeede I haue lost command,
Therefore I pray you, I see you by and by. Sits downe

Enter Cleopatra led by Charmian and Eros.

Eros. Nay gentle Madam, to him, comfort him.

Iras. Do most deere Queene.

Char. Do, why, what else?

Cleo. Let me sit downe: Oh Imo.

Ant. No, no, no, no.

Eros. See you heere, Sir?

Ant. Oh fie, fie, fie.

Char. Madam.

Iras. Madam, oh good Empresse.

Eros. Sir, sir.

Ant. Yes my Lord, yes; he at Philippi kept
His sword e'ne like a dancer, while I strooke
The leane and wrinkled Cassius, and 'twas I
That the mad Brutus ended: he alone
Dealt on Lieutenantry, and no practise had
In the braue squares of Warre: yet now: no matter.

Cleo. Ah stand by.

Eros. The Queene my Lord, the Queene.

Iras. Go to him, Madam, speake to him,
Hee's vnqualited with very shame.

Cleo. Well then, sustaine me: Oh.

Eros. Most Noble Sir arise, the Queene approaches,
Her head's declin'd, and death will cease her, but
Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I haue offended Reputation,
A most vnnoble swearing.

Eros. Sir, the Queene.

Ant. Oh whether hast thou lead me Egypt, see
How I conuey my shame, out of thine eyes,
By looking backe what I haue left behinde
Stroy'd in dishonor.

Cleo. Oh my Lord, my Lord,
Forgiue my fearfull sayles, I little thought
You would haue followed.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well,
My heart was to thy Rudder tyed by th'strings,
And thou should'st stowe me after. O're my spirit
The full supremacie thou knew'st, and that Thy becke, might from the bidding of the Gods Command mee.

Cleo. Oh my pardon.

Ant. Now I must

To the young man send humble Treaties, dodge
And palter in the shifts of lownes, who
With halfe the bulke o'th' world plaid as I pleas'd, Making, and marring Fortunes. You did know
How much you were my Conqueror, and that My Sword, made weake by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon.

Ant. Fall not a teare I say, one of them rates
All that is wonne and lost: Giue me a kisse,
Euen th' repayes me.

We sent our Schoolemaster, is a come backe?

Loue I am full of Lead: some Wine

Within there, and our Viands: Fortune knowes,

We scorn her most, when most she offers blowes. Exeunt

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Dolabella with others.

Caes. Let him appeare that's come from Anthony.
Know you him.

Dolla. Caesar, 'tis his Schoolemaster,
An argument that he is pluckt, when hither
He sends so poore a Pinnion of his Wing,
Which had superfluous Kings for Messengers,
Not many Moones gone by.

Enter Ambassador from Anthony.

Caesar. Approach, and speake.

Amb. Such as I am, I come from Anthony:

I was of late as petty to his ends,

As is the Morn-dew on the Mertle leafe

To his grand Sea.

Caes. Bee't so, declare thine office.

Amb. Lord of his Fortunes he salutes thee, and Requires to liue in Egypt, which not granted

He Lessons his Requests, and to thee sues

To let him breath betweene the Heauens and Earth

A priuate man in Athens: this for him.

Next, Cleopatra does confesse thy Greatnesse,

Submits her to thy might, and of thee craues

The Circle of the Ptolomies for her heyres,

Now hazarded to thy Grace.

Caes. For Anthony,

I haue no eares to his request. The Queene,

Of Audience, nor Desire shall faile, so thee

From Egypt driue her all-disgraced Friend,

Or take his life there. This if thee performe,

She shall not sue vnheard. So to them both.

Amb. Fortune pursue thee.

Caes. Bring him through the Bands:

To try thy Eloquence, now 'tis time, dispatch,

From Anthony winne Cleopatra, promise

And in our Name, what she requires, adde more

From thine inuention, offers. Women are not

In their best Fortunes strong; but want will perjure

The ne're touch'd Vestall. Try thy cunning Thidias,

Make thine owne Edict for thy paines, which we Will answer as a Law.

Thid. Caesar, I go.

Caesar. Obserue how Anthony becomes his slaw,

And what thou think'st 'tis very action speakes

In every power that mooues.

Thid. Caesar, I shall.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, & Iras.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eros. Thinke, and dye.

Cleo. Is Anthony, or we in fault for this?

Eros. Anthony onely, that would make his will

Lord of his Reason. What though you fled,

From that great face of Warre, whose feuerall ranges

Frighted each other? Why should he follow?

The itch of his Affection should not then

Have nickt his Captain-ship, at such a point,

When halfe to halfe the world oppos'd, he being

The meered question? 'Twas a shame no lesse

Then was his losse, to course your flying Flagges,

And leaue his Nauy gazing.

Cleo. Prythee peace.

Enter the Ambassador with Anthony.

Ant. Is that his answer?

Ant. The Queene shall then haue courtesie,

So she will yeeld vs vp.

Amb. He sayes so.

Ant. Let her know't. To the Boy Caesar send this grizled head, and he will fill thy wishes to the brimme,

With Principalities.

Cleo. That head my Lord?

Ant. To him againe, tell him he weares the Rose
Of youth vpon him: from which, the world should note
Something particular: His Coine, Ships, Legions,
May be a Cowards, whose Ministers would preuaile
Vnder the seruice of a Childe, as soone

As 'th' Command of Caesar. I dare him therefore

To lay his gay Comparisons a-part,

And answer me declin'd, Sword against Sword,

Our selues alone: He write it: Follow me.

Eros. Yes like enough: hie battel'd Caesar will

Vastate his happinesse, and be Stag'd to th' shew

Against a Swordsman. I see mens iudgements are

A parcell of their Fortunes, and things outward

Do draw the inward quality after them

To suffer all alike, that he should dreame,

Knowing all measures, the full Caesar will Answer his emprinisse; Caesar thou hast subdu'd

His iudgement too.

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. A Messenger from Caesar.

Cleo. What no more Ceremony? See my Women,

Against the blow'd Rose may they stop their nose,

That knel'd vnto the Buds. Admit him sir.

Eros. Mine honesty, and I, beginne to square,

The Loyalty well held to Fooles, does make

Our Faith meere folly: yet he that can endure

To follow with Allegiance a false Lord,

Does conquer him that did his Master conquer,

And earne a place 'th' Story.

Enter Thidias.

Cleo. Caesar will.

Thid. Heare it apart.

Cleo. None but Friends: say boldly.

Thid. So haply are they Friends to Anthony.

Eros. He needs as many (Sir) as Caesar ha's,

Or needs not vs. If Caesar please, our Master

Will leape to be his Friend: For vs you know,

Whose he is, we are, and that is Caesar.

Thid. So: Thus then thou most renown'd, Caesar intreats,

Not to consider in what case thou stand'st

Further then he is Caesar.

Cleo. Go on, right Royall.

Thid. He knowes that you embrace not Anthony

As you did loue, but as you feared him.

Cleo. Oh.

Thid. The scarre's vpon your Honor, therefore he Does pittie, as constrained blemishes,

Not as deserued.

Cleo. He is a God,

And knowes what is most right. Mine Honour

Was not yeilded, but conquer'd meereely.

Eros. To be sure of that, I will aske Anthony.

Sir, sir, thou art so leakie

That we must leaue thee to thy sinking, for

Thy deereest quit thee. Exit Eros.

Thid. Shall I say to Caesar,

What you require of him: for he partly begges

To be desir'd to giue. It much would please him,

That of his Fortunes you should make a staffe

To leane vpon: But it would warme his spinit

To heare from me you had left Anthony,

And put your selfe vnder his shrowd, the vniuersal Land-

Cleo. What's your name?

Thid. My name is Thidias.

Cleo. Most kinde Messenger,

Say to great Caesar this in disputation,

I kisse his conqu'ring hand: Tell him, I am prompt
To lay my Crowne at's feete, and there to kneele.
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath, I heare
The doome of Egypt.

Thid. 'Tis your Nobiest course:

Wisdom and Fortune combatting together,

If that the former dare but what it can,

No chance may shake it. Giue me grace to lay

My dutie on your hand.

Cleo. Your Caesar's Father oft,

(When he hath mus'd of taking kingdomes in)

Bestow'd his lips on that vnworthy place,

As it rain'd kisses.

Enter Anthony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Fawours? By Ioue that thunders. What art thou?

Thid. One that but performs (Fellow?)

The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest

To haue command obey'd.

Eros. You will be whipt.

Ant. Approch there: ah you Kite. Now Gods & diuels

Authority melts from me of late. When I cried hoa,

Like Boyes vnto a moule, Kings would start forth,

And cry, your will. Haue you no eares?

I am Anthony yet. Take hence this Iack, and whip him.

Enter a Seruant.

Eros. 'Tis better playing with a Lions whelp,

Then with an old one dying.

Ant. Moone and Starres,

Whip him: were twenty of the greatest Tributaries

That do acknowledge Caesar, should I finde them

So sawcy with the hand of the heere, what's her name

Since she was Cleopatra? Whip him Fellowes,

Till like a Boy you see him cringe his face,

And whine aloud for mercy. Take him hence.

Thid. Marke Anthony.

Ant. Tugge him away: being whipt

Bring him againe, the Iacke of Caesar's shall Beare vs an arrant to him. Exeunt with Thidias.

You were halfe blasted ere I knew you: ha?

Haue I my pillow left vnprest in Rome,

Forborne the getting of a lawfull Race,

And by a Iem of women, to be abus'd

By one that lookes on Feeders?

Cleo. Good my Lord.

Ant. You haue beene a boggler euer,

But when we in our viciousnesse grow hard

(Oh misery on't) the wife Gods feele our eyes

In our owne filth, drop our cleare iudgements, make vs

Adore our errors, laugh at's while we strut

To our confusion.

Cleo. Oh, is't come to this?

Ant. I found you as a Morfell, cold vpon

Dead Caesar's Trencher: Nay, you were a Fragment

Of Gneius Pompey, besides what hotter houres

Vnregistred in vulgar Fame, you haue

Luxuriously pickt out. For I am sure,

Though you can guesse what Temperance should be,

You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a Fellow that will take rewards,

And say, God quit you, be familiar with

My play-fellow, your hand; this Kingly Scale,

And pighter of high hearts. O that I were

Vpon the hill of Babylon, to out-roare

The horned Heard, for I haue sauege cause,

And to proclaime it ciuilly, were like

A halter'd necke, which do's the Hangman thanke,
For being yare about him. Is he whipt?

Enter a Seruant with Thidias.

Ser. Soundly, my Lord.

Ant. Cried he? and begg'd a Pardon?

Ser. He did aske fauour.

Ant. If that thy Father liue, let him repent
Thou was't not made his daughter, and be thou sorrie
To follow Caesar in his Triumph, since
Thou hast bin whipt. For following him, henceforth
The white hand of a Lady feauer thee,
Shake thou to looke on't. Get thee backe to Caesar,
Tell him thy entertainment: looke thou say
He makes me angry with him. For he seemes
Proud and disdainfull, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. He makes me angry,
And at this time most easie 'tis to doo't:
When my good Statues, that were my former guides
Haue empty left their Orbes, and thot their Fires
Into th' Abisme of hell. If he mislike,
My speech, and what is done, tell him he has Hiparchus, my enfranchised Bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like to quit me. Vrgé it thou:
Hence with thy stripes, be gone. Exit Thid.

Cleo. Haue you done yet?

Ant. Alacke our Terrene Moone is now Eclipse,
And it portends alone the fall of Anthony.

Cleo. I must stay his time?

Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes
With one that tyes his points,

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah (Deere) if I be so,
From my cold heart let Heauen ingender haile,
And poyson it in the soule, and the first stone
Drop in my necke: as it determines so
Dissolue my life, the next Caesarian soule,
Till by degrees the memory of my wombe,
Together with my braue Egyptians all,
By the discandering of this pelleted storme,
Lye grauelesse, till the Flies and Gnats of Nyle
Haue buried them for prey.

Ant. I am satisfied:

Caesar sets downe in Alexandria, where
I will oppose his Fate. Our force by Land,
Hath Nobly held, our feuer'd Naue too
Haue knir againe, and Fleete, threatening most Sea-like.
Where hast thou bin my heart? Dost thou heare Lady?
If from the Field I shall retorne once more
To kisse these Lips, I will appeare in Blood,
I, and my Sword, will earne our Chronicle,
There's hope in't yet.

Cleo. That's my braue Lord.

Ant. I will be trebble-sinewed, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously: for when mine houres
Were nice and lucky, men did ranfome liues
Of me for iests: But now, Ile set my teeth,
And send to darkenesse all that stop me. Come,
Let's haue one other gawdy night: Call to me
All my sad Captaines, fill our Bowles once more:
Let's mocke the midnight Bell.

Cleo. It is my Birth-day,

I had thought I haue held it poore. But since my Lord
Is Anthony againe, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his Noble Captaines to my Lord,
Ant. Do so, wee'l speake to them,

And to night Ile force
The Wine peepe through their scarres:
Come on (my Queene)

There's sap in't yet. The next time I do fight
Ile make death loue me: for I will contend
Euen with his pestilent Syde.

Eno. Now hee'l out-stare the Lightning, to be furious
Is to be frighted out of feare, and in that moode
The Doue will pecke the Estridge; and I see still
A diminution in our Captaines braine,
Restores his heart; when valour prayes in reason,
It eates the Sword it fights with: I will seeke
Some way to leaue him. Exeunt.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, & Mecenat with his Army, Caesar reading a Letter.

Ces. He calles me Boy, and chides as he had power
To beate me out of Egypt. My Messenger
He hath whipt with Rods, dares me to personal Combat.
Caesar to Anthony: let the old Russian know,
I haue many other wayes to dye: meane time
Laugh at his Challenge.

Meca. Caesar must thinke,
When one so great begins to rage, hee's hunted
Euen to falling. Giue him no breath, but now
Make boote of his distraction: Neuer anger
Made good guard for it selfe.

Ces. Let our best heads know,
That to morrow, the last of many Battailes
We meane to fight. Within our Files there are,
Of those that seru'd Marke Anthony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it done,
And Feast the Army, we haue store to doo't,
And they haue earn'd the waste, Poore Anthony. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, Iras, Alexas, with others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitian?

Eno. No?

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better fortune,
He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To morrow Soldier,
By Sea and Land Ile fight: or I will liue,
Or bathe my dying Honor in the blood
Shall make it liue againe. Woo't thou fight well.

Eno. Ile strike, and cry, Take all.

Ant. Well said, come on:

Call forth my Household Seruants, lets to night

Enter 3 or 4 Seruants.

Be bounteous at our Meale. Giue me thy hand,
Thou hast bin rightly honest, so hast thou,
Thou, and thou, and thou: you haue seru'd me well,
And Kings haue benee your fellowes.

Cleo. What meane this?

Eno. 'Tis one of those odde tricks which sorow shoots
Out of the minde.

Ant. And thou art honest too:

I wish I could be made so many men,
And all of you clapt vp together, in
An Anthony: that I might do you seruice,
So good as you haue done. Omnes.

Omnes. The Gods forbid.

Ant. Well, my good Fellowes, wait on me to night:
Scant not my Cups, and make as much of me:
As when mine Empire was your Fellow too,
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. What does he meane?

Eno. To make his Followers weepe.

Ant. Tend me to night;

May be, it is the period of your duty,
Haply you shall not see me more, or if,
A mangled shadow. Perchance to morrow,
You'll serue another Master. I looke on you,
As one that takes his leaue. Mine honest Friends,
I turne you not away, but like a Master
Married to your good seruice, stay till death:
Tend me to night two houres, I aske no more,
And the Gods yeeld you for't.

Eno. What meane you (Sir)

To giue them this discomfort? Looke they weepe,
And I an Asse, am Onyon-cy'd; for shame,
Transforme vs not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho:

Now the Witch take me, if I meant it thus.
Grace grow where those drops fall (my hearty Friends)
You take me in too dolorous a sence,
For I spake to you for your comfort, did desire you
To burne this night with Torches: Know (my hearts)
I hope well of to morrow, and will leade you,
Where rather Ile expect victorious life,
Then death, and Honor. Let's to Supper, come,
And drowne consideration. Exeunt.

Enter a Company of Soldiours.

1. Sol. Brother, goodnight: to morrow is the day.

2. Sol. It will determine one way: Fare you well.
Heard you of nothing strange about the streets.

1. Nothing: what newes?

2. Belike 'tis but a Rumour, good night to you.

1. Well fir, good night.

They meete other Soldiours.

2. Soldiours, haue carefull Watch.

1. And you: Goodnight, goodnight.

They place themselves in euery corner of the Stage.

2. Heere we: and if to morrow

Our Naue thrue, I haue an absolute hope
Our Landmen will stand vp.

1. 'Tis a braue Army, and full of purpose.

Musicke of the Hoboyes is under the Stage.

2. Peace, what noise?

1. I list, list.

2. Hearke.

1. Musicke i'th' Ayre,

2. Vnder the earth.

4. It signes well, do's it not?

3. No.

1. Peace I say: What should this meane?

2. 'Tis the God Hercules, whom Anthony loued,
Now leaues him.

1. Walke, let's see if other Watchmen

Do heare what we do?

2. How now Masters?

Speak together.

Omnes. How now? how now? do you heare this?

1. I, is't not strange?

3. Do you heare Masters? Do you heare?

1. Follow the noyse so farre as we haue quarter.

Let's see how it will giue off.

Omnes. Content: 'Tis strange. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Cleopatra, with others.

Ant. Eros, mine Armour Eros.

Cleo. Sleepe a little.

Ant. No my Chucke. Eros, come mine Armour Eros.

Enter Eros.

Come good Fellow, put thine Iron on,

If Fortune be not ours to day, it is Because we braue her. Come.

Cleo. Nay, Ile helpe too, Anthony.

What's this for? Ah let be, let be, thou art

The Armourer of my heart: False, false: This, this,

Sooth-law Ile helpe: Thus it must bee.

Ant. Well, well, we shall thrue now.

See't thou my good Fellow. Go, put on thy defences,

Eros. Briefely Sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled well?

Ant. Rarely, rarely:

He that unbuckles this, till we do please

To dast for our Repose, shall heare a storme.

Thou fumblest Eros, and my Queenes a Squire

More tight at this, then thou: Dispatch. O Loue,

That thou couldst see my Warres to day, and knew'st

The Royall Occupation, thou should'st see

A Workeman in't. Enter an Armed Soldier.

Good morrow to thee, welcome,

Thou look'st like him that knowes a warlike Charge:

To businesse that we loue, we rise betime,

And go too't with delight.

Soul. A thousand Sir, early thought't be, haue on their Riueted trim, and at the Port expect you. Shows.

Trumpets Flourish.

Enter Captaines, and Soldiours.

Alex. The Morne is faire: Good morrow Generall.

All. Good morrow Generall.

Ant. 'Tis well blowne Lads.

This Morning, like the spirit of a youth

That meane to be of note, begins betimes.

So, so: Come giue me that, this way, well-fed.

Fare thee well Dame, what ere becomes of me,

This is a Soldiers kisse: rebukeable,

And worthy shamefull checke it were, to stand

On more Mechanicke Complement, Ile leaue thee.

Now like a man of Steele, you that will fight,

Follow me close, Ile bring you too't: Adieu. Exeunt.

Char. Please you retire to your Chamber?

Cleo. Lead me:

He goes forth gallantly: That he and Caesar might Determine this great Warre in single fight;

Then Anthony; but now. Well on. Exeunt.

Trumpets sound. Enter Anthony and Eros.

Eros. The Gods make this a happy day to Anthony.

Ant. Would thou, & those thy scars had once preuaild

To make me fight at Land.

Eros. Had'st thou done so,

The Kings that haue reuolted, and the Soldier

That has this morning left thee, would haue still Followed thy heeles.

Ant. Whose gone this morning?

Eros. Who? one euer neere thee, call for Enobarbus.

Hee

He shall not heare thee, or from Casars Campe,
Say I am none of thine.

Ant. What sayest thou?

Sold. Sir he is with Cesar.

Eros. Sir, his Chefts and Treasure he has not with him.

Ant. Is he gone?

Sol. Most certaine.

Ant. Go Eros, send his Treasure after, do it,

Detaine no lot I charge thee: write to him,

(I will subscribe) gentle adieu's, and greetings;

Say, that I wish he never finde more cause

To change a Master. Oh my Fortunes haue

Corrupted honest men. Dispatch Enobarbus. Exit

Flourish. Enter Agrippa, Cesar, with Enobarbus, and Dollabella.

Ces. Go forth Agrippa, and begin the fight:

Our will is Anthony be tooke aliue:

Make it so knowne.

Agrip. Cesar, I shall.

Cesar. The time of vniuersall peace is neere:

Proue this a prosp'rous day, the three nook'd world

Shall beare the Olive freely.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Anthony is come into the Field.

Ces. Go charge Agrippa,

Plant those that haue revolted in the Vant,

That Anthony may seeme to spend his Fury

Vpon himselfe. Exeunt

Enob. Alexas did reuolt, and went to Iewry on

Affaires of Anthony, there did disswade

Great Herod to incline him selfe to Cesar,

And leaue his Master Anthony. For this paines,

Cesar hath hang'd him: Camidius and the rest

That fell away, haue entertainment, but

No honourable trust; I haue done ill,

Of which I do accuse my selfe so forely,

That I will ioy no mote.

Enter a Soldier of Casars.

Sol. Enobarbus, Anthony

Hath after thee sent all thy Treasure, with

His Bounty ouer-plus. The Messenger

Came on my guard, and at thy Tent is now

Vnloading of his Mules.

Eno. I giue it you.

Sol. Mocke not Enobarbus.

I tell you true: Best you fast the bringer

Out of the host, I must attend mine Office,

Or would haue done't my selfe. Your Emperor

Continues still a Loue. Exit

Enob. I am alone the Villaine of the earth,

And feele I am so most. Oh Anthony,

Thou Mine of Bounty, how would'st thou haue payed

My better seruice, when my turpitude

Thou dost so Crowne with Gold. This blowes my hart,

If swift thought breake it not: a swifter meane

Shall out-strike thought, but thought will doo't. I feele

I fight against thee: No I will go seeke

Some Ditch, wherein to dye: the foulest best fits

My latter part of life. Exit

Alarum, Drummes and Trumpets.

Enter Agrippa.

Agrip. Retire, we haue engag'd our selues too farre:

Cesar himselfe ha's worke, and our oppression

Exceeds what we expected. Exit

Alarums.

Enter Anthony, and Scarrus wounded.

Scar. O my braue Emperor, this is fought indeed,

Had we done so at first, we had drouen them home

With clowts about their heads. Far off.

Ant. Thou bleed'st apace.

Scar. I had a wound heere that was like a T,

But now 'tis made an H.

Ant. They do retyre.

Scar. Wee'l beat 'em into Bench-holes, I haue yet

Roomes for six scotches more.

Enter Eros.

Eros. They are beaten Sir, and our aduantage serues

For a faire victory.

Scar. Let vs score their backs,

And snatch 'em vp, as we take Hares behinde,

'Tis sport to maul a Runner.

Ant. I will reward thee

Once for thy sprightly comfort, and ten-fold

For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. He halt after. Exeunt

Alarum. Enter Anthony againe in a March.

Scarrus, with others.

Ant. We haue beate him to his Campe: Runne one

Before, & let the Queen know of our guests: to morrow

Before the Sun shall see's, wee'll spill the blood

That ha's to day escap'd. I thanke you all,

For doughty handed are you, and haue fought

Not as you seru'd the Cause, but as't had beene

Each mans like mine: you haue shewne all Heroes.

Enter the City, clip your Wives, your Friends,

Tell them your feats, whilst they with ioyfull teares

Wash the congealement from your wounds, and hisse

The Honour'd-gashes whole.

Enter Cleopatra.

Give me thy hand,

To this great Faery, Ile commend thy acts,

Make her thanke thee. Oh thou day o'th' world,

Chaine mine arm'd necke, leape thou, Attire and all

Through proofe of Harneffe to my heart, and there

Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of Lords,

Oh infinite Vertue, comen't thou smiling from

The worlds great snare vncaught.

Ant. Mine Nightingale,

We haue beate them to their Beds,

What Gyrie, though gray

Do something mingle with our yonger brow, yet ha we

A Braine that nourishes our Nerves, and can Get gale for gale of youth. Behold this man,

Commend vnto his Lippes thy fauouring hand,

Kisse it my Warriour: He hath fought to day,

As if a God in hate of Mankinde, had Destroyed in such a shape.

Cleo. He giue thee Friend

An Armour all of Gold: it was a Kings.

Ant. He has deseru'd it, were it Carbunkled

Like holy Phœbus Carre. Giue me thy hand,

Through Alexandria make a iolly March,

Beare our backt Targets, like the men that owe them.

Had our great Pallace the capacity

To Campe this host, we all would sup together.

And drinke Carowfes to the next dayes Fate

Which

Which promises Royall perill. Trumpetters
With brazen dinne blast you the Citties eare,
Make mingle with our raling Tabourines,
That heauen and earth may strike their sounds together,
Applauding our approach. Exeunt

Enter a Centerie, and his Company, Enobarbus follows.

Cent. If we be not releu'd within this houre,

We must returne to'th' Court of Guard: the night

Is shyny, and they say, we shall embattaile

By'th' second houre i'th' Morne.

Watch. This last day was a shrew'd one too's.

Enob. Oh beate me witness night.

2. What man is this?

1. Stand close, and list him.

Enob. Be witness to me (O thou blessed Moone)

When men reuolted shall vpon Record

Beare hatefull memory: poore Enobarbus did

Before thy face repent.

Cent. Enobarbus?

2. Peace: Heare further.

Enob. Oh Soueraigne Mistis of true Melancholly,

The poysonous dampe of night dispunge vpon me,

That Life, a very Rebell to my will,

May hang no longer on me. Throw my heart

Against the flint and hardnesse of my fault,

Which being dried with greese, will breake to powder,

And finish all foule thoughts. Oh Anthony,

Nobler then my reuolt is Infamous,

Forgiue me in thine owne particular,

But let the world ranke me in Register

A Master leauer, and a fugitiue:

Oh Anthony! Oh Anthony!

1. Let's speake to him.

Cent. Let's heare him, for the things he speakes

May concerne Cesar.

2. Let's do so, but he sleepe.

Cent. Swoonds rather, for so bad a Prayer as his

Was neuer yet for sleepe.

1. Go we to him.

2. Awake sir, awake, speake to vs.

1. Heare you sir?

Cent. The hand of death hath raught him.

Hearke the Drummes demurely wake the sleepers:

Let vs beare him to'th' Court of Guard: he is of note:

Our houre is fully out.

2. Come on then, he may recouer yet. Exeunt

Enter Anthony and Scarrus, with their Army.

Ant. Their preparation is to day by Sea,

We please them not by Land.

Scar. For both, my Lord.

Ant. I would they'd fight i'th' Fire, or i'th' Ayre,

Wee'd fight there too. But this it is, our Foote

Vpon the hills adjoining to the City

Shall stay with vs, Order for Sea is giuen,

They haue put forth the Hauen:

Where their appointment we may best discouer,

And looke on their endeavour. Exeunt

Enter Cesar, and his Army.

Ces. But being charg'd, we will be still by Land,

Which as I tak't we shall, for his best force

Is forth to Man his Gallies. To the Vales,

And hold our best aduantage.

Alarum afarre off, as at a Sea-fight.

Enter Anthony, and Scarrus.

Ant. Yet they are not ioynd:

Where you'd Pine does stand, I shall discouer all.

Ile bring thee word straight, how 'tis like to go. Exit

Scar. Swallows haue buile

In Cleopatra's Sables their nests. The Auguries

Say, they know not, they cannot tell, looke grimly,

And dare not speake their knowledge. Anthony,

Is valiant, and delected, and by starts

His fretted Fortunes giue him hope and feare

Of what he has, and has not.

Enter Anthony.

Ant. All is lost:

This fowle Egyptian hath betrayed me:

My Fleete hath yeeld'd to the Foe, and yonder

They cast their Caps vp, and Carowse together

Like Friends long lost. Triple-turn'd Whore, 'tis thou

Hast sold me to this Nouice, and my heart

Makes onely Warres on thee. Bid them all flye:

For when I am reueng'd vpon my Charme,

I haue done all. Bid them all flye, be gone.

Oh Sunne, thy vprife shall I see no more,

Fortune, and Anthony part heere, euen heere

Do we shake hands? All come to this? The hearts

That pannelled me at heeles, to whom I gaue

Their wishes, do dis-Candie, melt their sweets

On blossoming Cesar: And this Pine is barkt,

That ouer-top'd them all. Betray'd I am.

Oh this false Soule of Egypt! this graue Charme,

Whose eye beck'd forth my Wars, & call'd them home:

Whose Bosome was my Crownet, my chiefe end,

Like a right Gypsie, hath at last and loose

Beguil'd me, to the very heart of losse.

What Eros, Eros?

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou Spell! Augunt.

Cleo. Why is my Lord enrag'd against his Loue?

Ant. Vanish, or I shall giue thee thy deseruing,

And blemish Casars Triumph. Let him take thee,

And hoist thee vp to the shouting Plebeians,

Follow his Chariot, like the greatest spot

Of all thy Sex. Most Monster-like be shewne

For poor't Diminutives, for Dolts, and let

Patient Ottanta, plough thy visage vp

With her prepared nailes. Exit Cleopatra

'Tis well th'art gone.

If it be well to liue. But better 'twere

Thou fell'st into my furie, for one death

Might haue prevented many. Eros, hoa?

The shirt of Nessus is vpon me, teach me

Alcides, thou mine Ancestor, thy rage.

Let me lodge Licas on the hornes o'th' Moone,

And with those hands that grasp the heauiest Club,

Subdue my worthiest selfe: The Witch shall die,

To the young Roman Boy she hath sold me, and I fall

Vnder this plot: She dyes for't. Eros hoa? Exit

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, Mardian.

Cleo. Helpe me my women: Oh he

The Soule and Body riue not more in parting,
Then greauesse going off.

Cleo. To'th Monument:

Mardian, go tell him I haue slaine my selfe:
Say, that the last I spoke was Anthony,
And word it (pythee) pitteously. Hence Mardian,
And bring me how he takes my dea'th to'th Monument.

Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Eros.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?

Eros. I Noble Lord.

Ant. Sometime we see a clowd that's Dragonish,
A vapour sometime like a Beare, or Lyon,
A toward Citradell, a pendant Rocke,
A forked Mountaine, or blew Promontorie
With Trees vpon't, that nodde vnto the world,
And mocke our eyes with Ayre.
Thou hast seene these Signes,
They are blacke Vespers Pageants.

Eros. I my Lord.

Ant. That which is now a Horse, euen with a thoght
the Racke dislimes, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water.

Eros. It does my Lord.

Ant. My good Knaue Eros, now thy Captaine is Euen such a body: Heere I am Anthony,
Yet cannot hold this visible shape (my Knaue)
I made these warres for Egypt, and the Queene,
Whose heart I thought I had, for she had mine:
Which whil' it was mine, had annex't vnto't
A Million moe, (now lost) thee Eros has Packt Cards with Casars, and false plaid my Glory
Vnto an Enemies triumph.
Nay, weepe not gentle Eros, there is left vs
Our selues to end our selues.

Enter Mardian.

Oh thy wilde Lady, she has rob'd me of my Sword.

Mar. No Anthony,

My Mistris lou'd thee, and her Fortunes mingled
With thine intirely.

Ant. Hence sawcy Eunuch peace, she hath betraid me,
And shall dye the death.

Mar. Death of one person, can be paide but once,
And that she ha's discharg'd. What thou would'st do
Is done vnto thy hand: the last she spake
Was Anthony, most Noble Anthony.

Then in the midd' it a tearing grone did breake
The name of Anthony: it was diuided
Betweene her heart, and lips: she rendred life
Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Vntime Eros, the long dayes taske is done,
And we must sleepe: That thou depart'st hence safe
Does pay thy labour richly: Go. exit Mardian.
Off, plucke off,

The seven-fold shield of Aiax cannot keepe
The battery from my heart. Oh cleaue my sides.
Heart, once be stronger then thy Continent,
Cracke thy fraile Case. Apace Eros, apace;
No more a Soldier: bruised peeces go,
You haue bin Nobly borne. From me awhile. exit Eros
I will o're-take thee Cleopatra, and Weepe for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is Torture: since the Torch is out,
Lye downe and fray no farther. Now all labour

Marres what it does: yea, very force entangles
It selfe with strength: Scale then, and all is done.
Eros? I come my Queene. Eros? Stay for me,
Where Soules do couch on Flowers, wee'l hand in hand,
And with our sprightly Port make the Ghostes gaze:
Dido, and her Aeneas shall want Troopes,
And all the haunt be ours. Come Eros, Eros.

Enter Eros.

Eros. What would my Lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra dyed,
I haue liu'd in such dishonour, that the Gods
Detest my basenesse. I, that with my Sword,
Quarter'd the World, and o're Greene Neptunes backe
With Ships, made Cities; condemne my selfe, to lacke
The Courage of a Woman, lesse Noble minde
Then she which by her death, our Cesar telles
I am Conqueror of my selfe. Thou art sworne Eros,
That when the exigent should come, which now
Is come indeed: When I should see behinde me
Th'inevitable prosecution of disgrace and horror,
That on my command, thou then would'st kill me,
Doo't, the time is come: Thou strik'st not me,
'Tis Cesar thou defeat'st. Put colour in thy Cheeke.

Eros. The Gods with-hold me,
Shall I do that which all the Parthian Darts,
(Though Enemy) lost ayme, and could not.

Ant. Eros,
Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy Master thus with pleacht Armes, bending downe
His corrigible necke, his face subdu'd
To penetratiue shame; whil' the wheel'd seate
Of Fortunate Cesar drawne before him, branded
His basenesse that ensued.

Eros. I would not see't.

Ant. Come then: for with a wound I must be cur'd.
Draw that thy honest Sword, which thou hast worne
Most vifull for thy Country.

Eros. Oh sir, pardon me.

Ant. When I did make thee free, swor'st not then
To do this when I bad thee? Do it at once,
Or thy precedent Seruices are all
But accidents vnpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turne from me then that Noble countenance,
Wherein the worship of the whole world lyes.

Ant. Loe thee.

Eros. My sword is drawne.

Ant. Then let it do at once

The thing why thou hast drawne it.

Eros. My deere Master,
My Captaine, and my Emperor. Let me say
Before I strike this bloody stroke, Farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said man, and farewell.

Eros. Farewell great Chiefe. Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now Eros.

Eros. Why there then:

Thus I do escape the sorrow of Anthones death.

Ant. Thrice-Nobler then my selfe,

Thou teachest me: Oh valiant Eros, what I should, and thou could'st not, my Queene and Eros
Haue by their braue instruction got vpon me
A Noblenesse in Record. But I will bee
A Bride-groome in my death, and run into't
As to a Louers bed. Come then, and Eros,

Thy Master dies thy Scholler; to do thus
I learnt of thee. How, not dead? Not dead?

The Guard, how? Oh dispatch me.

Enter

Enter a Guard.

1. Guard. What's the noise?

Ant. I haue done my worke ill Friends:

Oh make an end of what I haue begun.

2. The Starre is false.

1. And time is at his Period.

All. Alas, and wee.

Ant. Let him that loues me, strike me dead.

1. Not I.

2. Nor I.

3. Nor any one.

Dercius. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly

This sword but shewne to Cesar with this tydings,

Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Where's Anthony?

Decre. There Diomed there.

Dio. Lues he: wilt thou not answer man?

Ant. Art thou there Diomed?

Draw thy sword, and giue mee,

Suffising strokes for death.

Dio. Most absolute Lord:

My Mistris Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When didst seee send thee?

Dio. Now my Lord.

Ant. Where is she?

Dio. Lookt in her Monument: she had a Prophecyng

Of what hath come to passe: for when she saw

(Which neuer shall be found) you did suspect

She had dispos'd with Cesar, and that your rage

Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead:

But fearing since how it might worke, hath sent

Me to proclaime the truth, and I am come

I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late good Diomed: call my Guard I prythee.

Dio. What hoa: the Emperors Guard,

The Guard, what hoa? Come, your Lord calles.

Enter 4. or 5. of the Guard of Anthony.

Ant. Beare me good Friends where Cleopatra bides,

'Tis the last seruice that I shall command you.

1. Woe, woe are we sir, you may not lue to weare

All your true Followers out.

All. Most heavy day.

Ant. Nay good my Fellowes, do not please sharp fate

To grace it with your sorrowes. Bid that welcome

Which comes to punish vs, and we punish it

Seeming to beare it lightly. Take me vp,

I haue led you oft, carry me now good Friends,

And haue my thanks for all. Exit bearing Anthony

Enter Cleopatra, and her Maides aloft, with Charmian & Iras.

Cleo. Oh Charmian, I will neuer go from hence.

Char. Be comforted deere Madam.

Cleo. No, I will not:

All strange and terrible euents are welcome,

But comforts we dispise; our size of sorrow

Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great

As that which makes it.

Enter Diomed.

How now? is he dead?

Dio. His death's vpon him, but not dead.

Looke out o'th other side your Monument,

His Guard haue brought him thither.

Enter Anthony, and the Guard.

Cleo. Oh Sunne,

Burne the great Sphere thou mou'st in, darkling stand

The varrying shore o'th world. O Anthony, Anthony, Anthony

Helpe Charmian, helpe Irás helpe: helpe Friends

Below, let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace,

Not Casars Valour hath o'rethrowne Anthony,

But Anthony's hath Triumpht on it selfe.

Cleo. So it should be,

That none but Anthony should conquer Anthony,

But woe 'tis so.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying; onely

I heere importune death a-while, vntill

Of many thousand kisses, the poore last

I lay vpon thy lippes.

Cleo. I dare not Deere,

Deere my Lord pardon: I dare not,

Least I be taken: nor th'Imperious shew

Of the full-Fortun'd Cesar, euer shall

Be brooch'd with me, if Knife, Drugges, Serpents haue

Edge, sting, or operation. I am safe:

Your Wife Octauia, with her modest eyes,

And still Conclusion, shall acquire no Honour

Demuring vpon me: but come, come Anthony,

Helpe me my women, we must draw thee vp:

Assist good Friends.

Ant. Oh quicke, or I am gone.

Cleo. Heere's sport indeede:

How heavy weighs my Lord?

Our strength is all gone into heauinesse,

That makes the waighe. Had I great Iuno's power,

The strong wing'd Mercury should fetch thee vp,

And set thee by Ioues side. Yet come a little,

Wishers were euer Fooles. Oh come, come, come,

They beaue Anthony aloft to Cleopatra.

And welcome, welcome. Dye when thou hast liu'd,

Quicken with kissing: had my lippes that power,

Thus would I weare them out.

All. A heavy sight.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying.

Giue me some Wine, and let me speake a little.

Cleo. No, let me speake, and let me rayle so hye,

That the false Hufwife Fortune, breake her Wheele,

Prouok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word (sweet Queene)

Of Cesar seeke your Honour, with your safety. Oh.

Cleo. They do not go together.

Ant. Gentle heare me,

None about Cesar trust, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My Resolution, and my hands, He trust,

None about Cesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,

Lament nor sorrow at: but please your thoughts

In feeding them with those my former Fortunes

Wherein I liued. The greatest Prince o'th world,

The Noblest: and do now not basely dye,

Not Cowardly put off my Helmet to

My Countreyman. A Roman, by a Roman

Valiantly vanquish'd. Now my Spirit is going,

I can ne more.

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't dye?

Hast thou no care of me, shall I bide

In this dull world, which in thy absence is

No better then a Strye? Oh see my women:

The Crowne o'th earth doth melt. My Lord?

Oh wither'd is the Garland of the Warre,

The

The Souldiers pole is false: young Boyes and Gyrls
Are leuell now with men: The oddes is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable
Beneath the visiting Moone.

Char. Oh quietnesse, Lady.

Iras. She's dead too, our Soueraigne.

Char. Lady.

Iras. Madam.

Char. Oh Madam, Madam, Madam.

Iras. Royall Egypt: Empreffe.

Char. Peace, peace, Iras.

Cleo. No more but in a Woman, and commanded
By such poore passion, as the Maid that Milkes,
And doe's the meanest chares. It were for me,
To throw my Scepter at the iniurious Gods,
To tell them that this World did equall theirs,
Till they had stolne our Iewell. All's but naught:
Patience is fortish, and impatience does
Become a Dogge that's mad: Then is it sinne,
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to vs. How do you Women?
What, what good cheere? Why how now Charman?
My Noble Gyrls? Ah Women, women! Looke
Our Lampe is spent, it's out. Good firs, take heart,
Wee'l bury him: And then, what's brave, what's Noble,
Let's doo't after the high Roman fashion,
And make death proud to take vs. Come away,
This case of that huge Spirit now is cold,
Ah Women, Women! Come, we haue no Friend
But Resolution, and the breakest end.

Exeunt, bearing of Antonies body.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, Dolabella, Menas, with his Counsell of Warre.

Caesar. Go to him Dolabella, bid him yeeld,
Being so frustrate, tell him,
He mockes the pawles that he makes.

Dol. Caesar, I shall.

Enter Decretas with the sword of Anthony.

Ces. Wherefore is that? And what art thou that dar'st Appare thus to vs?

Dec. I am call'd Decretas,

Marke Anthony I seru'd, who best was worthie
Best to be seru'd: while he stood vp, and spoke
He was my Master, and I wore my life
To spend vpon his haters. If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him,
Ile be to Caesar: if pleasest not, I yeild thee vp my life.

Caesar. What is't thou say'st?

Dec. I say (Oh Caesar) Anthony is dead.

Caesar. The breaking of so great a thing, should make
A greater cracke. The round World
Should haue shooke Lyons into ciuill Streets,
And Citizens to their denues. The death of Anthony
Is not a single doome, in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Dec. He is dead Caesar,

Nor by a publike minister of Iustice,
Nor by a hyred Knife, but that selfe-hand
Which writ his Honor in the Acts it did,
Hath with the Courage which the heart did lend it,
Splitted the heart. This is his Sword,
I robb'd his wound of te; behold it stain'd
With his most Noble blood.

Ces. Looke you sad Friends,

The Gods rebuke me, but it is Tydings
To wash the eyes of Kings.

Dol. And strange it is,
That Nature must compell vs to lament
Our most perfisted deeds.

Mec. His taints and Honours, wag'd equal with him,
Dola. A Rarer spirit neuer

Did reere humanity: but you Gods will giue vs
Some fautes to make vs men, Caesar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious Mirror's set before him,
He needes must see himselfe.

Caesar. Oh Anthony,

I haue followed thee to this, but we do launch
Diseases in our Bodies. I must perforce
Haue shewne to thee such a declining day,
Or looke on thine: we could not stail together,
In the whole world. But yet let me lament
With teares as Soueraigne as the blood of hearts,
That thou my Brother, my Competitor,
In top of all designe; my Mate in Empire,
Friend and Companion in the front of Warre,
The Arme of mine owne Body, and the Heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle; that our Starres Vnreconcilable, should diuide our equalnesse to this,
Heare me good Friends,
But I will tell you at some meeter Season,
The businesse of this man lookes out of him,
Wee'l heare him what he sayes.

Enter an Egyptian.

Whence are you?

Egyp. A poore Egyptian yet, the Queen my mistress
Confin'd in all, she has her Monument
Of thy intents, desires, instruction,
That she preparedly may frame her selfe
To'th way shee's forc'd too.

Caesar. Bid her haue good heart,
She soone shall know of vs, by some of ours,
How honourable, and how kindly Wee
Determine for her. For Caesar cannot leaue to be vngentle

Egyp. So the Gods preferue thee. Exe.

Ces. Come hither Proculeius. Go and say
We purpose her no shame: giue her what comforts
The quality of her passion shall require;
Least in her greatnesse, by some mortall stroke
She do defeat vs. For her life in Rome,
Would be eternall in our Triumph: Go,
And with your speediest bring vs what she sayes,
And how you finde of her.

Pro. Caesar I shall. Exit Proculeius.

Ces. Gallus, go you along: where's Dolabella, to second Proculeius?

All. Dolabella.

Ces. Let him alone: for I remember now
How hee's employd: he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my Tent, where you shall see
How hardly I was drawne into this Warre,
How calme and gentle I proceeded still
In all my Writings: Go with me, and see
What I can shew in this. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life: 'Tis paltrey to be Caesar:
Not being Fortune, hee's but Fortunes knaue,
A minister of her will: and it is great

To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts vp change;
Which sleepes, and neuer pallates more the dung,
The beggers Nurse, and Caesars.

Enter Proculeius.

Pro. Caesar sends greeting to the Queene of Egypt,
And bids thee study on what faire demands
Thou mean'st to haue him grant thee.

Cleo. What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Anthony

Did tell me of you, bad me trust you, but I do not greatly care to be deceiu'd
That haue no vie for trusting. If your Master
Would haue a Queene his begger, you must tell him,
That Majesty to keepe decorum, must
No lesse begge then a Kingdome: If he please
To giue me conquer'd Egypt for my Sonne,
He giues me so much of mine owne, as I
Will kneele to him with thankses.

Pro. Be of good cheere:

'Tare false into a Princely hand, feare nothing,
Make your full reference freely to my Lord,
Who is so full of Grace, that it flowes ouer
On all that neede. Let me report to him
Your sweet dependacie, and you shall finde
A Conqueror that will pray in ayde for kindnesse,
Where he for grace is kneel'd too.

Cleo. Pray you tell him,

I am his Fortunes Vassall, and I send him
The Greatnesse he has got. I hourly learne
A Doctrine of Obedience, and would gladly Looke him i'th'Face.

Pro. This Ile report (deere Lady)
Haue comfort, for I know your plight is pittied
Of him that caus'd it.

Pro. You see how easily she may be surpriz'd:
Guard her till Caesar come.

Iras. Royall Queene.

Char. Oh Cleopatra, thou art taken Queene.

Cleo. Quickie, quickie, good hands,

Pro. Hold worthy Lady, hold:

Do not your selfe such wrong, who are in this Releu'd, but not betrayd.

Cleo. What of death too that ride our dogs of languish
Pro. Cleopatra, do not abuse my Masters bounty, by Th'vndoing of your selfe: Let the World see
His Noblenesse well acted, which your death
Will neuer let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou Death?

Come hither come; Come, come, and take a Queene Worth many Babes and Beggers.

Pro. Oh temperance Lady.

Cleo. Sir, I will eate no meate, Ile not drinke fir,
If idle talke will once be necessary
Ile not sleepe neither. This mortall house Ile ruine,
Do Caesar what he can. Know sir, that I
Will not waite pinnion'd at your Masters Court,
Nor once be chaffic'd with the sober eye
Of dull Othello. Shall they boyst me vp,
And shew me to the shewing Varlotarie
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt,
Be gentle graue vnto me, rather on Nylus mudde
Lay me starke-nak'd, and let the water-flies
Blow me into abhorring; rather make
My Countries high pyramides my Gibbet,

And hang me vp in Chaines.

Pro. You do extend

These thoughts of horror further then you shall Finde cause in Caesar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done, thy Master Caesar knowes,
And he hath sent for thee: for the Queene,
Ile take her to my Guard;

Pro. So Dolabella,

It shall content me best: Be gentle to her,
To Caesar I will speake, what you shall please,
If you'll imploy me to him. Exit Proculeius

Cleo. Say, I would dye.

Dol. Most Noble Empreffe, you haue heard of me.

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly you know me.

Cleo. No matter fir, what I haue heard or knowne:
You laugh when Boyes or Women tell their Dreames,
Is't not your trickes?

Dol. I vnderstand not, Madam.

Cleo. I dreamt there was an Emperor Anthony,
Oh such another sleepe, that I might see
But such another man.

Dol. If it might please ye.

Cleo. His face was as the Heau'ns, and therein sticke
A Sunne and Moone, which kept their course, & lighred
The little o'th'earth.

Dol. Most Soueraigne Creature.

Cleo. His legges bestrid the Ocean, his rear'd arme
Crested the world: His voyce was propertied
As all the tuned Spheres, and that to Friends;
But when he meant to quail, and shake the Orbe,
He was as rattling Thunder. For his Bounty,
There was no winter in't. An Anthony it was,
That grew the more by reaping: His delights
Were Dolphin-like, they shew'd his backe aboute
The Element they liu'd in: In his Luery
Walk'd Crownes and Crowners: Realms & Islands were
As plates dropt from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Thinke you there was, or might be such a man
As this I dreamt of?

Dol. Gentle Madam, no.

Cleo. You Lye vp to the hearing of the Gods:
But if there be, nor euer were one such
It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stuffe
To vie strange formes with fancie, yet t' imagine
An Anthony were Natures peece, 'gainst Fancie, Condemning shadowes quite.

Dol. Heare me, good Madam:

Your losse is as your selfe, great; and you beare it
As answering to the waight, would I might neuer
Ore-take pursu'de successe: But I do feelee
By the rebound of yours, a greefe that suites
My very heart at roote.

Cleo. I thanke you fir:

Know you what Caesar meanes to do with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what, I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay pray you fir,

Dol. Though he be Honourable,

Cleo. Hee'll eade me then in Triumph.

Dol. Madam he will, I know't. Flourish.

Enter Proculeius, Caesar, Gallus, Maccenas, and others of his Traine.

All. Make way there Caesar.

z z

Caesar

Ces. Which is the Queene of Egypt.
Dol. It is the Emperor Madam.
Cesar. Arise, you shall not kneele:
 I pray you rise, rise Egypt.
Cleo. Sir, the Gods will have it thus,
 My Master and my Lord I must obey,
Cesar. Take to you no hard thoughts,
 The Record of what injuries you did vs,
 Though written in our flesh, we shall remember
 As things but done by chance.
Cleo. Sole Sir o'th' World,
 I cannot project mine owne cause so well
 To make it cleare, but do confesse I haue
 Bene laden with like frailties, which before
 Haue often sham'd our Sex.
Cesar. Cleopatra know,
 We will extenuate rather then inforce:
 If you apply your selfe to our intents,
 Which towards you are most gentle, you shall finde
 A benefite in this change: but if you seeke
 To lay on me a Cruelty, by taking
Antonies counse, you shall bereaue your selfe
 Of my good purposes, and put your children
 To that destruction which I le guard them from,
 If thereon you relye. He take my leave.
Cleo. And may through all the world: tis yours, & we your Scutcheons, and your signes of Conquest shall Hang in what place you please. Here my good Lord.
Cesar. You shall aduise me in all for Cleopatra.
Cleo. This is the breefe of Money, Plate, & Jewels
 I am posses'd of, tis exactly valedwed,
 Not petty things admittred, Where's Selenus?
Selen. Heere Madam.
Cleo. This is my Treasurer, let him speake (my Lord)
 Vpon his perill, that I haue reseru'd
 To my selfe nothing. Speake the truth Selenus.
Selen. Madam, I had rather feele my lippes,
 Then to my perill speake that which is not.
Cleo. What haue I kept backe.
Sel. Enough to purchase what you haue made knowne
Cesar. Nay blush not Cleopatra, I approue
 Your Wisedome in the deede.
Cleo. See Cesar: Oh behold,
 How pompe is followed: Mine will now be yours,
 And should we shift estates, yours would be mine.
 The ingratitude of this Selenus, does
 Euen make me wilde. Oh Slaue, of no more trust
 Then loue that's hyrd? What goest thou backe, y shall Go backe I warrant thee: but he catch thine eyes
 Though they had wings. Slaue, Soule-lesse Villain, Dog,
 O rarely base!
Cesar. Good Queene, let vs intreat you.
Cleo. O Cesar, what a wounding shame is this,
 That thou vouchsafing heere to visit me,
 Doing the Honour of thy Lordlinesse
 To one so meeke, that mine owne Seruant should Parcell the summe of my disgraces, by Addition of his Enuy. Say (good Cesar)
 That I some Lady trifies haue reseru'd,
 Immoment royes, things of such Dignitie
 As we greet moderne Friends withall, and say
 Some Nobler token I haue kept apart
 For Livia and Octavia, to induce
 Their mediation, must I be vnfolded
 With one that I haue bred: The Gods! it smites me
 Beneath the fall I haue. Prythee go hence,

Or I shall shew the Cynders of my spirits
 Through th'Ashes of my chance: Wert thou a man,
 Thou would'st haue mercy on me.
Cesar. Forbeare Selenus.
Cleo. Be it known, that we the greatest are mis-thought
 For things that others do: and when we fall,
 We answer others merits, in our name
 Are therefore to be pittied.
Cesar. Cleopatra,
 Not what you haue reseru'd, nor what acknowledg'd
 Put we'th' Roll of Conquest: still bee't yours,
 Bestow it at your pleasure, and beleuee
Cesar no Merchant, to make prize with you
 Of things that Merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd,
 Make not your thoughts your prisons: No deere Queen,
 For we intend so to dispose you, as
 Your selfe shall giue vs counsell: Feede, and sleepe:
 Our care and pity is so much vpon you,
 That we remaine your Friend, and so adieu.
Cleo. My Master, and my Lord.
Cesar. Not so: Adieu. Flourish.
Exeunt Cesar, and his Traine.
Cleo. He words me Gyries, he words me,
 That I should not be Noble to my selfe.
 But hearee thee Charman.
Ir. Fight good Lady, the bright day is done,
 And we are for the darke.
Cleo. Hye th e againe,
 I haue spoke already, and it is prouided,
 Go put it to the haste.
Char. Madam, I will.
Enter Dolabella.
Dol. Where's the Queene?
Char. Behold her.
Cleo. Dolabella.
Dol. Madam, as thereto sworne, by your command
 (Which my loue makes Religion to obey)
 I tell you this: Cesar through Syria
 Intends his iourney, and within three dayes,
 You with your Children will be send before,
 Make your best vse of this. I haue perform'd
 Your pleasure, and my promise.
Cleo. Dolabella, I shall remaine your debter.
Dol. I your Seruant:
 Adieu good Queene, I must attend on Cesar. Exit
Cleo. Farewell, and thanks.
 Now Ir., what think'st thou?
 Thou, an Egyptian Puppet shall be shewne
 In Rome as well as I: Mechanicke Slaues
 With greazie Aprons, Rules, and Hammers shall Vplift vs to the view. In their thicke breathes, Ranke of grosse dyer shall we be encloved,
 And forc'd to drinke their vapour.
Ir. The Gods forbid.
Cleo. Nay, tis most certaine Ir.: sawcie Lictors
 Will catch at vs like Scrumpters, and scald Rimers
 Ballads vs out a Tune. The quicke Comedians
 Extemporally will stage vs, and present
 Our Alexandrian Reuels: Anthony
 Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
 Some squeaking Cleopatra Boy my greatness
 I'th' posture of a Whore.
Ir. O the good Gods!
Cleo. Nay that's certaine.
Ir. He neuer see't? for I am sure mine Nalles
 Are stronger then mine eyes.

Cleo. Why that's the way to foole their preparation,
 And to conquer their most absurd intents.
Enter Charmian.
Now Charmian.
 Shew me my Women like a Queene: Go fetch
 My best Attires: I am againe for Cidrus,
 To meete Marke Anthony. Sirra Ir., go
 (Now Noble Charmian, wee'l dispatch indeede,) And when thou hast done this chare, he giue thee leave
 To play till Doomesday: bring our Crowne, and all.
Wherefore's this noise?
Enter a Guardsman.
Guards. Heere is a rurall Fellow,
 That will not be deny'de your Highnesse presence,
 He brings you Figges.
Cleo. Let him come in. Exit Guardsman.
 What poore an Instrument
 May do a Noble deede: he brings me liberty:
 My Resolution's plac'd, and I haue nothing
 Of woman in me: Now from head to foote
 I am Marble constant: now the fleeing Moone
 No Planet is of mine.
Enter Guardsman, and Clowne.
Guards. This is the man.
Ir. Anoid, and leaue him. Exit Guardsman.
 Hast thou the pretty worrne of Nylus there,
 That kills and paines not?
Clow. Truly I haue him: but I would not be the par-tie that should desire you to touch him, for his byting is immortal: those that doe dye of it, doe seldome or neuer recouer.
Cleo. Remember'st thou any that haue dyed on't?
Clow. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer then yesterday, a very honest woman, but something giuen to lye, as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty, how she dyed of the by-ting of it, what paine she felt: Truly, she makes a verie good report o'th' worrne: but he that wil beleuee all that they say, shall neuer be faued by halfe that they do: but this is most falliable, the Worme's an odde Worme.
Cleo. Get thee hence, farewell.
Clow. I wish you all ioy of the Worme.
Cleo. Farewell.
Clow. You must thinke this (looke you,) that the Worme will do his kinde.
Cleo. I, I, farewell.
Clow. Looke you, the Worme is not to bee trusted, but in the keeping of wise people: for indeede, there is no goodnesse in the Worme.
Cleo. Take thou no care, it shall be heeded.
Clow. Very good: giue it nothing I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.
Cleo. Will it eate me?
Clow. You must not thinke I am so simple, but I know the diuell himselfe will not eate a woman: I know, that a woman is a dish for the Gods, if the diuell dresse her not. But truly, these same whorson diuels doe the Gods great harme in their women: for in euery tenne that they make, the diuels marre fise.
Cleo. Well, get thee gone, farewell.
Clow. Yes forsooth: I wish you ioy o'th' worm. Exit
Cleo. Giue me my Robe, put on my Crowne, I haue Immortall longings in me. Now no more
 The iuyce of Egypt's Grape shall moist this lip.
 Yare, yare, good Ir.; quicke: Me thinkes I heare

Anthony call: I see him rowse himselfe
 To praise my Noble A&T. I heare him mock
 The lucke of Cesar, which the Gods giue men
 To excuse their after wrath. Husband, I come:
 Now to that name, my Courage proue my Title.
 I am Fire, and Ayre; my other Elements
 I giue to baser life. So, haue you done?
 Come then, and take the last warmth of my Lippes.
 Farewell kinde Charmian, Ir., long farewell.
 Haue I the Aspicke in my lippes? Dost fall?
 If thou, and Nature can so gently part,
 The stroke of death is as a Lovers pinch,
 Which hurts, and is desir'd. Dost thou lye still?
 If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world,
 It is not worth leaue-taking.
Char. Dissolue thicke cloud, & Raine, that I may say
 The Gods themselves do weepe.
Cleo. This proues me base:
 If she first meete the Curled Anthony,
 Hee'l make demand of her, and spend that kisse
 Which is my heauen to haue. Come thou mortal wretch,
 With thy sharpe teeth this knot intricicate,
 Of life at once vntye: Poore venomous Foole,
 Be angry, and dispatch. Oh could'st thou speake,
 That I might heare thee call great Cesar Asse, vnpoliced.
Char. Oh Easterne Starre.
Cleo. Peace, peace:
 Dost thou not see my Baby at my breast,
 That suckes the Nurse asleepe?
Char. O breake! O breake!
Cleo. As sweet as Balme, as soft as Ayre, as gentle,
 O Anthony! Nay I will take thee too.
 What should I say? Dyes.
Char. In this wilde World? So fare thee well:
 Now boast thee Death, in thy possession lyes
 A Lasse vnparalel'd. Downie Windows cloze,
 And golden Phoebe, neuer be beheld
 Of eyes againe so Royall: your Crownes away,
 He mend it, and then play—
Enter the Guard rustling in, and Dolabella.
1. Guard. Where's the Queene?
Char. Speake softly, wake her not.
1. Cesar hath sent
Char. Too slow a Messenger.
 Oh come apace, dispatch, I partly feele thee.
1. Approach hoo,
 All's not well: Cesar's beguiled.
2. There's Dolabella sent from Cesar: call him.
1. What worke is heere Charmian?
 Is this well done?
Char. It is well done, and fitting for a Princeesse Descended of so many Royall Kings.
 Ah Soulaier. Charmian dyes.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it heere?
2. Guard. All dead.
Dol. Cesar, thy thoughts
 Touch their effects in this: Thy selfe art comming
 To see perform'd the dreaded A&T which thou
 So sought'st to hinder.

Enter Cesar and all his Traine, marching.

All. A way there, a way for Cesar.

Dol.

Dol. Oh sir, you are too sure an Augurer:
That you did feare, is done.

Cesar. Brauest at the last,
She leuell'd at our purposes, and being Royall
Tooke her owne way: the manner of their deaths,
I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them?

1. Guard. A simple Countryman, that brought hir Figs:
This was his Basket.

Cesar. Poyson'd then.

1. Guard. Oh Cesar:

This Charmian liu'd but now, she flood and spake:
I found her trimming vp the Diadem;
On her dead Mistis tremblingly she flood,
And on the sodaine dropt.

Cesar. Oh Noble weakenesse:
If they had swallow'd poyson, 'twould appeare
By externall swelling: but she lookes like sleepe,
As she would catch another Anthony
In her strong toyle of Grace.

Dol. Heere on her brest,
There is a vent of Bloud, and something blowne,
The like is on her Arme.

1. Guard. This is an Aspicks traile,
And these Figge-leaves haue slime vpon them, such
As th' Aspicks leaves vpon the Caues of Nile.

Cesar. Most probable

That to she dyed: for her Physician tels mee
She hath puri'd Conclusions infinite
Of easie wayes to dye. Take vp her bed,
And beare her Women from the Monument,
She shall be buried by her Anthony.

No Graue vpon the earth shall clip in it
A payre so famous: high euent as these Strike those that make them: and their Story is No lesse in pittie, then his Glory which Brought them to be lamented. Our Army shall
In solemne shew, attend this Funerall,
And then to Rome. Come Dolabella, see
High Order, in this great Sollemnity. Exeunt omnes

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF CYMBELINE.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1. Gent.

You do not meet a man but Frownes.
Our bloods no more obey the Heauens
Then our Courtiers:
Still seeme, as do's the Kings.

2. Gent. But what's the matter?

1. His daughter, and the heire of's kingdome (whom
He purpos'd to his wifes soie Sonne, a Widdow
That late he married) hath refer'd her selfe
Vnto a poore, but worthy Gentleman. She's wedded,
Her Husband banish'd; she imprison'd, all
Is outward sorrow, though I thinke the King
Be touch'd at very heart.

2. None but the King?

1. He that hath lost her too: so is the Queene,
That most desir'd the Match. But not a Courtier,
Although they weare their faces to the bent
Of the Kings lookes, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they frowle at.

2. And why so?

1. He that hath miss'd the Princesse, is a thing
Too bad, for bad report: and he that hath her,
(I meane, that married her, alacke good man,
And therefore banish'd) is a Creature, such,
As to seeke through the Regions of the Earth
For one, his like; there would be something failing
In him, that should compare. I do not thinke,
So faire an Outward, and such stufte Within Endowes a man, but hee.

2. You speake him farre.

1. I do extend him (Sir) within himselfe,
Crush him together, rather then vnfold
His measure duly.

2. What's his name, and Birth?

1. I cannot delue him to the roote: His Father
Was call'd Stellius, who did ioyne his Honor
Against the Romans, with Cassibulan,
But had his Titles by Tenantius, whom
He seru'd with Glory, and admir'd Successe:
So gain'd the Sur-addition, Leonatus.

And had (besides this Gentleman in question)
Two other Sonnes, who in the Warres o'th' time
Dy'de with their Swords in hand. For which, their Father
Then old, and fond of yssue, tooke such sorrow
That he quit Being; and his gentle Lady

Bigge of this Gentleman (our Theame) decaist
As he was borne. The King he takes the Babe
To his protection, calls him Posthumus Leonatus, Breedes him, and makes him of his Bed-chamber,
Puts to him all the Learnings that his time
Could make him the receiuer of, which he tooke
As we do ayre, fast as 'twas ministred,
And in's Spring, became a Haruest: Liu'd in Court
(Which rare it is to do) most prais'd, most lou'd,
A sample to the yongest: to th' more Mature,
A glasse that feated them: and to the grauer,
A Childe that guided Dotards. To his Mistis,
(For whom he now is banish'd) her owne price
Proclaimes how she esteem'd him; and his Vertue
By her electio may be truly read, what kind of man he is.

2. I honor him, euen out of your report.
But pray you tell me, is she soie childe to th' King?

1. His onely childe:

He had two Sonnes (if this be worth your hearing, Marke it) the eldest of them, at three yeares old
I th' swathing clothes, the other from their Nursery
Were stolne, and to this houre, no ghesse in knowledge
Which way they went.

2. How long is this ago?

1. Some twenty yeares.

2. That a Kings Children should be so conuey'd,
So slackely guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them.

1. Howsoere, 'tis strange,
Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at:
Yet is it true Sir.

2. I do well beleue you.

1. We must forbear. Heere comes the Gentleman,
The Queene, and Princesse. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Queene, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Q. No, be assur'd you shall not finde me (Daughter)
After the slander of most Steep-Mothers,
Enuill-ey'd vnto you. You're my Prisoner, but Your Gaoler shall deliuer you the keyes

z z 3

Thar

That locke vp your restraint. For you Posthumus,
So soone as I can win th'offended King,
I will be knowne your Aduocate: marry yet
The fire of Rage is in him, and 'twere good
You lean'd vnto his Sentence, with what patience
Your wisdom may informe you,
Post. Please your Highnesse,
I will from hence to day.

Qu. You know the perill:
He fetch a turne about the Garden, pittying
The pangs of barr'd Affections, though the King
Hath charg'd you should not speake together. Exit

Imo. O dissimbling Curtisie! How fine this Tyrant
Can tickle where the wounds? My dearest Husband,
I something feare my Fathers wrath, but nothing (Alwayes reseru'd my holy duty) what
His rage can do on me. You must be gone,
And I shall heere abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes: not comforted to liue,
But that there is this Iwell in the world,
That I may see againe.

Post. My Queene, my Mistis:
O Lady, weepe no more, least I giue cause
To be suspected of more tendernesse
Then doth become a man. I will remaine
The loyall husband, that did ere plight troth.
My residence in Rome, at one Florio's,
Who, to my Father was a Friend, to me
Knowne but by Letter; thither write (my Queene)
And with mine eyes, He drinke the words you send,
Though Inke be made of Gall.

Enter Queene.

Qu. Be briefe, I pray you:
If the King come, I shall incurre, I know not
How much of his displeasure: yet Ile moue him
To walke this way: I neuer do him wrong,
But he do's buy my Injuries, to be Friends:
Payes deere for my offences.

Post. Should we be taking leaue
As long a terme as yet we haue to liue,
The loathnesse to depart, would grow: Adieu.

Imo. Nay, stay a little:
Were you but riding forth to ayre your selfe,
Such parting were too petty. Looke heere (Loue)
This Diamond was my Mothers; take it (Heart)
But keepe it till you woo another Wife,
When Imogen is dead.

Post. How, how? Another?
You gentle Gods, giue me but this I haue,
And scare vp my embracements from a next,
With bonds of death. Remaine, remaine thou heere,
While sense can keepe it on: And sweetest, fairest,
As I (my poore selfe) did exchange for you
To your so infinite losse; so in our trifles
I still winne of you. For my sake weare this,
It is a Manacle of Loue, Ile place it
Vpon this fayrest Prisoner.

Imo. O the Gods!
When shall we see againe?

Enter Cymbeline, and Lords.

Post. Alacke, the King.
Cym. Thou bastest thing, auoyd hence, from my sight:
If after this command thou fraught the Court
With thy vnworthinesse, thou dyest. Away,
Thou'rt poyson to my blood.

Post. The Gods protect you,

And blesse the good Remainders of the Court:
I am gone. Exp.

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death
More sharpe then this is.

Cym. O disloyall thing,
That should'st repaire my youth, thou heap'st
A yeares age on mee.

Imo. I beseech you Sir,
Harme not your selfe with your vexation,
I am senselesse of your Wrath; a Touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all feares.

Cym. Past Grace? Obedience?

Imo. Past hope, and in dispaire, that way past Grace.
Cym. That might'st haue had
The sole Sonne of my Queene.

Imo. O blessed, that I might not: I chose an Eagle,
And did auoyd a Puttocke.

Cym. Thou took'st a Begger, would'st haue made my Throne, a Seate for basenesse.

Imo. No, I rather added a lustre to it.

Cym. O thou vilde one!

Imo. Sir,

It is your fault that I haue lou'd Posthumus:
You bred him as my Play-fellow, and he is
A man, worth any woman: Ouer-buies mee
Almost the summe he payes.

Cym. What? art thou mad?

Imo. Almost Sir: Heauen restore me: would I were A Neat-heards Daughter, and my Leonatus
Our Neighbour-Shepherds Sonne.

Enter Queene.

Cym. Thou foolish thing;
They were againe together: you haue done
Not after our command. Away with her,
And pen her vp.

Qu. Beseech your patience: Peace
Deere Lady daughter, peace. Sweet Soueraigne,
Leaue vs to our selues, and make your self some comfort
Out of your best aduice.

Cym. Nay, let her languish
A drop of blood a day, and being aged Dye of this Folly. Exit.

Enter Pisanio.

Qu. Fye, you must giue way:
Heere is your Seruant. How now Sir? What newes?

Pisa. My Lord your Sonne, drew on my Master.
Qu. Hah?

No harme I trust is done?

Pisa. There might haue beene,
But that my Master rather plaid, then fought,
And had no helpe of Anger: they were parted
By Gentlemen, at hand.

Qu. I am very glad on't.

Imo. Your Son's my Fathers friend, he takes his part
To draw vpon an Exile. O braue Sir,
I would they were in Affricke both together,
My selfe by with a Needle, that I might pricke
The goer backe. Why came you from your Master?

Pisa. On his command: he would not suffer mee
To bring him to the Hauens: lest these Notes
Of what commands I should be subiect too,
When't pleas'd you to employ me.

Qu. This hath bene

Your faithfull Seruant: I dare lay mine Honour
He will remaine so.

Pisa. I humbly thanke your Highnesse. Qu.

Qu. Pray walke a-while.

Imo. About some halfe houre hence,
Pray you speake with me;
You shall (at least) go see my Lord aboard.
For this time leaue me. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Cloten, and two Lords.

1. Sir, I would aduise you to shift a Shirt; the Violence of Action hath made you reek as a Sacrifice: where ayre comes out, ayre comes in: There's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.

Clot. If my Shirt were bloody, then to shift it.
Haue I hurt him?

2. No faith: not so much as his patience.

1. Hurt him? His bodie's a passable Carcasse if he bee not hurt. It is a through-fare for Steele if it be not hurt.

2. His Steele was in debt, it went o'th' Backe-side the Towne.

Clot. The Villaine would not stand me.

2. No, but he fled forward still, toward your face.

1. Stand you? you haue Land enough of your owne:
But he added to your hauing, gaue you some ground.

2. As many Inches, as you haue Oceans (Puppies.)

Clot. I would they had not come betweene vs.

2. So would I, till you had measur'd how long a Foole you were vpon the ground.

Clot. And that thee should loue this Fellow, and refuse mee.

2. If it be a sin to make a true election, she is damn'd:
1. Sir, as I told you alwayes: her Beauty & her Braine go not together. Shee's a good signe, but I haue scene small reflection of her wit.

2. She shines not vpon Fooles, least the reflection should hurt her.

Clot. Come, Ile to my Chamber: would there had bene some hurt done.

2. I wish not so, vnlesse it had bin the fall of an Asse, which is no great hurt.

Clot. You'll go with vs?

1. Ile attend your Lordship.

Clot. Nay come, let's go together.

2. Well my Lord. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Imogen, and Pisanio.

Imo. I would thou grew'st vnto the shores o'th'Hauen,
And question'd'st euery Saile: if he should write,
And I not haue it, 'twere a Paper lost
As offer'd mercy is: What was the last
That he spake to thee?

Pisa. It was his Queene, his Queene.

Imo. Then wau'd his Handkerchiefe?

Pisa. And kist it, Madam.

Imo. Senselesse Linnen, happier therein then I:
And that was all?

Pisa. No Madam: for so long

As he could make me with his eye, or eare,
Distinguish him from others, he did keepe
The Decke, with Gloue, or Hat, or Handkerchiefe,
Still waving, as the fits and sturres of's mind
Could best expresse how slow his Soule sayl'd on;
How swift his Ship.

Imo. Thou should'st haue made him,

As little as a Crow, or lesse, ere left
To after-eye him.

Pisa. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would haue broke mine eye-strings;
Crack'd them, but to looke vpon him, till the diminution
Of space, had pointed him sharpe as my Needle:
Nay, followed him, till he had melted from
The smalnesse of a Gnat, to ayre: and then
Haue turn'd mine eye, and wept. But good Pisanio,
When shall we heare from him.

Pisa. Be assur'd Madam,

With his next vantage.

Imo. I did not take my leaue of him, but had Most pretty things to say: Ere I could tell him
How I would thinke on him at certaine houres,
Such thoughts, and such: Or I could make him sweare,
The Shees of Italy should not betray
Mine Interest, and his Honour: or haue charg'd him
At the fixt houre of Morne, at Noone, at Midnight,
T'encounter me with Orisons, for then
I am in Heauen for him: Or ere I could,
Giue him that parting kisse, which I had set
Betwixt two charming words, comes in my Father,
And like the Tyrannous breathing of the North,
Shakes all our buddes from growing.

Enter a Lady.

La. The Queene (Madam)
Desires your Highnesse Company.

Imo. Those things I bid you do, get them dispatch'd,
I will attend the Queene.

Pisa. Madam, I shall. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Philario, Iachimo: a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.

Iach. Beleene it Sir, I haue scene him in Britaine; hee was then of a Cressent note, expected to proue so woor-thy, as since he hath bene allowed the name of. But I could then haue look'd on him, without the help of Admiracion, though the Catalogue of his endowments had bin tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by Items.

Phil. You speake of him when he was lesse furnish'd, then now hee is, with that which makes him both without, and within.

French. I haue scene him in France: wee had very many there, could behold the Sunne, with as firme eyes as hee.

Iach. This matter of marrying his Kings Daughter, wherein he must be weighed rather by her valew, then his owne, words him (I doubt not) a great deale from the matter.

French. And then his banishment.

Iach. I, and the approbation of those that weepe this lamentable diuorce vnder her colours, are wonderfully to extend him, be it but to fortifie her iudgement, which else an easie battery might lay flat, for taking a Begger without lesse quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourne with you? How creepes acquaintance?

Phil. His Father and I were Souldiers together, to whom I haue bin often bound for no lesse then my life.

Enter Posthumus.

Heere comes the Britaine. Let him be so entertained amongst you, as suites with Gentlemen of your knowing, to a Stranger of his quality. I beseech you all be better knowne to this Gentleman, whom I commend to you, as a Noble Friend of mine. How Worthy he is, I will leave to appeare hereafter, rather then story him in his owne hearing.

French. Sir, we haue knowne together in Orleance.

Post. Since when, I haue bin debitor to you for courtesies, which I will be euer to pay, and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o're-rate my poore kindnesse, I was glad I did attone my Countryman and you it had bene pity you should haue bene put together, with so mortall a purpose, as then each bore, vpon importance of so slight and triuiall a nature.

Post. By your pardon Sir, I was then a young Traveler, rather thund to goe with what I heard, then in my euery action to be guided by others experiences: but vpon my mended iudgement (if I offend to say it is mended) my Quarrell was not altogether slight.

French. Faith yes, to be put to the arbitrement of Swords, and by such two, that would by all likelihood haue confounded one the other, or haue false both.

Iach. Can we with manners, aske what was the difference?

French. Safely, I thinke, 'twas a contention in publicke, which may (without contradiction) suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of vs fell in praise of our Country-Mistresses. This Gentleman, at that time vouching (and vpon warrant of bloody affirmation) his to be more Faire, Vertuous, Wise, Chaste, Constant, Qualified, and lesse acceptable then any, the rarest of our Ladies in Fraunce.

Iach. That Lady is not now living; or this Gentlemans opinion by this, worne out.

Post. She holds her Vertue still, and I my mind.

Iach. You must not so farre preferre her, 'fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so farre prouok'd as I was in France: I would abate her nothing, though I professe my selfe her Adorer, not her Friend.

Iach. As faire, and as good: a kind of hand in hand comparison, had bene something too faire, and too good for any Lady in Britanie; if she went before others. I haue seene as that Diamond of yours out-lusters many I haue beheld, I could not beleue she excelled many: but I haue not seene the most pretious Diamond that is, nor you the Lady.

Post. I prais'd her, as I rated her: so do I my Stone.

Iach. What do you esteeme it at?

Post. More then the world enioyes.

Iach. Either your vnaparagon'd Mistress is dead, or she's out-priz'd by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be solde or giuen, or if there were wealth enough for the purchases, or merite for the gift. The other is nor a thing for sale, and onely the gift of the Gods.

Iach. Which the Gods haue giuen you?

Post. Which by their Graces I will keepe.

Iach. You may weare her in title yours: but you know strange Fowle light vpon neighbouring Ponds. Your Ring may be stolne too, so your brace of vnprizeable Estimations, the one is but fraile, and the other Casuall. A cunning Thiefe, or a (that way) accomplish'd Courtier, would hazzard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy, contains none so accomplish'd a Courtier to conuince the Honour of my Mistress: if in the holding or losse of that, you terme her fraile, I do nothing doubt you haue store of Theeues, notwithstanding I feare not my Ring.

Phil. Let vs leaue heere, Gentlemen?

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy Signior I thanke him, makes no stranger of me, we are familiar at first.

Iach. With five times so much conuersation, I should get ground of your faire Mistress; make her go backe, euen to the yeilding, had I admittance, and opportunitie to friend.

Post. No, no.

Iach. I dare thereupon pawne the moytie of my Estate, to your Ring, which in my opinion o're-values it something: but I make my wager rather against your Confidence, then her Reputation. And to barre your offence heerein to, I durst attempt it against any Lady in the world.

Post. You are a great deale abus'd in too bold a persuasion, and I doubt not you sustaine what y are worthy of, by your Attempt.

Iach. What's that?

Post. A Repulse though your Attempt (as you call it) defieue more; a punishment too.

Phil. Gentlemen enough of this, it came in too suddenly, let it dye as it was borne, and I pray you be better acquainted.

Iach. Would I had put my Estate, and my Neighbors on th'approbation of what I haue spoke,

Post. What Lady would you chuse to affaile?

Iach. Yours, whom in constancie you thinke stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousands Duckets to your Ring, that commend me to the Court where your Lady is, with no more aduantage then the opportunitie of a second conference, and I will bring from thence, that Honor of hers, which you imagine to refer'd.

Posthumus. I will wage against your Gold, Gold to it: My Ring I holde deere as my finger, 'tis part of it.

Iach. You are a Friend, and there in the wiser: if you buy Ladies flesh at a Million a Dram, you cannot pre-seure it from tainting; but I see you haue some Religion in you, that you feare.

Post. This is but a custome in your tongue: you beare a grauer purpose I hope.

Iach. I am the Master of my speeches, and would vnder-go what's spoken, I sweare.

Post. Will you? I shall but lend my Diamond till your returne: let there be Couenants drawne between's. My Mistress exceeds in goodnesse, the hugenesse of your vnworthy thinking. I dare you to this match: heere's my Ring.

Phil. I will haue it no lay.

Iach. By the Gods it is one: if I bring you no sufficient testimony that I haue enioy'd the deereft bodily part of your Mistress: my ten thousand Duckets are yours;

to

so is your Diamond too: if I come off, and leaue her in such honour as you haue trust in; Shee your Iewell, this your Iewell, and my Gold are yours: provided, I haue your commendation, for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these Conditions; let vs haue Articles betwixt vs: onely thus farre you shall answer, if you make your voyage vpon her, and giue me directly to vnderstand, you haue preuayl'd, I am no further your Enemy, shee is not worth our debates. If shee remaine vnderdu'd, yee not making it appeare otherwise: for your ill opinion, and th'assay you haue made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your Sword.

Iach. Your hand, a Couenant: wee will haue these things set downe by lawfull Counsell, and straight away for Britaine, least the Bargaine should catch cold; and sterue: I will fetch my Gold, and haue our two Wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed.

French. Will this hold, thinke you?

Phil. Signior Iachimo will not from it. Pray let vs follow 'em.

Scena Sexta

Enter Queene, Ladies, and Cornelius.

Qu. Whiles yet the dew's on ground, Gather those Flowers, Make haste. Who ha's the note of them?

Lady. I Madam.

Qu. Dispatch. Now Master Doctor, haue you brought those drugges?

Cor. Pleaseth your Highnes, I haue they are, Madam: But I beseech your Grace, without offence (My Conscience bids me aske) wherefore you haue Commanded of me these most payfonous Compounds, Which are the moouers of a languishing death: But though slow, deadly.

Qu. I wonder, Doctor, Thou ask'st me such a Question: Haue I not bene Thy Pupill long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make Perfumes? Distill? Preserve? Yea so, That our great King himselfe doth woo me oft For my Confections? Haueing thus farre proceeded, (Vnlesse thou thinkest me diuellish) is't not meete That I did amplify my iudgement in Other Conclusions? I will try the forces

Of these thy Compounds, on such Creatures as We count not worth the hanging (but none humane) To try the vigour of them, and apply Allayments to their Aile, and by them gather Their severall vertues, and effects.

Cor. Your Highnesse Shall from this practise, but make hard your heart: Besides, the feeling these effects will be Both noysome, and infectious.

Qu. O content thee.

Enter Pisanio, and Ladies.

Heere comes a flattering Rascal, vpon him Will I first worke: Hee's for his Master, And enemy to my Sonne. How now Pisanio? Doctor, your seruice for this time is ended, Take your owne way.

Cor. I do suspect you, Madam,

But you shall do no harme.

Qu. Hearke thee, a word.

Cor. I do not like her. She doth thinke she ha's

Strange ling'ring paysons: I do know her spirit,

And will not trust one of her malice, with

A drugges of such damnd Nature. Those she ha's,

Will stupifie and dull the Sense a while,

Which first (perchance) shee'l proue on Cats and Dogs;

Then afterward vpon higher: but there is

No danger in what shew of death it makes,

More then the locking vpon the Spirits a time,

To be more fresh, reuiving. She is fool'd

With a most false effect: and I, the truer,

So to be false with her.

Qu. No further seruice, Doctor,

Vntill I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leaue.

Qu. Weepes she still (last thou?)

Doth thou thinke in time

She will not quench, and let instructions enter

Where Folly now possesies? Do thou worke:

When thou shalt bring me word she loues my Sonne,

Ile tell thee on the instant, thou art then

As great as is thy Master: Greater, for

His Fortunes all lye speechlesse, and his name

Is at last gaspe, Returne he cannot, nor

Continue where he is: To shifte his being,

Is to exchange one misery with another,

And euery day that comes, comes to decay

A dayes worke in him. What shalt thou expect

To be depend on a thing that leanes?

Who cannot be new built, nor ha's no Friends

So much, as but to prop him? Thou tak'st vp

Thou know'st not what: But take it for thy labour,

It is a thing I made, which hath the King

Five times redeem'd from death. I do not know

What is more Cordiall. Nay, I pray thee take it,

It is an earnest of a farther good

That I meane to thee. Tell thy Mistress how

The case stands with her: doot, as from thy selfe;

Thinke what a chance thou changeft on, but thinke

Thou hast thy Mistress still, to boote, my Sonne,

Who shall take notice of thee. Ile moue the King

To any shape of thy Preferment, such

As thou'lt desire: and then my selfe, I cheefely,

That set thee on to this desert, am bound

To load thee richly. Call my women. Exit Pisanio.

Thinke on my words. A lye, and constant knaue,

Not to be shak'd: the Agent for his Master,

And the Remembrancer of her, to hold

The hand-fast to her Lord. I haue giuen him that,

Which if he take, shall quite vnpeople her

Of Leigers for her Sweete: and which, she after

Except she bend her humor, shall be assur'd

To taste of too.

Enter Pisanio, and Ladies.

So, so: Well done, well done:

The Violets, Cowslippes, and the Prime-Roses

Beare to my Closet: Fare thee well, Pisanio.

Thinke on my words. Exit Qu. and Ladies

Pisa. And shall do:

But when to my good Lord, I proue vntrue,

Ile choake my selfe: there't all Ile do for you.

Exit

Scena

Scena Septima.

Enter Imogen alone.

Imo. A Father cruel, and a Stepdame false,
A Foolish Suitor to a Wedded Lady:
That hath her Husband banish'd: O, that Husband,
My supream Crowne of griefe, and those repeated
Vexations of it. Had I bin Theefe-Roine,
As my two Brothers, happy: but most miserable
Is the desire that's glorious. Blessed be those
How meane so ere, that haue their honest wills,
Which seafons comfort. Who may this be? Fye.

Enter Pisanio, and Iachimo.

Pisa. Madam, a Noble Gentleman of Rome,
Comes from my Lord with Letters.

Iach. Change you, Madam:
The Worthy Leonatus is in safety,
And greetes your Highnesse deere.

Imo. Thanks good Sir,
You're kindly welcome.

Iach. All of her, that is out of doore, most rich:
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare
She is alone th' Arabian Bird; and I
Haue lost the wager. Boldnesse be my Friend:
Arme me Audacitie from head to foote,
Or like the Parthian I shall flye fight,
Rather directly flye.

Imogen reads.

He is one of the Noblest note, to whose kindnesses I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust.

Leonatus.

So farre I reade aloud.
But euen the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by th' rest, and take it thankfully.
You are as welcome (worthy Sir) as I
Haue words to bid you, and shall finde it so
In all that I can do.

Iach. Thanks fairest Lady:
What are men mad? Hath Nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted Arch, and the rich Crop
Of Sea and Land, which can distinguish twixt
The fire Orbes above, and the twinn'd Stones
Vpon the number'd Beach, and can we not Partition make with Spectacles so pretious
Twixt faire, and foule?

Imo. What makes your admiration?

Iach. It cannot be th' eye: for Apes, and Monkeys Twixt two such She's, would chatter this way, and Contemne with mowes the other. Nor th' iudgment:
For Idiots in this case of fauour, would
Be wisely definite: Nor th' Appetite.
Sluttry to such neate Excellence, oppos'd
Should make desire vomit emptinesse,
Nor so allur'd to feed.

Imo. What is the matter trow?

Iach. The Cloyed will:
That satiate yet vn-satisf'd desire, that Tub
Both fill'd and running: Rauening first the Lambe, Longs after for the Garbage.

Imo. What, deere Sir,
Thus rap's you? Are you well?

Iach. Thanks Madam well: Beseech you Sir,
Desire my Man's abode, where I did leaue him:
He's strange and peeuish.

Pisa. I was going Sir,
To giue him welcome.

Imo. Continues well my Lord?
His health beseech you?

Iach. Well, Madam.

Imo. Is he dispos'd to mirth? I hope he is.

Iach. Exceeding pleasant: none a stranger there,
So merry, and so game some: he is call'd
The Britaine Reueller.

Imo. When he was heere
He did incline to sadnesse, and oft times
Not knowing why.

Iach. I neuer saw him sad.

There is a Frenchman his Companion, one
An eminent Monsieur, that it seemes much loues
A Gallian-Girl at home. He furnaces
The thicke sighes from him; whiles the iolly Britaine,
(Your Lord I meane) laughs from a free lungs series oh,
Can my fides hold, to think that man who knowes
By History, Report, or his owne prooffe
What woman is, yea what she cannot choose
But must be will's free houres languish:
For assured bondage?

Imo. Will my Lord say so?

Iach. I Madam, with his eyes in flood; with laughter,
It is a Recreation to be by
And heare him mocke the Frenchman:
But Heauen's know some men are much too blame.

Imo. No he I hope.

Iach. Not he:

But yet Heauen's bounty towards him, might
Be vs'd more thankfully. In himselfe 'tis much;
In you, which I account his beyond all Talents,
Whil' I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pittie too.

Imo. What do you pittie Sir?

Iach. Two Creatures heartily.

Imo. Am I one Sir?

You looke on me: what wrack discerne you in me
Deserues your pittie?

Iach. Lamentable: what

To hide me from the radiant Sun, and solace
I th' Dungeon by a Snuffe.

Imo. I pray you Sir,

Deliuert with more opennesse your answers
To my demands. Why do you pittie me?

Iach. That others do,

(I was about to say) enjoy your — but
It is an office of the Gods to venge it,
Not mine to speake on't.

Imo. You do seeme to know

Something of me, or what concernes me; pray you
Since doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Then to be sure they do. For Certainties
Either are past remedies; or timely knowing,
The remedy then borne. Discouer to me
What both you spur and stop,

Iach. Had I this cheek

To bathe my lips vpon: this hand, whose touch,
(Whose euery touch) would force the Feelers soule
To th' oath of loyalty. This obiect, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fiering it onely heere, should I (damn'd then)

Slaves

Slauer with lippes as common as the flayres
That mount the Capitoll: Toynie gripes, with hands Made hard with hourly falshood (falshood as
With labour:) then by peeping in an eye
Base and illustrious as the smoakie light
That's fed with stinking Tallow: it were fit
That all the plagues of Hell should at one time
Encounter such feeders.

Imo. My Lord, I feare

Has forgot Brittain.

Iach. And himselfe, not I

Inclin'd to this intelligence, pronounce
The Beggery of his change: but tis your Graces
That from my muteest Conscience, to my tongue,
Charmes this report out.

Imo. Let me heare no more

Iach. O dearest Soule: your Cause doth strike my hart
With pittie, that doth make me sicke. A Lady
So faire, and fasten'd to an Emperie
Would make the great'st King honorable, to be partner'd
With Tomboyes hvy'd; with that false exhibition
Which your owne Cofters yeild: with diseas'd ventures
That play with ill Infirmities for Gold,
Which rottennesse can lend Nature. Such boy'd Ruffe
As well might poyson Poyson. Be reueng'd,
Or she that bore you, was no Queen, and you
Recoyle from your great Stocke.

Imo. Reueng'd:

How should I be reueng'd? If this be true,
(As I haue such a Heart, that both mine eares Must not in haste abuse) if it be true,
How should I be reueng'd?

Iach. Should he make me

Live like Diana's Priest, betwixt cold sheets,
Whiles he is vaulting variable Ramps
In your despatch, vpon your pisse: reuenge it.
I dedicate my selfe to your sweet pleasure,
More Noble then that runagate to your bed,
And will continue fast to your Affection,
Still close, as sure.

Imo. What hoa; Pisanio?

Iach. Let me my seruice tender on your lippes.

Imo. Away, I do condemne mine eares, that haue
So long attended thee. If thou wert Honourable Thou wouldst haue told this tale for Vertue, not
For such an end thou seek'st, as base, as strange:

Thou wrong'st a Gentleman, who is as faire
From thy report, as thou from Honor, and Solicites heere a Lady, that disdaines
Thee, and the Diuell alike. What hoa; Pisanio?

The King my Father shall be made acquainted
Of thy Assault: if he shall thinke it fit,
A fawcy Stranger in his Court, to Mart

As in a Romish Stew, and to expound

His beastly minde to vs; he hath a Court

He little cares for, and a Daughter, who

He not respects at all. What hoa; Pisanio?

Iach. O happy Leonatus I may say,

The credit that thy Lady hath of thee
Deserues thy trust, and thy most perfect goodnesse
Her assur'd credit. Blessed be you long,

A Lady to the worthiest Sir, that euer
Country call'd his; and you his Mistress, onely
For the most worthiest Sir. Giue me your pardon,
I haue spoke this to know if your Affiance
Were deeply rooted, and shall make your Lord,

That which he is, new o're: And he is one
The truest manner'd: such a holy Witch,
That he enchants Societies into him:
Halse all men hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.

Iach. He sits mongst men, like a defended God;
He hath a kinde of Honor sets him off,
More then a mortall seeming. Be not angry
(Most mighty Princesse) that I haue adventur'd
To try your taking of a fassereport, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great iudgement,
In the election of a Sir, so rare,
Which you know, cannot erre. The loue I beare him,
Made me to fan you thus, but the Gods made you (Vnlike all others) chaffesle. Pray your pardon.

Imo. All's well Sir:

Take my powre th' Court for yours.

Iach. My humble thanks: I had almost forgot
T'intreat your Grace, but in a small request,
And yet of moment too, for it concernes:

Your Lord, my selfe, and other Noble Friends
Are partners in the businesse.

Imo. Pray what's it?

Iach. Some dozen Romanes of vs, and your Lord
(The best Feather of our wing) haue mingled summes
To buy a Present for the Emperor:
Which I (the Factor for the rest) haue done
In France: tis Plate of rare deuice, and Jewels
Of rich, and exquisite forme, their valewes great,
And I am something curious, being strange
To haue them in safe stowage: May it please you
To take them in protection.

Imo. Willingly:

And pawne mine Honor for their safety, since
My Lord hath interest in them, I will keepe them
In my Bed-chamber.

Iach. They are in a Trunke
Attended by my men: I will make bold
To send them to you, onely for this night:
I must aboard to morrow.

Imo. O no, no.

Iach. Yes I beseech: or I shall short my word
By length'ning my returne. From Gallia
I crost the Seas on purpose, and on promise
To see your Grace.

Imo. I thanke you for your paines:
But not away to morrow.

Iach. O I must Madam.

Therefore I shall beseech you, if you please
To greet your Lord with writing, doo't to night,
I haue out-stood my time, which is materiall
To th' tender of our Present.

Imo. I will write:

Send your Trunke to me, it shall safe be kept,
And truly yeilded you: you're very welcome. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Cloten, and the two Lords.

Clot. Was there euer man had such lucke when I kiss the lacke vpon an vp-cast, to be hit away? I had a hundred pound on't: and then a whorion lacke-an-Apes

must

must take me vp for swearing, as if I borrowed mine oathes of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

1. What got he by that? you haue broke his pate with your Bowle.

2. If his wit had bin like him that broke it: it would haue run all out.

Clot. When a Gentleman is dispos'd to sweare: it is not for any standers by to curtall his oathes. Ha?

2. No my Lord; nor crop the eares of them.

Clot. Whorson dog: I gaue him satisfaction? would he had bin one of my Ranke.

2. To haue smell'd like a Foole.

Clot. I am not vext more at any thing in th'earth: a pox on't. I had rather not be so Noble as I am: they dare not fight with me, because of the Queene my Mother: every lacke-Slaue hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go vp and downe like a Cock, that no body can match.

2. You are Cocke and Capon too, and you crow Cock, with your combe on.

Clot. Sayest thou?

2. It is not fit you Lordship should vnder take euery Companion, that you giue offence too.

Clot. No, I know that: but it is fit I should commit offence to my inferiours.

2. It is fit for your Lordship onely.

Clot. Why so I say.

1. Did you heere of a Stranger that's come to Court night?

Clot. A Stranger, and I not know on't?

2. He's a strange Fellow himselfe, and knowes it not.

1. There's an Italian come, and 'tis thought one of Leonatus Friends.

Clot. Leonatus? A banisht Rascall; and he's another, whatsoeuer he be. Who told you of this Stranger?

1. One of your Lordships Pages.

Clot. Is it fit I went to looke vpon him? Is there no derogation in't?

2. You cannot derogate my Lord.

Clot. Not easily I thinke.

2. You are a Foole graunted, therefore your Issues being foolish do not derogate.

Clot. Come, Ile go see this Italian: what I haue lost to day at Bowles, Ile winne to night of him. Come: go.

2. Ile attend your Lordship. Exit.

That such a craftie Diuell as is his Mother Should yeild the world this Ass: A woman, that Beares all downe with her Braine, and this her Sonne, Cannot take two from twenty for his heart, And leaue eightene. Alas poore Princess, Thou diuine Imogen, what thou endur'st, Betwixt a Father by thy Step-dame govern'd, A Mother hourly coynning plots: A Wooer, More hatefull then the foule expulsiō is Of thy deere Husband. Then that horrid Act Of the diuorce, hee'd make the Heauens hold firme The walls of thy deere Honour. Keepe vnsak'd That Temple thy faire mind, that thou maist stand T'entree thy banisht Lord, and this great Land. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Imogen in her Bed, and a Lady.

Imo. Who's there? My woman: Helene?

La. Please you Madam, Imogen is not here.

Imo. What house is it? Imogen is not here.

Lady. Almost midnight, Madam.

Imo. I haue read three houres then:

Mine eyes are weake,

Fold downe the leafe where I haue left: to bed,

Take not away the Taper, leaue it burning;

And if thou canst awake by foure o'clock,

I prythee call me: Sleepe hath seiz'd me wholly,

To your protection I commend me, Gods,

From Fayries, and the Tempters of the night,

Guard me befecch yee.

Imogen from the Trunke.

Iach. The Crickets sing, and mans ore-labor'd sense

Repaires it selfe by rest: Our Tarquine thus

Did softly presse the Rushes, ere he waken'd

The Chastitie he wounded. Cytherea,

How brauely thou becom'st thy Bed; fresh Lilly,

And whiter then the Sheetes: that I might touch,

But kisse, one kisse. Rubies vnparagon'd,

How deere they doo't: 'Tis her breathing that

Perfumes the Chamber thus: the Flame o'th' Taper

Bowes toward her, and would vnder-peepe her lids,

To see th'inclosed Lights, now Canopied

Vnder these windowes, White and Azure lac'd

With Biew of Heauens owne unit. But my designe

To note the Chamber, I will write all downe,

Such, and such pictures: There the window, such

Th'adornement of her Bed; the Arras, Figures,

Why such, and such: and the Contents o'th' Story,

Ah, but some naturall notes about her Body,

Above ten thousand meaner Moueables

Would testifie, & enrich mine Inuentorie.

O sleepe, thou Ape of death, lye dull vpon her,

And be her Sense but as a Monument,

Thus in a Chappell lying. Come off, come off;

As slippery as the Gordian-knot was hard,

'Tis mine, and this will witness outwardly,

As strongly as the Conscience do's within:

To'th' madding of her Lord. On her left breast

Amole Cinque-spotted: Like the Crimson drops

I'th' bottom of a Cowslippe. Heere's a Voucher,

Stronger then euer Law could make; this Secret

Will force him thinke I haue pick'd the lock, and eane

The treasure of her Honour. No more: to what end?

Why should I write this downe, that's siuete,

Screw'd to my memorie. She hath bin reading late,

The Tale of Tereus, heere the leaffe's turn'd downe

Where Philomela gaue vp. I haue enough,

To'th' Truncke againe, and shut the spring of it.

Swift, swift, you Dragons of the night, that dawning

May beare the Rauens eye: I lodge in feare,

Though this a heauenly Angell: hell is heere.

Clocke strikes.

Exit.

One, two, three: time, time.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Cloten, and Lords.

1. Your Lordship is the most patient man in losse, the most coldest that euer turn'd vp Ace.

Clot. It would make any man cold to losse.

1. But not euery man patient after the noble temper of your Lordship; You are most hot, and furious when you winne.

Clot.

Winning will put any man into courage: if I could get this foolish Imogen, I should haue Gold enough: it's almost morning, is't not?

1. Day, my Lord.

Clot. I would this Musicke would come: I am aduised to giue her Musicke a mornings, they say it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on, tune: If you can penetrate her with your finger, so: we'll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remaine: but Ile neuer giue o're. Firft, a very excellent good conceyted thing; after a wonderful sweet aire, with admirable rich words to it, and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hearke, hearke, the Larks at Heauens gate sing;

and Phœbus gins arise,

His Steeds to water at these Springs

on chalic'd Flowres that lyes:

And winking Mary-buds begin to ope their Golden eyes

With euery thing that pretty is, my Lady sweet arise:

Arise, arise.

So, get you gone: if this pen trate, I will consider your Musicke the better: if it do not, it is a voyce in her eares which Horse-haires, and Calues-guts, nor the voyce of vnpauid Eunuch to boot, can neuer amed.

Enter Cymbeline, and Queene.

2. Heere comes the King.

Clot. I am glad I was vp so late, for that's the reason

I was vp so early: he cannot choose but take this Seruice I haue done, fatherly. Good morrow to your Majesty, and to my gracious Mother.

Cym. Attend you here the doore of our stern daughter

Will she not forth?

Clot. I haue assay'd her with Musickes, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The Exile of her Minion is too new,

She hath not yet forgot him, some more time

Must weare the print of his remembrance on't,

And then she's yours.

Qu. You are most bound to'th' King,

Who let's go by no vantages, that may

Preferre you to his daughter: Frame your selfe

To orderly solicity, and be friended

With aptnesse of the season: make denials

Encrease your Seruices: so seeme, as if

You were inspir'd to do those duties which

You tender to her: that you in all obey her,

Save when command to your dismissal tends,

And therein you are senselesse.

Clot. Senselesse? Not so.

Mef. So like you (Sir) Ambassadors from Rome;

The one is Cains Lucius.

Cym. A worthy Fellow,

Albeit he comes on angry purpose now;

But that's no fault of his: we must receyue him

According to the Honor of his Sender,

And towards himselfe, his goodnesse fore-spent on vs

We must extend our notice: Our deere Sonne,

When you haue giuen good morning to your Mistis,

Attend the Queene, and vs, we shall haue neede

T'employ you towards this Romane.

Come our Queene. Exeunt.

Clot. If she be vp, Ile speake with her: if not

Let her lye still, and dreame: by your leaue hoa,

I know her women are about her: what

If I do line one of their hands, 'tis Gold Which buyes admittance (oft it doth) yea, and makes Diana's Rangers false themselves, yeeld vp Their Deere to'th' stand o'th' Stealer: and 'tis Gold Which makes the True-man kill'd, and saues the Theefe: Nay, sometime hangs both Theefe, and True-man: what Can it not do, and vndoo? I will make One of her women Lawyer to me, for I yet not vnderstand the case my selfe. By your leaue. Knockes.

Enter a Lady.

La. Who's there that knockes?

Clot. A Gentleman.

La. No more.

Clot. Yes, and a Gentlewoman's Sonne.

La. That's more

Then some whose Taylors are as deere as yours,

Can iustly boast of: what's your Lordships pleasure?

Clot. Your Ladies person, is she ready?

La. I, to keepe her Chamber.

Clot. There is Gold for you,

Sell me your good report.

La. How, my good name? or to report of you

What I shall thinke is good. The Princess.

Enter Imogen.

Clot. Good morrow fairest, Sister your sweet hand.

Imo. Good morrow Sir, you lay out too much paines

For purchasing but trouble: the thanks I giue,

Is telling you that I am poore of thanks,

And scarce can spare them.

Clot. Still I sweare I loue you.

Imo. If you but said so, 'twere as deepe with me:

If you sweare still, your recompence is still

That I regard it not.

Clot. This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say, I yeeld being silent,

I would not speake. I pray you spare me, faith

I shall vnfold equall discourtesie

To your best kindeesse: one of your great knowing

Shall learne (being taught) forbearance.

Clot. To leaue you in your madnesse, 'twere my sin,

I will not.

Imo. Fooies are not mad Folkes.

Clot. Do you call me Foole?

Imo. As I am mad I do:

If you'll be patient, Ile no more be mad,

That cures vs both. I am much sorry (Sir)

You put me to forget a Ladies manners

By being so verball: and learne now, for all,

That I which know my heart, do heere pronounce

By th' very truth of it, I care not for you,

And am so nere the lacke of Charitie

To accuse my selfe, I hate you: which I had rather

You felt, then make't my boast.

Clot. You sinne against

Obedience, which you owe your Father, for

The Contract you pretend with that base Wretch,

One, bred of Almes, and foster'd with cold dishes,

With scraps o'th' Court: It is no Contract, none;

And though it be allowed in meaner parties

(Yet who then he more meane) to knit their soules

(On whom there is no more dependencie

But Brats and Beggery) in selfe-figur'd knot,

Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement, by

The consequence o' th' Crowne, and must not foyle
The precious note of it; with a base Slaue,
A Hilding for a Liourie, a Squires Cloth,
A Pantler; not so eminent.

Imo. Prophane Fellow:

Wert thou the Sonne of Iupiter, and no more,
But what thou art besides: thou wert too base,
To be his Groom: thou wert dignified enough
Euen to the point of Ennie. If 'twere made Comparatiue for your Vertues, to be stil'd
The vnder Hangman of his Kingdome; and hated
For being prefer'd so well.

Clot. The South-Fog rot him.

Imo. He neuer can meete more mischance, then come
To be but nam'd of thee. His mean'st Garment
That euer hath but clipp'd his body; is dearer
In my respect, then all the Heires about thee,
Were they all made such men: How now Pisania?

Enter Pisania.

Clot. His Garments? Now the diuell.

Imo. To Dorothy my woman hee thee presently.

Clot. His Garment?

Imo. I am sprighted with a Foole,
Frighted, and angry worke: Go bid my woman
Search for a Jewell, that too casually
Hath left mine Arme: it was thy Masters. Shrew me
If I would loose it for a Reuenew,
Of any Kings in Europe. I do think,
I saw't this morning: Confident I am.
Last night 'twas on mine Arme; I kiss'd it,
I hope it be not gone, to tell my Lord
That I kiss'd aught but he.

Pis. 'Twill not be lost.

Imo. I hope so: go and search.

Clot. You haue abus'd me:

His mean'st Garment?

Imo. I, I said so Sir,

If you will make't an Action, call witnesse to't.

Clot. I will enforme your Father.

Imo. Your Mother too:

She's my good Lady; and will conceiue, I hope

But the worst of me. So I leaue your Sir,

To'th' worst of discontent.

Clot. He be reueng'd:

His mean'st Garment? Well.

Exit.

Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Posthumus, and Philario.

Post. Feare it not Sir: I would I were so sure
To winne the King, as I am bold, her Honour
Will remaine her's.

Phil. What meanes do you make to him?

Post. Not any: but abide the change of Time,
Quake in the present winters state, and wish
That warmer dayes would come: In these fear'd hope
I barely gratifie your loue; they fayling
I must die much your debtor.

Phil. Your very goodnesse, and your company,
Ore-payes all I can do. By this your King,
Hath heard of Great Augustus: Caius Lucius,
Will do's Commission throughly. And I think

Hee'll grant the Tribute: send th' Arrerages,
Or looke vpon our Romaines, whose remembrance
Is yet fresh in their griefe.

Post. I do beleue

(Statist though I am none, nor like to be)
That this will proue a Warre; and you shall heare
The Legion now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not-fearing Britaine, then haue tydings
Of any penny Tribute paid. Our Countrymen
Are men more order'd, then when Julius Caesar
Smil'd at their lacke of skill, but found their courage
Worthy his frowning art. Their discipline,
(Now wing-led with their courages) will make knowne
To their Approuers, they are People, such
That mend vpon the world.

Enter Iachimo.

Phil. See Iachimo.

Post. The swiftest Harts, haue posted you by land;
And Windes of all the Corners kiss'd your Sailes,
To make your vessell nimble.

Phil. Welcome Sir.

Post. I hope the briefenesse of your answers, made
The speedinesse of your returne.

Iach. Your Lady,

Is one of the fayrest that I haue look'd vpon

Post. And therewithall the best, or let her beauty
Looke thorough a Casement to allure false hearts,
And be false with them.

Iach. Heere are Letters for you.

Post. Their tenure good I trust.

Iach. 'Tis very like.

Post. Was Caius Lucius in the Britaine Court,
When you were there?

Iach. He was expected then,

But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet,
Sparkles this Stone as it was wont, or is't not Too dull for your good wearing?

Iach. If I haue lost it,

I should haue lost the worth of it in Gold,
He make a iourney twice as farre, to enioy
A second night of such sweet shortnesse, which Was mine in Britaine, for the Ring is wonne.

Post. The Stones too hard to come by.

Iach. Not a whit,

Your Lady being so easie.

Post. Make note Sir

Your losse, your Sport: I hope you know that we Must not continue Friends.

Iach. Good Sir, we must

If you keepe Couenant: had I not brought
The knowledge of your Mistris home, I grant
We were to question farther; but I now
Professe my selfe the winner of her Honor,
Together with your Ring; and not the wronger
Of her, or you hauing proceeded but
By both your willes.

Post. If you can mak't apparant
That you haue tasted her in Bed; my hand,
And Ring is yours. If not, the foule opinion
You had o'ther pure Honour; gainer, or looses,
Your Sword, or mine, or Masterlesse leaue both
To who shall finde them.

Iach. Sir, my Circumstances

Being so nere the Truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to beleue; whose strength
I will confirme wit h oath, which I doubt not

You'll

You'll giue me leaue to spare, when you shall finde
You neede it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her Bed-chamber

(Where I confesse I slept not, but professe
Had that was well worth watching) it was hang'd
With Tapistry of Silke, and Siluer, the Story
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Sidnus swell'd aboue the Bankes, or for
The presse of Boates, or Pride. A peece of Worke
So brauely done, so rich, that it did strue
In Workmanship, and Value, which I wonder'd
Could be so rarely, and exactly wrought
Since the true life on't was

Post. This is true:

And this you might haue heard of heere, by me,
Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars

Must iustifie my knowledge.

Post. So they must,

Or doe your Honour injury.

Iach. The Chimney

Is South the Chamber, and the Chimney-peece
Chaste Dian, bathing: neuer saw I figures
Solikely to report themselves; the Cutter
Was as another Nature dumbe, out-went her,
Motion, and Breath left out.

Post. This is a thing

Which you might from Relation likewise reape,
Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The Rooffe o'th' Chamber,

With golden Cherubins is fretted. Her Andirons
(I had forgot them) were two winking Cupids
Of Siluer, each on one foote standing, nicely
Depending on their Brands.

Post. This is her Honor:

Let it be granted you haue seene all this (and praise
Be giuen to your remembrance) the description
Of what is in her Chamber, nothing faues
The wager you haue laid.

Iach. Then if you can

Be pale, I begge but leaue to ayre this Jewell: See,
And now 'tis vp againe: it must be married
To that your Diamond, Ile keepe them.

Post. Ioue

Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her?

Iach. Sir (I thanke her) that

She stript it from her Arme: I see her yet:
Her pretty Action, did out-sell her guift,
And yet enrich'd it too: she gaue it me,
And said, she priz'd it once.

Post. May be, she pluck'd it off

To send it me.

Iach. She writes so to you? doth shee?

Post. O no, no, no, 'tis true. Heere, take this too,

It is a Basiliske vnto mine eye,
Killes me to looke on't: Let there be no Honor,
Where there is Beauty: Truth, where semblance: Loue,
Where there's another man. The Vowes of Women,
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Then they are to their Vertues, which is nothing:
O, aboue measure false.

Phil. Haue patience Sir,

And take your Ring againe, 'tis not yet wonne:
It may be probable she lost it, or

Who knowes if one her women, being corrupted
Hath stolne it from her.

Post. Very true,

And so I hope he came by't: backe my Ring,
Render to me some corporall signe about her
More euident then this: for this was stolne.

Iach. By Iupiter, I had it from her Arme.

Post. Hearke you, he sweares: by Iupiter he sweares.

'Tis true, nay keepe the Ring; 'tis true: I am sure
She would not loose it: her Attendants are
All sworne, and honourable: they induc'd to steale it?
And by a Stranger? No, he hath enioy'd her,
The Cognoissance of her incontinencie
Is this: she hath bought the name of Whore, thus deerly
There, take thy hyre, and all the Fiends of Hell
Diuide themselves betweene you.

Phil. Sir, be patient:

This is not strong enough to be beleu'd
Of one perfwaded well of.

Post. Neuer talke on't:

She hath bin coiled by him.

Iach. If you seeke

For further satisfying, vnder her Breast
(Worthy her pressing) lyes a Mole, right proud
Of that most delicate Lodging. By my life
I kiss't it, and it gaue me present hunger
To feede againe, though full. You do remember
This staine vpon her?

Post. I, and it doth confirme

Another staine, as bigge as Hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.

Iach. Will you heare more?

Post. Spare your Arithmaticke,
Neuer count the Turnes: Once, and a Million.

Iach. Ile be sworne.

Post. No swearing:

If you will sweare you haue not done't, you lye,
And I will kill thee, if thou do'st deny
Thou'lt made me Cuckold.

Iach. Ile deny nothing.

Post. O that I had her heere, to teare her Limb-meale:

I will go there and doo't, i'th' Court, before

Her Father. Ile do something.

Exit.

Phil. Quite besides

The government of Patience. You haue wonne:
Let's follow him, and peruert the present wrath
He hath against himselfe.

Iach. With all my heart.

Exeunt.

Enter Posthumus.

Post. Is there no way for Men to be, but Women Must be halfe-workers? We are all Bastards,
And that most venerable man, which I Did call my Father, was, I know not where
When I was stamp't. Some Coyner with his Toolles
Made me a counterfeit: yet my Mother seem'd
The Dian of that time: so doth my Wife
The Non-pareill of this. Oh Vengeance, Vengeance!
Me of my lawfull pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance: did it with
A pudencie so Rosie, the sweet view on't
Might well haue warm'd olde Saturne;
That I thought her
As Chaste, as vn-Sun'd Snow. Oh, all the Diuels!
This yellow Iachimo in an houre, was't not?

333

Or

Or lesse; at first? Perchance he spoke not, but Like a full Acorn'd Boare, a Iarmen on,
Cry'de oh, and mounted; found no opposition.
But what he look'd for, should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I finde out
The Womans part in me, for there's no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirme
It is the Womans part: be it Lying, note it,
The womans: Flattering, hers; Deceiuing, hers:
Lust, and ranke thoughts, hers, hers: Reuenges hers:
Ambitions, Couetings, change of Prides, Disdaine,
Nice-longing, Slanders, Mutability;
All Faults that name, nay, that Hell knowes,
Why hers, in part, or all: but rather all For euen to Vice
They are not constant, but are changing still;
One Vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not halfe so old as that. He write against them,
Detest them, curse them: yet 'tis greater Skill
In a true Hate, to pray they haue their will:
The very Diuels cannot plague them better. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter in State, Cymbeline, Queene, Clooten, and Lords at one doore, and at another, Caius, Lucius, and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Caesar with vs?
Luc. When Julius Caesar (whose remembrance yet
Liues in mens eyes, and will to Eares and Tongues
Be Theame, and hearing euer) was in this Britain,
And Conquer'd it, Cassibulan thine Vnkle
(Famous in Caesars prayles, no whit lesse
Then in his Feats deseruing it) for him,
And his Succession, granted Rome a Tribute,
Yeerely three thousand pounds; which (by thee) lately
Is left vntender'd.

Qu. And to kill the meruaile,
Shall be so euer.

Clo. There be many Caesars,
Ere such another Julius: Britaine's a world
By it selfe, and we will nothing pay
For wearing our owne Noses.

Qu. That opportunity
Which then they had to take from's, to resume
We haue againe. Remember Sir, my Liege,
The Kings your Ancestors, together with
The naturall brauery of your Isle, which stands
As Neptunes Parke, ribb'd, and pal'd in
With Oakes vnscaleable, and roaring Waters,
With Sands that will not beare your Enemies Boates,
But sucke them vp to th' Top-mast. A kinde of Conquest
Caesar made heere, but made not heere his bragge
Of Came, and Saw, and Over-came: with shame
(The first that euer touch'd him) he was carried
From off our Coast, twice beaten: and his Shipping
(Poore ignorant Baubles) on our terrible Seas
Like Egge-shells mou'd vpon their Surges, crack'd
As easily gainst our Rockes. For ioy whereof,
The fam'd Cassibulan, who was once at point
(Oh gilet Fortune) to master Caesars Sword,
Made Luds-Towne with reioycing-Fires bright,

And Britaines strut with Courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more Tribute to be paid: our Kingdome is stronger then it was at that time: and (as I said) there is no mo such Caesars, other of them may haue crook'd Noses, but to owe such straite Armes, none.

Cym. Son, let your Mother end.

Clo. We haue yet many among vs, can gripe as hard as Cassibulan, I doe not say I am one: but I haue a hand.
Why Tribute? Why should we pay Tribute? If Caesar can hide the Sun from vs with a Blanket, or put the Moon in his pocket, we will pay him Tribute for light: else Sir, no more Tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know,

Till the iniurious Romans, did extort
This Tribute from vs, we were free. Caesars Ambition,
Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch
The sides o'th' World, against all colour heere,
Did put the yoke vpon's; which to shake off
Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon
Our selues to be, we do. Say then to Caesar,
Our Ancestor was that Mulmutius, which Ordain'd our Lawes, whose vse the Sword of Caesar
Hath too much mangled; whose repaire, and franchise,
Shall (by the power we hold) be our good deed,
Tho Rome be therfore angry. Mulmutius made our lawes
Who was the first of Britaine, which did put His browes within a golden Crowne, and call'd Himselfe a King.

Luc. I am sorry Cymbeline,

That I am to pronounce Augustus Caesar
(Caesar, that hath moe Kings his Seruants, then Thy selfe Domesticke Officers) thine Enemy:
Receyue it from me then. Warre, and Confusion
In Caesars name pronounce I gainst thee: Looke
For fury, not to be resisted. Thus decide,
I thanke thee for my selfe.

Cym. Thou art welcome Caius,
Thy Caesar Knighted me; my youth I spent Much vnder him; of him, I gather'd Honour,
Which he, to seeke of me againe, perforce,
Behoues me keepe at vtterance. I am perfect,
That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for Their Liberties are now in Armes: a President
Which not to reade, would shew the Britaines cold:
So Caesar shall not finde them.

Luc. Let proofe speake.

Clo. His Maiesty biddes you welcome. Make pa-time with vs, a day, or two, or longer: if you seek vs afterwards in other tearmes, you shall finde vs in our Saltwater-Girdle: if you beate vs out of it, it is yours: if you fall in the aduenture, our Crowes shall fare the better for you: and there's an end.

Luc. So sir.

Cym. I know your Masters pleasure, and he mine:
All the Remaine, is welcome. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pisano reading of a Letter.

Pis. How? of Adultery? Wherefore write you not What Monsters her accuse? Leonatus:
Oh Master, what a strange infection

Is false into thy eare? What false Italian,
(As poisonous tongu'd, as hand'd) hath preuail'd
On thy too ready hearing? Disloyall? No.
She's punish'd for her Truth; and vndergoes
More Goddesse-like, then Wife-like; such Assaults
As would take in some Vertue. Oh my Master,
Thy mind to her, is now as lowe, as were Thy Fortunes. How? That I should murder her,
Vpon the Loue, and Truth, and Vowes; which I
Haue made to thy command? I her? Her blood?
If it be so, to do good seruice, neuer
Let me be counted seruiceable. How looke I,
That I should seeme to lacke humanity,
So much as this Fact comes to? Doo't! The Letter.
That I haue sent her, by her owne command,
Shall giue thee opportunitie. Oh damn'd paper,
Blacke as the Inke that's on thee: senselesse bauble,
Art thou a Feederie for this Act; and look'st
So Virgin-like without? Loe here she comes.

Enter Imogen.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.

Imo. How now Pisano?

Pis. Madam, heere is a Letter from my Lord.

Imo. Who, thy Lord? That is my Lord Leonatus?

Oh, I learn'd indeede were that Astronomer
That knew the Starres, as I his Characters,
Hee'd lay the Future open. You good Gods,
Let what is heere contain'd, rellish of Loue,
Of my Lords health, of his content: yet not
That we two are asunder, let that grieve him;
Some griefes are medicinable, that is one of them,
For it doth phylicke Loue, of his content,
All but in that. Good Wax, thy leane: blest be
You Bees that make these Lockes of countaile. Louers,
And men in dangerous Bondes pray not alike,
Though Forfeytours you cast in prison; yet
You claspe young Cupids Tables: good Newes Gods.

Imo. Office, and your Fathers wrath (should he take me in his Dominion) could not be so cruell to me, as you: (oh the dearest of Creatures) would euen renew me with your eyes. Take notice that I am in Cambria at Milford-Hauen: what your owne Loue, will out of this aduise you, follow. So he wishes you all happinesse, that remains loyall to his Vow, and your increasing in Loue. Leonatus Posthumus.

Oh for a Horse with wings: Hear'st thou Pisano?
He is at Milford-Hauen: Read, and tell me
How farre 'tis thither. If one of meane affaires
May plod it in a weeke, why may not I
Glide thither in a day? Then true Pisano,
Who long'st like me, to see thy Lord; who long'st
(Oh let me bare) but not like me: yet long'st
But in a fainter kinde. Oh not like me:
For mine's beyond, beyond: say, and speake thicke (Loues Counsaillor should fill the bores of hearing, To th' smothering of the Sense) how farre it is
To this same blessed Milford. And by th' way
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as I
Timberite such a Hauen. But first of all,
How we may steale from hence: and for the gap
That we shall make in Time, from our hence-going,
And our returne, to excuse: but first, how get hence.
Why should excuse be borne or ere begot?
Weele talke of that heereafter. Prythee speake,
How many store of Miles may we well rid

Twixt houre, and houre?

Pis. One score twixt Sun, and Sun.

Madam's enough for you: and too much too.

Imo. Why, one that rode to's Execution Man,
Could neuer go so slow: I haue heard of Riding wagers,
Where Horses haue bin nimbler then the Sands
That run i'th' Clocks behalfe. But this is Foolrie, Go, bid my Woman taigne a Sicknesse, say
She's home to her Father; and prouide me presently
A Riding Suit: No collier then would fit
A Franklins Huf-wife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.

Imo. I see before me (Man) nor heere, not heere;
Nor what ensues but haue a Fog in them
That I cannot looke through. Away, I prythee,
Do as I bid thee: There's no more to say:
Accessible is none but Milford way. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. A goodly day, not to keepe house with such,
Whose Roofe's as lowe as ours: Sleepe Boyes, this gate
Instructs you how to adore the Heauens; and bowes you
To a mornings holy office. The Gates of Monarches
Are Arch'd so high, that Giants may iet through
And keepe their impious Turbonds on, without Good morrow to the Sun. Haile thou faire Heauen,
We house i'th' Rocke, yet vse thee not so hardly
As prouder liuers do.

Guid. Haile Heauen.

Arvir. Haile Heauen.

Bela. Now for our Mountaine sport, vp to yond hill
Your legges are yong: He tread these Flats. Consider,
When you aboue perceiue me like a Crow,
That it is Place, which lessen's, and sets off;
And you may then reuolue what Tales, I haue told you,
Of Courts, of Princes; of the Tricks in Warre.
This Seruice, is not Seruice; so being done,
But being so allowed. To apprehend thee,
Drawes vs a profit from all things we see:
And often to our comfort, shall we finde
The sharded Beetle, in a safer hold
Then is the full-wing'd Eagle. Oh this life,
Is Nobler, then attending for a checke:
Richer, then doing nothing for a Babe:
Prouder, then rustling in vnpayd-for Silke:
Such gaine the Cap of him, that makes him fine,
Yet keeps his Booke vncred: no life to ours.

Gui. Out of your proofe you speak: we poore vnstedg'd
Haue neuer wing'd from view o'th' nest; nor knowes not What Ayre's from home. Haply this life is best,
(If quiet life be best) sweeter to you
That haue a sharper knowne. Well corresponding With your stiffe Age; but vnto vs, it is
A Cell of ignorance: trauailing a bed,
A Prison, or a Debtor, that not dares
To stride a limit.

Arvir. What should we speake of
When we are old as you? When we shall heare
The Raine and winde beate darke December? How
In this our pinching Caue, shall we discourse

The freezing houres away? We haue scene nothing:
We are beaſtly; ſubtle as the Fox for prey;
Like warlike as the Wolfe, for what we eate:
Our Valour is to chace what flies: Our Cage
We make a Quire, as doth the priſon'd Bird,
And ſing our Bondage freely.

Bel. How you ſpeake.
Did you but know theſe things, Viliains,
And felt them knowingly: the Art o'th' Court,
As hard to leaue, as keepe: whole top to climbe
Is certaine falling: or ſo ſlipp'ry, that
The feare's as bad as falling. The toyle o'th' Warre,
A paine that onely ſeemes to ſeeke out danger
I'th' name of Fame, and Honor, which dyes I'th' ſearch,
And hath as oft a ſland'rous Epitaph,
As Record of faire Act. Nay, many times
Doth ill deſerue, by doing well: what's worſe
Muſt cur'tlie at the Censure. Oh Boyes, this Storie
The World may reade in me: My bodie's mark'd
With Roman Swords; and my report, was once
Firſt, with the beſt of Note. Cymbeline lou'd me,
And when a Souldier was the Theame, my name
Was not farre off: then was I as a Tree
Whoe boughes did bend with fruit. But in one night,
A Storme, or Robbery (call it what you will)
Shooke downe my mellow hangings: pay my Leaues,
And left me bare to weather.

Gai. Vncertaine ſaueur.

Bel. My fault being nothing (as I haue told you oft)
But that two Villaines, whole falſe Oathes preſayl'd
Before my perfect Honor, ſwore to Cymbeline,
I was Confederate with the Romanes: ſo
Followed my Banishment, and this twenty yeeres,
This Rocke, and theſe Demefines, haue bene my World,
Where I haue liu'd at honeſt freedom, payed
More pious debts to Heauen, then in all
The fore-end of my time. But, vp to'th' Mountaines,
This is not Hunters Language; he that ſtrikes
The Veniſon firſt, ſhall be the Lord o'th' Feaſt,
To him the other two ſhall miniſter,
And we will feare no poiſon, which attends
In place of greater State.
He meete you in the Valleyes. Exeunt.
How hard it is to hide the ſparkes of Nature?
Theſe Boyes know little they are Sonnes to'th' King,
Nor Cymbeline dreames that they are alie.
They thinke they are mine,
And though train'd vp thus meanely
I'th' Caue, whereon the Rowe their thoughts do hit,
The Roofes of Palaces, and Nature prompts them
In ſimple and lowe things, to Rince in, much
Beyond the ſicke of others. This Paladour,
The heire of Cymbeline and Britaine, who
The King his Father call'd Guderius. Ioue,
When on my three-ſcore ſoule I ſit, and tell
The warlike ſcenes I haue done, his ſpirits flye out
Into my Story: ſay thus mine Enemy fell,
And thus I ſet my ſourc on's necke, even then
The Princely blood flowes in his Checke, he ſweats,
Straines his yong Nerues, and puts himſelfe in poſture
That aſt my words. The yonger Brother Cadwall,
Once Aruragus, in as like a figure
Strikes life into my ſpeech, and ſhewes much more
His owne conceyting. Heerke, the Game is row'd,
Oh Cymbeline, Heauen and my Conſcience knowes
Thou didſt vniuſtly baniſh me: whereon

At three, and two yeeres old, I ſole theſe Babes, Thinking to barre thee of Succeſſion, as
Thou reſts me of my Lands. Euriphile,
Thou waſt their Nurſe, they took thee for their mother,
And euery day do honor to her graue:
My ſelfe Belarius, that am Morgan call'd
They take for Naturall Father. The Game is vp. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Pisanio and Imogen.

Imo. Thou told'ſt me when we came fro' horſe, y place
Was nere at hand: Ne're long'd my Mother to
To ſee me firſt, as I haue now: Pisanio, Man:
Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind
That makes thee ſtare thus? Wherefore breaks that ſigh
From th' inward of thee? One, but painted thus
Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd
Beyond ſelfe-explication. Put thy ſelfe
Into a hauiour of leſſe feare, ere wildneſſe
Vanquiſh my Rayder Senſes. What's the matter?
Why tender'ſt thou that Paper to me, with A looke vntender? Iſt be Summer Newes
Smile too't before: if Winterly, thou need'ſt
But keepe that count'nance ſtil. My Husbands hand?
That Drug-damn'd Italy, hath out-craſted him,
And hee's at ſome hard point. Speake man, thy Tongue
May take off ſome extremitie, which to reade
Would be even mortall to me.

Pis. Please you reade,
And you ſhall finde me (wretched man) a thing
The moſt diſtain'd of Fortune.

Imogen reades.

Thy Miſtris (Pisanio) hath plaide the Strumpet in my Bed: the Teſtimonies whereof, lyes bleeding in me. I ſpeak not out of weak Surmiſes, but from prooſe as ſtrong as my greeſe and as certaine as I aſpect my Reuenge. That part, thou (Pisanio) muſt aſſe for me, if thy Faith be not tainted with the breach of hers: let thine owne hands take away her life: I ſhall giue thee opportunity at Milford Hauen. She hath my Letter for the purpoſe: where, if thou feare to ſtrike, and to make mee certaine it is done, thou art the Pander to her diſhonour, and equally to me diſloyall.

Pis. What ſhall I need to draw my Sword, the Paper
Hath cut her throat already? No, 'tis Slander,
Whoſe edge is ſharper then the Sword, whoſe tongue
Out-venomes all the Wormes of Nyle, whoſe breath
Rides on the poſting windes, and doth belye
All corners of the World. Kings, Queenes, and States, Maides, Matrons, nay the Secrets of the Graue
This viperous ſlander enters. What cheere, Madam?

Imo. Faſte to his Bed? What is it to be faſte?
To lye in watch there, and to thinke on him?
To weepe 'twixt clock and clock? If ſleep charge Nature,
To breake it with a fearfull dreame of him,
And cry my ſelfe awake? That's faſte to's bed? Is it?

Pis. Alas good Lady.

Imo. I faſte? Thy Conſcience witneſſe: Iachimo,
Thou didſt accuſe him of Incontinencie,
Thou then look'dſt like a Villaine: now, me thinkeſt

Thy

Thy fauours good enough. Some ſay of Italy
(Whole mother was her painting) hath betraid him:
Poore I am ſtale, a Garment out of faſhion,
And for I am richer then to hang by th' wallles,
I muſt be ript: To peeces with me: Oh!
Mens Vowes are womens Traitors. All good ſeeming
By thy reuolt (oh Husband) ſhall be thought
Put on for Villainy; not borne where't growes,
But worne a Baite for Ladies.

Pis. Good Madam, heare me.

Imo. True honeſt men being heard, like falſe Aeneas,
Were in his time thought falſe: and Synors weeping
Did ſcandall many a holy teare: tooke pity
From moſt true wretchedneſſe. So thou, Posthumus
Wilt lay the Leauen on all proper men;
Goodly, and gallant, ſhall be falſe and periur'd
From thy great faile: Come Fellow, be thou honeſt,
Do thou thy Maſters bidding. When thou ſeeſt him,
A little witneſſe my obedience. Looke
I draw the Sword my ſelfe, take it, and hit
The innocent Manſion of my Loue (my Heart):
Feare not, 'tis empty of all things, but Greeſe:
Thy Maſter is not there, who was indeede
The riches of it. Do his bidding, ſtrike,
Thou mayſt be valiant in a better cauſe;
But now thou ſeem'ſt a Coward.

Pis. Hence vile Inſtrument,

Thou ſhalt not damne my hand.

Imo. Why, I muſt dye:

And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No ſeruant of thy Maſters. Againſt Selfe-ſlaughter,
There is a prohibition ſo Diuine,
That crauens my weak hand: Come, heere's my heart:
Something's a-foot: Soft, ſoft, wee'no defence,
Obedient as the Scabbard. What is heere,
The Scriptures of the Loyall Leonatus,
All turn'd to Hereſie? Away, away
Corrupters of my Faith, you ſhall no more
Be Stomachers to my heart: thus may poore Fooles
Beleeue falſe Teachers: Though thou that art betraid
Do ſeele the Treason ſharply, yet the Traitor
Stands in worſe caſe of woe. And thou Posthumus,
That didſt ſet vp my diſobedience againſt the King
My Father, and makes me put into contempt the ſuites
Of Princely Fellowes, ſhalt heereafter finde
It is no Acte of common paſſage, but
A ſtaine of Rareneſſe: and I greene my ſelfe,
To thinke, when thou ſhalt be diſedg'd by her,
That now thou cyreſt on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Prythee diſpatch,
The Lambe entreates the Butcher. Where's thy knife?
Thou art too ſlow to do thy Maſters bidding
When I deſite it too.

Pis. Oh gracious Lady:

Since I recei'd command to do this buſineſſe,
I haue not ſlept one wink.

Imo. Doo't, and to bed then.

Pis. He wake mine eye-balls firſt.

Imo. Wherefore then

Didſt vnder take it? Why haſt thou abus'd
So many Miles, with a pretence? This place?
Mine Action? and thine owne? Our Horſes labour?
The Time inuſing thee? The perturb'd Court
For my being abſent? whereunto I neuer
Purpose returne. Why haſt thou gone ſo farre
To be vn-bent? when thou haſt taſte thy ſtand,

Th' elected Deere before thee?

Pis. But to win time
To looſe ſo bad employment, in the which I haue conſider'd of a courſe: good Ladie
Heare me with patience.

Imo. Talke thy tongue weary, ſpeake:

I haue heard I am a Strumpet, and mine care
Therein falſe ſtrooke, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent, to botto me that. But ſpeake.

Pis. Then Madam,

I thought you would not backe againe.

Imo. Moſt like,

Bringing me heere to kill me.

Pis. Not ſo neither:

But if I were as wiſe, as honeſt, then
My purpoſe would proue well: it cannot be,
But that my Maſter is abus'd. Some Villaine,
I, and ſingular in his Art, hath done you both
This curſed iniurie.

Imo. Some Roman Curtezan?

Pis. No, on my life:

He giue but notice you are dead, and ſend him
Some bloody ſigne of it. For 'tis commanded
I ſhould do ſo: you ſhall be miſt at Court,
And that will well confirme it.

Imo. Why good Fellow,

What ſhall I do the while? Where bide? How liue?
Or in my life, what comfort, when I am
Dead to my Husband?

Pis. If you'l backe to'th' Court.

Imo. No Court, no Father, nor no more adoe
With that harſh, noble, ſimple nothing:
That Cloten, whoſe Loue-ſuite hath bene to me
As fearefull as a Siege.

Pis. If not at Court,

Then not in Britaine muſt you bide.

Imo. Where then?

Hath Britaine all the Sunne that ſhines? Day? Night?
Are they not but in Britaine? I'd' worlds Volume
Our Britaine ſeemes as of it, but not in it:
In a great Poole, a Swannes-neſt, prythee thinke
There's liuers out of Britaine.

Pis. I am moſt glad

You thinke of other place: Th' Ambaſſador,
Lucius the Roman comes to Milford-Hauen
To morrow. Now, if you could weare a minde
Darke, as your Fortune is, and but diſguiſe
That which t'appeare it ſelfe, muſt not yet be,
But by ſelfe-danger, you ſhould tread a courſe
Pretty, and full of view: yea, happily, nere
The reſidence of Posthumus; ſo me (at leaſt)
That though his Actions were not viſible, yet
Report ſhould render him hourly to your eare,
As truly as he mooues.

Imo. Oh for ſuch meanes,

Though perill to my modeſtie, not death on
I would adventure.

Pis. Well then, heere's the point:

You muſt forget to be a Woman: change
Command, into obedience. Feare, and Niceneſſe
(The Handmaides of all Women, or more truly Woman it prouy ſelfe) into a waggiſh courage,
Ready in gybes, quicke-answer'd, lawcie, and
As quarrellous as the Weazell: Nay, you muſt
Forget that rareſt Treafure of your Cheeke, Expoſing it (but oh the harder heart,

Atacke

Alacke no remedy) to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Titan: and forget
Your laboursome and dainty Trimmes, wherein
You made great Imo angry.

Imo. Nay be breefe?
I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make your selfe but like one,
Fore-thinking this. I haue already fit
(Tis in my Cloake-bagge) Doublet, Hat, Hose, all
That answer to them: Would you in their seruing,
(And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season) fore Noble Lucius
Present your selfe, desire his seruice: tell him
Wherein you're happy; which will make him know,
If that his head haue care in Musicke, doubtlesse
With ioy he will embrace you: for hee's Honourable,
And doubling that, most holy. Your meanes abroad:
You haue me rich, and I will neuer faile
Beginning, nor supplyment.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The Gods will diet me with. Prythee away,
There's more to be consider'd: but wee'l euen
All that good time will giue vs. This attempt,
I am Souldier too, and will abide it with A Princes Courage. Away, I prythee.

Pis. Well Madam, we must take a short farewell, Least being mist, I be suspected of
Your carriage from the Court. My Noble Mistis, Heere is a boxe, I had it from the Queene,
What's in't is precious: If you are sicke at Sea,
Or Stomacke-quallm'd at Land, a Dramme of this Will driue away distemper. To some shade,
And sit you to your Manhood: may the Gods
Direct you to the best.

Imo. Amen: I thanke thee.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline, Queene, Cloten, Lucius, and Lords.

Cym. Thus fare, and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, Royall Sir:

My Emperor hath wrote, I must from hence,
And am right sorry, that I must report ye
My Masters Enemy.

Cym. Our Subjects (Sir)
Will not endure his yoke; and for our selfe
To shew lesse Soueraignty then they, must needs
Appeare vn-Kinglike.

Luc. So Sir: I desire of you
A Conduct ouer Land, to Milford-Hauen.
Madam, all ioy befall your Grace, and you.

Cym. My Lords, you are appointed for that Office:
The due of Honor, in no point omit:
So farewell Noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my Lord.

Clot. Receiue it friendly: but from this time forth
I weare it as your Enemy.

Luc. Sir, the Euent

Is yet to name the winner. Fare you well.

Cym. Leauie not the worthy Lucius, good my Lords Till he haue crost the Seuern. Happines. Exit Lucius, &c

Qu. He goes hence frowning: but it honours vs
That we haue giuen him cause.

Clot. 'Tis all the better,

Your valiant Britaines haue their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the Emperor
How it goes heere. It fits vs therefore ripely
Our Chariots, and our Horsemen be in readinesse:
The Powres that he already hath in Gallia
Will soone be drawne to head, from whence he moues
His warre for Britaine.

Qu. 'Tis not sleepey businesse,
But must be look'd too speedily, and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus Hath made vs forward. But my gentle Queene,
Where is our Daughter? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to vs hath tender'd
The duty of the day. She looke vs like
A thing more made of malice, then of duty,
We haue noted it. Call her before vs, for
We haue bene too slight in sufferance.

Qu. Royall Sir,
Since the exile of Posthumus, most retr'd
Hath her life bin: the Cure whereof, my Lord,
'Tis time must do. Beseech your Maiesty,
Forbear sharpe speeches to her. Shee's a Lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are strokes,
And strokes death to her.

Enter a Messenger.

Cym. Where is the Sir? How Can her contempt be answer'd?

Mes. Please you Sir,
Her Chambers are all lock'd, and there's no answer
That will be giuen to th'lowd of noise, we make.

Qu. My Lord, when last I went to visit her,
She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close,
Whereto constrain'd by her infirmities,
She should that dutie leaue vnpaid to you
Which dayly she was bound to proffer: this
She wish'd me to make knowne: but our great Court
Made me too blame in memory.

Cym. Her doores lock'd?
Not leene of late? Grant Heauens, that which I
Feare, proue false.

Qu. Sonne, I say, follow the King.

Clot. That man of hers, Pisano, her old Seruant
I haue not seene these two dayes.

Qu. Go, looke after:

Pisano, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus,
He hath a Drugge of mine: I pray, his absence
Proceed by swallowing that. For he beleeues
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone? Haply dispaire hath seiz'd her:
Or wing'd with seruour of her loue, she's flowne
To her desir'd Posthumus: gone she is,
To death, or to dishonor, and my end
Can make good vse of either. Shee being downe,
I haue the placing of the Brittain Crowne.

Enter Cloten.

How now, my Sonne?

Clot. 'Tis certaine she is fled:
Go in and cheere the King, he rages, none
Dare come about him.

Qu. All the better: may
This night fore-stall him of the comming day. Exit Qu.

Clot. I loue, and hate her: for she's Faire and Royall,
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite

Then

Then Lady, Ladies, Woman, from euery one
The best she hath, and she of all compounded
Out-selles them all. I loue her therefore, but Disdaining me, and throwing Favours on
The low Posthumus, flanders to her iudgement,
That what's else rare, is choak'd: and in that point
I will conclude to hate her, nay indeede,
To be reueng'd vpon her. For, when Fooles shall—

Enter Pisano.

Who is heere? What, are you packing sirrah?
Come hither: Ah you precious Pandar, Villaine,
Where is thy Lady? In a word, or else
Thou art straightway with the Fiends.

Pis. Oh, good my Lord.

Clot. Where is thy Lady? Or by Iupiter,
I will not aske againe. Close Villaine,
He haue this Secret from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to finde it. Is she with Posthumus?
From whose so many waightes of basenesse, cannot
A dram of worth be drawne.

Pis. Alas, my Lord,

How can she be with him? When was she mis'd?
He is in Rome.

Clot. Where is the Sir? Come neerer:
No farther halting: satisfie me home,
What is become of her?

Pis. Oh, my all-worthy Lord.

Clot. All-worthy Villaine,
Discover where thy Mistis is, at once,
At the next word: no more of worthy Lord:
Speake, or thy silence on the instant, is Thy condemnation, and thy death.

Pis. Then Sir:

This Paper is the historie of my knowledge
Touching her flight.

Clot. Let's see't: I will pursue her Euen to Augustus Throne.

Pis. Or this, or perishe.
She's farre enough, and what he learns by this,
May proue his travell, not her danger.

Clot. Humh.

Pis. He write to my Lord she's dead: Oh Imogen, Safe mayst thou wander, safe returne agen.

Clot. Sirra, is this Letter true?

Pis. Sir, as I thinke.

Clot. It is Posthumus hand, I know't. Sirrah, if thou would'st not be a Villain, but do me true seruice: vnder-go those Employments wherein I should haue cause to vse thee with a serious industry, that is, what villany soere I bid thee do to performe it, directly and truly, I would thinke thee an honest man: thou should'st neither want my meanes for thy releefe, nor my voyce for thy preferment.

Pis. Well, my good Lord.

Clot. Wilt thou serue mee? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stucke to the bare Fortune of that Begger Posthumus, thou canst not in the course of gratitude, but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serue mee?

Pis. Sir, I will.

Clot. Giue mee thy hand, heere's my purse. Hast any of thy late Masters Garments in thy possession?

Pisano. I haue (my Lord) at my Lodging, the same Suite he wore, when he tooke leaue of my Ladie & Mistresse.

Clot. The first seruice thou dost mee, fetch that Suite hither, let it be thy first seruice, go.

Pis. I shall my Lord.

Exit.

Clot. Meet thee at Milford-Hauen: (I forgot to aske him one thing, Ile remember't anon:) euen there, thou villaine Posthumus will I kill thee. I would these Garments were come. She laide vpon a time (the bitternesse of it, I now belch from my heart) that shee held the very Garment of Posthumus, in more respect, then my Noble and naturall person; together with the adornement of my Qualities. With that Suite vpon my backe will I ra-uish her: first kill him, and in her eyes; there shall she see my valour, which wil then be a torment to hir contempt.
He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead bodie, and when my Lust hath dined (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the Cloathes that she so prais'd:) to the Court Ile knock her backe, foot her home againe. She hath despis'd mee reioycingly, and Ile bee merry in my Reuenge.

Enter Pisano.

Be those the Garments?

Pis. I, my Noble Lord.

Clot. How long is't since she went to Milford-Hauen?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet.

Clot. Bring this Apparrell to my Chamber, that is the second thing that I haue commanded thee. The third is, that thou wilt be a voluntarie Mute to my designe. Be but durions, and true preferment shall tender it selfe to thee. My Reuenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it. Come, and be true. Exit

Pis. Thou bid'st me to my losse: for true to thee,
Were to proue false, which I will neuer bee
To him that is most true. To Milford go,
And finde not her, whom thou pursuest. Flow, flow
You Heavenly blessings on her: this Fooles speede
Be crost with slownesse; Labour be his mercede. Exit

Scena Sexta.

Enter Imogen alone.

Imo. I see a mans life is a tedious one,
I haue ty'd my selfe: and for two nights together
Haue made the ground my bed. I should be sicke,
But that my resolution helpe me: Milford,
When from the Mountaine top, Pisano shew'd thee,
Thou wast within a kenne. Oh Ioue, I thinke
Foundations flye the wretched: such I meane,
Where they should be releas'd. Two Beggers told me,
I could not misse my way. Will poore Folkes lye
That haue Afflictions on them, knowing'tis
A punishment, or Triall? Yes; no wonder,
When Rich-ones scarce tell true. To lapse in Fulnesse
Is forer, then to lye for Neede: and Falshood
Is worse in Kings, then Beggers. My deere Lord,
Thou art one o'th' false Ones: Now I thinke on thee,
My hunger's gone; but euen before, I was
At point to sinke, for Food. But what is this?
Heere is a path too't: 'tis some sausage hold:
I were best not call; I dare not call: yet Famine
Ere cleane it o're-throw Nature, makes it valiant.
Plentie, and Peace breeds Cowards: Hardnesse euer
Of Hardnesse is Mother. Hoa? who's heere?
If any thing that's ciuill, speake: if savage,

Take,

Take, or lend. Hoa? No answer? Then Ile enter.
Best draw my Sword; and if mine Enemy
But feare the Sword like me, hee'l scarcely looke on't.
Such a Foe, good Heauens.

Exit.

Scena Septima.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. You Polidore haue prou'd best Woodman, and Are Master of the Feast: Cadwall, and I
Will play the Cooke, and Seruant, 'tis our match:
The sweat of industry would dry, and dye
But for the end it workes too. Come, our stomackes
Will make what's homely, sauioury: Wearinesse
Can snore vpon the Flint, when restie Sloth
Finds the Downe-pillow hard. Now peace be heere, Poore house, that keep'st thy selfe.

Gui. I am throughly weary.

Arui. I am weake with toyle, yet strong in appetite.

Gui. There is cold meat i'th'Caue, we'l brouz on that Whil'st what we haue kill'd, be Cook'd.

Bel. Stay, come not in:

But that it eates our victualles, I should thinke
Heere were a Faiery.

Gui. What's the matter, Sir?

Bel. By Iupiter an Angell: or if not
An earthly Paragon, Behold Diuinenesse
No elder then a Boy.

Enter Imogen.

Imo. Good masters harme me not:

Before I enter'd heere, I call'd, and thought
To haue begg'd, or bought, what I haue took: good troth
I haue stolne nought, nor would not, though I had found
Gold strew'd i'th'Floore. Heere's money for my Meate,
I would haue left it on the Boord, so soone
As I had made my Meale; and parted
With Pray'rs for the Prouider.

Gui. Money? Youth.

Arui. All Gold and Siluer rather turne to durt,
As 'tis no better reckon'd, but of those Who worship durtie Gods.

Imo. I see you're angry:

Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should Haue dyed, had I not made it.

Bel. Whether bound?

Imo. To Milford-Hauen.

Bel. What's your name?

Imo. Fidele Sir: I haue a Kinsman, who
Is bound for Italy; he embark'd at Milford,
To whom being going, almost spent with hunger,
I am false in this offence.

Bel. Prythee (faire youth)

Thinke vs no Churles: nor measure our good mindes
By this rude place we lue in. Well encounter'd,
'Tis almost night, you shall haue better cheere
Ere you depart; and thankes to stay, and eate it:
Boyes, bid him welcome.

Gui. Were you a woman, youth,
I should woo hard, but be your Groome in honesty:
I bid for you, as I do buy.

Arui. Ile make't my Comfort
He is a man, Ile loue him as my Brother:
And such a welcome as I'd giue to him

(After long absence) such is yours. Most welcome:
Be sprightly, for you fall 'mongst Friends.

Imo. 'Mongst Friends?

If Brothers: would it had bin so, that they Had bin my Fathers Sonnes, then had my prize
Bin lesse, and so more equall ballasting
To thee Posthumus.

Bel. He wrings at some distresse.

Gui. Would I could free't.

Arui. Or I, what ere it be.

What paine it cost, what danger: Gods!

Bel. Hearke Boyes.

Imo. Great men

That had a Court no bigger then this Caue,
That did attend themselves, and had the vertue
Which their owne Conscience seal'd them: laying by
That nothing-guilt of differing Multitudes
Could not out-peere these twaine. Pardon me Gods,
I'd change my sexe to be Companion with them,
Since Leonatus false.

Bel. It shall be so:

Boyes we'l go dresse our Hunt. Faire youth come in;
Discourse is heavy, fasting: when we haue supp'd
Wee'l mannerly demand thee of thy Story,
So farre as thou wilt speake it.

Gui. Pray draw neere.

Arui. The Night to'th' Owle,

And Morne to'th' Larke lesse welcome.

Imo. Thanks Sir.

Arui. I pray draw neere.

Exeunt.

Scena Octaua.

Enter two Roman Senators, and Tribunes.

1. Sen. This is the tenor of the Emperors Writ;
That since the common men are now in Action
Gainst the Pannonians, and Dalmatians,
And that the Legions now in Gallia, are Full weake to vnderstand our Warres against
The false-off Brittaines, that we do incite
The Gentry to this businesse. He creates
Lucius Pro-Consull: and to you the Tribunes
For this immediate Leuy, he commands
His absolute Commission. Long liue Caesar.

Tri. Is Lucius Generall of the Forces?

2. Sen. I.

Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?

1. Sen. With those Legions
Which I haue spoke of, whereunto your leuie
Must be suppliant: the words of your Commission
Will tye you to the numbers, and the time
Of their dispatch.

Tri. We will discharge our duty.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Cloten alone.

Clot. I am neere to'th' place where they should meet, if Pisanio haue mapp'd it truly. How fit his Garments serue me? Why should his Mistress who was made by him
that

Imo. I wish ye sport.

Arui. You health. — So please you Sir.

Imo. These are kinde Creatures.

Gods, what lyes I haue heard:
Our Courtiers say, all's sauage, but at Court;
Experience, oh thou disproou't Report.
Th'empierous Seas breeds Monsters; for the Dish,
Poore Tributary Riuer, as sweet Fish:
I am sicke still, heart-sicke, Pisanio,
Ile now taste of thy Drugges:

Gui. I could not stirre him:

He said he was gentle, but vnfortunate;

Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arui. Thus did he answer me: yet said heereafter,
I might know more.

Bel. To'th' Field, to'th' Field:

Wee'l leave you for this time, go in, and rest.

Arui. Wee'l not be long away.

Bel. Pray be not sicke,

For you must be our Hufwife.

Imo. Well, or ill,

I am bound to you.

Exit.

Bel. And that's be euer,

This youth, how ere distrest, appeares he hath had Good Ancestors.

Arui. How Angell-like he sings?

Gui. But his neate Cookerie?

Arui. He cut our Rootes in Characters,
And sawe't our Brothes, as Imo had bin sicke,
And he her Dieter.

Arui. Nobly he yokes

A smiling, with a sigh; as if the sigh

Was that it was, for not being such a Smile:

The Smile, mocking the Sigh, that it would flye

From so diuine a Temple, to commix

With windes, that Saylor's raile at.

Gui. I do note,

That greefe and patience rooted in them both,

Mingle their spures together.

Arui. Grow patient,

And let the Rinking-Elder (Greefe) vntwine

His perishing roote, with the encreasing Vine.

Bel. It is great morning. Come away: Who's there?

Enter Cloten.

Clot. I cannot finde those Runnagates, that Villaine
Hath mock'd me. I am faint.

Bel. Those Runnagates?

Meanes he not vs? I partly know him, 'tis

Cloten, the Sonne o'th' Queene. I feare some Ambush:

I saw him not these many yeares, and yet

I know 'tis he: We are held as Out-Lawes: Hence.

Gui. He is but one: you, and my Brother search

What Companies are neere: pray you away,

Let me alone with him.

Clot. Soft, what are you

That flye me thus? Some villaine-Mountainers?

I haue heard of such. What Slaue art thou?

Gui. A thing!

More flauish did I ne're, then answering

A Slaue without a knocke.

Clot. Thou art a Robber,

A Law-breaker, a Villaine: yeeld thee Theefe!

Gui. To who? to thee? What art thou? Haue not I

An arme as bigge as thine? A heart, as bigge:

Thy words I grant are bigger: for I weare not

My Dagger in my mouth. Say what thou art:

Why

Why I should yeeld to thee?

Clot. Thou Villaine base,
Knowst me not by my Cloathes?

Gni. No, nor thy Taylor, Rascall:

Who is thy Grandfather? He made those cloathes,
Which (as it seemes) make thee.

Clot. Thou precious Varlet,
My Taylor made them not.

Gni. Hence then, and thanke
The man that gaue them thee. Thou art some Foole,
I am loath to beate thee.

Clot. Thou iniurious Theefe,
Heare but my name, and tremble.

Gni. What's thy name?

Clot. Cloten, thou Villaine.

Gni. Cloten, thou double Villaine be thy name,
I cannot tremble at it, were it Toad, or Adder, Spider,
I would moue me sooner.

Clot. To thy further feare,
Nay, to thy meere Confusion, thou shalt know
I am Sonne to th' Queene.

Gni. I am sorry for't: not seeming
So worthy as thy Birth.

Clot. Art not afeard?

Gni. Those that I reuerence, those I feare: the Wife:
At Fooles I laugh: not feare them.

Clot. Dye the death:

When I haue slaine thee with my proper hand,
He follow those that euen now fled hence:

And on the Gates of Luds-Towne set your heads:

Yeeld Rufficke Mountaineer. Fight and Exeunt.

Enter Belarius and Arviragus.

Bel. No Companie's abroad?

Arui. None in the world: you did mistake him sure.

Bel. I cannot tell: Long is it since I saw him,
But Time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of Fauour
Which then he wore: the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking were as his: I am absolute
'Twas very Cloten.

Arui. In this place we left them;
I wish my Brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarce made vp,
I meane to man; he had not apprehension
Of roaring terrors: For defect of iudgement
Is oft the cause of Feare.

Enter Guiderius.

But see thy Brother.

Gni. This Cloten was a Foole, an empty purse,
There was no money in't: Not Hercules
Could haue knock'd out his Braines, for he had none:
Yet I not doing this, the Foole had borne
My head, as I do his.

Bel. What hast thou done?

Gni. I am perfect what: cut off one Clotens head,
Sonne to the Queene (after his owne report)
Who call'd me Traitor, Mountaineer, and swore
With his owne single hand hee'd take vs in,
Displace our heads, where (thanks the Gods) they grow
And set them on Luds-Towne.

Bel. We are all vndone.

Gni. Why, worthy Father, what haue we to loose,
But that he swore to take, our Liues? the Law
Protects not vs, then why should we be tender,
To let an arrogant peece of flesh threat vs?
Play Iudge, and Executioner, all himselfe?

For we do feare the Law. What company
Discouer you abroad?

Bel. No single soule

Can we set eye on: but in all safe reason
He must haue some Attendants. Though his Honor
Was nothing but mutation, I, and that
From one bad thing to worse: Not Frenzie,
Nor absolute madnesse could so farre haue rau'd
To bring him heere alone: although perhaps
It may be heard at Court, that such as wee
Caue heere, hunt heere, are Out-lawes, and in time
May make some stronger head, the which he hearing,
(As it is like him) might breake out, and sweare
Hee'd fetch vs in, yet is't not probable
To come alone, either he so vndertaking,
Or they so suffering: then on good ground we feare,
If we do feare this Body hath a taile
More perillous then the head.

Arui. Let Ord'nance
Come as the Gods fore-say it: howsoere,
My Brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no minde

To hunt this day: The Boy Fidels sicknesse
Did make my way long forth.

Gni. With his owne Sword,
Which he did waue against my throat, I haue rane
His head from him: He throw't into the Creeke
Behinde our Rocke, and let it to the Sea,
And tell the Fishes, hee's the Queenes Sonne, Cloten, Tha't's all I reake. Exit.

Bel. I feare 'twill be reueng'd:
Would (Polidore) thou had'st not done't: though valour
Becomes thee well enough.

Arui. Would I had done't:
So the Reuenge alone pursu'd me: Polidore
I loue thee brotherly, but enuy much
Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would Reuenges
That possible strength might meet, wold seek vs through
And put vs to our answer.

Bel. Well, 'tis done:

Wee'l hunt no more to day, nor seeke for danger:
Where there's no profit. I prythee to our Rocke,
You and Fidels play the Cookes: He stay
Till hasty Polidore returne, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arui. Poore sicke Fidels.

He willingly to him, to gaine his colour,
He'd let a parish of such Clotens blood,
And praise my selfe for charity. Exit.

Bel. Oh thou Goddesse,
Thou diuine Nature; thou thy selfe thou blazon't
In these two Princely Boyes: they are as gentle
As Zephires blowing below the Violet,
Not wagging his sweet head; and yet, as rough
(Their Royall blood enchas'd) as the rud'st winde,
That by the top doth take the Mountaine Pine,
And make him stoop to th' Vale. 'Tis wonder
That an inuisible instinct should frame them
To Royalty vnlearn'd, Honor vntraught,
Ciuility not seene from other: valour
That wildly growes in them, but yeelds a crop
As if it had bene sow'd: yet still it's strange
What Clotens being heere to vs portends,
Or what his death will bring vs.

Enter Guiderius.

Gni. Where's my Brother?

I haue sent Cloten Clot-pole downe the streame,
In Embasse: to his Mother; his Bodie's hostage
For his returne. Solemn Musick.

Bel. My ingenious Instrument,
(Heerke Polidore) it sounds; but what occasion
Hath Cadwal now to giue it motion? Heerke,

Gni. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence euen now.

Gni. What does he meane?

Since death of my deer'st Mother
It did not speake before. All solemne things Should answer solemne Accidents. The matter?
Triumphes for nothing, and lamenting Toyes,
Isollity for Apes, and greefe for Boyes.
Is Cadwal mad?

Enter Arviragus, with Imogen dead, bearing her in his Armes.

Bel. Look, heere he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his Armes,
Of what we blame him for.

Arui. The Bird is dead
That we haue made so much on. I had rather Haue skipt from sixteene yeares of Age, to sixty:
To haue turn'd my leaping time into a Crutch,
Then haue seene this.

Gni. Oh sweetest, fayrest Lilly:

My Brother weares thee not the one halfe so well,
As when thou grew'st thy selfe.

Bel. Oh Melancholly,
Who euer yet could sound thy bottome? Finde
The Ooze, to shew what Coast thy sluggish care
Might'st easiest harbour in. Thou blessed thing,
Ioue knowes what man thou might'st haue made: but I,
Thou dyed'st a most rare Boy, of Melancholly.
How found you him?

Arui. Starke, as you see:

Thus smiling, as some Fly had tickled slumber,
Not as deaths dart being laugh'd at: his right Cheeke Reposing on a Cushion.

Gni. Where?

Arui. O'th' floore:

His armes thus leagu'd, I thought he slept, and put
My clowted Brogues from off my feete, whose rudenesse
Answer'd my steps too lowd.

Gni. Why, he but sleeps:

If he be gone, hee'l make his Graue, a Bed:
With female Fayries will his Tombe be haunted,
And Wormes will not come to thee.

Arui. With fayrest Flowers

Whil'st Sommer lasts, and I lue heere, Fidels,
He sweeten thy sad graue: thou shalt not lacke
The Flower that's like thy face. Pale-Primrose, nor
The azur'd Hare-bell, like thy Veines: no, nor
The leafe of Eglantine, whom nor to slander,
Out-sweetned not thy breath: the Raddocke wold
With Charitable bill (Oh bill fore flaming
Those rich-left-heyres, that let their Fathers lye
Without a Monument) bring thee all this,
Yea, and furr'd Mosse besides. When Flowres are none
To winter-ground thy Coarse—

Gni. Prythee haue done,
And do not play in Wench-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let vs bury him,
And not protract with admiration, what
Is now due debt. To'th' graue.

Arui. Say, where shall's lay him?

Gni. By good Enripible, our Mother.

Arui. Bee't so:

And let vs (Polidore) though now our voyces
Haue got the mannish cracke, sing him to'th' ground
As once to our Mother: vse like note, and words,
Saue that Enripible, must be Fidels.

Gni. Cadwal,

I cannot sing: He weepe, and word it with thee;
For Notes of sorrow, out of tune, are worse
Then Priests, and Phanates that lye.

Arui. Wee'l speake it then.

Bel. Great greifes I see med'cine the lesse: For Cloten
Is quite forgot. He was a Queenes Sonne, Boyes,
And though he came our Enemy, remember
He was paid for that: though meane, and mighty rotting
Together haue one dust, yet Reuerence
(That Angell of the world) doth make distinction
Of place 'twene high, and low. Our Foe was Princely,
And though you tooke his life, as being our Foe,
Yet bury him, as a Prince.

Gni. Pray you fetch him hither,

Ther's body is as good as Ajax,

When neyther are aliue.

Arui. If you'll go fetch him,

Wee'l say our Song the whil'st: Brother begin,

Gni. Oh Cadwal, we must lay his head to'th' East,

My Father hath a reason for't.

Arui. 'Tis true.

Gni. Come on then, and remoue him;

Arui. So, begin.

SONG.

Guid. Feare no more the heate o'th' Sun,
Nor the furious Winters rages,
Thou thy worldly task hast don,
Home art gon, and rane thy wages,
Golden Lads, and Girles all must,
As Chimney-Sweepers come to dust.

Arui. Feare no more the frowne o'th' Great,
Thou art past the Tyrants stroke,
Care no more to cloath and eate,
To thee the Reede is as the Oake:

The Scepter, Learning, Physicke must,
All follow this and come to dust.

Guid. Feare no more the Lightning flash,

Arui. Nor th' all-dreaded Thunderstone.

Gni. Feare not Slander, Censure rash,

Arui. Thou hast finish'd Ioy and mone.

Both. All Louers young, all Louers must,
Consigne to thee and come to dust.

Guid. No Exorcisor harme thee,

Arui. Nor no witch-craft charme thee.

Guid. Ghost vnlaide forbear thee.

Arui. Nothing ill come nere thee.

Both. Quiet consumption haue,

And renowned be thy graue.

Enter Belarius with the body of Cloten.

Gni. We haue done our obsequies:

Come lay him downe.

Bel. Heere's a few Flowres, but 'bout midnight more:

The hearbes that haue on them cold dew o'th' night

Are strewings fit't for Graues: vpon their Faces,

You were as Flowres, now wither'd: euen so

These Herbelets shall, which we vpon you strew.

Come on, away, apart vpon our knees:

The ground that gaue them first, ha's them againe:

Their pleasures here are past, so are their paine. Exeunt.

b b b

Imogen awakes.
 Yes Sir, to Milford-Hauen, which is the way?
 I thanke you: by yond bush? pray how farre thecher?
 'Ods pittikins: can it be fixe mile yet?
 I haue gone all night: 'Faith, Ile lye downe, and sleepe.
 But soft; no Bedfellow? Oh Gods, and Goddesses!
 These Flowres are like the pleasures of the World;
 This bloody man the care on't. I hope I dreame:
 For so I thought I was a Cane-keeper,
 And Cooke to honest Creatures. But 'tis not so:
 'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
 Which the Braine makes of Fumes. Our very eyes,
 Are sometimes like our Iudgements, blinde. Good faith
 I tremble still with feare: but if there be Yet left in Heauen, as small a drop of pittie
 As a Wrens eye; fear'd Gods, a part of it
 The Dreame's heere still: euen when I wake it is Without me, as within me: not imagin'd, felt.
 A headlesse man? The Garments of Posthumus?
 I know the shape of's Legge: this is his Hand:
 His Foote Mercuriall: his martiall Thigh
 The brawnes of Hercules: but his louall face
 Murder in heauen? How? 'tis gone. Pisano,
 All Curses madded Hecuba gave the Greekes,
 And mine to boot, be darts on thee: thou
 Conspir'd with that Irregulous diuell Cloten,
 Hath heere cut off my Lord. To write, and read,
 Be henceforth treacherous. Damn'd Pisano,
 Hath with his forged Letters (damn'd Pisano)
 From this most brauest vessell of the world,
 Strooke the maine top! Oh Posthumus, alas,
 Where is thy head? where's that? Aye me! where's that?
Pisano might haue kill'd thee at the heart,
 And left this head on. How should this be, Pisano?
 'Tis he, and Cloten: Malice, and Lucre in them
 Haue laid this Woe heere. Oh 'tis pregnant, pregnant!
 The Drugg he gaue me, which hee said was precious
 And Cordiall to me, haue I not found it?
 Murd'rous to'th Senses? That confirms it home:
 This is Pisano's deede, and Cloten: Oh
 Giue colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
 That we the horrid may seeme to those Which chance to finde vs. Oh, my Lord! my Lord!

Enter Lucius, Capitaines, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them, the Legions garrison'd in Gallia
 After your will, haue crost the Sea, attending
 You heere at Milford-Hauen, with your Shippes:
 They are heere in readinesse.

Luc. But what from Rome?

Cap. The Senate hath stirr'd vp the Confiners,
 And Gentlemen of Italy, most willing Spirits,
 That promise Noble Seruice: and they come
 Vnder the Conduct of bold Lachimo,
Syenna's Brother.

Luc. When expect you them?

Cap. With the next benefit o'th winde.

Luc. This forwardnesse

Makes our hopes faire. Command our present numbers
 Be must'r'd: bid the Capitaines looke too't. Now Sir,
 What haue you dream'd of late of this warres purpose.

Sooth. Last night, the very Gods shew'd me a vision
 (I fast, and pray'd for their Intelligence) thus:
 I saw Iques Bird, the Roman Eagle wing'd
 From the spongy South, to this part of the West,
 There vanish'd in the Sun-beames, which portends
 (Vnlesse my sinnes abuse my Diuination)

Successe to th' Roman host.

Luc. Dreame often so,
 And neuer false. Soft hoa, what truncke is heere?
 Without his top? The ruine speaks, that sometime
 It was a wort hy building. How? a Page?
 Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead rather:
 For Nature doth abhorre to make his bed
 With the defunct, or sleepe vpon the dead.
 Let's see the Boyes face.

Cap. Hee's aliue my Lord.

Luc. Hee'll then instruct vs of this body: Young one,
 Informe vs of thy Fortunes, for it seemes
 They craue to be demand'd: who is this Thou mak'st thy bloody Pillow? Or who was he
 That (otherwise then noble Nature did)
 Hath alter'd that good Picture? What's thy interest
 In this sad wracke? How came't? Who is't?
 What art thou?

Imo. I am nothing; or if not,
 Nothing to be were better: This was my Master,
 A very valiant Britaine, and a good,
 That heere by Mountaineers lyes slaine: Alas,
 There is no more such Masters: I may wander
 From East to Occident, cry out for Seruice,
 Try many, all good: serue truly: neuer
 Finde such another Master.

Luc. Lacke good youth:

Thou mou'st no lesse with thy complaining, then
 Thy Maister in bleeding: say his name, good Friend.

Imo. Richard du Champ: If I do lye, and do
 No harme by it, though the Gods heere, I hope They'll pardon it. Say you Sir?

Luc. Thy name?

Imo. Fidelle Sir.

Luc. Thou doo'st approue thy selfe the very same:
 Thy Name well fits thy Faith; thy Faith, thy Name:
 Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say
 Thou shalt be so well master'd, but be sure
 No lesse below'd. The Romane Emperors Letters
 Sent by a Confull to me, should not sooner
 Then thine owne worth preferre thee: Go with me.

Imo. Ile follow Sir. But first, and't please the Gods,
 Ile hide my Master from the Flies, as deepe
 As these poore Pickaxes can digge: and when
 With wild wood-leaves & weeds, I ha' strew'd his graue
 And on it said a Century of prayers
 (Such as I can) twice o're, Ile weepe, and sighe,
 And leauing so his seruice, follow you,
 So please you entertaine mee.

Luc. I good youth,

And rather Father thee, then Master thee: My Friends,
 The Boy hath taught vs manly duties: Let vs
 Finde out the prettiest Dazied-Plot we can,
 And make him with our Pikes and Partizans
 A Graue: Come, Arme him: Boy hee's prefer'd
 By thee, to vs, and he shall be interr'd
 As Souldiers can. Be cheerefull; wipe thine eyes,
 Some Falles are meanes the happier to arise.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Cymbeline, Lords, and Pisano.

Cym. Againe: and bring me word how 'tis with her,
 A Feauour with the absence of her Sonne;

A madnesse, of which her life's in danger: Heaucns,
 How deeply you at once do touch me. Imogen,
 The great part of my comfort, gone: My Queene
 Vpon a desperat bed, and in a time
 When fearefull Warres point at me: Her Sonne gone,
 So needfull for this present? It strikes me, past
 The hope of comfort. But for thee, Fellow,
 Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seeme to ignorent, we'll enforce it from thee
 By a sharpe Torture.

Pis. Sir, my life is yours,

I humbly ser it at your will: But for my Mistis,
 I nothing know where she remains: why gone,
 Nor when the purposes returne. Beseech your Highnes,
 Hold me your loyall Seruant.

Lord. Good my Liege,
 The day that she was missing, he was heere;
 I dare be bound hee's true, and shall performe
 All parts of his subiection loyally. For Cloten,
 There wants no diligence in seeking him,
 And will no doubt be found.

Cym. The time is troublefome:
 We'll slip you for a season, but our ialousie
 Do's yet depend.

Lord. So please your Maiesty,
 The Romaine Legions, all from Gallia drawne,
 Are landed on your Coast, with a supply
 Of Romaine Gentlemen, by the Senate sent.

Cym. Now for the Counsaile of my Son and Queene,
 I am amaz'd with matter.

Lord. Good my Liege,
 Your preparation can affront no lesse (ready:
 Then what you heere of. Come more, for more you're
 The want is, but to put those Powres in motion,
 That long to moue.

Cym. I thanke you: let's withdraw
 And meete the Time, as it seeks vs. We feare not What can from Italy annoy vs, but We greuee at chances heere. Away. Exeunt

Pisano. I heard no Letter from my Master, since
 I wrote him Imogen was slaine. 'Tis strange:
 Nor heere I from my Mistis, who did promise
 To yeeld me oftentimes. Neither know I
 What is betide to Cloten, but remaine
 Perplex in all. The Heauens still must worke:
 Wherein I am false, I am honest: not true, to be true.
 These present warres shall finde I lone my Country,
 Euen to the note o'th King, or Ile fall in them:
 All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd,
 Fortune brings in some Boats, that are not steer'd. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, & Arviragus.

Gui. The noyse is round about vs.

Bel. Let vs from it.

Arui. What pleasure Sir, we finde in life, to locke it
 From Action, and Adventure.

Gui. Nay, what hope
 Haue we in hiding vs? This way the Romaines
 Must, or for Britaines slay vs or receiue vs
 For barbarous and vnnaturall Reuolts
 During their vs, and slay vs after.

Bel. Sonnes,
 Wee'l higher to the Mountaines, there secure v..
 To the Kings party there's no going: newnesse
 Of Cloten's death (we being not knowne, not must'r'd Among the Bands) may driue vs to a render Where we haue liu'd; and so extort from's that
 Which we haue done, whole answer would be death
 Drawne on with Torture.

Gui. This is (Sir) a doubt
 In such a time, nothing becomming you,
 Nor satisfying vs.

Arui. It is not likely,
 That when they heare their Roman horses neigh,
 Behold their quarter'd Fires; haue both their eyes
 Aye cares so cloyd importantly as now,
 That they will waste their time vpon our note,
 To know from whence we are.

Bel. Oh, I am knowne
 Of many in the Army: Many yeeres
 (Though Cloten then but young) you see, not wore him
 From my remembrance. And besides, the King
 Hath not deferd my Seruice, nor your Loues,
 Who finde in my Exile, the want of Breeding:
 The certainty of this heard life, aye hopelesse
 To haue the courtie your Cradle promis'd,
 But to be still hot Summers Tanlings, and
 The shrinking Slaues of Winter.

Gui. Then be so,
 Better to cease to be. Pray Sir, to'th Army:
 I, and my Brother are not knowne; your selfe
 So out of thought, and thereto so ore-growne,
 Cannot be question'd.

Arui. By this Sunne that shines
 He thither: What thing is't, that I neuer
 Did see man dye, scarce euer look'd on blood,
 But that of Coward Hares, hot Goats, and Venison?
 Neuer bestid a Horse saue one, that had
 A Rider like my selfe, who ne're wore Rowell,
 Nor Iron on his heele? I am asham'd
 To looke vpon the holy Sunne, to haue
 The benefit of his blest Beames, remaining
 So long a poore vnknowne.

Gui. By heuens Ile go,
 If you will blesse me Sir, and giue me leaue,
 Ile take the better care: but if you will not,
 The hazard therefore due fall on me, by
 The hands of Romaines.

Arui. So say I, Amen.

Bel. No reason I (since of your liues you set)
 So slight a valeuation) should reserve
 My crack'd one to more care. Haue with you Boyes:
 If in your Country warres you chance to dye,
 That is my Bed roo (Lads) and there Ile lye.
 Lead, lead; the time seems long, their blood thinks scorn
 Till it flye out, and shew them Princes borne. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Posthumus alone.

Post. Yea bloody cloth, Ile keep thee: for I am with Thou should'st be colour'd thus. You married ones,
 If each of you should take this course, how many Must murder Wives much better then themselves

bbb 2

For

For wrying but a little? Oh Pisano,
 Every good Seruant do's not all Commands:
 No Bond, but to do iust ones. Gods, if you
 Should haue tane vengeance on my faults, I neuer
 Had liu'd to put on this: so had you saued
 The noble Imogen, to repent, and strooke
 Me (wretch) more worth your Vengeance. But alacke,
 You snatch some hence for little faults; that's loue
 To haue them fall no more: you some permit
 To second illes with illes, each elder worfe,
 And make them dread it, to the dooers thrust.
 But Imogen is your owne, do your best willes,
 And make me blest to obey. I am brought hither
 Among th' Italian Gentry, and to fight Against my Ladies Kingdome: 'Tis enough
 That (Britaine) I haue kill'd thy Mistis: Peace,
 Ile giue no wound to thee: therefore good Heauens,
 Heare patiently my purpose. Ile disrobe me
 Of these Italian weedes, and suite my selfe
 As do's a Britaine Pezant: so Ile fight
 Against the part I come with: so Ile dye
 For thee (O Imogen) euen for whom my life
 Is euery breath, a death: and thus, vnknowne,
 Pittied, nor hated, to the face of perill
 My selfe Ile dedicate. Let me make men know
 More valour in me, then my habits show.
 Gods, put the strength o'th' Leonati in me:
 To shame the guize o'th' world, I will begin,
 The fashion lesse without, and more within.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, and the Romane Army at one doore: and the Britaine Army at another: Leonatus Posthumus following like a poore Souldier. They march oner, and goe out. Then enter againe in Skirmish Iachimo and Posthu- mus: he vanquisheth and disarmeth Iachimo, and then leaues him.

Iac. The heauineffe and guilt within my bosome,
 Takes off my manhood: I haue belyed a Lady,
 The Princeesse of this Country; and the ayre on't
 Reuengingly enfeeble me, or could this Carle,
 A very drudge of Natures, haue subdu'd me
 In my profession? Knighthoods, and Honors borne
 As I weare mine) are titles but of scorne.
 If that thy Gentry (Britaine) go before
 This Lowt, as he exceeds our Lords, the oddes
 Is, that we scarse are men, and you are Goddesses. Exit.

The Battail continues, the Britaines fly, Cymbeline is taken: Then enter to his rescue, Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. Stand, stand, we haue th' advantage of the ground,
 The Lane is guarded: Nothing rowes vs, but
 The villany of our feares.

Gui. Arui. Stand, stand, land fight.

Enter Posthumus, and seconds the Britaines. They Rescue
Cymbeline, and Exit.

Then enter Lucius, Iachimo, and Imogen.

Luc. Away boy from the Troopes, and saue thy selfe:
 For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such

As warre were hood-wink'd.

Iac. 'Tis their fresh supplies.

Luc. It is a day turn'd strangely: or betimes
 Let's re-inforce, or fly.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Posthumus, and a Britaine Lord.

Lor. Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?
Post. I did.

Though you it seemes come from the Fliers?

Lo. I did.

Post. No blame be to you Sir, for all was lost,
 But that the Heauens fought: the King himselfe
 Of his wings defitture, the Army broken,
 And but the backs of Britaines scene; all flying
 Through a strait Lane, the Enemy full-hearted,
 Lolling the Tongue with slaught'ring: hauing worke
 More plentifull, then Toolles to doo't: strooke downe
 Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling
 Meerely through feare, that the strait passe was dam'd
 With deadmen, hurt behinde, and Cowards liuing
 To dye with length'n'd shame.

Lo. Where was this Lane?

Post. Close by the battell, ditch'd, & wall'd with turph,
 Which gaue aduantage to an ancient Soldiour
 (An honest one I warrant) who deseru'd
 So long a breeding, as his white beard came to,
 In doing this for's Country. Athwart the Lane,
 He, with two striplings (Lads more like to run
 The Country base, then to commit such slaughter,
 With faces fit for Maskes, or rather fayrer
 Then those for preferuation eas'd, or shame)
 Made good the passage, cryed to those that fled,
 Our Britaines hearts dye flying, not our men,
 To darknesse fleete soules that flye backwards; stand,
 Or we are Romanes, and will giue you that Like beasts, which you shun beastly, and may saue
 But to looke backe in frowne: Stand, stand. These three,
 Three thousand confident, in acte as many:
 For three performers are the File, when all
 The rest do nothing. With this word stand, stand, Accomodated by the Place; more Charming
 With their owne Noblenesse, which could haue turn'd
 A Distaffe, to a Lance, gilded pale lookes;
 Part shame, part spirit renew'd, that some turn'd coward
 But by example (Oh a sinne in Warre, Dam'd in the first beginners) gan to looke
 The way that they did, and to grin like Lyons
 Vpon the Pikes o'th' Hunters. Then beganne
 A stop i'th' Chafer; a Retyre: Anon
 A Rowt, confusion thicke: forthwith they flye
 Chickens, the way which they flopt Eagles: Slaues
 The strides the Victors made: and now our Cowards Like Fragments in hard Voyages became
 The life o'th' need: hauing found the backe doore open
 Of the vnguarded hearts: heauens, how they wound;
 Some slaine before some dying; some their Friends
 Ore-borne i'th' former waue, ten chac'd by one,
 Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty:
 Those that would dye, or ere resist, are growne
 The mortall bugs o'th' Field.

Lord. This was strange chance:

A narrow Lane, an old man, and two Boyes.

Post. Nay, do not wonder at it: you are made
 Rather to wonder at the things you heare,
 Then to worke any. Will you Rime vpon't,
 And vent it for a Mock'rie? Heere is one:

"Two Boyes, an Oldman (twice a Boy) a Lane,
 'Preferu'd the Britaines, was the Romanes bane."

Lord. Nay, be not angry Sir.

Post. Lacke, to what end?

Who dares not stand his Foe, Ile be his Friend:

For if hee'l do, as he is made to doo,

I know hee'l quickly flye my friendship too.

You haue put me into Rime.

Lord. Farewell, you're angry.

Exit.

Post. Still going? This is a Lord: Oh Noble misery

To be i'th' Field, and aske what newes of me:

To day, how many would haue giuen their Honours

To haue sau'd their Carcasses? Tooke heele to doo't,

And yet dyed too. I, in mine owne woe charm'd

Could not finde death, where I did heare him groane,

Nor feele him where he strooke. Being an vgly Monster,

'Tis strange he hides him in fresh Cups, soft Beds,

Sweet words; or hath moe ministers then we

That draw his kniues i'th' War. Well I will finde him:

For being now a Fauourer to the Britaine,

No more a Britaine, I haue resum'd againe

The part I came in. Fight I will no more,

But yeeld me to the veriest Hinde, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Heere made by'th' Romane; great the Answer be

Britaines must take. For me, my Ransome's death,

On cyther side I come to spend my breath;

Which neyther heere Ile keepe, nor beate agen,

But end it by some meanes for Imogen.

Enter two Captaines, and Soldiers.

1 Great Iupiter be prais'd, Lucius is taken,

'Tis thought the old man, and his sonnes, were Angels.

2 There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,

That gaue th' Affront with them.

1 So 'tis reported:

But none of 'em can be found. Stand, who's there?

Post. A Roman,

Who had not now beene drooping heere, if Seconds

Had answer'd him.

2 Lay hands on him: a Dogge,

A legge of Rome shall not retaine to tell

What Crows haue peckt them here: he brags his seruice

As if he were of note: bring him to'th' King.

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Pisano, and

Romane Captiues. The Captaines present Posthumus to

Cymbeline, who deliuer's him ouer to a Gaoler.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Posthumus, and Gaoler.

Gao. You shall not now be stolne,

You haue lockes vpon you:

So graze, as you finde Pasture.

2 Gao. I, or a stomacke.

Post. Most welcome bondage; for thou art a way

(I thinke) to liberty: yet am I better

Then one that's sicke o'th' Gowt, since he had rather

Groane so in perpetuity, then be cur'd
 By'th' sure Physician, Death; who is the key
 To vnbarre these Lockes. My Conscience, thou art fetter'd
 More then my shanks, & wrists; you good Gods giue me
 The penitent Instrument to picke that Bolt,
 Then free for euer. Is't enough I am sorry?
 So Children temporall Fathers do appeale,
 Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent,
 I cannot do it better then in Gyues,
 Desir'd, more then constrain'd, to satisfie
 If of my Freedome 'tis the maine part, take
 No stricter render of me, then my All.
 I know you are more clement then wilde men,
 Who of their broken Debtors take a third;
 A sixth, a tenth, letting them thriue againe
 On their abatement; that's not my desire.
 For Imogen deere life, take mine, and though
 'Tis not so deere, yet 'tis a life; you coyn'd it,
 'Tweene man, and man, they waigh not euery stampe:
 Though light, take Peeeces for the figures sake,
 (You rather) mine being yours: and so great Powres,
 If you will take this Audir, take this life,
 And cancell these cold Bonds. Oh Imogen,
 Ile speake to thee in silence.

Solemne Musicke. Enter (as in an Apparation) Sicilius Leonatus, Father to Posthumus, an old man, attyred like a warrior, leading in his hand an ancient Matron (his wife, & Mother to Posthumus) with Musicke before them. Then after other Musicke, followes the two young Leonati (Brothers to Posthumus) with wounds as they died in the warre.
 They circle Posthumus round as he lies sleeping.

Sicil. No more thou Thunder-Master
 Shew thy spight, on Mortall Flies:
 With Mars fall out, with Inno chide, that thy Adulteries
 Rates, and Reuenges.

Hath my poore Boy done ought but well;

whose face I neuer saw:

I dy'de whilst in the Wombe he staide, attending Natures Law.

Whose Father then (as men report, thou Orphanes Father art)

Thou should'st haue bin, and sheelded him, from this earth-vexing smart.

Moth. Lucina lent not me her ayde,

butooke me in my Throwes,

That from me was Posthumus ript, came crying 'mong'th' his Foes.

A thing of pitty.

Sicil. Great Nature like his Ancestrie, moulded the stuffe so faire:

That he d. seru'd the praise o'th' World,

as great Sicilius heyre.

1. Bro. When once he was mature for man, in Britaine where was hee?

That could stand vp his paralell?

Or fruitfull obiect bee?

In eye of Imogen, that best could deeme his dignitie.

Mo. With Marriage wherefore was he mockt

to be exil'd, and throwne

From Leonati Seate, and cast from her;

his dearest one:

Sweete Imogen?

Sic. Why did you suffer Iachimo, slight thing of Italy,

bbb 3

To

To taint his Nobler hart & braine, with needlesse cloufy,
And to become the gecke and scorne o' th' others vilany?

2 Bro. For this, from stiller Seats we came,
our Parents, and vs twaine,
That striking in our Countries cause,
fell bravely, and were slaine,

Our Fealty, & Tenants right, with Honor to maintaine.

1 Bro. Like hardiment Posthumus hath to Cymbeline perform'd:

Then Iupiter, King of Gods, why hast thou thus adiourn'd
The Graces for his Merits due, being all to dolours turn'd?

Sicil. Thy Christall window open; looke, looke out, no longer exercise

Vpon a valiant Race, thy harsh, and potent injuries:

Moth. Since (Iupiter) our Son is good, take off his miseries.

Sicil. Peepe through thy Marble Mansion, helpe, or we poore Ghosts will cry

To th' shining Synod of the rest, against thy Deity.

Brothers. Helpe (Iupiter) or we appeale, and from thy iustice flye.

Iupiter descends in Thunder and Lightning, sitting vpon an Eagle: hee throwes a Thunder-bolt. The Ghostes fall on their knees.

Iupiter. No more you petty Spirits of Region low
Offend our hearing: hush! How dare you Ghostes
Accuse the Thunderer, whose Bolt (you know)
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling Coasts.

Poore shadowes of Elizium, hence, and rest
Vpon your neuer-withering bankes of Flowres.

Be not with mortall accidents oppress'd,
No care of yours it is, you know 'tis ours.

Whom best I loue, I crosse; to make my guile
The more delay'd, delighted. Be content,

Your low-laide Sonne, our Godhead will vplift:
His Comforts thrue, his Trials well are spent:

Our Iouiall Starre reign'd at his Birth, and in Our Temple was he married: Rise, and fade,

He shall be Lord of Lady Imogen.

And happier much by his Affliction made.

This Tablet lay vpon his Brest, wherein
Our pleasure, his full Fortune, doth confine,

And so away: no farther with your dinne
Expreffe Impatience, least you stirre vp mine:

Mount Eagle, to my Palace Christalline.

Sicil. He came in Thunder, his Celestiall breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy Eagle

Stoop'd, as to foote vs: his Ascension is More sweet then our blest Fields: his Royall Bird

Prunes the immortall wing, and cloyes his Beake,
As when his God is pleas'd.

All. Thanks Iupiter.

Sic. The Marble Pavement closes, he is enter'd
His radiant Roome: Away, and to be blest.

Let vs with care performe his great behest.

Post. Sleepe, thou hast bin a Grandfire, and begot
A Father to me: and thou hast created

A Mother, and two Brothers. But (oh scorne)
Gone, they went hence so soone as they were borne:

And so I am awake, Poore Wretches, that depend
On Greatnesse, Favour; Dreame as I have done,

Wake, and finde nothing. But (alas) I twerue:
Many Dreame not to finde, neither deserue,

And yet are sleep'd in Favours: so am I
That haue this Golden chance, and know not why:

What Fayeries haunt this ground? A Booke? Oh rare one,

Be not, as is our fangled world, a Garment:
Nobler then that it couers. Let thy effects
So follow, to be most vnlike our Courtiers,
As good, as promise.

Reades.

When as a Lyons whelpes fall to himselfe unknown, without seeking finde, and be embrac'd by a peece of tender Ayre: And when from a stately Cedar shall be lopp'd branches, which being dead many yeares, shall after reuine, be ioyned to the old Stocks, and freshly grow, then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britaine be fortunate, and flourish in Peace and Plen-tie.

'Tis still a Dreame: or else such stuffe as Madmen
Tongue, and braine not: either both, or nothing,
Or senselesse speaking, or a speaking such.
As sense cannot vntye. Be what it is,
The Action of my life is like it, which Ile keepe
If but for sympathy.

Enter Gaoler.

Gao. Come Sir, are you ready for death?

Post. Over-roasted rather: ready long ago.

Gao. Hanging is the word, Sir, if you bee readie for that, you are well Cook'd.

Post. So if I proue a good repast to the Spectators, the dish payes the shot.

Gao. A heavy reckoning for you Sir: But the comfort is you shall be called to no more payments, fear no more

Tauerne Bills, which are often the sadnesse of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for want of meate, depart reeling with too much drinke: so that you haue payed too much, and sorry that you are payed too much: Purse and Braine, both empty: the Braine the heavier, for being too light; the Purse too light, being drawne of heavinesse. Oh, of this contradiction you shall now be quit: Oh the charity of a penny Cord, it summer vp thousands in a trice: you haue no true Debitor, and Creditor but it: of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge: your necke (Sir) is Pen, Booke, and Counters; so the Acquittance followes.

Post. I am merrier to dye, then thou art to liue.

Gao. Indeed Sir, he that sleepe, feels not the Tooth-
Ache: but a man that were to sleepe your sleepe, and a

Hangman to helpe him to bed, I think he would change places with his Officer: for, look you Sir, you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes indeed do I, fellow.

Gao. Your death has eyes in's head then: I haue not seene him so pictur'd: you must either bee directed by some that take vpon them to know, or to take vpon your selfe that which I am sure you do not know: nor Iump the after-enquiry on your owne perill: and how you shall speed in your iournies end, I thinke you'll neuer retorne to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, Fellow, there are none want eyes, to direct them the way I am going, but such as winke, and will not vse them.

Gao. What an infinite mocke is this, that a man shold haue the best vse of eyes, to see the way of blindnesse: I am sure hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Knocke off his Manacles, bring your Prisoner to the King.

Post. Thou bring'st good newes, I am call'd to be made free.

Gao. He be hang'd then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer then a Gaoler; no bolts
for

for the dead.

Gao. Vnlesse a man would marry a Gallows, & beget yong Gibbets, I neuer saw one so prone: yet on my Conscience, there are verier Knaues desire to liue, for all he be a Roman; and there be some of them too that dye against their willes; so should I, if I were one. I would we were all of one minde, and one minde good: O there were desolation of Gallies and Gallowes: I speake as gainst my present profit, but my wish hath a preferment in't.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline, Bellarius, Guiderius, Aru-ragus, Pisanio, and Lords.

Cym. Stand by my side you, whom the Gods haue made
Preferuers of my Throne: woe is my heart.

That the poore Souldier that so richly fought,
Whose ragges, sham'd gilded Armes, whose naked brest

Stept before Targes of proofe, cannot be found:
He shall be happy, that can finde him, if

Our Grace can make him so.

Bel. I neuer saw
Such Noble fury in so poore a Thing;

Such precious deeds, in one that promist nought
But beggery, and poore lookes.

Cym. No tydings of him?

Pisa. He hath bin search'd among the dead, & liuing;
But no trace of him.

Cym. To my greefe, I am

The heyte of his Reward, which I will adde

To you (the Liver, Heart, and Braine of Britaine)

By whom (I grant) she liues. 'Tis now the time

To aske of whence you are. Report it.

Bel. Sir,

In Cambria are we borne, and Gentlemen:

Further to boast, were neyther true, nor modest,
Vnlesse I adde, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees:

Arise my Knights o' th' Battell, I create you

Companions to our person, and will fit you
With Dignities becomming your estates.

Enter Cornelius and Ladies.

There's businesse in these faces: why so sadly
Greet you our Victory? you looke like Romaines,

And not o' th' Court of Britaine.

Corn. Hayle great King,

To sowre your happinesse, I must report
The Queene is dead.

Cym. Who worse then a Physitian

Would this report become? But I consider,

By Medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death

Will seize the Doctor too. How ended she?

Corn. With horror, madly dying, like her life,

Which (being cruell to the world) concluded

Most cruell to her selfe. What the confest,

I will report, so please you. These her Women

Can trip me, if I erre, who with wet cheekes

Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Prythee say.

Corn. First, she confest she neuer lou'd you: onely

Affected Greatnesse got by you: not you:

Married your Royalty, was wife to your place:

Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this;

And but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Corn. Your daughter, whom the bore in hand to loue

With such integrity, she did confesse

Was as a Scorpion to her sight, whose life

(But that her sight preuented it) she had

Tane off by poyson.

Cym. O most delicate Fiend!

Who's it can reade a Woman? Is there more?

Corn. More Sir, and worse. She did confesse she had

For you a mortall Minerall, which being rooke,

Should by the minute feede on life, and ling'ring,

By inches waste you. In which time, she purpos'd

By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to

Orecome you with her shew; and in time

(When she had fitted you with her craft, to worke

Her Sonne into th' adoption of the Crowne:

But sayling of her end by his strange absence,

Grew shamelesse desperate, open'd (in despite

Of Heauen and Men) her purposes: repented

The euils she hatch'd, were not effected: so

Dispayring, dyed.

Cym. Heard you all this, her Women?

La. We did, so please your Highnesse.

Cym. Mine eyes

Were not in fault, for she was beautifull:

Mine eares that heare her flattery, not my heart,

That thought her like her seeming. It had bene vicious

To haue mistrusted her: yet (Oh my Daughter)

That it was folly in me, thou mayst say,

And proue it in thy feeling. Heauen mend all.

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, and other Roman prisoners,
Leonatus behind, and Imogen.

Thou comm'st not Caius now for Tribute, that

The Britainer haue rac'd out; though with the losse

Of many a hold one: whose Kinsmen haue made suite

That their good soyles may be appeas'd, with slaughter

Of you their Captiues, which our selfe haue granted,

So thinke of your estate.

Luc. Consider Sir, the chance of Warre, the day

Was yours by accident: had it gone with vs,

We should not when the blood was cool, haue threatend

Our Prisoners with the Sword. But since the Gods

Will haue it thus, that nothing but our liues

May be call'd ransom, let it come: Sufficeth,

A Roman, with a Romans heart can suffer:

Augustus liues to thinke on't: and so much

For my peculiar care. This one thing onely

I will create, my Boy (a Britaine borne)

Let him be ransom'd: Neuer Master had

A Page so kinde, so dutious, diligent,

So tender ouer his occasions, true,

So feare, so Nurse-like: let his vertue ioyne

With my request, which Ile make bold, your Highnesse

Cannot deny: he hath done no Britaine harme,

Though he haue seru'd a Roman. Saue him (Sir)

And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I haue surely seene him:

His fauour is familiar to me: Boy,

Thou hast look'd thy selfe into my grace,

And art mine owne. I know not why, wherefore,

To say, liue boy: ne're thanke thy Master, liue;

And aske of Cymbeline what Boone thou wilt,

Fitting my bounty, and thy fate, Ile giue it:

Yea,

Yea, though thou do demand a Prisoner
The Noblest tane.

Imo. I humbly thanke your Highnesse.

Luc. I do not bid thee begge my life, good Lad,
And yet I know thou wilt.

Imo. No, no, alacke,
There's other worke in hand: I see a thing
Bitter to me, as death: your life, good Master,
Must shuffle for it selfe.

Luc. The Boy disdaines me,
He leaues me, scornes me: briefly dye their ioyes,
That place them on the truth of Gyrls, and Boyes.
Why stands he so perplext?

Cym. What would'st thou Boy?
I loue thee more, and more: thinke more and more
What's best to aske. Know'st him thou look'st on? speak
Wilt haue him liue? Is he thy Kin? thy Friend?

Imo. He is a Romane, no more kin to me,
Then I to your Highnesse, who being born your vassalle
Am something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore ey'st him so?

Imo. He tell you (Sir) in priuate, if you please
To giue me hearing.

Cym. I, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention. What's thy name?

Imo. Fidele Sir.

Cym. Thou'rt my good youth: my Page
He be thy Master: walke with me: speake freely.

Bel. Is not this Boy reuiu'd from death?

Arui. One Sand another

Not more resembles that sweet Rosie Lad:
Who dyed, and was Fidele: what thinke you?

Gui. The same dead thing aliue.

Bel. Peace, peace, see further: he eyes vs not, forbear
Creatures may be alike: were't he, I am sure
He would haue spoke to vs.

Gui. But we see him dead.

Bel. Be silent: let's see further.

Pisa. It is my Mistis:

Since she is liuing, let the time run on,
To good, or bad.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side,
Make thy demand aloud. Sir, step you forth,
Giue answer to this Boy, and do it freely,
Or by our Greatnesse, and the grace of it
(Which is our Honor) bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falshood. One speake to him.

Imo. My boone is, that this Gentleman may render
Of whom he had this Ring.

Post. What's that to him?

Cym. That Diamond vpon your Finger, say
How came it yours?

Iach. Thou'lt torture me to leaue vnspoken, that Which to be spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How? me?

Iach. I am glad to be constrain'd to vtter that Which torments me to conceale. By Villany
I got this Ring: 'twas Leonatus Jewell,
Whom thou did'st banish: and which more may greeue
As it doth me: a Nobler Sir, ne're liu'd (thee,
'Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou heare more my Lord?

Cym. All that belongs to this.

Iach. That Paragon, thy daughter,
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits
Quaile to remember. Giue me leaue, I faint.

Cym. My Daughter? what of hir? Renew thy strength

I had rather thou should'st liue, while Nature will,
Then dye ere I heare more: striue man, and speake.

Iach. Vpon a time, vnhappy was the clocke
That strooke the houre: it was in Rome, accurst
The Mansion where: 'twas at a Feast, oh would
Our Viands had bin poyson'd (or at least
Those which I heau'd to head:) the good Posthumus, (What should I say? he was too good to be Where ill men were, and was the best of all
Among'st the rar'st of good ones) sitting sadly,
Hearing vs praise our Loues of Italy
For Beauty, that made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speake: for Feature, laming
The Shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Athena, Postures, beyond breefe Nature. For Condition,
A shop of all the qualities, that man
Loues woman for, besides that hooke of Wiuing, Fairenesse, which strikes the eye.

Cym. I stand on fire. Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soone I shall,
Vnlesse thou would'st greeue quickly. This Posthumus,
Most like a Noble Lord, in loue, and one
That had a Royall Louer, tooke his hint,
And (not dispraising whom we prais'd, therein
He was as calme as vertue) he began
His Mistis picture, which, by his tongue, being made,
And then a minde put in't, either our bragges
Were crack'd of Kitchen-Trulles, or his description
Prou'd vs vnspaking forties.

Cym. Nay, nay, to'th' purpose.

Iach. Your daughters Chastity, (there it begins)
He spake of her, as Diana had hot dreames,
And she alone, were cold: Whereat, I wretch
Made scruple of his praise, and wager'd with him
Peeces of Gold, gainst this, which then he wore Vpon his honour'd finger) to attaine
In suite the place of's bed, and winne this Ring
By hers, and mine Adultery: he (true Knight)
No lesse of her Honour confident
Then I did truly finde her, stakes this Ring,
And would so, had it bene a Carbuncle
Of Phœbus Wheele; and might so safely, had it
Bin all the worth of's Carre. Away to Britaine
Poste I in this designe: Well may you (Sir)
Remember me at Court, where I was taught
Of your chaste Daughter, the wide difference
'Twixt Amorous, and Villanous. Being thus quenched
Of hope, not longing; mine Italian braine,
Gan in your duller Britaine operate
Most wildly: for my vantage excellent.
And to be breefe, my practise so preuayl'd
That I return'd with simular prooffe enough,
To make the Noble Leonatus mad,
By wounding his beleefe in her Renowne,
With Tokens thus, and thus: auerring notes
Of Chamber-hanging, Pictures, this her Bracelet
(Oh cunning how I got) nay some markes
Of secret on her person, that he could not
But thinke her bond of Chastity quite crack'd,
I hauing tane the forfeit. Whereupon,
Me thinkes I see him now.

Post. I so thou do'st,

Italian Fiend. Aye me, most credulous Foole,
Egregious murderer, Theefe, any thing
That's due to all the Villaines past, in being
To come. Oh giue me Cord, or knife, or poyson,

Some

Some vpright Iusticer. Thou King, send out
For Torturers ingenious: it is I

That all th'abhorred things o'th'earth amend
By being worse then they. I am Posthumus,
That kill'd thy Daughter: Villain-like, I lye,
That caus'd a lesse villaine then my selfe,
A sacrilegious Theefe to doo't. The Temple
Of Vertue was she; yea, and she her selfe.
Spit, and throw stones, cast myre vpon me, set
The dogges o'th' street to bay me: euery villaine
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus, and
Be villany lesse then 'twas. Oh Imogen!
My Queene, my life, my wife: oh Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen.

Imo. Peace my Lord, heare, heare.

Post. Shall's haue a play of this?

Thou scornfull Page, there lye thy part.

Pisa. Oh Gentlemen, helpe,
Mine and your Mistis: Oh my Lord Posthumus,
You ne're kill'd Imogen till now: helpe, helpe,
Mine honour'd Lady.

Cym. Does the world go round?

Post. How comes these straggers on mee?

Pisa. Wake my Mistis.

Cym. If this be so, the Gods do meane to strike me
To death, with mortall toy.

Pisa. How fares my Mistis?

Imo. Oh get thee from my sight,

Thou gau'st me poyson: dangerous Fellow hence,
Breath not where Princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen.

Pisa. Lady, the Gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gaue you, was not thought by mee
A precious thing, I had it from the Queene.

Cym. New matter still.

Imo. It poyson'd me.

Corn. Oh Gods!

I left out one thing which the Queene confest,
Which must approue thee honest. If Pasanio
Haue (said she) giuen his Mistis that Confection
Which I gaue him for Cordiall, she is seru'd,
As I would serue a Rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius?

Corn. The Queene (Sir) very oft importun'd me
To temper poysons for her, still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge, onely
In killing Creatures wilde, as Cats and Dogges
Of no esteeme. I dreading, that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certaine stuffe, which being tane, would cease
The present powre of life, but in short time,
All Offices of Nature, should againe
Do their due Functions. Haue you tane of it?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. My Boyes, there was our error.

Gui. This is sure Fidele.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded Lady fro you?

Thinke that you are vpon a Rocke, and now
Throw me againe.

Post. Hang there like fruit, my soule,

Till the Tree dye.

Cym. How now, my Flesh? my Childe?

What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this Act?

Wilt thou not speake to me?

Imo. Your blessing, Sir.

Bel. Though you did loue this youth, I blame ye not,

You had a motive for't.

Cym. My teares that fall
Proue holy-water on thee; Imogen,
Thy Mothers dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't, my Lord.

Cym. Oh, she was naught; and long of her it was
That we meet heere so strangely: but her Sonne
Is gone, we know not how, nor where.

Pisa. My Lord,

Now feare is from me, Ile speake troth. Lord Cloten
Vpon my Ladies missing, came to me
With his Sword drawne, foam'd at the mouth, and swore
If I discouer'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death. By accident,
I had a feigned Letter of my Masters
Then in my pocket, which directed him
To seeke her on the Mountaines neere to Milford,
Where in a frenzie, in my Masters Garments
(Which he inforc'd from me) away he postes
With vnchaste purpose, and with oath to violate
My Ladies honor, what became of him,
I further know not.

Gui. Let me end the Story: I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the Gods forefend.

I would not thy good deeds, should from my lips
Plucke a hard sentence: Prythee valiant youth
Deny't againe.

Gui. I haue spoke it, and I did it.

Cym. He was a Prince.

Gui. A most inciuill one. The wrongs he did mee
Were nothing Prince-like; for he did prouoke me
With Language that would make me spurne the Sea,
If it could so roare to me. I cut off's head,
And am right glad he is not standing heere
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorrow for thee:

By thine owne tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our Law: Thou'rt dead.

Imo. That headlesse man I thought had bin my Lord

Cym. Binde the Offender,

And take him from our presence.

Bel. Stay, Sir King.

This man is better then the man he slew,
As well descended as thy selfe, and hath
More of thee merited, then a Band of Clotens
Had euer scarce for. Let his Armes alone,
They were not borne for bondage.

Cym. Why old Soldier:

Wilt thou vndoo the worth thou art vnpayd for
By tasting of our wrath? How of descent
As good as we?

Arui. In that he spake too farre.

Cym. And thou shalt dye for't.

Bel. We will dye all three,

But I will proue that two one's are as good
As I haue giuen out him. My Sonnes, I must
For mine owne part, vnfold a dangerous speech,
Though haply well for you.

Arui. Your danger's ours.

Guid. And our good his.

Bel. Haue at it then, by leaue

Thou had'st (great King) a Subject, who Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him? He is a banish'd Traitor.

Bel. He it is, that hath

Assum'd this age: indeed a banish'd man,

I know not how, a Traitor.

Cym. Take him hence,
The whole world shall not save him.

Bel. Not too hot;
First pay me for the Nursing of thy Sonnes,
And let it be confiscate all, so loone
As I have receyvd it.

Cym. Nursing of my Sonnes?

Bel. I am too blunt, and sawcy: heere's my knee:
Ere I arise, I will preferre my Sonnes,
Then spare not the old Father. Mighty Sir,
These two young Gentlemen that call me Father,
And thinke they are my Sonnes, are none of mine,
They are the yssue of your Loynes, my Liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How? my Issue.

Bel. So sure as you, your Fathers: I (old Morgan)
Am that Belarius, whom you sometime banish'd:
Your pleasure was my neere offence, my punishment
It selfe, and all my Treason that I suffer'd,
Was all the harme I did. These gentle Princes
(For such, and so they are) these twenty yeares
Have I train'd vp; those Arts they haue, as I Could put into them. My breeding was (Sir)
As your Highnesse knowes: Their Nurse Euriphile
(Whom for the Theft I wedded) stole these Children
Vpon my Banishment: I mou'd her too't,
Hauing receyvd the punishment before
For that which I did then. Beaten for Loyaltie, Excited me to Treason. Their deere losse,
The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shap'd
Vnto my end of stealing them. But gracious Sir,
Heere are your Sonnes againe, and I must loose
Two of the sweet'st Companions in the World.
The benediction of these cowering Heauens
Fall on their heads like dew, for they are worthie
To in-lay Heauen with Starres.

Cym. Thou weep'st, and speak'st:
The Service that you three haue done, is more
Vnlike, then this thou tell'st. I lost my Children,
If these be they, I know not how to wish.
A payre of worthier Sonnes.

Bel. Be pleas'd awhile;
This Gentleman, whom I call Polidore,
Most worthy Prince, as yours, is true Guiderus:
This Gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus.
Your younger Princely Son, he Sir, was lapt
In a most curious Mantle, wrought by th'hand
Of his Queene Mother, which for more probation
I can with ease produce.

Cym. Guiderus had Vpon his necke a Mole, a sanguine Staire,
It was a marke of wonder.

Bel. This is he,
Who hath vpon him still that naturall Stamp:
It was wife Natures end, in the donation
To be his euidence now.

Cym. Oh, what am I
A Mother to the byrth of three? Nere Mother
Reioy'd deliuerance more: Blest, pray you be,
That after this strange starting from your Orbes,
You may reigne in them now: Oh Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a Kingdome.

Imo. No, my Lord:
I haue got two Worlds by't. Oh my gentle Brothers,
Haue we thus met? Oh neuer say heereafter

But I am truest speaker. You call'd me Brother
When I was but your Sister: I you Brothers,
When we were so indeed.

Cym. Did you ere meete?

Arui. I my good Lord.

Gui. And at first meeting lou'd,
Continu'd so, vntill we thought he dyed.

Corn. By the Queenes Dramme she swallow'd.

Cym. O rare instinct!

When shall I heare all through? This fierce abridgment, Hath to it Circumstantiall branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Where? how liu'd you?
And when came you to serue our Romaine Captiue?
How parted with your Brother? How first met them?
Why fled you from the Court? And whether these?
And your three motives to the Battaille? with
I know not how much more should be demanded,
And all the other by-dependances
From chance to chance? But nor the Time, nor Place
Will serue our long Interrogatories. See,
Posthumus Anchors vpon Imogen;
And she (like harmlesse Lightning) throwes her eye
On him: her Brothers, Me: her Master hitting
Each obiect with a Ioy: the Counter-change
Is feuerally in all. Let's quit this ground,
And smooke the Temple with our Sacrifices.
Thou art my Brother, so wee'l hold thee euer.

Imo. You are my Father too, and did rescue me:
To see this gracious season.

Cym. All ore-joy'd
Sauethese in bonds, let them be ioyfull too,
For they shall taste our Comfort.

Imo. My good Master, I will yet do you seruice.

Luc. Happy be you.

Cym. The forlorne Souldier, that no Nobly fought
He would haue well becom'd this place, and grac'd
The thankings of a King.

Post. I am Sir

The Souldier that did company these three
In peere beseeching: 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then follow'd. That I was he,
Speake Iachimo, I had you downe, and might Haue made you finish.

Iach. I am downe againe:

But now my heauie Conscience sinks my knee,
As then your force did. Take that life, beseech you
Which I so often owe: but your Ring first,
And heere the Bracelet of the truest Princesse
That euer swore her Faith.

Post. Kneele not to me:

The powre that I haue on you, is to spare you:
The malice towards you, to forgiue you. Live
And deale with others better.

Cym. Nobly doom'd:

Wee'l learne our Freeneffe of a Sonne-in-Law:
Pardon's the word to all.

Arui. You helpe vs Sir,
As you did meane indeed to be our Brother,
Ioy'd are we, that you are.

Post. Your Seruant Princes Good my Lord of Rome
Call forth your Sooth-sayer: As I slept, me thought Great Iupiter vpon his Eagle back'd
Appear'd to me, with other sprightly shewes
Of mine owne Kindred. When I wak'd, I found
This Label on my bosome; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardnesse, that I can

Make

Make no Collection of it. Let him shew
His skill in the construction.

Luc. Philarmenus.

Sooth. Heere, my good Lord.

Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Reader.

When as a Lyons whelp, shall to himselfe vknown, without seeking finds, and bee embrac'd by a peece of tender Ayre: And when from a stately Cedar shall be lopt branches, which being dead many yeares, shall after reuiue, bee ioynted to the old Stocke, and freshly grow, then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britaine be fortunate, and flourish in Peace and Plen-
tie.

Thou Leonatus art the Lyons Whelp,
The fit and apt Construction of thy name
Being Leonatus, doth import so much:
The peece of tender Ayre, thy vertuous Daughter,
Which we call Mollis Aer, and Mollis Aer
We terme it Mulier; which Mulier I diuine
Is this most constant Wife, who euen now
Answering the Letter of the Oracle,
Vknowne to you vnought, were elipt about
With this most tender Aire.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Sooth. The lofty Cedar, Royall Cymbeline
Personates thee: And thy lopt Branches, point
Thy two Sonnes forth: who by Belarius stolne
For many yeares thought dead, are now reuiu'd
To the Maiesticke Cedar ioynd; whose Issue

Promises Britaine, Peace and Plenty.

Cym. Well,

My Peace we will begin: And Caius Lucius,
Although the Victor, we submit to Cesar;
And to the Romaine Empire; promising
To pay our wonted Tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked Queene,
Whom heauens in Iustice both on her, and hers,
Haue laid most heauy hand.

Sooth. The fingers of the Powres about, do tune
The harmony of this Peace: the Vision
Which I made knowne to Lucius ere the stroke
Of yet this scarce-cold Battaille, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd. For the Romaine Eagle
From South to West, on wing soaring aloft
Lessen'd her selfe, and in the Beames o'th Sun
So vanish'd; which fore-shew'd our Princely Eagle
Th' Imperiall Cesar, should againe vrite
His fauour, with the Radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines heere in the West.

Cym. Laud we the Gods,
And let our crooked Smokes climbe to their Nostrils
From our blest Altars. Publish we this Peace
To all our Subiects. Set we forward: Let
A Roman, and a Brittain Ensigne waue
Friendly together: so through Luds-Towne march,
And in the Temple of great Iupiter
Our Peace wee'l ratifie: Seale it with Feasts.
Set on there: Neuer was a Warre did cease
(Ere bloodie hands were wash'd) with such a Peace.

Exeunt.
